would have had the same reason to consume them for their disobedience. Accordingly we find Masius on Josh. v. 14. confessing, that the Jews generally thought this was the angel Michael. And partly from them, and partly from Daniel, who styles him Michael their prince, x. 21. And Michael the prince which standeth for the children of thy people, xii. 1. it seems to be, that many Christian fathers * and ancient commentators have so expressly said, that God over all placed over them the angel Michael, as Daniel hath taught us; and God also promised Moses, he would send an angel with his people. And both Theodoret and St. Jerome, in their comments on Dan. xi. 21. say, that Michael "est archangelus cui creditus est populus Judæorum," is that archangel to whom was committed the care of the people of the Jews. And the author of the Recognitions, speaking of God's dividing the nations to angels, adds,† that the government of the Jews themselves, and the disposal of their affairs, were by God committed to an archangel. Certain it is from the Scripture, that the law, which was the foundation of the Judaical church-state, was given by the disposition of angels, Acts vii. 53. Gal. iii. 19. whence the apostle here styles it the law spoken by angels, ver. 2. They being therefore so far interested in the promulgation of the law, as that it was given to the Jews by their ministry (though they did this in the name and by the authority of God), the Mosaical church-state was so far put in subjection to them.

Now if this supposition be admitted, and the world to come, according to the Jewish import of that phrase, be taken for the gospel-state, then the apostle's argument runs thus: "You have greater reason to take heed to the things taught by Christ under the gospel-dispensation, than had the Jews to take heed to the things taught by the Mosaical dispensation: for unto the angels God hath not subjected the gospel-state, but unto Christ; i. e. to him who is more able to reward his obedient servants, and bring them into the celestial Canaan, and more able to consume and punish them, who do neglect the great salvation tendered in this dispensation."

As to the gentile world, the doctrine of the Jews, in relation to them, is evident from these words of the Septuagint, When the Almighty divided the nations, he set the borders of them, κατ' ἀριθμὸν ἀγγέλων Θεοῦ, according to the number of the angels of God, Deut. xxxii. 8. That is (saith R. Menachem), he placed seventy angels over the seventy nations. For, saith the son of Sirach, Ἑκάστῳ ἔθνει κατέστησεν ἡγούμενον, In the division of the nations of the whole earth, he set a ruler over every people, Ecclus. xvii. 17. Accordingly in Daniel we find mention of the prince of Persia, and of Greece, i. e. of the angels which presided over those places. Eusebius ‡ doth frequently inform us, that all the nations of the earth were formerly, by lot, divided to many angels: and this was the doctrine of Justin Martyr, * of Irenæus, † Athenagoras, ‡ and the two Clements. § So that, in the judgment of the Jews, and of the primitive fathers, all the whole heathen world were subject to the government of angels.

And then the argument of the apostle is to this effect: "That now the world of believers, gathered from the heathens, is put under Christ's immediate power, and subject not to angels, but to him who will come in flaming fire to execute vengeance upon all that obey not his gospel; and that therefore it concerns them to give more diligent heed to the words spoken by him, and not to neglect that great salvation which he tenders."

[7] Οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν, The world to come.] This I conceive imports primarily the Christian state; and in order to the government of that, the whole world subjected to Christ, from the time of his resurrection and ascension, (when he sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high, and had all power in heaven and earth committed to him: for when God brought him, by his resurrection, εἰς οἰκουμένην, into the earth, he said, Let all the angels of God worship him; i. e. let them all bow, and be subject to his authority, i. 6.) to the time when he shall abolish death, the last enemy of his subjects, and put the crown upon their heads, and condemn all his enemies to endless punishments, and so give up his mediatory kingdom to the Father. (1 Cor. xv. 28.) And this I gather from the following proof of this subjection of the world to Christ, taken from Psal. viii.: for the apostle plainly doth insinuate, that it is begun already, in that Jesus is already crowned with glory and honour, ver. 9. and he as plainly testifies, that it must continue till the day of judgment, and only will be then completed, by saying, that he must reign till all his enemies be put under his feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25. and proving this, from those words of the Psalmist, For he hath put all things under his feet, ver. 27. So then the argument runs thus: "How shall they escape, who neglect that great salvation, tendered by him who hath all the world, and all things in it, so subject to him, as to continue so, till he hath put all his enemies under his feet?"

It may be also noted, that when this world to come doth respect only the Christian state, from the resurrection of Christ to the final judgment, then it is styled Holam habba, the age to come; which is the frequent import of the world to come, in the Jewish writers; and in this sense is Christ styled, ὁ πατὴρ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, The Father of the world to come, Isa. ix. 6. and the gifts vouchsafed to believers, and exercised by them in the first ages of the church, are styled, in this Epistle, δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, The powers of the world to come: but when it also doth include that earth in which they dwell, and in which they are to continue to the day of judgment, then is it styled οἰκου-μένη μέλλουσα, the world to come, after the other four kingdoms, which are styled οἰκουμένη, the earth, and are said to have dominion over all the earth. Thus, of the kingdom of Assyria and Babylon, Daniel saith to Nebuchadnezzar that God had made him lord of all things, and settled his kingdom wherever the sons of men dwell, Dan. ii. 37, 38. And this kingdom is, by Isaiah, often styled οἰκουμένη; and the fall of it is represented as the desolation of the whole earth. Thus, in his vision against Babylon, he saith, The Lord cometh, καταφθεῖραι πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην, to lay waste the whole earth, ver. 6. Behold, the day of the Lord comes cruel, and with fierce anger, θεῖναι τὴν οἰκουμένην ἔρημον, to lay the land (of Babylon) desolate, xiii. 9. and, ver. 11. ἐντελοῦμαι τῇ οἰκουμένῃ ὅλῃ κακὰ, I will pronounce evil to the whole earth; (see also xiv. 26.) Cyrus the king of Persia speaks thus: The Lord hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, Ezra i. 2. and he is styled, τῆς οἰκουμένης ὁ Κύριος, the Lord of the earth, Esd. ii. 3. And Artaxerxes, in his epistle for the destruction of the Jews, writes thus; Being Lord over many nations, καὶ πάσης ἐπικρατήσας οἰκουμένης, and having dominion over all the world, &c. Esth. xiii. 2. 4.

As for the third, that is, the Grecian monarchy, the prophet Daniel saith expressly of it, It shall bear rule over all the earth, Dan. ii. 39. accordingly, Alexander is celebrated, in all historians and poets which speak of him, as the conqueror of the world; when he came to Babylon, ambassadors were sent to him, ἐξ ἁπάσης σχεδὸν τῆς οἰκουμένης, from almost the whole world, saith Diodorus Siculus, Hist. lib. xvii. p. 579. and when he died, this inscription was writ upon his tomb, Γᾶν ὑπ' ἐμοὶ τέθειμαι, I have put the earth under me. And, lastly, As for the Roman monarchy, as it was styled by the poets, παμβασιλεία, the universal kingdom; and by the historians, "orbis terrarum," the world; so is it in the Scripture represented as the government, πάσης τῆς οἰκουμένης, of the whole earth, Luke ii. 1. for, saith Dionysius Halicarnasseus,* Ἡ Ῥωμαίων πόλις ἁπάσης μὲν ἄρχει τῆς γῆς, ὅση μὴ ἀνέμβατός ἐστιν, ἀλλ' ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων κατοικεῖται, Rome presides over the whole habitable earth. Now this kingdom of Christ being prophesied of by Daniel, as that which was to be set up after these kingdoms which bore that name, and to break in pieces all other kingdoms, is therefore styled ἡ οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα, the kingdom of the world to come: and if (as we may probably conjecture from the angel of the prince of Persia, and the angel of the prince of Greece, Dan. x. 13. 20.) angels were by God appointed to preside over those monarchies, then hence ariseth another reason why the apostle might say, Unto the angels hath he not subjected the world to come, of which we speak.

[8] Ver. 6, &c.] Here note, first, that though these words of the Psalmist may be allowed, in their first and obvious sense, to relate to the first Adam, created after God in his similitude and likeness, with respect to his dominion; yet doth not this hinder that they be expounded in the mystical sense, of Christ the second Adam; for the Jews acknowledge that the first Adam was a type of the second Adam, that is, of Christ, who is by them styled, האדם האחרון, the last or second Adam. Moreover, the mystery of Adam is, say they, the mystery of the Messiah; and the man created the sixth day, signifies the Messiah. For thus they speak;* Our redemption is signified by the six days of the creation, especially by the sixth, in which man was created; by whom we are not to understand the nations of the world, but סוד משיח סוד אדם חוא, the mystery of man is the mystery of the Messiah; as it is said, Dan. vii. 13. He came like to the Son of man. And this lays a foundation for the inference of the apostle, that what was spoken of man in general, and more particularly related to the first Adam, was only punctually fulfilled in the second Adam taking the nature of man on him: for, saith he, we see it not in any measure fulfilled in any other man; but as for Christ, we do already see it actually fulfilled, as to the first cause of it, he being now crowned with glory and honour; and so, as all things are already subject to his feet, as far as the present necessities of the church require, (Eph. i. 22.) so will they completely and actually be so, when death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed. (1 Cor. xv. 25—27.)

[9] Ver. 7. Καὶ κατέστησας αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὰ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου.] These words are wanting in Œcumenius, Theophylact, and some MSS. but they are in Chrysostom, Theodoret, and all the ancient versions.

[10] Ver. 9. Δόξῃ καὶ τιμῇ ἐστεφανωμένον, Crowned with glory and honour.] That these words are, in construction, to follow the ensuing words, that he by the grace of God might taste death for every man, see note on vii. 20. but the apostle puts these words last, as being to discourse of our Lord's sufferings for us.

[11] Ver. 10. He, χάριτι Θεοῦ, by the grace of God tasted death.] Origen,† in his commentary upon the Gospel of St. John, twice saith, that some copies read χωρὶς Θεοῦ, without God; so read the Syriac, and Ambrose, lib. ii. de Fide ad Gratian. cap. 4. et Vigilius Tapsensis, lib. ii. p. 17. 20. And this reading either confutes the Patripassians, or confirms the doctrine of Irenæus, that Christ suffered ἡσυχάζοντος τοῦ λόγου, the Divine nature being quiescent, and not exerting its energy to strengthen him against, or deliver him from, these sufferings; it making its impressions upon the human nature, saith Grotius, not always, but pro temporum ratione. Note also, that to taste death is a Jewish phrase, signifying to die, as when they say the first Adam was worthy not to taste of death.

Ἔπρεπε γὰρ.] Conveniens hoc fuit Dei sapientiæ, saith Grotius: He thought fit to do this, saith Dr. Hammond; first, because thus the same nature suffered which had sinned, and therefore purged us from the guilt we in that nature had contracted, and so dissolved that death to which we became subject by the sin of Adam. This is the reason of Christ's sufferings, which all the primitive fathers do suggest, and on which they especially insist, assigning this reason of our Lord's death, ἵνα τὸ θνητὸν ἡμῶν καθαρισθῇ, that our obnoxiousness to death might be expiated: so Ignatius.‡ He died, saith Justin Martyr,§ for mankind, ὃ ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ ὑπὸ θάνατον, καὶ πλάνην τὴν τοῦ ὄφεως ἐπεπτώκει, which, from Adam, became subject to death, and the deceit of the serpent. Irenæus saith,‖ that as mankind, by man overcome, was obnoxious to death, "sic enim per hominem victorem ascendamus in vitam," so by a man conquering death we may rise to life: and as death prevailed against us by man, "sic iterum nos adversus mortem per hominem accipiamus palmam," so we may prevail against it by man; that as in the animal Adam we all died, so in the spiritual we might all be made alive. And Athanasius,* in his oration of the incarnation, is very copious on this subject; declaring, that Christ took our nature on him, πάλιν τὸ φθαρτὸν εἰς ἀφθαρσίαν ἐνεγκεῖν, to reduce again our corruptible to incorruption: that our Lord seeing mankind lost by death, exercising the dominion of corruption over them, and seeing the punishment threatened to our transgression, διακρατοῦσαν τὴν καθ' ἡμῶν φθορὰν,† prevailing over us to corruption; and seeing the whole race of men subject to death, he, in compassion to them,‡ καὶ τὴν θανάτου κράτησιν οὐκ ἐνέγκας, and not enduring this dominion of death, that what he created might not perish, took a body to himself, not alien from ours; and because we were all subject to corruption,§ ἀντὶ πάντων αὐτὸ θανάτῳ παραδιδοὺς, delivering it to the death for us all, he offered it to the Father, that, as it were, all men dying in him, the law of the corruption of mankind might be dissolved, and he might translate them again to incorruption: and this (saith he‖) is the first cause of his incarnation. Hence many of them say,¶ that the handwriting which was blotted out by the death of Christ, was the threat made to Adam, In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die. Here then is one reason why the death or blood of bulls or goats could not take away sin; viz. they did not partake of the same nature that had sinned, and therefore could not in that nature dissolve the debt we had contracted, and so translate us to incorruption. Secondly, It became him thus to suffer, because these sufferings fitted him to be a merciful high-priest to them that suffer as he did, and also to be a faithful high-priest, to make atonement for our sins, (ver. 17.) Observe here, that the apostle does not say, Christ's sufferings were absolutely necessary to satisfy Divine justice; that infinite mercy could not pardon sin, without a satisfaction made to justice; and that infinite wisdom could contrive no other way for the atonement of our sins: but, that Divine wisdom saw it fit that Christ should suffer for the ends forementioned. And why then may not others be permitted to think and speak with the apostle, without adding that which the apostle, in all this long and excellent discourse, concerning the ends, the reason, and necessity of our Saviour's sufferings, thought not once fit to mention?

[12] Τελειῶσαι διὰ παθημάτων, To sanctify, to consecrate, and dedicate him to that work, by his sufferings.] That this is the true import of these words will appear, first, from the like words used by this apostle, v. 8—10. Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things that he suffered; and being made perfect (τελειωθεὶς), i. e. being consecrated to his priestly office, he became the author of eternal salvation to all that obey him, being called of him a high-priest after the order of Melchisedec. And again, vii. 27, 28. The law maketh them high-priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which is after the law, maketh the Son so, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τετελειωμένον, who is consecrated a high-priest for evermore. Secondly, From the collation made betwixt the call of Aaron to his priesthood, and of Christ to his: for as Aaron took not this honour to himself, but was called of God to it; so Christ glorified not himself to be a high-priest, but was constituted so by him who said, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. Now the consecration of Aaron and the legal priests is continually expressed by this word: for what is in the Hebrew, Thou shalt fill the hands of Aaron and his sons, and is by us translated, Thou shalt consecrate them, is by the Septuagint thus rendered, τελειώσεις Ἀαρὼν τὰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ ἁγιάσαι αὐτούς. So Numb. iii. 3. ἐτελείωσαν τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν ἱερατεύειν, they consecrated them to the priesthood. Accordingly, the priest consecrated is, in the Greek, ὁ τετελειωμένος, Lev. xxi. 10. The day of his consecration is ἡμέρα τῆς τελειώσεως, Lev. viii. 33. The sacrifice then offered for sin is θυσία τελειώσεως· the burnt-offering, ὁλοκαύτωμα τελειώσεως, ver. 28. The ram offered is κριὸς τελειώσεως, ver. 22. The flesh of consecration, τὸ κρέας τῆς τελειώσεως, Exod. xxix. 34. By these sufferings he became a high-priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec, and the author of salvation to all that obey him: because appearing with this sacrifice before God in heaven for ever, he is able to save for ever them that come unto God by him.

[13] Ver. 11. Ὁ ἁγιάζων, He that sanctifies, &c.] I have shewed, note on ix. 13. that the word ἁγιάζειν, in this Epistle, is used in the sacrificial sense, or with relation to the expiation of sin: in the Old Testament, when it respecteth sacrifices, it sometimes signifies to devote, consecrate, and offer them to God. So Lev. xxii. 3. The holy things which the children of Israel hallow to the Lord, ὅσα ἂν ἁγιάσωσιν, which they shall offer to the Lord: for, Numb. xviii. 9. these holy things are thus enumerated; Every heave-offering, (ver. 8.) every meat-offering, every sin-offering, every trespass-offering; Deut. xv. 19. All the firstlings of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify to the Lord thy God, ἁγιάσεις τῷ Κυρίῳ. For if they were clean, they were to be offered to God, and their blood was to be sprinkled on the altar, and their fat burnt for an offering made by fire: (Numb. xviii. 19.) but if they were unclean, οὐ θύσεις αὐτὸ τῷ Κυρίῳ, Thou shalt not sacrifice them to the Lord, saith the text, Deut. xv. 21. and 1 Chron. xxiii. 13. Aaron was separated, that he might sanctify the most holy things, τοῦ ἁγιασθῆναι, i. e. that he might offer them in sacrifice, and to burn incense: for he was separated to execute the priesthood; (Exod. xxviii. 1.) and that was to be performed by offering gifts and sacrifices for sin: (Heb. v. 1.) and in this sense our Saviour saith, ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ἁγιάζω ἐμαυτὸν, ἵνα ὦσιν ἡγιασμένοι ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, for their sakes I sanctify myself, i. e. I offer myself a piacular victim, that they may be sanctified in the truth; (John xvii. 19.) i. e. that they may be consecrated to their office, or set apart for my service: for as Aaron and his sons were hallowed, and set apart for God's service by a sacrifice, to expiate them from their sins; and this was done, ἁγιάζειν αὐτοὺς ὥστε ἱερατεύειν, to sanctify them to the priesthood, (Exod. xxix. 1. 14. 21.) as well as by the holy anointing: (Exod. xxx. 30, 31. xl. 10.) so Christ's apostles were sanctified, and set apart to their office, not only by the unction of the Holy Ghost, but also by that piacular victim Christ offered for their sins: and accordingly, in these words, he that sanctifies is Christ that offers himself, that he might sanctify, ἁγιάζειν, i. e. purge them from their sins by his own blood; (Heb. xiii. 12.)

and they that are sanctified, are they that by this blood are purged from their sins, and so are fitted to draw nigh to God, and made a royal priesthood to shew forth his praises, and offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God, through Jesus Christ.

Secondly, The word doth also signify, to purge, purify, and make clean, by sacrifice, both in the Scripture and profane authors. Thus of the altar, it is said, He shall sprinkle the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and he shall cleanse it, and hallow it, καθαριεῖ αὐτὸ καὶ ἁγιάσει αὐτὸ, from the uncleanness of the children of Israel, Lev. xvi. 19. So Exod. xxix. 33. And they shall eat those things, אשר כפר בהם, ἐν οἷς ἡγιάσθησαν ἐν αὐτοῖς, by which, or for whom, the atonement was made, to consecrate, καὶ ἁγιάσαι αὐτοὺς, and to sanctify them; and, ver. 36. Thou shalt cleanse the altar, בכפרך עליו, ἐν τῷ ἁγιάζειν σὲ ἐπ' αὐτῷ, when thou hast made an atonement for it. In profane authors, to purge by sacrifices, from guilt or uncleanness, is sometimes ἁγιάζειν, sometimes ἁγνίζειν; and the sacrifices that did this are styled, ἁγνιστικὰ, sacrifices of purgation. According to this sense of the word, he that sanctifieth, is he that purgeth; and they that are sanctified, are they who are purged from the guilt of sin.

[14] Ver. 12.] Psal. xxii. 22. This Psalm being interpreted by the Jews themselves concerning the Messiah, the apostle might well apply this passage of it to him.

[15] Ver. 13. I will put my trust in him; and again, I and the children which God hath given me.] These two citations being from the same place, Isa. viii. 17. make but one proof, that he who sanctifies, and they who were sanctified, have the same nature; shewing, that he who said, I will put my trust in him, called them whom God had given him, his children, or offspring, and so declared them to be of the same nature or original with him. Now that these words were anciently adapted to Christ, we learn from the words of Simeon, who applies the words following to him, Luke ii. 4. and from the Jews, who expound the words, He shall be a stumbling-stone, and a rock of offence, of our Saviour, Pug. Fid. par. ii. cap. 5. §. 2. to whom they are applied by St. Paul, Rom. ix. 33. and by St. Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 7. Dr. Owen here contends, that the words ἐγὼ ἔσομαι πεποιθὼς ἐν αὐτῷ, are not taken from Isa. viii. 17. where they are almost expressly found, but from Psal. xviii. 3. Echasah bo, ἐλπιῶ ἐπ' αὐτὸν, where they are not found; because, saith he, were both these citations taken from the same place, the apostle would not have said, καὶ πάλιν, and again, this being an evidence that he cites another place. To which the answer is, that he doth so, citing the first words from ver. 17. and the second from ver. 18.

[16] Ver. 14. Καταργήσῃ τὸ κράτος ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου, That had the power of death.] That by seducing Adam to eat of the forbidden fruit, the devil, whom the Jews called Sammael, had power to accuse men, and to demand that they might die according to the threat pronounced against them, is the constant opinion of the Jews. Our wise men say,* it is a tradition, that Satan, the adversary, the angel of death, descendeth and seduceth, ascendeth and accuseth, receives power, and takes away the soul or life. Hence they say of him, that † he causeth death to the whole world.

Καταργεῖν τὸν διάβολον, is to frustrate and bring to nought his design of subjecting all men to the power of death, and keeping them under the dominion of it, and render it of no effect. (Rom. iii. 3. 21. iv. 14. 1 Cor. i. 28. ii. 6. vi. 13. xiii. 8. 10, 11. xv. 24. 26. 2 Cor. iii. 7. 11. 13, 14. Gal. iii. 17. v. 11. 2 Thess. ii. 8.) And thus Christ is said, καταργεῖν θανατὸν, to abolish death, 2 Tim. i. 10. That therefore we are still subject to death, is, say the fathers, not that we are now punished with it; but out of mercy, that sin might not be immortal in us, the time of our resurrection being that in which death shall be totally abolished. (1 Cor. xv. 26.)

[17] Ver. 15. Φόβῳ θανάτου, Through fear of death.] That the whole heathen world was subject to this fear, and that it was the king of terrors to them, see note on Rom. viii. 2. From this fear we are delivered at present, by our deliverance from that guilt of sin, which alone makes it truly terrible, (1 Cor. xv. 55, 56.) and by the promise of a glorious resurrection, when death shall be swallowed up in victory, (ver. 54.)

[18] Ver. 16. Οὐκ ἐπιλαμβάνεται.] This word, say the glossaries, signifies, "Manum injicere," To lay hold upon; "Manu prehendere," To hold with the hand: so Ecclus. iv. 11. Wisdom, ἐπιλαμβάνεται, layeth hold of them that seek her; Susan. ver. 36. 40. The man we could not hold, being too strong for us; ταύτης δὲ ἐπιλαμβανόμενοι, but laying hold of her, we asked her, &c. And so, in the Septuagint, it signifies almost continually, ἐπιλάβου, take hold of his tail, Exod. iv. 4. (See Kircher, in the words, תפש חזק אחז.) But then, that he thus laid hold of fallen man, and of the seed of Abraham, by taking of the human nature from one derived from the stock of Abraham, that in that nature he might suffer death for the propitiation of those sins which rendered them so obnoxious to death, is extremely evident, both from the words preceding, and from the words following: for, ver. 14. we read thus, Because therefore the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he also did partake of the same flesh and blood, or mortal nature, that through (his) death he might destroy him that had the power of death, for (saith he) he took hold of the seed of Abraham, i. e. by partaking of the same nature with them, (ver. 14.) And again, he took hold on the seed of Abraham, to rescue them from that death they feared, by his own death, (ver. 17.) ὅθεν ὤφειλε, wherefore he ought in all things (belonging to their nature) to be made like to his brethren, that, as their high-priest, he might make an atonement for the sins of the people, by his sacrifice made on the cross, ἐν ᾧ γὰρ πέπονθ—, for in that he suffered, &c. (ver 18.)

[19] The seed of Abraham.] The note of the best commentators here, is this, that the apostle, writing to the Jews, thought it sufficient to mention only the mercies designed by the Messiah for the Jews. And true it is, that they confined the seed of Abraham to themselves; but the apostle reckons all believers as the seed of Abraham, Rom. iv. 12. 16, 17. Gal. iii. 14. 29. though Christ is here said to have taken upon him the seed of Abraham, because he derived his flesh from his posterity.

[20] Ver. 17. Εἰς τὸ ἱλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τοῦ λαοῦ, To make atonement for the sins of the people:] i. e. Ἱλάσκεσθαι τὸν Θεὸν περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, To make atonement to God for their sins. So in Porphyry, * Ἀπομειλίσσειν τὰς τῶν πολλῶν ἁμαρτίας, to propitiate for the sins of many, is, in the same place, ἀπομειλίσσειν τὸ Θειὸν, to propitiate the Deity for them. This sense the words require: for Christ is here said to be a faithful high-priest, τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν εἰς τὸ ἱλάσκεσθαι, in things pertaining to God, that he might make atonement, surely, to him. This reconciliation, therefore, must respect God. Again, this phrase, when it respects the Jewish sacrifices, hath still relation to the guilt of sin to be expiated and taken away by them; and every sin-offering, offered by the priest, is said to be offered by him, ἱλάσκεσθαι, περὶ ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν, to make atonement for their sins. (Lev. iv. 35. v. 6. 10. xiii. 44. Ezek. xliv. 27.) And of the piacular victim it is still said, καὶ ἐξιλάσεται περὶ αὐτῶν ὁ ἱερεὺς, καὶ ἀφεθήσεται αὐτοῖς ἡ ἁμαρτία, the priest shall make atonement for them, and the sin shall be forgiven. (Lev. iv. 20. 31. v. 6. 10. 13. 18. xii. 7, 8. xiv. 18, 19. 29. 31. xv. 30. xix. 22. Numb. vi. 11. 15. 28.) The apostle, therefore, here speaking to the Jews, in the phrase always used by them, of such sacrifices as suffered in their stead, to expiate the guilt of their sin, must be supposed to teach them, that the like was done for them by our Saviour's sacrifice.

* De Abstinentia, &c. lib. iv. §. 5. p. 148.

[21] Ver. 18. Πειρασθεὶς, Being tempted:] i. e. Exposed to agonies and sufferings; for πειρασθῆναι, in the Epistles, signifies, to be exposed to such afflictions, as subject us to great temptations to desist from our duty and obedience; as when the apostle saith, No temptation hath befallen you, but what is ἀνθρώπινος, supportable by man; for the Lord is faithful, who will not suffer you, πειρασθῆναι, to be tempted above what you are able (or, exposed to sufferings beyond your strength), but will, with the temptation, make a way (so far) to escape, that you may be able to bear it. (1 Cor. x. 13.) So the apostle, finding his Thessalonians, ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι, in great afflictions from their persecutors, sends to know their faith, μήπως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς ὁ πειράζων, lest the tempter might have prevailed on them, by reason of these tribulations, to desert it. (1 Thess. iii. 5. Rev. ii. 10.) Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: Behold, Satan shall cast some of you into prison, ἵνα πειρασθῆτε, that you may be tempted, i. e. be tried by temptations. (See James i. 2. 12. 1 Pet. i. 6. 2 Pet. ii. 9. Rev. iii. 10.) So here, our Saviour, tried by these agonies, which he suffered in the hour of darkness, when the tempter fell upon him with all his fury, is become experimentally able to succour us under those sufferings which render obedience so hard to flesh and blood.

[22] Δύναται, He is able.] He hath δύναμιν συμπαθητικὴν, a power joined with a sympathy towards us, and a propensity to succour us. So Rom. xi. 23. They shall be graffed in, δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ Θεὸς, for God is able: and, xiv. 4. The weak shall stand, δυνατὸς γὰρ, for God is able to make him stand. Thus, to encourage us to charity, the apostle saith, δυνατὸς ὁ Θεὸς, God is able to make all grace abound towards us: (2 Cor. ix. 8.) I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded, ὅτι δυνατός ἐστι, that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him to that day. (2 Tim. i. 12.)

CHAP. III.

1. WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling (i. e. the calling to celestial blessings), consider the apostle and high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus (who, as our apostle, taught these things; and, as our high-priest, suffered, to obtain these blessings for us, and confirm them to us);

2. [1] Who was faithful to [2] him that appointed him (to be an apostle and high-priest), as also (it is said of) Moses, (that he) was faithful in all his house, (i. e. in all the house of God, Numb. xii. 7.)

3. For this man (this Jesus) was counted worthy of (or, dignified with) more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he [3] who hath builded (Gr. ὁ κατασκευάσας, who orders, or governs) the house hath more honour than the house (of which Moses only was a part).

4. For every house is builded (κατασκευάζεται, ordered and governed) by some man; but [4] he that built (ὁ κατασκευάσας, that orders and governs) all things is God.

5. And Moses verily was faithful in (the administration of) all (things in) his house, (but this he was only) [5] as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after (by God to them);

6. But Christ as a son (is placed) over his own house; (i. e. he enters upon the government of it, as an heir and successor to the rights of his Father; the Father now judging no man, but having committed all judgment to his Son, John v. 22.) whose house we (Christians) are, (and shall continue to be), if we hold fast the [6] confidence and [7] the rejoicing of the hope firm to the end.

7. Wherefore, as the [8] Holy Ghost saith, (by David, Psal. xcv. 8.) [9] To-day if you will hear his voice,

8. Harden not your hearts, as (your forefathers did) in the (time of) provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness: (hence learn, that it was in their power to prevent the hardness of their hearts:)

9. [10] When (where) your fathers [11] tempted me, (i. e. doubted of my presence with them, saying, Is the Lord among us, or not? Exod. xvii. 7. Numb. xiv. 11. 21.) [12] proved me, and saw my works [13] forty years.

10. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do always err in their hearts; (not with the heart believing, ver. 11.) and they have not known my ways, (i. e. not hearkened to me, to walk in them, ver. 22.)

11. So I sware in my wrath, (ver. 21.) [14] They shall not enter (Gr. If they shall enter) into my rest (i. e. into the land where they were to rest from their wars).

12. Take heed (therefore), brethren, lest there be in any of you (as there was in them) an evil heart of unbelief, [15] in departing from the [16] living God.

13. But exhort one another (to steadfastness in the faith) daily, while it is called To-day, (before the night cometh upon you, John xii. 35.) [17] lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

14. For we are made partakers of (the blessings purchased by) Christ, if we hold the [18] beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end;

15. While it is said, (Gr. Ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι, In that it is said,) To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. (You may discern the mischief of unbelief, and hardness of heart, and the necessity of the exhortation tendered, ver. 12, 13.)

16. For [19] some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit, not all that came out of Egypt (not Caleb and Joshua) by Moses.

17. But (and) with whom was he grieved forty years?

was it not with them that had sinned (by unbelief), whose carcasses fell in the wilderness?

18. And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?

19. [20] So we see (Καὶ βλέπομεν, We see therefore) that they could not enter in, because of unbelief.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 2. ΠΙΣΤΟΝ ὄντα, Who was faithful, &c.] i. e. As Moses faithfully discharged all that the Lord commanded him to say or do for the church of Israel; so Christ was faithful in the discharge of his prophetic office, doing and speaking as the Father had given commandment, John xii. 49, 50. xiv. 10. and in his priestly office, in laying down his life for the sheep, according to the commandment he had received from the Father, John x. 18. and doing all things requisite to make atonement for the sins of the people, ii. 17. I know indeed, the critics say, נאמן and πιστὸς signify one established in his office; as in those words, πιστὸς Σαμουὴλ εἰς προφήτην τῷ Κυρίῳ, Samuel was established a prophet to the Lord: but this criticism is here needless; and the word πιστὸς, ii. 17. bearing not this sense, I choose rather to follow the ordinary import of the word.

[2] Τῷ ποιήσαντι αὐτὸν, To him that appointed him.] So the word signifies, 1 Sam. xii. 6. God is witness, ὁ ποιήσας, who appointed, or chose Moses and Aaron. (See ver. 8.)

[3] Ver. 3. Ὁ κατασκευάσας] Is he that orders, and governs, and provides, or prepares all things. So Phavorinus, κατασκευάζω, καταρτύομαι, ἐξαρτύομαι, ordino, guberno, moderor. And thus, τὴν πολιτείαν καὶ πόλεις κατασκευασθῆναι, in Plato, Epist. 11. is to have cities and polities well ordered. So Wisd. ix. 2. Thou in thy wisdom, κατασκευάσας ἄνθρωπον, hast ordered man to have dominion over thy creatures. Thus Philo, de Cherub. p. 100. saith, God is the cause of the world, δι' οὗ γέγονεν, by which it was made, and the Λόγος δι' οὗ κατεσκευάσθη, Logos, the cause by which it was ordered, or put into that frame and order in which it is. The words preceding, ἠξίωται, he was dignified with more honour, seem plainly to refer to Christ's regal office, by which all power in heaven and earth was given to him, and he was made head over all things for his church, which is his body, and in which he dwells, as in his house. (Eph. ii. 21. 22.) And this to me seems to establish this sense of the word.

[4] Ver. 4. Ὁ δὲ κατασκευάσας τὰ πάντα ὁ Θεὸς, He that built all things is God.] The apostle, say the Socinians on the place, proves "Christum tanto præstantiorem esse Mose, quanto Deus præstantior est suo populo, qui Dei domus est; idque merito;" that Christ is as much more excellent than Moses, as God is more excellent than his own people; and this they had just cause to say. And if so, Christ must be properly and truly God; for nothing else can so far excel Moses, the chiefest of that people, as God himself excels them. By this interpretation therefore they do not avoid, but confirm the argument for our Saviour's Deity, from this text. The argument seems plainly to run thus,—He that governs all things is God; but Christ, as pater-familias, father of his family, governs all things in his house, that is, the church dispersed throughout all the world; and hath, in order thereunto, all judgment, and all power in heaven and earth, committed to him: he therefore must be God; that is, the exercise of his kingly office shews, that he must be God as well as man. Thus Philo, (de Victim. Offer. p. 661. C.) often saith of that power, καθ' ἣν ἀνῆπται τῶν ὅλων τὸ κράτος, to which the government of all things is committed, that οὐκ ἀνθρώπων μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ θεῶν ἐστι Θεὸς, μέγας τέ ἐστιν, ὄντως καὶ ἰσχυρὸς, καὶ κραταιὸς, he is God not only of men, but angels, a great being, who truly doth exist, both strong and mighty.

[5] Ver. 5. Ὡς θεράπων, As a servant.] The government of Israel was a theocracy, where God gave all the laws and precepts; and Moses, only as his servant and minister, told them what things God thought fit to command them: but the government of the Christian church is entirely committed to our Lord Jesus, and he, as supreme head, and Lord of all things, governs both it, and all things in earth and heaven for the good of it; and therefore, if he be not truly God, God doth not now govern the world as formerly, but hath given up the administration of it to a creature. —Whose house we are;] Christ living in our hearts by faith, Gal. ii. 20. Eph. iii. 17. abiding in us by his Spirit, John xiv. 23. Rom. viii. 9—11. and dwelling in our bodies, and in the body of the church, as in his temple, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. vi. 17. 2 Cor. vi. 15, 16. Eph. ii. 20—22. iv. 16.

[6] Ver. 6. Παῤῥησίαν, The confidence.] Or, the free profession of the faith: for παῤῥησία is a liberty of freedom of speaking; as when it is said of Christ, that he spake, ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, freely, Mark viii. 32. John vii. 13. 18. 20. and of his apostles, that they spake, μετὰ παῤῥησίας, with all freedom and courage, Acts ii. 29. iv. 13. 29. 31. xxviii. 31. 2 Cor. iii. 12. vii. 14. Eph. vi. 19. Phil. i. 20. 1 Tim. iii. 13. Heb. iv. 6. So Phavorinus, παῤῥησιάζομαι, ἐλευθεροστομῶ.

[7] Καύχημα τῆς ἐλπίδος, The rejoicing of hope.] i. e. The hope which causes us to rejoice, in expectation of the glory of God, Rom. v. 2. 2 Cor. i. 14. Gal. vi. 4. if we hold this firm unto the end; which supposes, that they who were partakers of this heavenly calling, and had at present this cause of rejoicing, might not hold it firm unto the end, but might fall off from it, ver. 14. might depart from the living God, ver. 11. iv. 11. Yea, the apostle, in this Epistle, plainly doth suppose, that they who had tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, &c. might fall away, vi. 4—6. that the just who live by faith, might draw back unto perdition, x. 38, 39. that they might fall from the grace of God, xii. 15. See the reading of the text justified, Examen Millii hic.

[8] Ver. 7. Τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, The Holy Ghost saith.] Hence it appears, that David writ his Psalms, by the afflatus or inspiration of the Holy Ghost. (See note on Matt. xxiii. 43.)

[9] Σήμερον, To-day.] At present; for now is the day of salvation, 2 Cor. vi. 2. the present time being only ours. We must do God's commandments to-day, say the Jews, from Deut. vii. 11. and receive the reward to-morrow. We must repent to-day, lest we die to-morrow, before we have repented. (See Cartw. in locum.) And again, If Israel would repent but one day, the Messiah would come; and this they prove from these words of the Psalmist, תשמעו אם בקלו, when you hear his voice, speaking in the prophets; or, as the Targum, אם במימרי, when you hear him speaking by the Word, proceeding from the Father, harden not your hearts. That this is the frequent sense of the particle אם, see Noldius, p. 89. §. 31. and it is also the sense of the Greek ἐὰν. So ἐὰν εἴπῃ, when he said thus, Gen. xiii. 8. ἐὰν ἐξελθῶσιν, when the daughters of Shiloh come forth, Judg. xxi. 21. ἐὰν κοιμηθῶ, when I lie down, 1 Sam. xi. 12. ἐὰν πληρωθῶσι, when thy days be fulfilled, 1 Kings xiii. 31. ἐὰν ἀποθάνω, when I die, Job vii. 4. ἐὰν κάθῃ, when thou sittest; ἐὰν καθεύδῃς, when thou liest down, Prov. iii. 24, 25. ἐὰν πορεύῃ, when thou goest; ἐὰν τρέχῃς, when thou runnest, Prov. iv. 12. See also in the New Testament, ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ, when I shall be lifted up, John xii. 32. ἐὰν πορευθῶ, when I shall go, John xiv. 3. xvi. 7. ἐὰν φανερώθῃ, when he shall appear, 1 John iii. 2. These words are therefore to be extended to the whole time of their hearing God speaking to them by his prophets, and especially to the time of God's speaking to them by his Son, who was to bring them into a better rest than that of Canaan, into which Joshua led them.

[10] Ver. 9. When,] Οὗ, Where. So the Hebrew אשר is rendered, Numb. xxii. 26. Deut. viii. 15. Psal. lxxxiv. 3. Eccles. viii. 10. So Numb. xx. 13. These are the waters of contention, אשר, where the children of Israel contended.

[11] Ἐπείρασάν με, Tempted me.] That to tempt God, in the Scripture phrase, is always to distrust his power or goodness, after sufficient demonstrations given of it, see note on Matt. iv. 7. And note here, that the apostle saith, they tempted Christ, (1 Cor. x. 9.) which shews, that these words may truly be applied to him.

[12] Ἐδοκίμασαν, Proved me.] The Hebrew word, which is here rendered proved me, is, Mal. iii. 16. rendered by the Greek ἀντέστησαν, they resisted God; and by the Chaldee, the Syriac, and by our version, they who tempted God; that is, saith Dr. Pocock, who went about to try and prove him, whether he could or would punish sinners, and to provoke and dare him to do his worst to execute his judgments, if he were a God of judgment: and then, to see his works forty years, must be, to see his judgments executed upon them forty years.

[13] Τεσσαράκοντα ἔτη, Forty years.] If this be the right connexion of the words, then, to see God's works forty years, must be, to see his punishments so long upon them, as he plainly threatened they should, saying, You shall bear your iniquities forty years, Numb. xiv. 33. and that so visibly, that all the nations should discern his judgments on them: for, Surely as I live (saith he), all the earth shall be filled with the glory of God, ver. 21. But if, according to the reading of the Hebrew and the Septuagint, the forty years should be added to the following verse, thus, Wherefore I was angry with that generation forty years, as the apostle doth intimate by that inquiry, ver. 17. with whom was he angry forty years? then the גם ראו, and καὶ εἶδον, will be best rendered, though they say my work, as גם signifies, Noldius, p. 220. and καὶ, Luke xviii. 7. John xvi. 32. Acts vii. 5. According as God speaks to them, Numb. xiv. 22. For all these men which have seen my glory, and my signs which I did in Egypt and the wilderness, and yet have tempted me these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice, surely they shall not see the land. And, ver. 11. How long will it be ere they believe me, after all the signs, &c.

[14] Ver. 11. אם יבאון, Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται, If they shall enter.] i. e. Let me not be God, or, Let me not be true, if they enter. This is a form of swearing very frequent in the Old Testament. So Deut. i. 35. The Lord was wroth, and swore, saying, εἰ ὄψεται, אם יראה, If any of these men shall see that good land of promise: (Psal. xcv. 11.) so 1 Sam. iii. 14. אם יתכפר, εἰ ἐξιλασθήσεται, If the iniquity of the house of Eli shall be purged with sacrifices; Psal. lxxxix. 35. Once have I sworn by my holiness, אם אכוב, εἰ ψεύσομαι, if I fail David; Psal. cxxxii. 1—4. Lord, remember David, how he sware; אם אבא, εἰ εἰσελεύσομαι, If I go into my tabernacle; אם אעלה, εἰ ἀναβήσομαι, If I climb up into my bed; אם אתן, εἰ δώσω, If I give sleep to my eyes. So Mark viii. 12. Verily, I say unto you, εἰ δοθήσεται τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ σημεῖον, Let me not be true, if a sign be given to this generation; where Christ himself swears, and therefore cannot be supposed absolutely to forbid all swearing, Matt. v. 34.

[15] Ver. 12. Ἐν τῷ ἀποστῆναι, In departing.] The Jews that tempted God, Numb. xiv. are said, ἀποστῆναι, to depart from the land of Canaan, ver. 31. They said one to another, Come, let us make a captain, καὶ ἀποστρέψωμεν, and let us turn back into Egypt, ver. 4. and are said, οὐ πιστεύειν, not to believe God, ver. 11.

[16] The living God:] So styled, to shew that he is always able to punish unbelievers. Note also, that as he who believeth in Christ, believeth in God the Father also; (John xii. 44.) so he that deserts him, doth also desert the Father, who sent him, and makes him a liar: (1 John v. 9, 10.) for he that denies the Son, hath not the Father. (1 John iii. 23.)

[17] Ver. 13. Ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ τις, Lest any man be hardened.] To be hardened, in the New Testament, imports infidelity, and want of faith. Thus Christ upbraids to his disciples their unbelief, καὶ σκληροκαρδίαν, and hardness of heart, that they believed not, Mark xvi. 14. And the Jews that believed not are said to be hardened, Acts xix. 9. and so it will be evident that here it signifies, to him that compares ver. 15. with ver. 19.

[18] Ver. 14. Τὴν ἀρχὴν ὑποστάσεως, The beginning of their hope.] That hope to which we have fled for refuge, vi. 18. that hope which causeth us to rejoice, ver. 6. faith being, ἐλπιζομένων ὑπόστασις, the firm expectation of things hoped for, chap. xi. (See the note there.)

[19] Ver. 16. Τινὲς γὰρ ἀκούσαντες παρεπίκραναν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες, &c.] I would render these words thus; For who are they, that, hearing, did provoke? Were they not all that came forth out of Egypt? For τινὲς signifies as well who as some. So Acts xix. 15. Τίνες ἐστέ, Who are ye? Rev. vii. 13. Τίνες εἰσί, Who are they that are clothed with white robes? Isa. lx. 8. Τίνες οἵδε, Who are these? So Heb. i. 5. Τίνι γὰρ, For to whom of the angels said he? And here, ver. 18. Τίνι δὲ, To whom did he swear? So Josephus, chap. xvii. of his Maccabees, Τίνες οὐκ ἐθαύμασαν τοὺς τῆς θείας νομοθεσίας ἀθλητάς; Τίνες οὐκ ἐξεπλάγησαν; Who did not admire? Who were not astonished at the champions of the Divine law? And the answer to this inquiry must be this, Were they a few? Yea, were they not all? &c. as if it had been οὐχὶ πάντες; It is also evident, that οὐ and οὐκ are often interrogatives, as 1 Cor. xii. 15. John vii. 42. see Noldius, p. 487. And if the Greek will bear this construction, it answers best, (1.) to the story, as it is represented, Numb. xiv.: for, notwithstanding the exception made, ver. 38. of Joshua and Caleb, it is said, ver. 12. that πᾶσα ἡ συναγωγὴ, all the congregation, καὶ πάντες, and all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and

Aaron; that πᾶσα ἡ συναγωγὴ, all the congregation spake of stoning Joshua and Caleb, ver. 10. and πάντες οἱ ἄνδρες, all the men, ver. 22. are the οἱ παροξύναντες, provokers, ver. 23. the συναγωγὴ πονηρὰ, evil congregation, and the murmurers, ver. 27. 35. Josh. v. 6. And (2.) it agrees best with the following verses, which are plainly interrogatives and answers, With whom was he grieved? was it not with them? To whom sware he? was it not to them that believed not? And, lastly, with the close of the argument, which saith generally, They could not enter in.

[20] Ver. 19.] Καὶ here signifies idcirco, therefore; as the Hebrew ו often does: (see Noldius, p. 279.) so Josh xxiii. 11. Καὶ φυλάξετε, Take good heed therefore; Psal. ii. 10. Καὶ νῦν σύνετε, Be wise now therefore. (See Psal. vii. 7. xviii. 42.)

CHAP. IV.

1. LET us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest (in the celestial Canaan, as to them in the terrestrial), any of you should [1] seem to come short of it (i. e. should fail of it).

2. For unto us was (Gr. is) the gospel preached, [2] as well as (Gr. as it was also) to them, (they being οἱ πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες, the first to whom it was preached, or formerly evangelized, ver. 6.) but the word preached (Gr. heard) did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. (That is, we have now the glad tidings, and gospel-promise of a future rest; as they also had in types: their rest in Canaan being a type of their future rest with God in the heavenly Canaan.)

3. For we which have believed do enter into rest, as (may be gathered from what) he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter [3] into my rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world. (Gr. καίτοι τῶν ἔργων ἀπὸ καταβολῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενηθέντων, and indeed, or for, see Budæus and Stephanus, this phrase, my rest, relates to the works done by God from the foundation of the world. This sense seems certain from the reasons following.)

4. For he (Moses) spake in a certain place (Gen. ii. 1.) of the seventh day (from the beginning of God's work of creation, saying) on this wise, And God did rest the seventh day from all his works.

5. And in this place (he, i. e. God saith) again (long after), If they shall enter into my rest, (i. e. If they shall have a rest from their labours and travels, resembling that of mine from the creation of the world, see ver. 10.)

6. Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein (to the rest of God spoken of in these words), and they to whom it was first preached (οἱ πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες, they who had the gospel first preached to them, concerning this rest of God,) entered not in (to it) because of unbelief:

7. [4] Again, he (God) limiteth a certain day, saying in (these words of) David, To-day, after so long a time (of their continuance in the rest of Canaan); as it is (there) said, To-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, &c. (speaking not of the rest of Canaan, of which they were possessed in the days of Joshua, as he saith to the Reubenites and Gadites: And now the Lord hath given rest unto your brethren, as he promised them, Josh. xxii. 4.)

8. [5] For if Jesus (i. e. Joshua) had given them (a) rest (like to that of God), then would he not (i. e. God, by David) afterward have spoken of another day (of rest, after their rest in Canaan).

9. There remaineth therefore (yet) a (more glorious and complete) [6] rest to the people of God.

10. For he that is (thus) entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, (i. e. from the labours and travels of this life, Rev. xiv. 13.) as God (after he had finished the creation) did from his.

11. Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest (which yet remaineth for the people of God), lest any man fall (Gr. that we may not fall from it) after the same example of unbelief (by our infidelity, as they did).

12. [7] For the word of God (mentioned ver. 1, 2.) is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner (or censurer) of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

13. Neither is there any creature which is not manifest in his sight (whose word this is): but all things are naked and open to the eyes of him [8] with whom we have to do (Gr. to whom we must give an account, and so there is no hope these unbelievers should escape his judgments).

14. Seeing then that we have a great high-priest (merciful and faithful, to make reconciliation for our sins, ii. 17.) that is passed into the heavens, (to appear for ever there to make intercession, and to prepare this resting-place for us, John xiv. 2. even) Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession (without wavering).

15. For we have not a high-priest who cannot be touched with the sense of our infirmities; but (one who) was in all points tempted (i. e. exposed to sufferings) like as we are, yet (and this) without sin (to deserve the least of them: see note on ii. 18.)

16. Let us therefore (depending on his power, his intercession for, and sympathy with us) come coldly [9] to the throne of grace, (this ἱλαστήριον, or mercy-seat, Rom. iii. 25.) that we may obtain mercy (in the pardon of our sins), and find grace (or favour) to (a suitable) help in time of need (Gr. εἰς εὔκαιρον βοήθειαν, for seasonable help in all our sufferings for his sake).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΔΟΚΗῖ τις ὑστερηκέναι, Should seem to come short.] That the word ὑστερηκέναι, signifies to fail of, or fall from, any thing, see note on xii. 13. and that δοκέω is oft an expletive, all critics do acknowledge: so μὴ δόξητε λέγειν, say not, Matt. iii. 9. οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν, they who rule, Mark x. 42. ὃ δοκεῖ ἔχειν, that which he hath, Luke viii. 18. Matt. xxv. 29. ὁ δοκῶν ἑστάναι, he that standeth, 1 Cor. x. 12. (See the note on 1 Cor. vii. 40.)

[2] Ver. 2. Καθάπερ κἀκεῖνοι, As well as they.] This, by some, is referred to their hearing of the law, as in the paraphrase; by others, as probably to the gospel blessings then typified to them: for the apostle informs us, that they all did eat the same spiritual meat, and drank the same spiritual drink; for they drank of the rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ. (1 Cor. x. 3, 4.) This sounds flat to them only who are averse to this doctrine, that the blessings of the gospel were typified to the Jews; but is confirmed from ver. 6.

[*] Ver. 3. Εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου, Into my rest.] Upon the true interpretation of these words here, and ver. 1. κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, depends the true sense of this chapter. Now some refer this to that deliverance from their persecutors, and the peaceable days of professing the gospel, the Christians in Judea and elsewhere should enjoy after the destruction of Jerusalem: but to this I can by no means assent; for (1.) the bearing of the cross, the suffering persecution, being so often hinted as the portion of all that will live godly, I cannot believe that a promise of deliverance from them should be so often represented by the Holy Ghost, as the great gospel blessing promised to believers, the εὐαγγελία, the evangelical promise made to Christians by God, that they should enter into his rest, ver. 1. the sabbatism remaining for the people of God, ver. 9. the rest which they should strive to enter into, ver. 11. and be afraid lest they should fail of, ver. 1. (2.) I know of no such happy change of the affairs of Christians in all other parts of the world, that the apostle should here, and almost in all his other Epistles, speak of it, as this interpretation maketh him to do, as one of the greatest blessings of Christianity; nor were there any such halcyon days enjoyed by Christians after the desolation of Jerusalem. This will be evident from Christ's message to the Asiatic churches, after the times of Domitian; for there he speaks to the angel of the church of Smyrna, Fear none of those things which thou art about to suffer: behold, Satan is about to cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried ten days. Be thou faithful to the death, and I will give thee a crown of life, Rev. ii. 10. To the church of Pergamus thus: I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, where is the throne of Satan; and thou holdest my name, and hast not denied the faith in the days in which Antipas my faithful martyr suffered, who was slain among you where Satan dwells, ibid. ver. 13. To the church of Philadelphia thus: Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I will also keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth, iii. 10. This argument a reverend person endeavours to evade, by saying, that John writ his Revelation in the ninth year of Claudius. But, first, this is contrary to the testimony of all antiquity, excepting only the single testimony of Epiphanius; which also is fully answered by Dr. More: for it is generally agreed, that he writ his Revelation in, or after he came from, the isle of Patmos, as may be proved from i. 9—11. Now all the ancients say, that John was banished thither by Domitian; and writ his Revelation about that time. So Irenæus* speaks expressly, saying, If the name of antichrist had been to be divulged, it would have been mentioned by him who saw the revelation; for it was not seen long ago, but almost in our age, at the end of the reign of Domitian: which passage cannot be understood of the name only of the beast, but of the whole revelation; as is evident, (1.) because Eusebius, who cites this passage, must understand him so: for he saith, that he returned from his exile in this island, μετὰ τὴν Δομιτιανοῦ τελευτήν, (chap. xxiii.) after the death of Domitian; and so he must have writ his Revelation while he lived. And (2.) because the name of the beast is not said to be revealed to the evangelist, but only the number of his name. And (3.) the words καὶ τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν ἑωρακότος even force this sense; for they are properly rendered, who saw also the revelation, distinguishing the revelation from the name. And, lastly, a name cannot properly be said to be seen, nor doth St. John ever use any such expression about it; but a revelation may be properly said to be seen, and St. John often saith he saw them. Again, in this persecution of Domitian, saith Eusebius,* κατέχει λόγος, the tradition runs, that John the evangelist was banished to the isle of Patmos, for the testimony he gave to the Divine Word. And in his Chronicon† he adds, that under him the apostle John being banished into the isle of Patmos, ἔνθα τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν ἑώρακεν, ὡς δηλοῖ Εἰρηναῖος, there saw his revelation, as Irenæus testifies; which both confirms the tradition, and gives the true sense of the words of Irenæus, cited by him. So also St. Jerome‡ saith, That St. John being banished into the isle of Patmos, in the fourteenth year of Domitian, "scripsit Apocalypsin," composed the book of the Revelation. So almost all the Greek and Latin writers, saith Huet. in Orig. Com. p. 72. Vid. Oros. lib. vii. cap. 10, 11. Martyr. Timoth. apud Phot. Cod. 254. p. 1403. lib. i. Aret. in Apoc. 1. 9. Secondly, It is certain, from the second text here cited, that Antipas had suffered martyrdom before the writing of these Epistles to the churches. Now that Antipas suffered martyrdom under Domitian, the old Roman martyrology assures us, and Dr. Hammond on the place confesses: it is therefore evident, that St. John, speaking of this martyrdom, which happened in the days of Domitian, as a thing past, must write the Revelation in or after the reign of Domitian. This the doctor saw, and therefore interprets these words, Thou hast not denied my faith, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις, even in those days (of fiery trial) in which Antipas, ἀπεκτάνθη, was or hath been slain: thus the time is approaching wherein Antipas I foresee will be cruelly martyred; that is, if this was written in the ninth of Claudius, and Antipas slain the tenth of Domitian, I foresee he will be slain forty years hence; which descant, to speak in his own words, is too vain to be seriously considered. Lastly, The Christians had no such halcyon days for any considerable time after the destruction of Jerusalem: for Jerusalem was destroyed anno Christi 70; and the second persecution began under Domitian, anno Domini 96. They had therefore only rest for twenty years, and then comes the second persecution, in which many Christians § were exiled, and some suffered martyrdom; for even heathen writers, saith Eusebius, ‖ mention τὸν διωγμὸν καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ μαρτύρια, the persecutions and the martyrdoms of our men. And in his Chronicon he saith, That Brutus, in his history, affirms, that πολλοὶ Χριστιανῶν ἐμαρτύρησαν κατὰ Δομιτιανὸν, many Christians suffered martyrdom under Domitian. Ten years after the end of this persecution, comes on a third persecution under Trajan, in which, saith Eusebius,¶ so great and heavy was the persecution, in most places, that

¶ Τοσοῦτός γε μὴν ἐν πλείοσι τόποις ὁ καθ' ἡμῶν ἐπετάθη ὁ διωγμὸς, ὡς Πλίνιον Σεκοῦνδον ἐπὶ τῷ πλήθει τῶν μαρτύρων κινηθέντα βασιλεῖ κοινῶσαι περὶ τοῦ πλήθους τῶν ὑπὲρ τῆς πίστεως ἀναιρεμένων.——

Pliny, one of the celebrated presidents of the provinces, being moved with the multitude of the martyrs, writ to the emperor concerning the multitude of the martyrs that had suffered; and received this answer from him, That they should not be inquired after, but only punished as they fell into their hands. And that though hereupon the open persecutions ceased, yet in divers provinces they continued, and exercised many of the Christians with divers kinds of martyrdom.*

In the seventeenth year of Trajan, the Jews in Mesopotamia rebel, and many myriads of them perish. In the second of Hadrian they rebel again, and overcome. In the seventeenth of Hadrian, Barchochebas set himself up for their Messiah, and drew an infinite multitude of Jews after him. Now all these, and especially the last, were severe persecutors of the Christians of those places. For Justin Martyr† oft informs us, That even after the destruction of Jerusalem, they retained still the same hatred to the Christians, and cut them off wherever they had power and opportunity; and in the days of Barchochebas, put those Christians to exquisite torments, who would not deny Christ. And could these be the times of quiet and safety to the Christians, from their persecutors? and of prosperous and peaceable days for the public worship and service of God? Is this the ἐπαγγελία, gospel-promise of a rest and sabbatism to the people of God? the reward, which it is just with God to render them for all their sufferings for his sake? (2 Thess. i. 7. see Dr. Hammond on that place.)

To come then to the true import of this phrase, let it be noted, that there is a double rest mentioned in this and the former chapters; viz.

1. The rest promised to the Jews in the land of Canaan, iii. 11. And this, saith the apostle, could not be the rest of God; for if Joshua had given him (such) rest, David could not have spoken of another day, ver. 8. Why not? saith Mr. Clerc. Answer, Because then, by entering into that, they would have already entered into the rest of God.

2. A rest, after the example of God, ceasing from his labours, when he had finished the creation, which is the rest of the blessed that die in the Lord, ἵνα ἀναπαύσωνται ἐκ τῶν κόπων αὐτῶν, that they may rest from their labours, Rev. xiv. 13. And that this is the rest which the apostle now begins to speak of, is evident from these words, ver. 10. He that is entered into rest, he hath also ceased from his own works, as God did from his; for what can we understand by resting from his own works, but as the fathers‡ do interpret it, τῶν διωγμῶν, τῶν πειρασμῶν, τῶν θλίψεων, from his persecutions, temptations, and afflictions, to which he is obnoxious in this present world? The phrase seems plainly to be taken from Isa. lvii. 1. where it is said of the righteous taken away from the evil to come, They shall enter into peace, they shall rest in their beds. Of this rest, that of Canaan, and the sabbatism there observed, were a type, as the Jews themselves inform us; and therefore it seems reasonable to interpret these words agreeably to that sense.

[4] Ver. 7.] Here Mr. Clerc speaks thus; I say again, There is no mention in the Psalmist of any future rest: which if true, there is no sense in the apostle's words, nor any strength in his argument, for it doth evidently run thus, There must be a rest to the people of God, besides, i. e. succeeding, that which Joshua procured them in the land of Canaan; because the Psalmist, so long after their rest in Canaan, makes mention of a future rest: so the apostle. There is no mention in the apostle of a future rest, saith Mr. Le Clerc. He had spoken in one place of the rest of God, saith the apostle, ver. 4. And he speaks again, ἐν τούτῳ, in this place of the Psalmist, of this rest, ver. 5. into which unbelievers not entering, in this passage of David, he again, τίνα ὁρίζει ἡμέραν, sets or defines a certain day, by saying to them, who lived so long after these unbelievers miscarried, To-day if you will hear his voice (and so enjoy this rest), iii. 18, 19. harden not your hearts: speaking there of a rest not already enjoyed, but hereafter to be enjoyed by them, and so not of the rest procured to them by Joshua: εἰ γὰρ, for if Joshua had given then the rest called the rest of God, David would not have here spoken of another day of rest; but having done so, ἄρα, certo utique, we conclude, there remains yet a rest to be enjoyed by the people of God.

[5] Ver. 8. Εἰ γὰρ Ἰησοῦς, For if Joshua.] For explication of the apostle's argument here let it be noted, that all the Greek commentators on this place concur in this, that the apostle speaketh of a threefold rest.

First, Of the rest of God, mentioned Gen. ii. 2. in these words, And God rested on the seventh day from all his works that he had done. Which rest, say the ancients, was the symbol of the rest of the just from all their labours. So Irenæus* saith, The seventh day, which was sanctified, and in which God rested from all his works, is the true sabbath of the just, in which they shall do no earthly labour: and Origen† saith, That Celsus understood not the mystery of the seventh day, and the rest of God, in which all that had done their work in six, and had left nothing undone which belonged to them, should feast with God, ascending to the vision of him, and in that to the general festivity of the just and blessed. And again, ‡ If we farther inquire which are the true sabbaths, we shall find that the observation of the true sabbath reaches beyond the world; the true sabbath, in which God will rest from all his works, being the world to come, then when all grief, sorrow, and sighing, shall fly away, and God shall be all in all.

Secondly, Of the rest of the Jews in Canaan: which is the rest God sware the murmuring and unbelieving Jews should not enjoy, perhaps as well in the spiritual sense as in the natural. For the Jews themselves represent their sin, as that in which they made bold, § ψευδολογίαν κατακρίνειν τῷ Θεῷ, to charge God with a lie. And the Jerusalem Targum saith,‖ God threatened to remember it in the day of judgment. In Midrash Tillim an evil tongue is said to be worse than idolatry; and this is proved from what these rebels spake against God, גזר דון, the sentence of judgment being passed upon them for their evil words, Numb. xiv. 28. Now idolatry is still reckoned by them a sin exclusive from the heavenly Canaan, They shall not enter into the rest of the house of my sanctuary, saith the Chaldee, on Psal. xcv. 11. However, those Jews who entered into Canaan, when they were to have rest from all their enemies round about, so as to dwell safely, (Deut. xii. 9, 10.) did so far disobey the voice of the Lord, that he said he would not drive their enemies out from before them, but would leave them to be as thorns in their sides and pricks in their eyes, to vex them in the land where they dwelt, Judg. ii. 2, 3. Josh. xxiii. 13. Numb. xxxiii. 55.: so that the Jews themselves expected a farther completion of that promise, in the times of the Messiah, as we learn from those words of Zacharias the father of the Baptist, Blessed be the God of Israel; who hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up a mighty salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began: that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us: that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear, Luke i. 68—71. 74. And hence the apostle here concludes, that Joshua gave them not the rest emphatically styled the rest of God, as resembling his rest from all his works, when he had finished the world; and so there must be yet another rest remaining to the people of God, as it follows, ver. 9.

[6] Ver. 9. A rest, Σαββατισμὸς.] The apostle, by thus changing the word ἀνάπαυσις, rest, into sabbatism, and by comparing of this sabbatism with the rest of God on the sabbath, or seventh day, clearly leads us to the interpretation of all the ancient Christians, that our glorious and complete rest hereafter with God, is that of which God's resting on the seventh day was a symbol; and to the spiritual sabbath, of which the Jewish doctors speak so generally, as the great thing signified by their sabbath; as when they say, * The sabbath was given to be דוגמא של העולם הבא, δεῖγμα, a sign, or exemplar, of the world to come. The sabbath-day, what is it? † A figure of the land of the living, to wit, of the world or age to come, the age of souls, the age of consolations. Thus in their descants upon Psalm xcii. which bears this title both in the Hebrew and the Greek, A song, ליום השבת, εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν τοῦ σαββάτου, upon the sabbath-day, they say, ‡ This is the age to come, שכלו שבת, which is all sabbath. The Psalmist, saith R. Solomon Jarchi, in locum, speaks of the business of the world to come, which is all sabbath.—A psalm upon the sabbath-day, saith R. Eliezer, cap. 19. p. 42. that is, upon the day which is all sabbath, and rest, in the life of the world to come. And again, cap. 18. p. 41. The blessed Lord created seven worlds (i. e. ages), but one of them is all sabbath, and rest in life eternal: where he refers to their common opinion, that the world should continue six thousand years, and then a perpetual sabbath should begin, typified by God's resting the seventh day, and blessing it. So Bereschith Rabba; If we expound the seventh day of the seven thousand years, which is the world to come, the exposition is, And he blessed; because that in the seventh thousand all souls shall be bound in the bundle of life; for there shall be there the augmentation of the Holy Ghost, wherein we shall delight ourselves. And so our rabbins, of blessed memory, have said in their commentaries, God blessed the seventh day, the Holy Ghost blessed the world to come, which beginneth in the seventh thousand of years. Philo* is very copious in this allegory, who, disputing against those who, having learned that the written laws were σύμβολα νοητῶν πραγμάτων, symbols of intellectual things, did upon that account neglect them, saith, That though the seventh day was a document of the power of God, and of the rest of the creature, yet was not the outward rest to be cast off. And again, It is fitly said, δι' ὑπονοιῶν, by allegories, or figurative expressions, the sabbaths of the land shall be meat for you, Lev. xxv. 6. † For rest in God producing the greatest good, peace, secure from war, is only that which nourisheth, and is to be enjoyed with pleasure. And a third time, ‡ This is the reason of the seventh day, or the septenary; i. e. of the soul resting in God, and performing no more mortal works.

[7] Ver. 12. Ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, The word of God.] The apostle seems not to speak here of the essential word of God, the second person of the Trinity: (1.) Because St. Paul, in all his writings, never applies this phrase to our Lord Christ, it being peculiar to St. John. (2.) The apostle must have very abruptly spoken here of him, under this metaphor, of whom nothing went before, but very appositely of the gospel, to which these attributes do well agree: for, (1.) the word is quick and vital, not only promising life to the obedient, but threatening death to the disobedient, from the living God, who can quickly execute it, iii. 12. (2.) It is powerful, being the power of God for the destruction of strong holds, and every thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, 2 Cor. x. 4. 7. (3.) It is sharper than a two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit, the joints and the marrow: slaying Ananias and Sapphira, and delivering up others to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, 1 Cor. v. 5. 1 Tim. i. 20. It is, (4.) A discerner of the thoughts and intentions of the heart, there being then a gift of discerning spirits, attending the preachers of it, by which they judged and discerned of them; and so the secrets of their hearts were made manifest, 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25. And, which makes this extremely pertinent to the present exhortation, all this was very visible in the instance of the unbelievers here mentioned, to terrify the Jews from falling by the same example of unbelief. For, (1.) the word of threatening was so quick upon those spies, who brought up the evil report upon the land, that they died immediately by the hand of God, or by the plague before the Lord, Numb. xiv. 37. And as for the rest of the unbelievers, they were consumed (saith Moses) by God's anger, and by his wrath were troubled: they were carried away as with a flood; they vanished as a dream, or as the morning-grass, which in the evening is cut down, and withereth. (Psal. xc. 5, 6.) And thus they found

They were also thus punished for the evil intentions of their hearts; for, saith St. Stephen, In their hearts they turned back into Egypt, Acts vii. 30.: so that, by the word of God, I am inclined to understand his threats denounced against unbelievers, Numb. xiv. Psal. xcv. 11. It also may deserve to be noted, that Philo, lib. de Cherub. p. 86. G. ascribes most of these epithets to the Λόγος, saying, The flaming sword was a symbol of the Word, especially of the First Cause, ὀξυκινότατον γὰρ καὶ θερμὸν ὁ Λόγος, for his Word is quick and fervent. And again,* God (saith he), whetting his sword, the dissector of all things, divides the inform essence of all things, and cuts them in the middle.

[8] Ver. 13. Πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, To whom we must render an account.] So Matt. xii. 36. Of every idle word that men shall speak, ἀποδώσουσι λόγον, they shall give an account in the day of judgment; Matt. xviii. 23. The kingdom of heaven is like to a certain king, who would, συνᾶραι λόγον, make up an account with his servants; Luke xvi. 2. Ἀπόδος λόγον, Give up an account of thy stewardship; Rom. xiv. 12. Every one, λόγον δώσει τῷ Θεῷ, shall give an account of himself to God; Phil. iv. 17. I desire fruit that may abound, εἰς λόγον ὑμῶν, to your account; Heb. xiii. 17. ὡς λόγον ἀποδώσοντες, As they that must give an account; 1 Pet. iii. 15. Being always ready to give to every one that asks you, λόγον, an account of the hope that is in you; and, iv. 5. Οἱ ἀποδώσουσι λόγον, Who shall give an account to him that is ready to judge the quick and dead.

[9] Ver. 16. To the throne of God.] The Jews say, God hath a double throne, one of judgment, and the other of mercy; and when he beholds the world obnoxious to condemnation, he rises from his throne of judgment, and places himself on that of mercy. This throne of mercy is our blessed Jesus, styled by this apostle, ἱλαστήριον, the true propitiatory, or mercy-seat: by this high-priest and intercessor must we come unto God, he being able to save to the utmost them that come unto God by him, vii. 25.

Note also, That some great men think, the rest and sabbatism, discoursed of, chap. iii. iv. refers to the millenium, or the time of the conversion of the Jewish nation, and the new heavens and new earth, then promised; but I am not able to assent to that opinion, for this reason, that the apostle writes to the believing Jews of the present age, warning them, that there be not in them an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God, and exhorting them to continue unto the end in faith, iii. 13, 14. that so they might not fail of this rest of God; and to fear, lest a promise being made of entering into this rest, any of them should fall short of it, iv. 1, 2. And again, ver. 11. Let us give diligence to enter into this rest, that we fall not by the same example of unbelief. Now these exhortations could not properly be directed to the believing Jews of that age, concerning the millenium, or the glorious times which were to happen at the conversion of the Jewish nation, they being to die one thousand seven hundred years before that conversion, which is not yet accomplished, and before those glorious days, which are not yet come; for what advantage, in reference to that, could they receive by this diligence, who were to die so long before it happened, and being once in heaven or paradise, could neither expect nor desire to come down thence to be partakers of any enjoyments, or better company here on earth? But these exhortations are very properly directed to them, to take care they fail not of their rest in the celestial Canaan, typified by their rest in the earthly Canaan, the time when they should rest with God, saith Origen, ascending to the vision of him, the rest of souls in the land of the living, the rest in the life and the world to come, and in life eternal; (see note on ver. 8. 10.) seeing these blessings only can belong to, and at the time of retribution will only be conferred upon, them who use this diligence. And hitherto the apostle seems plainly to refer it, when he speaks of so great salvation, ii. 3. of bringing many sons to glory, ver. 10. of their being partakers, κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου, of a heavenly calling, iii. 1. the hope and confidence of which he exhorts them to hold fast unto the end, ver. 6. and then immediately begins his discourse of this rest.

CHAP. V.

LET us come forth, saith he, to God's throne of grace with freedom, as having there such a high-priest in whom are all things by way of excellency to be found, for which the Levitical priesthood was ordained, and repaired to; as having,

1. A better priesthood, viz. after the order of Melchisedec, chap. vii.
2. A better consecration to it, viz. by an oath.
3. A better tabernacle in which he ministers.
4. A better sacrifice offered there.
5. A better covenant established in his blood.

1. For every high-priest taken from among men is ordained for (the service of) men in things [1] pertaining to (the worship and propitiation of) God, that he may offer both [2] gifts and sacrifices for sins:

2. (And he is one) who can have compassion [3] on the ignorant, and on them that are out of (Gr. err from) the way (offering willingly and interceding affectionately on their behalf); for that he himself also is compassed with (the like) infirmity.

3. And by reason hereof (of which infirmities) he ought (by God's command, and from the nature of the thing), as for the people, so also [4] for himself, to offer (sacrifices) for sins.

4. And [5] no man taketh this honour to himself, but he (only enjoys it) who is called of God, as was Aaron (and his posterity.

5. And) so also (was it with our Lord) Christ, (for he) glorified not himself to be made a high-priest; but he (appointed him to be so) who said unto him, Thou art my Son, [6] to-day have I begotten thee.

6. As he saith also (of him) in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, (as being raised up to appear for ever in the heavens, and there officiate as a priest for us):

7. Who in the days of his (continuance in the) flesh, when he had offered up (Gr. offering up) prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, to him that was able to save him from death, and was (Gr. being) [7] heard [8] in that he feared; (and being heard so far as to obtain deliverance from his fears, which he did by an angel sent to strengthen him, Luke xxii. 43.)

8. Though he were a Son, yet [9] learned he (the difficulty of) obedience (to death) by the things which he suffered (i. e. by the agonies and terrors which he suffered at the apprehension and approach of the death he was to suffer, and so was the more fitted to be to us a compassionate high-priest under our sufferings for his sake);

9. And being (by these sufferings) [10] made perfect (τελειωθεὶς, consecrated to his priesthood), he became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him;

10. (Being) called (or, constituted) of God a high-priest after the order of Melchisedec (i. e. for ever).

11. Of whom (i. e. whose priesthood) we have many things to say, and (those) [11] hard to be uttered, (or explained, not from the nature of the things themselves, but) seeing (ἐπεὶ, because) ye are dull of hearing.

12. For when for the time (ye have professed the faith) ye ought to (have been able to) be teachers (of it to others), ye have need that one teach you again which be the [12] first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk (the food of babes), and not of strong meat (the food of men).

13. For every one that useth milk is (as yet) unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is (but) a babe (in Christ, 1 Cor. iii. 2. xiv. 20. Gal. iv. 19. Eph. iv. 14.)

14. But strong meat belongeth to them (only) [13] who are of full age (i. e. perfect men), even (to) those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. ΤΑ᾽ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, In things pertaining to God.] To procure and perform those things which relate to the worship and the propitiation of the Deity. So Crellius.

[2] Δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίας, Gifts and sacrifices.] Both these may relate to sacrifices for sin; for not only peace-offerings, but gifts of any kind are called הקרבנות, δῶρα, Matt. v. 23. and מנחה is by the Seventy interpreters often rendered θυσία, Gen. iv. 3. 5. Exod. xxix. 41. xxx. 9. xl. 26. Levit. and Numbers, centies.

[3] Ver. 2. Τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσι καὶ πλανωμένοις.] He refers to the sins which go under the names of אשם וחטאת: for the word חטאת belongs properly to the thing, in doing which we err from the way; and an expiatory sacrifice was therefore required from him that did so, because he knew שחטא ושגג בדרך, that he had erred and gone from the way: but אשם was a sin committed out of ignorance of the command of God: so Abarbanel. For sins committed ἑκουσίως, wittingly, and with a high hand, or from a will set in opposition to the law of God, there was no sacrifice appointed by the law: and to this the apostle alludes, x. 26. saying, to them that sin wilfully there remains no more sacrifice for sin.

[4] Ver. 3. Περὶ ἑαυτοῦ, For himself.] Here Grotius notes, that this being spoken generally of every priest taken from among men, Christ also must have offered for himself a sacrifice for sin; i. e. that he might be delivered from those sorrows, which were the punishment of sin, and were inflicted on him upon occasion of our sins. But in this he seems guilty of great and manifold mistakes; for, 1. the apostle plainly speaks of the sinful infirmities of these priests, who therefore were to offer for their own sin, vii. 27. whereas of Christ he declares, That though he was in all other things made like to us, yet χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, without sin, iv. 15. that he offered himself to God a lamb without spot, ix. 14. that being thus holy, free from evil, undefiled, and separate from sinners, he needed not, upon a day, as those high-priests, to offer up sacrifice first for his own sins, and then for the people's, vii. 26. xxvii. 2. He was not nor could he, after he became our surety, be delivered from those sorrows, which were the punishment of our sins, he being, as our expiatory sacrifice, not only on occasion of our sins, but in our stead, to bear the punishment of our iniquity.

[5] Ver. 4. Καὶ οὐχ ἑαυτῷ τις, No man.] i. e. According to the law, say most interpreters; but I see no necessity of this limitation, it being true that no man can promise to himself God will accept his offerings, who hath no commission from God to make such offerings; whence doth arise a good argument, to shew that sacrifices are of Divine, and not of human institution only.

[6] Ver. 5. This day.] I have shewed, note on ii. 10. that Christ was by his death consecrated to his priesthood; whence it must follow, that he could not exercise his sacerdotal function till after death: and this the apostle sheweth here, by saying, He was made a high-priest by the Father, saying, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee: for that this relates unto the resurrection of our Lord, is evident, because we find the same apostle proving his resurrection from these words, Acts xiii. 33. which he could not have done, had they not been intended as a prediction of his resurrection.

[7] Ver. 7. Εἰσακουσθεὶς, He was heard.] i. e. Delivered from his fear. So the word doth and must signify, when it relates to prayer for deliverance from evils. So Psal. xxii. 21. Σῶσόν με, Save me from the mouth of the lion, καὶ ἀπὸ κεράτων μονοκερώτων, and bear me from the horns of the unicorn; Psal. xxxiv. 6. This poor man cried, καὶ εἰσήκουσε αὐτοῦ, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles; and, ver. 4. I sought the Lord, καὶ εἰσήκουσε, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears; Psal. lv. 2, 3. Attend unto me, καὶ εἰσάκουσον με, and hear me, ἀπὸ φωνῆς ἐχθροῦ, καὶ ἀπὸ θλίψεως ἁμαρτωλοῦ, from the voice of the enemy, and from the vexation of the wicked; and, ver. 16. I cried to the Lord, and the Lord εἰσήκουσέ μου, heard me; ver. 18. He delivered my life, ἀπὸ τῶν ἐγγιζόντων μοι, from those that drew nigh to me; Ecclus. li. 10, 11. εἰσηκούσθη ἡ δέησίς μου, My prayer was heard, for thou savedst me from destruction. (See Psal. xxxi. 7.)

[8] Ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας, From his fear.] Some would have this rendered so, He was heard by reason of his reverence of God; but it is truly rendered, from his fear: and so the word continually signifies, both in the Old and the New Testament, and when it is used, as it very often is, by Philo. So Josh. xxii. 24. ἕνεκεν εὐλαβείας ἐποιήσαμεν τοῦτο, We did this out of fear; and, Wisd. xvii. 8. καταγέλαστον εὐλάβειαν ἐνόσουν, They were affected with a ridiculous fear; Heb. xii. 28. Let us serve God acceptably, μετ᾽ αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας, with reverence and godly fear; Acts xxiii. 10. εὐλαβηθεὶς ὁ χιλίαρχος, The captain fearing; Heb. xi. 7. Noah, εὐλαβηθεὶς, fearing, prepared an ark: so Josephus saith of the king, Esther's husband, that he held forth his sceptre, εὐλαβείας αὐτὴν ἀπολύων, delivering her from her fear: and in the Septuagint, εὐλαβεῖσθαι ἀπὸ προσώπου Κυρίου, is to fear before God, Exod. iii. 6. Jer. v. 22. Hab. ii. 20. Zeph. i. 7. iii. 13. Zech. ii. 13. and εὐλαβεῖσθαι ἀπὸ προσώπου αὐτοῦ, is to fear before man, or be afraid of men, 1 Sam. xviii. 15. Job xix. 29. Isa. lvii. 11. Jer. xxii. 25. Ecclus. vii. 7. This sense also the particle ἀπὸ doth require, which rarely doth import the meritorious cause. His prayers and tears also do express the greatness of his fears; and, lastly, the scope of the apostle requires this sense, he being here representing our Lord as one of like passions with us, that he might shew he was a merciful high-priest. This fear he became subject to, say Grotius and the fathers, because the Divinity for a season as it were withdrew its influences from the human nature, καὶ γὰρ τὴν ἀνθρωπότητα τοῦτο παθεῖν ἡ θεότης συνεχώρησε, for the Deity permitted the humanity thus to suffer, saith Theodoret. And this doubtless all those fathers intended, who followed that reading, ii. 9. that he tasted death for every man, χωρὶς Θεοῦ: for that this was no depravation of the Nestorians, as Œcumenius and Theophylact fancied, is evident from this, that his words are thus cited by Origen,* and by St. Ambrose,† who lived before Nestorius.

[9] Ver. 8. Ἔμαθεν ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε τὴν ὑπακοήν, He learned obedience, from or by the things that he suffered.] These words I have expounded thus: He learned (the difficulty of) obedience (to the death) by the things that he suffered. But I conceive they may be also rendered and expounded thus: Ver. 7. He was heard and delivered from his fears, to wit, from those fears which threw him into an agony in the garden, and against which an angel was sent from heaven to comfort him; Ver. 8. καίπερ ὢν υἱὸς, though being a Son (even the proper Son of God), he taught us obedience by the things that he suffered, or by the death he suffered in obedience to the will and commandment of his Father: (John x. 18.) for as the Hebrew lamed signifies both to learn and to teach, and is by the Septuagint above twenty times rendered διδάσκειν, to teach; and as the word learn in our language signifies also to teach, as in these words of the old translation, Psal. cxix. 66. O learn me understanding and knowledge: so also, saith Eustathius,‡ the word μανθάνω is μέσῃ λέξις, a word that signifies both to teach and to be taught, and is so used by the authors that lived after Homer's time, and by the sophisters.

[10] Ver. 9. Τελειωθεὶς, Made perfect.] That this word is here taken in the notion of consecration, may appear, saith the reverend Dr. Hammond, by the words following; as the application of it, being pronounced or declared a high-priest, which belongs to Christ after his resurrection, and not before, that being the time when he entered into his heavenly tabernacle, living there for ever to appear before God, and exercise that function in his presence for us; and so he became a high-priest for ever.

[11] Ver. 11. Δυσερμήνευτος, Hard to be uttered.] See here what are St. Paul's δυσνόητα, things hard to be understood; (2 Pet. iii. 16.) viz. those things which were not so in themselves, or through the difficulty of the matter revealed, but through the imbecility and weakness of them to whom they were spoken.

[12] Ver. 12. Στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ, The first principles of the oracles of God.] It is the descant of all the ancient commentators on this place,* that by these first principles the apostle understands the humanity of Christ, because the preachers of the gospel spake of that only, to them who were not yet perfect in the faith: and yet this seemeth neither to be true, nor safe; not true, because the apostle had in the first and second chapters of this Epistle, as all these commentators teach, spoken to those rude Jews of the Deity of Christ; and because he mentions not Christ's human nature among the principles of the doctrines of Christ, reckoned up vi. 1, 2.: not safe, because it seems to intimate, that Christians might be taught the faith before they had the knowledge of the Divinity of Christ, and consequently that this was no necessary part of the Christian faith.

Note, secondly, that hence we may fairly guess who were, in the Epistles to St. Timothy, the teachers of the law, who neither understood what they said, nor whereof they affirmed, 1 Tim. i. 7. and the ἑτεροδιδάσκαλοι, the false teachers, who were proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, vi. 3—5. and who were always learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, 2 Tim. iii. 7. viz. not the gnostics, but, in all likelihood, the Jewish false teachers, and such as were perverted by them.

Note, thirdly, that this seems not to be spoken of all the Jews, but only of the greatest part of them; that therefore which is spoken of the Deity of Christ, the Melchisedecian priesthood, the virtue of Christ's priesthood, belonged to the more perfect, who were not to be debarred of the knowledge of these things, by reason of the imbecility of their brethren.

[13] Ver. 14. Τελείων δὲ.] See the sense of the word perfect, note on 1 Cor. ii. 6. This metaphor seems to be taken from the digestion of the stomach: that which is light of digestion, and needs not much concoction, as solid food and strong meat do, being here represented by the name of milk; and so in reference to the judgment, that which can easily be learned, and apprehended aright, and in which we are in no great danger of mistaking, as are the first principles of religion, mentioned chap. vi. is compared to milk; but that we cannot easily discern, and about which we are subject to mistakes and wrong conceptions, as the things mentioned in the former note were to the Jews, is called strong meat.

CHAP. VI.

1. THEREFORE, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ (though your small proficiency in them makes it seem almost necessary to discourse anew of them to you), [1] let us go on unto perfection (i. e. to the doctrines which will render you perfect men in the knowledge of Christ); not laying again the foundation of (Christianity in the doctrines of) repentance from dead works, (i. e. from works deserving death, Rom. vi. 23. viii. 13.) and of faith towards God,

2. (And) of the [2] doctrine of baptisms (that of water and of the Spirit, by which they that repent and believe are initiated into the church of Christ), and [3] of laying on of hands (after baptism, for the receiving of the Holy Ghost), and of the resurrection of the dead, and [4] of eternal judgment, (the great motives, to engage all Christians herein to exercise themselves, to have always consciences void of offence towards God and towards all men, Acts xxiv. 15, 16.)

3. [5] And this will we do, if God permit.

4. (I say, let us not attempt wholly to lay again the foundation of Christianity;) for it is impossible for those who were once [6] enlightened (in baptism), and [7] have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost (sent down from heaven, and conferred on them by the imposition of hands),

5. And have [8] tasted the good word of God (preached among them with such variety of tongues, and confirmed by so many miracles), and (have seen and felt) [9] the powers of the world to come,

6. If they shall fall away (from Christianity), [10] to renew them again to repentance; seeing they (by so doing) crucify to themselves (or by themselves) the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

7. For (as) the earth which drinketh in the rain which cometh oft (from heaven) upon it, and (so) brings forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth (farther) blessing from God, (so is it with them who become fruitful under the dew and showers of Divine grace:)

8. But that (earth) which (being thus dressed and watered) beareth (only) thorns and briers is [11] rejected, and nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

9. But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak (to warn you of the danger of falling off from the Christian faith).

10. For (if ye be not wanting to yourselves) God is not unrighteous to forget [12] your work (of faith) and (your) labour of love, which you have shewed towards his name, in that you have ministered to the (necessities of the) saints, and (yet) do minister (to them).

11. And we desire (ἐπιθυμοῦμεν δὲ, we desire therefore) that every one of you do shew the same diligence (which hitherto ye have done), to the (intent that ye may retain a) full assurance of hope to the end:

12. [13] That ye be not slothful (Gr. may not be slothful), but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit-(ed) the promises.

13. For when God (upon his faith in offering his son Isaac) made a promise to Abraham, [14] because he could swear by no (one) greater, he sware by himself,

14. Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee.

15. And so (accordingly), after he had patiently endured, he obtained the [15] promise (of a seed multiplied greatly to him, Gen. xxii. 17.

16. God confirming his faith in the promises made to him after the manner of men:) for men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an [16] end of all strife (or contradiction).

17. Wherein (ἐν ᾧ, in which thing accordingly) God, (being) willing more abundantly to shew (not only to Abraham, but also) to the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath;

18. That by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie (viz. his promise and his oath), we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: (who, to escape the wrath impendent on the unbelieving Jews here and hereafter, have fled to the hope of glory set before us in Christ Jesus, the lively hope of an inheritance incorruptible, to which we are begotten by Christ Jesus, 1 Pet. i. 3.)

19. Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast (in all the storms and billows of the world), and which [17] entereth into that within (Gr. the inward part of) the veil;

20. Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, (who is) made a high-priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: (and so one that can never die, or miscarry in his office, but lives for ever, there to appear in the presence of God for us, vii. 24, 25.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα, To perfection.] That to be perfect signifies to be fully instructed in the principles of Christian faith, see note on 1 Cor. ii. 6.

[2] Ver. 2. Βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς, The doctrine of baptisms.] He speaks not of the baptism of John and of Christ, for the baptism of John was preparatory to repentance and faith in Christ; nor of the baptism of martyrdom, that being not ordinarily known to the Jews by that name; but of the double baptism, of which the Baptist spake in these words, I baptize you with water; but there is one who cometh after me, he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire; (Matt. iii. 11.) and of which our Saviour speaks to Nicodemus, saying, Except a man be born again of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God: (John iii. 5.) for this in order follows the doctrine of repentance, and faith in God and our Lord Jesus Christ.

[3] Ἐπιθέσεως τε χειρῶν, Imposition of hands.] Imposition of hands was used in ordination, healing of the sick, and absolution of penitents; but this imposition of hands was not common to all Christians, nor joined with baptism; nor was it to be reckoned among the principles or initiatory doctrines of the Christian faith. It remains therefore that we understand this of the imposition of the apostles' hands, used after baptism for the receiving of the Holy Ghost, mentioned Acts viii. 17. Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. (See xix. 6.)

[4] Καὶ κρίματος αἰωνίου, Of eternal judgment.] Hence interpreters observe, that the doctrine of Origen, touching the period of the torments of the damned, is here condemned: and indeed the primitive fathers, not Origen himself excepted, taught the contrary.

If we do not the will of Christ (saith Clemens Romanus*), οὐδὲν ἡμᾶς ῥύσεται τῆς αἰωνίου κολάσεως, nothing will deliver us from eternal punishment. The black way in Barnabas† is ὁδὸς τοῦ θανάτου αἰωνίου μετὰ τιμωρίας, the way of eternal death with punishment. The punishment of the damned, saith Justin Martyr,* is κόλασις καὶ τιμωρία ἐν αἰωνίῳ πυρὶ, (κόλασις ἀπέραντος, κόλασις αἰώνιος, πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκη) endless punishment and torment in eternal fire: in Theophylact,† it is κόλασις αἰώνιος, αἰώνιος τιμωρία, eternal punishment. Irenæus,‡ in his symbol of faith, makes this one article, that τοὺς ἀσεβεῖς καὶ ἀδίκους εἰς τὸ αἰώνιον πῦρ πέμψῃ, Christ would send the ungodly and unjust into everlasting fire.

Tertullian§ declares, "Omnes homines aut cruciatui destinari aut refrigerio, utroque sempiterno," that all men are appointed to eternal torments or refreshments. And if any man (saith he) thinks the wicked are to be consumed, and not punished, let him remember, "ignem gehennæ æternum prædicari in pœnam æternam," that hell-fire is styled eternal, because designed for eternal punishment; and thence concludes their substance will remain for ever, whose punishment doth so. St. Cyprian‖ saith, "Servantur cum corporibus suis animæ infinitis cruciatibus ad dolorem;" that the souls of the wicked are kept with their bodies, to be grieved with endless torments. "Tormentis nec modus ullus aut terminus," There is no measure nor end of their torments, saith Minutius.¶ Lastly, Origen reckons this among the doctrines defined by the church, that every soul, when it goes out of this world, shall either enjoy the inheritance of eternal life and bliss, if its deeds have rendered it fit for life, "sive igni æterno ac suppliciis mancipanda est," or is to be delivered up to eternal fire and punishment, if its sins have deserved that state.

[5] Ver. 3. Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, And this will we do, &c.] This verse by Grotius and Dr. Hammond is thus interpreted; We purpose some other time to instruct you farther in these rudiments of Christianity, if you do not in the meantime fall from the Christian faith; (ii. 1. 3.) If there be not in you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God; (iii. 12.) If you fall not after the same example of unbelief which your forefathers gave, (iv. 11.)

Others put this verse in a parenthesis, and make it relate to these words, ver. 1. Let us go on unto perfection, or to the higher doctrines of Christianity, as God willing we now intend to do. So Acts xviii. 21. God willing I will return unto you. I will come to you speedily if God will, 1 Cor. iv. 19. And this interpretation I like best.

[6] Ver. 4. Φωτισθέντας, Enlightened.] That baptism from the beginning was called φωτισμὸς, illumination, we learn from the concurrent testimonies of Justin Martyr,†† Irenæus,‡‡ and Clemens Alexandrinus, which makes it very probable that this phrase obtained from the beginning of Christianity, and so this answers to the doctrine of baptisms, ver. 2.

[7] Γευσαμένους τε τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, And have tasted of the heavenly gift.] i. e. The Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, styled by our Saviour, τὴν δωρεὰν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the gift of God, John iv. 10. Thus our Saviour discoursing of baptism by water and the Holy Ghost, and of regeneration, ἄνωθεν, from above, by virtue of this Spirit, saith, he discoursed περὶ τῶν ἐπουρανίων, of heavenly things, John iii. 12. and they, who were sealed with the Spirit of promise, Eph. i. 13. are said to be blessed with spiritual blessings, ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in heavenly things; and this gift was imparted by imposition of hands, Acts viii. 17. xix. 6.

[8] Ver. 5. Καὶ καλὸν γευσαμένους Θεοῦ ῥῆμα, And have tasted the good word of God.] i. e. And have been acquainted with the gospel, which affords the promise of remission of sins, and of justification here, and of a resurrection to eternal life hereafter, (ver. 2.) So the promise of bringing the children of Israel into the land of Canaan is styled הטוב הדבר, ῥῆμα καλὸν, a good word, Josh. xxi. 45. xxiii. 15. the word of God for bringing his people out of captivity is styled דברי הטוב, my good word, Jer. xxix. 10. the words of consolation, which the angel spake to Jerusalem, are טבים דברים, ῥήματα καλὰ, good words, Zech. i. 13. the promise made to God's people of remission of sins, and peace and truth in the days of the Messiah, is הדבר הטוב, a good word; and the prophet speaking of the Messiah, saith, My heart meditateth a good word, דבר טוב, λόγον ἀγαθὸν, Psal. xlv. 1. This word they saw confirmed by the gift of tongues and prophecy, vouchsafed to the first preachers of it, and daily experimented in their assemblies, (1 Cor. xiv.) and so they could not but be convinced of the truth of it.

[9] Δυνάμεις τε μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, The powers of the world to come.] The world to come doth, in the language of the prophets and of the Jewish doctors, signify the times of the Messiah, who, in the prophet Isaiah, is called, ὁ πατὴρ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the Father of the world to come. (See note on ii. 5.) The powers, therefore, of the world to come, according to the Scripture idiotism, must be the external operations of the Holy Ghost, viz. the gifts of faith, of healing, of casting out devils, ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων, 1 Cor. xii. 8, 9. the working of miracles, or the operations of powers. Or, secondly, this fourth particular may answer to the day of judgment, which is the fourth thing mentioned, ver. 2. as the three former seem to do to the three other things there mentioned, and then the powers of the world to come may signify the powerful persuasions the doctrine of a future judgment administers to repentance and a new life; (Acts xvii. 30, 31. 2 Cor. v. 10, 11.) though of this import of the phrase I find no example.

[10] Ver. 6. Ἀδύνατον τοὺτους πάλιν ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν, It is impossible to renew these to repentance.] For these being all the means, internal and external, by which God gave testimony to the truth of Christian faith, and the prophetic office and glorious resurrection of our Lord; they, saith the apostle, who, after a full experience of them, do of their own accord renounce that faith, cannot be renewed to repentance, because they have already resisted all that evidence, which God saw fit to give men of the truth of that faith and of this Messiah; and so they become guilty of that sin against the Holy Ghost, which, saith our Saviour, shall never be forgiven. (Matt. xii. 32.)

But then the παραπεσόντες, men that thus fall away, are not those who lapse in the times of persecution, and much less those who, through the temptations of the flesh, may sometimes fall into great sins, for to such the apostle grants place for repentance, 2 Cor. xii. 21. and one of these he delivers to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, 1 Cor. v. 5. exhorting his Corinthians, upon his repentance, to receive him into their communion, 2 Cor. ii. 7, 8. but such as, after these experiences of the truth of the Christian faith, have voluntarily renounced it, relapsing either to heathenism or Judaism; for they are such as apostatize from the living God, iii. 12. such as fall through unbelief, iv. 11. such as hold not the profession of the faith, x. 23. such as draw back from the faith, ver. 38.

Secondly, This will be farther evident from the description of these persons, they being here said ἀναστανροῦν ἑαυτοῖς, by themselves to crucify Christ afresh, and παραδειγματίζειν, to put him to an open shame, as one that deserved the punishment which the Jews inflicted on him, and being apostate Jews, to crucify Christ again.

[11] Ver. 8. Ἀδόκιμος, Rejected.] It is rejected of the husbandman, who will spend no more labour upon it, but leave it to be scorched by the heat, and so to be like the heath, which is the emblem of the cursed man, Jer. xvii. 5, 6. or like the barren fig-tree which the Lord cursed, saying, Never fruit grow on thee more, Matt. xxi. 19. Accordingly, they on whom the showers of Divine grace fall down from heaven, if they bring forth no good fruit, shall be ἀδόκιμοι, rejected by God, continue under the curse of the law, and their end shall be destruction.

[12] Ver. 10. Τοῦ ἔργου ὑμῶν, Your work.] This seems to be the ἔργον πίστεως, work of faith, mentioned 1 Thess. i. 3. 2 Thess. i. 11. and joined with ὁ κόπος τῆς ἀγάπης, the labour of love, as here; and which is styled ἔργον ἀγαθὸν, the good work, Phil. i. 6. Rom. ii. 7. (see note on that verse) the following exhortation being this, That they would continue in the faith to the end, and be imitators of them who through faith and patience did inherit the promises.

[13] Ver. 12. Ἵνα μὴ νωθροὶ, That ye be not slothful.] i. e. God being so engaged on his part to let nothing be wanting which is requisite to enable you to persevere, and so to enjoy the fruits of your faith in the salvation of your souls, see that ye be not slothful, nor faint-hearted, but still continuing the same Christian diligence to the end, that so ye may at last enjoy the blessings promised by this gospel, and live in an assured hope of them, as your father Abraham did.

[14] Ver. 13. Ἐπεὶ κατ' οὐδενὸς εἶχε μείζονος ὀμόσαι, Because he could swear by no greater.] So Philo, Ὁρᾷς γὰρ ὅτι οὐ καθ' ἑτέρου ὀμνύει ὁ Θεὸς, οὐδὲν γὰρ αὐτοῦ κρεῖττον, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἑαυτοῦ, Thou seest that God sweareth not by another, for there is nothing better than he, but by himself. (Leg. Alleg. lib. ii. p. 75. D.)

He swears, δι' ἑαυτοῦ, by himself.] It may perhaps be not unworthy of our observation, that where God saith in the Old Testament, I swear by myself; the Jerusalem Targum renders this frequently bemimri, by my Word, as Exod. xvii. 16. Deut. i. 1. xxxii. 22. 26.

[15] Ver. 15. Τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, The promise.] This cannot be understood of Isaac, the promised seed, he being not only born, but offered, when God made this promise to Abraham; nor can it be said that he inherited the promise because he saw it afar off, that being a sign he did not yet inherit it, or that he did this in his posterity; for the apostle saith, he himself inherited the promises: which is exactly true of the words cited here by the apostle, Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee; for the book of Genesis assures us, this promise was exactly fulfilled in his life: for the Lord blessed him in all things. (Gen. xxiv. 1.) He had a numerous seed by his wife Keturah, (Gen. xxv.) to whom he gave gifts, (ver. 6.) From Ishmael arose twelve sons, which were princes of their tribes, (ver. 13. 16.) He lived fifteen years after the birth of Jacob and Esau by Rebekah, of whom the oracle declared, that there were two nations in her womb: for Isaac was sixty years old when they were born to him, (ver. 23. 26.) He himself was born when Abraham was a hundred years old, (Gen. xxi. 5.) Abraham was a hundred and seventy-five years old when he died: (Gen. xxv. 7.) he therefore lived fifteen years after the birth of Jacob and Esau, and ninety years after the birth of Ishmael; and so lived to see this promise verified to him.

[16] Ver. 16. Ἀντιλογίας πέρας, An end of contradiction.] Diodorus Siculus* informs us, that the Egyptians styled an oath, μεγίστην πίστιν, the greatest confirmation. It is, saith D. Halicarnassensis, τελευταία πίστις, the last or utmost assurance. It is, in the language of Procopius, ὕστατον, καὶ ἐχυρώτατον πίστεώς τε καὶ ἀληθείας ἐνέχυρον, the last and firmest pledge of faith and truth. That the apostle here speaks of promissory oaths, is evident from the occasion of this discourse, viz. his promise made to Abraham. Now these oaths being equally conducing to this good end in all ages, we have just reason to believe that Christianity allows of them for these ends.

[17] Ver. 19. Εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος, Which entereth into the veil.] Which, being the hope of the heavenly mansions typified by the sanctum sanctorum, within the veil, carries our expectations thither: the Jews had the highest expectations from the service of the high-priest entering into the holy of holies; if on the day of expiation he came out alive, † there was great joy, for then they thought they were accepted. How then may we rejoice in contemplation of that heavenly sanctuary!

CHAP. VII.

1. (WHICH order, sure, was very excellent, and therefore fit to represent the priesthood of the holy Jesus, the King of saints, and Prince of peace:) for this Melchisedec, [1] king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the (four) kings, (mentioned Gen. xiv. 9.) and blessed him; (ver. 18.)

2. To whom Abraham also gave a tenth part of all (the spoils taken by him); first being by interpretation (of the word Melchisedec), King of righteousness, and after that also (styled) King of Salem, which (by interpretation) is, King of peace; (and being)

3. [2] Without father, (or) without mother (of any priestly order), without descent (from any of the pedigree of Abraham, ver. 7.) [3] having neither beginning of days (from which his priestly office was to commence), nor end of life (in which it terminated); but, (being) [4] made like unto the Son (a son) of God, abideth a priest continually.

4. Now consider how great this man (Gr. he) was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave [5] the tenth of the spoils (which anciently were given to kings and priests, as belonging to God, whom they served or represented).

5. And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive (i. e. they indeed of the sons of Levi receiving) the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham: (i. e. they receive tithes only by virtue of the law, and that from them only who come out of the loins of Abraham, as well as they, Numb. xviii. 21. 26.)

6. But he [6] whose descent is not counted from them (being no kin to Abraham) received tithes of Abraham (himself), and blessed him who had the promises (that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed).

7. And without all contradiction (in all solemn benedictions, ex officio,) the less is blessed of the better, (and so he that blessed Abraham must be greater than he was).

8. And here (under the Levitical priesthood) men that die receive tithes; but there (in the instance of Melchisedec) [7] he (received them), of whom it is witnessed (Psal. cx. 4.) that he liveth.

9. And [8] as I may so say, (the family of) Levi also, who receiveth tithes, paid tithes in Abraham.

10. For he was yet in the loins of his father (Abraham), when Melchisedec met him.

11. If therefore [9] perfection (i. e. full expiation of sins) were (to be obtained) by the Levitical priesthood, (as it must have been, had it came by the law, ver. 18, 19.) for [10] under (Gr. about) it the people received the law, what farther need was there that another priest should arise (as the Psalmist saith) after the order of Melchisedec, and not be (rather) called (a priest) after the order of Aaron?

12. (And yet you see this need there was;) for the priesthood being changed (i. e. translated from the order of Aaron to that of Melchisedec), there is made of necessity a change also of the law (concerning priesthood, ver. 14. or touching priests to be repaired to for expiation.

13. And this change is signified by these words, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec;) for he (i. e. Christ) of whom these things (words) are spoken pertaineth to another tribe (than that of Levi), of which (tribe) no man gave attendance at the altar.

14. For it is evident that our Lord (to whom these words belong) sprang out of (the tribe of) Judah; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.

15. And it is yet far more evident: (by saying,) [11] for that (Gr. εἰ, that) after the similitude of Melchisedec (not of Aaron, ver. 11.) there ariseth another priest,

16. Who is made (a priest), not after the law of a carnal commandment (relating to men that are flesh and blood, and so infirm, and subject to mortality; for all flesh is grass, Isa. xl. 6. and therefore must be succeeded by others), but after the power of an endless (or indissoluble) life.

17. For (thus) he testifieth, (by saying,) Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

18. (I say, not after the law of a carnal commandment,) for there is verily (in these words) a disannulling of the commandment going before (the preceding commandment concerning the Levitical priesthood and sacrifices), [12] for the weakness (of it as to justification), and [13] unprofitableness of it (as to the expiation of sin).

19. For (thus) [14] the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in [15] of a better hope did; by [16] which we draw nigh to God.

20. [17] And (by so much is Jesus made the mediator of a better covenant), inasmuch as (his priesthood, by virtue of which he became this mediator, was) not without an oath (as was that of the tribe of Levi):

21. (For those priests were made (such) without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, (Psal. cx. 4.) The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec:) (Now where no oath intervenes, God may change his institution, but not after his oath.

22. I say,) by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament, (established upon better promises, viii. 6.)

23. And (to proceed in the comparison) they truly were many priests (successively), because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death:

24. But this man, (Gr. but he, i. e. Jesus, ver. 22.) because he continueth (for) ever, hath an unchangeable (high) priesthood (which passeth not away, and so admits of no succession to it).

25. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost (Gr. for ever) that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them, (and by that intercession to become the propitiation for their sins for ever, 1 John ii. 2.

26. And thus was he a high-priest suited to our condition:) for such a high-priest became us (sinners), who is holy, (i. e. consecrated to his office, and so holiness to the Lord, Exod. xxviii. 36.) [18] harmless (ἄκακος, free from evil in himself), undefiled (by the impurities of others), separate from sinners (and so not liable to any defilement by dwelling among them), and (therefore) made higher than the heavens, (he being ascended far above the heavens, Eph. iv. 10. and passed through the heavens, Heb. iv. 14. into the presence of God, there to appear for ever for us;

27. And so one) who needeth not daily, as those high-priests (under the law did), to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins (which he, being free from evil, ver. 26. could not do), and then for (the sins of) the people: [19] for this (last) he did once, when he offered up himself.

28. For the law maketh men high-priests which have infirmity, (subjecting them to sin, and by that to mortality, whence they have need to offer, as well for themselves as for the people, ver. 27.) but the word of the oath, which was since the law (as being in the Psalms written after it), maketh the Son (our high-priest), who is consecrated (to this office) for evermore (he being not subject to those infirmities which brought mortality upon others).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ Σαλήμ, King of Salem.] They seem mistaken, who think this Salem was the same with Jerusalem; for it is plain from this very place, Gen. xiv. 15—17. that Salem was in the way which led from the valley of Damascus unto Sodom. St. Jerome * also saith, that he learned "ab eruditissimis gentis illius," from the most learned of the Jews, that Salem was not Jerusalem, but a town near Scythopolis, which till then was called Salem: and it retained its name in our Saviour's days, as appears by the evangelist saying, that St. John baptized near Salem, John iii. 23. Now of this Melchisedec, king of Salem, let it be noted,

* Ep. ad Evagrium, tom. iii. F. 14. C.

First, That he must be a man, not an angel, not the Holy Spirit: for (1.) every high-priest (saith the apostle) is taken from among men, v. 1. (2.) The Scripture still speaks of him as a man, describing him by his proper name, his kingly dignity, and the city where he dwelt, and by his personal actions, proper to a man, his bringing forth bread and wine, and his receiving the tithes of the spoils. And, (3.) from these words, Consider, πηλίκος οὗτος, what an eminent person this Melchisedec was, to whom Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils; things, surely, which neither angels nor the Holy Spirit would receive, nor was it necessary to prove their dignity. Accordingly Josephus* saith expressly, that he was a king of the city of Salem; and Philo,† that he was a king, and not a tyrant.

Secondly, He could not be Sem, as the Jews vainly imagine; for the apostle saith here expressly, that Melchisedec was not γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν, i. e. one who had his pedigree or descent from them; which is not true of Sem: nor could he be said to be without father, or mother, whose genealogy is evident from Adam, Gen. v. 32. x. 1. and who was the son of Noah. Nor was Sem's priesthood, if he had any, of a different order from Levi's, who was in his loins, as well as Levi was in the loins of Abraham; and therefore it could not be said, that Levi paid him tithes in the loins of Abraham, but it would be as true, that he received tithes in the loins of Sem: for, according to this interpretation, he was in the loins both of him that received tithes, and of him that paid them; which destroys the whole argument of the apostle here. Moreover, there is no visible cause why Moses should call Sem, whom he so often mentions, by any other name than his own, by which he doth so oft make mention of him; nor is it likely that Sem reigned in the land of Canaan, which now was in the possession of his brother's son; nor could Abraham be said to sojourn there as in a strange country, if his noble ancestor Sem had been king there.

Thirdly, Much less could he be the eternal Λόγος, or the Son of God himself; for as he only was a priest according to his human nature, i. e. that nature in which he was inferior to God, and which he had not yet assumed, and was then constituted a high-priest, when God said to him, at his resurrection, This day have I begotten thee, v. 5. so could he not be a high-priest after his own order, or made like unto himself. But Melchisedec was in this like unto him, that he was both a priest of the most high God, and a king also in that country, those two offices being anciently in the same person; whence the Hebrew כהן, a priest, is by the Targum often rendered רבא, a prince; see Gen. xli. 45. Exod. ii. 16. iii. 1. 2 Sam. viii. 18. xx. 26. 1 Kings iv. 6. Job xii. 19. and on those words, Psal. cx. 4. Thou art a priest for ever: (Thou shalt be a great prince for ever, is the descant of the Jewish Targum.)

Note also, that here again Mr. Le Clerc is insufferable, when he says, "Because the allegorical writers of the Jews at that time accommodated innumerable places to the Messiah, not relying upon any grammatical interpretation, but a certain old custom of explaining the Scripture after this manner; and because they interpreted Psalm cx. of the Messiah, the sacred writer makes use of that interpretation to his purpose; and because they acknowledged the Messiah ought to be like Melchisedec, he reasons against them from their own concessions, not against other men, who might have denied what he affirmed: otherwise, if the thing be considered in itself, no strong or grammatical argument can be drawn against others from that history; and therefore such things are not too much to be urged now, because that way of explaining Scripture is grown out of use:" that is, the apostle proceeds all along upon weak grounds, and urges arguments that in themselves depend on falsehoods, only because some silly Jews had said the same thing before him. I read indeed, in profane Celsus,* this vile reflection on the sacred penmen, that they produce things unknown, fanatical, uncertain, and which no wise man thinks to be of any strength: but I am sorry to find a Christian writer thus exposing them to the contempt and scorn of anti-scripturists. Christ is a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, saith the apostle, vi. 20. So indeed you tell us out of the idle tales and allegorical interpretations of some brain-sick Jews, saith Mr. Le Clerc; but without all ground. It is περισσότερον κατάδηλον, exceeding manifest (saith the apostle), that another priest should arise after the order of Melchisedec, vii. 15. It is no such thing, saith Mr. Le Clerc; this follows only from the vain concessions of the Jews: another man may deny what you thus confidently affirm.—It is exceeding manifest (saith the apostle); for the Scripture testifies this, by saying, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, ver. 17. And God hath confirmed this by an oath, in these words, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever. You make use of a rabbinical interpretation, saith Mr. Le Clerc, and call that falsely a scripture testimony; but another may deny what you thus assume, for no strong or grammatical argument can be drawn from these words.

[2] Ver. 3. Ἀπάτωρ, &c. Without father, without mother, &c.] It being certain that these things cannot be properly spoken of a man, it is necessary to interpret them as I have done in the paraphrase; and to this interpretation the apostle leads, by styling him, ἀγενεαλόγητον, without pedigree, as being μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν, not of the genealogy of the people of Abraham.

[3] Μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν, μήτε ζωῆς τέλος ἔχων, Having neither beginning of days nor end of life.] Though I have placed another exposition of these words in the paraphrase, I condemn not the ordinary sense which interpreters put upon these words, viz. That in Scripture there is nothing said of the beginning or end of his life; for so Philo saith of Cain, Perhaps the sign, that Cain should not be killed, was this, τὸ μηδέποτε ἀναιρεθῆναι, that he should never be taken away by death, οὐδὲ γὰρ θάνατον αὐτοῦ διὰ πάσης τῆς νομοθεσίας δεδήλωκεν, for Moses hath said nothing of his death. (L. quod Deter. p. 145. C.)

* Ἄγνωστα, καὶ πάροιστρα, καὶ πάντα ἄδηλα, ὧν τε μὴν γνῶμα οὐδεὶς ἂν νοῦν ἔχων εὑρεῖν δύναιτο, ἀσαφῆ γὰρ καὶ τὸ μηδὲν. Orig. lib. vii. p. 333.

[4] Ἀφωμοιωμένος δὲ τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, But made like to the (a) son of God.] All the interpreters I have met with refer this to Christ, of whom Melchisedec was a type, he being the antitype, as being emphatically a King of righteousness, and a Prince of peace, without earthly father, as to his Divinity; without mother, as being not of the genealogy of the Aaronical priesthood; without beginning of days as to his Divine nature, and without end of life as to his priesthood. But the apostle is not here speaking of Melchisedec's likeness to Christ, but of Christ's likeness to him, as being a priest after the order of Melchisedec: nor do these things well suit with our Lord Christ, who, as to his human nature, was not without mother, nor, as to his priesthood, without beginning of days, Luke iii. 23. I therefore rather think, that as in all the former characters, so here the apostle speaks of Melchisedec, and saith, he was, in this, like to a son of God, or to one of the angels, who are immortal, and never cease to be: for it is certain, that the angels are often styled the sons of God: so Job i. 6. "Bene Heloim," the sons of God, are, in the Septuagint, ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ. So also ii. 1. xxxviii. 7. Psal. xxix. 1. Chal. So Dan. iii. 25. The vision of the fourth is like υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, a son of God, i. e. an angel of God: for so it follows, ver. 28. He sent his angel, and delivered them. It is the observation of the book of Wisdom, ii. 3. that man was made immortal, and to be an image of God's eternity; and at their resurrection, saith St. Luke, they shall die no more, but shall be like unto the angels, καὶ υἱοί εἰσι τοῦ Θεοῦ, and are the sons of God, being sons of the resurrection; and our υἱοθεσία, or sonship, is by this apostle made to consist in the redemption of the body from corruption. (See note on Rom. viii. 23.) Melchisedec therefore being here represented as one who had no end of his life; and upon that account, one who abides a priest for ever, is in this said to be like to a son of God; whence, ver. 8. the apostle opposes him to priests that die, saying, there he received tithes, of whom it is testified that he liveth, viz. Psal. cx. 4.

[5] Ver. 4. Δεκάτην τῶν ἀκροθινίων, The tenth of the spoils.] Τὰ ἀκροθίνια, saith Phavorinus, are, τὰ τῶν πολέμων, the spoils of war; they are, saith Hesychius and Suidas, αἱ λαφύρων ἀπαρχαὶ, the first-fruits of the prey; or, as Josephus * saith, δεκάτη τῆς λείας, the tenths of what was gotten by war; it being a very ancient custom to give partly to the gods, and partly to kings, the tenths or first-fruits of these spoils: and so Melchisedec might here receive them both as a king and as a priest. That they were given to the gods, we learn from those words of Arrian;† We ought, in hunting, to begin from the gods, and to present to them the first-fruits of what we have taken, οὐ μεῖον ἢ ἐν τῇ νίκῃ πολέμου ἀκροθίνια, no less than in a victory in war, the chief of the spoils. Thus did the Athenians, saith Herodotus,‡ who τῶν λύτρων τὴν δεκάτην ἀνέθηκαν, consecrated the tenth of their prize to the gods. Diodorus Siculus saith, all the Greeks did it; and Josephus saith, that Joshua preserved the gold and silver of the inhabitants of Jericho to be ἀπαρχὴν ἐξαίρετον τῷ Θεῷ, excellent first-fruits to God of their spoils. (Antiq. lib. v. cap. 1. p. 136.) See this as to both parts largely proved by Dr. Spencer. § And evident it is, that Abraham here paid not the tithes of all he had, but only the tenths of the spoils: 1. Because he had nothing else there, the remainder of his estate being at Mamre. 2. The manner of paying tithes being not this, that a man shall pay the tenth of all he hath, but only that he pay the tenth of his increase; and that not whenever he meets the priest, but at the time of harvest only, or when he receives from God's hands the increase of it: it cannot then be thought reasonable, that Abraham should give to Melchisedec the tithes of any other spoils than those he had now reaped by way of harvest.

[6] Ver. 6. Ὁ δὲ μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν, Whose descent, &c.] Thus Philo * saith, that Ἱερέα ἑαυτοῦ πεποίηκεν ὁ Θεὸς οὐδὲν ἔργον αὐτοῦ προδιατυπώσας, God made him his priest, having not mentioned any work that he did before: and elsewhere he saith, that he received αὐτομαθῆ καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον ἱεροσύνην, a priesthood taught and learned by himself.

[7] Ver. 8. He.] They seem to be mistaken who think this only belongs to Christ, and not at all to Melchisedec: the contrary is manifest, (1.) from the particle καὶ, which shews that the apostle is still speaking of the same person, i. e. Melchisedec; and from the three following verses, which all speak of him: nor is here more said of him than ver. 3. where it is affirmed, he had neither beginning of days nor end of life. And by the opposition betwixt the Aaronical priests as dying, and him as living, and by the word μαρτυρούμενος, which respects a testimony of this thing, it is evident that the apostle infers this from the words of the Psalmist, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

[8] Ver. 9. Ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν] Is not here to speak briefly, and, as in a word; but ὡς ἂν εἴπῃ τις, as a man may say, or, ἵνα οὕτως εἴπω, that I may so say; because, saith Theophylact, it was τόλμημα, a harsh figure; for in such a manner, saith Quintilian,† we use to mollify harsh expressions: which is enough to guard us against the inference which some make from these words, that in like manner we may be said to have sinned in Adam, as being in the loins of Adam when he sinned. Which may be granted τρόπον τινὰ, in a manner, because we derived from him that death which was the punishment of his sin, as coming from the loins of one mortal, and deriving from him a nature subject to that sin which deserveth death: and more cannot be inferred from these words, because the apostle here says no more of Levi, but that he, in a manner, paid tithes in Abraham. (2.) Because by the like argument it may be proved, that Jesus Christ himself, as man, paid tithes to Melchisedec, for he also was in the loins of Abraham when Melchisedec met him, and consequently that he was also inferior to Melchisedec; which perhaps was the very reason why the apostle thus mollifies his words, and is so careful to let us know he useth here a form of speech which is not proper and exact, and such as ought not to be pressed too far. And therefore (3.) the subject-matter fairly shews the difference: for tithes are paid out of such things as are the fathers' goods, and so would have descended, by the laws of nature and nations, to their posterity, had they not been thus given to another; but good and evil actions are merely personal, and therefore, though the effects of both may, and often do, descend unto posterity, the good actions of the parents bringing temporal blessings on their offspring, and their evil actions subjecting them to temporal calamities and diseases; yet their merit or demerit cannot be properly derived or propagated to their posterity: for as no man is a good man, in the account of God, purely because his father, or some of his progenitors, were so; so neither is any man properly a sinner, or evil in the sight of God, merely because his parents were so before he was born.

[9] Ver. 11. Τελείωσις, Perfection.] That this word, relating to priests and oblations, signifies expiation and purification, see note on x. 1.

[10] 'Επ' αὐτῇ γὰρ ὁ λαὸς νενομοθέτητο, For about that the people received the law.] i. e. The law appointed that the people, under all their defilements which needed any expiation and purgation, should repair to the Levitical priests: or, Under the priesthood, the people received the law concerning sacrifices; the priesthood being first instituted, and then the laws concerning sacrifices and expiation.

Καὶ οὐ κατὰ τάξιν 'Ααρὼν λέγεσθαι.] The words are in all the Greek scholia, Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and yet are by Dr. Mills rejected as a marginal note, upon the sole authority of the Ethiopic: (see Examen Millii.) so viii. 4. τῶν ἱερέων is rejected upon the authority of the Vulgar and three MSS. though it be in all the Greek scholiasts, the Syriac, and Arabic: so ix. 22. σχέδον is wanting only in the Syriac and Ethiopic, and yet rejected by the doctor: so ὁ Θεὸς, x. 9. is rejected upon the sole authority of the Ethiopic, against the authority of the Greek commentators and all the other versions: and, xiii. 21. he rejects ἔγνω upon the sole authority of the Vulgar. (See Exam. Millii.)

[11] Ver. 15. Εἰ, For that.] The particle εἰ often signifies quod, that, in Scripture, as doth the Hebrew כִּי. So Acts xxvi. 8. Why should it be thought impossible, εἰ Θεὸς νεκροὺς ἐγείρει, that God should raise the dead? And ver. 23. Εἰ παθητὸς ὁ Χριστὸς, εἰ πρῶτος, &c. That Christ hath suffered, and that he is the first that rose from the dead. So Jer. ii. 28. Where are thy gods, εἰ ἀναστήσονται, that they may arise and save thee? (See 1 Tim. v. 10. 2 Chron. vi. 18.)

[12] Ver. 18. Διὰ τὸ αὐτῆς ἀσθενὲς, For the weakness of it.] For what the law could not do, i. e. that deliverance from death, that justification to life, it could not give, ἐν ᾧ ἠσθένει διὰ σαρκὸς, in that it was weak through the flesh, rendering us subject to the transgression of it, and so to death by the sentence of it, Christ, by his sacrifice for sin, did. (Rom. viii. 3.)

[13] Τὸ ἀνωφελὲς, The unprofitableness] Of the law, here mentioned, must not be taken absolutely, for that the apostle denies, declaring in his answer to that question, What advantage then hath the Jew (above the gentile)? or, Τίς ἡ ὠφέλεια; What is the profit of the circumcision? That it is much every way: (Rom. iii. 1, 2.) and reckoning among their advantages, the giving of the law, (Rom. ix. 4.) and shewing the uses of it, and the reason which moved God to give it. (Rom. vii. 8. Gal. iii. 19. 24.) But the precepts of the ceremonial law were ἀσθενῆ καὶ πτωχὰ στοιχεῖα, weak and beggarly elements, compared to those of the gospel, (Gal. iv. 9.) and wholly unprofitable as to justification, or the absolution of the sinner, or transgressor of it, from the guilt of sin, as the apostle testifies in these words, Rom. iii. 9. What then are we (Jews) better than they (the gentiles)? οὐ πάντως, not altogether; for we have before proved (touching) both Jews (chap. ii.) and gentiles, (chap. i.) that they are all under sin (and so both equally stand in need of justification by faith).

[14] Ver. 19. Οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν ὁ νόμος, For the law made nothing perfect.] Nor is it to be wondered, that the law, of which the Levitical priesthood was the chiefest part, and that only which concerned the expiation of sin, should be thus disannulled, since it was thus weak and unprofitable as to the absolution of the sinner from the guilt of sin, and could not, by its sacrifices, τελειῶσαι, procure an absolution as to conscience, to those that came unto God by them, from the guilt of sin, (x. 1, 2.) They could not make the worshippers of God by them perfect, as appertaining to conscience; (ix. 9.) i. e. so as to have no more conscience of the guilt of sin. This made it necessary that they should give place to the introduction of a better hope.

[15] 'Επεισαγωγὴ κρείττονος ἐλπίδος, The introduction of a better hope:] i. e. The introduction of that sacrifice, which gives a better hope; a hope of entering, not into an earthly tabernacle, which was all the Jewish sacrifices could procure, (the way of entering into the holy of holies being not yet made manifest, ix. 8.) but of entering within the veil, vi. 19. The hope of good things to come, by a better and more perfect tabernacle, ix. 11. The hope, not of an annual, but of an eternal redemption; (ver. 12.) not of an inheritance to be continued for a little time in the land of Canaan, but of an eternal inheritance; (ver. 15.) Christ being entered, not into an earthly tabernacle, as the Aaronical priests did, which was the figure of the true, but into heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us, (ix. 24.) and so procuring to us freedom to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

[16] Δι' ἧς ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ, By which we draw nigh to God:] Having our consciences purged from dead works, by the blood of Christ, to serve the living God, (ix. 14.) and having through him freedom to come unto him with full assurance of faith, (x. 22.) and by which we are made, ἐγγὺς, nigh to God through the blood of Jesus, (Eph. ii. 13.) and have access unto the Father, (ver. 18.)

[17] Ver. 20. Καὶ καθ' ὅσον.—κατὰ τοσοῦτον.] Here is plainly the figure called σύγχυσις, or συμπλοκὴ, verborum, that which is put last being to be construed first, as is manifest from the ὁ δὲ, but he, relating to the Mediator of the better covenant, in the following verse. So Mark xiv. 23, 24. And taking the cup, he gave thanks, and gave it to them, and they all drank of it; and he said unto them, This is the blood of the new testament, &c. For it is manifest from Matt. xxvi. 27, 28. that Christ first said, This is my blood of the new testament, before they drank of it. And so those words, ver. 23. And they all drank of it, must in construction follow those of ver. 24. This is the blood of the new testament: so Rev. xx. 12. And I saw the dead, small and great, standing before the throne of God, and they were judged, &c. And ver. 13. And the sea gave up her dead, and death and hades gave up their dead, and they were judged according to their works: and yet it is certain, that the sea and hades must give up their dead, before they could stand before the throne of God, or be judged. So Heb. ii. 1. We see Jesus made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour, that he, by the grace of God, might taste death for every man; i. e. for the suffering of death, that so by the grace of God he might taste death for every man, crowned with glory and honour.

[18] Ver. 26. Ἄκακος, Harmless.] Ἄκακος, ἀπόνηρος; the word imports, one free from sin: so Chrysostom and Theophylact; and this place, saith Philo,* must be the property of a true high-priest, for ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀρχιερεὺς, καὶ μὴ ψευδώνυμος, ἀμέτοχος ἁμαρτημάτων ἐστὶ, he that truly, and not improperly, bears that name, is free from sin; and of him that was to enter once a year into the holy of holies,† he saith, He must be, ὁλόκληρος καὶ παντελὴς, περὶ μηδὲν, μὴ μέγα, μὴ μικρὸν, ἁπλῶς κεραίνων πάθος, ἀλλ' ἀρτίῳ καὶ πλήρει καὶ πάντα τελειοτάτῃ κεχρημένος φύσει, entire, perfect in all things, not tainted at all with any passion, great or small, but of a nature sound, whole, and every way perfect (κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, separate from sinners). This must signify something different from ἄκακος, free from evil, and undefiled by sin. And what can that be, besides what I have hinted in the paraphrase? Now to clear up this, let it be noted, that though the holy of holies was the place into which none entered but the high-priest, and he only once a year, after a sin-offering had been first offered for him, yet God commands that an atonement should be made for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins; (Lev. xvi. 16.) i. e. because it was seated among an unclean people, it needed an atonement. That therefore our high-priest might be every way clean and undefiled, he was to be, not only free from sin, but also separate from sinners, as the high-priest‡ was seven days before the expiation, and when he made the expiation. (Lev. xvi. 17.)

[19] Ver. 27. Τοῦτο γὰρ ἐποίησεν ἐφάπαξ, For this he did once for all.] Grotius and the Socinians contend, That Christ is here said to have offered up himself for his own sins; but then by sins, they say, is improperly signified his natural infirmities and sufferings. But where hath the word sin any such import? It is indeed sometimes applied to impurities, not moral, but only legal; as in the case of menstruous women, Lev. xii. 8. xv. 13. and to leprosies sent by the hand of God, for the punishment of sin, Lev. xiv. 30. but never to any thing which by the law of Moses was accounted no defilement. And how improper is it to make the same words, used but once, signify properly sin, when respecting the people, and only sufferings, with respect to Christ? Moreover, how did he offer up himself for his own sufferings? Did he suffer, that he might not suffer? or, that he might not be obnoxious to them? The interpretation therefore of all the ancient commentators, which I have given in the paraphrase, ought to stand in opposition to this vain invention.

CHAP. VIII.

1. NOW (for) of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum; (i. e. To give you a summary of the things spoken in the former chapters, touching our high-priest, Christ Jesus; or, But the chief of the things spoken is this, That) we have (in him) such a high-priest, who is set on the right-hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, (there to officiate for us;

2. And who is therefore) a minister of the (heavenly) sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, [1] which the Lord pitched, and not man, (for by the Word of the Lord were the heavens made, Psal. xxxii.

3. A high-priest, I say, of the heavenly sanctuary, and therefore one who must have something to offer in that sanctuary:) for every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices (in that sanctuary in which he executes that office): wherefore it is of necessity that this man (the high-priest in heaven) have somewhat to offer (there.

4. I say there, and not on earth:) for if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, (or, had he been (still) on earth, he had not been a priest at all,) seeing that there are (other) priests that (are appointed to) offer gifts according to the law;

5. [2] Who serve to the example and shadow of heavenly things (or, in that holy place and tabernacle, which is an example and shadow of the heavenly), as (we learn from what) Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, (Exod. xxv. 40.) that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the mount. (For calling it, ὁ τύπος, a type or pattern, he shews that it was only a resemblance of the things in heaven, and not the heavenly things themselves, ix. 23.)

6. But now he (Christ) hath obtained a more excellent ministry (viz. that of officiating in the heavenly sanctuary), by how much also (Gr. ὅσῳ καὶ, inasmuch as also) he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon [3] better promises.

7. (A better covenant, I say:) for if that first covenant (made by Moses with the Jews) had been [4] faultless (so that God should have found no cause of blaming them who lived under it), then should no place have been sought for (the introduction of) the second.

8. (But so it was not;) for, finding fault with them (for the breach of it), he (i. e. the prophet) saith, Behold, the days come (saith the Lord), when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

9. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in (the observance of) my covenant, and I (therefore) [5] regarded them not, saith the Lord. (Jer. xxxi. 31—33.)

10. (I say, not according to that covenant:) for this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people:

11. And they shall not (have need to) teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest.

12. (I say, I will be their God:) for I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

13. In that he saith, [6] A new covenant, he hath made (a declaration that) the first (is) old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old [7] is ready to vanish away.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 2. Ἣν ἔπηξεν ὁ Κύριος, The sanctuary which the Lord pitched, and not man.] That is, of heaven itself. For, first, τὸ ἅγιον, in this Epistle, being put absolutely, oft signifies the heavenly sanctuary, the holy mansion in which the Divine Majesty resides gloriously, in opposition to the ἅγιον κοσμικὸν, earthly holy, mentioned ix. 1. And the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man, is the heavenly tabernacle, set in opposition to the χειροποίητον, or that of Moses, which was made with hands, and styled by the Chaldee paraphrast, the sanctuary above, in which the angels sing God's praises, Psal. xxix. 9. So, ix. 11. Christ being come a high-priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, οὐ χειροποιήτου, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building, but by his own blood he entered once into the holy place (ἐφάπαξ εἰς τὰ ἅγια, once for all into the holy places); x. 19. Having freedom of access into the holy place, and having a high-priest over the house of God; and, ix. 23, 24. It was necessary that the examples of the things in the heavens should be purified with these, but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ entered not into the holy places made with hands, εἰς χειροποίητα ἅγια, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, to appear now in the presence of God for us. And this is suitable to the old notions of the Jews, who oft declare, that the chief intention of making the tabernacle, and other things, was, That they might be a book of wisdom to instruct them in the things above, which they respected; and that when Moses made one tabernacle on earth, another was made by the angels in heaven. (Buxt. Hist. Arcæ, p. 83, 84.) It also was their opinion, that the second part of the tabernacle was made to be an image of the visible world; and the holy of holies to be a resemblance, "mundi supercœlestis," of the celestial world. So Philo * often calls the tabernacle of the Jews, τὸ χειροποίητον, and says, it was a shadow or resemblance τοῦ ἀρχετύπου, of the archetypal or original in heaven. Moses, says he, framed τὰ ἀρχέτυπα, the archetypal plan of the tabernacle; Bezeleel only, τὰ αὐτῶν μιμήματα, the resemblance of things; and this he proves by the apostle's argument, used ver. 5. For Moses, saith he, used God for his guide, who said to him, See thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the mount. Bezeleel (saith he†) signifies one, ἐν σκιαῖς ποιῶν, employed in making shadows; whereas Moses was employed, not to frame the shadows, but, ἀρχετύπους φύσεις αὐτὰς τῶν πραγμάτων, the archetypal natures of the things themselves. ‡ Elsewhere he distinguisheth betwixt the τὰ ὁρώμενα ἐκ τῆς ἀψύχου καὶ φθαρτῆς δημιουργηθέντα ὕλης, visible things of the tabernacle made of inanimate and corruptible matter, and τὰ ἀόρατα καὶ τὰ νοητὰ θεωρήματα, the invisible and intellectual ideas, of which the other were the images. § The first he calls, ἱερὸν χειροποίητον, the sanctuary made with hands, of which Moses had the incorporeal ideas. And Josephus saith, ‖ that the second part of the tabernacle signified that earth in which men conversed, but the third part was appropriated to God, heaven being inaccessible to men; which seems to be the very thing the apostle intendeth by those words, The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet manifested, whilst the first tabernacle was yet standing, Heb. ix. 8.

[2] Ver. 5. Ὑποδείγματι καὶ σκιᾷ, To the example and shadow.] These words, saith Mr. Le Clerc, can by no means signify a prefiguration of something future, for heaven was a great while before the tabernacle and temple. But this argument is of no force; for though heaven be older than the tabernacle, yet that considered as a place in which the Jews then worshipped, and enjoyed communion with God, might be a type of that place in which they were hereafter to worship and enjoy him.

The argument of the apostle is to this effect: Christ could not be a priest on earth, because he could have there no tabernacle in which to offer sacrifice; the only place God had appointed upon earth to offer sacrifice in, being the Mosaical tabernacle, and the temple, in which no other sacrifices could be offered but those appointed by the law; no oblation made, or to be made, but by the Levitical priesthood. Moreover, this tabernacle being the shadow of the heavenly one, that must succeed it as the substance; therefore the oblation to be made by this high-priest after the order of Melchisedec, must be made in that tabernacle which was to succeed and follow this, as being the substance of that shadow. So Œcumenius here, Had he not died, and been received up into heaven, οὐκ ἂν ἦν ἱερεύς, he had not been a priest.

[3] Ver. 6. Better promises.] Those of the law being only temporal promises, relating to blessings to be conferred upon them in the land of Canaan; this covenant had the promise of an eternal inheritance, to be conferred upon them in the celestial Canaan, ix. 15. These spiritual promises were indeed made to the fathers also of old, before the law, whence they are said by faith to look for a better country, that is, a heavenly, and to have expected a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, Heb. xi. 10. 16. But then these promises of a Saviour, and of such salvation by him, were not made in and by the law, but long before it, (Rom. iv. 13. Gal. iii. 15. 17.) as they must be, if made to them who lived and died long before it. Under the law also they had spiritual promises, and types of the Messiah in it, who was the promised seed, in whom all these promises were made, and by whom they were purchased; but then they had not these promises by the law, nor these blessings by the Levitical priesthood, but by the virtue of the Lamb slain from the beginning.

[4] Ver. 7. Ἄμεμπτος, If the first covenant had been faultless:] That is, say the fathers, εἰ ἀμέμπτους ἐποίει, If it could have made them blameless that were under it. So Theodoret, Chrysostom, Œcumenius, Theophylact; and so the words following do force us to interpret this clause: for the apostle and the prophet plainly charge the breach of the old covenant upon the Jews themselves, blaming them for it, ver. 9. I know some interpreters render the words, μεμφόμενος αὐτοῖς λέγει, blaming it, he saith to them; but the observation of the ancient fathers is this, οὐκ εἶπε μεμφόμενος αὐτῷ, ἀλλὰ μεμφόμενος αὐτοῖς, he said not, blaming it, but, blaming them; and the words following, because they continued not in that covenant, do justify that exposition.

Obj. But you will say, How doth it follow that the covenant was faulty, because the Jews continued not in it, any more than that the new covenant is also faulty, because many Christians do not observe the conditions of it? I answer, That the word faulty doth not here signify sinful in itself, for so this apostle denies it to be faulty, Rom. vii. 7. but only imperfect and defective as to the great end of the covenant, Do this, and live, it being a law that could not give life, (Gal. iii. 21.) and as to preserving those that were under it from offending, and so becoming blameworthy, and obnoxious before God. (Rom. iii. 29.) This being premised, I say, two things shew, that the prophet and the apostle so lay the fault on them, as plainly to insinuate, there was also an imperfection and deficiency in the law they were under, which ministered occasion to it; first, because he lays the blame not on some refractory persons only, but on the whole house of Israel and Judah. Now where all, good and bad, come under blame, there must be some imperfection and defect in the law, with reference to the two great ends aforementioned. Secondly, Because, for the prevention of this blame, God, by his prophet, doth not call them to a more exact observance of that law and covenant, but promiseth a new covenant; plainly insinuating thereby, that there was need of a new and better covenant, to prevent their transgression, and render them fit objects of his grace and favour for the future. Accordingly this weakness of the law is by St. Paul resolved, partly into such causes as respect the offenders, and partly into such as respect the law itself: into such as respect the offenders, as ver. 9. the weakness of the flesh, which made them unable to perform that exact obedience the law required, and so it became unable to justify them; for this the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, (Rom viii. 3.) and their carnal inclinations, which made them averse to the spiritual precepts of the law. (Rom. vii. 14.) And this the new covenant remedied, by requiring not perfect, but only sincere obedience, as the condition of those blessings which it promiseth, and giving the assistance of the Holy Spirit to perform that obedience. For, to come to the imperfections of the law itself, compared with this new covenant;

First, The first is this, that the law required exact obedience but gave no inward spiritual assistance for the performance of that duty. Hence the apostle puts this difference betwixt the law and the gospel, that the first is only the ministration of the letter, the second is the ministration of the Spirit: (2 Cor. iii.) that under the law, the Jews served God in the oldness of the letter; whereas under the gospel, we serve him in the newness of the Spirit: (Rom. vii. 6.) that then the inclinations and desires of the things forbidden by the law, wrought in our members to bring forth fruit unto death; whereas, if we, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the flesh, we shall live: (Rom. viii. 13.) then, the good which they would, they did not; (Rom. vii. 19.) but now, the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. (Rom. viii. 4.)

Secondly, The law not only made all that were subject to it obnoxious to condemnation for the guilt of sin, but also was unable to remove that guilt, and clear the conscience from the sense and terror of it. It could not justify us, saith the apostle; For by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified, (Rom. iii. 20. Gal. ii. 16.) i. e. it could not absolve us from condemnation on the account of sin; it could not, by the sacrifices it offered daily, take away the guilt of sins, (Heb. x. 4. 11.) and so could not make the worshipper perfect as pertaining to conscience; (Heb. ix. 9.) whereas, by virtue of the blood of Christ, a full remission of them was procured, so that God would remember them no more, (Heb. x. 17, 18.) and so the conscience was by it purified from dead works. (Heb. ix. 14.)

Thirdly, The law, considered not as moral, that being the law common to all mankind, but as purely Mosaical, contained in it only ceremonial precepts, which had no real or intrinsic goodness in them to commend them to our practice; whence, by the apostle, it is said to consist of outward and carnal ordinances, imposed on them only till the time of reformation, (Heb. ix. 10.) and to contain only the elements of the world, (Gal. iv. 3.) weak and beggarly elements, (ver. 9.) whereas the new covenant is a law written in the heart, (ver. 10.)

Lastly, As the Mosaical law had no inward goodness to commend it, so also was it wanting in the promise of those spiritual and eternal blessings, which are the sovereign motives to obedience, and to purification of ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit; whereas, by virtue of the death of Christ, a promise of an eternal inheritance is procured for us, (Heb. ix. 15.) and an entrance into the holy of holies through the blood of Jesus, (x. 19.) On which account the apostle saith, The law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did. (Heb. vii. 19.)

[5] Ver. 9. And I regarded them not.] Κἀγὼ ἠμέλησα αὐτῶν. So the Septuagint, and from them the apostle; whereas the Hebrew runs ואנכי בעלתי בם and, or though, I was a husband to them: but the learned Dr. Pocock hath shewed, that the Hebrew בעל not only signifies in the Arabic, to govern, and be a husband, but also to refuse, despise, and nauseate. And so it well accords with the words of the Septuagint.

[6] Ver. 13.] For explication of this new covenant, let it be considered,

First, That it is expressly promised to be made with the whole house of Israel, with them to whom the old covenant was made, with them who were brought out of the land of Egypt; it therefore is not a promise made to, or a covenant made with, some few elect and chosen people out of Israel and Judah, but with those who abode not in their former covenant, and so were not regarded by God. Now hence it is manifest,

That this can be no promise of absolute election, or vouchsafing irresistible grace to any of the Jews, because then the whole nation of the Jews must have been converted. 2. Because this is a promise of something to be done in the last times, or in the times of the Messiah, whereas God hath at all times his elect, and doth at all times vouchsafe them his effectual grace. 3. Because this is here called a covenant, which implies two parties covenanting, or stipulating; the one obedience, and the other blessings on the performance of it; whereas an absolute promise admits of no conditions. 4. The elect always persisted in their covenant with God, and were always regarded by him; they always were his people, and he always was their God; this therefore can be no new covenant with them.

Secondly, This being a promise of a new covenant, of which new covenant Christ is declared here to be the mediator through his blood, it cannot properly be said to be fulfilled in the complete import of it before our Saviour's sufferings, and the preaching of justification through faith in his blood. Nor seems it to have been yet accomplished in the extent and the full meaning of it, as it will be, when the blindness of the Jews shall be removed, and so all Israel shall be saved: (Rom. xi. 25, 26.) For this is God's covenant with them, when he shall take away their sins; (ver. 28.) which though he did make good at the first preaching of the gospel to as many as believed in Jesus; yet, since that was the time of the falling and casting off the generality of that nation, a remnant only being then preserved from Judaical blindness, I believe there will be a time, when this, and other like promises made to them in the Old Testament, shall have a more complete accomplishment. But to proceed to the proper import of the words;

First, I conceive that the phrase, I will put my laws into their minds, and write them on their hearts, imports that he would clearly and perspicuously make known his will to them, and by his Holy Spirit make such a deep impression of it on their spirits, and so continually bring it to their remembrance, that it should be as powerful upon them, and as present to them, as if it were writ upon their hearts. For these two metaphors, both in the Scripture and the Jewish writers, chiefly signify two things;

1. A clear and perspicuous revelation of the mind and will of God, so that we need not be at much pains to search it out: as in these words, The commandment which I command thee this day, is not hidden from thee, neither is it far from thee: the word is near unto thee, in thy mouth, καὶ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου, and in thy heart, and in thy hands, that thou shouldest do it. See, I have set before thee life and death. (Deut. xxx. 11. 14, 15.) And so, saith the apostle, is it with that word of faith which we preach, it is nigh to the Christian in his mouth to confess, and in his heart to believe it. (Rom. x. 8, 9.) And the law written in the hearts of heathens, is the law so plainly taught them, that their own consciences do inwardly condemn them when they do transgress it. (Rom. ii. 15.) This also is apparent from the consequent effect of writing this law in the Christian hearts, and putting it in their inward parts; viz. that they shall have no need to teach every one his neighbour, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know him from the least to the greatest. This law therefore must be plain to the capacities of, and easy to be perceived by, them all: and to this interpretation the fathers * give a general consent.

2. An efficacious impression of them on the soul, and on the memory, so that we do not let them slip out of our minds. So Deut. vi. 6. These words which I command thee this day shall be in thy heart; They shall be בתיבין על לוח ליבבן, writ upon the table of thy heart, saith Jonathan B. Uziel; and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up; (ver. 7.) They shall be ἐν καρδίᾳ καὶ ψυχῇ σου, in thy heart and soul, saith the Septuagint. As the expression is, Deut. xi. 18. by which expressions he requires μὴ ἀποστῆναι τὸν νόμον ἀπὸ τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν, that the law should not depart from their hearts: (2 Macc. ii. 3.) so, Prov. vii. 1. My son, forget not my law, but let thy heart keep my commandments: ver. 3. Write them upon the table of thy heart. And again, vii. 1. My son, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee: bind them upon thy finger, write them upon the table of thy heart, ver. 3. So the Targum on Cant. viii. 9. saith, God will remember them for the sake of the law which is written, על לוח דלבא, upon the table of the heart of his children. And, Jer. xvii. 1. the sin of Judah is said to be written on the table of their hearts; as if the memory of it, and affection to it, could never be obliterated. And the Targum on Job xxx. 4. saith, They who let the law slip על לוח לבהון, from the table of their hearts, burning coals shall be their meat. So frequent is this phrase to this sense, both in the Scripture and the Jewish writers. Accordingly, Clemens gives this commendation of the Corinthians, that the commandments of the Lord, ἐπὶ τὰ πλάκη τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν ἐγέγραπτο, were written upon the tables of their hearts.

Secondly, That the words in which this new covenant is framed, Jer. xxxi. 33—35. may have a more exact and full completion, at the second calling of the Jewish nation, this apostle seems to intimate, Rom. xi. 27. but that they also were fulfilled by the first advent of our Lord, can only be denied by them who think with Mr. Le Clerc, that the apostle argues upon unsound foundations: for he most clearly saith, 1. That the old covenant was only to continue till the new covenant, in which God promised to be merciful to their iniquities, took place; and also, that this new covenant was established in the blood of Jesus, the mediator of a better covenant, ver. 6. and proves that Christ had by his sufferings perfectly procured the remission of the sins of them that were sanctified, or cleansed from the guilt of sin, by faith in his blood, by the words of this new covenant, x. 14—17. 2. He says, that the old covenant, there mentioned, was to vanish away at the coming of this new covenant, ver. 13. and thereby intimates, that this new covenant, mentioned Jer. xxx. 33. began to take place, even from the abolition of the old covenant, consisting in ordinances which were only to continue till the time of reformation, (Heb. ix. 11.) and which were taken away by the death of Christ. This therefore seems to be one of those places which prove there will be a double completion of the promises and predictions contained in the Old, and perhaps in the New Testament, and thereby shew they may admit of a double sense, the one relating to the first, the other to the second coming of our Lord.

[7]Ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ, Is ready to vanish away.] Though the Judaical sacrifices which signified the death of Christ, after his death, ceased to be obliging, and their discrimination from all other nations on the account of circumcision, and the distinction of meats, ceased, as St. Paul often testifies; yet these words seem to intimate, that the church, state, and polity of the Jews was not to come to its full period, till the destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem.

CHAP. IX.

1. (THE apostle had declared, viii. 5. that the tabernacle had only a shadow of heavenly things; this he now proceeds to shew in the following words:) Then verily [1]the first covenant had (εἶχε μὲν οὖν πρώτη σκηνὴ, the first tabernacle therefore had) also ordinances of Divine service, and a worldly sanctuary (in which that worship and these ordinances were performed).

* St. Jerom. in Jer. xxxi. 31. Chrysost. on Rom. x. 8. Theod. in loc. Cyril. of Alex. Com. in Joh. lib. xii. p. 1071. Chrysost. in Heb. Hom. 14. tom. iv. p. 509.

2. For there was a tabernacle made; the first (Gr. σκηνὴ γὰρ κατεσκευάσθη ἡ πρώτη, for a first tabernacle was prepared), wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which (first tabernacle) is [2] called the Sanctuary (or, holy).

3. And after the second veil, the (other) tabernacle (was prepared, ver. 2. 6.) which is called the Holiest of all;

4. Which had (for its use) the [3] golden censer (used only on the day of expiation), and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, [4] in which was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, (Numb. xvii. 10. Exod. xvi. 33, 34.) and the tables of the covenant; (1 Kings viii. 9.)

5. And over it (the ark, were) the [5] cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly (so as to give the mystical signification of them).

6. Now when these things were thus ordained (or, these things being thus prepared), the priest went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God.

7. But into the second went the high-priest alone [6] once every year (i. e. one day only in the year, and then) not without blood, which he offered for himself (first), and (then) for the [7] errors of (Gr. sins of ignorance committed by) the people:

8. The Holy Ghost (by whose afflatus Moses was directed to prepare the tabernacle) this signifying (by this admission of the high-priest alone, and that but once a year, and that then only when all the people were gone out of the tabernacle of the congregation), that [8] the way into the (true) holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing:

9. Which was a figure for the time then present (ἥτις [9] παραβολὴ εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, which figure continues till this present time, viz. in the like service performed in the temple), in which were (προσφέρονται, are) offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not (μὴ δυνάμεναι, which sacrifices cannot) make him who did the service (i. e. who brings these gifts and offerings) [10] perfect, as pertaining to the conscience;

10. (As being conversant) only in meats and drinks, (to be abstained from by these worshippers, Lev. x. 9.) and divers washings, (to be then used by the priests officiating, Exod. xxix. 4. by the Levites, Numb. viii. 7. and by the people defiled, Lev. xv. 8. before they might enter into the temple), and (in other) cardinal ordinances, (which only sanctified to the purifying of the flesh, ver. 13. and were therefore) imposed on them (only) [11] until the time of reformation (of all things, by this new high-priest. These carnal ordinances include all the sacrifices and other services performed in the tabernacle.)

11. But Christ being come (γενόμενος, made) a high-priest (not of present temporal blessings in the land of Canaan, but) of good things to come, (not by the service of the tabernacle made with hands, ver. 23. but) by (a service performed in) a greater and more perfect [12] tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; (i. e. the building of this worldly sanctuary, ver. 1.)

12. Neither (yet to be procured as the Mosaical blessings were) by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood; he (to procure those good things for us) entered in (not as the high-priest did yearly into the earthly tabernacle, but, ἐφάπαξ,) once (for all) into the (heavenly) holy place (with his blood), having obtained (for us by it, not an annual, but an) [13] eternal redemption.

13. For if the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, (Numb. ix. 2. 4.) [14] sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh (from ceremonial defilements, and so procures a free admission to the service of the tabernacle):

14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, who (being sanctified) through the [15] eternal Spirit [16] offered himself (as a lamb) without spot to God, (John i. 29. 1 Pet. i. 19.) [17] purge your conscience from dead works (i. e. from works deserving death, Rom. vi. 23. that so you may be admitted) [18] to serve the living God (in his church here, and in his heavenly sanctuary hereafter? x. 19—21.)

15. [19] And for this cause (διὰ τοῦτο, or, by this blood) he is (become) the mediator of the new testament (in which he promises to be merciful to our iniquities), that by means of (his) death, [20] for the redemption of the transgressions that were (committed by us) under the first testament (and not by that fully expiated), they which are called (to be God's church and people) might receive [21] the promise of (an) eternal inheritance.

16. (I say, by means of his death,) for where a testament is (that is unchangeable), there must also of necessity be the death [22] of the testator.

17. For a testament is of force (only) after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth (and so hath power to revoke his testament).

18. Whereupon (ὅθεν, whence it is that) neither the first testament (made with the Jews, Exod. xxiv. 8.) was dedicated without blood (which blood shewed the death of the sacrifice was necessary to make that testament).

19. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law (given at Mount Sinai), he took the [23] blood of calves and of goats, with water (mixed with the blood to keep it from congealing), and (with) scarlet wool, and hyssop, (the wool to receive and imbibe the blood, and the hyssop to sprinkle it, Exod. xii. 22. Lev. xiv. 49, 50. Psal. li. 7.) and sprinkled (the blood) both (upon) the book (of the covenant), and (upon) all the people.

20. Saying, This is the blood of the [24] testament which God hath enjoined to you.

21. Moreover he [25] sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry.

22. And [26] almost all things are by the law purged (purified) with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

23. It was therefore necessary (by virtue of the Mosaic institution) that the patterns of things [27] in the heavens should be purified with these (sacrifices); but the heavenly things themselves (i. e. our bodies to be received into heaven are to be purified) with better sacrifices than these.

24. (I say, the heavenly things themselves,) for Christ is not entered into the holy places (of the tabernacle) made with hands, which are the figures of the true (holy place); but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God (and so prepare and consecrate those mansions) for us.

25. (It was not necessary, I say, that he should enter with his blood, as the high-priest did into the earthly tabernacle,) nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high-priest (did, who) entereth into the holy place every year with (the) blood of others (to make an annual atonement for the guilt of sin);

26. For then must he often have suffered [28] since the foundation of the world (his offering himself before God with his blood being the consequence of his sufferings): but now once [29] in the end of the world (ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, in the end of the ages) hath he appeared to put away (the guilt of) sin, by the sacrifice of himself.

27. And (in this the death of Christ resembles that of all other men; for) as it is appointed unto all men once to die, but after this (comes) the judgment (when they shall die no more):

28. So Christ was (Gr. being) once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear (Gr. shall appear to them that look for him) the second time [30] without (any more sacrifice for) sin unto salvation (i. e. for their salvation).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἡ ΠΡΩΤΗ διαθήκη, The first covenant.] Some of the ancients, as Chrysostom, read only ἡ πρώτη, but none of them read διαθήκη, but many of them σκηνὴ, as Theodoret and Œcumenius; and this I believe to be the true reading: for it is well observed by the fathers, who do, and who do not read the word σκηνὴ, that the apostle having before proved from the enallage of the priest and priesthood, and of the former covenant, that an end was put unto the Jewish constitutions, proceeds now to prove the same from the consideration of that tabernacle which was a shadow of good things to come. Secondly, Because the thread or the contexture of the apostle's argument seems plainly to require this reading: for the tabernacle, consisting of two parts, an outward house called the holy place, and an inward house called the holy of holies; the apostle here calleth the outward house the first tabernacle, and discourses of it as such, ver. 1, 2. and then, ver. 3. proceeds to the holy of holies, or the second tabernacle, saying, the first or outward tabernacle had a worldly sanctuary, in which the rites of the Jewish worship were performed; for a first tabernacle was prepared by Moses, containing such and such things; and then a second, containing other things: now this first tabernacle is called a worldly tabernacle, because, as both the Jews and fathers say, it was designed to represent this lower world; the earth and the sea, saith Josephus.* It was κόσμου τοῦ αἰσθητοῦ σύμβολον, a symbol of the sensitive world, saith Clemens Alexandrinus.† (See Dr. Spencer, De legibus Hebr. p. 188.)

The δικαιώματα λατρείας are the constitutions, or the rites and rules of worship prescribed to be used in the service of the tabernacle; δικαιώματα, τουτέστι, σύμβολα, θεσμοὺς, νομοθεσίας, ordinances, that is, symbols, constitutions, laws. So Chrysostom, Œcumenius, Theophylact.

[2] Ver. 2. Ἥτις λέγεται ἁγια, Which is called the Sanctuary.] Or, as other copies read, ἥτις λέγεται ἁγία, which is called holy. Vain therefore is the argument of Mr. Le Clerc, that the writer of this Epistle did not well understand Hebrew, and therefore cannot be thought to have been St. Paul, but rather some Grecian; to wit, because he calls the sanctuary only ἅγια, holies; whereas, according to the constant usage of the Hebrew, he should have called it ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, holy of holies. For (1.) all this depends on an uncertain accent; read but ἁγία, and there is no foundation for this argument; seeing, then, the apostle speaks not of the sanctuary, but of the first tabernacle, which was only called holy. And so Chrysostom, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, read; and Theodoret observes, that the tabernacle was divided into two parts by the veil, the one was called holy, the other the holy of holies, and that ἡ πρώτη εἶπεν, ὡς πρὸς τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, the apostle calls this the first tabernacle, to distinguish it from the sanctuary; as it is evident he doth from the verse following, which demonstrates that ἁγία is the true reading in this verse. (2.) It depends upon a false criticism, for מִן הַקֹּדֶשׁ, 1 Kings viii. 8. signifies "ex adyto," or from the most holy place, where the ark was, as appears from 2 Chron. v. 8. (See Dr. Lightfoot's Treatise of the Temple, chap. 15. sect. 4.)

[3] Ver. 4. Χρυσοῦν θυμιατήριον, The golden censer.] Of this golden censer the Jews inform us, that it was only used on the great day of expiation, when the high-priest entered into the holy of holies; and that on other days they offered incense in a silver censer. So Maimonides and Abarbanel. (See Buxt. Hist. Arcæ, p. 76.)

[4] Ἐν ᾗ, In which, &c.] Of the ark the Scripture saith expressly, that there was nothing in it but the tables of the covenant, 1 Kings viii. 9. 2 Chron. v. 10. whereas the pot of manna and Aaron's rod are here said to be also in it. To solve this difficulty, some interpreters say, that as, ver. 2. the apostle tells us what was in the first tabernacle, viz. the candlestick, the table, and the shew-bread; so here he seems to tell us, not what was strictly in the ark, but in the holy of holies, saying, it had for its use the golden censer; and the ark, and in it the tables of the covenant; the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod: but the words, over it were the cherubims, relating not to the holy of holies, but only to the ark, confute that exposition.

Others say, that the pot of manna and Aaron's rod are said to be in the ark, as being placed in the receptacles of the ark, or the coffers in the side of it, mentioned Deut. xxxi. 26. 1 Sam. vi. 8. Hence they are said to be laid up, not in, but before the ark of the testimony, Exod. xvi. 34. Numb. xvii. 10. or with the ark, as ב, which answers to ἐν, here signifies, viz. cum, ad, prope, juxta. (See Noldius de Partic. p. 144, 145.) So ἐν Γαβαὼν is near Gibeon, Josh. x. 10. and ἐν Καριαθιαρὶμ, near Kiriath-jearim, Judg. xviii. (Bochart. Hieroz. lib. ii. cap. 50. p. 590.) And this exposition solves the difficulty, and agrees fully with the tradition of the Jews; for that there were such capsulas to the ark for this use, is owned, saith Buxtorf,* both by the Talmud of Jerusalem and Babylon. Maimonides saith,† There was a stone in the west part of the holy of holies, on which the ark was placed, and before it the pot of manna, and the rod of Aaron. Moses Mikkotsi says the same, and Abarbanel adds,‡ That our interpreters write, that this place does not deny that the pot of manna and the rod of Aaron were kept there for the children of Israel, as it is said in a certain tradition of our rabbins.

[5] Ver. 5. Cherubims of glory.] So called, because the glory of the Lord dwelt between the cherubims, and shined forth from them; Psal. lxxx. 1. Thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth: and they being emblems of the angelical nature, were also emblems of the Divine presence, before which the angels stood continually.

[6] Ver. 7. Ἅπαξ τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ, Once every year.] The priest entered into the holy of holies on the great day of expiation four times, to offer incense, (Lev. xvi. 12.) to offer the blood of the goat, (ver. 15.) and to make an atonement for himself, (ver. 17.) which makes it necessary to paraphrase the words as I have done.

[7] Καὶ τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ ἀγνοημάτων, And for the ignorance of the people.] It is certain that the law allowed of sacrifices for sins committed not out of mere ignorance; i. e. for lying and false swearing. (Lev. vi. 1. 6.) We therefore must either say with Vatablus and Munster in locum, that sins committed through the violence of our passions and affections are called sins of ignorance, and so they stand opposed to sins of presumption, (Numb. xv. 27, 28. 30.) or that the sins of the people are here so styled because they are mostly such.

[8] Ver. 8. Τὴν τῶν ἁγίων ὁδὸν, The way into the holy of holies,] i. e. Into the heavens, was not yet revealed nor opened. Thus did the Jews themselves interpret this symbol, saying, that* the adytum, ὃ τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν ἦν ἄβατον, which was inaccessible to the priests, represented the heaven where God dwelt. This interpretation all the ancient commentators give us of this place, viz. Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact, saying, These things were so prepared, that they might learn, ὅτι τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, τουτέστιν, ὁ οὐρανὸς ἔτι ἐστὶν ἄβατος, that is, that heaven, represented by the holy of holies, was as yet inaccessible, for Christ first entered into heaven, καὶ βατὸν ἡμῖν τοῦτον ἀπέφηνε, and so rendered it accessible to us: and therefore, as the apostle saith here, μήπω πεφανερῶσθαι τὴν τῶν ἁγίων ὁδὸν, the way into this holy of holies was not yet manifested, so he saith in the next chapter, that we Christians have τὴν εἴσοδον τῶν ἁγίων ἐν τῷ αἵματι Ἰησοῦ, an entrance into heaven by the blood of Jesus, and ὁδὸν πρόσφατον, a new way which he hath made new through his flesh; i. e. our forerunner being thus entered into heaven with his blood to appear before God, and so to prepare these mansions for us, the way of our entrance into heaven is now made manifest. And this the ancients say was signified by the rending of the veil, at our Lord's death; viz. τὰ ἄβατα εἶναι λοιπὸν βατὰ, τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀνοιγήσεσθαι, that heaven, before inaccessible, was now opened, and a way was made into the true holy of holies; (Chrysostom, Hom. lxxxviii. in Matt. p. 541.) and the hope of Christians being now to enter within the veil, because our forerunner is gone before, (Heb. vi. 19, 20.) seems to intimate the same thing.

[9] Ver. 9. Ἥτις παραβολὴ εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, καθ' ὃν, &c.] Here the Vulgar and Œcumenius read καθ' ἣν, which, saith Dr. Mills, is the true reading, adding, that κατὰ συνείδησιν, accessit aliunde, has been added to the text. The second opposes the Æthiopic, which is a version of no credit, to the Syriac, Arabic, Vulgar, all the Greek scholiasts, and Cyril. Alexandrinus, who all own the reading of the text: which liberty, if it be allowed, the Scripture must be a very uncertain and precarious rule. In the first, the reading of the text is approved by Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Cyril. of Alexandria, de Ador. Sp. p. 357. and by all the eastern versions. The other reading indeed gives a very good sense thus, Which tabernacle was a figure of the present time, according to which figure, gifts and sacrifices were offered;—but since the reading of the text, which runs thus, Which figure continues to this present time, in which, by the Jews, are still offered gifts and sacrifices,—bears the same sense, and is supported by better authority, what reason can be given why it should be changed?

[10] Τελειῶσαι κατὰ συνείδησιν, To perfect according to the conscience.] The best account of this phrase, relating to what the law and its sacrifices could not do, may be learned from what the new covenant, and the blood of Christ, in which it was established, is said to do. First, then, that blood offered in the presence of God, is said to take away sins εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, so as that there shall be no return of them upon the conscience; no need of any more oblation for the sins of such a person, there being in him no more consciousness of guilt, after his justification by faith in the blood of Jesus. For where remission of sins is, there is no more offering for sins, because the tenor of the new covenant runs thus, Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more, (x. 17. 18.) Hence the apostle argues thus, That the law, with those sacrifices which were offered every year, could not εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς τελειῶσαι, perfect for ever them that come to God with them, because, if they could have done that, the worshippers once purged by them would have had no more conscience of sins; (Heb. x. 1, 2.) i. e. they would not have been still conscious of the guilt of sin, and so could have no need yearly to repeat the same sacrifices. And of our Saviour's sacrifice he speaketh thus, That by one offering, τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified, i. e. are purged by it from the guilt of sin. (Heb. x. 14.) Wherefore, to perfect according to the conscience, is so fully to expiate from the guilt of sin, that it shall no more be remembered by God, and we shall have no more conscience of the guilt of it. Now the consequents of this full remission are these two, 1. A coming unto God with freedom, and full assurance of acceptance with him. This the apostle frequently ascribes unto the death of Christ, who suffered for our sins that he might bring us to God, (1 Pet. iii. 18.) saying, By him who hath reconciled us to God by the cross, we have freedom and access with confidence to the Father, by faith in him; (Eph. ii. 16. 18. iii. 12.) and upon that account exhorts us to come to him in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. (Heb. x. 22.) 2. A right of entrance into heaven. This, saith the apostle, could not be obtained by the service of the tabernacle, (ver. 8.) but only by the death of Christ, by which the way into the holy of holies is laid open, (x. 19, 20.) eternal redemption is obtained for us, (ix. 12.) and we receive the promise of an eternal inheritance; and so it consequentially signifies to have a full assurance of acceptance with God here, and of happiness with him hereafter.

Which could not perfect according to the conscience.] To clear up what has been said upon this verse, let it be noted, that God declares the tenor of the new covenant should run thus: I will be merciful to their iniquities, and remember their sins no more. Whence observe,

* Jos. Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 8.

First, That there was no such promise or condition made under the old covenant, that requiring for every new sin of ignorance a new oblation; whereas sins of ignorance and infirmity being not contrary to the sincerity of our obedience, they do not violate the new covenant, and so are pardoned by virtue of the blood of the new covenant, shed ἐφάπαξ, once for all, for the remission of sins: for if we thus sin, saith the apostle John, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins, 1 John ii. 2. And if we walk in the light as he is in the light, the blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin, 1 John i. 7.

Secondly, Observe, that the legal sacrifices served only for the purification of the flesh from ceremonial defilements, and restored to them only a right to the benefits of the Mosaical covenant, viz. life and prosperity in the land of Canaan, but did not so far purify the conscience, as to procure them an admittance into the heavenly Canaan, which, if they had entirely cleansed them from the guilt and the defilement of sin, they would have done; and hence the apostle says, the way into the holy of holies was not opened, whilst the first tabernacle was standing, (ver. 8. see the note there.)

[11] Ver. 10. Μέχρι καιροῦ διορθώσεως, Till the time of the reformation.] That is, as the next verse expounds it, till the coming of Christ, the Messiah of the Jews, when they themselves expected a reformation of the law, saying, that *the law which was learned in that age was vanity, in respect of the law of the age to come; that is, saith the gloss on Eccles. xi. 8. לפני תורתו של משיח, in respect of the law of the Messiah; and that then the law will be renewed. For our doctors, saith the author of Sephir Ikkarim,† declare, that all Israel shall receive a second law from the mouth of God immediately, as formerly; and this they all prove, as the apostle doth, chap. viii. from Jer. xxxi. 31—33.

[13] Ver. 12. Αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν, Eternal redemption.] Here it is evident, 1. that this our high-priest had procured for us a perfect and perpetual expiation from the guilt of sin; and this Schlictingius on the place fully grants. 2. That this λύτρωσις, or redemption, was procured by the blood of Christ, we having ἀπολύτρωσιν, redemption through his blood, even the remission of sin. (Eph. i. 7.) That therefore was the λύτρον, or price paid, to procure this redemption. That this ἀπολύτρωσις παραβάσεων, redemption from transgressions was made θανάτου γενομένου, by the death of Christ, suffering as a piacular victim for us, there being no other way of procuring this remission under the law, (ver. 22.) and so no other known to, or heard of by, the Jews. And, lastly, that suffering thus, he must also suffer in our stead, as all piacular victims did. Whence he is said to give his life, λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, a ransom for many, Matt. xx. 28. ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων, a ransom for all, 1 Tim. ii. 5. (See the note there.)

[14] Ver. 13. Ἁγιάζει πρὸς τὴν τῆς σαρκὸς καθαρότητα, Sanctifies to the purifying of the flesh.] It is truly observed by the reverend Dr. Hammond, that to sanctify to the purifying of flesh, is to make legally clean, i. e. so as that they might come into the congregation again, it being the sanctification τῶν κεκοινωμένων, of the unclean; but still in a metaphorical signification, as cleansing signifies expiation, and obtaining pardon of sin; and when this is done by a sacrifice, ἁγιάζειν, signifies to expiate, and cleanse from guilt by virtue of it. In which sense it is used throughout this Epistle, and that agreeably to the import of it, when it relates to sacrifices in the Old Testament. So x. 10. ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμὲν, we are sanctified; i. e. are purged from the guilt of sin by the body, or, as other copies read, by the blood of Christ, offered once for all. And, ver. 15. By one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified; i. e. hath entirely purged them who by this offering are cleansed from the guilt of sin: he being offered once, εἰς τὸ πολλῶν ἀνενεγκεῖν τὰς ἁμαρτίας, to bear, or take away, the sins of many, and εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, for the putting away sin by the sacrifice of himself, ix. 26, 27. and, ver. 29. where it is styled the blood of the covenant, ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη, by which he, who now counted it as common, was sanctified, or cleansed from the guilt of sin; it being the blood shed for the remission of sin, the blood of that new covenant which said, I will be merciful to their impieties, and their sins and their transgressions will I remember no more, ver. 17, 18. so, xiii. 12. Therefore Jesus, that he might sanctify the people by his own blood, suffered without the camp: where both the blood sanctifying, and περὶ ἁμαρτίας, the sacrifice for sin, ver. 11. to which it answers, shew that Christ sanctified the people by the oblation of himself as a sin-offering, to cleanse them from the guilt of sin. (See note on Heb. ii. 11.)

[15] Ver. 14. Διὰ Πνεύματος αἰωνίου.] The Vulgar, Chrysostom, and Cyril. Alex. de R. Fide, p. 73. read ἁγίου; but Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact, Athanas. Ep. ad Serap. p. 180. Ambros. de Sp. S. cap. 8. Cod. Alex. Syr. Arab. read as the text.

[16] Ἑαυτὸν προσήνεγκεν, Offered himself without spot to God.] In heaven, saith Dr. Hammond: for that oblation, saith Grotius, must be here understood, which answers to the legal oblation made in the holy of holies, which the oblation of Christ upon the cross doth not, but his oblation in the heavens. Against this interpretation some object, that Christ presenting himself with his blood in the heavens, is never styled an oblation; but that is a plain mistake, (see note on viii. 3, 4.) and of evil consequence: for if Christ had no oblation to offer in heaven, he could not be a high-priest there, since every high-priest must have something to offer in that sanctuary, in which he exercises his priestly office. But yet it being said, not that he offered up his blood, but that προσήνεγκεν ἑαυτὸν, he offered up himself, which he did upon the cross, (Eph. v. 2. Heb. ix. 25. 28.) and the προσφορὰ, or oblation of the sacrifice, being properly the giving it up to the death, or to be a piacular victim in the sinner's stead, these words may very well be thus interpreted, Who, through the Holy Spirit, by which he was sanctified from the very womb, offered himself a piacular victim without spot to God. But then the blood of Christ here mentioned, as purging the conscience from dead works, must be his blood presented before God in the heavenly sanctuary; for the apostle had spoken before, ver. 7. of the blood brought into the holy of holies by the Aaronical high-priest, and declared that it could not perfectly expiate the conscience from the guilt of sin, ver. 10. and therefore here the analogy requires that he should speak of the blood of Christ, brought by our high-priest into the heavenly sanctuary. Moreover, he had said before, that he entered with his blood into the holy of holies, ver. 12. and therefore, ver. 14. must be still speaking of the effect or influence of this blood, there presented for us.

[17] Καθαριεῖ τὴν συνείδησιν ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων, Purge the conscience from dead works.] Τὸ καθαρίζειν, here, as the comparison clearly shews, being in sense the same with ἁγιάζειν in the verse preceding, must signify the cleansing of the conscience not from the inclination to sin, by the Holy Spirit, but from the guilt of sin, by the blood shed for the remission of it. And, secondly, this is the constant sense of the word καθαρίζειν in the Old Testament, when joined with ἀπὸ ἁμαρτιῶν. So Lev. xiv. 19. The priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed from his uncleanness, ἐξιλάσεται ὁ ἱερεὺς περὶ τοῦ καθαριζομένου ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας αὐτοῦ. And, xvi. 30. The priest shall make an atonement for you to cleanse you, καθαρίσαι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ πασῶν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ὑμῶν, from all your sins. (So Josh. xxii. 17. Psal. li. 3. Jer. xxxiii. 8. Ezek. xxiv. 13.) Hence then it follows, that the dead works, from which their conscience was to be thus cleansed, must signify works which deserved death by the tenor of the old covenant.

[18] Λατρεύειν Θεῷ ζῶντι, To serve the living God.] God, being a holy God, can enter into covenant with none, or admit them into his service, whilst they lie under the guilt of sin unpardoned, and so have not found grace in his sight. Noah found grace in the eyes of God, and with him he established his covenant, Gen. vi. 8. 18. Abraham believes in God, and this was counted to him for righteousness; and then the Lord makes a covenant with him by sacrifice, Gen. xv. 10. 18. So Exod. xxiv. 6. the Jews offer burnt-offerings, and sacrifice peace-offerings to the Lord, and the blood is sprinkled upon all the people, and then he enters into covenant with them. Hence the apostle saith, Let us draw nigh to God with full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil (or condemning) conscience, Heb. x. 22.

[19] Ver. 15. Διά τοῦτο,] May either relate to the end of Christ's mediatory office, and so be rendered for this end, or, for this cause; or to the means, by which that new covenant, of which he is the mediator, was established, and then it will be best rendered, by this blood: his blood being styled the blood of the new covenant, Matt. xxvi. 28. Mark xiv. 24. and the covenant being styled the new covenant in his blood, Luke xxii. 20. 1 Cor. xi. 25.

[20] Εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῶν ἐπὶ τῇ πρώτῃ διαθήκῃ παραβάσεων, For the redemption of sins under the first covenant.] St. Paul's design, in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, is to shew, that the law could not justify any man, i. e. that it could not procure his absolution from the guilt of sin, but rather left all guilty before God; and his design in this Epistle is to shew, that the sacrifices offered, under the law, could never take away sin, (x. 4.) And hence ariseth the necessity that Christ should shed his blood for the redemption, i. e. for the remission of sins committed under the old covenant, before we could be capable of entering into the new, or have a right to the blessings of it.

[21] Τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, The promise of an eternal inheritance.] The immediate promise of the new covenant, established in the blood of Christ, is remission of sins; (x. 17.) but then this being an eternal redemption from them, (ver. 12.) and such as perfects for ever them that are sanctified, (x. 14.) upon it necessarily follows the promise of an eternal inheritance, there being nothing to exclude us from it, but the guilt of sin. Hence is there a close connexion betwixt Christ's overcoming death, and bringing life and immortality to light; and this emphatically is styled the promise of the gospel, Tit. i. 2. 1 John i. 2. v. 11.

[22] Ver. 16. Ἀνάγκη φέρεσθαι, There must be.] There must be produced, saith Dr. Hammond, as the word φέρειν signifies, John xviii. 28. Acts xxv. 7. There must intervene: so Schmidius and Budæus.

[23] Ver. 19. Τὸ αἷμα τῶν μόσχων, &c. The blood of calves and goats.] There seems no need of the conjecture of Bishop Usher and others, that besides the burnt-offerings and peace-offerings mentioned by Moses, Exod. xxiv. 5. there were then offered sin-offerings, the holocausts themselves being expiatory sacrifices; as is evident from these words, Lev. i. 4. He shall put his hand on the head of the burnt-offering, and it shall be accepted for him to make an atonement for him. Now the Jewish* doctors tell us, that this imposition of hands was always joined with confession of sins over the sacrifice, which confession still concluded with a prayer, that the sacrifice might be an expiation for them. And the phrase, it shall be accepted, ἐξιλάσασθαι περὶ αὐτοῦ, to make an atonement for him, used here, and Lev. xiv. 20. concerning holocausts, is as much as ever is said of expiatory sacrifices. (2.) This may be farther urged from the word kepher, used concerning holocausts, Lev. i. 3. that being the word used to import expiation for sin; on which account the Syriac version saith, that the burnt-offering was designed, "ad placationem obtinendam a Deo," to appease God: and the Chaldee† paraphrast, that the burnt-offering came "ad expiandum pro cogitationibus cordis," to expiate for the thoughts of the heart. And it was the general opinion of the Jews, saith Doctor Outram,‡ that some kind of sins were expiated by holocausts. And, (3.) all the sacrifices of living creatures, before the law, were holocausts; and yet it is certain that many of them were offered to appease God, and expiate for sin. Thus Noah, after the flood, offered burnt-offerings, Gen. viii. 20. and yet Josephus, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 4. hath informed us, that he offered a sacrifice to atone God, and appease his displeasure. The sacrifices which Job offered for his children were burnt-offerings, yet were they also offerings for sin, Job i. 5. the reason of their oblation being assigned, It may be that my sons have sinned. The oblation which God commanded his friends to make, was a burnt-offering, Job xliii. 7. and yet it was offered to appease God's wrath, and prevailed, with the prayer of Job, λύειν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν αὐτοῖς, to procure absolution from their sin. Nevertheless, because Josephus, speaking of this matter, mentions the blood, τῶν κριῶν σφαγέντων, of the rams slain, as the apostle doth τῶν τράγων, the blood of the goats; hence it seems necessary to allow these also were slain then, either as sin-offerings, or as burnt-offerings, as they are allowed to be, Lev. i. 2, 3. 10.

[24] Ver. 20. Διαθήκη, Covenant, or testament.] "This discourse (saith Mr. Le Clerc) is to be looked upon merely as the play of an hellenistical writer; who, because he saw that διαθήκη was used for that covenant whereof Christ is the mediator, and signified also a testament, and Christ was dead, thence deduced consectaries which are true indeed, considered in themselves, but here rely upon weak principles, rather to set off his discourse according to the custom of that age, than to convert the Jews to the faith by the force of reasoning." Thus is the great apostle of the gentiles turned into a Jewish rabbin, setting off his discourse by weak reasonings, because it was customary for the Jews to do so. Our word and preaching is (saith the apostle) not in the words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, 1 Cor. ii. 4. "By your leave (saith Mr. Le Clerc), you sometimes speak not in the words of man's wisdom, but of Jewish folly, talking plainly like an allegorical Philo, making often such accommodations of Scripture, and such consequences deduced from them, in which no regard at all is had to grammar." We speak the wisdom of God, saith the apostle. "No (saith Mr. Le Clerc), your discourse is to be looked upon merely as the play of an hellenistical writer." We speak (saith the apostle) the things which God hath revealed unto us by his Spirit, and have received this Spirit, that we may know the things which are freely given us of God; which things we speak not in words taught by human wisdom, but in words taught us by the Holy Ghost. "No (saith Mr. Le Clerc), even in things relating to the new covenant, established in the blood of Christ, your discourse relies upon weak principles, and is no better than playing with the ambiguity of words, and deducing consequences without any regard to grammar. For, true it is indeed, that a testament is ratified by the death of the testator, and Christ is dead, but Christ was not the mediator of a testament; for testaments do not want mediators: and if it should be granted that he was, he could not be thought at once a mediator and a testator, by whose death alone a testament was confirmed. The testator here is God the Father, whose heirs men are in conjunction with Christ, but God the Father can in no sense be said to die." Thus Mr. Le Clerc confutes the author, and yet says, he does not lessen the authority of this Epistle, though others think he plainly overthrows it; but, God be thanked, he does it still without just ground. For,

First, It is plainly false that God can be the testator here; and that for his own reason, because "God the Father can in no sense be said to die:" for a testator must have his testament, and where there is a valid testament, there (saith the apostle) must of necessity be the death of the testator. "A testament (saith Mr. Le Clerc) being ratified by the death of the testator."

Secondly, I grant, that Christ was not the mediator of a testament, but then he was the mediator of a covenant; which, as it was sealed with and confirmed by his blood, procuring for us such blessings as he by his will designed for, and declared should be conferred upon, believers, through faith in his blood, became also a testament. Thus when he said, for their sakes, ἁγιάζω ἐμαυτὸν, John xvii. 19. i. e. I offer up myself as a piacular victim, that they might be sanctified, or truly purged from their sins; he adds,* as his last will and testament,—Father, I will that those whom thou hast given me be with me where I am. So here he is become a high-priest of good things to come, purchasing eternal redemption for us by his blood. And, ver. 15. he became the mediator of that new covenant, in which God promised to be merciful to our transgressions, and to remember our sins no more; procuring the remission of them by the intervention of his death, that we that believe in him might receive the promise of an eternal inheritance, which he died to entitle us to, and confer upon us; whence it is styled the purchased possession. This therefore was his will and testament, that they for whom he died should live through him, and this testament could not be confirmed but by his death: he therefore was at once the mediator, in whom the new covenant, promising to us remission of sins, was made; and the testator, by whose death the testament, that they who believed in him should have eternal life, was ratified.

Moreover, what if, after all, here should be nothing said of a testator, but only of a mediator of such a covenant as was to be ratified in the blood of Jesus? This sure would confound all that Mr. Le Clerc here offers; and yet I think, with submission to better judgments, that even this may be maintained against him.

For though there be here mention, ver. 16, 17. τοῦ διαθεμένου, yet it is not necessary that word should signify a testator properly so called, but only a promiser, and one that confirms his promise with his own blood. For διατίθημι, in Phavorinus, is ὑπισχνοῦμαι, συντίθεμαι, I promise, I covenant, and διατίθεσθαι διαθήκην is very commonly, in profane authors, to enter into covenant; and so the phrase διαθήσομαι διαθήκην, and διέθετο διαθήκην,* is constantly used in the Old Testament; and therefore the participle διαθέμενος, derived from the same verb, must properly have the same signification here, in which it is still used by the Septuagint, and which it always bears in the New Testament. Thus, Acts iii. 25. You are the children, διαθήκης ἧς διέθετο, of the covenant which God made with our fathers; Luke xxii. 29. Κἀγὼ διατίθεμαι ὑμῖν, And I appoint to you a kingdom, καθὼς διέθετο, as my Father hath appointed me: so here, viii. 10. x. 16. Αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη ἣν διαθήσομαι, This is the covenant which I will make with the house of Israel. And because covenants were usually made, "victimas cædendo," by sacrifices, and established in blood, as both the Hebrew berith, the Latin fœdus, and the Greek σπονδὴ, whence the word spondeo is derived, shew; and the phrases, ὅρκια τέμνειν, fœdus ferire, and percutere; accordingly it was in the new covenant established in the blood of Jesus. Hence the apostle speaks thus of this covenant, and the appointer, disposer, or the maker of it.

Ver. 15. That by virtue of this blood he is become the mediator of a better covenant.

Ver. 16. For where there is a covenant, (θανάτου γενομένου, made by death, or ratified by the blood of him that makes it, ver. 15.) there of necessity must intervene the death, τοῦ διαθεμένου, of him that makes the covenant (or promise).

Ver. 17. For a covenant (of this nature) is only from (ἐπὶ νεκροῖς) in the death of them who make it (as other covenants were ratified by the death of the sacrifices used at the making of them), and is of no force whilst (ὁ διαθέμενος) the maker of the covenant lives.

Ver. 18. Whence (i. e. because, without shedding of blood, there is no remission; so it was also in) the first covenant, (for it) was not dedicated without blood.

* Αἰκὶ γοῦν τῆς κατὰ Χριστὸν διαθήκης θέλω ἵνα ὅπου ἐγώ εἰμι καὶ οὗτοι ὦσι. Theoph. in locum.

* See Kircher's Cono. vol. i. p. 2139.

To this sense the contexture of the apostle's argument doth plainly lead; for, chap. viii. he introduceth the promise of a new covenant, in which God engageth to be merciful to our iniquities, and to remember our sins no more, (ver. 12.) and so, by removing our guilt, made us fit to be partakers of an eternal inheritance. This remission of sins, saith he, could not be purchased by the gifts and sacrifices under the law, for they could not fully purge the conscience from the guilt of sin, (ix. 9.) but Christ, by his own blood, hath purchased eternal redemption for us, (ver. 12.) and by this blood he is become the mediator of a better covenant; he having suffered death for the remission of sins committed under the old covenant, that we might receive the promise of an eternal inheritance, (ver. 15.)

And this death was necessary for him to suffer, for the obtaining of these ends; for where there is such a covenant, there is a necessity that the death of him who ratifies this covenant with his blood should intervene. For such a covenant is only ratified upon the death of them by whom it is made, and is of no force, whilst he lives that makes the covenant, because this remission of sins is not to be procured without shedding of blood: which was a thing so absolutely necessary under the law, that neither was the first covenant dedicated or established without blood.

Now if this be so, here is no playing with the ambiguity of the word διαθήκη, nor any intimation of a hellenist, but rather of a Hebrew, using the word in the sense which both the Hebrew berith usually bears, and in which διαθήκη answers to it in the Septuagint: and so there was no just occasion for the dangerous reflections which Mr. Le Clerc hath made on this discourse of the apostle.

[25] Ver. 21. Ἐῤῥάντισε, &c.] Of this sprinkling of the tabernacle and all the vessels, we read nothing in the place of Exodus forecited, or in any other part of the law; but Josephus saith,* that Moses did θεραπεύειν τὴν σκηνὴν, καὶ τὰ περὶ αὐτὴν σκεύη ἐλαίῳ, καὶ τῷ αἵματι τῶν ταύρων καὶ κριῶν σφαγέντων, consecrate for God's service the tabernacle, and all the vessels of it, anointing them with oil, and with the blood of bulls and rams.

[26] Ver. 22. Almost all things.] He saith, almost; because some things which could abide the fire, were purified by the fire, Numb. xxxi. 23. and others by water, Lev. xvi. 28.

[27] Ver. 23. Αὐτὰ δὲ τὰ ἐπουράνια, The heavenly things.] For explication of these words, let it be observed, first, that the apostle here speaketh all along, not of purification of persons, but of things of the tabernacle, and of the vessels of it, ver. 21. of the τὰ πάντα, all other things which were to be purified; of the ὑποδείγματα τῶν ἐν οὐρανοῖς, the patterns of things in heaven, ver. 23. that is, the tabernacle and the utensils of it, viii. 5. The heavenly things themselves, opposed to them, cannot therefore signify men in general, viz. the church triumphant or militant, or, in particular, our souls or consciences, but the heavenly place, styled, ver. 24. heaven itself, the place into which Christ entered, in which he appears before God, the place of which the tabernacle made with hands was a figure.

Secondly, Observe, that by God's appointment an atonement was to be made for the holy place, by the blood of a sin-offering sprinkled upon and before the mercy-seat seven times, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions and their sins. (Lev. xvi. 16.) Now these could not defile that holy place into which they never entered, but yet they rendered them and their services unworthy to appear, and to be tendered before it, as they still did, worshipping towards or before this footstool of the Divine Majesty. An atonement was also to be made for the tabernacle of the congregation, in which God dwelt among them, because of their uncleannesses, which rendered them unworthy to come into that tabernacle where he was present; whence it is observable, that no man was permitted to be in the tabernacle, till the atonement was made for it; so that the purification of the holy of holies was only the preparing of it to be still a mercy-seat, to which they might repair with their prayers, praises, and adorations, and from which God might graciously shine forth upon them, when purified by this atonement from the defilements of their sins. And the purification of the tabernacle was only to prepare it to be a place in which they might present their persons before God, thus cleansed by this atonement from the guilt of sin.

And in like manner was heaven itself to be prepared or purified for us, by our Lord's entrance into it with his own atonement, or propitiatory sacrifice: first, that our prayers and praises might ascend up thither, and be accepted at God's mercy-seat, as being offered to God by our high-priest, and rendered acceptable by the atonement he had made for the pollutions cleaving to them. Hence is he represented as having a golden censer, and much incense to offer, with the prayers of all saints, Rev. viii. 3, 4. Secondly, That our persons might be admitted into this heavenly tabernacle, as being cleansed by his blood from those defilements which they had contracted. Accordingly, our Lord tells his disciples, In my Father's house are many mansions; I go to prepare a place for you, John xiv. 2, 3. And here he is said to purify and prepare these heavenly mansions for us, by entering into heaven, there to appear with his blood of sprinkling in the presence of God for us.

[28] Ver. 26. Ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, From the foundation of the world.] This phrase is used six times elsewhere in the New Testament, viz. Matt. xiii. 35. xxv. 34. Luke xi. 50. Rev. xiii. 8. xvii. 8. and in this Epistle, iv. 3. God's works were finished from the foundation of the world. And in all these places it manifestly signifies, from the beginning of the world; (see Psal. lxxviii. 2. Matt. xiii. 35.) and therefore must in reason bear the same import in this text; and then it proves, against Crellius, that the sufferings of Christ had respect to all preceding generations: for if his sufferings had not respected the sins of the whole world, where is the necessity, upon the supposition here made, of the reiteration of his sacrifice, that he should have suffered from the beginning of the world?

[29] Ἐπὶ τῇ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, At the end of the world.] Dangerous here is the note of Grotius, that St. Paul, In id propendebat, ut crederet de propinquo imminere mundi ruinam. See this confuted, note on 1 Thess. iv. 15. And that τὰ τέλη and ἡ συντέλεια τῶν αἰώνων signifies, not the end of the world, but the last of the three celebrated ages of the world, see note on 1 Cor. x. 11.

[30] Χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, Without a sin-offering.] See note on 2 Cor. v. 20.

CHAP. X.

(THE legal high-priest, I say, went yearly into the holy of holies, ix. 25. as it was necessary for him to do in that imperfect dispensation;)

1. For the law having (only) a [1] shadow of good things to come, and [2] not the very image of the things (themselves), can [3] never with those sacrifices, which they (who officiated under it) offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect (i. e. absolved from the guilt of sin for ever):

2. For [4] then would they have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged (by them, εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, for ever) would have had no more conscience of sins (i. e. would not have been after conscious of the guilt of sin).

3. But (so far are they from procuring this perpetual remission, or freeing those that offered them, from being any more conscious of sin, that) in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year, (viz. in the great day of expiation; whereas, where there is full remission of sins, there is no remembrance of them any more, and so no more offering for sin needful, ver. 16, 17.

4. They could not, I say, expiate for ever, or clear them from all conscience of sin;) for it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats [5] should take away sins (for ever, so that no farther sacrifice should be needful to that end).

5. Wherefore, when he (the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world) [6] cometh into the world, he (in the Psalmist) saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but [7] a body hast thou prepared (for) me: (i. e. thou wouldest not have them to continue after my coming into the world to offer myself a sacrifice for the sins of the world, they being only to continue till the time of reformation, ix. 10. and here, ver. 9.)

6. In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure:

7. Then said I, Lo, I come, (as) [8] in the volume (or, roll) of the book it is written of me, to do (τοῦ ποιῆσαι, that I should do) thy will, O God (i. e. to offer my body a sacrifice for sin, according to thy will).

8. Above when he said, (ἀνώτερον λέγων, when he, i. e. Christ had said before, Psal. xl. 6.) Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin, thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein (speaking of the sacrifices); which are offered by the law;

9. Then said he, (afterward, ver. 7.) Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. (And thus) he taketh away the first (the legal sacrifices), that he may establish the second; (the oblation of his body, ver. 10.)

10. [9] By the which [10] will we are sanctified through the offering (Gr. διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς, who are sanctified by the offering) of the body of Jesus Christ (ἐφάπαξ) once for all, (not as the legal sacrifices, once every year, ix. 25, 26.)

11. And every priest (according to the law) standeth (Gr. stood) daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away (the guilt of) sins:

12. But this man (Christ Jesus), after he had offered one sacrifice for sins (by which the guilt of them hath been fully taken away, Heb. i. 3. is) [11] for ever sat down on the right hand of God; (and so is placed over all his works, according to Psal. viii. 6.)

13. From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool (till the devil, antichrist, death, the wages of sin, and the last enemy be abolished, 1 Cor. xv. 15. and so the following words of the Psalmist, Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet, be fully accomplished).

14. For by (this) one offering (of himself to the death for us) he hath [12] perfected for ever (i. e. completely expiated the sins of) them that are sanctified (through faith in his blood, procuring the remission of sins, Acts xxvi. 18.)

15. Whereof (and of this) the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before,

16. This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in (or, upon) their minds will I write them; (Jer. xxxi. 33.)

17. (He adds, as a farther promise, or part of the new covenant,) And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18. Now where (such a) remission of these is (as cuts off the remembrance of them any more), there is [13] no more (need of) offering for sin. (See ver. 2, 3.)

19. Having therefore, brethren, boldness (or, liberty, see note on iii. 6.) to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, (from which the Jews were typically debarred, the way into the holiest being not then revealed, ix. 8.)

20. By a new [14] and [15] living way, which he hath consecrated (or, made new) for us, through the veil, that is to say, (through) his flesh (offered for our sins upon the cross);

21. And having (such) [16] a high-priest over the house of God; (i. e. the church, iii. 6. 1 Tim. iii. 15. or, over the house not made with hands, in which God dwells, viii. 1, 2. ix. 1. 11.)

22. Let us (who are of this house, iii. 6. and for whom this freedom is procured by this high-priest) draw near (to God) with a true (upright) heart in full assurance of faith, (that our services shall be accepted now, and our persons hereafter admitted into his presence, as) having [17] our hearts sprinkled (by the blood of Jesus) from (the accusations of) an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water (viz. the laver of regeneration).

23. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith (Gr. the hope we profess) without wavering; (or, being moved from the hope of our calling, Colos. ii. 23. that hope which causeth us to rejoice, iii. 6. which entereth within the veil, vii. 27.) for he is faithful who hath promised (this entrance into it);

24. And let us consider one another (as members of the same body) to provoke (one another) to love and to good works: (or, works of charity; see note on Tit. iii. 8.)

25. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, (not drawing back from Christianity to Judaism, ver. 26. 38.) as the manner of some is; (who, for fear of persecution from the Jews, return to the worship of the synagogue, ver. 32. 36.) but exhorting one another (to perseverance in the faith): and (that) so much the more, as you see [18] the day (of vengeance upon the unbelieving and apostatizing Jews) approaching.

26. [19] For if we sin wilfully (by renouncing and falling off from Christianity) after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remains no more sacrifice for sin, (οὐκ ἔτι, there is not yet left any other sacrifice, besides that which you reject, to purge you from the guilt of sin; and therefore nothing can remain for such apostates)

27. But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries (of Christ the Son of God, ver. 29.

28. And of this you may be assured, from what befel those who revolted from the law of Moses; for) he that despised Moses's law died without mercy under (the testimony of) two or three witnesses (of that apostacy, Numb. xv. 30, 31. Deut. xxvii. 2. 7.)

29. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye (then), shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God (using him with the greatest contempt), and hath accounted the blood of the (new) covenant, [20] wherewith he was sanctified, (or, purged from the guilt of his sins, ii. 11. ix. 13. xiii. 12.) an unholy thing (such as pollutes rather than purges, as being the blood of a malefactor), and hath done despite to the Spirit of grace (by refusing to own him as the Spirit of God; yea, rejecting him as a lying spirit, and his gifts and miracles as illusions)?

30. For we know him that hath said (i. e. who introduceth God thus speaking), Vengeance belongeth to me, and I will recompense, [21] saith the Lord. (Deut. xxxii. 35.) And [22] again (in the same place, ver. 36. saith of him), The Lord shall judge his people.

31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, (who ever lives to punish those who revolt from him; see iii. 12.)

32. But call to remembrance (Ἀναμιμνήσκεσθε δὲ, Remember therefore) the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, (i. e. baptized into the Christian faith, vi. 4.) you endured (courageously) a great fight (Gr. conflict) of afflictions; (for a great persecution then befel the church which was at Jerusalem, Acts viii. 2. 1 Thess. ii. 14.)

33. Partly, while you were made a gazing-stock (or spectacle) both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, while ye became companions of them that were so used, (Acts v. 41. the apostles, especially Paul and Barnabas, Acts xiv. 5. 19, 20. xvii. 10. 14, 15.)

34. For ye had compassion of me in [23] my bonds, (Acts xx. 23. xxi. 4. 11—13.) and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves (by the testimony of that Spirit who is the earnest of our future inheritance, Eph. i. 14. iv. 30.) that you have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

35. Cast not away therefore your confidence (παῤῥησίαν, your freedom in profession of the faith), which hath great recompence of reward, (for with the mouth confession is made unto salvation, Rom. x. 10.)

36. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, (i. e. have suffered according to his will, 1 Pet. iv. 19.) ye might receive [24] the promise (reward).

37. For (the vision of Habakkuk, respecting the coming of Christ, and exhorting you to wait for him, said then, Yet for a time, as I do now,) yet a little while, [25] and he that shall come (Gr. ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that cometh now to reward your patience) will come, and will not tarry.

38. (It also adds these words of comfort to the faithful, and terror to the revolter, Expect him now, Δίκαιος δὲ, for) the just shall live by (his) faith: [26] but if any man draw back (καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, and if he draw back from it), my soul (saith God) shall have no pleasure in him.

39. But we (I hope, vi. 9.) are not of them that draw back to perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1. ΣΚΙΑ'Ν τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, A shadow of good things to come.] i. e. Of those good things to come, of which Christ is the high-priest; their tabernacle being only a shadow or figure of that celestial tabernacle, into which he, as our forerunner, hath already entered; (ix. 11.) the purgation they obtained by their sacrifices, from the defilements of the flesh, of the purifications of our consciences from dead works; (ver. 13, 14.) their annual redemption, of the eternal redemption obtained by Christ; (ver. 12.) their freedom of entrance, being cleansed by their sacrifices into the tabernacle of the congregation, of our freedom to enter into the holy of holies.

[2] Οὐκ αὐτὴν τὴν εἰκόνα τῶν πραγμάτων, Not the very image of things.] The apostle here distinguishing betwixt the things and the image of them, I think the word image cannot properly be rendered substance: but we under the gospel do enjoy such lively representations of the good things to come, as are both assurances, and foretastes, and beginnings of them, the earnests of our future glory, in the enjoyment of the Holy Spirit, who is the earnest of it; (Eph. i. 14.) and by whom we are changed into the image of our glorious Lord; (2 Cor. iii. 18.) the image of our enjoyment of God, and dwelling for ever with him, by being made a habitation of God through the Spirit; (Eph. ii. 22.) the image of our entrance into his presence, in that freedom of access we have already to the Father through Christ; (Eph. ii. 18. iii. 12.) the image of our final absolution, in that justification which is attended with that peace of God which passeth all understanding. And this sufficiently answers the objection of Esthius against this sense, viz. That a more express signification of these future good things would not more efficaciously avail towards the exhibition of them: for such an image of them, as also is an earnest, foretaste, assurance, and an inchoation of them, is sufficient to make the comers to God perfect for ever, as far as we are capable of being so in this life; as being fully assured of the entire pardon of our past sins, so as that they shall not be remembered any more, and of the enjoyment of those future blessings, of which we have received already the earnest, first-fruits, and assurance.

[3] Εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς οὐδέποτε δύναται τοὺς προσερχομένους τελειῶσαι, Could never make the comers to them perfect for ever.] All interpreters allow a σύγχυσις, or trajection of the words in this verse. Now this, which I make in the translation, seems to be confirmed by the effect of our Lord's sacrifice opposed to these; for that, saith the apostle, τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, hath perfected for ever them that were sanctified, i. e. hath cleansed them for ever from the guilt of sin, (ver. 14.) That therefore which he here denies to the legal sacrifices, must be also this, that they could τελειῶσαι εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, expiate sins for ever; or so as that they who were once purged by them, should have no more conscience of sin; (ver. 2.) and to this sense the following argument inclines.

The words τελειοῦν and τελειῶσαι have two significations; the one is agonistical, and then it signifies to reward and crown, as in those words, That they without us, μὴ τελειωθῶσι, might not be made perfect, i. e. be crowned, or have their full reward, Heb. xi. 40. (see the note there:) the other is sacrificial; for when it is joined with sacrifices, or hath relation to them, it signifies, ἁγιάζειν, καὶ καθαρίζεσθαι, to sanctify and purge from the guilt of sin. Whence τελειώσεις is rendered by Hesychius and Phavorinus ἁγιάσεις. So the sin-offering, by which Aaron and his sons were sanctified, and set apart for the priesthood, is styled, θυσία τελειώσεως, Exod. xxix. 34. and the sacrifice by which the temple was sanctified, or purged from its defilements, is styled, θυσία τελειώσεως, 2 Macc. ii. 9. and therefore what is here, cannot make perfect, is, ver. 4. cannot ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίας, take away sins; and, ver. 2. καθαρίζεσθαι, is to purge from the conscience of sin. (See ix. 9. 12. 14.)

And, lastly, the word προσερχομένους here, seems not to signify, the comers to it, i. e. the law, but, the comers to God for pardon by these legal sacrifices; for the word in this whole Epistle still relates to coming to God, as the phrase is expressly, vii. 25. xi. 6. the coming to the throne of grace, iv. 16. and in this chapter, ver. 2. προσερχώμεθα, Let us come (to God) with a true heart.

[4] Ver. 2. Ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν ἐπαύσαντο προσφερόμεναι, For then they would not have ceased to be offered.] Some, leaving out the οὐκ, translate the words thus, For then sure they would have ceased to be offered; but the οὐκ is found in Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact, and the Alexandrian manuscript, and therefore ought not to be omitted: others, with the Arabic version, read the words interrogatively, For then would they not have ceased to be offered? which gives a very good sense. But yet there seems to be another sense of them very agreeable to the context; viz. For then they would not have ceased, or been taken away, to give place to another sacrifice for sin, as the apostle proves they were, from ver. 5. 9.

[5] Ver. 4. Ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίας, To take away sins,] Is not, as Grotius here notes, "efficere ne ultra peccetur," to make us sin no more; for that is not the effect of Christ's blood, but, as far as in this imperfect state we are enabled so to do, of his sanctifying Spirit. Moreover, the apostle speaks, ver. 1. of expiation of the conscience from the guilt of sin, of expiation by the legal sacrifices which did not inwardly sanctify, of purgation by the oblation of them, ver. 2. from that sin of which there was a yearly remembrance in the oblation of those sacrifices to make atonement for them, ver. 3. and therefore the ἀδύνατον γὰρ, which connects this verse with the former, and shews that to be impossible to be effected, which he had said before was not effected by those sacrifices, must confine this phrase to the taking away the guilt of sin, by* expiation and atonement for them; not to the removal of the power and dominion of them, by internal sanctification. And so ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίαν always signifies, either to take away sin by a mere act of grace, absolving from the punishment due to it; (as when Nathan said to David, Ἀφῆλη ὁ Κύριος τὸ ἁμάρτημά σου, The Lord hath taken away thy sin, thou shalt not die, 2 Sam. xii. 13. and the seraphim to Isaiah, This hath touched thy lips, καὶ ἀφελεῖ τὰς ἁμαρτίας σου, and he will take away thy sins, Isa. vi. 7. and, Isa. xxvii. 9. By this, ἀφαιρεθήσεται ἀνομία Ἰακὼβ, shall the iniquity of Jacob be forgiven; and this is the blessing, ὅταν ἀφέλωμαι τὴν ἁμαρτίαν αὐτοῦ, when I shall take away his sin; and when God saith to Joshua, ἰδοὺ ἀφῄρηκα τὰς ἀνομίας σου, Behold, I have taken away thy sins, Zech. iii. 4.) or, when this phrase hath relation to a sacrifice, to take it away by that; (as when it is said, Lev. x. 17. Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you, ἵνα ἀφέλητε τὴν ἁμαρτίαν τῆς συναγωγῆς, καὶ ἐξιλάσησθε περὶ αὐτῶν ἐναντι Κυρίου, that you might bear (away) the iniquity of the congregation, to make an atonement for them before the Lord? See ver. 11.)

[6] Ver. 5. Εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον, Coming into the world.] The Socinian gloss here, "de ingressu Christi in mundum futurum," i. e. of Christ's going out of this world into the next, or into heaven, is so absurd, that it needs no refutation; his coming into the world, in the Scripture phrase, being, his descending from heaven to be with us, John xvi. 28. I came down from the Father, and came into the world; and his going hence into heaven, being styled, his leaving of the world, John xiii. 1. xvi. 28. xvii. 11. And though the phrase of entering into the world may sometimes in St. John import Christ's entering on his prophetic office, or his appearing publicly in the world, as ὁ ἐρχόμενος is that Prophet which was to come into the world; yet the connexion of it here with the time when a body was prepared for him, will not suffer us to doubt, that it importeth here his assumption of the human nature, and his being born into the world in it. And so this phrase is used, when Christ is styled the true Light, that enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world, John i. 9. For though the grammatical construction doth not hinder but that ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν κόσμον, may be construed with Light thus, which coming into the world enlighteneth every man; yet כל באו עולם, all that come into the world, being the constant phrase by which the Jews express all men living, as Dr. Lightfoot on the place observes; and the Jews themselves, speaking of God himself after this manner, עולם אתה מואר כל באו, Thou art he that illuminates every man that comes into the world*; this is a plain confirmation of our translation of these words.

[7] Σῶμα κατηρτίσω μοι, A body hast thou prepared, or framed, for me.] The words in the Hebrew are, כרית לי אזנים, my ears hast thou bored, in plain allusion to the ceremony used to a slave that would not have his liberty, but would continue in his obedience to his master, and would not go free. (Exod. xxi. 6. Deut. xv. 17.) And seeing this was done out of love to his master, the boring of his ear seems not to be commanded as a note of infamy, but as a solemn devoting of him to his master's service; though were it used as a mark of servitude, it answers still exactly to our Saviour, who took upon him, saith the apostle, μορφὴν δούλου, the form of a servant, or of a slave, and became obedient to the death for us, when he might have been free from it, out of love to his Father and us his children. (Heb. ii. 14.) And because he only could appear in this form, and performed this obedience in the body he assumed for this purpose, the Seventy interpreters, perhaps by the internal motion of the Holy Spirit, translated the phrase thus, A body hast thou prepared, or framed, for me: for that the apostle did not change the translation of the Septuagint, but find it thus, his words declare, when he saith, he taketh away the first, viz. sacrifice, and offering, according to the law, that he might establish the latter, i. e. the oblation of his body, or his obedience to the death in his body thus prepared for him. So read Theodoret, St. Austin, Euthymius, St. Chrysostom, Apollinarius, and Ambrosius; so read the Arabic and Ethiopic versions; and they who read otherwise, may be supposed to have followed not the Greek, but the Hebrew. And this reading the apostle approves and follows, as the true meaning of the Hebrew phrase, and that which so fitly doth express our Saviour's oblation of himself (as that sacrifice which was to put an end to those which only were the types and shadows of it), and his giving up himself, entirely a servant, to do the will of God; on which account, slaves and servants, who were altogether at the beck and will of their lords, were both by Jews and heathens called σώματα, bodies. Thus Raguel gave to Tobias half his goods, σώματα, καὶ κτήνη, καὶ ἀργύριον, servants, and cattle, and money, Tobit x. 10. The sale of the captive Jews, by Nicanor, is in the Greek thus, ἀνορισμὸς Ἰουδαϊκῶν σωμάτων, 2 Macc. viii. 11. Joseph. Antiq. Jud. lib. xii. cap. 2. p. 390. F. So all the servants of the men of Sichem are, πάντα τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν, Gen. xxxiv. 29. And σώματα is by our translation rendered slaves, Rev. xviii. 13. So Aristotle, Strabo, Demosthenes, and J. Pollux, use the word. (See Constantine.)

I do not find that the ancient Jews interpreted these words of Christ in express terms; but they say enough to justify the apostle's argument from this text. For hence they conclude, that God had no principal regard to sacrifices, and that obedience and praise were better than sacrifice;* and that †a farther salvation was to be expected, even the salvation of God, Psal. l. 23. Isa. xlv. 17. which was עולמים תשועת, an eternal salvation; or, in the language of the apostle here, salvation, εἰς τὸ παντελὲς, for ever, Heb. vii. 25. εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, x. 14.

[8] Ver. 7. In the volume of thy book it is written of me, that I should come to do thy will.] It being there written, that the Messiah was to make his life an offering for sin, Isa. liii. 10. and by that to cause these offerings and sacrifices to cease, Dan. ix. 27. therefore he is said to go to his cross, as it was written of him, Matt. xxvi. 24. And the rulers of the Jews are said to have fulfilled the Scriptures in condemning him, and to have done that which was written of him, Acts xiii. 27. 29. (See Luke xxiv. 44. 46.)

[9] Ver. 10.] Though perhaps the article οἱ should be left out, it being not read by Chrysostom and Theodoret, or by the Syriac version; yet, because it is in the Alexandrian copy, in Œcumenius, Theophylact, the Arabic version, and in many manuscript copies, I thought fit to give it a place in the paraphrase, and then it is easy to perceive that ἡγιάσμεθα must be repeated, to complete the sense.

[10] Ἐν ᾧ θελήματι, By the which will.] Christ had said in the Psalmist, that his Father would not have the sacrifices and oblations of the law continued, but that his will was, that he should once for all suffer for the sin of man; by the execution of which will, performed by Christ's oblation of his body for us, we are sanctified: where ἁγιάζειν, or ἁγιάζεσθαι, doth not signify to be freed from the power and dominion of sin, but from the guilt of it; as is proved, note on ix. 13.: and this is farther proved, from the means of this sanctification, viz. the oblation of Christ's body, that being offered as a piacular victim, to purge us from the guilt of sin, and from the condemnation due unto us for it: nor doth the apostle here understand the oblation of Christ's body in the heavens for us, that being properly his intercession, but the oblation of his body on the cross, and his sufferings. (Heb. ii. 10, 11. xiii. 12.) And, lastly, this being effected by the oblation of Christ's body, ἐφάπαξ, once for all; as it restrains the word to his oblation on the cross, which was but once performed, and is past (whereas his appearance in the heavens for us is still present and perpetual), so doth it perfectly overthrow the pretended sacrifice of the mass: for, if by this one oblation he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified, what efficacy can there be in this vain repetition of it? nay, must it not import, that remission of sins is not fully obtained for us by our Lord's sacrifice on the cross? for, saith the apostle, where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin, (ver. 18.)

[11] Ver. 12. Εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, For ever.] By comparing this with ver. 14. By one offering he hath perfected, εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, for ever them that are sanctified, and with ver. 1. where it is denied that the legal sacrifices could, τελειῶσαι εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, expiate sins for ever; and from the stress the apostle here, (ver. 10.) and elsewhere, lays upon this προσφορὰ ἐφάπαξ, oblation once for all,—I imagine that these words may be better rendered thus, This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sin for ever, is sat down.

[12] Ver. 14.] That τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς is to expiate sin for ever, see note on ver. 1. and that the apostle here speaks of them who are sanctified by this expiation, hath been observed, note on ix. 13. as is apparent from the testimony of the Holy Ghost produced here to confirm this, viz. That God would remember their sins no more, (ver. 17.)

A question ariseth from ver. 4. and 11. Upon what ground it is here asserted, that the legal sacrifices could never take away sin? and wherein lies the difference, in point of expiation, between the sacrifices of the law and the oblation of the body of Christ, that one could purge the conscience from the sense of guilt, and take away sin for ever, and the other could not? "If all must be resolved into Divine appointment and Divine acceptation, how is it impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sin? Was it not possible that God might have appointed and accepted of the life of a beast, instead of that of the greatest malefactor, who thereby might be freed, not only from a temporal, but likewise from the obligation to eternal death?" Now in answer to this question, I conceive, that Divine acceptation must neither wholly be excluded, nor wholly be assigned, as the cause that the oblation of our Saviour's body was thus available for that expiation of the guilt of sin, which could not be obtained by the legal sacrifices.

And, first, I say, Divine acceptation must not, yea, cannot wholly be excluded; for that would render the oblation of our Lord's body, of what virtue soever it might be in itself, wholly unable to procure the pardon of our sin, and exclude all true remission and forgiveness of sin. For,

The punishment of another, being not the thing threatened or required, but only the death of the offender, can be of no avail to free the criminal from punishment, though he, that is the substitute, be never so able or so well inclined to suffer it; unless the governor, or he to whom the execution of the law belongs, be willing to accept of his vicarious punishment; and whensoever he is pleased, and sees just cause to do so, it is an act of grace and favour to the criminal, and a remission of his personal obligation to bear the punishment he had deserved. In punishments inflicted on the criminal, it is true, that so far as he suffers what the law exacts, so far doth he dissolve the obligation to further punishment, and so far must his punishment be inconsistent with remission; for as far as any man is punished, he is not forgiven. But by admission of another to suffer in our stead, we are as much forgiven as we could be, did he not suffer in our stead, because we are as much exempted from suffering any punishment on the account of our offences; and how can we be more forgiven, than we are by such an act as removes from us the whole punishment as much as if we had never offended? the vicarious punishment is indeed the motive and the procuring cause of this forgiveness, as it renders it consistent with the governor's honour, and with the ends of government, to grant it; but it takes off nothing from the freedom of the pardon.

Secondly, I add, That Divine acceptation must not be assigned as the only cause that the oblation of our Saviour's body was thus available for the expiation of the guilt of sin; for then no reason can be given, why he might not have accepted of the blood of bulls and goats, and much more the sufferings of any ordinary man, for the procuring our exemption from the guilt of sin; whereas two reasons have been already offered in the note on ii. 14. why the blood of bulls and goats could never take away sin; viz. first, because they were not of the same nature and original with man, who sinned, and so could not dissolve the debt his nature had contracted. Secondly, They never could procure for us a resurrection, and so they could not free us from that eternal death our sins deserved; nor could any mortal man do it, because he never could have power to raise his own body; only that Jesus who had power to lay down his life, and take it up again (who hath life in himself, and who can make the dead hear the voice of the Son of man, and live), can do this. Indeed, they could do nothing of that which was requisite, saith this Epistle, and the whole Scripture, for that end. But the great reason why the blood of bulls and goats could never take away sins, is this, that they could never answer the great ends of punishment, and thereby render it consistent with the honour of the governor, and with the ends of government, to admit the substitution of them in our stead. Now the ends which wise men do assign of punishments, are these:

First, Παράδειγμα, That they who suffer, may be exemplary to others, and may, by what they suffer, deter others from the commission of the like offences; by letting them, in their example, know what they must suffer, when the guilt of their own sins is laid upon them.

Secondly, Νουθεσία, That the offender may learn wisdom, by the rod: that the remembrance of what was suffered for it might prevent the repetition of his sin; and that he may be fitted to embrace that counsel of our Saviour, Sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee.

Thirdly, Τιμωρία, The vindication of the prince's honour, and the preservation of the laws he hath established from contempt. Now to apply this to our purpose, I say,

1. That by the obedience of our Lord Christ unto the death in our stead, these ends of punishment are very signally obtained, and that with more advantage to God's glory, than if the punishment of our offences had been inflicted upon us; and so God, by it, may be truly said to have been satisfied, seeing that justice, which consists in punishing for the transgression of a law, is truly satisfied, when all those ends, for which the punishment of the offender could be desired, are obtained.

2. I add, That none of these ends could be at all obtained by the suffering of bulls and goats, and not comparatively by the sufferings of any mortal man whatsoever. And,

First, God, by this dispensation, hath given us the best and most effectual example to deter us from sin: for three things only can be requisite to this end, viz. that the punishment of sin be insupportable, when we suffer it; inevitable, when we, by our rebellions, have made ourselves the vessels of God's wrath; and that we have a lively sense and deep impression of all this upon our spirits. Now,

The example of our Saviour's sufferings shews how insupportable the punishment will be, which justice will inflict upon the sinner; for if the apprehension of it produced such agonies and consternations in the soul of Christ, that God saw need to send an angel to support him under them, how must the sinner sink under that burden, when it is laid upon his shoulders! if he, who was the well-beloved Son of God, found it so dreadful to lie under the burden for some hours; to lie exposed for ever to it, must be far more intolerable: if the consideration of God's paternal love, and of the glorious issues of his sufferings, was scarce sufficient to support our Lord under the terrors of that cup; what will support the sinner, when he shall know himself to be the everlasting object of God's wrath!

This example also shews, that impenitent sinners cannot escape this wrath of God, since he inflicted so great a punishment on the beloved of his soul, when he became our surety. For if on this account God spared not his only Son, we may be sure he will not spare his stubborn enemies. With what strong cries, and with what earnestness, did our Lord pray to be delivered from this cup? and yet, when he had made his soul an offering for sin, thus did it please the Lord to bruise him. If then his ears were shut against the cries of his beloved Son, how can they be opened to the howlings of rebellious sinners? if God was pleased to lay so great a load on him who was but sponsor for our sins, their punishment cannot be milder who commit them. And,

Lastly, This example gives us the most lively sense and deep impression of these things, as being the most sensible demonstration of God's indignation against sin, which is recorded in the sacred writings. To find God drowning the whole world, and raining fire and brimstone on Sodom and Gomorrah for sin; to see the darling objects of his love, the Jewish nation, become for above seventeen hundred years the objects of his sorest wrath, are instances sufficient to deter men from sin: but then to see God mix a cup so bitter, so full of gall and wormwood, for his own innocent and well-beloved Son, and make him drink it off, only because he undertook to be our surety; to see him lifted up upon the cross, the earth trembling under him, as if unable to bear his weight, the heavens darkened over him, as if shut against his cry, and all this because our sins did meet upon him,—is a sure and eminent demonstration of God's indignation against sin.

Secondly, Whereas inevitable ruin must have followed, upon the execution of the deserved punishment on the offender's person, God, by this method, hath taken a most excellent way for reformation of the sinner, which was the second end of punishment: for what can be a more effectual motive to abstain from sin, than this example, which so clearly represents the greatness of the provocation in the greatness of the punishment, and shews it is impossible that guilty persons should avoid the stroke of God's vindictive justice, or bear the weight of his almighty arm?

Thirdly, God, by this dispensation, hath sufficiently consulted the preservation of his honour, and secured the reverence and observation of his laws; which was the third great end of punishment. For,

God, by declaring thus, he would not pardon our offences, without this satisfaction made for the violation of his law, hath fully vindicated his institutions from contempt; seeing, by this example, he hath let all men know, that though he be a God of great long-suffering and mercy, he will by no means clear the sinner, or suffer sin to go unpunished.

Again, God, by this dispensation, hath vindicated his honour more than if he had destroyed the sinner; having more evidently shewed his hatred of, and great displeasure against sin, by punishing it so severely in his only Son, when he became our surety: for the greater the inducement is to remit the punishment of sin, the greater must be his hatred who inflicts it; that therefore this consideration, that he who suffered was his well-beloved Son, would not induce him to remit the punishment, must be the highest demonstration of his most perfect hatred of all iniquity.

But that none of those ends could be at all obtained by the substitution of a bull, or goat, or ram, to suffer in our stead, must be extremely evident, this being a substitution very supportable, especially by the rich, who very freely spend much more upon the satisfaction of their lusts, and who would therefore gladly buy a freedom to commit them at so small expense. This then would be so far from tending to reform the sinner, that it would rather be a great encouragement to him to continue in his evil courses, when he thus knew the damage would be very little to him; this also could not tend to the honour of the lawgiver, but rather would tempt men to conceive that his displeasure against sin could not be great, since he required so little to repair his honour; and that he was not much concerned for any satisfaction for the violations of his law, when such slight matters were by him thought sufficient expiations for them.

Moreover, the oblations of any ordinary man could not procure this expiation for us: 1. Because he could only suffer that punishment he had deserved, by his own sins: now evident it is, no satisfaction can be made by me for others, by suffering that which justice doth require me to suffer for my own offences. 2. Because he could not overcome death, he never could raise up himself from the grave, and so could not procure that redemption from it to another, which he could not obtain for his own self. Nor, 3. is it visible how he can serve the ends of justice, or of government, by doing so, more than the criminal himself would do by his own sufferings. For, 1. what great indication would it be of Divine hatred to sin, that he required only the death of a mortal man, to expiate the sins of the whole world? Or, 2. what discouragement could this afford to sinners from continuing in their evil courses, or what great dread of Divine vengeance? for if, as it was conjectured by most nations, the death of a malefactor might be sufficient for this purpose, what nation could ever want such expiations for their sins? or, if it were to be a good man, seeing they bore so great love to mankind in general, and to their country in particular, some of them would still be ready to offer their own lives for preservation of their nation: or how, by this, would God consult either the honour of his government, or secure the reverence and observation of his laws, by thus requiring only one criminal to suffer less than he himself deserved, to make atonement for the continual violations of his sacred laws by a whole nation, or even the whole race of men?

[13] Ver. 18. Οὐκ ἔτι προσφορὰ, &c. No more offering for sin.] From these and many other passages of this Epistle, the sacrifice of the mass, declared by the Trent council, sess. xxii. can. 2, 3. to be a true and proper propitiatory sacrifice for sin, is utterly overthrown. For, 1. from these words of the apostle, It was not needful that he should offer himself often, for then must he have often suffered, ix. 24—26. it is very evident, that Christ cannot offer himself but he must suffer: since then they dare not say that Christ suffers in the mass, neither can they say that Christ offers himself there. 2. From those words, Without shedding of blood there is no remission, ix. 22. it follows, either that the sacrifice of the mass must be a bloody sacrifice, and so Christ's blood must be as often shed as he is offered in the mass, or else that it obtaineth no remission of sin. 3. This follows from these words, By one oblation he hath perfected, (i. e. hath perfectly and fully expiated, and that) for ever, them that are sanctified; for what necessity of, what virtue can there be in, doing that again, which is perfectly and fully done already, and that for ever? And, lastly, where remission of sins is so obtained by Christ's own oblation, that God will remember them no more, there is, saith the apostle, no more need of offering for sin; but by the blood of Christ, the blood of the new testament, such remission is obtained, saith the same apostle, ix. 15. 17. Ergo, &c.

[14] Ver. 20. Ὁδὸν πρόσφατον, A new way.] The way into the highest heaven being before ἄβατος, impassable, saith Josephus; (see note on ix. 8.) there being no entrance for us into that place, till our forerunner had entered into it, vii. 20. till he had purified and prepared it for us by his better sacrifice, ix. 23. John xiv. 2. This was the doctrine of all the primitive Christians, that Christ, by his death, opened this veil for the just that were, from Adam, * ἀποκεκλεισμένοι, excluded from those blissful regions: † that διέσχισε φραγμὸν τὸν ἐξ αἰῶνος μὴ σχισθέντα, he rent open the enclosure which from the beginning had not been laid open. Hence Tertullian* saith, the patriarchs were "Dominicæ resurrectionis appendices," the appendants of our Lord's resurrection; and therefore, as καὶ ἔχοντες is here to be repeated from ver. 19. so the preposition διὰ, through, seems here not to denote the means, or the condition of entrance into the holy of holies, but rather the term to be passed through; as if he should have said, We have a new way of entrance through the veil, now rent; which, before it was so, hindered our entrance into that place; that is, through the flesh or body of Christ broken upon the cross, and so letting out that blood which procures that entrance, as the blood the high-priest carried with him procured his entrance, ix. 7.

[15] Καὶ ζῶσαν, And living way:] That is, ζωοποιοῦσαν, leading to and giving life, saith Grotius. He dying for us, that we might live through him, 1 John iv. 9. Thus the bread of life, John vi. and the word of life, Acts v. 20. Phil. ii. 16. is the bread and word giving life, in opposition to the dead shadows of the law, saith Dr. Hammond, or the sacrifices prescribed by it, all whose virtue was in their death; we being reconciled by the death of Christ, but saved by his life; (Rom. v. 10.) our access to these mansions being obtained by this forerunner, made higher than the heavens, (vii. 26.) made a priest there, after the power of an endless life, (ver. 16.) and therefore able to save us to the uttermost, because he lives for ever, there to make intercession for us, (ver. 25.)

[16] Ver. 21. A high-priest.] i. e. A high-priest so merciful, and able to help us when tempted, and so faithful in the performance of his office, (ii. 14.)

[17] Ver. 22. Ἐῤῥαντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας, &c. Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, &c.] Here is a manifest allusion to the things requisite to procure to a defiled Jew admittance to God's sacred presence in the temple or the tabernacle. The Jewish maxim saith, that the very root and essence of the sacrifice was sprinkling of blood; and therefore, on the great day of expiation, the bullock for the sin-offering, and the goat for the sin-offering, which was brought in to make atonement in the holy place for the people, was sprinkled before the mercy-seat seven times, (Lev. xvi. 14, 15. 27.) and so they were made clean from all their sins before the Lord, (ver. 30.) and admitted again into the tabernacle of the congregation, from which they were excluded till this sprinkling was performed, (ver. 17.) Again, when the Israelites were in a great fear, that by coming near the tabernacle they should be consumed, saying, Behold, we die, we perish: whosoever cometh any thing near unto the tabernacle of the Lord, shall die; (Numb. xvii. 12, 13.) God appoints the water made of the ashes of the red heifer, to cleanse them from those legal impurities, which rendered them unfit to come into his tabernacle, and made it dangerous for them to approach unto it, styling it on that account a purification from sin; (ver. 9.) and this water was to be sprinkled on the unclean, and he was to wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and being thus purified, might come into the sanctuary: (ver. 19, 20.) this sprinkling of the blood and water, sanctifying to the purifying of the flesh. (Heb. ix. 13.) Let us therefore, saith the apostle, who have (not our flesh only, but) our consciences purified from the guilt of sin, by the sprinkling (not of the blood of bulls and goats, but) of the blood of Christ, and have our high-priest still presenting this blood before the mercy-seat, and who have our bodies washed with the pure water of baptism, the laver of regeneration (as the clothes and bodies of the unclean were with fountain-water), draw near to God with greater freedom than they could.

[18] Ver. 25. Ἡμέραν, The day approaching.] i. e. The day of the Lord's coming to destroy the unbelieving Jews, and to execute his vengeance on them, for rejecting and crucifying their Messiah, styled by St. Luke, 'the days of vengeance, xxi. 22. ἡμέρα τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτοῦ, the day of the Lord's coming, which who can bear? saith the prophet, Mal. iii. 2. ἡμέρα καιομένη ὡς κλίβανος, the day burning like an oven; ἡμέρα ἡ ἐρχομένη, the day coming that shall so burn up them that do wickedly, as not to leave them root or branch; ἡμέρα Κυρίου ἐγγίζουσα, the day of the Lord drawing near, when all the inhabitants of the land shall tremble, Joel ii. 1. μεγάλη ἡ ἡμέρα Κυρίου καὶ ἐπιφανὴς, the great and terrible day of the Lord, ver. 11. 31. ἡμέρα αὐτοῦ, the day of the Son of man. That this is the meaning of the place, will appear from the scope of the apostle, which is to terrify them he writes to, by the consideration of that dreadful day of vengeance threatened to the unbelieving Jews, not only by our Lord, but their own prophets, and now near at hand; as it follows from ver. 26. to 32.

[19] Ver. 26. Ἑκουσίως γὰρ ἡμαρτανόντων ἡμῶν, For if we sin wilfully.] That these words do not concern every sin committed knowingly against the laws of Christ, but only such as do consist in apostatizing from the faith after we have received the knowledge of it, and rejecting him as our prophet and lawgiver, will appear, 1. from the parallel place, vi. 4—6. for they who there cannot be renewed unto repentance, are they who fall away from the faith, after they have been enlightened, &c. which plainly answers to these words here, they who sin wilfully, after they have received the knowledge of the truth; they are there said to crucify afresh the Lord of life, and to put him to an open shame; yea, to fall away after they have tasted of the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghost; which always answers to the trampling under foot the Son of God, and the doing despite to the Spirit of grace. 2. From the instances produced out of the Old Testament: for the argument used, ver. 28. from the comparison of him who despised Moses's law, and therefore was to die without mercy, under the hand of two or three witnesses, Deut. xvii. 6. plainly concerns them only who transgressed God's covenant, by going and serving other gods, ver. 2, 3. And as for those who sinned voluntarily, or with a high hand, under the law, and so were to be cut off, and have no sacrifice allowed to expiate their sin, (Numb. xv. 30, 31.) they were such as blasphemed or reproached the Lord, i. e. revolted from, and would not own him as their governor; they despised the word of the Lord; they made the covenant given in Sinai void, by contemning the authority by which it was enjoined, as the Hebrew signifies, and so they were indeed apostates from God. 3. From the preceding exhortation, ver. 25. not to fall off from the assemblies of Christians; and the following, not to cast away their confidence, ver. 35. not to draw back from the faith, ver. 38. it being better not to have known the way of righteousness, than, having known it, to depart from the holy commandment delivered to them, 2 Pet. ii. 21. and, lastly, from the expressions used, ver. 29. which can agree to none besides apostates from the Christian faith: for, to tread the Son of God under foot, must surely signify the extremest contempt that can be cast upon him; to count the blood of the covenant (by which we are purified) itself, κοινὸν, unclean, and polluting, can be only done by him who looks on Christ, not as the Saviour of the world by it, but as one who deserved to suffer what from the Jews he did: and to do despite to the Spirit of grace, cannot well signify less than that which our Lord styles the sin against the Holy Ghost, which men cannot commit, and in their hearts continue Christians.

[20] Ver. 29. Ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη, By which he was sanctified.] That this refers, not to Christ sanctifying himself, or offering himself as a piacular victim for us, (John xvii. 19.) but to him who counted this blood an unholy thing, seems clear, first, from the constant usage of this phrase in this Epistle, where he that is sanctified is he that is purged from the guilt of sin, ii. 11. and in this very chapter, where it is said, ver. 10. that we are ἡγιασμένοι, sanctified by the oblation of the body [or, the blood] of Christ; and, ver. 14. that by one oblation he hath perfected for ever τοὺς ἁγιαζομένους, them that are sanctified. Secondly, From the phrase, the blood of the [new] covenant; i.e. of that covenant in which God promises to be merciful to our iniquities, and remember our sins no more, viii. 12. x. 17. Thirdly, Because, though Christ is said to sanctify himself, yet is he never said to be sanctified, but only ἁγιάζειν τὸν λαὸν, to sanctify the people by his own blood, xiii. 12. (See the reading justified, Examen Millii.)

[21] Ver. 30. Saith the Lord, λέγει Κύριος.] These words are not to be found in many manuscripts; they are not in the Vulgar, Syriac, or Ethiopic version; not in the original, or in the Septuagint; and therefore seem to have crept in here from Rom. xii. 19. where, instead of οἴδαμεν γὰρ τὸν εἰπόντα, we know him that speaketh, we find, γέγραπται γὰρ, for it is written; which reading Chrysostom here hath, and without these words the sense runs better.

[22] And again:] Not Psal. cxxxv. 14. the words there being taken from Deut. xxxii. 36. but in the same place, or in the following verse. So, ii. 13. I will put my trust in him, Isa. viii. 17. Καὶ πάλιν; and again, ver. 18. Behold, I and the children which God hath given me.

[23] Ver. 34. Τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου, My bonds.] Were this certainly the true reading, it would fairly prove St. Paul the author of this Epistle; but the other reading, Τοῖς δεσμοῖς συνεπαθήσατε, you had compassion of them that were bound, is more likely to be the true reading; for so reads the Alexandrian and two other manuscripts, the Syriac, the Vulgar Latin, and St. Chrysostom.

Γινώσκοντες ἔχειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς κρείττονα ὕπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς, καὶ μένουσαν.] Note that Origen, in his book De Martyrio, omits the words ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, that Clemens of Alexandria* reads ἐπ' ἑαυτοὺς, that some read instead of it ὑμᾶς, and that all the ancient versions follow this reading. Note also, that all the Greek fathers read ἐν οὐρανοῖς, which two various readings make the Greek run clear and smooth. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

[24] Ver. 36. Τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, The promise.] That is primarily the recompence of reward, mentioned ver. 35. So, xi. 39. ἐπαγγελία, the promise, is the same with the recompence of reward, ver. 26. the things not seen, but hoped for, which are the objects of our faith, ver. 1. But then this Epistle being directed to the believing Jews, who had both from their prophets and from our Lord a promise, that in the great terrible day of the Lord, whosoever should call upon the name of the Lord should be saved, Joel ii. 32. and that the εὐαγγελιζόμενοι οὓς Κύριος προσκέκληται, i. e. they, whom the Lord hath called by his gospel, should be delivered, ibid. that when the day was to come that burned like an oven, then was the Sun of righteousness to rise on them that feared him, with healing on his wings, Mal. iv. 1, 2. that he who endured to the end shall be saved, Matt. xxiv. 13. and to whom it was said, Hab. ii. 3, 4. The vision is, עוד למועד, yet for a time then, now for a very little time, ὑπόμεινον αὐτὸν, with patience wait for him [the Messiah, say the Jews], for he that cometh will come, and will not tarry: wait for him, say the Jews,* לקבל שכר, to receive your reward. Christ also having taught them by a parable, that God would come, ἐν τάχει, speedily to avenge his elect who cried unto him, under persecutions, day and night, (Luke xviii.) I believe, that the receiving this promise verified to them, which tended so exceedingly to confirm their faith, might be here intended, especially if we consider, that the apostle could not properly affirm of our Lord's coming to judgment, that it was μίκρον ὅσον ὅσον, a very very little while, and he would come, and would not tarry.

[25] Ver. 37. Ὁ ἐρχόμενος.] This is the peculiar title given to the Messiah by the Jews, as we learn from the Baptist's question to him, Σὺ εἶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος; Art thou he that should come, or look we for another? (Matt. xi. 3.) and from the hosannas of the Jews, sung to him in these words, Blessed be, ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that cometh in the name of the Lord. (Matt. xxi. 9.) And the Jews do not only interpret this passage of him, but also encourage themselves to wait for him, by this very argument of the apostle, לב קלשכר, that they may receive their reward; for blessed (say they †) are all that hope in him. (Isa. xxx. 18.)

[26] Ver. 38. Ὑποστείληται, If any man draw back.] The reverend Dr. Hammond hath shewed from Phavorinus, and from Acts xx. 20, 21. Gal. ii. 12. that this word signifies to draw back, refuse, and fly from a thing; and so the object of it being here faith, must signify, his flying from, and drawing back from the faith, or refusing still to profess it; and, as it follows, must be his drawing back unto perdition; and because this is done usually from fear of persecution, hence it is joined with fear, Gal. ii. 12. Peter ὑπέστελλεν ἑαυτὸν, withdrew himself, fearing the circumcision; and sometimes is put to signify fear: so, Deut. i. 17. μὴ ὑποστείλῃ πρόσωπον ἀνθρώπου, you shall not be afraid of the face of man; and because men's cowardly fears make them to hide, dissemble, and play the hypocrite, hence it is reckoned by Julius Pollux,‡ among the words which signify to conceal and hide; and by Hesychius and Suidas is rendered, ὑποκρίνεται, δολιεύεται, he plays the hypocrite, and deals deceitfully; all which, in things which do respect our God and our religion, are pernicious to the soul; especially if we consider, that he that draws back stands opposed, ver. 39. to him that believeth, and therefore is an un- believer; and, ver. 38. to him that liveth by his faith, and therefore can have none, or only a dead faith: and, lastly, that God here solemnly declares, his soul shall have no pleasure in him, and then he must still lie under his sad displeasure.

Note, secondly, that ἐὰν δὲ ὑποστείληται refers plainly to the just man, the man who lives by his faith; and in the prophet, to him that is with faith and patience to wait for the accomplishment of the vision; and, ver. 39. the ὑποστειλάμενος, the drawer back stands opposed to him that believeth to the salvation of the soul. The words do therefore plainly suppose, that the just man who liveth by that faith, in which, if he persisted, he would save his soul, may draw back unto perdition. And this is also evident from the ensuing words, My soul shall take no pleasure in him, for they do plainly intimate, that God took pleasure in him before his drawing back; for otherwise this threat would signify nothing, the Lord taking pleasure in no man but in just men only, and such as live by faith.

Note, thirdly, that ἐὰν δὲ may be rendered not hypothetically, and if, but "cum vero semet subtraxerit," but when he shall draw back; which I have shewn to be the common import of the Greek ἐὰν, note iii. 15. But if we read them hypothetically, the supposition cannot be of a thing impossible; for then God must be supposed to speak thus, If the just man do that which I know is impossible for him to do, and which I am obliged by promise to preserve him from doing, my soul shall have no pleasure in him; which is to make God seriously to threaten men for such a sin, of which they are not capable, and of which they are engaged to believe they are not capable, if they believe the doctrine of perseverance, and so to threaten them to none effect.

CHAP. XI.

1. NOW (the) faith (by which the just man lives, x. 38.) is the [1] substance (or, the firm expectation) of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen (i. e. by which we are confirmed in the truth of them).

2. For by it the elders (i. e. the fathers before and since the flood) obtained a good report (or, testimony from God, left on record in the holy Scriptures).

3. Through (that) faith (which is the evidence of things not seen) we understand that the worlds (the lower, middle, and superior worlds, see note on i. 2.) were framed [2] by the word of God; so that (the) things (of them) which are seen were not made of things which do (did then) appear, (but, ἐκ τῶν ἀοράτων, of things not then visible, Gen. i. 2.)

4. By faith Abel offered to God [3] a more excellent sacrifice than (that of) Cain, by which (faith) he obtained witness (i. e. a testimony from God) that he was righteous (or, accepted by him), [4] God testifying (his acceptance) of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh (i. e. declareth by his faith, that God is a rewarder of the righteous, though they die).

5. By (virtue of this) faith (that God would reward those that serve him, though in this world he might not do it,) Enoch was translated that he should not see death: and [5] was not found (on earth), because God had translated him (from it): for before his translation he had this testimony (from God, Gen. v. 22. 24.) that he pleased God.

6. [6] But without (this) faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God (in a way of duty) must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek (to please) him. (To believe that he is, relates to that faith which is the evidence of things not seen; for God is invisible: to believe that he is a rewarder to that faith which is the expectation of things hoped for.)

7. By faith Noah being warned by God of things not seen as yet (i. e. of a future deluge), moved with fear (of what God threatened), prepared an ark to the saving of his house (from that deluge); by the which he condemned the (old) world (which would not believe his prediction of this deluge), and became [7] heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

8. By faith (in God's promise) Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went, (no, not so much as what the land of promise was; God's first command unto him being only this, Get thee into a land which I shall shew thee, Gen. xii. 1.)

9. By faith (Gen. xii. 7. 13. 15.) he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise, (it being renewed to Isaac, Gen. xxvi. 3. and to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 13.)

10. [8] For (God having said unto him, I am thy shield, and thy reward shall be exceeding great, Gen. xv. 1.) he looked for a city which hath foundations (a heavenly one, ver. 16. which cannot be shaken, Heb. xii. 28.) whose builder and maker is God, (it being not a building made with hands, as those on earth, but eternal in the heavens, 2 Cor. v. 1. Heb. ix. 11.)

11. By faith also Sarah herself (who at first believed not, Gen. xviii. 12. after that the Lord had renewed the promise to her, saying, At the time appointed I will return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son, ver. 14.) received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past (the ordinary) age (of bearing children), because she judged him faithful who had promised.

12. Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead (his body being dead, and the womb of Sarah dead, as to the procreation of children, Rom. iv. 19.) so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea-shore innumerable, (according to God's promise, Gen. xv. 5. xxii. 17.)

13. These all (forementioned that died, or all these patriarchs) died in faith, not having received the [9] promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them (as certain), and confessed that they (themselves) were (only) strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

14. (I say, they died in faith, or in firm expectation, not only of these temporal, but of spiritual and heavenly promises:) for they that say such things (viz. that they, even in the land of promise, are pilgrims and strangers,) declare plainly that they seek a country (where they may rest and dwell, when this their pilgrimage on earth is ended).

15. And truly if they had been (only) mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned (to it, i. e. from Canaan and Egypt, to Ur of the Chaldeans).

16. But now (by this professing themselves strangers and pilgrims upon earth, they declared that) they [10] desire a better country, that is (not one on earth, where they profess they are but strangers, but) a heavenly: wherefore (the) [11] God (of heaven) is not ashamed to be called their God (and to own them as their sons and children); for he prepared for them a (heavenly) city.

17. By faith (in God's power, ver. 19.) Abraham, when he was tried, [12] offered up Isaac, (laying him upon the wood, which was upon the altar, Gen. xxii. 9.) and he that had received the promises (of a numerous seed to issue from him) offered up his only-begotten son,

18. (Even him) of whom it was said (by God), That in Isaac shall thy seed be called:

19. Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure, (i. e. from his own dead body, and the dead womb of Sarah, Rom. iv. 19.)

20. By faith (or, a firm expectation that God would make good his benediction) Isaac [13] blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come, (Gen. xxvii.)

21. By (the like) faith Jacob, when he was dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph; [14] and worshipped (God, leaning) upon the top of his staff (by which he was supported from falling).

22. By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel (out of Egypt, saying, God will surely visit you, and bring you out of this land, Gen. l. 24.) and gave commandment concerning his bones (that they should be carried with them when they returned to Canaan, ver. 25. which was an evidence of his faith in the promise of God).

23. By (the) faith (of his parents, that God would send them a deliverer,) Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was [15] a proper (Gr. comely) child (and therefore hoped he might be that deliverer God had promised); and (therefore) they were not (so) afraid of the king's commandment (as to deliver him up to be slain).

24. [15] By faith (in God's promise of a deliverance out of Egypt,) Moses, when he was come to years (of discretion), refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter;

25. Choosing rather (by his owning himself to be one of them) to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy (in Pharaoh's court) the pleasure of sin for a season;

26. Esteeming the [17] reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the [18] recompence of the reward.

27. By faith he forsook Egypt, [19] not fearing the wrath of the king (when he pursued after him, Exod. xiv. 13.) for he endured, as seeing him (present with them) who is invisible, (and therefore said unto the people, ver. 30. Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of God, Exod. xiv. 14.)

28. Through faith (in God's promise, that upon seeing the blood of the paschal lamb upon the upper door-posts, and the two side-posts of the houses of the Israelites, he would pass over them, when he slew the first-born of the Egyptians, Exod. xii. 13. 23.) he kept the Passover, and (observed) the sprinkling of (the) blood (of it; and this he did) lest he that destroyed the first-born (see note on 1 Cor. x. 10.) should touch them.

29. By faith they passed [20] through the Red Sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned.

30. By faith (in God's promise, Josh. vi. 5.) the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days.

31. [21] By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, (which faith she testified) when she had received the spies with peace.

32. And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me (should I proceed) to tell of Gideon, (who, through faith, overthrew the Midianites, Judg. vii.) and of Barak, (who slew the Canaanites, Judg. iv.) and of Samson (who vexed the Philistines), and of Jephthae (who slew the Ammonites, Judg. xi. and) of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets:

33. Who through faith subdued kingdoms (as Joshua and David did), wrought righteousness (as Abraham, Gen. xv. 6. Phinehas, Psal. cvi. 30. or turned the people from idolatry into the way of righteousness, as Samuel, 1 Sam. xii. Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 39.) obtained promises (as Abraham and David), stopped the mouths of lions (as Daniel),

34. Quenched the violence of fire, (as the three children, Dan. iii. 17.) escaped the edge of the sword, (as David the sword of Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. 46, 47. and of Saul; the Jews, the sword of Haman, Esth. iv. 14. Elijah, the sword of Ahaziah, 2 Kings i. 15.) out of weakness were made strong, (as Gideon with his three hundred men, Judg. vii. 15. Samson, Judg. xvi. 28. Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 12. Jonathan, 1 Sam. xiv. 12. Job and Hezekiah, 2 Kings xix.) waxed valiant in fight (as Joshua, Gideon, David), turned to flight the armies of the aliens (the Maccabees).

35. Women received their dead raised to life again, (the widow of Zarephath, 1 Kings xvii. 20. the Shunammite, 2 Kings iv. 36.) and others were tortured (Eleazer, 2 Macc. vi. 28.) not accepting a deliverance; (ver. 26. 30.) that they might obtain a better resurrection, (2 Macc. vii. 9. 11. 14. 23. 29. 36.)

36. And others had trial of cruel mockings (2 Macc. vii. 7. 10.) and scourgings, (μαστιγούμενοι, Josh. xii. 7. 2 Macc. vi. 30. vii. 1. 37.) yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment (as Joseph, Samson, Jeremiah):

37. They were stoned, (as Zechariah, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21.) they were sawn asunder, (σώματα λυμαινόμενοι. Josh. ibid. Isaiah, by Manasseh; see Buxt. Lex. p. 1360.) [22] were tempted, (or, ἐπυράσθησαν, they were scorched and fried, 2 Macc. vii. 5.) were slain with the sword: (1 Macc. ii. 38.) they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins; )Elijah, 1 Kings xiii. 19. 2 Kings ii. 8. 14.) being destitute, (as Elijah when fed by crows, 1 Kings xvii. 4.) afflicted, tormented; (Gr. evilly entreated, 1 Kings xix. 10.

38. And though they were men) of whom the world was not worthy; (yet) they wandered in deserts, (1 Macc. ii. 29.) and in mountains, (ver. 28.) and in dens and caves of the earth, (2 Macc. vi. 11.)

39. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, (μαρτυρηθέντες, having obtained a testimony from God, or from his Word, that they pleased him through faith; notwithstanding) [23] received not the promise (of a heavenly country, ver. 13. 16. not the recompence of reward, ver. 26. not the better resurrection, ver. 35.)

40. God having provided (Gr. foreseen) [24] some better things for us (and so deferring the completion of that pro- mise till we also should be made partakers of it), [25] that (so) they without us should not be made perfect.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 1. Ὑπόστασις τῶν ἐλπιζομένων.] The word ὑπόστασις, in the Old Testament answers either to the Hebrew תקוה, which signifies expectation, as Ruth i. 12. Ἔστι μοι ὑπόστασις; Have I any expectation of a husband? Ezek. xix. 5. ἀπώλετο ὑπόστασις αὐτῆς, her expectation was lost: or to the word תוחלת, which is of the same import, as Psal. xxxix. 7. Ἡ ὑπόστασίς μου παρὰ σοί ἐστι, My expectation is from thee, Psal. lxxxix. 47. It also bears the same sense in the New Testament, signifying there a confidence of expectation, as 2 Cor. ix. 4. Lest we should be ashamed, ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ τῆς καυχήσεως, in this confidence of boasting: and, xi. 17. That which I speak, I speak not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ τῆς καυχήσεως, in this confidence of boasting: and in this Epistle, iii. 14. We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold, τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς ὑποστάσεως, the beginning of our confidence firm to the end. And this import of the word accords best with the instances of this faith that follow, they being such as generally consisted in the expectation of some future good, which, saith the apostle, they have not yet received completely, ver. 39. Hence it is that I render the words thus, Faith is the confidence, or firm expectation, of things hoped for.

[2] Ver. 3. Ῥήματι Θεοῦ, By the word of God.] That is, as the comparing this with i. 3. shews, by the word of the Divine Λόγος. So Philo, speaking of the framing of the heaven and earth, saith, Τῷ γὰρ περιφανεστάτῳ καὶ τηλαυγεστάτῳ ἑαυτοῦ λόγῳ ῥήματι ὁ Θεὸς ἀμφότερα ποιεῖ, God hath made them both by his illustrious and splendid Logos, with a word. (Leg. Alleg. lib. i. p. 33. G.) And of Moses he saith, That dying, he did not, ἐκλείπειν, cease to be, nor was he gathered to the most, as others, ἀλλὰ διὰ ῥήματος τοῦ αἰτίου μετανίσταται, δι' οὗ καὶ ὁ σύμπας κόσμος ἐδημιουργεῖτο, but he was translated by the word, or command, of that Cause by which the whole world was made. (L. de Sacrif. Abel et Cain. p. 102. C.) Now, whether this ῥῆμα be the word of the Father speaking to the Son or Logos, or the word of the Λόγος, saying, Let them be made, and they were made, it is hence evident that this Logos must be a person, and not an attribute. (See the note on Heb. i. 3.)

[3] Ver. 4. Πλείονα θυσίαν, A more excellent sacrifice.] Philo, in his discourse on this subject, De Sacr. Cain et Abel, p. 107. makes the defect of Cain's sacrifice to consist in two things; first, that he did not offer it soon enough, but μεθ' ἡμέρας, after certain days: secondly, that he did not offer the first-fruits of the earth, as did Abel of the first-fruits of his sheep, but only of the fruits; but there is no ground for either of these things in the text, which seems to intimate, that they both offered at the same time; nor doth it say that Cain offered not of the first-fruits of the earth. The apostle here plainly discovers, that the thing which gave the preference to Abel's sacrifice above that of Cain's was his faith, viz. that faith which is the substance of things hoped for, or his expectation, or persuasion, that God would certainly reward those who diligently endeavour to please him in this or in the other world. Accordingly the Targum of Jerusalem, and Jonathan B. Uziel, upon the place, declare, That Cain denied that there would be any future judgment or reward hereafter to the just, and that Abel did maintain the contrary, that there should be a future recompence for the righteous: and this he, being dead, yet preaches by his faith; for this faith, which God so signally approved of, and confirmed with so great a testimony, he will not suffer to go unrewarded, as he must do in one so quickly slain, because God thus preferred his sacrifice before his brother's, if he did not reward him in the other world. And therefore Philo says, that seeming to die, as to this corruptible life, ζῇ τὴν ἄφθαρτον, καὶ τὴν ἐπὶ Θεῷ ζωὴν εὐδαίμονα, he lived the incorruptible and blessed life in God. (L. quod Deter. &c. p. 127. C. D.) To say, as do the fathers, He yet speaketh, because he is still celebrated in the world, is to say nothing proper to Abel, that being also true of all the other patriarchs; and to refer this to the cry of his blood for vengeance, is to refer to that which seemeth not to be the commendation of his faith, by which the apostle here declares he speaketh.

[4] Μαρτυροῦντος, God testified upon his gifts.] That is, saith Theodotion, ἐνέπρησε, he caused fire to descend from heaven, and consume his sacrifice, and thereby testified his acceptance of it: so he discovered his acceptance of the sacrifice of Abraham, Gen. xv. 17. and of the sacrifices of Aaron, Lev. ix. 24. of Gideon, Judg. vi. 21. of David, 1 Chron. xxi. 26. of Solomon, 2 Chron. vii. 1. and of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 38. And accordingly the prayer of the Israelites for their king runs thus, The Lord remember all thy offerings, and turn to ashes thy burnt-sacrifice, Psal. xx. 3. To this agrees the interpretation of R. Solomon and Aben Ezra, among the Jews; of Œcumenius and Theophylact on the place: and St. Jerome * confirms it by this inquiry, Whence could Cain know that God accepted the sacrifice of Abel, and rejected his, if the interpretation of Theodotion was not true?

[5] Ver. 5. Οὐχ εὑρίσκετο, &c. Was not found on earth, because God had translated him.] God killed him not, saith Onkelos: and this we may sufficiently learn from the story, Gen. v. for of all the rest mentioned in that chapter, it is said they died; but of him this is not said, but only that he was not, because God took him, ὅτι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς, because God translated him, saith the Septuagint, the book of Wisdom, and the son of Sirach. (Wisd. iv. 10. Ecclus. xiv. 44.) Moreover, it is said of Noah and of Abraham, that they walked with God, Gen. vi. 9. xvii. 1. but it is not said that they were not, because God took them; this phrase must therefore import something which happened not to them: many of the Hebrew doctors say, that he was taken into heaven, or into paradise; He was taken into heaven by the Word of the Lord, saith the Targum of Jonathan; He was translated into paradise, say the Arabic and Ethiopic versions; God shewed him the tree of life, say R. Menechem and Zoar, in 2 Kings ii. 1. He translated him into paradise, say Kimchi and Menasseh ben Israel.† Hence Munster on the place speaks thus, "Asserunt nostri hunc Enoch cum corpore et anima translatum esse in paradisum." To be translated, saith Philo, ‡ is μετοικίαν στείλασθαι τὴν ἀπὸ θνητοῦ βίου πρὸς τὸν ἀθάνατον, to go from this mortal to an immortal life. The same was the opinion of the ancient fathers, of Irenæus, § and of Pseudo-Justin, ‖ who saith, that they who rose with Christ are with Enoch and Elias, ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, in paradise. See others cited for this opinion by Feuardentius upon Irenæus. Note, lastly, that this translation into paradise was the fruit of his faith, that faith which was the expectation of things hoped for, and that God would reward his diligence in seeking him: for since he by this faith obtained this testimony, that he pleased God, God could not take him hence in displeasure, but out of favour to him.

[6] Ver. 6.] In this sixth verse we have the heathen's creed, that God is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him; without which the apostle declares, 1. That it was impossible for them to please God, and so God must either have laid upon them no obligations to please him, or required what he knew to be impossible, or given them sufficient means to know this. 2. That they could have no sufficient motives to serve him, or to come unto him in expectation of his blessing upon them that did so, and therefore the heathens embraced this as a principle of natural religion, That God could not suffer it to go ill with good men, either in life or death, but would be sure to take care of and provide good things for them. Thus Socrates * requests his judges to receive this as a certain truth, that a good man, living or dying, can be subject to no evil, because the gods never neglect his affairs; and this is recommended by Cicero,† and by Jamblichus,‡ as the great principle which philosophy suggests as an encouragement to virtue; that "if we believe that nothing is concealed from God, we must believe that which happens to the friend of God, happens for the best; and that what seeming evils happen to him, will do him good, in this or in the other life. For he can never be neglected by the gods, who is desirous to be a virtuous and good man, and as like to God as he is able; but περὶ τοῦ ἀδίκου τἀναντία τούτων δεῖ διανοεῖσθαι, of the wicked and unjust man we are to believe just the contrary." And this again Jamblichus § delivers us as a great principle of philosophy, that "if we believe there is a God, who is Lord of all things, we must own that whatsoever is good and honest must be asked of him, for all men give good things to them they love and rejoice in, and the contrary to them to whom they are disaffected, and therefore much more will the gods do so." Another principle, also founded in the nature of man, and laid down by them as the foundation of all religion, was this, That if piety were not advantageous to them, no man would embrace it, it being natural to all men to pursue their advantage, and to decline the contrary. So Arrian, ‖ upon Epictetus, lays down this for an axiom, that "if piety and profit did not go together, piety would be preserved in none; the reason is, because nothing is so natural to us as to affect and pursue our own advantage: so that if you place what is holy and just in that which profits, you preserve them; but if you separate what is honest from what is advantageous, you destroy what is just and honest, as being weighed down by profit." ¶ Simplicius adds,* "That where is profit, there we place our piety;" and thence infers, that "we cannot love, honour, and worship the Deity, whatsoever reasons may be alleged for so doing, if we conceive him hurtful, and not profitable to us, because every living creature flies what is hurtful, and the causes of it, and affects and follows what is profitable:" and this they learned from their master Epictetus,† who lays the foundation of all religion upon this principle, "That where profit is, there is piety:" and he, perhaps, from Plato, who lays it down for an axiom, that τὸ μὲν ὠφέλιμον καλὸν, τὸ δὲ βλαβερὸν αἰσχρὸν, what was good was profitable, what evil hurtful.

[7] Ver. 7. Κληρονόμος, &c. Heir of the righteousness.] i. e. Of the happiness promised to them who are justified by faith, or to persons who by faith had an hereditary right to it, viz. not only to the temporal salvation the ark afforded, but to that spiritual and celestial which the ark typified: (1 Pet. iii. 21.) For being justified through faith, we are made heirs through hope of eternal life, Tit. iii. 7. Heirs of salvation, Heb. i. 14. Heirs of the kingdom, James ii. 5. (See note on Gal. iii. 29. and on Heb. i. 14.)

[8] Ver. 10. Thy exceeding great reward.] Thus the Jerusalem Targum, and that of Jonathan, interpret this phrase, Fear not, the reward of thy work shall be great in the world to come.—So ought we (saith Theophylact) to look to things above, and make no great account of those on earth.

Ver. 12. Καὶ ταῦτα.] Some manuscripts read τοῦτον, but all the Greek scholiasts read καὶ ταῦτα, being, according to the custom of the Greek language, used by way of amplification, and signifying idque, is well rendered by our translation, and that.

[9] Ver. 13. Τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, The promises.] Here note, that these words καὶ πεισθέντες, and were persuaded, are neither to be found in the ancient version, nor the Greek commentators. 2. That the promises here mentioned, as not received by these patriarchs, cannot be temporal promises: for οὗτοι πάντες, all these, as it cannot be referred to the whole Jewish offspring, since many of them, as the apostle has observed, iii. 18, 19. iv. 2. 6. 11. died in unbelief; so neither to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob only: for 1. they are not all that died in faith; and, 2. the same is said of all in general, ver. 39. οὗτοι πάντες, these all died in faith, not having received the promise. Now we find no temporal promise made to Abel and to Enoch; and that temporal promise which God made to Noah, he fulfilled. 2. The text saith, They embraced them, confessing they were strangers and pilgrims upon earth; whence the apostle makes this inference, that they sought another country, that is, a heavenly; which makes it necessary to conceive, that the promises here mentioned, as not received, were, as Œcumenius saith, τὰ οὐράνια, heavenly promises, τὰ περὶ τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν, καὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως, the promise of the kingdom of heaven and the resurrection, saith Theophylact. Thus Philo ‡ saith, Οἱ κατὰ Μωυσὴν σοφοὶ πάντες εἰσάγονται παροικοῦντες, All the wise men are introduced by Moses as

So did Abraham, saying, I am a stranger and a sojourner with you, Gen. xxiii. 4. And Jacob, calling the time he lived here, the years of his pilgrimage, Gen. xlvii. 9. So David, saying, I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were, Psal. xxxix. 13. The same he speaks of the whole Jewish nation, saying, 1 Chron. xxix. 15. We are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers. And this he learned out of the law, where God speaks thus to them, Lev. xxv. 23. The land is mine, for ye are strangers and sojourners with me, ἐναντίον μου, saith the Septuagint. Accordingly, the philosophers taught, that to die was to go into our country, πρὸς τὴν πατρίδα τὴν ἀληθινὴν ὅθεν ἥλθομεν, to the true country whence we came. (Simpl. in Epict. p. 77.)

[10] Ver. 16. Κρείττονος ὀρέγονται, They desire a better country.] The ancient Jews declare, that "the earthly Canaan was a type of the spiritual Canaan, and the promise of living in it for ever, was a parable representing their future happiness in the world to come." It is written,* "All Israelites have their portion in the world to come, as it is said, And thy people shall be all just, they shall inherit the land for ever," Isa. lx. 21. "This land (saith Maimonides†) is a parable, as if he should say, the land of the living; and that is the world to come." And R. Menachen on Gen. xii. refers it to "the land which is above, watered with waters which are above." If they received this parabolical interpretation from the patriarchs, here is the reason of their faith, and expectation of this better country. Vain here is the interpretation of Mr. Le Clerc, both upon the tenth and sixteenth verses; for, 1. a city which has foundations is, saith he, Jerusalem; whereas in Abraham's time, there was no such city that he could expect; nor was that a city which could not be shaken, Heb. xii. 28. it having been long since destroyed; nor was it a city whose builder and maker was God, but man. Again, he expected a better country, that is, a heavenly, i. e. the land of Canaan, which was an antitype of heaven: so Mr. Le Clerc, in flat contradiction to the apostle, saying, the country they expected was not that from whence they came out, ver. 14, 15. i. e. was not Canaan, but a heavenly country; and he adds, God had provided for them a city, not Jerusalem, sure, but a heavenly city.

[11] Οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται, God is not ashamed to be called their God.] i. e. The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. To be their God and their Father is the same thing. Thus, Jer. xxxi. 1. I will be the God of all the families of Israel, ver. 9. is thus varied, I am a Father to Israel. I will be their God, and they shall be my people, 2 Cor. vi. 16. is ver. 18. I will be a Father to you, and you shall be my sons and my daughters. To be sons of God, is to be heirs of God, Rom. viii. 17. to be sons of the resurrection, Luke xx. 36. to inherit all things, Apoc. xx. 7. And the υἱοθεσία, or adoption promised by God, is the redemption of the body from corruption: (see note on Matt. xxii. 31, 32. and on Rom. xviii. 17. 23.) and this is the reason why God, taking upon himself the title of their God and Father, answers this title, by preparing for them a city.

[12] Ver. 17. Προσενήνοχεν, &c. He offered up Isaac.] So speaks the New Testament twice, here and James ii. 21. So the Jews constantly; Philo* informs us, that though the fact was not perfected, yet it was preserved in the minds of the readers, and mentioned in the sacred volumes as a thing entirely and absolutely done. And to this day they pray, †That God would be gracious to them for the merit of the sacrifice of Isaac, according to the prayer which both the Targum of Jerusalem and Jonathan mention on Gen. xxii. 14. as made by Abraham; to this effect, viz. I beseech thee, O God, by thy mercies, that when the sons of Isaac shall offer to thee in the time of their necessity, thou wilt be mindful of this binding of Isaac. Hence have they framed this story, ‡That when the knife touched the throat of Isaac, his soul departed, and that when God said, Lay not thy hand upon the lad, it returned, and so he being dead, revived. And truly Abraham, having done all that belonged to him to do towards this offering his son, and being fully resolved to have gone through the work, had not God's call restrained him, may well be said, in the Divine construction, to have actually done it; and to this some refer Abraham's receiving Isaac from the dead in a figure, he being thus snatched from the jaws of death, and restored to him when he expected nothing but his death.

[13] Ver. 20. Εὐλόγησεν τὸν Ἰακὼβ, He blessed Jacob.] It may be inquired how he could bless Jacob by faith, when he knew not that it was Jacob? To this I answer, that to the blessing him by faith, it was not necessary he should know him to be the person he intended thus to bless, but only that he should feel the Divine afflatus, or the spirit of prophecy upon him when he blessed him; that being sufficient to confirm him, that his benediction should be established by that God before whom he blessed him, and who guided his lips and his heart in it: and though we have translated it as a prayer, it mostly runs in the future tense, and may wholly be translated as a prophecy, and so it must be uttered in faith. And whereas it is objected farther, that Isaac thought he was blessing Esau; now so to bless him as to make him lord over his brother, (ver. 29.) could not be spoken in faith, because the oracle had before declared to Rebekah, that the elder should serve the younger: I answer, first, that this rather is an argument against the truth of his benediction, than the faith of it; it rather proves that Isaac should not thus have blessed Esau, than that he believed not what he said: but indeed it proves neither, for Isaac might feel such a strong afflatus upon him, as might convince him that his benediction was derived from the gift of prophecy, and so would certainly be accomplished, whomsoever it concerned. Secondly, The learned Bishop of Ely on ver. 4. answers, that either Rebekah had not acquainted Isaac with the oracle, or it seems he did not understand it as Rebekah did.

the assurance he had of being buried in the land of promise, which he desired out of faith in the promise God had made to him, Gen. xxviii. 13.

[15] Ver. 23. Ἀστεῖον, A comely child.] He was, saith St. Stephen, ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, of a very excellent beauty, Acts vii. 20. μορφῇ θείος, of a Divine form, saith Josephus;* of an angelical form, say the Jews.† He was, saith Justin, one, quem formæ pulchritudo commendabat, renowned for his beauty. Josephus also adds,‡ that an Egyptian scribe, to whose predictions they gave great credit, had foretold one should be born of Israel, who, if he came to age, should grievously afflict the Egyptians, and bring out the Israelites from among them; and that God had by a vision declared to Amram, that this child, to be born to him, should deliver the Israelites out of Egypt; which, if true, gives a farther ground of their faith.

[16] Ver. 24.] Josephus informs us, that when Pharaoh had put the crown upon his head, adopting him as the son of his daughter, to be his successor, he let the crown fall to the ground, and stamped upon it with his feet. But the words μέγας γενόμενος being the very words used Exod. ii. 11. where it is said, It came to pass, that when Moses was grown, he went out unto his brethren; the apostle doubtless had relation to them, and interpreted his going out unto them, to be his owning himself to be one of them: It came into his heart, saith Stephen, to visit his brethren; (Acts vii. 23.) i. e. to join himself to the afflicted Jews.

[17] Ver. 26. Τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν, The reproach of Christ.] The seed of Abraham, even before they went down to Egypt, are styled the Christs of God, Psal. cv. 15. μὴ ἅψησθε τῶν χριστῶν μου, touch not my Christs. And the prophet Habakkuk, speaking of God's judgments upon Pharaoh, and God's deliverance of them from him, saith, ἐξῆλθες εἰς σωτηρίαν λαοῦ σου τοῦ σῶσαι τὸν Χριστόν σου, Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, to preserve thy Christ: (Hab. iii. 13.) so that the reproach of Christ, may be the reproach of the people of God, (ver. 15.) Moreover, the reproach, which he and they suffered, was for their faith in the promised seed, and that was Christ; (Gal. iii. 16.) on which account it might be truly styled the reproach of Christ, as the afflictions of the apostle are styled the afflictions of Christ, Col. i. 24. and he himself the prisoner of Christ, Eph. iii. 1. as being the reproach he suffered for his faith in the promised seed, which was Christ.

Photius here saith, the reproach of Moses may be called the reproach of Christ, as being such as Christ suffered, οἷος ὁ Χριστὸς ἔπαθε, in which sense we are bid to go forth to him without the camp bearing his reproach, xiii. 13. Betwixt this and the following verse, some Latin copies insert these words, fide magnus factus Moses occidit Egyptium considerans dolorem suorum, which Dr. Mills thinks genuine, though they are neither owned by any of the versions, nor any of the Greek commentators.

[18] Εἰς τὴν μισθαποδοσίαν, The recompence of reward] Here mentioned, could not be temporal, for Moses came not into the land of Canaan, nor could he expect any greater blessing in that kind, than he might have had in Egypt. He therefore must have respect to some spiritual and heavenly recompence.

[19] Ver. 27. Μὴ φοβηθεὶς, Not fearing.] It is expressly said, that Moses, when he fled from the face of Pharaoh, feared, Exod. ii. 14. and it is farther evident from these words of God to him, Go, return into Egypt, for all the men are dead that sought thy life, iv. 19. And therefore they, who refer this to that flight, say, He did not fear his wrath, so as to distrust the providence of God in working a deliverance to his people by his hand; but his unwillingness, when God commanded him, to go back to Egypt, confutes this gloss. Others say, he feared not the wrath of the king, when he said unto him, Take heed to thyself, see my face no more; for in that day thou seest my face thou shalt die, Exod. x. 28. But then he had not forsook Egypt, and when he went from it, he did so by the command of Pharaoh, Exod. xii. 31. and so needed not to fear him. Against the exposition given in the paraphrase, it is objected, that it agrees not with the order of the words, because the passover mentioned ver. 28. was kept in Egypt. But this objection will be of little force, if we consider, that other things are mentioned in this chapter out of the order in which they were performed: thus, ver. 32. Gideon is mentioned before Barak, and Samson before Jephthah, as also ver. 33—36.

[20] Ver. 29. Through the Red Sea.] That this they truly did, see note on 1 Cor. x. 1.

[21] Ver. 31.] She testified her faith, not only by preserving thus the spies, but by saying to them, I know that the Lord hath given you this land, Josh. ii. 9. and again, The Lord your God he is God in heaven above, and on earth beneath, ver. 11.

[22] Ver. 37. Ἐπειράσθησαν.] That this is not the right reading, may easily be gathered from this one consideration, that after two such great punishments, as stoning and being sawn asunder, it is very improper to introduce their being tempted, which signifies no certain kind of punishment at all, and is included in all the other punishments here mentioned. Some therefore read ἐπυράσθησαν, some ἐπυρώσθησαν, some ἐπρήσθησαν, all signifying they were burnt; which reading agrees well with the story of the Maccabees, where they bring Eleazer and the young men ἐπὶ τὸ πῦρ καταφλέγοντες αὐτοὺς, to the fire, and burnt their flesh: so that Josephus (from cap. 6. to cap. 12.) saith, they were, ὡς ἐπὶ πυρὶ μετασχηματιζόμενοι εἰς ἀφθαρσίαν, as one might say, translated in the fire to incorruption. But yet I prefer the opinion of those who think this was an error arising ἐκ διττογραφίας, from writing the same word twice, or rather that some who knew not what ἐπρίσθησαν meant, writ for it ἐπειράσθησαν, and so in time they came to be both written; because the Syriac hath not ἐπειράσθησαν. Eusebius* cites St. Paul's words thus, ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον. Tertullian† paraphrases them thus, Hieremias lapidatur, Esaias secatur, Zacharias inter altare et ædem trucidatur. Clemens‡ of Alexandria reads thus, ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπειράσθησαν, ἐν φόνῳ, &c. which gives just ground to conjecture, that some ignorant writer put ἐπειράσθησαν for ἐπρίσθησαν. This fault is very visible in the transcriber of Origen;§ for, in his fourth homily of Jeremy, we read in the Greek ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐπειράσθησαν, but in the old translation there is only secti occisione gladii occubue- runt. And in the fifteenth homily,* ἄλλον ἐλιθοβόλησαν, ἄλλον ἐπρίσθησαν, ἄλλον ἐπέκτειναν, which shews that Origen did not own the word ἐπειράσθησαν. And though we find the word again in his homilies† on St. Matthew, yet whosoever reads the place will find that Origen takes no notice of it, but proceeds immediately from ἐπρίσθησαν to ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον, saying, the word ἐπρίσθησαν refers to Isaias, and the words ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον to Zacharias. In the fourth dialogue against Marcion, p. 125. he proves that the prophets were not phantoms, but men consisting of flesh and blood, because ὁ μὲν ἐπρίσθη σαρκὶ, ὁ δὲ ἐλιθάσθη, καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον, one of them was sawn asunder, another was stoned, and the rest were killed by the sword: and in his exhortation to martyrdom, p. 232. he adds, The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews saith, ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον, they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were slain with the sword. From all which places it is evident, that ἐπρίσθησαν was the reading followed by the ancients.

[24] Ver. 39. Οὐκ ἐκομίσαντο τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, (or, as some copies read, τὰς ἐπαγγελίας,) Received not the promises.] These words being the same with those in ver. 13. of this chapter, All these died in faith, μὴ λαβόντες ἐπαγγελίας, not having received the promises, it is reasonable to interpret them to the same sense; viz. of their not having received the heavenly kingdom and blessed resurrection they expected. And so the whole current of this Epistle will force us to interpret them: for it is the promise of entering into rest after we have ceased from our labour here on earth, (iv. 1. 10.) the promise of an eternal inheritance, (ix. 15.) the promise we are to receive after we have patiently done the will of God, (x. 36.)

[25] Ver. 40. Κρεῖττόν τι περὶ ἡμῶν, Some better thing concerning us.] viz. Our hope of entering into the veil, by reason of our forerunner entering in thither first; (vi. 19, 20.) we having a high-priest higher than the heavens, (vii. 26.) set on the throne of Majesty in the heavens, (viii. 1.) who by his death hath procured, that they which are called might receive the promise of an eternal inheritance, (ix. 15.) and who hath, by his entrance into this holy place with his blood, purified and prepared these holy places for us, (ver. 23, 24. the way into which was not opened before, ver. 8.) and given us freedom of entrance into the holiest through the blood of Jesus, by this new way which he hath consecrated through his flesh, (x. 20.) we being therefore come to Mount Sion, the city of the living God, to the heavenly Jerusalem, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, (xii. 22.)

[26] Ἵνα μὴ χωρὶς ἡμῶν τελειωθῶσι, That they without us may not be made perfect.] This all the fathers interpret of their receiving their crowns or their rewards hereafter. Thus of Abel and Noah, St. Chrysostom saith, That they might not be crowned before us, ἕνα ὥρισε πᾶσι τῶν στεφάνων καιρὸν, God hath appointed one time of coronation for them all. Οὐδέπω τῶν στεφάνων ἐπήλαυσαν, They have not yet obtained their crowns, saith Theodoret, God expecting still those that are to combat, that he may proclaim them victors altogether. Origen, having cited this place, saith thus;‡ You see that Abraham yet expects to obtain perfection, yea Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets expect us, that with us they may obtain perfect bliss. Yea, he says the same, not only of all the saints of the New Testament, but even of the blessed apostles, saying,* Even the apostles have not received their joy, but wait that I might be partaker with them; nor do the saints departed obtain the full reward of their good actions. Nor did the primitive fathers mean this only of their bodies, but also of their souls, which they conceived not to be exalted to the highest heavens; saying, that they had not yet received their full reward, yea, that they were not to expect it till the day of judgment. (See note on Tim. iv. 8.) And therefore I cannot but wonder to hear a very learned person in his note on this place saying, It will be acknowledged by all, that then, i. e. at our Saviour's resurrection, the patriarchs received this promise, or that the sufferers here mentioned then received it; especially when the apostle here saith, They were tortured, not accepting a deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection, which surely they have not yet obtained: and I more admire that this should by him be interpreted of deliverance from their persecutors, and rest from persecutions, for is this promise fulfilled to Christians? To them who, if they will live godly, must suffer persecutions? and through many tribulations enter into the kingdom of God? And do they who were thus tortured find this perfection with us? Or had they any other rest or freedom from them, than what death gave them? Surely the exposition of all the ancient fathers is much to be preferred before this new and singular invention; as also before the new doctrine of the Florentine council, That the souls of saints departed do already behold the face of God in heaven.

CHAP. XII.

1. WHEREFORE, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a [1] cloud (i. e. a multitude) of witnesses, let us (who are to run a Christian race) lay aside every weight (of worldly cares and affections), and the [2] sin which doth so easily beset (and circumvent) us (and so hinders our feet from making a due progress in it), and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.

2. [3] Looking unto Jesus, (who, by his prophetic office, was) the author, and (by his regal office, will be the) finisher of our faith; who for the [4] joy that was set before him (as the reward of his sufferings) endured the cross, despising the shame (of it), and (therefore) is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

3. For consider him who (being so excellent a person, and so dear to God, yet) endured (patiently) such contradiction of sinners against himself (such blasphemies against his doctrine, such calumnies against his person, such malicious and unwearied attempts against his life), [5] lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds (under the conflict of afflictions ye endure.

4. For which fainting ye have no such cause as this Captain of salvation, and this cloud of witnesses had; for)

* "Nondum enim receperunt lætitiam suam, ne apostoli quidem, sed et ipsi exspectant ut et ego lætitiæ eorum particeps fiam; neque enim decedentes hinc sancti continuo integra meritorum suorum præmia consequuntur, sed exspectant etiam nos licet morantes." Ibid.

[6] ye have not resisted unto blood (as they did), striving against sin.

5. And (by your proneness to grow weary, and even faint under the combat,) you (seem to) have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh to you as to children (thus), My son, [7] despise not thou (be not slothful and dispirited under) the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: (Prov. iii. 11, 12.)

6. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth (into that relation).

7. If ye (then) endure chastening, [8] God dealeth with you as (a father) with (his) sons; for what son is there whom the father chasteneth not (for his offences)?

8. [9] But if ye be without (such) chastisements, whereof all (sons) are partakers, then are ye (treated as) bastards (whom the reputed parent disregards), and not (as) sons (whom he loves, ver. 6.)

9. Furthermore, (εἰ δὲ, and if) we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and (yet) we gave them reverence (and honour, in expectation of the long life promised to them that do so, Exod. xx. 12.) shall we not much rather be in subjection to the [10] Father of (our) spirits (who gives and who recalls our spirits at pleasure), and (so) live (everlastingly)?

10. For they verily [11] for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure (Gr. as seemed best to them); but he (our heavenly Father, doth it) for our (own) profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness.

11. (Nor let it discourage you that these afflictions seem grievous to the flesh, πᾶσα δὲ,) for no chastening for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous (to it): nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are [12] exercised thereby (i. e. those fruits of righteousness which end in peace).

12. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down (as if wearied with, and giving over, the combat), and (strengthen) the feeble knees (which seem unable to stand firm, and run on this race with patience; see note on ver. 3.)

13. And (so) make (ποιήσατε, ye will make) [13] straight paths for your feet (to walk in), lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed, (Gr. ἵνα μὴ, that that which is lame may not be turned out of the way, but rather may be healed.

14. And in order thereunto) [14] follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord:

15. Looking diligently lest any man [15] fail of the grace (Gr. ὑστερῶν ἀπὸ, fall from the grace) of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled;

16. Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person (among you, such) as (was) Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his [16] birthright.

17. For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing (he had lost), he was rejected (by his father, saying of Jacob, I have blessed him, and he shall be blessed): for he found no place of repentance (no change of the blessing pronounced by his father), [17] though he sought it carefully with tears, (crying with an exceeding great and bitter cry, Gen. xxvii. 34.)

18. For ye (believing Jews) are not come (as your forefathers, when they entered into the old covenant with God,) unto [18] the mount that might be touched (and so you might die, Exod. xix. 12.) and that burned with fire, (Gr. to the burning fire, Deut. v. 23.) nor to the blackness, and darkness, (caused by the cloud, styled νέφελη γνοφώδης, Exod. xix. 16.) and (to the) tempest (of thunder and lightning, Deut. v. 22.)

19. And the sound of a (the) trumpet (exceeding loud, which made the people tremble, Exod. xix. 16.) and the (great) voice of words; which (was so terrible, that) they that heard (it), entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more (lest they died for it, Exod. xx. 19. Deut. v. 25. xviii. 16.)

20. (For they could not endure [19] that which was commanded (that severe cautionary command which runs thus), And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart:

21. And so terrible was the sight, that [20] Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake:)

22. But ye are come (under the gospel-dispensation, to things of a more excellent nature, not apt to terrify and discourage, but create joy and comfort to you; not as then to Mount Sinai, but) [21] to Mount Sion, (whence you expect all your spiritual blessings; not to the terrestrial Jerusalem, which is in bondage with her children, Gal. iv. 25. but) to the city of the living God, [22] the heavenly Jerusalem; (not to thousands of angels attending on God, as at Mount Sinai, Psal. lxviii. 17. but) to an [23] innumerable company of angels (ministering to them who shall be heirs of salvation, Heb. i. 14.

23. And) to the general assembly, and church (not of the Jews, and of the first-born registered amongst them, Numb. i. 16. but) [24] of the first-born, who are written in heaven, [25] and to God (now declared to be) the judge of all, (Acts xvii. 30, 31.) [26] and to the spirits of just men made perfect, (who have run their race, and are to be crowned at the great day, 2 Tim. iv. 8.)

24. And to Jesus the mediator (not of the old covenant, which promised only the land of Canaan, but) of the new covenant, (established in his blood, by which we receive the promise of an eternal inheritance, Heb. ix. 15.) and to the [27] blood of sprinkling, [28] which speaketh better things than that of Abel.

25. [29] See (therefore) that ye [30] refuse not him that speaketh (now by his Son to you). For if they escaped not (God's severe judgments) who refused him that spake on earth (by Moses), much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh (by his Son coming down, and by his Spirit sent down) from heaven. (1 Pet. i. 12.)

26. [31] Whose voice then shook the earth (when the law was given, Exod. xix. 18. Psal. lxviii. 8.) but now (under this dispensation) he hath promised (yet a farther shaking), saying, [32] Yet once more (at the making my new covenant) [33] I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. (Hag. ii. 7, 8.)

27. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.

28. Wherefore we receiving (the promise of) a kingdom that cannot be moved, (or shaken, or give place to another), [34] let us have (or retain that) grace, whereby

(alone) we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear:

29. For our God is (to the disobedient and rebellious among us, as he was to them, Deut. iv. 24. ix. 3.) [35] a consuming fire.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1. ΝΕΦΟΣ, A cloud,] For a multitude, is a phrase used by Homer, who calls a multitude of footmen, νέφος πεζῶν, which Virgil* thus translates, Insequitur nimbus peditum: this cloud of witnesses therefore contains all the worthies mentioned in the former chapter, who by their words and actions have testified how much the objects of their faith were valued before all worldly things, and how equitable it was to endure afflictions, not accepting a deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection.

[2] Τὴν εὐπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν, The sin that easily besets us.] The apostle being here speaking of the Christian's race, this phrase is best interpreted with relation to it, and so it must respect the sin which cleaves to our affections, which are the feet of the soul, like a long garment wrapped about us, and so hinders the running of our Christian race; for it is either our affection to, and our desire of, what we ought not to desire or affect at all, or which we ought not comparatively to affect or desire, which gives the rise and prevalence of all temptations to sin, and renders self-denial so exceeding difficult: he therefore requires us to put off this sin as racers did their garments, running naked, that without hinderance we may run our Christian race.

[3] Ver. 2. Ἀφορῶντες, &c. Looking to Jesus,] As an example of patience under sufferings, fit to be imitated by his disciples, and as one gloriously recompensed in his human nature for the sufferings he sustained in it, and as one who will give to us the same happy repose after our sufferings; he having, as the author of our faith, promised, and being able, as the finisher of our faith, to confer that glorious recompence, (x. 35, 36.)

[4] Ἀντὶ τῆς προκειμένης αὐτῷ χαρᾶς, For the joy set before him.] That ἀντὶ is used for the final cause, appears from these examples in the New Testament; He gave himself a ransom ἀντὶ πολλῶν, for many, Matt. xx. 28. Render not evil, ἀντὶ κακοῦ, for evil, Rom. xii. 17. Her hair was given, ἀντὶ περιβολαίου, for a covering, 1 Cor. xi. 15. ἀντὶ τούτου, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother; and here, ver. 16. ἀντὶ βρώσεως μιᾶς, For one morsel of bread he sold his birthright. (See 1 Thess. v. 15. 1 Pet. iii. 9.) Note also, that the apostle goes on in his agonistical terms, and having spoken, ver. 1. of the προκείμενος ἡμῖν ἀγὼν, the race before us to run, he here speaks in the same language, of the joy set before our Saviour in his race; that is, of the βραβεῖον, the prize or crown placed in his view for his encouragement to run to it; it being the custom in those games† to hang the crown at the end of the goal, that he, who came first to it, might snatch it, or lay hold of it: the joy set before him must therefore be the prospect of that majesty and glory, power and dominion, he in his human nature was to be invested with, as the reward of these his sufferings; He for the suffering of death being crowned with majesty and honour; (Heb. ii. 9.) God having therefore highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name: (Phil. ii. 9.) and thus we have just cause to look upon him as an example of faith and patience, and of God's especial favour to them that suffer for his sake.

[5] Ver. 3. Ἵνα μὴ κάμητε ἐκλυόμενοι, Lest you be wearied and faint in your minds.] These also are two agonistical terms; the one signifies to be weary, as in those words of C. Marcius,* Νικώντων οὐκ ἔστι τὸ κάμνειν, Conquerors must not be weary, and so give over the fight; the other, to faint and be dispirited, so that we can run or fight no longer: and because in those combats they fought ὀρθοστάδην, standing upright, and χεῖρας ἐκτείνοντες, stretching out their hands, therefore the apostle exhorts them, in their spiritual combat, to stretch out the hands that hang down, and ἀνορθοῦν, to erect their feeble knees, ver. 12. (Faber. Agon. lib. i. cap. 8.)

[6] Ver. 4. Ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι μέχρις αἵματος, Ye have not resisted unto blood.] This is another agonistical expression belonging to the pugiles, who were oft besmeared with blood, and sometimes died under the blows they received from the clubs of their adversary. (Faber. Agon. lib. i. cap. 7.)

[7] Ver. 5. Μὴ ὀλιγώρει.] Ὀλιγωρεῖν is, say Phavorinus and Hesychius, ἀμελεῖν, ῥαθυμεῖν, to be unregardful of, to be slothful; ὀλίγωρος, μικρόψυχος, to be crest-fallen; ἀναπίπτειν, animo concidere, to faint, and be dispirited. Τὸ ἀναπίπτειν, κυρίως ἐπὶ ψυχὴν ἐστὶν, οἷον ἀθυμεῖν, ὀλιγωρεῖν. (Athen. Deip. lib. i. p. 23. B.)

[8] Ver. 7. God dealeth with us, as with his sons.] Here the note of Chrysostom is this, That from those things, whence men usually conclude they are deserted by God, the apostle shews, that God demonstrates his fatherly affection to them.

[9] Ver. 8.] Hence the Jews speak thus, Woe to the man who goeth out of the world without tribulations. (Buxt. Lex. p. 1528.)

[10] Ver. 9. Τῷ πατρὶ τῶν πνευμάτων, To the Father of spirits.] This phrase is not here put to signify the author of our new spiritual birth; for spiritual graces and dispositions are never called πνεύματα, spirits, in Scripture; nor is the Holy Spirit, who produceth them, ever mentioned in the plural, when they are spoken of. It is plainly a Hebrew phrase, used twice by Moses when he speaks thus to God, O God of the spirits of all flesh; (Numb. xvi. 22.) and again, Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation; (Numb. xxvii. 16.) and he is so styled, both as the Creator of them, or that God who formeth the spirit of man within him, (Zech. xii. 1.) and the preserver and governor of them; The God in whose hand is the soul of all living, and the spirit of all flesh of man, (Job xii. 10.) and into whose hands they do return at death, (Eccles. xii. 7.) according to that old tradition of the heathens, preserved in Epicharmus,† That man dying, ἀπῆλθεν ὅθεν ἦλθε πάλιν, γᾶ μὲν εἰς γᾶν, πνεῦμα δ' ἄνω, returns from whence he came, his earthly part to the earth, his spirit upwards: and the tradition of the Hebrews, that in the time of our dissolution * God comes and takes away his part, and leaves the part of our father and mother, styled here, the fathers of the flesh. Josephus saith,† that at the formation of Adam, God made man out of the earth, and sent him a soul and spirit. Philo saith,‡ that his body was indeed made of earth, shaped into human form, but his soul was only derived from the Maker and Governor of all things; and this was signified by these words, He breathed into him the breath of life: so that though according to his visible part he was mortal, as to his invisible he was immortal: hence, saith the Targum of Jonathan, on Numb. xvi. 22. xxvii. 16. It is God that putteth the spirit of the soul in the bodies of all men: and the Targum of Jerusalem, It is God who ruleth over the souls of all flesh. (See Pug. Fid. p. 401.)

[11] Ver. 10. Πρὸς ὀλίγας ἡμέρας, For a few days] Seems not here to refer to the days of children's minority, for that makes nothing to the purpose of the apostle's argument; and the motive to suffer Divine chastisements, used by the Scripture, is, not that they are long, but that they are but for a very little while, Heb. x. 7. momentary, 2 Cor. iv. 17. ὀλίγον ἄρτι, but for a little, 1 Pet. i. 6. nor is κατὰ τὸ δοκοῦν αὐτοῖς, after their pleasure, but, as it seemed good to them. This therefore seems to be the meaning of the words, That earthly parents chastise their children, aiming at that which seems best for them in this present life, consisting of few days, or for their temporal good in this life: but God doth it for their spiritual and eternal benefit, to make them here partakers of his holiness, and so fit them for the peaceable fruits of righteousness hereafter.

[13] Ver. 13. Τροχιὰς ὀρθὰς, Straight paths.] i. e. Make straight paths in the way of Christianity, not stepping out of it to avoid persecution; that they, who are already lame and feeble, may not be moved, by your example, to go out of it, but rather, by your constancy in it, may be confirmed.

[14] Ver. 14.] Be of a pure and peaceable conversation towards all with whom you do converse; for as this is necessary in order to your living with God, so will it tend much to prevent the persecutions of men.

[15] Ver. 15.] That ὑστερηκέναι is the same with ἀφίστασθαι, to depart from the grace of God, which brings salvation; or, to depart from the faith, and by so doing, fall short of the promised rest, Heb. iv. 1. the words of the apostle, and his scope, which is to preserve the Jews from backsliding from Christianity to Judaism, and the following exhortation, not to refuse him that speaketh now, ver. 25. and ἔχειν τὴν χάριν, to retain and hold fast the grace of God, ver. 28. sufficiently shew. But this is still more clear from the words of Deut. xxix. 18. whence this whole verse is taken, which runs thus; μὴ τίς ἐστιν ἐν ὑμῖν——τινὸς ἡ διανοία ἐξέκλινεν ἀπὸ Κυρίου, Lest there be among you any man or woman whose heart turneth away from the Lord our God, to go and serve the gods of the nations, μὴ τίς ἐστιν ἐν ὑμῖν ῥίζα ἄνω φύουσα ἐν χολῇ καὶ πικρίᾳ, lest there should be among you a root springing with gall and wormwood; which makes it probable, that the true reading here should be, not ἐνοχλῇ, but ἐν χολῇ; though it be certain, that the word ἐνοχλέω signifies to create trouble to ourselves or others, as Dan. vi. 21. Esth. ii. 22. 29. and in those words of Antoninus, lib. vii. §. 16. Τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν αὐτὸ οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ἐνοχλεῖ; Doth not the mind create trouble to itself? See the full consent of the ancients to the word ἐνοχλῇ, which is here rejected by Dr. Mills, Examen Millii in locum.

[16] Ver. 16. Πρωτοτοκία, The birthright] Which Esau sold contained these privileges: (1.) A double portion of his father's goods, Deut. xxi. 17. (2.) Power and dominion over the younger; for he succeeded in the government of the family, or kingdom: Reuben, thou art my first-born, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power, Gen. xlix. 3. The kingdom gave he to Jehoram, because he was the first-born, 2 Chron. xxi. 3. This Isaac gave to Jacob in these words, Be thou a master to thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee, Gen. xxvii. 29. (3.) The honour of priesthood, in their own family at least: so, Exod. xxiv. 5. He sent the young men (Chald. the first-born) of the sons of Israel, and they offered burnt-offerings, and sacrificed sacrifices to Jehovah. Afterward the Levites were taken into the service of God, instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, Numb. iii. 41. consecrated before to God, Exod. xxii. 29. Numb. viii. 17. Gen. xxv. 29. This birthright Esau sold, when he was faint, ἐκλείπων, and this shews, how proper this instance is to preserve them from being wearied, and fainting in their minds.

The Targum of B. Uziel saith, That he was made faint by committing idolatry, shedding innocent blood, and going in to a damsel betrothed that day; and this shews him a fornicator, both in the spiritual and carnal sense, and a profane person. And, lastly, Mercer saith, "Primogeniturum hæreditatem cœlestem adumbrasse;" that the primogeniture was a type of their celestial inheritance: which also seems to be hinted by the paraphrases on the place; for that of Uziel saith, He denied the life of the world to come, and contemned his birthright: and the Targum of Jerusalem, that he contemned his birthright, and despised his part in the life to come, and denied the resurrection: and Chrysostom here styles him ἀκρατὴς καὶ πνευματικὰ ἀπεμβολῶν. And as this shews his profaneness, so also doth it shew the appositeness of his example to the apostle's purpose.

[17] Ver. 17. Ἐκζητήσας μετὰ δακρύων αὐτὴν, Though he sought it carefully with tears.] Though these words, thus expounded, do not immediately prove that true repentance may find no acceptance with God, (that which Esau sought with tears, being not his own repentance, but the blessing which Isaac gave to Jacob, and would not repent of, Gen. xxvii. 33.) yet are they designed to insinuate, that men may so despise the blessings of Christianity, as to be after thought unworthy to enjoy them; that by their apostacy they may fall so entirely from God, as that he will not be prevailed on to restore them to their lost and despised privileges, upon their tears and fastings; as is apparent in the case of the Jews, who have large times of penance and [19] Ver. 20. Τὸ διαστελλόμενον.] Διαστέλλομαι signifies to command with vehemence, or severity, Matt. xvi. 20. Mark v. 43. viii. 15.

[20] Ver. 21. Μωϋσῆς εἶπεν, Moses said.] This, interpreters think, St. Paul received by tradition of his ancestors, though no footsteps of this tradition have been found among them. But doubtless the apostle had respect to Deut. ix. where, ver. 15. Moses sees the mount burning up to heaven, and, ver. 19. saith, ἐφοβός εἰμι, I exceedingly fear.

[21] Ver. 22. Σιὼν ὄρει, To Mount Zion.] All the good things, blessings, and comforts, which God will give to Israel, are only out of Zion, say the Jews, Vajikra Rabba, §. 24. Midrash Tillim ad Psal. xiv. Hence came their strength, Psal. cx. 2. and help, Psal. xx. 2. blessings, Psal. cxxviii. 5. life, Psal. cxxxiii. 3. and salvation, Psal. xiv. 7.

[22] Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουρανίῳ, To the heavenly Jerusalem,] Which is the mother of us all, Gal. iv. 26. where our city is, Phil. iii. 20. This the rabbins call the Jerusalem of the age to come, to be built in the days of the Messiah; saying also, that the inferior Jerusalem is a figure of that which is above. (See note on Gal. iv. 26.) And it is here styled the heavenly Jerusalem; not that heaven is primarily intended by it, and not the church of Christ on earth; but, propter originem et finem, as having its rise from heaven, and as leading to it; on which account the gospel-state is styled oft the kingdom of heaven.

[23] Μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων, To myriads of angels.] The glorious citizens of heaven who attend at the throne of God, to whom we are united, they being made one with us, in Christ, (Eph. i. 10.) and to whom we are reconciled by him. (Colos. i. 20.)

[24] Ver. 23. Πρωτοτόκων, Of the first-born:] i. e. Of the apostles, who received the first-fruits of the Spirit, (Rom. viii. 23.) and of the churches which received first the Christian faith, (Eph. i. 12.) whose names are written in heaven, i. e. who are enrolled among the citizens of the new and heavenly Jerusalem, or among the just, for whom the kingdom is prepared. In this rejoice (saith Christ), that your names are written in heaven, Luke x. 20. Thus, Exod. xxxii. 32. Moses, by the Targum, is introduced speaking thus, I know thou hast writ my name in the book of the just: and of the false prophets, the Targum on Ezek. xiii. 9. saith, They shall not be written in the book of eternal life, which is written for the just of the house of Israel; and into this kingdom they only are to enter, whose names are thus enrolled in the book of life. (Rev. xxi. 27.)

[25] Καὶ κριτῇ Θεῷ, And to God the judge of all.] Who will adjudge the crown of glory to those who have fought the good fight of faith, (2 Tim. iv. 8.) who run this race with patience, (1 Cor. ix. 24, 25.) and will give them the kingdom prepared for them. (Matt. xxv. 34. Luke xii. 32.)

[26] And to the spirits of just men, τετελειωμένων, made perfect.] This word here cannot well signify them who are crowned in the agonistical sense; because the apostle, in the former chapter, had asserted of those witnesses which died in faith, that they had not yet received the promise, and were not to be crowned before us Christians; and saith, that he himself expected to receive his crown only at the great day. (2 Tim. iv. 8.) But it signifies, either that they had fulfilled their course, and so rested from their labours and conflicts, as Chrysostom here saith, and so have nothing more to do but to receive their crown: or, in the other sense of the word, τελειοῦσθαι, to be made perfect in holiness, or to be perfectly purged from all guilt of sin, and so fit to be admitted to this kingdom: in which sense the apostle here denies that there was any τελείωσις, or perfect expiation made by the Levitical priesthood; the law making nothing perfect: (Heb. vii. 11. 16.) and that the offerings prescribed by it could not, τελειῶσαι, make perfect the worshipper, as to his conscience: (Heb. ix. 9.) that they could not τελειῶσαι εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, perfect him for ever, so as that he should need no farther expiation for sin; (Heb. x. 1.) and that Christ, by one offering, τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, had perfectly expiated for ever them that were sanctified, (ver. 14.) And accordingly the Targum upon 1 Chron. xxi. 15. saith, God saw the house of his sanctuary, which is above the heavens, where the souls of the just are; and hence it is evident, that the souls of just men are not reduced by death to a state of insensibility; for can a soul that reasons, and perceiveth good things, be made perfect by perceiving nothing at all? Can a spirit, which here enjoyed the pleasures of a good conscience, of a life of faith, and of communion with God, and the comforts of the Holy Ghost, be advanced to perfection by a total deprivation of all those satisfactions and enjoyments?

[27] Ver. 24. Αἵματι ῥαντισμοῦ, The blood of sprinkling.] Not that of bulls and goats, with which Moses sprinkled the people, when they entered into the old covenant, (Exod. xxiv. 8.) and the tabernacle, and the vessels of the ministry, to sanctify them for the Levitical service; but the blood of Christ, by which the heavenly places are purified and prepared for us, (ix. 23, 24.) and by which we have entrance into the holiest, (x. 19, 20.) Whereas the blood sprinkled seven times, for their purification under the old testament, was sprinkled before the veil, because the priests could not enter with it within the veil.

[28] Κρείττονα λαλοῦντι παρὰ τὸν, or, παρὰ τὸν Ἄβελ, Which speaketh better things than that of Abel.] Than the blood of Abel; not because that called for vengeance, this for mercy; but than the blood of the sacrifice of Abel offered by faith, by which God testified his acceptance, and by which he, being dead, yet speaks: (Heb. xi. 4.) that procuring acceptance for himself alone; this, for all believers: that, speaking only for him, and declaring him righteous; this, interceding to God, for the justification of all men, through faith in his blood.

[29] Ver. 25. Χρηματίζοντα, Him that speaketh.] This word, both in the Old and New Testament, signifies speaking as from God, or words proceeding from him. (See Jer. xxv. 30. xxvi. 3. xxix. 23. xxx. 2. xxxvi. 4. Matt. ii. 22. Luke ii. 26. Acts x. 22. Rom. xi. 4. Heb. viii. 5. xi. 7.) So 2 Macc. ii. 4. χρηματισμοῦ γενηθέντος αὐτῷ, The prophet being warned of God, commanded that the ark should go with him.

[30] Μὴ παραιτήσησθε, Refuse not.] As they did, saith

Theodoret, desiring ἀντὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸν Μωσέα λαβεῖν, instead of God to have Moses; by saying, Speak thou to us, and let not God speak to us: (Exod. xxix. 19.) desiring not God, but an angel, saith Philo on these words, De Somniis, p. 455. E. (See note on Colos. ii. 19.)

[31] Ver. 26. Οὗ ἡ φωνὴ, Whose voice.] He speaks here not of the voice of Christ, but of the God of Israel, who, at his appearance on Sinai, shook the earth; of his voice who made the promise, that Christ, the Desire of all nations, should come. Nor can the apostle, or the prophets, speak of Christ's second coming, to give new heavens and new earth, by the conversion of the Jewish nation: for, first, this shaking was to be the forerunner of the coming of the Desire of all nations, or contemporary with it; now he was to come to fill that very house then built with glory, and to make the glory of it greater than the glory of that house built by Solomon. The prophet must therefore speak of shaking antecedent to the destruction of the temple: and therefore the apostle, speaking of the very thing promised in the words of the prophet Haggai, must also speak of the first advent of our Lord. Secondly, The prophet speaks of a shaking which was to happen after a little time, (Hag. ii. 7.) and therefore not of an advent of our Saviour, after two thousand years expired, yet to come. And, thirdly, the apostle says plainly, that Christians had then received this kingdom, which could not be shaken, to give place to another; and upon that grounds his exhortation to them, to retain or hold fast the grace received: (ver. 28.) which shews, it was not a kingdom yet to come after one thousand seven hundred years; but that which, throughout the gospel, is styled the kingdom of God, and of heaven, and is said to be then come unto them, Matt. xii. 28.

[32] Ἔτι ἅπαξ, Yet once more.] The word yet signifies, that there was yet to be another shaking, for the introduction of another covenant, and consequently for the abolishing the first; and the word once only, that there should be no more shaking, after the introduction of the second covenant.

[33] Ἐγὼ σείω, &c. I shake not the earth only, but the heavens.] Hag. ii. 7. The ancient Jews speak of this place thus; I will give a short glory to the Israelites, and afterward shall the Messiah come, Talm. Tr. Sanhed. cap. 11. Expounding this place of the coming of the Messiah, they add, that as the first tabernacle and temple were built and destroyed, so was the second temple, but the Messiah should build a temple, and God had built a tabernacle and temple in the heavens, which should never be destroyed, Pug. Fid. p. 304. 309.

Now this shaking of the heaven and earth, being to be accomplished at the coming of the Messiah, or, the Desire of all nations, cannot signify the removal and subversion of the material heavens and earth, they being not thus shaken at Christ's coming: but this is a metaphor frequently used in the prophets, to signify the subversion of a state and kingdom, and of the government which obtains amongst them; as when the prophet, speaking of the destruction of Babylon, saith, I will make the heavens shake, and the earth shall be removed out of its place, Isa. xiii. 13. And of the destruction of the Jews by the Assyrians, he useth these very words, The earth shall be moved, and the heavens shaken, Joel ii. 10. (See Judg. v. 4. Psal. lxxvii. 18. Isa. xxiv. 19, 20.) Thus, at our Lord's coming to destroy Jerusalem, say some interpreters; to destroy antichrist, as others think; the powers of heaven shall be shaken, (Matt. xxiv. 30. Mark xiii. 25. Luke xxi. 26.) which import of this phrase being not understood by Esthius, he, without cause, rejecteth this interpretation of the word.

Secondly, This shaking, being for the removal of things which were shaken, and they being not the material earth, must signify the things which were then introduced with the shaking of the earth, i. e. the covenant made, and the worship and tabernacle, and other materials then appointed to be made with hands for God's service; which, as the apostle, throughout this whole Epistle, contends, were to be abolished, and to continue only until the time of reformation, (ix. 10.) and then to give place to that new covenant and dispensation, which procured for us an eternal redemption, and an entrance, not into the holy places made with hands, but into heaven itself.

[34] Ver. 28. Ἔχομεν χάριν.] It is the observation of critics here, and elsewhere, that ἔχων, to have, is often put for κατέχειν, to retain, or hold fast: so ἔχειν πίστιν καὶ ἀγαθὴν συνείδησιν, is to hold faith and a good conscience, 1 Tim. i. 19. ἔχειν τὸ μυστήριον τῆς πίστεως, to hold the mystery of faith; ὑποτύπωσιν ἔχειν, to hold fast the form of sound words, 2 Tim. i. 13. Χάρις, throughout the whole New Testament, doth signify the favour and the grace of God, so freely tendered to us in the gospel: (see note on 2 Cor. vi. 1.) so that the import of those words seems to be this; Let us continue steadfast in that faith and dispensation delivered in the gospel, as being that alone which renders both our persons and our services acceptable to God; let us not fall from the grace of God; (ver. 15.) let us not cast off our confidence; (x. 35.) Let us hold fast the profession of our hope without wavering, (ver. 23.) continuing to serve God with a holy reverence.

[35] Ver. 29. Πῦρ καταναλίσκον, A consuming fire.] To consume thine enemies, if thou obey him, and to bring them down before thy face; (Deut. ix. 3.) but to consume thee, if thou forget the covenant thou hast made with him. (Deut. iv. 24.) This hath relation to the Schechinah, or glorious presence of God, the sight of which was like devouring fire, (Exod. xxiv. 17.) and from which went out fire to consume Nadab and Abihu, (Lev. x. 2.) and those two hundred and fifty persons who burned incense, (Numb. xvi. 35.) and of whom the Psalmist speaketh in these words, A fire burned in their congregations, the flame burnt up the wicked. (Psal. cvi. 18.)

3. Remember them that are in bonds, as (affectionately as if you were) bound with them; and them that suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body (and so as being subject to the like afflictions).

4. [2] Marriage is honourable in all (persons), and (so is) the bed undefiled: but (or, wherefore) whoremongers and adulterers [3] God will judge (i. e. adjudge to condemnation).

5. [4] Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have (at present): for he hath said, (Deut. xxxi. 6. Josh. i. 5.) I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.

6. So that we may boldly say, (as the Psalmist doth, Psal. lvi. 4.) The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

7. Remember them which have the rule over you, (Gr. Be mindful of your governors, or guides,) who have spoken to you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end (or close) of their conversation: (with what constancy and perseverance they continued in the faith, and sealed it with their blood, in hopes of that crown of glory Christ had promised to them that were faithful to the death.

8. Even that) Jesus Christ (who, both as to his doctrine and his promises, is) the same [5] yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.

9. Be not carried about with divers and [6] strange doctrines, (i. e. doctrines diverse from them, and new, i. e. not taught by those guides who spake to you the word of God, ver. 7.) For it is a good thing that [7] the heart be established (i. e. comforted and strengthened) [8] with grace (i. e. the sense of the Divine favour, and the grace brought to us by the gospel); and not with meats (eaten at the Jewish festivals, and their peace-offerings), which have not profited (to the purifying of the conscience from guilt, Heb. ix. 9.) them that have been occupied therein.

10. We (Christians) have (a sacrifice upon) [9] an altar (that of the cross), of which they have no right to eat (or to partake) who serve the tabernacle, (i. e. cleave still to the worship appointed for the Jewish tabernacle.

11. The truth of this they may learn from their own institutions concerning sacrifices:) for the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary [10] for (a) sin (offering), are (by the law of Moses not to be eaten, but) burnt without the camp. (Exod. xxix. 14. Lev. iv. 21. vi. 30. xvi. 27.)

12. Wherefore Jesus also, (our sin-offering, the person typified by theirs offered on the great day of expiation, Lev. xvi.) that he might sanctify the people with his own blood (carried into the heavenly sanctuary), [11] suffered without the gate. (He therefore thus answering the type of that sin-offering, of which neither priest nor people were to eat; they who still do adhere to the legal institutions, are by that law excluded from partaking of this sacrifice.)

13. Let us go forth therefore to him without the camp (the terrestrial Jerusalem, the Jewish church and service), [12] bearing his reproach.

14. For here we (especially, who are thus persecuted,) have no continuing city, but we seek one to come, (even the city of the living God, xii. 22.)

15. By him therefore (our high-priest) let us offer the (Christian) [13] sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, (in the language of the prophet, Hosea xiv. 2.) [14] the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name.

16. But (and for the other Christian sacrifices, those of alms,) to do good and communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is (still) well pleased.

17. Obey them that have [15] the rule over you, (your bishops and pastors, ver. 24.) and submit yourselves (to their godly admonitions): for they watch for your souls, as they that must give an account (to God for them): that they may do it [16] with joy, (in the presence of Christ, that they have gained you to him, and built you up in your faith, 1 Thess. ii. 19.) and not with grief (that they could not prevail upon you to live suitably to their instructions): for that is unprofitable for you (and pernicious to you).

18. Pray for us, (for our freedom and success in preaching the gospel, Eph. vi. 19. Colos. iv. 3. and our deliverance from the enemies of our faith, 1 Thess. iii. 1, 2.) for we trust we have a good conscience, in [17] all things (being) willing to live honestly.

19. But I beseech you the rather to do this (now), that I may be restored to you the sooner.

20. [18] Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through (with) the blood of the everlasting covenant (to be offered by him in the heavenly sanctuary),

21. [19] Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, [20] working in you (by his grace given to, and his spirit residing in, you,) that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; [21] to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

22. And I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation (to perseverance with patience in the Christian faith): for I have written a letter to you (of this subject) in (as) few words (as the importance of the matter and my affection to you would permit).

23. Know ye that our brother Timothy (see the preface) is set at liberty; with whom, if he comes (hither again) shortly, I will (God willing) see you.

24. Salute all them that have the [22] rule over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you.

25. Grace be with you all. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 2. 'ΑΓΓΕΛΟΥΣ, Angels.] It follows not hence, say the commentators here, that all the three persons which appeared to Abraham were created angels; for one of them being styled, by Abraham, the Judge of all the earth, Gen. xviii. 24. Jehovah, ver. 22. and Abraham praying to him with so great humility, Oh! let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak unto him, who am but dust and ashes, ver. 27. 31. it seems more proper with the ancients to conceive, he at least should be the Son of God, the Angel of the covenant; for the Word of God, saith Justin Martyr,* Καὶ ἄγγελος καλεῖται, καὶ Θεὸς, καὶ Κύριος, καὶ ἀνὴρ, καὶ ἄνθρωπος, 'Αβραὰμ καὶ 'Ισαὰκ φανείς. Yet since, in the opinion of the Jews, they were three angels, (as Ainsworth and Cartwright note upon the place, the apostle, writing to them, saith no more of them,) I rather think, with the reverend Bishop of Ely, that it may be granted, that the three that appeared to Abraham were created angels; but then they appeared only as the retinue of the Schechinah, or Divine Majesty, styled the Lord, ver. 1. 13. For after the same men, who came in, and did eat with Abraham, and rose from the table, were departed, (ver. 16. 22.) Abraham stands yet before the Lord, that is, before the Divine Majesty who appeared to him, ver. 1. and styles him the Judge of the whole earth. And this agrees well with the opinion of the Jews, who, as they acknowledge that the three men whom Abraham entertained were created angels, so also do they own that there was then a separate appearance, or Divine Majesty, which talked with Abraham. And this takes off the observation of Crellius, and others, on this place, that the name Jehovah is given to angels; for according to this interpretation, the name Jehovah is not given to any of the three angels which were entertained by Abraham, but only to the Schechinah, or Divine Majesty, which appeared with them, and spake to Abraham, from ver. 10. to 17. and to whom, after the departure of these three, one into heaven, and two to Sodom, Abraham still speaks to the end of that chapter.

[2] Ver. 4. Τίμιος ὁ γάμος, Marriage is honourable.] It is not worth disputing, whether these words should be rendered as a precept, thus, Let honourable marriage, and the bed undefiled, obtain among all; or, as our version renders them, by way of assertion. The observation of the ancients upon the place is this, That marriage is honourable in all persons, old and young, and in all things.*

[3] Κρινεῖ ὁ Θεὸς, God will judge;] i. e. Κατακρινεῖ, He will condemn them: so, John iii. 16. God sent not his Son into the world, ἵνα κρίνῃ τὸν κόσμον, that he might condemn the world. He that resisteth, shall receive to himself, κρῖμα, punishment, or condemnation, Rom. xiii. 2. so, Matt. xxiii. 14. 1 Cor. xi. 29. 1 Tim. iii. 6. Jude 4. Mark iii. 29. Luke xxiii. 40. τοῦτον κρίναντες, by condemning Christ, they fulfilled the voice of the prophets, Acts xiii. 27. That the apostle here should give these cautions against the gnostics amongst the Jews, is said without ground, for no man can prove that any gnostics had been then among them; but they had then the sect of the Nicolaitans† among them, mentioned Rev. ii. 6. 15. who did ἀναίδην ἐκπορνεύειν, fornicate without shame, holding whoredom and adultery to be things indifferent. Moreover, Justin Martyr saith,‡ That wherever they travelled, they multiplied to themselves wives, ὀνόματι γάμου, under pretence of marriage. (See note on Rom. ii. 22.) On which account there was ground sufficient for this exhortation. Note hence, that whoredom is a mortal sin.

[4] Ver. 5.] Hence we learn, first, that we are then covetously minded, when we are not content with the things we enjoy at present, but are impatiently desirous of having more.

Secondly, That what God promises to any of his servants, may, in like circumstances, be applied to them all; for this promise, which the apostle here makes and applies to all good Christians, was particularly made to Joshua, i. 5.

[5] Ver. 8.] i. e. Through all times and ages: for, as Philo§ observes, Τριμερὴς γὰρ ὁ χρόνος ἐκ παρεληλυθότος, καὶ ἐνεστῶτος, καὶ μέλλοντος, Time consists of three parts, the past, present, and to come, and these three signify, ἅπαντα τὸν αἰῶνα, all time, or the whole compass of it: so that, as the same doctrine of Christianity must always be professed by all Christians, so the same Jesus is always ready to assist and reward the sincere professors of it.

That the apostle speaks here, not of their living but dead guides, will appear, partly from his exhortation to remember them, the living guides being the objects, not of their memory, but sense; partly from the phrase ἐλάλησαν, who have spoken, which intimates, they had now left off speaking; and partly from the ἔκβασις, the close, or period of their conversation here on earth; they are exhorted to look back unto their living bishops, they are commanded to obey, (ver. 17.) their dead bishops to remember: (ver. 7.) for I think, saith Origen on Matthew, (ed. Huet. tom. i. p. 420.) he who is styled by Christ, ὁ ἡγούμενος, a guide, Luke xxii. 26. is, ὁ καλούμενος ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις ἐπίσκοπος, he who is called in the churches a bishop.

[6] Ver. 9. Διδαχαῖς ξέναις,] I render, new doctrines, and therefore strange to the ears of them that hear them first; so ξένα δαιμόνια are new demons, Acts xvii. 18. and the apostle saith, they were not to look upon their fiery trial, ὡς ξένου ὑμῖν παραβαίνοντος, as if some new thing had happened to them, 1 Pet. iv. 12.

[7] Βεβαιοῦσθαι τὴν καρδίαν, That the heart is established,] Is a Hebrew phrase, signifying to comfort, strengthen, and refresh the heart. So, Gen. xviii. 5. I will fetch a morsel of bread, וְסַעֲדוּ לִבְּכֶם, and comfort your hearts; Judg. xix. 5. 8. Στήρισον καρδίαν σου, comfort thy heart with a morsel of bread: of which the Psalmist saith, that καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου στηρίζει, it strengthens man's heart, Psal. civ. 15. whence it is often styled στήριγμα ἄρτου, Psal. cv. 16. Ezek. iv. 16. v. 16. xiv. 13. the staff of bread.

[8] The grace here mentioned is, say the ancients, ἡ τῆς χάριτος διδασκαλία, the doctrine of the gospel, or of the grace of God tendered in it. The meats here mentioned are the meats eaten in the Jewish festivals, new moons, and sabbaths, Colos. ii. 16. or their peace-offerings and oblations, styled βρώματα, meats, Heb. ix. 10. which feasts some Jewish zealots would have observed with the Christian festivals, viz. their Passover and Pentecost, (1 Cor. xi.) and in the same riotous manner, (ver. 21.) And these sacrifices, or peace-offerings, they would have still retained, perhaps as being not sacrifices for sin, but free-will-offerings, and only sacrifices of praise. So that the import of these words is this; It is good the soul, or heart, be established, refreshed, and comforted, not with meats eaten in the Jewish festivals, or at their eucharistical oblations, which profit or avail nothing to the peace and quiet of the conscience, but with the Divine favour, and that gospel-grace by which justification and remission of sins is obtained through the blood of Jesus; of which they cannot be partakers who still cleave to the legal observations.

[9] Ver. 10. Θυσιαστήριον, An altar.] That the altar here, signifies the sacrifice offered upon the altar, is plain from this, that of this altar they were to eat. So they that eat of the Jewish sacrifices are said to be, κοινωνοὶ θυσιαστηρίου, partakers of the altar, 1 Cor. x. 18. i. e. of the things offered at the altar; and then it must import the body of our Lord offered and broken on the cross: by partaking of the memorials of which body, we testify our communion with Christ and his church; (ibid. ver. 16, 17.) and of this, saith the apostle, they have no right to partake who adhere still to the Mosaical oblations.

[10] Ver. 11. Περὶ ἁμαρτίας.] That περὶ ἁμαρτίας signifies a sacrifice for sin, or a sin-offering, see note on 2 Cor. ult.

[11] Ver. 12. Without the gate.] That sin-offering which was carried without the camp, whilst they were in the wilderness, when the temple was seated at Jerusalem, was carried without the gate of the city. (Maimon. de Rat. Sacrif. Faciend. cap. 7. §. 4. Ainsw. in Lev. vi. 30.) And this is the reason of the variation of the phrase here.

[12] Ver. 13. Τοίνυν ἐξερχώμεθα.] Some quarrel with the apostle for beginning a sentence with τοίνυν, which it is confessed that the best Grecians rarely do; but this, saith Stephanus, is not without example; and Vigerus notes, τοίνυν "initio quidem periodi ponitur, sed tamen vocem sequi," that is, it is sometimes first in position, but it is not so in construction.

His reproach.] i. e. His cross and sufferings, which the persecuting Jews inflict upon his followers, as they did upon him, persecuting them even to strange cities, (Acts xxvi. 11.) and from city to city.

[13] Ver. 15. Θυσίαν αἰνέσεως, The sacrifice of praise.] The Jews say, that, "in seculo futuro," in the age to come * (which often signifies the age of the Messiah), all oblations shall cease, but the oblation of thanksgiving, which shall never cease, and that praise is more acceptable to God than all sacrifices; which they prove from those words of the Psalmist, I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices, because they were not always before me: offer unto God thanksgiving, Psal. l. 23. He that offereth praise, honoureth me. And the Greek commentators observe, that the sacrifices God now requires, are unbloody sacrifices, to wit, those of praise and thanksgiving, and imitation of Christ. So Chrysostom and Œcumenius.

[14] Καρπὸν χειλέων, The calves of our lips.] Hos. xiv. 2. So the Jews themselves interpret these words, What shall we render for the calves of our lips? Dr. Pocock notes,† That καρπὸς is here taken for κάρπωμα, which in the Septuagint signifies a holocaust, which being usually of young bullocks, corresponds to the calves of our lips in Hebrew. So in the Song of the Three Children, καρπῶσαι ἐπί σου, is to sacrifice before thee, ver. 14.

[15] Ver. 17. Τοῖς ἡγουμένοις ὑμῶν.] Περὶ ἐπισκόπων λέγει, he speaks of bishops, say Chrysostom, Œcumenius, and Theophylact. Clemens Romanus‡ places them before the presbyters, saying, Τοῖς νόμοις Θεοῦ ἐπορεύεσθε, ὑποτασσόμενοι τοῖς ἡγουμένοις ὑμῶν, καὶ τιμὴν τὴν καθήκουσαν ἀπονέμοντες τοῖς παρ' ὑμῖν πρεσβυτέροις, Ye walked in the laws of God, being subject to your guides or rulers, and giving convenient honour to your presbyters or elders.

[16] Μετὰ χαρᾶς, With joy:] That is, say others, that they may go on with their work joyfully, which they can only execute with trouble and sadness, when they find you refractory to their admonitions: but these words, That they may do it, seem plainly to relate to the account they must give up hereafter to God.

[17] Ver. 18. Ἐν πᾶσι.] In all times, circumstances, things, and places. Here is the true test of an upright conscience, that in all times, things, and cases, it renders us industrious to walk exactly according to the rules of righteousness. The want of this some of the Jews might suspect in the apostle, as not being concerned for the observation of the law.

[18] Ver. 20.] These words seem to express all the three offices of our great Mediator, which are the foundations of all our prayers and praises directed to God, and of all the blessings we receive or expect from him; his prophetic office, in that he is styled the great Shepherd of the sheep; his priestly office, in that he is said to be brought again from the dead with the blood of the everlasting covenant; and his kingly office, in that he is styled our Lord Jesus.

[19] Ver. 21. Καταρτίσαι ὑμᾶς, Make you perfect.] Here is the duty of every good Christian, to be ready for every good work, (Tit. iii. 1.) doing the will of God from the heart. (Eph. vi. 6.)

[20] Ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, Working in you, &c.] Here is the power by which we are enabled so to do, and the motive to the performance of our duty, viz. the grace of God teaching us, denying all ungodliness and worldly lusts, to live righteously, soberly, and godly, in this present world; and the expectation of the blessed hope and glorious appearance of our Lord, to reward our services. (Tit. ii. 11—13.) The love of God the Father, in giving up his Son to the death for us; and of Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify to himself a peculiar people zealous of good works, (ver. 14.) and who died for all, that they who live, might not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him that died for them. (2 Cor. v. 15.) And, lastly, the inward assistances of the Holy Spirit, bringing these things to our remembrance, exciting us to the performance of our duty, strengthening us against our temptations, and comforting and supporting us under our sufferings.

Ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν τὸ εὐάρεστον ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ, Working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight.] That God doth some way work in us every good work, and whatsoever is well pleasing in his sight, can be denied by none who understand the Scriptures; and one would think it should be as little the subject of dispute, whether God works these things as a vomit or a purge works in us by physical and irresistible operations, or whether he works on reasonable creatures by offering reasons to persuade them, and upon men endowed with a will, to make them willing, as all men do, by propounding motives and encouragements of a prevailing nature, to engage them to choose the good and refuse the evil; of which I have said so much in the treatise of grace, annexed to 2 Cor. vi. 1. that I shall say nothing more at present, but that it is unaccountable how actions should be good, unless we consent to them, or how they should be ours, unless we choose and do them. This text is therefore vainly urged to prove, that we are purely passive in the work of our conversion, and that we neither do nor can do any thing towards it:

First, Because God evidently speaks this to them who were already true believers, and converts to the Christian faith, and wanted only to be made perfect in every good work. Secondly, Because he exhorts all Christians to work out their salvation with fear and trembling; upon this very account, that it is God that worketh in them both to will and to do. (Phil. ii. 13.) For if God so worketh in us, that we do not co-operate with him, why are we commanded to work out our salvation? For can we act where we are purely passive? Or can that be a reason why we ourselves should act, that another will effectually do this very thing without our co-operation? Is it not rather a reason why we should not work at all; since this work will be certainly performed without us? See more to this effect in the note on Phil. ii. 10. Note also, that the word καταρτίσαι, which begins this verse, signifies fully to in- struct, as in those words, Luke vi. 40. The disciple is not above his master, κατηρτισμένος δὲ πᾶς, but he that is fully instructed is as his master, 1 Cor. i. 10. ἦτε δὲ κατηρτισμένοι, be ye perfectly instructed in the same mind and judgment, Eph. iv. 12. God hath appointed apostles, prophets, and evangelists, pastors, and teachers, πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων, for the full instruction of the saints, till we all come to the unity of the faith, and knowledge of the Son of God, ver. 13. So the Glossa Græco-Latina, καταρτίζω, struo, instruo, κατηρτισμένος, constructus, instructus; and in this sense this may be reasonably deemed a prayer, that God would fully instruct the believing Jews in every good work requisite to be done in obedience to his will, and so would work in them that which was well pleasing in his sight, we being thus transformed by the renewing of our mind, εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν, that we may approve (and so be inclined to do) the good, εὐάρεστον, well pleasing and perfect will of God. (Rom. xii. 2.)

[21] Ὧι ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, To whom be glory for ever, Amen.] Here Schlictingius saith, that he who is a Christian cannot be ignorant, that glory for ever and ever is to be ascribed to Christ, as well as to the Father, as it is Rev. v. 12, 13. 2 Pet. iii. 18. And how then can he be ignorant that Christ is to be owned as the true God? This being the doxology ascribed in the New Testament to him, of whom, and by whom, and to whom, are all things, Rom. xi. 36. to God the Father, Gal. i. 5. to the omnipotent God, Eph. iii. 20. 24. to him who dwelleth in light inaccessible, 2 Tim. iv. 15, 16. to the God of all grace, 1 Pet. v. 10, 11. to the only wise God our Saviour, Jude 25. In St. Clemens,* it is frequently ascribed, Τῷ Θεῷ παντοκράτορι, to Almighty God, to whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen, as a character peculiarly belonging to him. And in the Jerusalem Targum,† this is the frequent appendix to the mention of the great God, Let his name be blessed (i. e. glorified) for ever and ever, Amen: so that both in the opinion of Jews and Christians this was a doxology proper to the true God.

[22] Ver. 24. Τοὺς ἡγουμένους, &c. That have the rule over you.] Hence it seems evident, that this Epistle was not sent to the bishops or rulers of the church, but to the whole church, or to the laity.

ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

SEVEN CATHOLIC EPISTLES.

GENERAL PREFACE.

OF these Epistles in the general, I have only this to note, That from the fourth century they have both obtained the name of Catholic Epistles, and also have been ranked in the same order in which they now stand in our Bibles, viz. by the council of Laodicea,* by Cyril of Jerusalem,† by Athanasius,‡ and Greg. Nazianzen;§ by Amphilochius,‖ and by others.

Only it is not easy to assign the reason why they in a particular manner were so called; it could not be, because they were, "passim receptæ ab omnibus et ubique," generally received by all: for we learn from the testimonies of Origen,‡ Eusebius,§ Amphilochius,‖ and St. Jerome,¶ that the ancients doubted of four of the seven, or five of them.

Œcumenius and others say, they were so styled, because they were written, not to one nation, as were generally those of St. Paul, ἀλλὰ καθόλου τοῖς πιστοῖς, ἤτοι Ἰουδαίοις τοῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ, but generally to the faithful, or to the Jews of the dispersion: which last expression seems to hint the true reason of the name, viz. because, excepting the two brief Epistles of St. John, they were written to the Jews dispersed throughout the world. Which, though it be true also of the Epistle to the Hebrews, yet hath that no inscription, and for a long time was also questioned; nor was it written to the dispersed Jews, but to the inhabitants of Judea, chap. xiii. and upon these accounts might not come into the number.

GENERAL EPISTLE OF ST. JAMES.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

§. I. THAT the author of this Epistle was an apostle, hath been proved, note on ver. 1. whence it must follow, that he could not be James, the son of Zebedee, because that James was slain by Herod, A. D. 44. twenty-eight years before the destruction of Jerusalem, which yet was nigh at hand, and even at the door, when this Epistle was indited; see note on v. 8, 9. Nor could he be James the Just, bishop of Jerusalem, for he was no apostle, if he was not the same person with James the Less. It seemeth therefore that he was James the son of Alpheus, apostle and brother of our Lord, styled James the Less, in distinction from James the son of Zebedee, styled the Greater, by reason of his age. For that the James mentioned by St. Paul, Gal. i. 19. was an apostle in the strict acceptation of the word, is evident from this, that having spoken of St. Peter, who doubtless was an apostle in that sense, he adds, Others of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother; and, ii. 6. he reckons him, with Peter and John, among the στύλοι, or the chief pillars of the church; and to me he seems to be the same with James the bishop of Jerusalem. For,

First, Of this James the bishop of Jerusalem, who was styled the Just, St. Jerome* saith, that he was the son of Mary, the sister of the mother of our Lord, of whom St. John makes mention, xix. 25. where she is styled the wife of Cleophas or Alpheus; and by St. Mark, xv. 40. the mother of James the Less.

Secondly, It seems highly probable, that the James, mentioned in Acts xv. was strictly an apostle; for Paul and Barnabas were sent up to the apostles and elders, ver. 2. they were received by the apostles and elders, ver. 4. the apostles and elders were gathered together, to decide the question touching the circumcision of the gentiles, ver. 6. The first person that speaks to it is Peter the apostle, the second James, who having determined the question, it seemed good to the apostles and brethren to send letters to the churches, ver. 22. and these they send with this inscription, The apostles, elders, and brethren. In all which places it is evident, that the word apostles must be taken in the proper sense, they being still distinguished from all the elders or bishops which were not apostles: nor can it be thought reasonable that St. James here should be ranked amongst the elders, or the inferior sort of the clergy; it remains then that he was in the strict sense an apostle. There being therefore no other of that name then living, but James the son of Alpheus, who also was the brother of our Lord, i. e. his mother's sister's son (i. e. his cousin), he in all likelihood must be the bishop of Jerusalem.

Thirdly, The story of three that were called James, viz. James the Great, James the Less, and James, bishop of Jerusalem, is, saith Dr. Cave,* a great mistake, and built upon a sandy bottom: "For besides that the Scripture mentions no more than two of this name, and both apostles, nothing can be plainer than that St. James the apostle, whom St. Paul calls the brother of our Lord, was the same that presided among the apostles, and determined in the synod at Jerusalem. Nor do either Clemens Alexandrinus† or Eusebius out of him, mention any more than two, St. James, put to death by Herod, and St. James the Just, bishop of Jerusalem, whom they expressly affirm to be the same with him whom St. Paul calls the brother of our Lord. Once indeed Eusebius makes our St. James one of the LXX. though elsewhere quoting a place of Clemens of Alexandria,‡ he numbers him with the chief of the apostles, and expressly distinguishes him from the seventy disciples." And though St. Jerome,§ when he represents the opinion of others, styles him the thirteenth apostle, yet elsewhere, when speaking his own sense, he sufficiently proves that there were but two, James‖ the son of Zebedee, and the other the son of Alpheus, the one surnamed the Greater, the other the Less; and he frequently styles the author of this Epistle, writ to the twelve tribes, James the apostle: besides, saith he, the main support of the other opinion is built upon the authority of Clemens's Recognitions, a book, in doubtful cases, of no esteem and value.

§. II. And having thus shewed, that James the apostle, and brother of our Lord, was the author of this Epistle, we cannot reasonably doubt the authority of it: especially if we consider that it is cited by Clemens Romanus¶ four several times, by Ignatius, in his genuine Epistle to the Ephesians, and by Origen,†† in his thirteenth homily upon Genesis. Eusebius‡‡ saith, it was known to most, and

* "Jacobus qui appellatur frater Domini cognomento Justus, et nonnulli existimant, Josephi ex alia uxore; ut autem mihi videtur, Mariæ sororis matris Domini, cujus Joannes in libro suo meminit, Filius, post passionem Domini ab apostolis Hierosolymorum episcopus ordinatus, unam tantùm scripsit epistolam, quæ de septem catholicis est." publicly read in most Christian churches: St. Jerome,* that in process of time it obtained authority. Esthius† notes, "That they who before doubted of it, in the fourth century embraced the opinion of them who received it, and that from thence no church, no ecclesiastical writer, is found who ever doubted of it; but, on the contrary, all the catalogues of the books of holy Scripture, published by general or provincial councils, Roman bishops, or other orthodox writers, number it among the canonical Scriptures; 'quæ probatio ad certam fidem faciendam cuique catholico sufficere debet;' which proof must give sufficient certainty of it to any catholic." As for the seeming contradiction of this Epistle to the doctrine of St. Paul, in the matter of justification by faith, see it sufficiently cleared in the close of the Annotations on the second chapter.

§. III. Fourthly, That this Epistle was directed to the twelve tribes which were scattered abroad, the words of this Epistle shew; but whether the twelve tribes import only those of them which returned into Judea, or those of them also who were carried away by the Assyrians, and never returned to their own nation, so as to make any more a distinct people, or a body politic under their own governors, is uncertain: that God had absolutely determined that the ten tribes should never more return to such a state, the prophet Hosea in many places doth inform us; as when God by him saith, I will no more have mercy on the house of Israel, but I will utterly take them away, i. 6. that they should be among the gentiles as a vessel wherein is no pleasure, viii. 8. that they should not dwell in the Lord's land, ix. 3. And again, I will drive them out of my house, I will love them no more: my God will cast them away, because they did not hearken to him, and they shall be wanderers among the nations, ver. 15. 17.

And yet that God designed not to exclude them from the blessings promised in the days of the Messiah, or from being called into the church of Christ, is as evident from many expressions, and gracious promises of God, recorded in that prophet, concerning the same tribes of Israel; as, v. g. that the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered: and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God, i. 10, &c. And again, I will betroth thee unto me for ever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness and judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies; I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness, and thou shalt know the Lord, ii. 19, 20. I will have mercy on her which had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God, ver. 23. And again, Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king, and shall fear the Lord, and his goodness, in the latter days, iii. 5. (See xiv. 4. 8.) Now these prophecies being not to be fulfilled upon them, by bringing them into their own land; it seemeth reasonable to conceive, they might be fulfilled by calling them to embrace the gospel; and that by doing so were those words fulfilled, I will call them my people, who were not my people, not only towards the gentiles, Rom. ix. 24—26. but also towards those Israelites of whom they primarily were spoken, 1 Pet. ii. 10. And to this the inscription seems to lead us, it being ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ, To the twelve tribes, to those who are in the dispersion. That the places whither these ten tribes were carried by the Assyrians, were well known to the other Jews, see proved by Dr. Lightfoot; that in Mesopotamia, Media, and Babylon, where they were placed, the Jews abounded in a very great measure. Josephus* testifies, they had there three famous universities, Neerda, Sorana, and Pombeditha. We therefore have great reason to believe the gospel was then preached among them by the apostles of the circumcision. See the preface to the First Epistle of St. John.

There is one farther observation taken notice of by Grotius and Dr. Hammond, That some part of this Epistle seems to be directed, not only to believers, but even to the unbelieving Jews, especially the six first verses of the fifth chapter, where he saith, Ye have killed the Just, and he doth not resist you; which cannot well agree to the converted Jews, to whom he seems to turn his speech, in these following words, Be patient, therefore, brethren, ver. 7.: yea, the whole third and fourth chapters may be equally directed to both; the name of brethren suiting to both, when used by a Jew writing to them, Rom. ix. 2.

§. IV. As for the occasion of this Epistle, it seemeth to be written upon two accounts:

First, To correct the pernicious errors both in doctrine and manners, which had crept into the theology of the Jews, and had an evil influence on their practice. See note on ii. 11. and ver. 14. to the end of the chapter.

Secondly, To comfort and establish the sincere believers, under the pressures which they then suffered, or were shortly to expect from the unbelieving Jews, or their false brethren. Where note,

That though the Jews, from the beginning of the apostles' preaching, were still incensed against the Christians; yet seeing Christianity, whilst they continued preaching to the Jews, did not spread much among other nations, and since the Jews were under restraints in the time of Caius, who had no good affection to them, they could not proceed far in shewing their hatred to the Christian faith. What persecutions therefore happened in those early times, concerned only the churches of Judea, or thereabouts, or spent themselves on the chief leaders and assertors of the Christian faith, St. Stephen, St. James, St. Peter, and St. Paul, or on the churches converted from the Jewish synagogues, and reached no farther than the places where they were converted; and though they were begun by instigation of the Jews, yet were they chiefly managed by the heathen powers, or by their own countrymen. For about the thirty-ninth year of Christ, then had the churches peace throughout all Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, Acts ix. 31. and so they seem to have continued till after the council of Jerusalem, the churches being then established in the faith, and increasing in number daily, Acts xvi. 5. Yea, when Paul comes to Rome, he receives all that came unto him for two whole years, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching the things which concerned the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence, no man forbidding him, Acts xxviii. 30, 31. So that at least till the fourth or fifth year of Nero, the gospel was freely preached at Rome, without any contradiction either of the Romans or the Jews: but then, in his sixth year, "afflicti suppliciis Christiani," the Christians were subjected to punishment by him, saith Suetonius;* "and it seems very probable (saith Dr. Lightfoot), that even then Nero had by some act or edict suppressed Christianity, not only at Rome, but also at Judea;" as he gathers from that clause in Tacitus, Repressaque in præsens exitiabilis superstitio, rursus erumpebat, non modo per Judæam originem ejus mali, sed per urbem etiam; which shews, that before the persecution began, in the tenth of Nero, of which Tacitus there speaks, Christianity had been by him suppressed, not at Rome only, but Judea. Here then some place St. Peter's πύρωσις πρὸς πειρασμὸν, burning for trial, which forwarded the defection which was so general in the churches of the Jews that had received the gospel, they falling to Moses again, or joining the adhesion to the law with the profession of the gospel, that so they might retain their liberty, the religion of the Jews not being at all suppressed by him, and that they might escape the rage of the Jews; who doubtless, by his example, would be induced to express that hatred they had still borne against the Christians. The same Nero, in his tenth year, renews this persecution of the Christians; and this he did (saith Orosius†) not only at Rome, but by his edict, through all the provinces of his empire; and this encouraged the Jews every where to shew their utmost rage against all those of their religion, whether Jews or proselytes, who had embraced the faith of Christ sincerely; and the more they drew nigh to their final desolation, the more did Satan enhance their fury against those Christians whom he found the fatal enemies and overthrowers of his kingdom.

§. V. Note, lastly, that whereas Mr. Le Clerc saith, note on v. 3. "that St. James doth not speak here to the Jews who had embraced the faith in Palestine, but to those who were scattered abroad," seeing he speaks to the whole twelve tribes, I doubt not but these of Palestine must be included; but when he adds, that those "Jews only who lived in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries, and had risen up in arms against the Romans, were destroyed by them," suggesting that the Jews, dispersed through the other parts of the Roman empire, received no harm—this is a great mistake; for these being the days of vengeance upon the unbelievers of that nation, God's severe judgments reached them every where, as we may fully learn from the rueful account Josephus‡ gives us of their calamities throughout all their dispersions: "for (saith he) when the Romans had no enemies left in Judea, the danger reached, πολλοῖς καὶ τῶν ἀπωτάτω κατοικούντων, to many of them living the remotest from it; for many of them perished at Alexandria, and Cyrene, and in other cities of Egypt, and throughout all Syria." And Eleazer, in Josephus,§ having reckoned up many places where they were cruelly slaughtered, concludes thus, Μακρὸν ἂν εἴη νῦν ἰδίᾳ λέγειν, it would be too long to speak of all these places in particular.

We know from Tacitus,‖ and others, that the Jews were a nation generally hated by all about them, and by those among whom they lived, partly because they used, "ritus contrarios cæteris mortalibus," rites contrary to all other nations, and spake and thought contemptuously of their deities and worship; partly because they bore "adversus omnes alios hostile odium," the greatest hatred to men of other nations, and shewed the greatest contempt of them, calling them dogs, and thinking it unlawful to converse with them, and a pollution even to touch them. All nations, therefore, where they lived, must, upon all occasions, be ready to rise up against them, as we may learn from the slaughter of them in Cæsarea,* Damascus, Scythopolis, and throughout all the cities of Syria, about the beginning of the war, of which Josephus gives us the account. When therefore the Romans were very much incensed against them, because when other nations had submitted to their empire, soli Judæi non cessissent, they dared to rebel, must they not be sure to suffer in every province where they dwelt, not only from the Roman governors, but also from those people in every nation who bore so great hatred to them? And hence Eusebius† informs us, that they did thus suffer in all other places.

Secondly, Josephus‡ doth confess, that the Jews in Judea did expect, ἅπαν τὸ ὑπὲρ Εὐφράτην ὁμόφυλον ἡμῖν συνεπαρθήσεσθαι, that all of their own nation, even beyond Euphrates, should be assistant to them in this war: and doubtless they were not wholly disappointed in their expectation; for in their war commenced under Hadrian, Dion§ expressly says, That the Jews out of all nations came to their help. We therefore reasonably may conceive, this also was so in the former war under Vespasian and Titus, and then we cannot doubt that they who shared in the war must also bear a share in the calamities it brought upon that nation, in those days of vengeance, which befel them for their infidelity, and the rejection of the true Messiah, of which the Jews who lived in other nations were as guilty as those who lived in Judea.

§. VI. And hence also I return an answer to an objection which I foresee may be made against my interpretation of some passages in the fourth and fifth chapters of this Epistle, viz. that I restrain them to what was done to and by the Jews in Judea; whereas this Epistle is written to the twelve tribes which were scattered abroad, ver. 1.

For, first, as all the Jews of the dispersion were under the government of the Sanhedrin, and after, of the patriarch of the Jews residing in Judea, and obeyed his pleasure; so many, both of Jews and proselytes, went up out of all nations to their feasts: when the Holy Ghost fell down on the apostles at the day of Pentecost, we find them there, Acts ii. and when Jerusalem was besieged, at their paschal feast;‖ and so, even upon that account, they must be somewhat concerned in what was done and suffered in Judea; and if they sided with them in that war, as I have shewed it probable they did, they must be more concerned in these matters. But,

Secondly, Josephus tells us, that they had wars about the same time, in many places of their dispersion, with the gentiles; that when the Alexandrians, in the reign of Nero, had impeached three of their brethren as enemies and spies,* ἤρθη πᾶν τὸ Ἰουδαϊκὸν ἐπὶ τὴν ἄμυναν, all the Jews there rose up to their aid; and that Tiberius Alexander, the governor of the city, commanded the Roman legions to slay them, καὶ τὰς κτήσεις αὐτῶν διαρπάζειν, καὶ τὰς οἰκίας καταφλέγειν, and to seize upon their goods, and burn their houses; which they did, killing fifty thousand of them on the spot: that the Jews invading the cities and villages of Syria, the Syrians fell upon them in all their cities, and were especially moved thereunto by covetousness, τὰς γὰρ οὐσίας τῶν ἀναιρεθέντων ἀδεῶς διήρπαζον, for they fell boldly upon the substance of the slain: and in these, and all the other places mentioned by Josephus, the Jews were as forward to take up arms against the gentiles, as they were to suppress the Jews. Here then is a sufficient account of their wars and tumults, mentioned chap. iv. and of their riches being corrupted, and their flesh eaten by fire, chap. v.

CHAP. I.

1. [1] JAMES, a servant of God (the Father) and of the Lord Jesus Christ, (sendeth) [2] to the twelve tribes which are [3] scattered abroad, greeting.

2. My brethren, count it (matter, not of sorrow, but of) all joy when (through the Divine permission) ye fall [4] into divers temptations (i. e. afflictions from the world).

3. Knowing this, that (this outward trouble, sent for) [5] the trial of your faith (by the help of God's overruling grace, and the aid of his Holy Spirit then especially residing on you, 1 Pet. iv. 14.) worketh (in you) patience.

4. But (and) let patience have her perfect work (in you), that [6] ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing (to make you perfect in Christ Jesus, and entire as to all Christian graces.

5. Εἰ δὲ, And) if any of you lack wisdom (how to exercise and preserve this patience, under the various temptations he may be subject to), let him ask (it) of (that) God, who giveth to all men liberally (whatsoever he sees needful for us), and upbraideth (us) not (for want of this wisdom); and (if he duly ask) [7] it shall be given him.

6. But (then) let him (take care to) [8] ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth (in the time of temptation) is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed (to and fro by every temptation).

7. For let not (μὴ γὰρ, let not then) that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

8. (For) a double-minded man is unstable in all his ways, (and therefore cannot pray in faith, as he that would be heard must do.

9. And if temptations be matter of the Christian's joy,) let the brother of [9] low degree (impoverished by them) rejoice (still) in that he is exalted, (to be rich in faith, and an heir of the kingdom of God, ii. 5. Luke vi. 20.)

10. But (let) the [10] rich (rejoice), in that he is made low: because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away (Gr. for as the flower of the grass he shall pass away, when it is scorched with the sun).

11. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways.

12. Blessed is the man that (thus) endureth temptation (for the sake of Christ): for when he is tried (Gr. δόκιμος γενόμενος, being approved), he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him, (i. e. being, by his patient enduring of these afflictions for the sake of Christ, approved as one that loves him more than the world, he shall receive the reward promised to them that do so.

13. As for the other sorts of temptation unto sin,) let no man say when he is (thus) tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man (to it):

14. [11] But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own lust, and enticed (Gr. being drawn and enticed by his own lust).

15. Then when lust hath conceived (i. e. obtained any consent to, or approbation and good-liking to the desire of the sensual appetite), it bringeth forth (and engageth the soul in) sin: and sin, when it is finished (in the deliberate outward action, or such endeavours to perform and execute it, as want nothing on the part of the will to the completion of it, and much more when by a customary practice it becomes habitual), [12] bringeth forth death (the wages of sin).

16. Do not err, my beloved brethren (by ascribing your sin, or your temptations to it, unto God).

17. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights (the light of nature and of grace), with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, (from good to evil; he therefore never will deny those gifts to them that duly ask him, nor will he ever be wanting in his grace and favour to them that love him, and much less will he tempt any one to depart from him.

18. For) of his own will begat he us (Jews) [13] by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his (new) creatures (we therefore have little cause to think he will do any thing to destroy that life, or deny us any thing which he sees necessary to preserve that life, which he so freely gave).

19. Wherefore, my beloved brethren (being regenerated by this word of truth), let every man be swift to hear (it), [14] slow to speak, (ver. 26. or be a teacher of it, iii. 1.) [15] slow to wrath (or contention about it):

20. For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God (i. e. it tends not to beget or to improve that faith by which we are righteous before God, but rather to hinder it in ourselves and others).

21. Wherefore, lay apart all filthiness (all evil lustings, ver. 14.) and superfluity of naughtiness, (all the distempers of your tongue, and of your angry passions, ver. 19.) and receive with meekness the [16] ingrafted word, which (being thus received) is able to save your souls.

22. But (that it may have this effect upon you) be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your ownselves (by thinking that sufficient to procure favour with God).

23. [17] For if any (man) be a hearer of the word (only), and not a doer (of it), he is like unto a man beholding his (own) natural face (which he was born with) in a glass:

* De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 36.

24. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth (presently) his way, and straightway forgets what manner of man he was.

25. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, (i. e. the gospel, which gives the spirit of liberty, and freedom from the power of sin and death, and from the spirit of bondage, Rom. viii. 2. 15. 2 Cor. iii. 17.) and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed.

26. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, (from bitter zeal, contentions, and imprecations, iii. 10. 14.) [18] but deceiveth (Gr. deceiving) his own heart (thinks his zeal for God will bear him out in all this), that man's religion is vain, (iii. 14, 15.)

27. Pure religion and undefiled before God and (i. e. who is) the Father is (visible in) this, (that it engages the Christian) [19] to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. ΙΑ'ΚΩΒΟΣ, James.] That this was James an apostle, is confirmed from the testimony of Eusebius,* who declares of that James to whom the ancients ascribed this Epistle, that he was the brother of the Lord. The same we learn from the Syriac, Arabic, Vulgar, and Ethiopic versions, by all which he is styled James the apostle.

[2] Ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς, To the twelve tribes.] That some of the ten tribes remained in, and some of them returned to, the land of Israel, we are assured from the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even to Naphtali, purged by Josiah from their idols; (2 Chron. xxxiv. 6, 7.) as also from the money sent in to repair the house of the Lord from Manasseh, Ephraim, and the remnant of Israel, (ver. 9.) from the mention made of the children of Israel, that were come again out of their captivity, (Esd. vi. 21.) and the sin-offering made by Ezra, at the dedication of the temple, of twelve goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel, (v. 17.) and from these following words, viii. 25. The children of those which had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, offered twelve goats for a sin-offering: and, lastly, from the mention of the twelve tribes by the apostle Paul, who instantly served God day and night. (Acts xxvi. 7.)

[3] Ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ, Which are scattered abroad.] That the Jews were dispersed throughout the world, we learn from the words of Agrippa, in his oration to them, who tells them, that † there was not a nation upon earth where some part of them were not seated; and that if they of Judea should rebel, all of them that resided in other places would be destroyed, and every city would be filled with the blood of them: from the words of Strabo, cited by Josephus,‡ that it was not easy to find an eminent place in the whole world where the Jews did not reside: from Philo,§ in his oration against Flaccus, where he makes mention, τῶν πανταχόθεν τῆς οἰκουμένης Ἰουδαίων, of the Jews dispersed throughout all the world: adding, that one region could not contain the Jews, but * they dwelt in most of the flourishing cities of Asia, and in Europe, in the islands, and in the continents, not much less in number than the inhabitants; and introducing Agrippa † interceding to Caius for them, as inhabiting in the most celebrated parts of Africa, Asia, and Europe. And even Cicero,‡ in his oration for another Flaccus, declares, that the gold which the Jews sent to their temple at Jerusalem, was sent from Italy, and all the other provinces of the Roman empire.

[4] Ver. 2. Πειρασμοῖς ποικίλοις, Into divers temptations.] Temptations, saith Œcumenius, are of two kinds; 1. Such as lead to sin, which the lusts of the flesh and the love of riches produce in us, (1 Tim. vi. 9.) against which our Lord instructs us to pray that we enter not into them; and of these the apostle begins to discourse, ver. 13. Or, 2. such as are sent for the trial of our constancy and sincerity in the faith; and to our patience and perseverance under these, is promised a great reward in heaven: and of these the apostle speaketh here, and ver. 12. (See Luke xxii. 28. Heb. iv. 15.)

[5] Ver. 3. Τὸ δοκίμιον ὑμῶν, The trial of your faith,] Being attended with these assistances, and consolations of the Holy Ghost, and these firm hopes of a most glorious reward of all our sufferings, tends naturally to make us bear them patiently (as the apostle speaketh here). But then it is as true, that ὑπομονὴ κατεργάζεται τὴν δοκιμήν, (Rom. v. 4.) i. e. that this patience worketh the trial; and by that, in good Christians, the experience of their sincerity and constancy in the faith; and therefore it concerns them not to faint under these tribulations.

[6] Ver. 4. Τέλειοι καὶ ὁλόκληροι, That you may be perfect and entire.] For where there is the perfect work of patience, there must be a strong faith as the foundation of it, a steady virtue, or Christian fortitude, enabling us thus to sustain these fiery trials; an exact knowledge of our duty, to bear these afflictions with a meek and quiet spirit, with forgiveness of, love to, and prayer for, them that persecute us, which includes the height of charity, under the highest provocations: a great love to God, for whose sake we suffer, and strong affection to his service; a greater fear of his displeasure, than of the wrath of man; an entire trust and dependance on him, and a full resignation to his will of providence, in which consists the life of godliness; an exact temperance, as to the honours, pleasures, and temporal concernments of this life we lose by these our sufferings, and a true charity to our Christian brethren, for whose example and encouragement we do thus suffer. Now these are all the graces which the apostle Peter doth require to make us fruitful and perfect Christians. (2 Pet. i. 5—8.)

[7] Ver. 5. Δοθήσεται, It shall be given.] Hence it appears, that this wisdom depends not on our own skill or strength; nor can it be obtained without Divine assistance.

[8] Ver. 6—8. Αἰτείτω — μηδὲν διακρινόμενος — ἀνὴρ δίψυχος.] Who is the ἀνὴρ δίψυχος, καὶ διακρινόμενος, the double-minded, and the wavering man, we may learn from

Hermes,* who informs us, that visions and revelations are, διὰ τοὺς δεψύχους, for the double-minded, i. e. τοὺς διαλογιζομένους ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν, εἰ ἄρα ἐστὶ ταῦτα ἢ οὐκ ἔστιν, that is, for them who reason in their hearts, whether these things will be or not. And again,† "Credite Deo, qui estis dubii," Believe in God, you that are doubtful, for he can do all things. Woe to the doubtful, who have heard these things, and contemned them. And again,‡ They that doubt of God, they are the double-minded, who shall receive none of their requests. See the whole mandate to the same effect. And from that of Barnabas,§ touching him that walketh in the way of light, that οὐ μὴ διψυχήσῃ, he will not be doubtful whether a thing will be so, or not. From the like precept of the Apostolical Constitutions,‖ μὴ γίνου δίψυχος, Be not doubtful in thy prayer, whether thy petition will be heard, or not: and from St. Clement,¶ with whom οἱ δίψυχοι, the doubtful are, οἱ διστάζοντες περὶ τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ δυνάμεως, the distrusters of the power of God. This faith therefore relates to prayer, and is a firm belief that God will afford to his sincere servants, under all their sufferings for his sake, such aid as will enable them to bear them with true Christian patience, (1 Cor. x. 13.) and such wisdom as will direct them to improve these sufferings to his glory, and their good. He that doubts of this, will be now hoping, and anon desponding, apt to quit his dependance on God, and lean on his own wisdom, and ready to cast off that religion which subjects him to these temptations from which he expects no good issue; and therefore, wanting that faith in God which he has here made the condition of an acceptable prayer, &c. he cannot hope to obtain any thing of him.

[9] Ver. 9. Ὁ ταπεινὸς, The man of low degree,] In the Old Testament, is the poor and afflicted men. So עני is, in the Septuagint, πένης, ταπεινὸς, the poor, the afflicted, ענידה, πενία ταπείνωσις, poverty, or lowness of state. And this sense here is confirmed from the opposition of the rich to him.

[10] Ver. 10. Ὁ πλούσιος, The rich.] Let God, saith Philo, be the matter of thy chief joy, not riches, honour, strength, or beauty, these being μαραινόμενα τρόπον τινὰ πρὶν ἀνθῆσαι βεβαίως, things which wither before they are fully grown up. Let then the Christian consider, that the things he loseth for the sake of Christ, are only things of such a fading nature; whereas he doth secure, by his perseverance, an everlasting treasure reserved for him in the heavens; and then he may rejoice in his humiliation. Note also an ellipsis of the verb καυχάσθω, let him rejoice, ver. 10. to be taken from ver. 9. so, John xv. 4. 1 Cor. iv. 15. Gal. ii. 7. Eph. i. 12.

[11] Ver. 14.] Note here, that the desires, or lustings of the sensual appetite, put us only under a state of temptation, not of actual sin: they are indeed the root of sin, but so is temptation to sin, and the suggestions of Satan; but they are not our sins, till we consent to them: they are not a transgression of the law, for there is no law given to the sensual appetite alone, but to the whole man, who cannot hinder sensual appetites from arising in him before he perceives them; but he can restrain the will from consenting to them as soon as he perceives them; and can refuse to admit of them, or suffer them to make stay in, or gain upon his mind, to contemplate them with delight, or assent to them: and this being all he can do, must be all he is obliged by the law to do. There be many scriptures urged against this opinion in the Synopsis, but they are too impertinent to be insisted on.

[12] Ver. 15. Ἀποκύει θάνατον, Bringeth forth death:] i. e. Not only deserveth death, for so doth the consent of the will; but it renders us obnoxious to death, and will end in it, without repentance. Hence therefore note, that not only the soul hardened in sin, and given up to the frequent practice of the same sin, is guilty of mortal sin, but every deliberate sinful action done against the convictions and checks of conscience, till by repentance it is retracted, puts us under that state, as being a breach of the gospel-covenant of sincere and impartial obedience, a departing of the heart from God, and a wilful and presumptuous sin: and therefore David after his adultery and murder prays, that God would create in him a clean heart, and renew in him the right spirit. Though therefore God in mercy may and will deal with such men, not according to their particular failures, but according to the general tenor of their lives; yet can they claim no covenant-right to such a favour, till they have thoroughly repented of such wilful sins, and returned to the sincere performance of their duty.

[13] Ver. 18. Λόγῳ ἀληθείας, By the word of truth.] Here is a plain evidence, that the word of God is the ordinary means of our regeneration, it being the word preached, the word we are to hear, (ver. 19. 22.) and to receive with meekness, by which the new-birth is by God wrought in us, and which, saith the apostle, is able to save the soul. And it is surely a great disparagement to the word of God, to think that his persuasions, admonitions, exhortations, and threats, should be all insufficient to prevail with us to turn from our sinful courses, and to turn to him; when all men who do use these methods towards their children, servants, friends, or relations, do it in hopes they shall be successful by these means: only this is not so to be understood, as to exclude the blessing and co-operation of God with the word preached, or the assistance of his Holy Spirit, setting it home upon our hearts; provided this be not by way of physical but moral operation, by that illumination of the understanding from the word, which produceth that renovation in the spirit of the mind, by which we are enabled to discern and to approve the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God, (Rom. xii. 2. Eph. iv. 23.) to discern what is acceptable to the Lord, (Eph. v. 10.) to understand what the will of the Lord is, (ver. 17.) the things that are most excellent. And if the word of God be a perfect rule, able to make us wise unto salvation, and furnish us for every good work, sure the good Spirit may, by his suggestion of the truths delivered in it, by bringing them to our remembrance, and opening our understanding to perceive the Scriptures, remove that darkness which is in our minds, either by natural corruption, or by the mists which Satan casts upon them; whence the apostle doth inform us, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. that if the gospel be hidden from any to whom it is preached, it is because the god of this world hath blinded the conceptions of their minds, that the light of the glorious gospel should not shine into them. And, secondly, by making deep impressions on the mind, of the advantages and rewards promised to our conversion, and sincere obedience, and the tremendous evils threatened to the disobedient; and bringing these things oft to our remembrance, which, in the Scripture-phrase, is putting these laws in our minds, and writing them upon our hearts, that we may not depart from him, Heb. viii. 10. (See note on that place.) For what reason can be given, why the Spirit of wisdom, having enlightened the eyes of our understanding, to know what is the hope of our calling, and the glorious riches of the inheritance of the saints, (Eph. i. 18.) and these things being as firmly believed, and made thus present to our minds, should not have greater prevalence upon our wills to obedience, than any temporal concerns to yield obedience to the laws of sin? It is certain Satan can tempt us no other way, than by suggesting some temporal allurements and advantages, or some temporal losses and affrightments to us. Since then the Scripture doth assure us, this is our victory over the world, even our faith, (1 John v. 4.) even that faith which is the firm expectation of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, (Heb. xi. 1.) why should not these objects of our faith, presented to us, and impressed on us by the Holy Spirit, be more powerful to baffle all the temptations of sin, Satan, and the world? If beyond this there be some physical and irresistible operation on God's part, requisite to make men know the things which belong to their peace, and knowing, to choose the good, and refuse the evil, this being not wrought in them who are not born anew; why is the want of this new-birth, and this spiritual renovation, so oft imputed to men's want of consideration, and of laying to heart the things propounded to them? Their not inclining their ear to wisdom, and applying their heart to understanding? Their hatred of knowledge, their rejecting the counsel of God, and not choosing the fear of the Lord? (Prov. i. 24, 25. 29, 30.) Why is it said, that they continue thus unreformed, because they would have none of God's counsel, but despised all his reproofs; because they would not frame their doings to turn unto the Lord? To omit innumerable expressions of the like import, see note on Rom. x. 17. 1 Pet. i. 23.

[14] Ver. 19. Βραδὺς εἰς τὸ λαλῆσαι, Slow to speak.] It was the imputation which the heathens cast upon the Christians, that they were in publico muti, not being inclined palam loqui, to speak openly of their religion: and this is confessed by Christians * to be true of the laity, who were not by office engaged to preach it to the world; that it was not their custom to assert and defend their religion publicly, but only to give an answer to them who required a reason of the hope that was in them: and in this sense good commentators do expound these words, viz. as an admonition to be slow to speak of Divine things, and much more to be teachers of them; but in the usual sense it agrees with that of Bias; † Μίσει τὸ τάχυ λαλεῖν, μὴ ἁμαρτῇ, μετάνοια γὰρ ἀκολουθεῖ, Be averse from rash speaking, lest thou offend, for thou wilt repent of it; as θυμοῦ κρατεῖν, to curb our angry passions, agrees with the following words, be slow to wrath.

[15] Βραδὺς εἰς ὀργήν, Slow to wrath.] This was an admonition needful for the Jewish zealots, who were ἐξ ἐριθείας, of contentious spirits; (see note on Rom. ii. 8.) filled with wrath against the teachers of Christianity, and especially against those who denied the necessity of circumcising the gentiles, or requiring them to observe the law of Moses: (Acts xiii. 45. xvii. 5.) * They compelling all men to be circumcised, if they would abide with them; and looking upon this as a thing of absolute necessity, without which nothing else would satisfy them.

Now these disputes naturally tended to obstruct that faith, by which men were justified, and not by circumcision, or the works of the law, and which in the Epistles of St. Paul is still styled the righteousness of God. (See note on Rom. i. 17.) 2. They were very prone to set up for teachers of the law, though they understood not aright those things of which they spake; (1 Tim. i. 7. Rom. ii. 18.) and this might give occasion to the other admonition here, to be slow to speak, and iii. 1.: they also were incontinent, and very prone to lustings and to fornications; (see note on Rom. ii. 22. 2 Tim. iii. 5. Heb. xii. 16.) and therefore fitly are admonished to lay aside all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness.

[16] Ver. 21. Τὸν ἔμφυτον λόγον, The ingrafted word,] Saith Œcumenius, is that principle of reason by which we are enabled to discern good from evil; but of that the apostle would not say, that it is able to save our souls. But the apostles, or preachers of the Christian faith, being said, φυτεύειν, to plant the word among their hearers, (1 Cor. iii. 6—8.) the ingrafted word seems to be the word planted in the heart of believers by the ministers of Christ, which St. Barnabas styles, τὴν ἔμφυτον δωρεὰν τῆς διδαχῆς αὐτοῦ, the ingrafted gift of his doctrine, (§. 9. p. 6.) So they who made the Jews understand the law read to them, are said, ἐμφυσιοῦν ἅμα τὴν ἀνάγνωσιν, to imprint upon them the knowledge or remembrance of what they read, Esd. ix. 48. 55. Against this sense it is objected, that the word thus planted in us is not properly λόγος ἔμφυτος, but ἐμφυτευθείς· but since νόμος ἔμφυτος is the law planted in the heart by God, I think this criticism not sufficient to destroy the sense of the words here given, especially if we consider that all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness must be first laid aside, that we may be fitted to receive with meekness this λόγος ἔμφυτος, ingrafted word, which shews it cannot import any thing which is by nature always in us.

[17] Ver. 23.] That many of the Jews had conceived an opinion, that even the study and knowledge of the law would procure them a reward in heaven, see note on Rom. ii. 13.

[18] Ver. 26. Ἀπατῶν, &c. Deceiving his own heart.] That the unbelieving Jews had a zeal for God, the apostle bears them record, Rom. x. 2. but then that zeal wrought so great a bitterness of spirit in them, that in those very synagogues, in which they met to bless God, they imprecated a curse upon the Christians, created anew after his image; (iii. 10.) I being zealous for God, as all you are this day (saith St. Paul), persecuted this way unto the death, Acts xxii. 3, 4. and in thus doing, they thought they did God service, John xvi. 2. zeal to what was good, committed all manner of wickedness, and accounted the worst of evils good: and yet Eleazer,* the ringleader of them, represents them as persons who had cause to hope they should be by God preserved, as having not offended against him, and being guilty of no fault, and being teachers of others. That the believing Jews, who urged upon the gentiles the necessity of circumcision, had a zeal for God, we learn from Gal. iv. 17, 18.: yet that they had the spirit of contention and envy, (Phil. i. 15, 16.) and were deceitful workers, the apostle doth inform us: so that neither of them were truly religious; and to those latter the apostle seems chiefly to speak in these words, If ye have bitter zeal and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth, &c.

[19] Ver. 27. Ἐπισκέπτεσθαι, To visit the fatherless and widows.] It is very true, that Ignatius† saith of some who maintained opinions contrary to the grace of God come unto us, that they had no regard to charity, to the widow, and to the orphan, to the oppressed, to those that were in bonds, to the hungry and thirsty: but then, as it is not manifest from his words that these were the gnostics, nothing hinders, but what the apostle here speaks of may be also true of the Jews, who, as Josephus notes,‡ were great enemies one to another, and wanted mercy most of all, or to those zealots who spared none, who would not be of their opinion, and their bitter zeal.

CHAP. II.

1. MY brethren, have not [1] the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, [2] with respect of persons.

2. For if there come [3] into your assemblies (or consistories for judicature) a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment;

3. And ye have respect unto him that weareth gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool:

4. [4] Are ye not then partial in yourselves? (Do you not both put a difference among yourselves on these accounts,) and (also) are become [5] judges of evil thoughts (in thinking that the rich is to be preferred in judgment, and the poor despised, ver. 6. on these accounts)?

5. Hearken, my beloved brethen, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him (and are they fit to be despised by you, who are so highly honoured and enriched by him)?

6. But (so it is, that) ye have despised the poor, (and had a partial respect to the rich: and yet) do not (these) rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seats (on the account of your Christian profession)?

7. Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called?

8. If (in this matter) you fulfil the royal law (which is) according to [6] the Scripture (saying), Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well (for then ye will not be guilty of this respect of persons; for you would not be despised, because you are poor, or have a rich man preferred before you in judgment):

9. But if ye have (such) respect to persons (as to honour the rich and despise the poor, in judicial causes), ye commit sin, and are convinced of (or, by) the law (now mentioned) as transgressors (of God's law in the general; this law comprehending all the duties of the second table; Rom. xiii. 9. Matt. xxii. 39.)

10. For whosoever shall keep the whole law (in other matters), and yet (knowingly) offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

11. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become [7] a transgressor of the law (of love, mentioned ver. 8. which comprehends all the duties of the second table, in which here the apostle instanceth).

12. So (therefore) speak ye, and so do, as they that (know they) shall be judged [8] by the law of liberty.

13. [9] For he shall have judgment without mercy, who hath shewed no mercy (and so hath highly thwarted the great law of love); and mercy rejoiceth against (or triumpheth over) judgment, (i. e. it enables the merciful man to rejoice, as being free from the judgment of condemnation from that God, who to the merciful will shew himself merciful, Psal. xviii. 27.

14. And let not any Jew or Christian think his faith sufficient to justify and save him, without these works of charity and mercy; for) what doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith (in God, ver. 19. or in Christ), and hath not works (to evidence his faith); can (such a naked, fruitless) faith save him?

15. If a brother or a sister be naked, and destitute of daily food,

16. And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled (wishing only that they may be so); notwithstanding ye give them not those things which be needful for (the clothing or feeding) the body; what doth it profit (them to hear your kind wishes)?

17. Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead (fruitless and lifeless as these words), being alone (without works shewing the truth of it).

18. [10] Yea, a man may say (to such a solifidian), Thou hast (in thy pretensions) faith, and I have (real) works: shew me thy faith (of which thou boastest) without thy works (which thou canst never do; since faith being seated in the heart can only be discovered by its effects), and I will shew thee my faith by my works (as the cause is demonstrated by the effect).

19. Thou (being a Jew) believest that there is one God; thou (in that) doest well, (but doest no more than the very devils: for) the * devils also believe, and tremble (and if thou hath no better faith than they, thou hast the same reason to tremble which they have).

20. But wilt thou know, O vain man (who boastest of a faith destitute of works), that faith without works is dead, (and so unable to justify and save thee? see it in the example of that very Abraham, in thy relation to whom thou so confidest.)

22. Seest thou how (Gr. Thou seest (by this example) that) faith wrought with his works (to produce them), and by works was faith made perfect (in him)?

23. And the Scripture was (again) fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it (viz. that faith which produced these works) [12] was imputed to him for righteousness: and (upon that account) he was called the Friend of God.

24. Ye see then how that by works (proceeding from faith) a man is justified, and not by faith only (alone without them).

25. Likewise also, was not [13] Rahab the harlot justified by works (proceeding from her faith), when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way?

26. (And so it must be in all other persons who would be saved, they must shew their faith by their works:) [14] for as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also (and therefore cannot save us, or give life unto us).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. ΤΗ'Ν πίστιν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τῆς δόξης, The faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory.] This version seems obnoxious to this exception, that the pronoun ἡμῶν will not suffer the word Lord to be joined with glory; therefore that which renders the words thus, The faith of the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, or, Hold not the glorious faith of the Lord Jesus Christ with respect of persons, seems to be the better version, and more agreeable to the design of the apostle, as giving the best reason against the accepting persons on the account of their riches, or their gay attire; because their faith hath clothed them with a greater and more valuable glory, which renders them more honourable than any riches or gay clothing could do. For, this faith, saith the apostle, is the ministration of glory, and by it we all beholding the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 3. 18. (see the note there): and whom God hath justified by faith, he hath also glorified, by giving them this Spirit of glory, Rom. viii. 30. (See the note there.)

[2] Ἐν προσωποληψίαις, With respect of persons.] Προσωποληψία is the respect of persons in judgment, not purely according to the merits of the cause, but according to external respects, which relate not to it. As for instance, the dread of any man's power, or the fear of what he may do to us, if we judge against him. So, Lev. xix. 14. Thou shalt not honour the person of the great, or respect the person of the poor; in justice shalt thou judge thy neighbour. And, Deut. i. 17. Ye shall not respect persons in judgment, ye shall hear alike the small and the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man, for the judgment is the Lord's. Or, 2. the poverty of any man, which renders him less able to suffer the punishment of his injustice; Thou shalt not respect a poor man in his cause. (Exod. xxiii. 3.) 3. It is the respecting persons in judgment, by reason of any gift, or hope of gain, by favouring any cause; Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift. (Deut. xvi. 19.) Or, 4. by reason of relation, affinity, friendship, or affection. In spiritual or evangelical matters, it is to have regard to men, in reference to things, which render them neither better nor worse, more or less acceptable in the sight of God. As for instance, to regard them, 1. in respect to their nation, and their offspring; Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him: (Acts x. 31.) he will have no respect to nations, or external professions, in his future recompences. (Rom. ii. 6. 10.) Or, 2. with regard to their condition, as being masters, or servants: hence masters are bid to deal with their servants, as knowing they have a Master in heaven, with whom is no respect of persons: (Eph. vi. 9.) and servants to be just to their masters; because he that is unjust shall receive for the wrong that he hath done, and there is no respect of persons with God. (Colos. iii. 25. 1 Pet. i. 17.) Or, 3. to their quality; for God accepteth not the persons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor; for they are all the works of his hands. (Job xxxiv. 19.) And this is the thing here censured.

[3] Ver. 2. Εἰς τὴν συναγωγὴν, Into your assembly.] That here the apostle speaketh of consistories for civil judicatures, is argued, 1. from the accepting of persons, mentioned ver. 1. which in the Old Testament and the New, as often as it is applied to men, respecteth human judicatures. 2. From the footstool, mentioned ver. 3. which obtained a place in their judicial consistories, and which was proper to princes on their thrones, and judges on their tribunals. 3. From the judges, mentioned ver. 4. and the κριτήρια, or judgment-seats, ver. 6. 4. From the law violated by this respect of persons, ver. 8, 9. and, lastly, from the canon of the Jews, by which it is provided, "that when the rich and poor have a suit together in their consistories, either both must sit, or both stand, to avoid all marks of partiality." (R. Levi Barcinon, lib. cxlii. Juris Hebraici.)

Yet because the Jewish Christians then had no distinct churches of their own, much less any with such distinct seats for men of rank, or such πρωτοκαθεδρίαι, chief places as the Jews had, (Matt. xxiii. 6.) both in Judea, Alexandria, and other places; (Campeg. Vitringa de Synag. vet. lib. i. cap. 9.) but rather assembled still in the Jewish synagogues, where there was a Beth din, or house of judgment, where the head of the synagogue, and the seniors that assisted him, sat to give judgment on offenders, and where they were brought before them, and scourged for their offences (Matt. x. 17. xxiii. 34. Acts xxii. 19. xxvi. 11. see the notes there); the assembly here mentioned might be a Jewish synagogue. Moreover, the Jews, living among the gentiles, retained still a jurisdiction over men of their own nation and religion, even as to matrimonial and pecuniary, as well as religious causes; and so the Jewish Christians might be drawn before their judgment-seats on those accounts: (ver. 6.) this being long after forbidden by a law of Honorius and Theodosius. (Theod. Cod. 16. tit. 8. leg. 22. vid. not. Gothofr. p. 240.)

[4] Ver. 4. Καὶ οὐ διεκρίθητε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς;] Do ye not put a difference or discrimination among yourselves on those accounts which are alien from the cause? That this is the frequent sense of the word διακρινόμενοι and διακρίνεσθαι, see Acts xv. 9. where οὐδὲν διέκρινε is rendered, He put no difference betwixt us and them. And Jude 22. where we read thus, Of some have compassion, διακρινόμενοι, making a difference. (See note on Rom. xiv. 23.)

[5] Κριταὶ διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν, Judges of evil thoughts.] i. e. Who pass judgment from your own evil thoughts, as judging the rich worthy of respect in judgment, for his gorgeous attire and outward appearance, and the poor fit to be despised for his outward meanness.

[6] Ver. 8. Νόμον βασιλικὸν, The royal law.] Not so much because it is the law of Christ, our king, it being a law of the Old Testament, as because it is the law which, of all laws which concern our neighbour, is most excellent, and which governs and moderates other laws, especially the ceremonial and positive laws, which are to give place to that of charity and mercy. Moreover, the Jews themselves so interpret this law, as to forbid the contempt of our brother, as you may see in Dr. Cartwright's Mellificium on this place.

[7] Ver. 11. Παραβάτης νόμου. A transgressor of the law.] Or, because the authority of the lawgiver is as much despised by the breaking any one of his laws, as by the violation of them all; and he that by it will not be restrained from the violation of it in one point, under the like temptations, will do it in another.

Note farther, that these words seem to be directly levelled against that loose doctrine of the Jewish doctors, mentioned by Dr. Pocock,* "that God gave so many commandments to them, that by doing any of them they might be saved." So Kimchi expounds those words of Hosea, Take away iniquity, וקח טוב, and receive good; i. e. saith he, receive in lieu of them any good, איזה מצוה, any commandment that we have done. It was a vulgar rule among them, saith Dr. Smith,† that men should "single out some one commandment of God's law, and therein especially exercise themselves, that so they might make God their friend by that, lest in others they should too much displease him." And he cites from them this rule,‡ "He that observes any one precept, it shall be well with him, and his days shall be prolonged, and he shall possess the earth." And this precept was with them usually that of the sabbath, of sacrifices, or of tithes, for these they looked upon as the great commandments of the law, not those of mercy and judgment, which in our Saviour's account were so.

[8] Ver. 12. Διὰ νόμου ἐλευθερίας, By the law of liberty.] By that law of love, which makes all men our neighbours, and frees us from those restraints, which the ceremonial law and the traditions of the Jewish doctors lay upon them, of confining their love, and freedom of converse, to those that were of their own nation, or were circumcised. The Jews had great need of these instructions; for as they held it unlawful to converse with publicans and sinners, (Luke xv. 1, 2.) though it were to instruct them in the way of life; so much more to come to, or converse with, one of another nation: (Acts x. 28.) yea, they would not suffer them to be among them, who would not be circumcised. (Vid. Joseph. in Vita sua, p. 1007. B.)

[9] Ver. 13.] Of this mercy the Jews were so unmindful, that Josephus§ having said, "they violated the laws of nature, and polluted the Divinity with their injustice towards men," he adds, "that no good affection was so entirely lost among them, ὡς ἔλεος, as that of mercy."

[10] Ver. 18.] The Greek in most copies runs thus, Δεῖξόν μοι τὴν πίστιν σου ἐκ τῶν ἔργων σου, κἀγὼ δείξω σοι ἐκ τῶν ἔργων μου τὴν πίστιν μου, i. e. Shew me thy faith by thy works, and I will shew thee by my works my faith: i. e. Shew me, by the proper fruits of it, the faith of which thou boastest, and I, by the same effects, will shew I have that faith also, though I boast not of it. But it is farther to be observed, that ἐκ τῶν ἔργων σου is left out in Œcumenius and one Greek copy; and, 2. that the Alexandrian MSS. and those perused by Curcellæus, read χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων σου, without thy works: so did the Vulgar, the Syriac, and the Ethiopic versions; and so the following words, ver. 20. Know, O vain man, that faith, χωρὶς ἔργων, without works is dead, seem to require; and this reading our translation follows.

[11] Ver. 21. Ἀνενέγκας, &c. When he offered his son Isaac.] This being a greater act of faith than that by which he was at first justified; for, that was only faith in God's promise, that he would raise up seed from his dead body, and the dead womb of Sarah. (Rom. iv. 20.) This was a belief, that he would raise up this very seed, consumed to ashes, from the dead; and therefore by this work was his faith made perfect, i. e. advanced to the greatest height; there being no more noble act of faith, than this of the resurrection of the dead consumed to ashes, and none by which we give more glory to God. (See Ecclus. xliv. 20.)

[12] Ver. 23. Ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην, Was accounted to him for righteousness.] That is, it engaged God to own him as a truly religious person, or one that did sincerely fear him, by saying, Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy only Son from me; (Gen. xxii. 15.) or as one, who upon trial had been found faithful; so Matthias, Was not Abraham found faithful in temptation, and that was accounted to him for righteousness? (1 Macc. ii. 52.) and also to deal with him as a righteous person, so as to renew the covenant made with him, and to establish it with an oath, (Gen. xxii. 16—18.) and to give him the high title, not only of his servant, but his Friend. (2 Chron. xx. 7. Isa. xli. 8.)

[13] Ver. 25. Ῥαὰβ ἡ πόρνη, Rahab the harlot.] That Rahab had a strong faith in God, the apostle testifies, by saying, By faith Rahab the harlot perished not with those that believed not, receiving the spies in peace; (Heb. xi. 31.) and this she shewed, by saying, The Lord your God he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath; (Josh. ii. 11.) and this she testified, by being so industrious to preserve the messengers, and to do all things agreed on betwixt them and her, for her safety.

[14] Ver. 26.] There have been many ways invented how to reconcile these words of St. James with the apostle Paul, asserting, that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law, Rom. iii. 28. As,

First, That when St. Paul saith, We are justified by faith, without the works of the law; and that, To him that worketh not, but believeth, faith is imputed unto him for righteousness, (Rom. iv. 5.) or to justification: justification, there ascribed to faith alone, imports only our absolution from condemnation, by reason of our past offences committed before faith, and our reconciliation to God, by the pardon, or not imputing them to believers. It consists, saith the apostle, in the remission of sins that are past, Rom. iii. 25. It is, saith Peter, the purgation of us from our old sins, 2 Pet. i. 9. It is effected by the death of Christ, procuring redemption for sins committed under the old covenant. (Heb. ix. 15.) This is apparent from the chief argument the apostle useth to prove the necessity, that both Jew and gentile should be justified freely by his grace, and not by the works of the law; because they were all under sin, all become guilty before God, all having sinned, and come short of the glory of God. (Rom. iii. 9. xix. 23.) Whereas, saith he, being justified by faith, we have peace with God, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God; (Rom. v. 1, 2.) therefore, chapter the third, he must be speaking of the condition of Jew and gentile before faith. So again, when the apostle saith, The Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise (of justification) by (the) faith of Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe (in him), Gal. iii. 22—24. Wherefore the law was (then) our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith (in him); ver. 25. But now, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster (i. e. under the pedagogy of the law); ver. 26. For ye are all the children of God, through faith in Christ Jesus; he plainly insinuates, that we cannot be justified by the works of the law; because the law leads us to Christ for justification, and ceaseth, now the way of justification by faith in Christ is made known. And again, We are justified by grace, not of works: for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus to good works: (Eph. ii. 8—10.) where the argument seems plainly to run thus; We cannot be justified by works preceding faith, because we do no good works, till by faith we are interested in Christ Jesus: whereas St. James speaks plainly of those works which follow faith, are wrought by it, and are the fruits of it, and of their necessity, in order to our continuance in a state of justification and freedom from our final condemnation.

Secondly, That St. Paul excludes from justification, only those works which are opposed to justification by an act of grace, and make it to be of debt, and so give occasion to our glorying in our being righteous in the sight of God, purely by reason of our works, as in these words, If it be of grace, it is no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace; but if it be of works, then it is no more of grace, otherwise work is no more work. (Rom. xi. 6.) And again, To him that worketh, the reward is reckoned, not of grace, but of debt: but to him that worketh not, but believeth, faith is accounted unto him for righteousness. (Rom. iv. 4, 5.) And again, Where then is glorying? it is excluded. By what law? by that of works? No: but by the law of faith. (Rom. iii. 27.) Whereas St. James requires only those works to our salvation, and our continuance in a state of justification, which proceed from, and are accepted through grace, and so can never render our justification of debt, or give us a just ground of boasting.

Thirdly, That St. Paul is arguing against the Jews, who sought for justification by virtue of the law of Moses, and sought it not by faith, (Rom. ix. 32.) nor ever conceived that sufficient for that end, declaring against that way of justification, because it would confine the blessing of Abraham to the circumcision only, (Rom. iv. 9.) and because the law of Moses was four hundred and thirty years after the promise made to Abraham, speaking of that law which said, Do this, and live; (Gal. iii. 17.) which was our schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ, and which was then to cease, as to the obligation of it: whereas St. James speaks of justification by works performed under the covenant of grace, and as conditions even of that new covenant. Now I except not against any of these ways of reconciling these two apostles in their discourse upon this subject; but then I also think we may add this other to them.

Fourthly, That St. Paul plainly speaks to Christians only, concerning their justification from their past offences by faith in the blood of Jesus; but St. James speaks as well to the unbelieving as believing Jews, touching faith in God, such as Abraham had when he believed God's promise, (ver. 23.) and such as Rahab the harlot had, (ver. 25.) saying, Thou believest there is one God, (ver. 19.) without the least mention of faith in Christ; and who, perhaps, thought it sufficient to keep them in the favour of God, and render them his friends, that they had cast off all idolatry, and owned the true God; proving this not to be sufficient to procure the Divine favour, unless by the obedience of their lives they glorified him as God, since otherwise they only did in words profess to own him, but in works deny him, being disobedient.

1. MY brethren, [1] be not many masters (i. e. διδάσκαλοι, teachers of the law), knowing that (thereby) we shall receive the greater condemnation, (for our offences against that law we teach to others.

2. And this we ought the rather to beware of;) for in many things we offend all (against the law, and more especially in that member that we employ in teaching of others: for) if any man offend not in word, the same is [2] a perfect man, and able also to bridle (curb and direct the motion of) the whole body.

3. (I use the metaphor of a bridle as apposite in this case; for) behold, we put bits (or bridles) in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and (with those bits) we turn about their whole bodies, (even so, if we by any means can bridle, and thereby govern the tongue, by the like means we may govern the whole man.)

4. Behold also the ships, which though they be so great (in bulk), and are driven with fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor (or pilot of the ship) listeth.

5. Even so (is it with) the tongue (as with this bit and helm: it) is a little member, [3] and boasteth great things, (καὶ μεγαλαυχεῖ, but it mightily exalts itself by its great performances.) Behold, how great a matter (how much wood) a little fire kindleth!

6. [4] And the tongue is (as) a fire, a world of iniquity (is kindled by it); so is the tongue amongst our members (as fire among wood), that it defileth (Gr. spotting or blackening) the whole body, and setteth (Gr. inflaming or setting) on fire the course of nature (or the succession of men in the world); and it is set on fire of hell, (Gr. being set on fire by hell.

7. And it resembles fire in this also, that when it hath once got the mastery it cannot easily be subdued and extinguished;) for every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed [5] by mankind:

8. But the tongue (of others) can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, (and, like the serpents, mentioned ver. 7.) full of deadly poison.

9. Therewith bless we God, even the Father (of us all); and therewith [6] curse we men, which are made [7] after the similitude of God (and upon that account are to be reverenced by us).

10. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be: (for)

11. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?

12. Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries, or a vine, figs? (surely no: even) so no fountain can both yield salt water and fresh (and if nature produceth no such contrary fruits, much less should grace produce things so extremely opposite as our blessing and cursing).

13. Who (then) is [8] a wise man and endued with knowledge among you (to which you are great pretenders), let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom (or the works of wisdom with meekness; i. e. let him, by his charity and meekness towards his brethren, shew forth his wisdom).

14. But if ye have [9] bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not (of your wisdom), and lie not against the truth (in pretending to be wise as to it).

15. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly (from the love of earthly things), sensual, (proceeding from the lust of the flesh, among which strife and envy are reckoned, Gal. v. 20.) devilish, (coming from Satan, the promoter of strife and envy, and from pride and ambition, by which he fell, 1 Tim. iii. 6.)

16. For where envying and strife is (as the root), there is [10] confusion and every evil work (as the fruit).

17. But the wisdom which is from above is first pure (from sensuality and earthly-mindedness, ver. 15.) then peaceable (and) gentle, (in opposition to contention, ver. 14.) easy to be entreated (or persuaded, in opposition to the inflexibility of the Jews), [11] full of mercy and good fruits, (wanting in them, ver. 13.) [12] without partiality, and [13] without hypocrisy (of which things the Jews were highly guilty).

18. And the [14] fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of (for or to) them that make peace.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 1. ΜΗ᾽ πολλοὶ διδάσκαλοι γίνεσθε, Be not many teachers.] The Jews had, not only in Judea, but in their several dispersions, their מורים, or doctors of the law, who being created doctors, masters, or rabbins, by imposition of hands, were authorized to teach the law to others. This office the Jews much affected, θέλοντες εἶναι νομοδιδάσκαλοι, affecting to be teachers of the law, (1 Tim. i. 7.) and being confident of their abilities to be guides to the blind, a light to them that sat in darkness, instructers of the foolish, and, διδάσκαλοι νηπίων, teachers of babes. (Rom. ii. 19, 20.) And such especially were the zealots among them. Whence Eleazer* the chief of them saith, "They had especial reason to expect a share in the Divine favour, as being blameless as to the observation of the law, and also teachers of it to others." This affectation of that office, the apostle here warns them to avoid, as that which would expose them to greater condemnation, for their offences against that law they taught to others, and so confessed they knew themselves.

[2] Ver. 2. Τέλειος ἀνὴρ, A perfect man,] Is a person fully instructed in his duty. (See note on 1 Cor. ii. 6.)

[3] Ver. 5. Καὶ μεγαλαυχεῖ, And boasteth great things.] This word signifies not only to vaunt of, but also to do great things; μέγαλα ἐργάζεται καλὰ καὶ κακὰ, it works great good and evil, saith Œcumenius: "magnificatrix est," it is a doer of great things, so Faber: it answers to the Hebrew ערץ, which signifies to be valid, and move itself violently, to be haughty, and exalt itself. (Psal. ix. 19. Ezek. xvi. 50. Zeph. iii. 11. Ecclus. xlviii. 18.) And this signification, both the text, and the resemblance of the tongue to fire, seem plainly to require. (See Examen Millii.)

[4] Ver. 6. Ἡ γλῶσσα πῦρ, The tongue is a fire.] The comparison of the tongue to fire, first blackening, and then wasting the whole world (or wood), is taken from the Scripture, and from the sayings of the Hebrew doctors: The froward man bringeth destruction, in his mouth there is a burning fire, Prov. xvi. 27. And, ver. 28. Λαμπτῆρα δόλου πυρσεύει κακοῖς, He kindles a firebrand of deceit to the wicked. As the matter of fire, κατὰ τὴν ὕλην πυρὸς, according to the wood of the fire, so it burneth; and the stronger they are that contend, the more they will be inflamed, Ecclus. xxviii. 10. A hasty contention kindleth a fire; the fire burning kindles great heaps, saith Ben Syra; which is thus explained, As a little fire consumes great heaps of wood, so nothing more wastes the world than an evil tongue.

Note, secondly, if the original was, as our translation hath it, A world of iniquity, something must be added to it to make the sense complete, as I have done in the paraphrase, or as the Ethiopic, A world of iniquity is contained in it. But the Syriac reads thus, And the wicked world is as the wood; and this makes both the sense and the similitude run clear.

[5] Ver. 7. Τῇ φύσει τῇ ἀνθρωπίνῃ, By mankind,] Is the Hebrew phrase for man, as ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις is a man, 1 Pet. ii. 13.

[6] Ver. 9. Καταρώμεθα, Curse we men.] This the unbelieving Jews did towards the Christians, cursing and anathematizing them in their synagogues; as Justin Martyr * often testifieth to the face of Trypho the Jew.

[7] Καθ᾽ ὁμοίωσιν Θεοῦ, After the similitude of God.] From this ninth verse it appears, that man lost not the image of God by the fall, and thence it is probable that it consists not primarily in holiness, but in dominion. (Gen. i. 26.)

[8] Ver. 13. Ἐπιστήμων ἐν ὑμῖν, A wise man among you.] That the Jews were great pretenders to knowledge, see Rom. ii. 18. That they gloried in the title of "chochamin," or wise men, see note on 1 Cor. i. 20. iii. 18. Hence their divines are still חכמי האמת, wise men as to the truth, saith Buxtorf.

[9] Ver. 14. Ζῆλον πικρὸν καὶ ἐριθείαν, Bitter envy and strife.] The unbelieving Jews are represented still as οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας, men of contention, who obeyed not the truth: (Rom. ii. 8.) men who were filled with bitter zeal against the preachers of the gospel, (Acts xiii. 45. xvii. 5.) and very mad against them. And some of them who owned the gospel, did yet preach Christ, ἐξ ἐριθείας, out of contention, and envy against St. Paul; (Phil. i. 15.) and the effects of their disputes were, saith the apostle, φθόνος καὶ ἔρις, Envy and strife, 1 Tim. vi. 4. ἔριες καὶ μάχαι νομικαὶ, Contentions and fightings about the law: and where they were mixed with the converted gentiles, we find especial cautions against strife and envy, as at Rome, Rom. xiii. 13. against provoking one another, and envying one another, Gal. v. 26. against doing things through strife and vain-glory, Phil. ii. 3. or complaints of the abounding of these vices, 1 Cor. i. 11. iii. 3. see especially, 2 Cor. xii. 20.

[10] Ver. 16. Ἀκαταστασία, Confusion.] i. e. Tumult, sedition, and disturbance of peace and order; for contention naturally tends to fighting, and envy to the destruction of him we hate: φθονεύετε καὶ ζηλοῦτε, ye are envious and zealous against one another, iv. 2. and then it follows, μάχεσθε καὶ πολεμεῖτε, ye fight and war.

[11] Ver. 17. Μεστὴ ἐλέους, Full of mercy.] Which, saith Josephus,* of all good passions, was most of all lost among the Jews.

[12] Ἀδιάκριτος, Without partiality.] Or, as the word signifies, without putting a difference betwixt men of their own and other nations, as the Jews did, accounting all other nations dogs, unclean, not fit to be conversed with; and dealing with them accordingly, for as Tacitus† hath observed of them, "Apud ipsos fides obstinata, misericordia in promptu, adversus omnes alios hostile odium;" i. e. They would be merciful to men of their own religion and country, but hated all mankind besides: confining brotherly love to men of their own nation, as we learn from our Saviour's parable of the good Samaritan. When they broke into sects and parties, they had the same hatred to those of their own nation, who would not think and do as they did. The zealots, and those that were for war, set themselves against, and even threatened death to them who were for peace, looking upon them as no better than heathens, saith Josephus:‡ whereas true Christian wisdom requires us to live peaceably with, and to do good to all.

[13] Ἀνυπόκριτος, And without hypocrisy.] For which our Saviour so severely inveighs against the scribes and pharisees, the leaders of the Jews.

[14] Ver. 18. Καρπὸς τῆς δικαιοσύνης, The fruit of righteousness.] i. e. The reward of the righteousness to them, who make it their business to live peaceably themselves, and incline others to it, is here sown happily and quietly, by the preachers of the gospel of peace declaring it to the world, and shall hereafter assuredly be reaped by them. Or thus, These fruits of righteousness, now sown by the Christian endued with this heavenly wisdom, will yield a plentiful and happy crop to them who are promoters of peace.

CHAP. IV.

1. FROM [1] whence come wars and fightings among you (Jews)? come they not hence, even of your lusts (or pleasures) that war in your members (against the soul? 1 Pet. ii. 11.)

2. [2] Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not.

3. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts.

4. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that [3] the friendship of the world (which stands in competition with, and indisposeth you to believe and obey God's will) is enmity with God (and so idolatry, which in the language of Scripture is adultery)? whosoever therefore will be (thus) a friend of the world is the enemy of God, (having renounced him to have mammon for his Lord, Matt. vi. 24.)

5. [4] Do ye think that the Scripture saith (Gr. speaks) in vain (against this worldly-mindedness), The spirit that dwelleth in us (Christians) lusteth (he) to envy (as yours doth? ver. 2. Is he not rather the Spirit of love and goodness, engaging us to love all men, and especially our Christian brethren? 1 Pet. i. 22.)

6. But (so far is he from this envy, that where he dwells) [5] he giveth more grace (or favour); wherefore he (or it, the Scripture) saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace (or sheweth favour) to the humble, (Prov. iii. 34.)

7. (Be ye then humble, and) submit yourselves therefore to (that) God (who giveth grace to the humble). Resist the devil, (the author of those wars, envyings, and lustings which are among you), and (then) he will fly from you.

8. [6] Draw nigh to God (by prayer, humiliation, repentance, and obedience), and he will draw nigh to you (in mercy). [7] Cleanse your hands (from rapine and injustice), ye sinners: and purify your hearts (from the love of the world), ye double-minded (whose hearts are divided betwixt God and mammon).

9. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to [8] heaviness.

10. Humble yourselves (therefore) in the sight of the Lord, (and under his mighty hand that is upon you, 1 Pet. v. 6.) and he shall lift you up (that he may exalt you, ἐν καιρῷ, in that season of his visitation, as he did then his faithful servants, by a wonderful deliverance, according to his promise; see note on Matt. xxiv. 31.)

11. [9] Speak not evil one of (or against) another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of (or against) his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and [10] judgeth the law (or speaketh against the law, as being evil or imperfect, in that it doth not command or condemn those things which thou dost command or condemn): but if thou (take upon thee to) judge the law, thou art not (in thy behaviour as) a doer of the law, but a judge (of it.

12. Whereas indeed) there is (only) one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy: who (therefore) art thou that judgest another?

13. Go to now, ye that (presume to) say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain (as if both life and the advantages of life depended wholly on yourselves, and not at all on Divine Providence):

14. Whereas ye (who speak with such confidence of the future) know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? it is even (as) a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

15. (Thus ye are wont to speak;) for that (Gr. whereas) ye ought to say, [11] If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that.

17. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin. (If after my admonition to avoid this and other crimes, you continue in them, ye will be inexcusably guilty of sin, John xv. 22. and the guilt of it will abide upon you, John ix. 41. as it will also in all other things done against knowledge, and the convictions of your conscience: for in such things the heart departs from and rebels against the Lord; he that thus sins, despiseth the word of the Lord, and reproacheth him that spake it, Numb. xv. 30, 31.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΟ'ΘΕΝ πόλεμοι; Whence come wars?] This Epistle seems to have been writ about the eighth year of Nero, and the sixty-second of Christ, the year before the death of James; before which time the Jews had great wars and fightings, not only with their neighbours, (see note on Matt. xxiv. 6.) but even among themselves in every city and family, saith Josephus;* not only in Judea, but in Alexandria, Syria, and many other places. (See the preface, §. 5, 6.)

[2] Ver. 2. Ἐπιθυμεῖτε, &c. Ye lust, &c.] For explication of these words we are to note, that the Jews were then vehemently lusting after two things:

First, Liberty and freedom from tribute; which was, say they, the token of subjection. Josephus saith,† they were continually clamouring to have the tributes took away, and that upon this very account; and ‡ that the zealots, the band of thieves, and their magicians, were still pressing the people to fight for their liberty from the Roman yoke.

Secondly, Dominion over other nations: for having got this fancy into their heads, that their Messiah§ was to be a temporal prince, who should enable them to lord it over the heathens, they were zealous to have these pretended prophecies accomplished; and ‖ the hopes of it encouraged them to fight. Whence we may paraphrase on these two verses thus; Ye lust (for liberty and dominion), and ye have it not; ye (in pursuit and desire of them) kill, and (yet) ye cannot obtain (them), because ye ask not (whether that be according to the will of God which ye so greedily desire). Ye ask these things, and receive them not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume them upon your lusts; (viz. that having this liberty and empire, ye may possess the good things of this world ye lust after, and may lord it over the heathen world.)

[4] Ver. 5. Ἢ δοκεῖτε ὅτι κενῶς ἡ γραφὴ λέγει; Or, Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain? &c.] They who make this whole verse one sentence, are obliged to shew where the Scripture hath these words, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy; which no interpreter hath yet successfully attempted. But in this exposition given in the paraphrase, which makes the whole to consist of two questions, this is needless. Now in favour of this exposition, let it be noted,

First, That nothing is more ordinary than for particles to be repeated from the precedent member. So, Psal. ix. 19. The needy shall not always be forgotten, the expectation of the poor shall (not) perish for ever. (See Psal. xxxviii. 1. xliv. 19. 1 Sam. ii. 3. Job xxx. 25. xxxi. 20. Prov. xxv. 27. xxx. 3.) So, אם, if, Psal. cxxxix. 8. Prov. vi. 1. ix. 12. (See Glassius de ellipsi partic. lib. iv. tr. 2. observ. 10. p. 721.) So here the particle ἢ may be repeated thus, Or, doth the spirit that is in you lust to envy? though the sense be full only by reading the words by way of interrogation. Note, Secondly, That not to speak in vain, is not to do it without cause or just reason, as Ezek. vi. 10. And God, or the Scripture, is said to speak in vain to them who attend not to, or receive no benefit by, his words, Jer. viii. 8. So then the sense runs thus, Doth the Scripture speak without cause against this worldly-mindedness? Would it not have you attend to, and receive advantage by, what it saith against it?

[5] Ver. 6. Μείζονα δὲ δίδωσι χάριν, But he that giveth more grace.] That חן and χάρις throughout the Scripture signifies favour, and good-will, see note on 2 Cor. vi. 1. And this sense the opposition here requires; God being displeased with, and opposing himself to, the proud, but shewing favour to the humble, and causing them to find favour among men. (Prov. iii. 34.) What Mons. Le Clerc here saith, "That in those times the Jews used to produce, as out of Scripture, not only the sense of places without regarding the words, but also a Jewish tradition or interpretation of Scripture, and so we are not to look for what is here said, in the Old Testament," is intolerable: for is it fit to make an apostle, giving us those Scriptures which are to be our rule of faith, speak thus, Do you think the Scripture speaks in vain, what it speaks not at all? and to call a Jewish tradition the Scripture?

[6] Ver. 8. Ἐγγίσατε τῷ Θεῷ, Draw nigh to God.] The way of drawing nigh to God being now, under the gospel-dispensation, through faith in Christ, and in his blood shed for the propitiation of our sins, we being made nigh to him through the blood of Christ, (Eph. ii. 13.) and through the introduction of that better hope, by which ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ, we draw nigh to God; (Heb. vii. 19.) it being Christ alone by whom we have an introduction to the Father through faith in him, (Eph. ii. 18. iii. 12.) and who hath suffered for us, that he might bring us to God: (1 Pet. iii. 18.) this may be looked on as an exhortation to the ἁμαρτωλοὶ, the unbelieving Jews, to believe in Christ, and to the δίψυχοι, the wavering Jews, (see note on i. 8.) to cleave steadfastly to the faith.

[7] Καθαρίσατε χεῖρας, Cleanse your hands.] That the hands of the Jews, and especially of the zealots among them, were full of blood and rapine, we learn from Josephus,* who makes very often sad complaints of the murders and rapines committed by them; (see v. 4. 6.) and so this exhortation must be very properly directed to them. True also is the note of Esthius here, "Porro si jubentur homines emundare manus, et purificare corda, nec jubetur quid impossibile: consequens est eos posse hæc præstare."

[8] Ver. 9. Εἰς κατήφειαν, Into heaviness.] For now the day of vengeance upon the unbelieving and backsliding Jews approacheth. (Luke xxi. 22.) Now the coming of the Lord to execute vengeance on them draweth near, (v. 8.) When wrath shall come upon them to the uttermost. (2 Thess. ii. 16.)

[9] Ver. 11. Μὴ καταλαλεῖτε, Speak not evil.] For explication of these words, let it be noted, that the great exception which both the unbelieving Jews and the Judaizing Christians among them had against the believing gentiles, was this, that † they observed not their feasts or sabbaths, and that they were not circumcised, whence they concluded they differed little from the heathens. This was the thing for which the Christian fathers ‡ did contend against them; viz. that the ancient patriarchs of old were acceptable to God, and consequently the Christians, and especially the converted gentiles, might be acceptable to God without the observation of these feasts and sabbaths, or of circumcision. Hence the apostle is so concerned that they should not judge one another on the account of days or meats. (Rom. xiv. 4. 6.) Hence he inveighs against the Galatians, as being brought in bondage by the Judaizers, to the observation of circumcision, (v. 5.) and of days, months, times, and years: (iv. 10.) and warns his Colossians not to be induced to follow those rudiments of the world, as being circumcised in Christ; (Colos. ii. 11.) and saith, Let no man judge you in respect of feasts, or new moons, or of the sabbaths: (ver. 16.) so that the argument of the apostle here seems to run thus, Let no man speak against his Christian brethren the gentiles, for not observing these things; for, the law itself requiring these things, not of the gentiles that even dwelt among them, but only of the Jews, he that speaks against them, and judgeth them for the nonobservation of these things, he in effect speaks against and judgeth that law as deficient, which required not these things. And thou who takest upon thee to say they cannot be saved, (Acts xv. 1.) and so judgest them to destruction without the observation of them, thou even takest upon thee the office of the great Lawgiver, who alone is able to save and to destroy, and who, by not requiring those things of the gentiles, shews he will save them without them, and not destroy them for neglect of them. So the Targum on Ezek. xiii. 18. brings in God speaking to the false prophets thus, Can you kill or make alive the souls of my people? Others indeed refer this to the law of Christian love, but that is still styled the law of Christ, Gal. vi. 2. or the law of liberty, ii. 12. but never absolutely the law, as here; and therefore I prefer the former interpretation.

[10] Κρίνει νόμον, Judgeth the law.] That is, saith Œcumenius, κατακρίνει, καταφρονεῖ, he condemns and despiseth the law forbidding him to condemn and to speak evil of his brother, and so will not be a doer of it, οὗ γάρ τις καταφρονεῖ, πῶς ἀνέξεται ὑπ' αὐτὸν ἔτι ζῆν; for how will a man be induced to live by that law which he despiseth?

[11] Ver. 15. Ἐὰν ὁ Κύριος θελήσῃ, If the Lord will.] It was a rule of Ben Syra, (Buxt. Flor. p. 4.) Let no man say he will do any thing, unless he first say, If the Lord will: who also adds, that one died before night, for refusing to add this. And when Alcibiades had said to Socrates, I will do so, if you will; Socrates* tells him he ought to have said, ἐὰν ὁ Θεὸς ἐθέλῃ, If God will. Not that we are obliged always to say thus, (Rom. xv. 28.) but only still to own our dependance on Divine Providence, (ver. 17.) εἰδότι οὖν, to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, it is sin. So Menander saith, εὐηθία μοι φαίνεται διλουμένη τὸ νοεῖν μὲν ὅσα δεῖ, μὴ φυλάττεσθαι δ' ἃ δεῖ, it is manifest folly to know what we ought to do, and not to do it. (Apud Stob. Serm. 4. p. 53.)

[12] Ver. 16. Νῦν δὲ καυχᾶσθε ἐν ταῖς ἀλαζωνείαις ὑμῶν· πᾶσα καύχησις, &c.] These words I would render thus, But now ye vaunt yourselves in your boastings; all such vaunting is evil: i. e. Ye boast how much ye will gain, and then what brave men ye will be.

CHAP. V.

1. [1] GO to now, ye rich men (of the Jewish nation, ye will have cause to) weep and howl for the miseries that shall come (Gr. are coming) upon you.

2. Your riches are corrupted (or, are as things purified by being kept too long), and your garments (are become) moth-eaten (they being laid up in your wardrobes, and not used to clothe your naked brother, shall be as useless to you as if they were devoured by the moth).

3. Your gold and silver is cankered (or eaten out with rust); and the rust of them shall be a witness against you (of your covetous and worldly minds), [2] and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days (Gr. It shall eat your flesh as fire, ye have treasured it up for the last days).

* Πόθοι δὲ ἦσαν ἁρπαγῆς ἀναπλήρωσει, καὶ τῶν πλουσίων οἰκων ἔρευνα, φόνος τε ἀνδρῶν καὶ γυναικῶν ἔζεις ἐπαίζοντο, μιθ' αἵματος δὲ τὰ συληθέντα κατέπινεν, &c. De Bell. Jud. lib. v. cap. 34. p. 897. C.

* Plat. Alcib. 1. in fine.

4. Behold, the [3] hire of the labourers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them that have reaped (and are thus defrauded of their wages by you) are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth.

5. [4] Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in (or for) [5] a day of slaughter.

6. Ye have condemned [6] and killed the Just; and he doth not resist you.

7. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of our Lord (to avenge you of these murderers). Behold, the [7] husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, till he receive the early and latter rain (the first to make the corn sown swell and grow up, the latter to make the ear plump before harvest).

8. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts (in expectation of this advent): for [8] the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

9. [9] Grudge not (Gr. groan not) one against another, brethren, (as men impatient, and desiring vengeance, use to do,) lest ye be condemned (as wanting in that patience, which ought to have its perfect work in you; and in that Christian charity, which requires you to pray for mercy, and not to cry for vengeance on your enemies): behold the Judge (who will plead your cause against your persecuting brethren) standeth before the door.

10. Take my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken (to you Jews) in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering afflictions, and of patience (i. e. of patient suffering; for they had experience of cruel mockings, and of death, and yet they suffered these things patiently).

11. Behold, we count them happy that endure (afflictions for righteousness' sake, and for the trial of their faith, Matt. v. 12. 1 Pet. iv. 14.) Ye have heard of the [10] patience of Job, and have seen (i. e. known) the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy (as then he was to him a deliverer, and a rewarder of his patience, so will he be to you).

12. [11] But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, nor by the earth, nor by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; (i. e. let your actions be agreeable to your words, see note on 2 Cor. i. 17.) [12] lest ye fall into condemnation.

13. Is any man among you afflicted? let him pray (to God to alleviate and sanctify his affliction). Is any merry? let him sing psalms (of praise to that God, who hath given him this cheerfulness of spirit).

14. Is any (man) sick among you? [13] let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, [14] anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord:

15. [15] And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord (in answer to this prayer of faith) shall raise him up; and if he [16] hath committed (such) sins (as brought this sickness on him), they shall be forgiven him (upon this prayer of faith).

16. Confess (therefore) your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The [17] effectual fervent (Gr. the inspired) prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

17. Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of [18] three years and six months.

18. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

19. Brethren, if any of you do err from the faith, and one convert him;

20. Let him know, that he who converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and [19] shall hide a multitude of sins.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἄγε νῦν, Go to now.] This is only a form of transition, (iv. 13.) and converting of speech to any person; as if he should have said, And now to speak to you that are rich, I call upon you to weep, &c.

That this prediction was exactly fulfilled by the slaughter and spoiling of the rich Jews throughout Galilee and Judea, Josephus* will not suffer us to doubt: for he informs us, that the zealots spared none but those who were ταπεινοὶ διὰ τυχὴν, poor and low in fortune; and that they were so insatiably rapacious, that they searched all the houses of the rich, killing the men, and abusing the women: and that it also was fulfilled touching those of the dispersion, see the preface, §. 5, 6.

[2] Ver. 3. It shall eat your flesh as fire, ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις, in the last days.] As the rust eats into the gold and silver, so shall your flesh and substance be eaten up as with fire, as if you had treasured up fire in the midst of it. For,

First, This is a frequent metaphor among the prophets, who often speak of the fire eating up the wicked, and devouring their flesh; Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thy wrath, καὶ καταφάγεται αὐτοὺς πῦρ, and the fire shall eat them up, Psal. xxi. 9. The light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame, and it shall burn, καὶ φάγεται, and eat up his thorns and briers in one day, καὶ καταφάγεται ἀπὸ ψυχῆς ἕως σαρκῶν, and it shall eat up from the soul to the flesh, Isa. x. 16, 17. Πῦρ τοὺς ἐναντίους ἔδεται, The fire shall eat up the adversaries, xxvii. 11. Behold, the name of the Lord cometh forth from far, burning with anger, καὶ ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ θυμοῦ ὡς πῦρ ἔδεται, and the anger of his fury shall eat as the fire, xxx. 11. Behold, I will make my word in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, καὶ καταφάγεται αὐτοὺς, and it shall eat them up, Jer. v. 14. They shall go out from one fire, καὶ πῦρ αὐτοὺς καταφάγεται, and another fire shall eat them up, Ezek. xv. 7. I will bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, and the fire, καταφάγεται σε, shall eat thee up, see Amos v. 6.

Secondly, This was punctually fulfilled in the destruction of that nation by their own seditions and the Roman wars: for, amongst the Sicarii and the zealots, the ringleaders of all their seditions, it was a crime enough to be rich; and their insatiable avarice induced them still to make, τῶν πλουσίων οἴκων ἔρευναν, a search into the houses of the rich. For them to remain among these tyrants was destruction; for by false accusations they were slain as deserters.† for their substance. Yea, both their substance and their flesh were devoured by the flames,* which burnt up the city and the temple, and so consumed both their dead bodies, and their substance, and their wardrobes; and that which remained became a prey to the army of the Romans. See the like done in their dispersions, preface, §. 6.

* De Bell. Jud. lib. v. cap. 20. 34. lib. iv. cap. 19.

[3] Ver. 4. Ὁ μισθὸς, The hire.] The precept in the law touching this matter running thus, Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour—the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning, Lev. xix. 13. this keeping of it back is truly styled fraud and oppression; and all sins of that nature cry to heaven for vengeance on the fraudulent oppressor. So the cry of the Israelites, under their oppression in the land of Egypt, came up to God, Exod. ii. 23. iii. 7. The cry of the afflicted widow and the fatherless, Exod. xxii. 27. The cry of the poor and the afflicted, Job xxxiv. 28. Psal. ix. 12. The cry of him that wants his pledge to cover him, Exod. xxii. 27. And the cry of him whose wages is kept back. Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy; at his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it—lest he cry against thee to the Lord, and it be a sin unto thee, Deut. xxiv. 14, 15.

[4] Ver. 5. Ἐτρυφήσατε καὶ ἐσπαταλήσατε, Ye have lived in pleasure, and been wanton.] The first word ἐτρυφήσατε, say critics, refers to their luxurious eating; the second, ἐσπαταλήσατε, to their carnal lustings and lasciviousness, (1 Tim. v. 6. Ezek. xvi. 49.) both which were vices the Jews then were very subject to, eating and drinking to excess in their feasts; (see note on 1 Cor. xi. 21.) and were, saith Tacitus,† " projectissima ad libidinem gens," a nation very prone to lust.

[5] As for a day of slaughter.] i. e. As the sacrifices, which are first fattened and then slaughtered, saith the Chaldee paraphrase on those words, The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs, Psal. xxxvii. 20. (See Examen Millii.)

[6] Ver. 6. Ἐφονεύσατε, Ye have killed, &c.] Here Œcumenius saith, Ἀναντιῤῥήτως τὸ ἐφονεύσατε δίκαιον ἐπὶ τὸν Χριστὸν ἀναφέρεται, this is undoubtedly to be referred to Christ, who is emphatically styled the Just One, Acts iii. 14. vii. 52. xxii. 14. So Justin Martyr,‡ Ἀπεκτείνατε τὸν δίκαιον, Ye have killed the Just One, and before him the prophets. But against this interpretation it is objected by Esthius, 1. That the apostle here speaks by way of distinction to the rich, who dragged the Christians before the tribunals; whereas the death of Christ is imputed to the princes and rulers of the Jews, and to the people in general, Acts iii. 14. vii. 52. xiii. 27, 28. 2. It is said in the present tense, And he doth not resist you; whereas, had this been spoken of Christ, it should have been said, He did not resist you: and therefore Œcumenius doth acknowledge this is to be extended also to all those just men, St. Stephen, and others who suffered in like manner from the Jews, according to our Lord's prediction, Matt. xxiv. 9. and St. Paul's confession, that, before his conversion, he persecuted this way unto the death, Acts xxii. 4. Hence this passage is connected to the ensuing words directed to the Christians in general, by this particle, therefore.

[7] Ver. 7. The husbandman waiteth, &c.] So the Targum of Jonathan on 2 Sam. xxiii. 4. compareth those, who expect the years of consolation, to the husbandman, who in a year of drought waiteth for rain upon the earth. (See the text defended, Examen Millii).

[8] Ver. 8. Ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου ἤγγικε, The coming of the Lord is at hand.] He speaks, saith Œcumenius,* of the coming of the Romans to captivate the Jews, which he calls, The coming of our Lord; as St. John does, chap. xxi. xxii. And this exposition is confirmed, 1. from the constant use of the like phrase, Ἐγγὺς ἡμέρα Κυρίου, The day of the Lord is at hand, Isa. xiii. 6. Ezek. xxx. 3. Joel i. 15. ii. 1. iii. 14. Obad. ver. 15. Zeph. i. 7. 14. From the evils which he saith are coming on the rich, ver. 1. and which then especially came upon them. 2. From his saying, This coming is at hand; and, The Judge standeth at the door, (ver. 9.) or in St. Peter's phrase, τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε, The end is at hand, (1 Pet. iv. 7.) which answers exactly to the words of Christ, touching the destruction of Jerusalem, Then shall τὸ τέλος, the end come; (Matt. xxiv. 14.) it is near, ἐπὶ θύραις, even at the door; (ver. 33.) her desolation, ἤγγικε, draweth nigh. (Luke xxi. 20. see note on Phil. iv. 5.) And this was a true ground for patience, and answers the objection of Esthius against this exposition.

[9] Ver. 9. Μὴ στενάζετε, Groan not.] These groanings, in the Scripture, have a voice and cry; and God is said to hear them. Thus the children of Israel groaned, by reason of their hard bondage, κατεστέναξαν; and their cry came up to God: (Exod. ii. 23.) and the Spirit is said to intercede in Christ's suffering members, with groans unuttered. (Rom. viii. 26.) Thus David prays, that God would hear the voice of his groanings, and the groaning of the prisoners. (Psal. cii. 5. 20.) These groanings, when they are only the natural issues of an afflicted soul, move God to pity, (Judg. ii. 18.) and to remember us in mercy; (Exod. vi. 5.) but when they are the fruits of impatience under troubles, and a desire of revenge upon our enemies, they tend to our condemnation; and the persecuting Jews, being of the same stock with the converted Jews, their groaning against them is styled groaning against one another.

It is the observation of Justin,† that the converts among the gentiles were not only more than those among the Jews and the Samaritans, but also, that they were better Christians, and more truly so; for these Jewish converts were still leavened with an expectation of a temporal kingdom, and of liberty from the Roman yoke, and the dominion over all heathen governors. Whence the apostles do so frequently enjoin them to be subject to the higher powers, (Rom. xiii. 1.) to be subject to principalities and powers, (Tit. iii. 1.) to be subject to every human ordinance, and not use the liberty, to which they were called, as a cloke of maliciousness. (1 Pet. ii. 13. 16.) Now these, as Dr. Hammond well observes, lived intermixed with the unconverted Jews and zealots, who were still grudging and contending against all that would not stand up for liberty, and fight for this temporal kingdom, accounting them no better than the *very heathens, on that account: and these may be the grudgers here intended.

[10] Ver. 11. The patience of Job.] Hence may we very probably conclude, that what is written in the book of Job, is truly a history of what happened to him: and not, as some conceive, a parable or fiction of a thing not truly done: for feigned things contain no serious motives to, nor just examples of, patience. 2. We find this holy man numbered with Noah and Daniel, as persons very prevalent in prayer, Ezek. xiv. 14. 20. As therefore Noah and Daniel were persons truly prevalent in their supplications, Gen. viii. 21. Dan. ix. 23. so also Job must be, as he is represented, xliii. 8. 10.

[11] Ver. 12. Μὴ ὀμνύετε, Swear not.] i. e. Let not your afflictions move you to use rash oaths, as men are wont to do when much provoked. That rash oaths are only forbidden here, and Matt. v. 34. see the note there: the oaths here forbidden being such as our impatience under sufferings, and our unbridled passions, do produce; or else the oaths, forbidden here, may be illusive oaths, viz. such as the Jews were free to use, because they thought they did not bind, (see note on Matt. ix. 34.) and so were free to make, to purchase their deliverance.

[12] Ἵνα μὴ ὑπὸ κρίσιν πέσητε, That ye fall not into condemnation.] Some copies read, εἰς ὑπόκρισιν, into hypocrisy: but, 1. this reading is not found in many copies. 2. The apostle, ver. 9. puts them in mind of the Judge standing at the door, requiring them not to grudge against one another, lest they be condemned by him; it is therefore far more probable he speaketh also here of condemnation by the judge. 3. To be false to the oath of God is perjury in the proper sense, for which God threatens he will not hold the offender guiltless, but is not properly hypocrisy. If therefore this had been the meaning of St. James, Swear not, lest you be tempted to the violation of your oaths, he should have called that perjury, not hypocrisy.

[13] Ver. 14. Προσκαλεσάσθω τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους τῆς ἐκκλησίας, The elders of the church.] That it was the office of the presbyters, ἐπισκέπτεσθαι πάντας ἀσθενεῖς, to visit all the sick, we learn from the Epistle of Polycarp, ad Philip. §. 6. But that these presbyters should be bishops properly so called, as some conceive, seems not very probable; for then it must not only be the office of the bishop personally to visit the sick; but the duty of every sick person to send to him, and to no other. Yea, there must be more than one bishop in the church of which the sick man is a member, and he must be obliged to send to more; for the text runs wholly in the plural, Let him call for the elders of the church, καὶ προσευξάσθωσαν, and let them (not one of them) pray over him; and therefore the sick man must be obliged, by this text, to call for more than one of them, where more were to be had, as we know there were in the primitive constitution of the church.

[14] Anointing him with oil.] This was agreeable to the practice of the Jews,† who anointed the sick, pro more, customarily, saith their tradition: hence, though our Lord only commissionated his disciples to heal the sick, Matt. x. 8. Luke ix. 2. yet St. Mark informs us, that they added their usual ceremonies in doing this, for they anointed many that were sick with oil, and healed them; (Mark vi. 13.) and St. James, speaking to the elders of the Jews, bids them use this unction in the name of the Lord, as doubtless the apostles did; as in casting out of devils, Luke x. 17. so in healing the sick, Acts iii. 16. iv. 10. 30. and this addition made the cure miraculous.

[15] Ver. 15. Ἡ εὐχὴ τῆς πίστεως, And the prayer of faith shall save the sick.] Among the χαρίσματα, or the miraculous and extraordinary gifts, vouchsafed at first to the preachers of the gospel, and to the rulers or elders of the churches, was the gift of faith; as in these words, to another is given faith by the same Spirit, 1 Cor. xii. 9. i. e. by a strong impulse of the Spirit, fully persuading them that God would enable them to do this or that. This seems to be that faith which is styled πίστις Θεοῦ, the faith of God, to which even the removing of mountains, or the performing things most difficult and extraordinary, is promised, Mark xi. 22, 23. Matt. xxi. 21. and of which the apostle speaks, saying, If I had all faith so as to remove mountains, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. and by which they healed the sick, even by faith in his name, Acts iii. 16.: and therefore this is here promised, that where the prayer of the elders was attended with such a faith, it should still be successful for the healing of the sick, or the raising him up again from the bed of sickness; for σώσει, will save, is ἐγερεῖ, he will raise him up.

[16] And if he hath committed sins.] i. e. Such sins for which God was pleased to inflict this bodily disease upon him, as he did on the members of the church of Corinth, for their disorderly celebrating the Lord's supper; for which cause (saith the apostle), many are weak and sickly among you, (1 Cor. xi. 30.) they being thus chastened of the Lord; (ver. 32.) and where the sickness is by way of chastisement, the healing it is a testimony of God's forgiveness of it. Hence, Thy sins be forgiven, is our Lord's usual expression, when he healed the sick (Matt. ix. 2. 6, 7. see the note there), according to those words of the prophet Isaiah, The inhabitants shall not say they are sick, the people shall be forgiven their iniquity, (xxxiii. 24.) Hence it is evident, that here is no foundation for the sacrament of extreme unction, called by the Romish church the sacrament of the dying, and administered for the purgation of their sins, when they seem past hopes of recovery; for, how can they gather a sacrament of extreme unction, from an unction that is not extreme; or a perpetual ordinance from an action that was extraordinary and miraculous, and is long since ceased? how can they prove a sacrament that is proper to dying persons, from a right used only upon persons who were not to die, but to be raised up from sickness? or promise to him forgiveness of his sins, to whom they cannot promise that recovery, which was the token of it? Moreover, the things already observed afford us a sufficient answer to the objections of Esthius, against our exposition, which are these:

Obj. 1. First, That the grace of miracles extended not to spiritual effects, as the forgiveness of sins, but to temporal.

Ans. This is said in flat contradiction to our Lord, who doth so often preface his miraculous cures of the sick with this expression, Thy sins are forgiven thee, Matt. ix. 2. Nor was this forgiveness so much a spiritual effect, as temporal, it being only the remission of a temporal punishment of sin, viz. sickness inflicted for it.

* Οὐδὲν γὰρ ἀλλοφύλων αὐτοὺς ἔφασκον διαφέρειν, οὕτως ἀγεννῶς τὸν περιμάχητον Ἰουδαίοις ἐλευθερίαν προϊεμένους, καὶ δουλείαν αἰρεῖσθαι τὴν ὑπὸ Ῥωμαίοις ἀναμολογουμένους. Joseph. de Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 30. p. 985. F.

† See Light. in Matt. vi. 17.

Obj. 2. Had the apostle spoke of miraculous cures, he would only have advised them to call those who had the gift of healing, whether presbyters or not; not the presbyters, and them only.

Ans. He reasonably adviseth to call them, and them only, to pray over the sick, who were by office appointed for that work, and doth here only tell them what they might expect from it, when that miraculous faith was raised in them, which often, in those times of miracles, accompanied their prayers.

Obj. 3. The apostle speaks of a sick Christian brother to be anointed by a faithful presbyter, whereas the use of miracles was chiefly for converting infidels: and hence this unction was not used towards Trophimus left at Miletum sick, (2 Tim. iv. 20.) or to Epaphroditus sick near unto death. (Phil. ii. 27.)

Ans. If it were not used by St. Paul to them, and especially to Epaphroditus, it is certain that he knew nothing of this sacrament. 2. Esthius has no cause to assert, that of miracles in general, which the apostle saith only of the gift of tongues, that they were only for unbelievers; the gift of healing, for aught he knows to the contrary, might be still exercised upon believers, but only under the conduct of the Spirit raising up this miraculous faith, which assured them of it in respect to some, and not to others, as he saw fit. (See note on Phil. ii. 27.)

Obj. 4. That had the apostle intended miraculous healing, oil had not been prescribed; Christ having said, They should lay their hands on the sick only, Mark xvi. 18.

Ans. One ceremony excludes not the other; moreover, laying on of hands is there prescribed in preaching to the gentiles, anointing with oil here to the Jews, as being customary in case of sickness.

Obj. 5. All the other things delivered in this Epistle belong to the Christians of all ages; this therefore must do so too.

Ans. As if this hindered the apostles, as they had occasion, to give rules touching the spiritual gifts proper to their own times; that, when they spake of other matters not to cease, their precepts reach unto all times. St. Peter, in his following Epistle, hath one direction concerning those spiritual gifts, 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11. though the other precepts contained in that Epistle do concern all ages.

[17] Ver. 16. Δέησις ἐνεργουμένη, The inspired prayer.] As they who were inwardly acted by an evil spirit were styled ἐνεργούμενοι, so they that were acted by the Holy Spirit, and inwardly moved by his impulses, were also ἐνεργούμενοι, in the good sense; and therefore it seems most proper to apply these words, not to the prayer of every righteous person, but to the prayer offered by such an extraordinary impulse: not only from the force of this expression, but, 2. from the same thing here mentioned as the subject of this prayer, that our sick brother may be healed, which was to be done by the prayer of faith, (ver. 15.) 3. From the example of Elias, for his prayer was the prayer of faith, in the sense now mentioned; for he absolutely foretold, and confirmed it with an oath, that there should be no rain those years, but according to his word, 1 Kings xvii. 1. And his prayer for rain was upon God's promise to send rain upon the earth, xviii. 1.

[18] Ver. 17. Three years and six months.] So Luke iv. 35. When therefore it is said, that Elijah came to Ahab the third year, and the Lord said, I will send rain upon the earth; note, that Elias tarried before a year at the brook Kerith, and then in the middle of the third year came to Ahab.

[19] Ver. 20. Shall hide, &c.] This seemeth to be meant, not of the sins of the person thus converted (for the saving of his soul includes the remission of his sins), but of the sins of him that converts him; i. e. this charitable work shall be so pleasing to God, as to prevail with him to cover many of his own sins.

FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. PETER.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

CONCERNING this Epistle, allowed by the church of all ages to be the genuine work of the apostle Peter, it may be inquired, 1. When? 2. Whence? 3. To whom? 4. On what account, it was written? And,

Quest. 1. First, Whereas it is ordinarily affirmed by the Romanists, that this Epistle was written in the forty-fourth year of Christ; as that opinion seems to have been taken up by them, in favour of their avowed tenet, that St. Peter was twenty-five years in that see; and therefore, he dying in the year of our Lord, 69. must have come thither in the year 44. so is it easily confuted, both from this Epistle, and by many other cogent arguments.

1. From these words of this Epistle, iv. 8. τὸ τέλος πάντων ἤγγικε, the end of all things is at hand: that is, saith Dr. Hammond, who also follows this opinion, The great and fatal destruction to the obdurate Jews, so often spoken of by Christ and his apostles, is now near at hand. Which could not have been said in the forty-fourth year of Christ, that is, about twenty-six years before it happened; seeing the apostle St. Paul, in his Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, (writ, saith the reverend Dr. Hammond, A. D. 51.) warneth the Thessalonians, not to be shaken by any word, or epistle, as coming from the apostles, which intimated, that the coming of the Lord was at hand; and so he must have contradicted St. Peter, had he delivered this positively seven years before. 2. The apostle James hath the like expressions, saying, Ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου ἤγγικε, The coming of the Lord draweth near, v. 8. Behold, the Judge stands πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν, before the door. Whence Dr. Hammond and Dr. Lightfoot well conclude, that this Epistle could not be written long before the death of St. James, which happened in the year 63. And this argument concludes as strongly for this Epistle's being indited after the same time. Add to this, that these expressions, τέλος, ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου ἤγγικε, The end, the coming of the Lord is at hand, and, πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν, before the door, are plainly taken from our Saviour's words, in his prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem; where also the time is fixed by two remarkable characters: 1. When you shall see Jerusalem compassed about with armies, then know ye, ὅτι ἤγγικεν ἐρήμωσις αὐτῆς, that her desolation draweth near, Luke xxi. 20. That is, saith Dr. Hammond, When you see Jerusalem besieged by the Romans, then know, the destruction of the city is near. Now this happened not at all till the twelfth of Nero, and the sixty-sixth year of our Lord, when Cesthius * besieged Jerusalem: it happened not, say the best interpreters, according to the words of the evangelist, till the year 68. when Vespasian coming thither, his army † compassed the city round about. These, saith St. Luke, are the days of vengeance, when all things which are written shall be fulfilled, ver. 22. and then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds, ver. 27. Again, our Lord having foretold all the signs of his coming, καὶ τῆς συντελείας, and of the end of the Jewish age, adds, When you shall see all these things come to pass, then know that this desolation, ἐγγύς ἐστιν ἐπὶ θύραις, is nigh, even at the door, Matt. xxiv. 33. Mark xiii. 29. clearly shewing, that phrase importeth still a nearer approach of that great desolation.

Secondly, That St. Peter was not at Rome, nor departed from Judea, till a long time after the forty-fourth year of Christ, is so evident from the history of the Acts, and the Epistles of St. Paul, that he that runs may read it. For, that St. Luke, in a history designed especially to record the acts of St. Peter and St. Paul, should omit a matter of such vast moment and importance to the whole Christian world, happening within that very time in which he speaketh of St. Peter: that, saying of him, xii. 17. He departed, and went to another place; he should not say, as Bellarmine and Baronius, that place was Rome, but, in flat contradiction to them, that he went down from Judea to Cæsarea, and there abode, ver. 19. that he should tell us how Aquila and Priscilla came from Italy, because Claudius had commanded that all the Jews should depart from Rome; but should not tell us, as they do, that St. Peter came thence to Jerusalem on the same account, and therefore was found present at the council of Jerusalem about six years after; but speak of him there, as if he never had left Jerusalem: that in this council he should urge, against the necessity of imposing circumcision on the gentiles, only the example of Cornelius and his kinsman, converted and not circumcised; and say not one word of the church of Rome, the seat of all spiritual power and infallibility, and to which all other churches were to veil, and do homage, converted by him in like manner, and free also from the yoke of circumcision: nay, that he should not mention that ever he was there, in a history continued till the fifth of Nero, though he mentions his travels to, his preaching and abode at, several other places: these, sure, are things sufficient to convince all unprejudiced persons, that St. Peter was not then at Rome.

Thirdly, The same may strongly be concluded from the Epistles of St. Paul. For about the year 57. saith Bishop Pearson, he writ his Epistle to the Romans, in which he spends the greatest part of one chapter in saluting particular persons that were there: but yet we find no salutation to St. Peter, who, had he been then at Rome, would doubtless have been mentioned in the first place; and yet, in so large an Epistle, he neither is directly nor indirectly taken notice of. Moreover, St. Paul himself, in the beginning, intimates his earnest desire to come thither, that he might impart unto them some spiritual gifts, to the end they might be established in the faith; for which there could be no apparent cause, had the apostle Peter been there so long before him. St. Paul himself soon after comes to Rome; which when the brethren heard of, they came to meet him, as far as Appii Forum, Acts xxviii. 15. but not a word of St. Peter either coming or sending to him. When he is come, he goes not to sojourn with, or so much as to salute St. Peter (which sure he would have done, if he had been there), but dwells in his own hired house. Being come, he calls the chief of the Jews together, who desire to hear of him what he thought of the sect of the Christians, they knowing this only of it, that it was every where spoken against, ver. 22. What then had St. Peter, the apostle of the circumcision, been doing all this while among them? And how unlikely is it that there should be then, as Dr. Hammond * saith, a church consisting much of the Jews residing there? And how reflecting on the supposed labours of St. Peter, among the Jews there, are the following words, ver. 26—28. that because they would not hear, or be converted, he would not leave them to St. Peter, but turn unto the gentiles, who would hear? After his coming to Rome, he writes Epistles to several churches, to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and one to Philemon; in which two last we have sent from Rome the salutation of Aristarchus, Marcus, Justus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas, Colos. iv. 10. 14. Philem. ver. 23, 24. but not a word from St. Peter. In that to the Colossians, he tells them, he had no other helpers, or fellow-workers, unto the kingdom of God, among the Jews, which had been a comfort to him, but Aristarchus, Marcus, and Justus, iv. 10, 11. which evidently excludes St. Peter. In his Epistle to Timothy, he saith, that at his first answer to Rome, all men forsook him, 2 Tim. iv. 16. which we can hardly believe, had St. Peter been there. He adds, that only Luke was with him; that Crescens was gone to this place, Titus to that, and Tychicus was left at another. Strange therefore it is, that if St. Peter was then gone from Rome, St. Paul should take no notice of it. Was he a person so inconsiderable, as not to deserve to be remembered? Or was he gone upon a sleeveless errand, not worthy of the notice of St. Paul? Or was he not rather one, who, being not at Rome, could give St. Paul no reason to take notice of him, when he writ from thence? But this subject is so fully handled, and the hypothesis of Baronius so learnedly confuted by Dr. Cave,* that it is superfluous to insist longer on this subject.

Quest. 2. To the second inquiry, Whence this Epistle was indited? I have returned a sufficient answer in the note upon these words, v. 13. The church which is at Babylon saluteth you; by shewing that by Babylon Rome is to be understood; whence this Epistle must be therefore written: and then it must be written after the persecution in the tenth of Nero, at which time neither Paul nor Peter was at Rome.

Quest. 3. That it was written to the Jews dispersed through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia (Minor), and Bithynia, the inscription† shews; but that it must be also written either to the gentiles proselyted to the Jewish religion, of whom see the note on 1 Pet. i. 1. or to the converts of the twelve tribes scattered among the heathens, and there serving their gods, according to the threat denounced upon them, Deut. xxviii. 36. 64. that they should serve other gods, which neither they nor their fathers had known, seems evident from these words, that they were delivered from their vain conversation, delivered to them from their fathers, i. 18. see the note there: that in times past they were not the people, but now are the people of God: that they had not obtained mercy, but now had obtained mercy, ii. 10. which words were spoken of the ten tribes, Hos. i. 10. ii. 23. and that the time past might suffice them to have done the will of the gentiles, when they walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries, iv. 3.

To imagine that the apostle is here speaking of the dispersion, mentioned Acts viii. 1. is to speak what is very improbable, they being dispersed only into the countries of Judea and Samaria, saith the text there: nor is it said that any travelled farther than Phœnice, Cyprus, and Antioch, xi. 19. Nor is it likely that many of them travelled so far, for the churches of Judea and Samaria having peace soon after this dispersion, Acts ix. 31. that any of them went to all or any of the places here mentioned by St. Peter, we have no reason to imagine; but that there was long before a great dispersion of the Jews throughout these parts of Asia, see the note on James i. 1.

Lastly, Upon what account this Epistle was written, we may best learn from the Epistle itself; which informs us, first, that it was written to encourage them to persevere, and to continue constant under these manifold temptations, i. 6. those fiery trials, iv. 12. and persecutions, ii. 3—5. they were then subject to. Secondly, To preserve them from being concerned in the Jewish wars, or bearing any part in that rebellion against Cæsar and his officers, which was then beginning among the Jews, chap. ii. from ver. 12. to 23. and iii. 16—18. And, thirdly, to engage them to lead a Christian conversation, that so they might bring over others to the Christian faith, ii. 12. iii. 1. and might stop the mouths of those who spake against them as evil-doers, iii. 16.

CHAP. I.

1. PETER, an apostle of Jesus Christ, (writeth) to the [1] strangers [2] scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia (Minor), and Bithynia,

2. (That is, to those of them who are) [3] elect [4] according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, [5] through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and (to the) [6] sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: (wishing that) grace to you, and peace, (may) be multiplied.

3. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, [7] who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a [8] lively (Gr. living) hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,

4. (We being begotten by his resurrection, as the first-fruits of ours, 1 Cor. xv. 20. 23.) to (the hope of) an inheritance incorruptible, and [9] undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you (believers),

5. [10] Who are kept by the power of God through faith [11] unto (the) salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

6. Wherein (i. e. on the account of which) you greatly rejoice, though now for a season, [12] (if need be) ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:

7. That the trial of your faith, being (which is) much more precious (and advantageous to you) than (the trial) of gold that perisheth, though it be [13] tried by fire (or, though upon trial it endure the fire), might be found to your praise, honour, and glory, at the appearance of Jesus Christ (in glory):

8. [14] Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet (Gr. not now seeing, but) believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory:

9. Receiving the end of your faith, [15] even the salvation of (your) souls.

10. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; (i. e. of the grace to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ, ver. 13. Matt. xiii. 17.)

11. [16] Searching what, or what manner of time the [17] Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify (or, to what time he did relate), when he testified beforehand [18] the sufferings of Christ (in himself and his members), and the glories that should follow (them, Dan. ix. 24.)

12. To whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the (same) things, which are now reported (or have been now declared) to you by them who have preached the gospel to you [19] with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the [20] angels desire to look into.

13. [21] Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober (Gr. vigilant), and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought (Gr. that is brought) to you at (by) the revelation of Jesus Christ, (who hath brought life and immortality to light by the gospel, 2 Tim. i. 10.)

14. As (it becometh) obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts (ye practised) in your ignorance:

15. But as he (God the Father, ver. 17.) who hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;

16. Because it is written (thus), Be ye holy; for [22] I (the Lord your God) am holy. (Lev. xi. 44. xix. 2.)

17. [23] And if ye call upon the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's works, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear (of condemnation from this impartial Judge at that day):

18. Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, (such) as (are) silver and gold (such as the Jews brought up to Jerusalem to buy their offerings), [24] from (the demerit of) your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers;

19. But with the precious blood of Christ (who was delivered up to death for you), as [25] a lamb without blemish, and without spot:

20. Who verily was [26] foreordained (Gr. foreknown, i. e. designed as the Messiah), before the foundation of the world, but was manifested in these last times for you-(r sakes),

21. [27] Who by (faith in) him (thus risen) do believe in God, that raised up him from the dead, that your faith and hope (of a blessed resurrection) might be in God.

22. Seeing ye have purified your souls in (by) obeying the truth through the Spirit (by whom ye are enabled to perform this obedience) to unfeigned love of the brethren (which is one part of that obedience), see that ye love (Gr. ye shall love) one another with a pure heart fervently:

23. Being born again, not of corruptible seed (as is that from which ye had your first nativity, whence ye also who are thus begotten are corruptible), [28] but of incorruptible, (as being born again) [29] by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

24. For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. (As then) the grass withereth, and the flower of it falleth away (so will it be with our body of flesh):

25. But the word of the Lord (saith the prophet, Isa. xl. 8.) endureth for ever (in itself, as being of eternal truth; and in its effects upon us, as nourishing us to life eternal). And this is the word which by the gospel is preached to you.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΑΡΕΠΙΔΗ'ΜΟΙΣ, To the strangers.] He writes especially to the dispersion of the Jews, to whom the word strangers, or foreigners, here chiefly doth belong; but not to them only, for he speaks to them also who in time past had walked according to the will of the gentiles, in abominable idolatries, (iv. 3.) and of them who formerly were not the people of God, and had found mercy: we therefore are to understand, that among them were many devout Greeks, and proselytes of the gentiles, converted with them to the Christian faith. Thus, when St. Paul and Barnabas preached in the synagogue of the Jews at Iconium, a great multitude both of Jews and Greeks believed: (Acts xiv. 1.) and Paul preaching at Ephesus, and thereabouts, two years, prevailed so, that all that dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks. (Acts xix. 10. see xvii. 4. 12. xviii. 4.) In the Acts of the Apostles, we read of proselytes of all nations. They were reckoned, in the days of David and Solomon, one hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred persons. (2 Chron. ii. 17.) In the days of Artaxerxes, we are told, that πολλοὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν περιετέμνοντο, καὶ Ἰουδάϊζον, many of the heathens were circumcised, and turned Jews. (Esth. viii. 17.) And so it was also in the succeeding ages; for Josephus * informs us, that after the times of Antiochus Epiphanes, the Jews, in Antioch and other places, always converting to their worship a great many Greeks, made them, as it were, a part of themselves: and at Damascus,† he saith, they would have destroyed the Jews among them, but that they feared their own wives, who all, except some few, were converts to the religion of the Jews.

[2] Διασπορᾶς, Of the dispersion.] i. e. Dispersed through Pontus, &c. The apostle speaks not of the dispersion made by the persecution, mentioned Acts viii. 1. for that scattered the Christians only through Judea and Samaria: (ibid.) nor were they afterward dispersed farther, by the malice of the Jews, but went themselves to preach the word, not in Asia, but in the parts of Syria, in Phœnice, Cyprus, and Antioch. (Acts xi. 19.) Of their dispersion thence into Asia, we read not one word; but that there were great dispersions before of the Jews through the places here mentioned, from the time of the captivity under Shalmaneser, we learn from Agrippa's‡ address to Caius, where he informs him, that they possessed most parts of Asia, to the utmost borders of Bithynia and Pontus.

[3] Ver. 2. Ἐκλεκτοῖς, Elect.] i. e. To the converted Jews, styled the elect, Matt. xxiv. 22. (See the note on ii. 9.) So also Œcumenius interprets these words, to the elect, that is, τοῖς ἀφωρισμένοις ἐκ τῶν ἄλλων ἐθνῶν εἶναι λαὸν περιούσιον, to them that are separated from other nations, to be his holy and peculiar people.

[4] Κατὰ πρόγνωσιν, According to the foreknowledge of God,] Discovered in the prophetical writings, which foretold of these blessings to be conveyed to them by the Messiah, who also is said to be foreknown before the foundation of the world; i. e. prophesied of from the beginning, (Gen. iii. 15.) but manifested in the last times for them, (ver. 20.)

[5] Ἐν ἁγιασμῷ, Through sanctification of the Spirit,] The great principle of all true obedience: so, ver. 22. Having sanctified your souls, or lives, to the obedience of the truth through the Spirit.

[6] Καὶ ῥαντισμὸν, And sprinkling of the blood of Jesus.] By way of obsignation of that covenant, by which we are engaged to that obedience: for so it was in the delivery of the old law; for upon the reading of that covenant in the audience of all the people, and upon their professing, All that the Lord hath said, we will do, and be obedient, Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it upon the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words, Exod. xxiv. 7, 8. (So Dr. Hammond.) Or to that sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth us from all sin; (1 John i. 7.) i. e. from all the sinful imperfections which cleave to our obedience, and by which the full pardon of our past sins is procured, and we obtain an entrance into the holy of holies, (Heb. x. 19, 20.) and which procures for us, not only acceptance upon earth, but an inheritance in heaven: (Heb. ix. 15. xii. 24.) whence this blood is styled αἷμα ῥαντισμοῦ, the blood of sprinkling, Heb. xii. 24. And of Christ it is said, He shall sprinkle many nations, Isa. lii. 15.

[7] Ver. 3. Ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ, The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.] Here, saith Schlictingius, as formerly the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, distinguished the one true God from any other; so now this phrase distinguisheth him, who is called his God and Father, from Jesus Christ. But yet the primitive fathers * thought otherwise; for they stiffly maintained, against the gnostics, who held there was another God above the God of Abraham, &c. or the God of the Jews, that he was the God and Father of all, "supra quem non est alius;" and yet, that Jesus Christ was God, as being in the Father from all eternity, and receiving the Divine nature from him.

[8] Εἰς ἐλπίδα ζῶσαν, To a living hope.] Either a hope that giveth life, as ὕδωρ ζῶν, living water, John iv. 10, 11. 14. Ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ζῶν, the living bread which came down from heaven; of which if a man eat, he shall live for ever, John vi. 51. vii. 38. Λόγια ζῶντα, the living oracles, Acts vii. 38. which if a man observe, saith Moses, he shall live by them, Lev. xviii. 4. Ὁδὸς ζῶσα, a living way, Heb. x. 20. as leading to life eternal; and ζωῆς πηγαὶ, living fountains of waters, Rev. vii. 17. for by hope we are saved, Rom. viii. 24.: or a hope that makes us active and lively, joyful and comfortable in our lives, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, Rom. v. 2. in which sense it is said of the word of God, that it is ζῶν καὶ ἐνεργὴς, living and active, Heb. iv. 12. of the members of Christ's spiritual house that they are λίθοι ζῶντες, i. e. living stones, 1 Pet. ii. 5. and we are bid to offer our bodies, θυσίαν ζῶσαν, a living sacrifice, Rom. xii. 1. Hence it seems to follow, that the Jews before had not this lively hope which our Lord's resurrection ministers.

[9] Ver. 4. Ἀμίαντον, Undefiled.] The land, in which men who are sinners dwell on earth, is said to be defiled by their sins, Lev. xviii. 28. Numb. v. 3. xxxv. 34. Deut. xxi. 23. Isa. xxiv. 5. Jer. ii. 7. xvi. 18. heaven, into which no unclean thing can enter, being the only inheritance undefiled. Œcumenius hence observes, first, that this therefore was not such a hope as that which was contained in the law of Moses, ἥτις θνητὴ, θνητοῖς ἐπαγγέλλεται θνητὰ, a dying hope, which promised dying things to mortal men: secondly, that if this inheritance be in heaven, μυθώδης ἡ χιλιοέτης ἀποκατάστασις, the opinion of the millenaries must be fabulous.

[10] Ver. 5. Ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους διὰ πίστεως, Who are kept by the power of God through faith.] Not that all who have true faith are kept by the power of God, so as that they shall certainly continue in the faith; but that they shall be thus preserved, if they continue in the faith, rooted, and settled, and are not removed from the hope of the gospel: (Colos. i. 23.) if they hold the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end. (Heb. iii. 4.) This place therefore only proves, first, that all who are preserved to salvation are preserved by God, but not that all true believers will be certainly so kept. Secondly, This place proves only, that they who are thus preserved, are kept through faith, i. e. if they hold the beginning of their confidence firm to the end. (Heb. v. 14.) For this faith, thus continued in them, will render them victorious over the world. (1 John v. 4.) It will enable them to resist the devil so effectually, that he shall fly from them, (1 Pet. v. 9.) and to quench all the fiery darts of Satan, (Eph. vi. 16.) and to suffer death, not accepting a deliverance, that they may obtain a better resurrection. But this place does not prove that all, who are once true believers, shall certainly continue in the faith, and never make shipwreck of the faith, as did Hymenæus and Alexander; (1 Tim. i. 19.) never have their faith overturned, as some had, 2 Tim. ii. 10. never draw back to perdition, as the apostle supposeth some might do, Heb. x. 38, 39.

[11] Εἰς σωτηρίαν ἑτοίμην ἀποκαλυφθῆναι ἐν καιρῷ ἐσχάτῳ, The salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.] i. e. Say some, the deliverance ready to be vouchsafed to the Christians, at the destruction of the church and polity of Jerusalem; this being the salvation then ready to be revealed. But this seems not very probable: first, because in this salvation Christians are said to rejoice greatly, or, to exult for joy; (ver. 6.) which it becomes not them to do for temporal, but for spiritual blessings. Secondly, Because it is the salvation, not of our bodies, but our souls, even that salvation which is the end of our faith, ver. 9. (See the note there.) To the argument produced for the other sense from the words,

I answer, first, that though the last times and days in the plural, do mostly signify the times of the gospel-dispensation, concurring with the last times of the Jewish state; yet the last time, or day, in the singular, often signifies the time of the resurrection, or the last judgment, especially when it is joined with the resurrection of the body, mentioned here, ver. 3. So, John vi. 39. I will raise him up, ἐν τῇ ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, in the last day; (see ver. 40. 44, 45.) xi. 24. I know that he shall rise in the last day; and, xii. 48. The word that I have spoken, shall judge him in the last day.

Secondly, As there is mention of a double revelation of Jesus Christ; one, when he appeared as a prophet to the world, styled usually φανέρωσις, the manifestation of Jesus Christ; another at the day of judgment, styled ἀποκάλυψις, the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Cor. i. 7. The revelation of Jesus Christ from heaven, 2 Thess. i. 7. His glorious revelation, 1 Pet. iv. 13. and here emphatically, The revelation of Christ, ver. 7. 13.; so is there a double revelation of the salvation promised in the gospel; one by the preaching of the gospel, which brought life and salvation to light, 2 Tim. i. 10. and a farther revelation of it to be made hereafter, when Christ who is our life shall appear, Col. iii. 3, 4. 1 John iii. 2. styled, The glory ready to be revealed, when the great Shepherd shall appear, 1 Pet. v. 4. The glory ready to be revealed, at the redemption of our bodies, Rom. viii. 18. 23. to which this passage may refer.

[13] Ver. 7. Διὰ πυρὸς δοκιμαζομένου.] Proved to be genuine by the fire it endures; as your faith is, by patiently enduring fiery trials. (See note on iv. 12.)

[14] Ver. 8. Ὃν οὐκ εἰδότες.] If this reading be true, it is most proper to translate the words thus, Whom having not known; if ὃν οὐκ ἰδόντες, as other copies have it, and all the versions do translate it, be the true reading, then our translation is right.

[15] Ver. 9. Σωτηρίαν ψυχῶν.] The preservation of your lives; so Dr. Hammond. But there is no ὑμῶν in the Greek, to answer to the word your in the English; and the salvation of lives seems not so properly assigned as the end of our faith, as the salvation of souls; as we may learn also from the following words:

[16] Ver. 11. Εἰς τίνα ἢ ποῖον καιρὸν; What, or what manner of time?] The particle εἰς is oft redundant. (See Nold. p. 66, 67. 464.) Or it may be here rendered de, of what time, as 2 Cor. xii. 6. Let no man think, εἰς ἐμὲ, of me more than he ought to think, Eph. v. 32. I speak, εἰς Χριστὸν, καὶ εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, of Christ and the church, Acts ii. 25. David spake εἰς αὐτὸν, of him. So Acts xxv. 20. Heb. vii. 14. εἰς ἣν φυλὴν, of which tribe. They testified of his sufferings, saith Œcumenius, in those words of Isaiah, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter.

[17] Τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ, The Spirit of Christ which was in them.] That is, say the Socinians, the Spirit in them, which spake of Christ as the word of life and salvation, is the word which speaks of life and of salvation. But in this sense he might as well have been styled the spirit of antichrist or the false prophets, because he also spake of them. All the ancients agree in the other sense, That Christ * spake by his Spirit in the prophets, they being inspired with his grace, and taught by his Spirit, their words proceeded from the Divine Word moving them, and by him they prophesied; he spake in Isaiah, in Elias, and in the mouth of the prophets. So the fathers.

[18] Τὰ εἰς Χριστὸν παθήματα, The sufferings of Christ.] Not only in himself, but in his members, and the glories which should be after, as well to them, as to their Saviour, (Rom. viii. 18. 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. 1 Pet. iv. 13.) as appears from i. 13. where this glory is styled, the grace to be brought to us at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

[19] Ver. 12. Ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, By the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven.] Hence it is evident, that the apostles, in all those writings in which they declared the gospel of Christ, were Θεόπνευστοι, men assisted by the Holy Ghost; and that they, in preaching and inditing the gospel, were acted by the same Spirit who moved formerly the prophets. (See the general preface.)

[20] Παρακύψαι, Angels desire to look into.] And shall holy prophets be so desirous to know the time when these things should happen, and holy angels so diligent to look into these glorious revelations; and shall we, to whom, and for whose happiness, this gospel was revealed, neglect not only to obtain, but even to know this great salvation? Some refer this to Dan. viii. 13.

[21] Ver. 13.] Note, that from this and the foregoing verse, we have several arguments to prove these things relate not to the temporal deliverance of Christians from the persecution of the Jews, but to their deliverance from the guilt of sin by the blood of Christ, (ver. 19.) and that eternal deliverance, which is the object of the Christian's hope. For, (1.) that cannot properly be styled the grace which is to come to us by the revelation of Jesus Christ, that being the grace which brings salvation, Tit. ii. 11. 13. (2.) That was not the thing which they, who preached the gospel, did ἀναγγέλλειν ἡμῖν, declare unto us; but, as St. John informs us, they did, ἀναγγέλλειν ζωὴν αἰώνιον, shew unto us eternal life, 1 John i. 2. (3.) They could not be the things the angels did desire to look into. (4.) The motive to perseverance to the end, is not a temporal deliverance from the Jews, but a spiritual and eternal deliverance. (Rom. viii. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 17. Heb. x. 35, 36.)

[22] Ver. 16. Ἐγὼ ἅγιός εἰμι.] The holiness of God, in Scripture, hath respect to a double object, viz. sin; and so it doth import his perfect freedom from, his hatred of, and opposition to, all impiety. 1. His entire freedom from all impurity; for God is light (saith the apostle), and in him is no darkness at all, 1 John i. 5. He is a just God, and without iniquity, Deut. xxxii. 4. A God of purer eyes than to behold evil, Hab. i. 13. i. e. without the greatest detestation. 2. His perfect hatred of it; whence he is said to loathe, detest, and to abhor it, and the workers of it; and it is styled, the abominable thing which his soul hateth, Jer. xliv. 4. And since God's nature is immutable, his holiness unchangeable, he must for ever hate, with a most perfect hatred, whatsoever is unholy and impure; and to suppose an interruption in his hatred of evil-doers, is to suppose he can cease to be a pure and holy God. And, 3. from this hatred, naturally flows a just assurance of his opposition to all impiety and unholiness, that he by no means will clear the guilty, Exod. xxxiv. 7. or let the sinner always go unpunished, Nahum i. 3. And this seems to be the import of the holiness of God we are here called to imitate, because it stands in opposition to the former lusts of their ignorance: or, 2. God's holiness respects such persons as are by consecration, or by resemblance of him, holy; and so it intimates his great affection to them, and concernment for them.

[23] Ver. 17. Ἀπροσωπολήπτως.] i. e. Without difference of nations, whether Jew or gentile, or without respect had to any man's progenitors, in the great day of his account. (Acts x. 34, 35. Rom. ii. 58. see note on James ii. 1.)

[24] Ver. 18. Ἐκ τῆς ματαίας ὑμῶν ἀναστροφῆς, From your vain conversation.] Two expressions in this chapter seem to intimate, that the apostle speaks here, not only to the native Jews, but also to the converted gentiles. 1. His exhortation to them, not to fashion themselves according to their former lusts, ἐν τῇ ἀγνοίᾳ ὑμῶν, in their ignorance; which phrase, in the New Testament, hath still relation to the times of ignorance in which the gentiles lay, before the preaching of the gospel to them. So, Acts xvii. 30. Τοὺς χρόνους τῆς ἀγνοίας, The times of ignorance God winked at; Eph. iv. 18. being darkened in your mind, διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν, by the ignorance that is in you. 2. This of their conversation, received by tradition from their forefathers: for though the scribes and pharisees had delivered traditions to the people, which rendered the worship of God vain; (Matt. xv. 9.) yet a vain conversation received by tradition from their forefathers, seems rather to respect the conversation of the heathens, ἀναστροφὴ being the word by which the conversation of the gentiles is designed, Eph. ii. 3. iv. 22. 2 Pet. ii. 7. 18. and μάταια, here added to it, determining the conversation to the worship of vain gods. (Acts xiv. 15. Eph. iv. 17.) Their plea for their religion and vain worship being also this, that they received it from their fathers, saying, that * they were not to be moved, by any persuasions, from the religion which they had † received from their forefathers. But yet I confess, these things may relate to the gentile proselytes among the Jews, which were very numerous. (See note on ver. 1.)

[25] Ver. 19. Ὡς ἀμνοῦ ἀμώμου, A lamb without blemish.] Christ being perfect, and without spot or sin, was typified by the lamb offered daily for their sins; and that lamb being bought with the half shekel, every one gave for the buying of the daily sacrifice, (Exod. xxx. 12. 15, 16. and which was therefore styled "keseph kippurim," the money of expiations, and was sent up to Jerusalem from every city of Judea, and all the provinces where the Jews lived, in silver and gold), the apostle may here allude to this, when he saith, Ye were not redeemed with silver and gold, by which the daily sacrifice was bought, which made atonement for your souls, but with the precious blood of Jesus, who shed his blood for your redemption from that death which by your sins ye had contracted. Others refer this to the paschal lamb, by the sprinkling of whose blood they were delivered from destruction, when the first-born of the Egyptians perished. (Exod. xii. 11. 17.) Both these lambs were to be ἀμνοὶ ἄμωμοι, perfect, and without spot, that they might be accepted. (Exod. xii. 5. Lev. xxii. 21. Numb. xxviii. 3. 9. 11. 19, &c.)

[26] Ver. 20. Προεγνωσμένου, Foreknown.] The Jews say, that ‡ "When God created the world, he held forth his hand under the throne of glory, and created the soul of the Messiah and his company, and said to him, Wilt thou heal and redeem my sons, after six thousand years? He answered, Yes. God said to him, If so, wilt thou bear chastisements, to expiate their iniquity, according to what is written, Isa. liii. 4. Surely, he bore our griefs? He answered, I will endure them with joy." And to this representation of this covenant made with the Messiah, before the creation of the world, it may be the apostle here refers. (See the note on Eph. i. 4.) In the style of Philo, § he is ἀΐδιος Λόγος, The eternal Word, The first-born, and, The most ancient Son of the Father, by whom all the species were framed. This therefore is according to the received opinion of the Jews.

[27] Ver. 21. Πιστεύοντας εἰς Θεὸν, By him do believe in God.] Here the Socinians object thus; He by whom we believe in God, is not that God in whom we believe; for the means of faith can never be the object of it: but Christ is he by whom we believe in God; ergo, Christ is not God. To this I answer, That Christ, according to the nature which died for us, and which was raised from the dead, is he by whom we believe in God; i. e. own him to be able to raise us also from the dead; and according to the same nature we acknowledge him not to be God: but that hinders not his being God, according to that nature by which he had power to (and did actually) raise himself from the dead. (John x. 18. ii. 19.)

But still they object, That by him, we believe in him that raised him from the dead, that our faith and hope might be in God, to wit, the Father; faith therefore and hope in Christ, is not faith and hope in God. Ans. First, It only follows hence, that it is not faith and hope in God the Father; but, secondly, the apostle here saith, that by believing in him who raised up Christ from the dead, we believe in God, because we believe in that Divine power which can raise us also from the dead: since therefore the holy Scripture expressly and frequently asserts, that we shall be raised up from the dead, by the voice of the Son of God, (John v. 25. 28.) and that because as the Father hath life in himself, and so is able to give life to the dead; so hath he given to the Son, to have life in himself: (ver. 26.) seeing Christ often saith of him that believeth in him, I will raise him up at the last day, (John vi. 39, 40. 44, 45.) for I am the resurrection and the life: (John xi. 24, 25.) since the apostle saith, he hath dominion over the dead, and over the living, (Rom. xiv. 9.) that by him all men shall be made alive, (1 Cor. xv. 22.) and, that he will change our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body, according to the mighty power whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself;—it rather follows hence, that our faith and hope in Christ, thus raising us from the dead, as his Father did him, is faith and hope in God.

[28] Ver. 23. Ἀλλὰ ἀφθάρτου, Being born again of incorruptible seed.] Here is a farther evidence, that the word of God is the ordinary means of our new birth: for it is τὸ ῥῆμα τὸ εὐαγγελισθὲν, the word preached (not any inward word infused), which is here styled, that incorruptible seed from which this new birth is derived.

[29] Διὰ λόγου ζῶντος Θεοῦ, The living word of God.] This epithet is ascribed to the word of God, Heb. iv. 12.: and that this is not spoken of the living God, is evident; because in the Greek it is not διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ ζῶντος, but ζῶντος Θεοῦ, i. e. not by the word of the living God, but by the living word of God. Secondly, That it is to be understood of the word preached, is clear; because the epithet, living, and abiding for ever, agrees to the same thing. Now the apostle saith, it is the word preached that abideth for ever; and so the prophet Isaiah had said before him, xl. 8. Τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

12. Having your conversation honest (Gr. honourable) among the gentiles: that, whereas they [16] speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, (be induced to) glorify God [17] in the day of visitation.

13. Submit yourselves (Gr. be ye subject therefore) to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme;

14. Or unto governors, as to them who are sent [18] by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well.

15. For so is the will of God (concerning you), that (so) with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: (i. e. of those gentiles, which, estimating you by the turbulent Jews, are apt to represent you also as ἔθνος δυσαρκτὸν καὶ δυσπειθὲς φύσει πρὸς τοὺς βασιλέας, a people naturally averse from subjection to kings, Jos. de Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. 8. p. 782. F.)

16. [19] As free (men), and (but) not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness (as the Jews do), but as (those who are) the servants of God (and so, for conscience towards him, are subject to his ordinance).

17. Honour (therefore) all men (even heathens). Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the king (who then was Nero, the worst of kings, and the persecutor of Christians).

18. [20] Servants (also), be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

19. For this is [21] thankworthy, if a man for conscience towards God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

20. [22] For what (ground of) glory is it (to you), if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and (yet) suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.

21. (And it is also suitable to your profession;) for even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also (whose followers ye profess to be) suffered for us, leaving us an example (both of well-doing and patient suffering), that ye should follow his steps:

22. (For he was one) who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth (and so he could not suffer for evil-doing:

23. And also one) who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously (and so was an example of perfect patience):

24. Who (was not only to us an example of suffering, but) his own self [23] bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed.

25. [24] For ye were as sheep going astray (from); but are now returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 2. ΤΟ᾽ λογικὸν γάλα.] The milk which rational creatures feed on. So λογικὴ λατρεία is the service performed by men of reason, Rom. xii. 1. It seems to be the same in sense with the ingrafted word, James i. 21.

[2] Ver. 4. Ἀποδεδοκιμασμένον, Disallowed, or rejected, of men.] i. e. Of the Jewish Sanhedrin, the builders, mentioned Psal. cxviii. 22. So R. Solomon Jarchi on those words of Micah, v. 2. Out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel; i. e. the Messiah, the Son of David, shall come from thee; as it is written, Psal. cxviii. 22. The stone which the builders refused, is become the head-stone in the corner. And so our Lord expounds these words to the high-priests, scribes, and pharisees, Matt. xxi. 42. 45. Luke xx. 17. 19. So Peter, full of the Holy Ghost, Acts iv. 11.

[3] Ver. 5. Ὡς λίθοι ζῶντες, A living stone, ver. 4. Living stones.] The Christian church being not a building made up of materials without life, as was the temple of Jerusalem; but a spiritual building, consisting of the members of Christ's body, living by the Spirit communicated from Christ their head, and the fountain of life, to them; (Eph. iv. 16. Colos. ii. 19.) he who communicates this life to them is therefore styled a living stone; and they who receive it from him, are also styled living stones: and being by this spirit thus fitly put together, compacted, and edified into one building, (Rom. xiv. 19. 1 Thess. v. 11.) are said to be built up a spiritual house.

[4] Ἱεράτευμα ἅγιον, A holy priesthood.] The legal sacrifices were to be offered by the priests alone, and only in the temple: accordingly the Christian church is here represented as God's temple; the praises they offer up to God in their assemblies are styled spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, Heb. xiii. 15. the persons who offer them, a holy priesthood. (See ver. 9.)

[5] Πνευματικὰς θυσίας, Spiritual sacrifices.] Thus Philo* having said, agreeably to the Psalmist, That God delights not in hecatombs, since the whole world is his, and he can want nothing, adds, that men, Τὴν ἀρίστην ἀνάγουσι θυσίαν ὕμνοις τὸν εὐεργέτην καὶ σωτῆρα γεραίοντες, then offer the best sacrifice, when they honour their Benefactor and Saviour with hymns: he adds, that the altar for burnt-offerings was made of stone, and placed in the court before the tabernacle, but the altar of incense of gold was in the holy place within the veil: whence he infers, that as much as gold is better than stone, and the holy place more sacred than the court,† τοσούτῳ κρεῖττον ἡ διὰ τῶν ἐπιθυμωμένων εὐχαριστία τῆς διὰ τῶν ἐναίμων, so much is the thanksgiving offered up with incense better than that of sacrifices. And, lastly, he saith, that the fire always burning on the altar, was τὸ σύμβολον τῆς εὐχαριστίας, a symbol of thanksgiving. And this thanksgiving, sent up to God with the oblation of bread and wine in the eucharist, in commemoration of our Saviour's passion, and with prayer for our acceptance through his beloved, is by the primitive Christians styled their spiritual sacrifice, and that pure incense, which, according to the prophet Malachi, i. 11. the gentiles were to offer to God throughout the world. (See the text defended, Examen Millii.)

[6] Ver. 6.] That both these stones relate to the Messiah, see Voisin on Rom. ix. 33. and Pug. Fid. par. iii. cap. 5. §. 2. p. 274.

Ver. 7. Λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν γωνίας.] See these words vindicated against Grotius and Dr. Mills, Examen Millii, as also the reading of the text, iii. 5. 16.

[7] Ver. 8. Εἰς ὃ καὶ ἐτέθησαν, Whereunto also they were appointed.] That is, saith the reverend Dr. Hammond, they that disobey the gospel, that stand out obstinately against it, were appointed by God to stumble and fall at that stone, i. e. to be bruised, and ruined by that means, to be destroyed among the crucifiers of the Messiah, and condemned with them hereafter; it being just with God, that they who will not reform, and amend, at the preaching of the gospel, and so receive the benefit by it, should, for their obstinacy, be condemned, and so the worse for it; Christ being set for the falling as well as the rising of many in Israel, (Luke ii. 34.) and the gospel being a savour of death to them that perish, (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16.) and they being those whom, ἔθετο ὁ Θεὸς εἰς ὀργὴν, God hath appointed for wrath. (1 Thess. v. 6.) And to be sure it cannot signify, that God absolutely ordained the unbelieving Jews, εἰς ἀπείθειαν, to disobedience; for then this disobedience would be a compliance with the Divine ordinance or will, and so could not deserve the name of disobedience: nor could this disobedience be objected to them as their crime, unless compliance with his ordinance and will be so, and it be a fault to be such as God by his immutable counsel and decree hath ordained we should be; or it should render men criminal, and obnoxious to punishment, that they have not made void God's absolute decree, or done what that made it impossible for them to do. Wherefore this passage cannot signify, that the unbelieving Jews were appointed to disobedience; but only, that being disobedient to the gospel so clearly revealed, and by so many miracles and distributions of the Holy Ghost confirmed, they were appointed, as the punishment of that disobedience, to fall and perish: for so the Hebrew כשל, and the Greek πρόσκομμα, and σκάνδαλον, import, viz. the ruin and fall of them who stumble at this stone; as hath been proved on Rom. xiv. 13. (See Prov. xvi. 19. Isa. viii. 14, 15. Jer. vi. 21. Ezek. iii. 20. xxi. 15. Zech. xii. 3. Matt. xxi. 41. Luke xx. 18.) So Œcumenius* on this place. Or, secondly, the words may be thus construed, To them who are disobedient, and through that disobedience stumble at the word, this other character of the stone belongs, of a stone of stumbling; whereunto those stones were put, one for honour to the believer, the other for a stone of stumbling to the unbeliever and disobedient: for to both these stones the apostle Paul, Rom. ix. 33. and St. Peter here, do put this preface, Behold, I lay in Zion a stone. And this agrees with that of Simeon, Behold, this child is placed for the fall and rising of many in Israel. (Luke ii. 34.)

Ver. 9.] The titles here given to the Christians, are the same which formerly were given to the whole Jewish nation, and are accordingly to be interpreted:

[8] Γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, A chosen or elected nation.] Not only the righteous and obedient persons among them, but the whole nation of the Jews, are styled the elect of God, throughout the Old Testament: thus, Deut. iv. 37. Because he loved thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, therefore ἐξελέξατο τὸ σπέρμα αὐτῶν μετ' αὐτοὺς ὑμᾶς, he chose you their seed after them, and brought you out of Egypt by his mighty power. Where it is evident, that their whole seed, even all that came out of Egypt, were the elect, Deut. vii. 6, 7. Jehovah thy God hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people to himself, above all people that are on the face of the earth. The Lord did not set his love upon you, because ye were more in number than any people; but because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn to your fathers, hath he brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen. Where it is evident, first, that their being chosen, before other nations, to be God's peculiar people, is their election. Secondly, That all that were brought out of Egypt were thus beloved, and thus elected. Thirdly, That to these elect, and chosen people, God only promiseth to keep covenant and mercy, provided they would love him and obey him; and that he threateneth to destroy them, and to repay them to their face, if they neglect so to do. In the tenth chapter, ver. 14—16. he speaks thus, The Lord had a delight in thy fathers, to love them, καὶ ἐξελέξατο, and he elected you their seed after them above all people; circumcise therefore the foreskin of your hearts, and be no more stiffnecked. Where again evident it is, that the whole seed of Abraham, by Isaac, even the stiffnecked of them, were the beloved and elect of God. Chap. xiv. he saith to all to whom the following precepts did belong, and therefore doubtless to all Israel, Thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God, καί σε ἐξελέξατο ὁ Κύριος, and the Lord hath chosen thee out to be a peculiar people above all nations.

And with this notion of the words, accords the constant use of the same phrase in all the prophets and sacred writers of the Old Testament: thus Solomon saith, 1 Kings iii. 8. Thy servant is in the midst of thy people, ὃν ἐξελέξω, which thou hast elected; a great people that cannot be numbered, nor counted for multitude. In the book of Psalms, the Jews in general are styled the seed of Israel his servant, the children of Jacob, ἐκλεκτοὶ αὐτοῦ, his elect, Psal. cv. 6. 43. cxxxv. 4. there doth he say, τὸν Ἰακὼβ ἑαυτῷ ἐξελέξατο ὁ Κύριος, The Lord hath chosen Jacob to himself, and Israel for his own inheritance, Psal. cvi. 5. there doth he tell us, that the Lord brought forth his people with joy, καὶ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ, and his elect with gladness; there he desires of God, χρηστότητα τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν, the good of his elect, to rejoice in the gladness of his nation: so that throughout the Psalms, God's servants, his people, his nation, his inheritance, and his elect, are the same persons.

In the evangelical prophet we read, God speaking of Jacob, ὃν ἐξελεξάμην, whom I have elected, and Israel whom I have loved, Isa. xli. 8, 9. and to whom he speaks thus, Thou art my child, whom I have chosen, xliii. 20, 21. There God declares, He will make waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the deserts, ποτίσαι τὸ γένος μου τὸ ἐκλεκτὸν, to give drink to my chosen generation, my people whom I have chosen to shew forth my praise, xlv. 4. There we read of Jacob my servant, and Israel mine elect, lxv. 6. and of a mountain which his elect shall inherit, and in which his servants shall dwell.

In the prophet Jeremy we find God is displeased with them who said, The two families, אשר בחר יהוה בהם, whom the Lord had chosen, he hath even cast them off, Jer. xxxiii. 24. The prophet speaks of the day when the Lord chose Israel, and lifted up his hand to the seed of the house of Jacob, Ezek. xx. 5. The prophet Zechariah styles God, The Lord who hath chosen Jerusalem, Zech. iii. 2. And Daniel speaks of a time when οἱ ἐκλεκτοὶ αὐτοῦ, his elect should not be able to stand before their enemies, Dan. xi. 15.

And to carry on this phrase even to the times of the New Testament; in the book of Esther, we are told of a time in which τὸ γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, the chosen generation should have perished, Esth. xvi. 21. i. e. in which the wicked Haman designed to cut off the Jews. In the book of Ecclesiasticus we are informed, that Joshua was made great, ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ ἐκλεκτῶν αὐτοῦ, for saving the elect of God, and taking vengeance on their enemies that rose up against them, (Ecclus. xlvi. 1.) that he might set Israel in their inheritance.

Thus have I traced this phrase throughout the whole Old Testament, and shewed, that it belongs not to particular persons, but to the whole Jewish church and people in the general; to the bad, as well as to the good among them; to them to whom God threateneth the worst of evils, as well as them to whom he promised the greatest blessings.

When in the New Testament this phrase is applied to the Jews, it plainly signifies as many of them as were converted to the Christian faith; though afterward too many of them fell off from it, or brought not forth those fruits of righteousness which Christianity required; and is applied to them all in general, and without distinction. And it is highly reasonable to conceive it should be so; for the apostle writing to that nation, who had been still accustomed to this notion of the word, and were all styled the elect, they must be supposed to use the words of the Old Testament in that sense in which they always understood them: that the apostle doth here so use the word, is evident from this consideration, that the holy nation, the peculiar people, the royal priesthood, joined with it, are expressions belonging primarily to that nation, and from them derived to the Christians. Secondly, That this Epistle is writ to the elect, that is, the strangers of the dispersions of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, they all being styled the elect, i. e. such as professed Christianity, and so were visible members of the church of Christ; whereas too many of them were not so, according to that meaning of the word elect, which makes it to import men absolutely designed for eternal happiness, as this and the Second Epistle may inform us. Thirdly, That the Second Epistle, sent to the same persons, writes only to them who had obtained like precious faith with us; and so informs us, that the faithful and elect are in St. Peter's phrase the same. And that this is the notion of the word in all the other places of the New Testament, see proved in the notes upon them; and that it is applied to whole churches, and scarce ever to any individual person, in that sense in which it hath been so generally used by some late divines.

[9] Βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, A royal priesthood.] Exod. xix. 6. A kingdom of priests: Kings and priests, saith the Chaldee. And so St. John declares, that Christ hath made us kings and priests to God, Rev. i. 6. v. 10. Kings to reign with him, xx. 6. and priests to offer up unto him our spiritual sacrifices. (See here, ver. 5.)

[10] Ἔθνος ἅγιον, A holy nation.] i. e. A people separated to God from all other nations, and from their idolatry, or false and antiquated worship, to serve him in an acceptable manner: on which account all Christian churches, being called out of the world, and dedicated to the service of God by Jesus Christ, are, in the preface to St. Paul's Epistles, styled saints. (See note on 1 Cor. i. 2.)

[11] Λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν, A peculiar people.] A treasure, as the word segullah signifies, a people in covenant with God, and so become his peculium, whom he will be careful to protect and preserve, and to whom belong his peculiar favours and privileges.

[12] Τὰς ἀρετὰς, His praises;] Or, glory. תהלה, is so rendered by the Septuagint, Isa. xlii. 8. I will not give my glory to another, οὐδὲ τὰς ἀρετάς μου, nor my praise to graven images: and, ver. 12. Let them give glory to the Lord; τὰς ἀρετὰς αὐτοῦ ἀναγγελοῦσι, let them shew forth his praises in the islands: and, xliii. 21. he styles Israel my elect; as here, my peculiar people, τὰς ἀρετάς μου διηγεῖσθαι, to shew forth my praise. (See also, lxiii. 7. Hab. iii. 3. Zech. vi. 13. Esth. xiv. 10.)

[13] Ver. 10. Οἱ ποτὲ οὐ λαὸς, Who in times past were not a people.] These words plainly relate to God's dealing with the ten tribes of Israel, when he had given them a bill of divorce, (Jer. iii. 8.) and sent his prophet Hosea to say unto them, Ye are not my people, neither will I be your God.

(Hos. i. 6. 9.) And again, I will no more have mercy on the house of Israel, but will utterly cast them away: and indeed, God having so expressly said, that the children of Judah and Israel should be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, that he would have mercy upon her who had not obtained mercy, and would say to them who were not his people, Thou art my people, (Hos. i. 11. ii. 23.) and that they should say, Thou art my God, and that the house of Judah should walk with the house of Israel; I doubt not but that there was a considerable return of the ten tribes, or at least a considerable conversion of them in the places where they were: and though they being mixed with the heathens, did many of them serve their gods, as he threatened they should, Deut. xxviii. 36. 64. and so may be also said to be called from darkness to this marvellous light; yet since the apostle Paul applies this passage to the gentiles, (Rom. ix. 25.) I doubt not but that, in my mystical sense, it must relate to them also.

[14] Ver. 11. Ὡς παροίκους, As strangers and pilgrims.] They whose citizenship is in heaven, and whose names are written in heaven, (Phil. iii. 20. Heb. xii. 23.) must be pilgrims and strangers upon earth. (See note on Heb. xi. 13.)

[15] Στρατεύονται, War against the soul.] For whereas the natural motion of that spiritual being is towards spiritual and heavenly things, These lusts (saith Œcumenius) draw down and captivate the soul to sensual and worldly things: as therefore strangers and pilgrims are not wont to be affected much with the objects which they see in their travels; so neither should we, who profess to be pilgrims in this world, be much affected with sensual objects.

[16] Ver. 12. Καταλαλοῦσιν ὑμῶν, Speak evil of you as of evil-doers.] Here Œcumenius gives this relation from Irenæus, bishop of Lyons, concerning the martyrs Sanctus and Blandina; "That the heathens apprehending the servants of some Christians, and compelling them to declare what evil they knew of them, those servants having heard from the Christians that the holy sacrament was the body and blood of Christ, and thinking that it was, τῷ ὄντι, verily and substantially, his flesh and blood, related this to the inquirers, and they thinking, ὡς αὐτόχρημα, that this was done in very deed by Christians, told this to other heathens, and compelled the martyrs Sanctus and Blandina, by torments, to confess it; to which Blandina answered, How can they be guilty of such things, who by exercise (i. e. through temperance) permit not themselves to enjoy lawful flesh?"

[17] Ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς, In the day of visitation.] That is, when they afflict and persecute you: so ἐπισκοπὴ and ἡμέρα ἐπισκοπῆς often signify in the Septuagint; Isa. x. 3. What will ye do, ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς, in the day of visitation, when your affliction shall come from far; Jer. vi. 15. ἐν καιρῷ ἐπισκοπῆς, In the time of their visitation they shall perish: and again, x. 15. Wisd. iii. 7. ἐν καιρῷ ἐπισκοπῆς, In the time of their visitation they shall shine; Ecclus. ii. 14. Woe to them who have lost patience, what will they do, ὅταν ἐπισκέπτηται ὁ Κύριος, when the Lord visits? and, xviii. 20. Before the judgment examine thyself, καὶ ἐν ὥρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς, and in the hour of visitation thou shalt find propitiation.

[18] Ver. 14. Δι' αὐτοῦ, By him.] That is, by God, saith Esthius, because these governors were not always sent by Cæsar for these good ends; but it is sufficient that this was the general end of punishment, &c. and therefore they, in charity, must be supposed to be sent by kings and emperors for those ends.

[19] Ver. 16. Ὡς ἐλεύθεροι, As free, &c.] That the gnostics pretended to any such liberty as exempted them from subjection to superiors, I find not in church-history; but, that the Jews, to whom St. Peter writes, and especially the zealots among them, were notorious for this doctrine, and were practising it at the writing of this Epistle, is evident: for,

First, They held themselves obliged to own * God alone as their only Lord and Governor, in opposition to Cæsar, and all kings which were not of their own nation, and did not govern them by their own laws, or his immediate appointment.

Secondly, They, many of them, rebelled against the Romans, and against the governors sent by them, upon this very pretence, That † they were a free people, and ought to preserve their liberty: and thus they used their liberty for a cloak of maliciousness.

[20] Ver. 18. Οἱ οἰκέται, Servants be subject.] This also was a lesson needful for the Jews, because the Essenes among them, say Philo and Josephus, thought it against the law of nature to be servants to any; and their rabbins allowed not a Jew to be a servant to a heathen. (See note on 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2.)

[21] Ver. 19. Τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις.] This will procure the Divine favour and reward. So what is, ποία ὑμῖν χάρις; what thank have ye? Luke vi. 32, 33. is, τίνα μισθὸν ἔχετε; what reward have ye? Matt. v. 46. and in the following verse this phrase is rendered, This is acceptable.

[2] Ver. 20.] Note, first, from comparing this and the preceding verse, that to suffer, (ver. 19.) and to take our sufferings patiently, (ver. 20.) in the Scripture import, is the same thing.

Secondly, That to do that which is truly acceptable to God, is also matter of our glory. (See note on 1 Cor. ix. 6. Jer. ix. 24. Rom. ii. 7. 10.)

[23] Ver. 24. Ἀνήνεγκεν, Bare our sins.] If these words be truly rendered, he bare our sins, it is certain that an innocent person can only bear them by bearing the punishment due to them: and that this is the proper import of these words, τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν ἀνήνεγκεν, is evident both from the prophet's exposition of them, when he saith of the same person, αὐτὸς ἁμαρτίας πολλῶν ἀνήνεγκε, he bare the sins of many, (Isa. liii. 12.) and expounds this thus, διὰ τὰς ἀνομίας αὐτῶν παρεδόθη, he was delivered up to death for their iniquities; and from the usual import of the phrase in the Old Testament; as, when we read in the book of Leviticus, vii. 18. He that eateth of the peace-offering in the third day, it shall not be favourably accepted, τὴν ἁμαρτίαν λήψεται, he shall bear his iniquity. And again, Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, thou shalt in any wise rebuke him, καὶ οὐ λήψῃ δι' αὐτὸν ἁμαρτίαν, and not bear sin for him: (Lev. xix. 17.) and in the book of Numbers thus, Your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, καὶ ἀνοίσουσι τὴν πορνείαν ὑμῶν, and shall bear your whoredoms—Ye shall bear your iniquities forty years: (Numb. xiv. 33, 34.) when we hear the prophet Jeremy complaining, Our fathers have sinned, and are not, usabalnu, τὰ ἀνομήματα αὐτῶν ὑπέσχομεν, and we have borne their iniquities: (Lam. v. 7.) when we hear God saying to Ezekiel, Lie thou upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it; according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it, λήψῃ τὰς ἀδικίας αὐτῶν, thou shalt bear their iniquities: (Ezek. iv. 4—6.) when it is farther said, The soul that sinneth it shall die; the son οὐ λήψεται, shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: (Ezek. xxviii. 20.) when we read so often in the law of Moses, that such persons have been guilty,* and shall bear their iniquity, they shall die for it; and find so many cautions there given to the Jews, that they offend not in such a kind,† that they bear not iniquity and die; or, lest they bear iniquity and die: in all these places, neither the Socinians, nor any other persons, do fancy any other import of these words, but that by bearing of iniquity and sin is meant bearing the punishment of sin; and in these latter places, being punished with death for it. When therefore the same Jews found it foretold of their Messiah, by their own prophet, that he should bear the sin of many, what could they understand by these expressions, but that he was to suffer the punishment, and bear upon him the burden of their sins? When the apostle informs those very Jews who were so well acquainted with the import of this phrase, that Christ was once offered, or given up to death, to bear the sins of many; and when St. Peter, writing to the same Jews, informs them, that he bare our sins in his own body on the tree, how can we think otherwise, than that they both apprehended, and the blessed apostle did design to teach them, that he suffered this death as the punishment of their iniquities? Let Mr. Le Clerc continue, if he please, to be confident that it is not so much the expiation of sins, as the mortification of them, that is here signified, whilst we poor mortals rather think our sins must be mortified in us than on a tree, and in our own bodies than in Christ's, or in the sufferings of his body; and that it is not very good sense to say, he mortified our sins, that we might die unto them.

Lastly, Admit the words may be translated thus, He took away our sins, it is most reasonable so to interpret them as this phrase is used in Scripture, when it is applied to the same purpose; now when it is there used of taking away sin by a sacrifice offered up to God for sin, it always hath relation to an atonement made by the sacrifice for that iniquity; and that sin-offering is said to bear away the iniquity, by taking it upon himself. So when it is said that the sin-offering is given, ἵνα ἀφέλητε τὴν ἁμαρτίαν τῆς συναγωγῆς, καὶ ἐξιλάσασθε περὶ αὐτῶν ἔναντι Κυρίου, to take away the iniquity of the congregation, it is there said to do it, by making an atonement for them before the Lord, Lev. x. 17. So it is said of the scapegoat, that he shall bear away all their iniquities; but then he must be presented before the Lord, τοῦ ἐξιλάσασθαι ἐπ' αὐτοῦ, to make atonement with, or upon, him, Lev. xvi. 10. i. e. Aaron must confess their iniquities upon his head, and he shall bear upon him all their iniquities, λήψεται ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν, he shall take their iniquities upon himself, and shall bear them away into the wilderness. So, Deut. xxi. 9. Thou shalt take away innocent blood from among you: but this is to be done by making an atonement for the innocent blood shed. When therefore it is said, that Christ was manifested to take away sin, 1 John iii. 5. and that he took away our sins in his own body, and was offered to take away the sins of many, Heb. ix. 28. is it not reasonable to suppose he did this by taking the punishment of them upon himself, and making an atonement for them before God? especially if we consider, that he is speaking to those Jews to whom these phrases were familiar.

* Τὴν ἁμαρτίαν λήψεται. Lev. v. 1. vii. 18. xxiv. 15. Numb. ix. 13. Ezek. xxiii. 49. Ἁμαρτίαν καμιοῦνται. Lev. xx. 17. Ἁμαρτίαν ἀποίσονται, ver. 19, 20.

CHAP. III.

1. (AND, to proceed to the other relations, of man and wife;) likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any (be such as) obey not the word, they also without the word (i. e. without attending to the other demonstrations of the truth of it) may be won (to the faith) by the conversation of the wives;

2. Whilst they behold your chaste [1] conversation coupled with fear:

3. Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of [2] plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold (chains), or of putting on of (gorgeous) apparel;

4. But let it be (that of) the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price.

5. For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves (with chastity and subjection), being in subjection to their own husbands;

6. Even as Sarah obeyed Abraham (in token of that subjection), calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement, (i. e. and be not moved by your fears to deny the truth, as she was, ἐφοβήθη γὰρ, for she was afraid, Gen. xviii. 15.)

7. [3] Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to (the) knowledge (of your Christian duty, which requires you to love and cleave to your wives, forsaking all others, and to render them due benevolence), giving honour (or conjugal affection) to the wife, as to the weaker vessel (and so less able to contain, and more liable to temptations), and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered (as they must be if ye refuse to cohabit with them).

8. Finally, be all of one mind (minding the same things), having compassion one of another (under all your afflictions), love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous (these being the effects of love);

9. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing (things contrary to love, as shewing rancour in the heart and tongue): but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called (i. e. for this very end), that you should inherit a blessing (and so by blessing others, will imitate your gracious God, and shew how willing ye are the same mercies may be conferred on others).

10. For he that will love life (i. e. who is desirous of a quiet, pleasant life), and (would) see good (i. e. prosperous) days, let him refrain his tongue from evil (speaking, so that men may refrain from speaking evil of him again), and his lips that they speak no guile:

11. Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it (that so men may be disposed to speak uprightly, and do good to you, and live peaceably with you, and you may live under the protection of Divine Providence).

12. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous (to protect them from evil), and his ears are open to their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil (to return it upon their own heads).

13. And (this deportment doth also naturally tend to preserve you from evil, for) who is he that will (be so unnatural and ungrateful as to) harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good (and obliging to them)?

14. But if (it should so happen, that notwithstanding) ye (should) suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: (iv. 14.) and (therefore) [4] be not afraid of their terror (i. e. of what they threaten), neither be ye troubled (for what they can inflict upon you);

15. But [5] sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an [6] answer (or account) to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear:

16. Having (or retaining) a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil-doers (and consequently represent your faith as instigating you to evil practices), they may be ashamed (of such accusations), that falsely accuse your good conversation in (the faith of) Christ.

17. (This care of retaining a good conscience is necessary, that ye may have comfort in your sufferings, and be conformed to Christ by them;) for it is better, if the will of God be so (and he sees fit to permit it), that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.

18. For Christ also hath once [7] suffered for sins, the [8] just for the unjust, [9] that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

19. By which (Spirit) also he went and preached [10] to the spirits in prison;

20. Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noe, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.

21. The like figure whereunto (Gr. the antitype of which ark is that) baptism (which) doth also now save us, not (merely as it is) the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but (as it is) the [11] answer (or stipulation) of a good conscience towards God (and this salvation it works for us), by (virtue of) [12] the resurrection of Jesus Christ:

22. Who is (Gr. being) gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; (there interceding for us, and invested with all power to give eternal life to those whom God hath given him, and who is able to save us to the uttermost who come unto God by him, Heb. vii. 25.) angels, and authorities, and powers, being made subject to him (who therefore will use the good angels as ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who are heirs of salvation, Heb. i. 14. and will preserve them from those authorities, and powers, and evil spirits, which oppose and persecute them, and seek their ruin).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 2. ΤΗ'Ν ἐν φόβῳ ἁγνὴν ἀναστροφὴν ὑμῶν, Your chaste conversation in fear.] i. e. That they observing that the fear and reverence of that God you serve, produceth in you all due subjection and obedience to them, great chastity, and freedom from all suspicion of lust, great meekness and quietness of spirit in the family, sobriety in your apparel, and care of their concerns, you may by these things commend to them, not only your own persons, but that faith which produces in you these good fruits.

[2] Ver. 3. Ἐμπλοκῆς τριχῶν, Not the outward adorning, &c.] These, in the words of Clemens of Alexandria,* are τὸ ἑταιρικὸν καλλώπισμα, the ornaments of whores; and such as demonstrate, τὸ σοβαρὸν, καὶ θρυπτικὸν, καὶ ἀβροδίαιτον, their arrogance, softness, and lasciviousness; the plaiting of the hair was (saith he†) a sign of corrupt women, καὶ γὰρ αἱ περιπλοκαὶ τριχῶν ἑταιρικαί· and they that use them (he saith) were ἑταιρικῶς κοσμούμενοι, attired like whores. And in his third book, and fourth chapter, he saith, αἱ χρυσοφορροῦσαι γυναῖκες, the women that wear gold, plait their hair, paint their faces, have not the image of God in the inward man, but, in lieu of it, a fornicating and adulterous soul. The Apostolical Constitutions‡ also forbid women to wear τὴν ἐπιτηδευμένην ἐσθῆτα εἰς ἀπάτην, exquisite garments, or garments fitted to deceive, or gold rings upon their fingers, ὅτι ταῦτα πάντα ἑταιρισμοῦ τεκμήρια ὑπάρχει, because all these things are signs of whoredom. And as for the wearing of gold, Jamblichus,§ in the life of Pythagoras, saith, τὸ χρυσὸν ἐλευθέραν μηδεμίαν φορεῖν, μόνον δὲ τὰς ἑταίρας, that no free women wore gold, but whores only. The precious apparel is the thing, which all the comedians mention as the attire which such women sought after, and gloried in. These things therefore, when they are used as such marks of distinction, are absolutely forbid chaste women: but when they cease to be so, they may be worn by Christian women, provided they do it without pride, or much concern about them; and still remembering that gravity in apparel is still more honourable and becoming Christian matrons, and that the ornaments of the mind, which are not subject to corruption, are much to be preferred before them.

[3] Ver. 7. Οἱ ἄνδρες ὁμοίως, Likewise, ye husbands.] I am very uncertain what is the true sense of these words. The reverend Dr. Hammond interprets them thus, "Let the husbands in like manner live conjugally with their wives, as Christianity requires of them; giving them maintenance, as persons less able to provide for themselves, and considering that they are by God's appointment copartners with them of the good things of this life; that so they may not be disturbed in their prayers by their distractions and solicitudes for this world." Which interpretation I should acquiesce in, could I find that the phrase συγκληρονόμοι ζωῆς or ζώσης, being heirs together of the grace of life, was ever used, only with respect to the good things of this present life; or that ἐκκόπτεσθαι τὰς προσευχὰς signified only to be distracted in prayers, and not rather to have them only hindered.

Others interpret them thus: Let the husbands live with their wives as Christianity requires, not irritating or provoking them, (Colos. iv. 19.) not despising their company; but giving honour to them as most needing it, and as considering that they are equal to them in respect of spirituals; and that by your discontents, displeasure against and separation from one another, your prayers be not hindered.

Others, as in the paraphrase, refer this to conjugal relation and to conjugal duties; as all the ancients, who have spoken of these words, interpret them. Œcumenius saith, he thinks they are to be interpreted, ἐπὶ τῆς γαμικῆς χρήσεως, of the conjugal use of one another; and the word συνοικεῖν seems to plead for this sense, as being so used by the Septuagint, Gen. xx. 3. Deut. xxiv. 1. xxv. 5. Isa. lxii. 5. Esd. i. 8. 70. 84. 92. but then I find not that the word τιμὴ beareth any such sense. Only to this it may be answered, that Origen* seems to point the words thus: "Let the husband dwell with the wife according to knowledge, as being more infirm, giving honour to them also, as being heirs of the grace of life." And seeing συνοικέω signifies to marry, or contract matrimony, the words may be thus paraphrased: Likewise, ye men, be ye joined in marriage with the women, as ye find them endued with the knowledge of Christianity, they being the weaker vessels, and so more subject without this knowledge to miscarry: giving preference in your choice to such as be heirs together with you of the grace of life, that, through difference in religion, your prayers be not cut off.

[4] Ver. 14. Τὸν φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβηθῆτε, Fear not their fear.] These, and the following words, Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, are plainly taken from Isa. viii. 12. and they are there an exhortation not to fear the Assyrians, nor to be dismayed, as those Jews were, who out of fear were desirous to confederate with them; and so accordingly they must here signify, that Christians were not so to dread those by whom they suffered for the sake of righteousness, nor any that out of fear conspired with them to avoid persecution, as too many of the Jews did, (Gal. vi. 12, 13.) as to do any thing contrary to the fear of God, or unbecoming their profession.

[5] Ver. 15. Κύριον ἁγιάσατε, But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts.] This phrase in Scripture seems to import these things:

First, That we should always have upon our spirits such a holy fear and reverence of God, as will prevail upon us to dread more his displeasure than any thing which we can suffer from the hand of man, (Matt. xx. 28.) and so enable us to stick close to our duty, and to endeavour to secure his favour, whatsoever we may suffer for so doing. So, Isa. vii. 12, 13. Fear not their fear, but sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread: so, xxix. 23. They shall sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.

Secondly, To sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, is from the heart to own and to believe the truth of all that God delivers by his word and promise: as when God saith to Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them. (Numb. xx. 12.) Hence the apostle, having told the Christians, he writeth to them of the engagements God had made, that his eyes should be over the righteous, and his ears open to their prayers, and minded them of the hope that was in them, requires them thus to sanctify the Lord God in their hearts.

Thirdly, This phrase imports a firm belief of his almighty power, which makes him able to protect his people against all their enemies, and an affiance in his goodness and especial providence towards them: Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and he shall be for a sanctuary, Isa. viii. 13. So Ezekiel, xxxvi. 22—24.

Fourthly, To sanctify the Lord, is to acknowledge and believe his justice, and that he is a God who will be sure to execute his judgments on the wicked, and more especially upon the prosecutors of his people. So when he executed his judgments on Nadab and Abihu, Moses declares, This is the thing the Lord had spoken, I will be sanctified in those that come nigh to me. So Numb. xx. 13. This is the water of Meribah, because the children of Israel contended with the Lord, and he was sanctified in them, by punishing their rebellion, saith the Targum. So God declares he would be sanctified upon Sidon, which had been to the house of Israel a pricking brier, and a grieving thorn, (Ezek. xxviii. 24.) and upon Gog, the great enemy of Israel, (xxxviii. 3.) So the rabbins say, that when God doth judgment, he sanctifies himself before his creatures; according to these words of the prophet Isaiah, The Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness, (v. 16.)

[6] Πρὸς ἀπολογίαν.] This apology for the hope that was in them, seems rather such as should be made by works than words; against them who accuse the professors of it as evil-doers, rather than against them who only doubt of the truth of it.

[7] Ver. 18. Περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἔπαθε, Hath suffered for sins.] Here note, that Christ is not only said to suffer for us, but to suffer for our sins. Now was ever any man said to suffer for his own sins, who did not suffer the punishment of his iniquity? Why therefore should our Lord be said to suffer for sins, if he did not some way suffer the punishment of our iniquity? Again, is not the sin-offering in the Old Testament styled above sixty times, τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, and τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, the offering for sin? When therefore the oblation of our Lord is also called, τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, an offering for sin, Rom. viii. 3. when he is said to suffer περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, for sins, 2 Cor. v. 21. what could the Jews, to whom the apostle writes, conceive to be the proper import of these words, but that he suffered to make atonement for their sins, as did all their sin-offerings, by suffering in their stead the punishment of their iniquity? (See the notes on Rom. viii. 3. 2 Cor. v. 21.)

[8] Δίκαιος ὑπὲρ ἀδίκων, The just for the unjust.] That is, saith Schlictingius,* "That the unjust might not suffer death, nor bear the punishment of their iniquities; for the victim suffers lest the guilty should be punished."

[9] Ἵνα προσαγάγῃ, That he might bring us to God.] This phrase, in all other places of the New Testament, where it is used with respect to Christ, imports his procuring to us freedom of access to God, who by our sins were formerly excluded from him, and banished from his gracious presence. By him we have, saith the apostle Paul, προσαγωγὴν πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, admission to the Father; by him we do obtain παῤῥησίαν εἰς τὴν προσαγωγήν, a freedom of access to God with confidence. (Eph. ii. 18. iii. 12.) This is obtained, saith the same apostle, by virtue of his blood; for we who sometimes were afar off, are by the blood of Christ brought nigh unto him: we are brought nigh unto him, saith St. Peter here, by his suffering for our sins. Must not then we, who were excluded and banished from him by our sins, be brought nigh and reconciled to him by the blood of Christ, and by his sufferings for us on the cross?

[10] Ver. 19. Τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασι, To the spirits in prison.] Or, as other copies read, πνεύματι, by which Spirit going, he preached to those in prison. For explication of which words, note,

First, That by those in prison we may understand the gentile world in bondage and captivity to sin and Satan, and held in the chains of their own lusts, and in the bonds of their iniquity. For by this phrase the evangelical prophet doth thrice express the preaching of the gospel by our Lord Jesus Christ: as in those words, I gave thee for a covenant to the people, for a light to the gentiles, to open the blind eyes, to bring, ἐκ δεσμῶν δεδεμένους, καὶ ἐξ οἴκου φυλακῆς, the prisoners out of prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house, Isa. xlii. 7. And again, I will give thee for a light to the gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation to the ends of the earth, that thou mayest say, τοῖς ἐν δεσμοῖς, ἐξέλθετε, to the prisoners, Go forth, xlix. 9. And a third time, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to those that are bound, lxi. 1, 2. To this effect are all these places interpreted by St. Jerome, Theodoret, and Procopius, upon Isaiah; viz. of those gentiles who were bound in the chain of their sins, and captivated by Satan. Accordingly Lactantius, having cited the words extant, xlii. 7. saith, Cum igitur nos antea tanquam cæci, et tanquam carcere stultitiæ inclusi, sederemus in tenebris, ignorantes Deum et veritatem, illuminati ab eo sumus, qui nos testamento suo adoptavit, et liberatos malis vinculis, atque in lucem sapientiæ productos, in hæreditatem regni cœlestis ascivit. (Lib. iv. cap. 20.) Accordingly Philo * doth often represent men brought in bondage to their lusts ὡς ἐν δεσμωτηρίῳ καθειργμένην ψυχὴν ἔχοντες, as persons whose souls are shut up in a prison-house; and those who have overcome their lusts and sinful pleasures,† ὥσπερ ἐξ εἱρκτῆς προσεληλυθότων, καὶ δεσμοῖς οἷς ἐπεσφίγγοντο διαφειμένων, as persons who are come out of prison, and have put off their chains: adding, that God promised liberty to the souls that seek to him for it,‡ οὐ μόνον λύσιν δεσμῶν καὶ ἔξοδον ἐκ τῆς περιφρουρουμένης εἱρκτῆς παρασχόμενος, not only affording them freedom from their bonds, and an exit from the prison in which they were kept; but giving them provisions for their journey, and safe conduct.

Now the antediluvians, who lived about the time of Noah, were ἐν φυλακῇ, in prison, upon a double account: 1. By reason of their bondage to sin: for then all flesh had corrupted their way, their wickedness was great upon the earth, and every imagination of their heart was to do evil, and that continually: (Gen. vi. 5, 6. 13.) and, 2. they were in prison, or ἐν φυλακῇ, as having from God received the sentence of destruction, if they repented not within a hundred and twenty years, according to these words, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he is flesh: yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years: (Gen. vi. 3.) i. e. so long will I expect his reformation before I bring the flood upon them. Thus the long-suffering of God waited for them in the days of Noah, expecting their repentance, and keeping them, as it were, in prison for the day of slaughter, if they did not repent. During this time, and before, God sent unto them his prophets, denouncing by his Spirit his judgments against the wicked; for to them Enoch, the seventh prophet from Adam, prophesied, saying, The Lord cometh with his thousands of angels to do judgment against all, and to reprove all the ungodly concerning all their ungodly works which they had wickedly committed, and concerning all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners had spoken against him. (Jude 14, 15.) And he sent also Noah to them, a preacher of righteousness, (1 Pet. ii. 5.) who, by preparing an ark before them for his own preservation, in obedience to the oracle delivered to him, condemned the old world. (Heb. xi. 7.) Thus did Christ by his Spirit preach to them in the days of Noah: and therefore the antediluvian age is even by the Jews styled the age of the Holy Ghost; according to those words, My Spirit shall not always strive with man; that is, say Ainsworth and the Bishop of Ely, My Spirit in my prophets, Enoch and Noah, shall not be always chiding and reproving, and thereby endeavouring to bring men to repentance, but shall proceed to punish them. Now this punishment being the drowning of the old world, their spirits have been ever since kept in prison, or reserved in chains of darkness, to the judgment of the great day: for by the consent of the Jewish nation, * The generation of the old world have no portion in the world to come, neither shall they stand up in judgment; for it is said, My Spirit shall not always judge with man. The phrase "My Spirit (saith Dr. Fuller) is never used of any other but the Spirit of God, and therefore must here be interpreted of the same Spirit."

Now from that time to our Saviour's advent, God sent no prophet to the whole heathen world, no person with commission to preach to all nations, or teach the gospel to every creature, but suffered them to walk in their own ways, (Acts xiv. 16.) whence they are said to have been disobedient only once of old time, in the days of Noah.

[10] Ver. 19. By which he preached to the spirits in prison.] Hence Mr. Dodwell concludes, that our Saviour after his death did, in the interval betwixt that and his resurrection, preach to the separated souls in hades; but to this the reverend Bishop Pearson answers:

First, That those words cannot prove this assertion, unless it were certain, that by the word spirit we were to understand the soul of Christ, whereas indeed the spirit by which he is said to preach, was not the soul of Christ, but that Spirit by which he was quickened; as is evident from the connexion of the words thus, He was quickened by that Spirit, ἐν ᾧ, by which he went and preached to the spirits in prison, that is, by the eternal Spirit of God, who is the author of the resurrection.

Secondly, He adds, that the persons to whom he preached by the Spirit, were only such as were disobedient in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing; (ver. 20.) i. e. those who were disobedient before the flood, as were the antediluvians, all that time that the long-sufferance of God waited on them, and consequently so long as God gave them time for repentance, which was one hundred and twenty years, striving then with them for that end by his Spirit in the prophets Enoch and Noah, but adding that his Spirit should not always strive with them: in vain then, saith he, are we taught to understand St. Peter of the promulgation of the gospel to the Jews or gentiles then in hades, since the words so evidently relate to the long-suffering of God to men, then living in the days of Noah.

[11] Ver. 21. Ἐπερώτημα, The answer of a good conscience.] Therefore, say the anabaptists, baptism cannot be salutary to those infants who cannot make this answer of a good conscience. To this I answer, that St. Paul also saith, that the true circumcision before God is not the outward circumcision of the flesh, but the internal circumcision of the heart and spirit. (Rom. ii. 29.) But will any one hence argue, that the Jewish infants, for want of this, were not to be admitted into covenant with God by circumcision? And yet the argument is plainly parallel: the answer of a good conscience is required, that the baptism may be salutary; therefore they only are to be baptized who can make this answer: and the inward circumcision of the heart is required as the only acceptable circumcision in the sight of God; therefore they only are to be circumcised who have this inward circumcision of the heart. The Jews did not admit proselytes to circumcision without this answer of a good conscience; but yet they admitted their infants without any such thing: why therefore may we not allow the Christian church, in the administration of baptism, to observe the same custom in admitting the children of their proselytes to baptism, as they admitted them both to circumcision and baptism?

[12] Δι' ἀναστάσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, By the resurrection of Jesus Christ,] Who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, (Rom. iv. 25.) and hath by his resurrection begotten us to a lively hope of an inheritance incorruptible, (1 Pet. i. 3, 4.) is risen as the first-fruits of them that sleep, (1 Cor. xv. 20.) and so hath assured us, that they who are Christ's shall also be raised by him to eternal life, (ver. 23. 2 Cor. iv. 14. 1 Thess. iv. 14.) and who, being risen, is now in heaven promoting our salvation, (ver. 22.) and preparing mansions for us. (John xiv. 2.)

CHAP. IV.

1. FORASMUCH then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind (or resolution to be conformed to him in his sufferings, as being buried with him in baptism, Rom. vi. 4. and so planted together with him in the likeness of his death, ver. 5. the old man being crucified with him, that the body of sin might be abolished, that henceforth we might not serve sin): for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin;

2. (Insomuch) that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh, (in obedience) to the lusts of men (ignorant of the truth, 1 Pet. i. 14.) but to the will of God. (Rom. vi. 10, 11.)

3. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, (fleshly) lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and [1] abominable idolatries:

4. Wherein they think it strange (Gr. wonder) that you run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you:

5. Who shall give (an) account (of these sins against nature) to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

* Sanhedr. p. 10. Halech. 3.

6. For, for this cause was the gospel preached also [2] to them that are dead (i. e. to the gentile world, dead in trespasses and sins), that they might be judged (might judge, condemn, and oppose their former life, led) according to men (not enlightened by the gospel) in the flesh, but (and might) live according to God in the spirit.

7. But the [3] end of all things (belonging to the Jewish state, mentioned Matt. xxiv. 6. Mark xiii. 7. Luke xxi. 9.) is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer, (according to our Lord's advice in that case, Luke xxi. 34. 36.)

8. And above all have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins, (which ye may have been guilty of in the time of your enmity to Christ and his servants; or those manifold infirmities ye may have committed, in building hay and stubble on the foundation, to your own great hazard, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. 15. Or, it covers the sins of others, preventing them by patience, not taking notice of them when committed, and concealing them from others: to this sense the words of the wise man lead, Prov. x. 12.)

9. Use hospitality one to another without grudging (or murmuring that you bestow your charity on them who are not of your nation, or are not circumcised, and obedient to the law, as ye think yourselves obliged to be).

10. As every man hath received [4] the gift (of the Spirit), even so (let him) minister the same one to another, as (becomes) good stewards of the manifold grace of God (to do).

11. If any man speak (i. e. teach), let him speak as (he is instructed from) the oracles of God; if any man minister (as a deacon), let him do it as of the ability that God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ; to whom be praise and dominion (ascribed) for ever and ever. Amen.

12. Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is (come) to try you (Gr. wonder not at the burning that is among you, and is befallen you for trial), as though some strange (and unexpected) thing (had) happened to you: (this being only that which was foretold by us, 1 Thess. iii. 4. to which ye were appointed, and to which ye were called, 1 Pet. ii. 21.)

13. But rejoice (in it rather), inasmuch as ye are (thus made) [5] partakers of (sufferings resembling) Christ's sufferings; that (so), when his glory shall be revealed, ye may (resembling him then in glory, as ye do now in sufferings, Rom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 11, &c.) be glad also with exceeding joy.

14. (And) if (it so happen that) ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye (in such sufferings); for the [6] Spirit of glory, and of God, rests upon you: (so that though) on their part (who are unbelievers) he (i. e. Christ) is evil spoken of, but (Gr. yet) on your part he is glorified.

15. But let (especial care be taken that) none of you suffer [7] as a murderer, or a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters.

16. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian (i. e. only on that account), let him not be ashamed; but let him [8] glorify God on this behalf.

17. For the time is come that judgment must (according to our Lord's prediction, Matt. xxiv. 21, 22. Mark xiii. 13. Luke xxi. 16, 17.) begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us (believing Jews), what will be the [9] end of them that obey not the gospel of God?

18. And if (some of) the righteous scarcely be saved, (i. e. preserved from this burning, ver. 12. being saved, yet so as by fire, 1 Cor. iii. 15.) where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear (in safety from these dreadful judgments which are coming on the Jewish nation? Prov. xi. 31.)

19. Wherefore (seeing the sufferings of Christians then will be so little, in comparison of those which shall befal the unbelievers, ver. 17, 18. seeing the Spirit of glory and power shall support and comfort them under these sufferings, ver. 14. and Christ hath promised them protection in that dreadful day, and said, He that endureth to the end, shall be saved, Matt. xxiv. 12, 13.) let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls (i. e. their lives) to him in well-doing, as to a faithful Creator, (who, being their Creator, must be able to deliver them; and being faithful, will not suffer them to be tempted above what they are able, 1 Cor. x. 13.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 3. 'ΑΘΕΜΙ'ΤΟΙΣ εἰδωλολατρείαις, Abominable idolatries:] i. e. In idolatries joined with divers abominations (i. e. with drunkenness, uncleanness, unnatural cruelties to their own children, homicide).

Note here, that this is an evidence, that this Epistle was directed not only to the Jewish nation, but to the gentile converts.

[2] Ver. 6.] For explication of these words, note,

First, That οἱ νεκροὶ, the dead, in Scripture, doth often signify, not those who in a natural sense are dead by dissolution of the soul and body, but those who are spiritually so, as being alienated from the life of God, and dead in trespasses and sins; as when the apostle saith, The widow that liveth in pleasure, is dead whilst she liveth, 1 Tim. v. 6. And Christ unto the church of Sardis, Thou hast a name to live, and art dead, Rev. iii. 1. And when he speaks to one of his disciples thus, Follow thou me, and let the dead bury their dead, Matt. viii. 22. This is a phrase so common with the Jews, that, as Maimonides* informs us, they proverbially say, "Impii etiam viventes vocantur mortui," the wicked are dead even while they are alive: for he, saith Philo,† who lives a life of sin, τέθνηκε τὸν εὐδαίμονα, is dead, as to a life of happiness; his soul is dead, and even buried in his lusts and passions. And because the whole gentile world lay more especially under these most unhappy circumstances, whence the apostle styles them sinners of the gentiles, Gal. ii. 15. it was proverbially said by the Jewish doctors, "Populi terrarum, i. e. Ethnici non vivunt," the heathens do not live; and they in Scripture are more peculiarly intended by that phrase. Hence the apostle saith to the Ephesians and Colossians, (Eph. ii. 1. Colos. ii. 13.) that they were νεκροὶ τοῖς ἁμαρτήμασι, dead in trespasses and sins; and brings in God thus speaking to the gentiles, Awake, thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life, Eph. v. 14.

Secondly, The ends for which this gospel was revealed to these gentiles, thus spiritually dead, and buried in sensuality, were these:

† Leg. Alleg. lib. i. p. 45. quod deter. potior. p. 127.

1. Ἵνα κριθῶσι κατ' ἀνθρώπους σαρκὶ, That they might condemn, might strive against, might mortify those sensual desires, and carnal appetites, which they had indulged whilst they lived, κατ' ἀνθρώπους, as natural men, wanting the knowledge of God's will, and the assistance of his grace and Spirit. This I conceive to be the genuine import of the Greek: for, 1. the word flesh being here set in opposition to the Spirit, not of man, but God, or at the least to the renewed spirit of man, cannot be reasonably thought to signify that fleshly body which we bear about us, but rather that sinful flesh, which lusts against the Spirit, (Gal. v. 17.) that law of our members, which wars against the law of our minds, (Rom. vii. 23.) that φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς, or fleshly wisdom, which is not subject to the law of God. (Rom. viii. 7.)

This being so, κριθῆναι τῇ σαρκὶ, cannot be truly rendered, to be condemned, judged, and punished in the flesh, that is, the body, but, to strive with, to mortify, and subdue the flesh, with its affections and lusts; which is the common import of the word κριθῆναι, both in the Septuagint and the New Testament: so, Job ix. 3. Ἐὰν βούληται κριθῆναι αὐτῷ, If he will contend with God, he cannot answer him one of a thousand: and, xiii. 19. Τίς ἐστιν ὁ κριθησόμενος, Who is he that contended with me? Isa. xliii. 26. Put me in remembrance, καὶ κριθῶμεν, and let us plead together; l. 8. He is near that justifieth me, Τίς ὁ κρινόμενός μοι, who is he that contendeth with me? lxvi. 16. Ἐν τῷ πυρὶ κριθήσεται ὁ Κύριος, By fire will the Lord plead with all flesh; Hos. ii. 22. Κρίθητε πρὸς τὴν μητέρα ὑμῶν, κρίθητε, Plead with your mother, plead: and, Micah vi. 1. Arise, κρίθητε πρὸς τὰ ὄρη, contend against the mountains: so also, Matt. v. 40. Θέλοντί σοι κριθῆναι, is, to him that will contend with thee; and, Jude 9. τῷ διαβόλῳ διακρινόμενος, is, contending with the devil. (See also Judg. xxi. 22. Jer. ii. 9.) And this, I think, is sufficient to justify the rendering these words actively, without referring to Glassius's Canon, (lib. iii. tr. 3. can. 24.) that verbs passive sometimes signify actively.

Note, thirdly, that the phrase κατ' ἄνθρωπον, in the New Testament, doth always signify to live, speak, or act, after the manner of mere natural men, not yet acquainted with the mind of God, or not assisted by his Spirit: as in those passages of the apostle Paul, Speak I these things, κατ' ἄνθρωπον, according to the dictates of mere human wisdom? Saith not the law the same also? 1 (Cor. ix. 8.) My doctrine is not, κατ' ἄνθρωπον, the product of man's wisdom, but, I received it from the revelation of Christ Jesus. (Gal. i. 11.) Κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I speak what men would from the mere strength of reason argue. (Rom. iii. 5.) And again, Κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I speak what is acknowledged among men, that a man's testament is accounted sacred, and no man addeth to it, or taketh from it. (Gal. iii. 15.) If I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, κατ' ἄνθρωπον, after the heathen manner, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? (1 Cor. xv. 32.) And, lastly, whereas there are contentions among you, are ye not carnal, and walk, κατ' ἄνθρωπον, as natural men, (1 Cor. iii. 3.) not as men acted by the Spirit?

So that Κριθῆναι κατ' ἄνθρωπον σαρκὶ, is, to condemn their former life led as natural men, or as mere heathens in the flesh, or to strive against that flesh which they indulged in their heathen state; and to live unto God in the spirit, which is the second end for which the gospel was preached unto the gentiles, is, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, to live according to the will and the example of a holy God.

To this interpretation of this text the context plainly seems to lead; for the apostle's argument runs thus: Christ having suffered for us in the flesh, it doth become us also, in a spiritual sense, to suffer in the flesh, by the mortification of our fleshly lusts; that though we still live in the flesh, we may not henceforth live unto the lusts of men, but to the will of God, (ver. 2.) I say, the Christian must no longer live after the will of the gentiles in lasciviousness, lusts, &c. (ver. 3.) for which things heathens will be obnoxious to God's just displeasure, at the great day of their accounts; since for this cause the gospel hath been preached unto them, that they might be engaged by it to condemn and strive against that fleshly conversation, in which they lived formerly, according to the lusts of men, not yet acquainted with the mind of God, and might henceforth live according to God in the Spirit:

For this cause was the gospel preached to them that are dead, that they being judged according to men in the flesh, might live unto God in the Spirit.] That this text can have no relation to the preaching of the apostles to the dead gentiles in hades is evident:

Because the apostle saith this whilst St. Paul, St. John, and himself were living, and speaks of it as a thing already past, saying εὐηγγελίσθη, the gospel hath been preached to them, not that it shall be preached to them when dead.

[3] Ver. 7. Τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε, The end of all things is at hand.] This phrase, and the advice upon it, so exactly parallel to what our Lord had spoken, will not suffer us to doubt that the apostle is here speaking, not of the end of the world, or of all things in general, which was not then, and seems not yet to be at hand, but only of the end of the Jewish church and state, mentioned in the inquiry of the apostles, thus, Tell us when, πάντα ταῦτα, all these things shall be finished? (Mark xiii. 14.) And in our Saviour's answer, thus, This generation shall not pass away, ἕως ἂν πάντα γένηται, till all things be fulfilled, Luke xxi. 32. that is, πάντα ταῦτα, all these things, Matt. xxiv. 34. Mark xiii. 30. And it is the observation of interpreters upon these words, τοῖς πᾶσι γέγονα τὰ πάντα, I became all things to all men, 1 Cor. ix. 22. and, πάντά μοι ἔξεστιν, all things are lawful for me, x. 23. that the word πάντα must be restrained to the subject-matter.

[4] Ver. 10. Χάρισμα, The gift.] That the gift should here signify wealth, I cannot think, for though χάρις sometimes bears that sense, yet χάρισμα is never used to signify wealth, but hath always relation to the spiritual gifts vouchsafed then to the church of Christ. (2.) Because the speaking as the oracles of God seems plainly to be the same with prophesying according to the analogy of faith, mentioned Rom. xii. 6. and the ministering here, with the διακονία there, both which are mentioned as spiritual gifts according to the grace given to them; see note there, and on the helps, mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 27.

[5] Ver. 13. Τοῖς τοῦ Χριστοῦ παθήμασι, Are partakers of Christ's sufferings.] Because he looks upon the sufferings of his members as his own. (Acts ix. 4. Colos. i. 14.)

[6] Ver. 14. Πνεῦμα τῆς δόξης, The Spirit of glory;] (or, as some copies read, τῆς δόξης καὶ δυνάμεως, of glory and power,) is doubtless that Holy Spirit which attended the preaching of the glorious gospel, and made it to be the ministration of the Spirit, ἐν δόξῃ, in glory; and by partaking of which Spirit we Christians are said to be transformed from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 8, 9. 18. and who is also styled πνεῦμα δυνάμεως, the Spirit of might, 2 Tim. i. 7. and being promised and given to those who suffered for Christ's sake, to abide with them for ever, as their comforter, and to help their infirmities, (Rom. viii. 26. 2 Tim. i. 7, 8.) must make them happy sufferers; and being also that Spirit by which they were enabled to work many miracles, and endued with extraordinary gifts, Christ must be glorified by him, as he foretold he should, John xvi. 14.

Κατὰ μὲν αὐτοὺς βλασφημεῖται, κατὰ δὲ ὑμὰς δοξάζεται.] Injecta hæc videntur, Millius, Proleg. p. 67. col. 2. See, for the defence of them, Examen Millii.

[7] Ver. 15. Ὡς φονεὺς, As a murderer, &c.] Whoever reads Josephus, will find there was the greatest reason to give these cautions to the Jewish nation, which then prodigiously abounded with thieves, were continually employed in murdering not only heathens, but their own brethren; were κακοποιοὶ, or, as some copies read, κακουργοὶ, to such a high degree, that he saith, they practise all manner of injustice and wickedness that was ever thought of or committed; and ἀλλοτριοεπίσκοποι, men who would have the government of other men's consciences, and overrule their actions, especially the zealots.

[8] Ver. 16. Δοξαζέτω τὸν Θεὸν, Let him glorify God.] i. e. Let him give glory to God, who enables him thus patiently to suffer for his sake; or, let him be so careful to behave himself under his sufferings, that he may glorify God by them, in the day of visitation, (ii. 12.)which day is now at hand.

CHAP. V.

1. THE [1] elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also (shall be) [2] a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed:

2. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking (upon you) the oversight thereof, [3] not by constraint, but willingly; [4] not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind;

3. [5] Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.

4. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away (and so receive a full and better reward of your labours, than others aim at).

5. Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder (or aged). Yea, all of you be subject one to another, (i. e. be as ready to do kind offices to others, as if ye were subject to them; see note on Phil. ii. 3.) and [6] be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace unto the humble.

6. [7] Humble yourselves therefore, under the mighty hand of God (now coming upon you, iv. 17.) that he may exalt you in due time:

7. Casting all your care upon him, (and committing yourselves to the conduct of his all-wise providence, iv. 19.) for he careth for you.

8. Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour; (and by his persecutions tempt to an apostacy from the faith, 1 Thess. iii. 5. Rev. ii. 10.)

9. Whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions (which ye now endure) are accomplished in your (Christian) brethren that are in the world. (See James iv. 7.)

10. But (and) the God of all grace, who hath called us to his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect (in patience), stablish, strengthen, settle you.

11. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

12. By Silvanus a faithful brother unto you, ([8] as I suppose,) I have written briefly, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God in which ye (now) stand.

13. The church that is at (Rome, figuratively called) [9] Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son, (i. e. who as a son with his father hath served me in the gospel, Phil. ii. 22.)

14. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΡΕΣΒΥΤΕ'ΡΟΥΣ τοὺς ἐν ὑμῖν, The elders that are among you.] That is, the bishops, saith Dr. Hammond, here, and wheresoever the word occurs in the New Testament; for the order of presbyters was not yet in being, but only afterward appointed by St. John: for that the apostle is here speaking of elders, not by age, but office, appeareth by his exhortation directed to them, to feed the flock committed to their charge, (ver. 2.) But this notion seems not well consistent with what others have discoursed upon this subject; for,

First, They who make the bishop, priest, or elder, and deacon, to be appointed, as answering to the high-priest, the priest, and Levites, must suppose that all these three orders were at first appointed, especially in the church of Jerusalem, as being derived from their platform. And so must all those learned men, who say the church was modelled after the manner of the Jewish synagogue; for as to that, the parallel must run between the chief of the synagogue, the elders, and their ministerial officers, and the bishops, priests, or elders, and the deacons: and if the middle order had been wanting so long as is supposed, the government of the church would not have been formed after that platform; which, as Epiphanius * and the Jews inform us, had these several offices in it. The same may be said of those who make the elders or presbyters to be answerable to the seventy, appointed by Christ as inferior officers under the apostles, and make this an argument of an inequality betwixt bishops and presbyters, established in the church of Christ.

Secondly, Hence it must necessarily follow, that not only in the times, but even in the writings of the apostles, the names of the presbyters and bishops were so far confounded, that a presbyter, in their style, did always signify one that was properly a bishop; which yet the learned Bishop Pearson † seems not to allow.

* Ἀρχισυναγωγῶν, καὶ πρεσβυτέρων, καὶ Ἀζανιτῶν τῶν παρ' αὐτοῖς διακόνων. Hær. xxx. §. 11.

Thirdly, This seems to make the work and office of a bishop too great to be discharged by a single person, especially in such great churches as that of Jerusalem, where there were many myriads of believing Jews. (Acts xxi. 20.) For it was his office, saith that reverend person, to be the teacher of the whole flock committed to him: Acts xx. 28. Ye that are bishops of the several churches of Asia, look to the churches committed to your trust, to rule and order all the faithful Christians under you; so the paraphrase. See the paraphrase and note on Heb. xiii. 7. 17. where he saith, That to teach, exhort, and confirm and impose hands, were all the bishop's office in Judea. He was to exercise the whole discipline of the church, by hearing all the ecclesiastical causes, inflicting censures, and receiving penitents; (see the paraphrase and note on Titus iii. 10.) he was to take the principal care of the poor, to receive, and distribute to them the church's stock; so here: the supreme trust and charge of that, saith he, being always reserved to the apostles and bishops of the church; (note on 1 Cor. xii. 28.) he was to visit the sick, and pray with them; that being (saith he) one branch of the office of bishops: (note on James v. 14.) and how one bishop could perform all this to a church consisting of many myriads of persons, it is not easy to conceive. I therefore think it better to admit of the ordinary acceptation of the word presbyter here; that is, to think they also may be included in the term.

[2] Κοινωνὸς δόξης, And also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed.] i. e. Saith one, present at the discourse, concerning the glory that should be consequent to his death, the remarkable destruction of his crucifiers, and the deliverance of his faithful disciples. But, first, it is certain, that the Scripture mentions nothing of any such discourse; but only, that Moses and Elias then spake of his decease which he was to accomplish at Jerusalem. (Luke ix. 31.) And though Peter was then present, he heard not a word of that discourse; being then fast asleep, (ver. 32.) This glory therefore is doubtless the glory which we shall enjoy at the resurrection, or the redemption of our bodies from corruption; (Rom. viii. 18. 23.) styled the glory of God, Rom. v. 2. the glory we shall enjoy when Christ appears, Colos. iii. 4. when our vile bodies shall be made like unto Christ's glorious body, Phil. iii. 21. and shall be raised up in glory, 1 Cor. xv. 43. eternal glory, 1 Pet. v. 10. this being that we shall enjoy at the revelation of Christ Jesus, ver. 4. i. 7. 13. iv. 13. of this St. Peter was partaker then in the promise, and in the earnest of it, the first-fruits of the Spirit.

[3] Ver. 2. Not by constraint, but willingly; Μὴ ἀναγκαστῶς ἀλλ' ἑκουσίως.] Not as it were constrained to it by the dread of what ye may suffer, the woe impendent if ye do not perform this office; but voluntarily, and as a free-will-offering to that God who hath loved you so much, and from a ready mind to serve the interests of souls; as in those words of St. Paul, Ἀνάγκη, a necessity is laid upon me, and woe unto me, if I preach not the gospel; but if, ἑκὼν, willingly I do this, I have a reward. (1 Cor. ix. 16, 17.)

[4] Μηδὲ αἰσχροκερδῶς, Not for filthy lucre.] As did the false apostles and Judaizers, teaching things they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake, Tit. i. 11. thinking gain godliness, 1 Tim. vi. 5.

[5] Ver. 3. Μηδὲ ὡς κατακυριεύοντες τῶν κλήρων, Not as lords over God's heritage:] Or, as it might be rendered, of the possessions of the church. It was the custom then of many, to sell their heritages, and give the money to the governors and bishops of the church, to be distributed to the use of poor Christians; and these inheritances and moneys were styled κλῆροι, both the Scriptures, and the best Greek authors, using it for a patrimony or heritage obtained by lot, as the inheritance of the Jews was; (Josh. xii. 8.) whence the word κλῆρος is so often used in this sense through the books of Joshua and Judges. And so the bishops, to whose hands it was committed, are here required not to act as if they were lords, but only as stewards of it: and so as to be examples (to others) of freedom from avarice, and diligence in relieving the poor, sick, and needy. But seeing what is here κλῆρος, is in the same sentence styled τὸ ποίμνιον, the flock of God, the common interpretation of the word for heritage seems to be established by this latter word.

[6] Ver. 5. Ἐγκομβώσασθε, Be ye clothed with humility.] The word hath two significations; it signifies a frock put over the rest of our clothes, and so imports, that this humility should be visible in us, above all other Christian virtues, in our whole conversation, our words, and actions. Secondly, It signifies a belt which girts about our garments, and so imports we should tie it fast unto us, and have those considerations always fixed upon our spirits, which may still keep us in an humble frame of soul.

[7] Ver. 6. Ταπεινώθητε.] i. e. Submit with patience to the chastisements sent by his powerful hand upon you; that being truly sensible of the Divine displeasure, being afflicted, and mourning for those sins which brought these evils down upon you, and turning unto him that smites you, he may draw nigh to you, and in due season work for you a deliverance from this afflicted state. See this in the place parallel to this, James iv. 7. 10.

[8] Ver. 12. Ὡς νομίζω, As I suppose.] From these and many like expressions used in the Epistles of the apostles, it is evident, that the Divine afflatus, by which the Holy Ghost assisted them to write, did not dictate the very words, but only presided over them to preserve them from error in writing, seeing the Holy Ghost could not say, As I suppose; nor could St. Peter have used this phrase, if the Divine illumination had influenced and instructed him in this matter.

[9] Ver. 13. Ἡ ἐν Βαβυλῶνι, The church in Babylon.] That Babylon is figuratively here put for Rome, is an opinion so early delivered by Papias,* and which afterward so generally obtained, (as we learn from Eusebius, St. Jerome,† and Œcumenius, on this place,) that I subscribe to the note at the end of this Epistle, that ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης, it was written from Rome, styled also Babylon by the author‡ to the Revelation, chap. xvii. xviii. For the apostle must, at the writing of it, be at Rome, figuratively, or at some city properly called Babylon: now, as it is uncertain whether St. Peter ever was at Babylon in Chaldea, or in Egypt, and improbable that he ever made any considerable stay there; so is it very improbable he should do it so near his end. At Rome and Antioch, where he confessedly resided, church-history is copious in giving an account of his successors in those sees: but who can shew any thing of this nature, with reference to either of these Babylons? As to the reason why Rome is covertly thus represented by the name of Babylon, I cannot think, with Œcumenius, it was so styled, διὰ τὸ ἐπιφανὲς, because advanced to as great eminency as Babylon ever had been; for then why should St. Peter have disguised the matter? I rather think it was so styled, either because it did resemble that city in its idolatries, and opposition to the church of God; or because it was to be destroyed for ever, as the prophets had foretold of Babylon; which, though the primitive Christians* did believe, it was their wisdom to conceal. Thus St. Jerome* saith, That the prophet Jeremiah covertly spake of Babylon, under the name of Sesack, that he might not incense the Babylonians against him, who besieged Jerusalem; and that the apostle speaks of the Roman empire under the name of τὸ κατέχον, that which letteth, that he might not provoke them to persecute the Christians for speaking of the Roman empire, which was by them esteemed imperium sine fine, † or eternal.

SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. PETER.

PREFACE.

ΠΕ'ΤΡΟΥ τοῦ ἀποστόλου ἐπιστολὴ καθολικὴ δευτέρα, The second catholic epistle of St. Peter.] That this Epistle also was written by the apostle Peter, is evident beyond all exception: (1.) From the inscription of it, in which the writer styles himself, Simon Peter, a servant and apostle of Jesus Christ; there being no other apostle of that name. Moreover, of this apostle it is particularly noted in the Scripture, that he was Σίμων ὁ λεγόμενος Πέτρος, Simon called Peter, Matt. iv. 18. and x. 2. Σίμων ὁ ἐπικαλούμενος Πέτρος, Simon which was surnamed Peter, Acts x. 18. xi. 13. He is styled Simon Peter once by St. Luke, v. 8. and by St. John the evangelist seventeen times, i. 41. vi. 8. 68. xiii. 6. 9. 24. 36. xviii. 10. 15. 25. xx. 2. 6. xxi. 2, 3. 7. 11. 15. Whereas Simeon bishop of Jerusalem, to whom Grotius ascribes the writing of this Epistle, was neither Peter, nor apostle. (2.) From a concurrence of circumstances in it relating to St. Peter and no other; as, first, when he says, He shortly must put off this tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ had shewed him, i. 14. This well agrees to Simon Peter, to whom our Lord signified what death he should die, John xxi. 18, 19. And that this death should befal him before his coming to the destruction of Jerusalem, ver. 22. which was then at hand when St. Peter writ this, see note on 1 Pet. iv. 7. Secondly, He adds, That he was with him in the holy mount, when our Lord Jesus was transfigured, and was an eye-witness of his majesty, and heard these words, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased, 2 Pet. i. 16—18. which he could hear only then, no such words being spoken, John xii. 28. to which Grotius would refer this passage. Now at our Lord's transfiguration, besides St. Peter, were only present the two sons of Zebedee, James and John, neither of which was ever thought to be the author of this Epistle. Thirdly, This also may be gathered from these words, iii. 1, 2. This Second Epistle, beloved, I write unto you; in which I stir up your sincere minds, by way of remembrance: that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour. Whence it is manifest, 1st, that this Epistle was writ by an apostle, and therefore not by Simeon bishop of Jerusalem. Secondly, That this was writ by an apostle, who had before directed an Epistle to the same persons. Now though some of the ancients doubted whether this Second Epistle were canonical; yet they all owned,‡ that it bore his name, and was ascribed to him, and never, that we find, was ascribed to any other apostle: we therefore have just reason to conclude, according to the title of it, that it was also the Epistle of Simon Peter the apostle of our Lord, to whom both these Epistles expressly are ascribed by Origen;§ who also adds, that Paul is called his brother, by Peter the apostle, which he is only in this Epistle. Being therefore written by an apostle assisted by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, 1 Pet. i. 12. we cannot doubt of the authority of this Epistle: for whereas Grotius, to avoid the strength of this argument, imagines that this chapter contains a Second Epistle; and that the First Epistle referred to, ended at the close of the second chapter of that which is now called the Second Epistle; he not only doth this without all authority of any ancient versions or authors to countenance his opinion, but against the frame and the contexture of epistles, which usually begin with an inscription, which is not to be found in the third chapter.

As for the time when this Epistle was indited, I lay down this as certain, against Grotius, from what hath been discoursed already, that it could not be written after the destruction of Jerusalem: for St. Peter here saith, That he was shortly to put off his tabernacle, or, to die; whereas he was actually dead in the fourteenth year of Nero, that is, three years before the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. But that it was written but a little before his death, may justly be concluded from this declaration, that he knew, either by revelation, or by our Lord's discourse, *that the time of his death was suddenly to follow, or was nigh at hand.

Of the persons to whom it was written, we are assured also from these words, This Second Epistle, beloved, I write unto you; they being a demonstration, that it was written to the very same persons to whom the first had been directed, viz. to the converted Jews, dispersed through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, 1 Pet. i. 1.

And, lastly, as for the occasion of his writing, that plainly seems to have been double. 1. To arm the Jews converted, against the fiery trial which was then come upon them; and against that apostacy from the faith, that turning away from the holy commandment, ii. 21. that falling from their own steadfastness, iii. 17. to which they of that nation were so prone. And evident it is, that the chief design of the Epistle to the Hebrews was to put a stop to it: and many passages in all the catholic Epistles, not excepting the Second and Third Epistles of St. John, are evidently writ for the same purpose; and to warn them of, and to preserve them from, the destructive doctrines of those Jewish solifidians, who held it unnecessary to add unto their faith, virtue. 2. To arm them against those impure Nicolaitans and Simonians, who turned the grace of God into lasciviousness: of whom see the notes on the second chapter. And, 3. Against those scoffers at the promise of Christ's coming, as it were a promise which never would be verified,

But then I am constrained to dissent from the opinion of the reverend and judicious Dr. Hammond and Dr. Lightfoot, who conceive, that the apostle doth not discourse of our Lord's coming to the general judgment, in his third chapter, but only of his coming to execute his judgments on the Jews, by the destruction of Jerusalem. For not to insist upon this consideration, that this opinion is wholly new, and contrary to the judgment of all the ancients who own this Epistle, and have occasion to make mention of these words, they all agreeing in this (with Œcumenius) that the apostle speaketh, ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος, of the end of the world; it is extremely evident,

1. From these very words, iii. 7. But the heavens and earth which now are, by the same word are kept in store, reserved to fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men. And, ver. 10. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. To interpret all these words, only of the destruction of Jerusalem, is to turn them into metaphor and allegory; whereas St. Peter plainly says, that as the old world was destroyed by water, so shall the world that now is be destroyed by fire. "Here then (as one says truly) is no room for allegories, or allegorical expositions; for, as the heavens and earth were destroyed by water, so are they to be destroyed by fire: and if in the first place you understand the natural material world, you must also understand it in the second; they are both allegories, or neither."

2. Were the apostle speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem, which happened thirty-seven years after the death of Christ, and was, according to our Lord's prediction, to fall out whilst some of them whom he spake to were yet living, what need was there of saying, One day with the Lord is as a thousand years, &c. when he was speaking, it seems, of that which he knew was to happen before four years were expired? And, lastly, the solemn exhortation, Seeing then all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversations and godlinesses, looking for and hastening to the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, that we may be found of him without spot and blameless? this, I say, sounds too high for the destruction of Jerusalem, in which they of Pontus and Galatia could not be much concerned; but it is an exhortation very proper for those who had the lively idea of the conflagration of the world, and the tremendous judgment and perdition of ungodly men, then set before them.

There is, I confess, a middle opinion betwixt both these, which interprets the words of St. Peter, in the third chapter, of the judgment of the great whore, or the antichristian church, mentioned Rev. xvii. 1. after which is to follow the new heaven and new earth, promised to the Jews, and to be accomplished in the calling of them to the Christian faith, and the flowing-in of all nations to them. Concerning which, note,

First, That the judgment, according to the predictions both of the prophets in the Old and of St. John in the New Testament, is to be executed upon her by fire. So, Dan. vii. 11. The beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame: and, ver. 26. The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it to the end. Accordingly, in the judgment of the whore, She shall be utterly burnt with fire; for strong is the Lord that judgeth her, Rev. xviii. 8—10.

Note, secondly, that it is usual with the prophets to represent God's judgments on the enemies of his church and people, by the tragical expressions of burning up the earth, dissolving the heavens. Thus of the destruction of Babylon, which name was writ upon the forehead of the great whore, God speaks thus: Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel, and with fierce wrath, to lay the land desolate: for the stars of heaven and the constellations shall not give their light: and the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not give her light; and I will make the heavens to shake (or, move away), and the earth shall remove out of its place, Isa. xiii. 9, 10. 13. The indignation of the Lord against the Idumeans is represented in these dreadful words:* The mountains shall be melted with their blood, and all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fall down as a leaf falleth from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree. Of the destruction of Sennacherib and his people, God speaketh thus: The heavens shall vanish away like smoke; the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner, Isa. li. 6. (See Deut. xxxii. 22. Jer. iv. 23, 24. Joel ii. 30. iii. 15.) Here then we see all the expressions used in the third chapter of St. Peter used also by the prophets, when they speak of the desolation of a nation and people, and especially of the enemies of the church: which is sufficient to evince, that the apostle, being himself a Jew, and writing to those Jews who were accustomed to these expressions, might thus set forth the great destruction of the beast, mentioned Rev. xvii. xviii. and by the new heavens and new earth, that glorious state of the church, which was to ensue by the conversion of the Jewish nation, and the flowing-in of all nations to them.

* Ταχινή ἐστιν, 2 Pet. i. 14.

* Τακήσονται πᾶσαι αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν οὐρανῶν, καὶ πᾶσα στρατιὰ αὐτῶν ἀποῤῥεύσει. Isa. xxxiv. 3, 4.

CHAP. I.

1. SIMON Peter, a servant and apostle of Jesus Christ, (writing) to them that have obtained like precious faith with us [1] through the righteousness of God (by faith, Rom. i. 17.) and (the sufferings of) our Saviour Jesus Christ:

2. (Wisheth that) grace, and peace, (may) be multiplied to you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus (Christ) our Lord,

3. According as (it hath been with us already, for) his Divine power hath given to us all things that pertain to life and godliness (or, to the life of godliness), through the knowledge of him that hath called us to (Gr. by) [2] glory and virtue:

4. [3] Whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be [4] partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust.

5. [5] And besides this (Gr. Καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο, And for this cause), giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue (or courage in the profession of it, and sincerity in the practice of those things this faith requires); and to virtue (an exact) knowledge (of your duty);

6. And to knowledge temperance (in carefully abstaining from those sensual affections and disorderly passions which obstruct the performance of your duty); and to temperance patience (under all the sufferings which may affright you from it); and to patience godliness (that fear of God which will restrain you from sin; that love of him which will constrain you to your duty; that conformity of will, which will cause your mind to approve of, your heart to affect and choose what is according to his will, and your whole man to be exercising itself to godliness);

7. And to godliness brotherly-kindness (i. e. fervent love to Christians, as being children of our heavenly Father, and fellow-members of Christ's body); and to brotherly-kindness charity (to all men, as proceeding from the same stock, having the same nature, and being subject to the same necessities).

8. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be [6] barren (Gr. slothful) nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9. But (on the other hand) he that lacketh these things is [7] blind, and cannot see far off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins (by that baptism in which he, being washed from the guilt of them, engaged to die to sin, Rom. vi. 4.)

10. Wherefore (being called to this faith) the rather, brethren, give diligence (Gr. give the more diligence by practising these things) [8] to make your calling and election sure (i. e. to secure to yourselves the blessings of Christianity, to which God hath called you, and for which end he hath chosen you to be his people): for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall (or, miscarry eternally):

11. For so an entrance shall be ministered to you abundantly [9] into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

12. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always [10] in remembrance of these things, though ye know them (before), and be established in the present truth (viz. that the practice of these Christian virtues is necessary to the making your calling and election sure, and to your entrance into Christ's heavenly kingdom).

13. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle (of the body), to stir you up (to the performance of your duty) by putting you (still) in remembrance (of these things).

14. Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle (by martyrdom), even as our Lord Jesus Christ [11] hath shewed me, (John xxi. 20.)

15. Moreover, I will endeavour (by leaving these Epistles, designed for that end,) that ye may be able after my decease [12] to have these things always in remembrance.

16. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known to you the power (given to our Lord Christ over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to them that believe, John xvii. 2.) and (the) coming of our Lord Jesus Christ (to crown them with glory), but were eyewitnesses of his majesty.

17. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the [13] excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

18. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

19. We have also [14] a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as to a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the [15] day-star arise in your hearts;

20. Knowing this first (as the foundation of all you learn from the prophetic writings), [16] that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation (Gr. of their own incitation, motion, or the suggestion of their own private spirits).

21. For prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ, By the righteousness of God.] That this phrase signifies our justification through faith in the death and sufferings of Christ, the meritorious cause of it, see the note on Rom. i. 17 Or, since the Hebrew word tzedakah in the Old, and the Greek δικαιοσύνη, both in the Old and New Testament, do often signify kindness and mercy, it may here also bear that sense.

[2] Ver. 3. Διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς, By glory and virtue.] i. e. Who hath called us with a glorious calling, as being attended with the glorious effusion of the Holy Ghost; by reason of which, the revelation of the gospel is said to be ἐν δόξῃ, or διὰ δόξης, in or with glory; (2 Cor. iii. 7. 11.) and shewed his power, might, and virtue, by the miraculous operations with which it was confirmed. For though Mr. Le Clerc is positive, that ἀρετὴ no where signifies δύναμις, power; yet in Hesychius we read thus, ἀρετὴ, θεία δύναμις, virtue, i. e. Divine power, ἡ κατὰ πόλεμον δύναμις, strength for war, fortitude, dexterity in wrestling.

[3] Ver. 4. Δι' ὧν, By which.] If the reading of other manuscripts, δι' ὃν, obtain, the sense runs plain and easy, thus, By whom, thus calling you, are given great and precious promises, Christ having brought life and immortality to light, (2 Tim. i. 10.) and established the new covenant in better promises. (Heb. viii. 6.) But if we retain the common reading δι' ὧν, by which, the sense seems to run thus; 'By which two, the effusion of the Holy Ghost upon us, as the earnest of them, and his miraculous operations, as the confirmation of them and of that gospel which contains them, are given to us great and precious promises;' or rather, 'By which God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, mentioned ver. 1. and ver. 3. are given great and precious promises, they being the promises made by God the Father, (2 Cor. vii. 1.) and by the Son, (1 John ii. 25.) and confirmed to us in and through Christ Jesus.' (2 Cor. i. 20, 21.)

[4] Θείας φύσεως κοινωνοὶ, Partakers of the Divine nature.] Both Philo* and Josephus represent them who had the gift of prophecy as having τὴν ψυχὴν θειάζουσαν, a soul inspired by the Deity, and, by the Holy Spirit dwelling in them, made Divine. Thus Josephus† saith of one Papius, renowned for his wisdom and foreknowledge of things to come, that he did, θείας μετασχηκέναι φύσεως, partake of the Divine nature.

[5] Ver. 5. Καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο, And for this cause.] Or, as other manuscripts read, Καὶ αὐτοὶ, So ye. Esthius here probably conjectures, that the sense hitherto is pendent, thus: As ye have received from the gift of God, all things necessary to life and godliness, so do ye add, or, for this cause add to your faith, virtue, &c.

[6] Ver. 8. Οὐκ ἀργοὺς, Ye will not be slothful,] Or negligent, in the concerns of God's glory and your soul's welfare; for sloth proceeds from want of faith, or courage, or love: nor unfruitful, i. e. unprofitable to others; for that proceeds from want of brotherly kindness, or charity.

[7] Ver. 9. Τυφλός ἐστι, He is blind.] For want of knowledge, and blinded by his passions and sensual affections, and cannot see to the end and design of Christianity, and the rewards of faith and patience; nor considers he the obligations which lie upon him to depart from iniquity. The word μυωπάζων following, is by our translators rendered one that cannot see afar off; agreeably to these words of Aristotle, They are said, μυωπάζειν, who from their birth are, τὰ μὲν ἐγγὺς βλέποντες, τὰ δὲ ἐξ ἀποστάσεως οὐχ ὁρῶντες, men who can only see things near, not those that are remote; and it is ordinary to say, that such a one is blind, as being comparatively so, and to many things: and to this sense the following words, they cannot look back to their purgation of old, seem to lead; though the great Bochart saith, the word here signifies to close the eyes against the light. (Hieroz. lib. i. cap. 4. p. 31, 32.)

[8] Ver. 10. Βεβαίαν ὑμῶν κλῆσιν ποιεῖσθαι, To make your calling and election sure.] Many manuscripts, and many of the ancients, add, διὰ τῶν καλῶν ἔργων, by good works: and this the text seems to require; for it immediately follows, if ye do these things, ye shall never fall; plainly declaring, that the making of their calling and election sure depended on the doing those works of virtue, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity (mentioned before), and so was only a conditional election, upon their perseverance in a life of holiness. And from the following words, he that doth these things shall never fall, it plainly seems to follow, that even the elect, by their neglect to do these things, may fail of an entrance into this heavenly kingdom.

[9] Ver. 11. Εἰς τὴν αἰώνιον βασιλείαν, Into the everlasting kingdom.] As ζωὴ αἰώνιος is everlasting life, Luke x. 25. αἰώνιος κληρονομία, an everlasting inheritance, Heb. ix. 15. αἰώνιοι σκηναὶ, everlasting tabernacles, Luke xvi. 9. οἰκία αἰώνιος, an everlasting house, 2 Cor. v. 1. δόξα αἰώνιος, everlasting glory, 2 Tim. ii. 10. σωτηρία αἰώνιος, everlasting salvation, Heb. v. 9.; so αἰώνιος βασιλεία is doubtless the everlasting kingdom prepared for Christ's faithful servants, and not his vindictive kingdom over the Jews; nor yet the kingdom of saints, mentioned by Daniel, as never to give place to any other kingdom, they to whom the apostle writ, being to die long before the coming of that kingdom.

[10] Ver. 13. Ἐν ὑπομνήσει, In remembrance.] For could we be established in the belief of heavenly things, and have them still in remembrance, we should not flag in the performance of our duty. Moreover, from these verses, and from chap. iii. it seems reasonable to conceive, that they, who were so concerned to write those things the Christians had already heard, and in which they were established, would not neglect to write whatever else was necessary to be known to salvation.

[11] Ver. 14. Ἐδήλωσέ μοι, Hath shewed me.] Declaring to him, in a vision, say Hegesippus* and St. Ambrose,† that he must go again to Rome, to be crucified. Thus St. Polycarp,‡ in a vision, saw his pillow, or nightcap, burning with fire, a little before he was consumed by the flames: and St. Cyprian, by a vision, was admonished of his death, and of the kind of martyrdom he was to suffer. (Pontius in Vita Cypr. ed. Ox. p. 7.)

[12] Ver. 15. Τὴν τούτων μνήμην ποιεῖσθαι, To make a remembrance of these things.] St. Peter therefore was not of the opinion, that oral tradition was a better way than writing, to preserve the memory of these things; and that without writing they might be able so to do. Accordingly Ignatius,§ advising the churches to stand fast in the traditions of the apostles, thought it necessary, "for the greater security, to commit them to writing." For, saith Origen,‖

[13] Ver. 17. Ὑπὸ τῆς μεγαλοπρεποῦς δόξης, From the magnificent glory.] Some considering, that in all the three evangelists, the transfiguration of our Lord is mentioned, after he had spoken of the coming of the Son of man in glory, or in the glory of the Father, think this transfiguration was an image of that glorious kingdom he was to erect at the calling of the Jews; and that St. Peter here refers to this, when he saith, We made known to you the power, and coming, or the illustrious coming, of our Lord Jesus Christ; whence Moses and Elias are here seen with him in glory, and, according to some manuscripts, are said to speak of the δόξα, i. e. his glory, which was to be hereafter in Jerusalem. But that glory being not yet come, to what purpose should the apostle write to them of that age, to give all diligence to obtain an entrance into that kingdom? Or why doth he so generally promise an entrance into it, to them who were to die so long before, and were not at all, unless they died martyrs, to enter into it? Nor was it to be an everlasting, but only a millenary kingdom. Wherefore, for explication of the words, observe, concerning the transfiguration of our Lord, first, that when he was transfigured, his face did shine as the sun, and his garments were splendent. (Matt. xvii. 2.) And this, saith Nazianzen, God did, τὸ μέλλον μυσταγωγῶν, shewing what he was to be hereafter; and as an introduction to that glory in which he was to shine at the right hand of Majesty in the heavens: for, to shine as the sun, is a phrase expressing something belonging to celestial Majesty, Matt. xiii. 43. the white and splendid garments being also proper to kings and the royal ministers of the heavenly court, Rev. iii. 4. And hence, when Christ is represented as the first-born from the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth, to whom power and glory belonged, he appears in splendour, as the sun shining in his power, Rev. i. 14, 15. And this is the majesty of Christ, of which St. Peter, James, and John, were eye-witnesses on the mount.

Secondly, Of the testimony given to him, observe, (1.) that it was, This is my beloved Son; i. e. This is he who is heir of all things, Heb. i. 2. and is sat down at the right hand of Majesty and glory, ver. 3. And therefore this is made a proof of our Lord's resurrection and exaltation to the highest glory, that the Father said to him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. (Acts xiii. 33. Heb. i. 5. v. 5.) This is he to whom the Father hath given to have life himself, (John v. 26.) and so to raise the dead, (ver. 24.) and give eternal life to them. (John xvii. 1, 2.) Now all this being comprehended in this testimony, shews the truth of what St. Peter said he had declared to them. Note, (2.) that this voice was given from the magnificent glory, or bright cloud, which then appeared, and was the constant symbol of the Divine presence; (see note on Phil. ii. 6.) and so assured them, this testimony was given by the God of truth. Note, (3.) that this testimony is delivered in the very words spoken of that Prophet which should come after Moses, viz. A Prophet will the Lord your God raise unto you, like to me, to him shall ye hearken; (Deut. xviii. 15.) and so assured them, that this beloved Son was that prophet of whom Moses spake. Note (lastly), that these words were directed, not to Christ, but to those that attended him, and bade them observe, that God the Father here owned him as his only Son in whom he is well-pleased, and as the only Prophet whom they ought to hearken to.

[14] Ver. 19. Βεβαιότερον τὸν προφητικὸν λόγον, A more sure word of prophecy.] This is spoken in comparison of the apostle's testimony of what he heard; which to the Jews was not so certain and convincing, as was the record of their own prophets: whence the apostles, both in disputing with the unbelieving Jews, and writing to the believers among them, confirm their doctrines from the writings of the Old Testament.

[15] Καὶ φωσφόρος ἀνατείλῃ, &c. And the day-star arise in your hearts.] Some (considering that Balaam prophesies of the Messiah, as a star that was to come out of Jacob; by which star, say the three Targums, Bereschith Rabba, R. Moses Haddarson, and R. Isaac, is meant the Messiah, compared to a star, because of the splendour of his dominion and kingdom, and who is styled by St. John, ὁ ἀστὴρ λαμπρὸς, ὁ ὀρθρινὸς, the bright and morning star, (Rev. xxii. 16.) refer this to Christ's second coming to convert the Jews, and set up the kingdom of the saints, (Dan. vii. 27.) saying, that the apostle compares the intermediate time in which antichrist was to reign, to the night and darkness, according as the Scripture useth to express the times of ignorance and idolatry; (Eph. v. 8. 1 Thess. v. 4. see note on Rom. xiii. 12.) and the time of Christ's advent to call all Israel, and to bring in with them the fulness of the gentiles, to the light dissipating that darkness; and doth here bid the Jewish nation to attend to the prophecies in the Old Testament, touching this glorious time, till it should be accomplished upon them. But the apostle writes not here to the unbelieving Jews, who are to be the only subjects of that calling, but to them who had obtained like precious faith with him. Moreover, that the time from writing this Epistle, to the conversion of the Jews, which is not yet accomplished, should be accounted as darkness, or a time in which the light, or day, appeared not, seems not suitable to that expression of St. Paul, The night is far spent, and the day is at hand: (see note on Rom. xiii. 12.) nor could he bid those of that age to expect, till that day-star should arise in their hearts, which to this very day is not yet risen. It therefore seems plain to me from these words, though Dr. Hammond and others would interpret them to another sense, that the apostle speaketh this concerning some other light that was to enlighten and affect their hearts, and give them full assurance, that our Jesus was the Son of God, the Prophet God had sent into the world. Now this was done by the internal gifts and illuminations of the Holy Spirit vouchsafed to believers; by which, saith the apostle Paul, The testimony of Christ, or which the apostles gave of him, ἐβεβαιώθη ἐν ὑμῖν, was confirmed in or upon them: (1 Cor. i. 6.) by which God did βεβαιοῦν ἡμᾶς σὺν ὑμῖν εἰς Χριστὸν, confirm both the apostles and those that believed in the faith of Christ. (2 Cor. i. 21, 22. v. 5.) So that the import of the words seems to be this; Till ye yourselves have those prophetic gifts, by which ye may be able, from what ye find in yourselves, to know by the Spirit, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, (1 Cor. xii. 13.) and have the unction of the Holy Ghost, by which ye know all things, (1 John ii. 27.) and have also the Scriptures of the New Testament committed to you, which contain a more perfect light, (Rom. xiii. 14.) and are indited also by the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven. (1 Pet. i. 12.)

Like to this, is that expression of Philo,* What reason is in us, that is the sun in the world, ἐπειδὴ φωσφορεῖ ἑκάτερος, both being unto us a phosphorus; the sun giving light to our senses, and reason intellectual rays to our conceptions: and when φῶς ἐπιλάμπει τὸ θεῖον, the Divine light shines upon us, that of our reason sets; and when that sets, this ariseth, τῷ δὲ προφητικῷ γένει φιλεῖ τοῦτο συμβαίνειν, and so it was with the prophets.

[16] Ver. 20. Ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως οὐ γίνεται, No prophecy is of private interpretation.] i. e. Prophecy comes not from the prophet's own suggestion, but from the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. That this is the true sense of these words, appears (1.) from the apostle's own interpretation; for, not to be of the prophet's own incitation or suggestion, (ver. 20.) is, not to come by the will of man, (ver. 21.) i. e. not by human reason, but by the will of God. (John i. 13.) (2.) From the use of the phrase; for ἐπίλυσις, according to Phavorinus and Suidas, is ἔφοδος, accession, or incitation, or insult; and the word ἰδία, added to it, must therefore signify, that prophecy is not of private impulse or incitation: whence the expression, used by the true prophets, is generally this, ἐπῆλθεν ἐπ' ἐμὲ, the Spirit came upon me: (Numb. xxiv. 2. 1 Sam. x. 10. 2 Chron. xv. 1. xxiv. 20.) and, (3.) from the nature of the thing itself, and the constant opinion of the Jews about it; which was, as Philo saith,† that a prophet speaketh nothing of himself, but he is the organ of God in what he speaks, God speaking in and by him. Whence, to speak of himself, or, of his own heart or mind, is always made the sign of a false prophet; whom God had not sent. (Numb. xvi. 28. xxii. 18. xxiv. 13. Jer. xxiii. 16. 26. Ezek. xxiii. 17.) Ridiculous therefore, and full of ignorance, is the inference of Esthius hence, that the reformed, and their pastors, must not interpret the Scriptures according to their own sense or judgments; which surely they may do, as well as he, or any other Romish commentator, who have nothing but their own private sense for many interpretations of the Scriptures they discourse upon.

CHAP. II.

1. BUT there were false prophets also among the people (in the former ages of the Jewish church), even as there shall be (hereafter) [1] false teachers [2] among you, who privately shall bring in [3] damnable heresies, (i. e. doctrines tending to the destruction of them that hold them, and) even [4] denying the Lord that bought them, and (shall) bring upon themselves [5] swift destruction.

2. [6] And many shall follow their pernicious ways: by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

3. And through [7] covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: [8] whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

4. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down [9] to hell, and delivered them to chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment;

5. [10] And spared not the old world, but saved (only) Noe, [11] the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly;

6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example to those that after should live ungodly; (see note on Jude 7.)

7. And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked:

8. (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing (of them), vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds:)

9. (Then may we rest assured, that) [12] the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation (as he did Noah and Lot), and to reserve the unjust [13] unto the day of judgment to be punished:

10. But chiefly them [14] who walk after the flesh, in the lusts of uncleanness, and [15] despise government. Presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities.

11. Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might (than evil spirits), bring not railing accusations against them before the Lord. (See note on Jude 9.)

12. [16] But these, as natural brute beasts (Gr. as irrational, natural living creatures, rather than men), made to be taken and destroyed (or, to raven and destroy), speak evil of the things they understand not; (i. e. of the angelical powers whom they blaspheme, ver. 10.) and shall utterly perish in their own corruption;

13. And shall receive (Gr. receiving, by this destruction, ver. 12.) the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to [17] riot in the day-time. Spots they are and blemishes, [18] sporting themselves with their own deceivings, whilst [19] they feast with you;

14. Having eyes full of adultery, that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: a heart they have exercised with [20] covetous practices; cursed children;

15. [21] Which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness (and to obtain them, counselled Balak to entice God's people to commit fornication with the Midianites, Numb. xxxi. 16. Βαλαὰμ τοῦ Βόσορ; that is, saith Grotius, of the city of Bosor, as Pethor his city, Numb. xxii. 5. is called);

16 But was rebuked for his iniquity: (for) the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbade the madness of the [22] prophet.

17. These are wells (Gr. fountains) without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest (unprofitable for any good, as fountains without water; and pernicious as tempests, which blast and root out all before them); to whom the mist (Gr. the blackness) of darkness is reserved for ever.

18. For when they speak great [23] swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness (or, to lasciviousness); those who were clean escaped from them that live in error.

19. Whilst they promise them [24] liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

20. [25] For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and over-

21. For it had been better for them, not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them (because they sin by apostacy against the light received, and with ingratitude to the author of it).

22. But it is happened to them according to the true proverb, [26] The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. ΨΕΥΔΟΔΙΔΑ'ΣΚΑΛΟΙ, False teachers.] Concerning the persons chiefly concerned in this chapter, and in the parallel Epistle of St. Jude, I find three opinions;

1. That of Dr. Lightfoot, who thinks these chapters speak chiefly of the Jews, i. e. of the false teachers of that nation. The second is,

2. That of the ancients, who say expressly, Ἄρχεται ἐντεῦθεν τῆς κατὰ τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν αἱρέσεως, He begins to speak of the heresy of the Nicolaitans. So Œcumenius. The third is,

3. That of the reverend and learned Dr. Hammond, and of the ancients also; that the apostles speak these things touching the gnostics. And this opinion seems not much to differ from the second. For the ancient fathers say, the *gnostics sprang from the Nicolaitans, and borrowed from them all their filthiness and lasciviousness. Moreover, the apostle Peter speaketh plainly of the false teachers which were to be hereafter; for, ver. 1—3. he speaks still in the future tense; though both St. Jude in his Epistle, and St. Peter in the following words, do plainly intimate, that some of them were come already: so that in the exposition of this chapter, and the Epistle of St. Jude, we have reason to take in those heretics, who appeared after the writing these Epistles.

Nevertheless, because the false apostles, and false teachers of the Jewish nation, and the Nicolaitans, were certainly then come, and we have express and frequent mention of them in the Epistles of St. Paul, and in the Revelation of St. John, and because St. Peter speaks of them in the plural number; therefore I shall apply the words to all of them, giving the preference to them, in the exposition of these words, who are expressly mentioned in the holy Scriptures.

[2] Ἐν ὑμῖν ἔσονται ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι, There shall be false teachers among you.] The apostle, writing to the Jews, seems by these words to intimate, that these false teachers should be among the Jewish converts, especially, as being either Jews by birth, or proselytes to that religion, as was Nicolas of Antioch. (Acts vi. 5.) But then their entering in among the Jewish converts, (Jude 4.) and being among them in their feasts of charity, (ver. 12.) their leaving the right way, (2 Pet. ii. 15.) and their returning with the dog to the vomit, make it probable that they once professed the Christian faith; though afterward they revolted from it, or introduced such doctrines of perdition as fundamentally destroyed the faith which they professed.

[3] Αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας, Damnable heresies.] Such as tended to the present destruction and future damnation of them who taught, and who believed them. Thus the doctrine of the false apostles, among the Jews, tended to the perverting of souls, (Acts xv. 24.) to make Christ die in vain, (Gal. ii. 21.) and their faith to profit them nothing, (Gal. v. 2.) and Christ become of none effect unto them; they being by them fallen from grace, (ver. 4.) and become enemies to the cross of Christ. (Phil. iii. 18.)

The heresy of the Nicolaitans is styled by Epiphanius,* a heresy which did, ἑαυτοὺς καὶ τοὺς πειθομένους ἀπολλύειν, destroy them that taught, and them that believed it: yea, Christ himself declares his hatred of it, Rev. ii. 15. And the same all the fathers say of the gnostic heresy.

[4] Τὸν ἀγοράσαντα αὐτοὺς δεσπότην ἀρνούμενοι, Denying the Lord that bought them.] Christ being never styled δεσπότης in the New Testament, and St. Jude distinguishing this δεσπότης, or Master, from our Lord, it seems most reasonable to interpret this of God the Father, who is said to have bought the Jews: Is he not thy Father who hath bought thee? Deut. xxii. 5. and the Christians; Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God with your souls and bodies, which are his, 1 Cor. vi. 20. Hence also it is truly observed by Esthius, that Christ died for them that perish, and bring destruction upon themselves.

[5] Ταχινὴν ἀπώλειαν, Shall bring upon themselves swift destruction.] That the apostatizing Jews did this, the Scripture every where informs us, and the apostles frequently warn them of it. St. Paul doth it throughout the Epistle to the Hebrews, elsewhere speaking of them as men whose end is destruction, Phil. iii. 19. on whom should come swift destruction, 1 Thess. v. 3. they being appointed for wrath, ver. 9. St. James, as of men fattened for a day of slaughter, v. 5. and that suddenly to come upon them, their Judge standing at the door, ver. 9. Christ also threatens to them that held the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, that he would come against them swiftly, and fight against them with the sword of his mouth, Rev. ii. 16. i. e. he would destroy them, Rev. xix. 15. 21. Accordingly church-history informs us, that they were extinct, † λόγου ὄντων, in a very little time.

But I find nothing of any such remarkable or swift destruction which befel the gnostics, in church-history; not one word that any of them perished at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman army, though doubtless their iniquities would find them out. We rather read in the church-history, that they were never persecuted by the heathen emperors; this being the observation of the fathers, that the Simonians,‡ and the Menandrians, were never persecuted by the heathens, their fury being only poured out upon the Christians. Nor could it probably be otherwise, seeing they made the doctrine of the cross no part of their religion; but held it lawful§ to deny the faith in times of persecution, to avoid suffering for it, and counting idolatry, in such cases, a thing indifferent; whence, saith Origen, they were never persecuted at all.

[6] Ver. 2. Καὶ πολλοὶ, And many shall follow, &c.] That the Judaizers much infested the Christian church, and perverted many in the churches of Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, and Crete, we learn from St. Paul's Epistles; and that by reason of the Jewish zealots, who despised dominions, and spake evil of dignities, the way of truth was evil spoken of, from 1 Pet. ii. 12. Indeed the heathens seem to have made little or no distinction betwixt the Jews and the Christians that sprang from them; but imputed all the disturbances they made to Christ, or to the Christians. Hence Suetonius* saith of Claudius, that "Judæos, impulsore Christo assidue tumultuantes, Roma expulit;" he expelled the Jews from Rome, as being frequently tumultuous, through the instigation of Christ. Of the Nicolaitans, Epiphanius† saith, that great was the deceit which they brought upon mankind. And Clemens Alexandrinus‡ professeth to write against them and the gnostics, to remove the scandal which they, by their doctrines, might bring upon Christianity: as Justin Martyr§ also hints. Yea, Clemens adds,‖ that from these men, who taught, that women should be common, arose the greatest blasphemy against the name of Christ, or Christians.

Moreover, it is to be noted, that instead of ἀπωλείαις, many copies read ἀσελγείαις, their lascivious ways: which reading may be confirmed from St. Jude, who begins his description of the same persons thus, They turn the grace of God, εἰς ἀσέλγειαν, into lasciviousness. And this character agrees, in some measure, to the false teachers among the Jews, who taught fornication and uncleanness; (see note on 1 Cor. vi. 13. Eph. v. 6.) practised, τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς αἰσχύνης, the hidden things of shame, 2 Cor. iv. 2. and gloried in their shame, Phil. iii. 19. and whose exhortation was, ἐξ ἀκαθαρσίας, of uncleanness, 1 Thess. ii. 3. and many of whose followers were guilty of uncleanness, fornication, καὶ ἀσελγείας, and lasciviousness, 2 Cor. xii. 21. But this is more emphatically the character of the Nicolaitans, and of the gnostics, the successors of them: for they were, saith Œcumenius, περὶ μὲν δόγματος ἀσεβέστατοι, περὶ δὲ βίον ἀσελγέστατοι, most ungodly in their principles, and most lascivious in their lives. "Refert complexus, et permixtiones execrabiles, obscœnosque conjunctus, et quædam ex ipsis adhuc turpiora," saith Tertullian;¶ Yea, things so exceedingly filthy, that we blush to mention them, and therefore pass them by. Πάνδημον Ἀφροδίτην κοινωνίαν μυστικὴν ἀναγορεύουσιν, saith Clemens of Alexandria. Τὴν αἰσχρουγίαν ἅμα τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐπιτελεῖν τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ μαθητὰς ἐδίδαξεν, saith Damascen.†† Hence Pseud-Ignatius‡‡ styles them ἀκαθάρτους Νικολαΐτας, immundissimos Nicolaitas, amatores libidinis; St. Austin, Sectam turpissimam: for, saith Timotheus,§§ Οὐδεὶς τῶν ἄλλων αἱρεσιαρχῶν φαίνεται οὕτως αἴτιος πάσης βδελυκτῆς καὶ μυσερᾶς καὶ ἀῤῥήτου πράξεως διδάσκαλος, Amongst all the masters of heresy, none taught such filthy and abominable actions.

[7] Ver. 3. Ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ, Through covetousness.] If πλεονεξία should here, and ver. 14. signify adultery, as 1 Thess. iv. 6. it seems to do (see note there), and as Dr. Hammond thinks it doth here, there will be no difficulty in applying this to the Nicolaitans, as well as to the gnostics, and false teachers among the Jews; the note on the second verse shewing, that this emphatically belonged to them, and gave the rise to that impure sect. But because they are accused, ver. 15. of following the way of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness; and by St. Jude, ver. 11. of running greedily after the error of Balaam for reward; I think it better to admit of that sense which our translation giveth of the word, and then to apply it at once to the false teachers among the Jews, and to the Nicolaitans: it seems highly probable, from the sixth, eighth, and the tenth chapters of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, that the apostle is there discoursing against the Nicolaitans. Now of these false teachers he said, that they devoured the Corinthians, 2 Cor. xi. 20. St. Paul, in his Second Epistle to Timothy, iii. 6. speaks of a sort of men who crept into houses, leading captive silly women laden with sins, and led away with divers lusts; a character which perfectly agrees to the Nicolaitans: and speaking to Titus of the same persons, he saith, (i. 10, 11.) They subverted whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake. Irenæus* informs us of the Valentinians, that they would not impart their mysteries to all, but to them only who were able to pay great sums for them: whence the Pseud-Ignatius† styles them, Covetous of what belongs to others, and violent lovers of riches.

[8] Οἷς τὸ κρῖμα ἔκπαλαι οὐκ ἀργεῖ, Whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not.] St. Jude, in the parallel place, ver. 4. saying, they were men, οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα, of old assigned to this condemnation, viz. by the prophecy of Enoch (see the note there); I think these words may be best rendered thus, To whom the judgment pronounced of old lingereth not, it being a swift destruction, which the false teachers among the Jews and the Nicolaitans brought upon themselves. (See note on ver. 1. of this chapter.) Note also, that their damnation is, in the Greek, their destruction.

[9] Ver. 4. Ταρταρώσας, Casting them down to hell.] Tartarus, saith Phavorinus, is ἀὴρ ὑπόγαιος, καὶ ἀνήλιος, the subterrestrial air, where the sun comes not. It signifies also, saith Suidas, τὸν περὶ τὰ νέφη τόπον, the place in the clouds, or in the air: hence τάρταρον ἠερόεντα, and ζόφον ἠερόεντα, in Homer, to intimate that Tartarus was the dark air: as Crates in Stephanus saith, Ὁ ᾅδης ὑπόγειός ἐστι τόπος σκοτεινὸς, Hades is a dark place under the earth; saith Porphyry, where souls are tormented, ἐν ἀκραιφνεῖ σκότῳ, in utter darkness. (Apud Stob. Eccl. Ph. p. 133.) These angels being therefore placed in the bright regions of the heavenly light, and being now confined to the dark air (whence Satan is called the prince of the power of the air), are said to be cast down into Tartarus: and this suits with the opinion both of the heathens and the Jews, who held, that the air was full of spirits or demons; (see note on Eph. ii. 2.) but chiefly of the ancient fathers, according to those words of Jerome, in his comment on that passage of St. Paul, against spiritual wickedness, ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in cœlestibus; that is, saith he, in *the air: for this is the opinion of all the doctors, That the air, which divides between the earth and heaven, is full of contrary powers. He is styled the prince of the power of the air (saith Œcumenius†), because he is the prince of the evil spirits that are in the air; not as having dominion, saith Theophylact, but only his habitation there. That this was the opinion of most of the ancients, see Petavius de Angelis, lib. iii. cap. 4. Now hence it follows, that though the devil and his angels are at present for ever banished from the Divine presence, and so do suffer the punishment of loss now of the beatific vision; though they are, in the language of Tertullian, "prædamnati ad judicii diem," condemned beforehand to the tremendous day; "prædestinati supplicio sempiterno," foreordained to eternal punishment, saith St. Austin; "reservati in diem judicii," reserved to the day of judgment, saith Origen, and St. Peter here; or kept in chains of darkness to that day, saith St. Jude; and knowing and believing this, they cannot choose but tremble, and be filled with present horror: yet is the doctrine of Rupertus‡ highly probable, that at present they are not suffering in the infernal flames, but have their residence in the dark air; whence, at the day of judgment, they shall be precipitated into the fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

First, Because this seems to have been the opinion of all antiquity, for five whole centuries together, as appears, not only from their common doctrine mentioned before, that they at present had their habitation in the air, but also from their express words, who spake still in the future, of their infernal punishments, saying, as Justin Martyr, § That they should be punished with eternal fire; for that they are now banished by the name of Jesus, is an indication of their future punishment in everlasting fire. This he confesseth, μηδέπω τοῦτο πράξαι τὸν Θεὸν, that God hath not yet done; but yet he saith, ‖ Christ hath foretold, That he and his angels shall be cast into the fire, and everlastingly tormented there. And Tatianus saith of them, ¶ The Lord of all things suffers them to expatiate, or insult, till the time of the dissolution of the world, and till the Judge comes. Tertullian saith, that their desperate condition, on the account of their being condemned before, receives some comfort from the delay of their punishment. Minucius Felix saith, †† that he foreknowing, trembles at the punishment appointed for him, and those that worship him. Lactantius,‡‡ that at the time of judgment, this prince, with his ministers, will be laid hold on, and condemned to punishment.

Secondly, This must be the doctrine of those fathers who held, That the devil knew not that he should be certainly condemned, till our Lord's advent, and therefore durst not before blaspheme God; which was the doctrine of Justin Martyr, Eusebius,* Irenæus,† and Epiphanius;‡ or, as Œcumenius§ interprets them, He did not know it manifestly, as being only obscurely hinted by the prophets; but when Christ coming, declared manifestly, That everlasting fire was prepared for him and his angels, he ceased not to practise his wiles against his saints: and this doctrine they founded on the following scriptures; viz.

First, That question which these devils put to Christ, Art thou come to torment us before the time? concluding hence, that not this present age, but the future, was the time when these evil spirits were to be punished; as Origen‖ saith twice. They thought (saith St. Jerome) "ad judicandos se venisse," that Christ was to come to judge them: saith Chrysostom, Οὐκ ἀναμένειν τὸν καιρὸν τῆς κολάσεως, That he would not stay till the time of punishment, i. e. the day of judgment. Hence Maldonate, upon the place, admires at the great consent of the ancients in this opinion.

This, secondly, they gathered from those words of Christ, Depart, ye wicked, into the fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Whence they concluded, with St. Bernard,¶ That the sentence against them was determined, but was not yet passed upon them; and that, "Jam diabolo ignis paratus, etsi nondum ille præcipitatus in ignem," The fire was indeed prepared for the devil, but he was not yet cast into it; concluding, that was only to be done *at the end of the world, at the day of the great judgment, or in the world to come.

But, thirdly, this they chiefly concluded from these words of St. Peter†† and St. Jude, that they were referred unto the day of judgment to be punished. Nor is it easy to conceive a more natural consequence than this;—they are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished, therefore they are not yet punished with the fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

And, lastly, this they gathered from the Revelation of St. John (to which the frequent sayings of St. Austin do refer),* who often saith, that the old serpent the devil shall be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, at the day of judgment.

Since then, to torment the devils at our Saviour's advent, was to torment them before the time of torment; seeing our Saviour, when he shall pass the final sentence, will only amand the wicked to the fire prepared for, not actually tormenting them the devil and his angels; seeing they only are reserved in chains of darkness, to the day of judgment, to be punished: and so the sentence, and the execution of it, is no more passed upon them, than upon the prisoner that is kept in chains for the assizes: seeing the devil is only said to be then † cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, when the Judge sat upon the throne, and all men were judged according to their works; there seems sufficient reason to assert, that the devils shall not be tormented in the infernal flames, until the day of judgment: and if not they, then much less wicked men.

[10] Ver. 5. Οὐκ ἐφείσατο, And spared not the old world.] This instance agrees very exactly to those Nicolaitans and gnostics, who had corrupted their ways; as they of the old world did, by taking to them what women they pleased to enjoy, as far as appears, without any solemnity of matrimony; (Gen. vi. 2. 4.) for it is only said, that the sons of God went in unto the daughters of men: hence are these giants said to be, οἱ ἐκπίπτοντες οἱ βίαιοι, violent men, who by force invaded them: and also by idolatry. (See Ainsworth on Gen. iv. 26.)

[11] Ὄγδοον, The eighth person,] One would think, from Adam; whereas indeed he rather was the tenth from Adam, (Gen. v.) and so it is the eighth of them that were saved from the deluge. (1 Pet. iii. 8.) So Plutarch saith of Pelopidas, that he came, εἰς οἰκίαν δωδέκατος, unto his house with eleven more: and Polybius of Dionesidorus, that τρίτος ἀπενήξατο, he swam out with two more: so here, Noah was saved, with seven persons; so celebrated in history, that the hill where the ark rested is called, The hill of the eighth, or Themanim; and a village by it bears the same name. (See Dr. Hammond on the place.)

[12] Ver. 9. Οἶδε, The Lord knoweth.] God's knowledge here includes his power and his will: so Psal. i. Whatsoever the righteous doth, it shall prosper; for the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, (ver. 6.) i. e. he is able and willing to make it prosper. Matt. vi. 31. Take no thought what ye shall eat or drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed; for your heavenly Father knoweth ye have need of all these things, (ver. 32.)

[13] Εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, To the day of judgment, to be punished.] Note, that this is signally the time when the ungodly shall be punished: secondly, that the evils which wicked men suffer in this life, will not exempt them from future punishments in the world to come; even Sodom and Gomorrha must then suffer. (Matt. x. 15. xi. 22.)

[14] Ver. 10. Ὀπίσω σαρκὸς, Who walk after the flesh.] See note on ver. 2.

[15] Καὶ κυριότητος καταφρονοῦντας, And despise government.] The note of Esthius on the place is this; That we read not in church-history, that the gnostics despised governments, but rather flattered them. What Dr. Hammond saith, of their teaching Christians to despise all authority of magistrates, or masters, is not proved by him; for he attempts not to prove, that they were κυριότητος καταφρονοῦντες, despisers of government: and his attempt to prove, that they taught Christian servants to depise their masters, from 1 Tim. vi. 2. hath been considered already. Nor do I find any thing of this nature charged upon the Nicolaitans. But then it may be noted, that κυριότητες καὶ δόξαι, dominions, and glories, in the New Testament, do often signify, the angelical powers; as when Christ is said to be exalted, ὑπεράνω πάσης κυριότητος, above all dominion, Eph. i. 21. and when κυριότητες are mentioned among the invisible things of the creation, Colos. i. 16. Accordingly some of the fathers * refer this to the angelical powers; and this they do, with great probability: for (1.) the apostle Peter here asserts, that they blasphemed, ἐν οἷς ἀγνοοῦσι, in things of which they had no knowledge: St. Jude, that they blasphemed things that they knew not; which very well agrees with their bold assertions touching the angels; in which they did, as St. Paul saith, ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, intrude into those things they had not seen; (Colos. ii. 18.) but cannot so well be applied to civil dignities, of which these heretics must have sufficient knowledge. (2.) The apostle adds, that whereas these men did not tremble to blaspheme these dignities, the holy angels, οὐ φέρουσι κατ' αὐτῶν βλάσφημον κρίσιν, durst not use railing or blasphemous words against them. Now they whom Michael, and his good angels, durst not blaspheme, were, saith St. Jude, the devil and his angels, who were in Scripture styled the principalities, and powers, and rulers of the darkness of this world: (Eph. vi. 12.) and therefore they whom these heretics blasphemed, must also be angelical dignities.

But against this it is objected, That we read not in church-history, that the heresy of the gnostics had any thing in it of particular opposition or defiance to the angels; but, on the contrary, the Æones, noting the angels, make up a great part of their divinity. Ans. This seems a great mistake; for both Irenæus † and Epiphanius‡ aver, that when they practised their most vile impurities, they invoked some of the angels, to whom they did ascribe that work, saying, when they performed it, Ὁ δεῖνα ἄγγελε, καταχρῶμαί σου τὸ ἔργον, ἡ δεῖνα ἐξουσία, σου τὴν πραξιν, O angel, I am doing thy work, I am employed in thy service; which sure must be, to blaspheme these dignities.

Moreover, it is evident, that the Nicolaitans did also horribly blaspheme them. For (1.) they made the angels to be the offspring of an obscene and filthy Æon, as both Tertullian § and Epiphanius ‖ inform us. (2.) They add, that the mother appears in a beautiful form to princes, and extracts their seed from them with pleasure, that she may recollect her power, or virtue, dispersed among many:

* "Sicut etiam desertores angeli, licet secundùm modum quendam mortui sunt peccando, quia fontem vitæ deseruerant, qui Deus est——in secundam mortem post ultimum præcipitabuntur judicium." De C. D. lib. xiii. cap. 24. p. 746. C. Vide eundem, lib. xxi. cap. 23.

and from this hypothesis, saith Epiphanius,* Nicolas brought the mystery of his filthiness into the world: they doing all their villanies, I suppose, in imitation of her.

[16] Ver. 12.] This verse, in St. Jude, runs thus: But these speak evil of the things they know not; but what they know naturally, as brute-beasts, in these things they corrupt themselves, ver. 10. And therefore to make this verse parallel to it, it seems necessary to make the construction run thus; οὗτοι δὲ, but these blasphemers of dignities, ἐν οἷς ἀγνοοῦσι βλασφημοῦντες, blaspheming in things of which they have no knowledge, shall perish in their own corruption; as do the natural brute-beasts, made to be taken, and destroyed; to whom they are, in this practice, of making all women common, alike; and whose example they plead, in favour of their common whoredoms, especially the followers of Carpocrates,† and his son Epiphanes, making the marriage of one a violation of the community ordained by God, and exemplified in other living creatures.

[17] Ver. 13. Τὴν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ τρυφὴν, Riot in the day.] This is exactly true of the Nicolaitans;‡ who practised their impurities day and night; and held, that if a man were not lascivious every day, he could not be saved.

[18] Sporting themselves in their own deceits.] i. e. In those practices which were the effects of their deceitful principles. So that there seems no need of reading ἀγάπαις, their love-feasts; for they were the feasts of the church, not of the heretics.

[19] Συνευωχούμενοι, When they feast with you.] Of these feasts, see note on Jude, ver. 12. And also Irenæus's saying of Marcus, and other heretics, that εἰώθασιν ἐπὶ τοῖς δείπνοις τοῦ κλήρου οὗτοι πάντοτε παίζειν, they are always accustomed, in those suppers which they make, by lot to play; or, as the Latin hath it, "Sortibus ludere," to play by lot: I suppose, what women they should commit lewdness with, or who should provide the supper; which being ended, there followed, as Justin Martyr§ hints, the putting out of the candle, and their promiscuous lusts: he speaking thus of the Marcionites; and Clemens Alexandrinus,‖ of the Carpocratians.

[21] Ver. 15.] This in St. Jude runs thus; Τῇ πλάνῃ τοῦ Βαλαὰμ μισθοῦ ἐξεχύθησαν, They ran forth into the error of the reward of Balaam; i. e. the error which the children of Israel committed, through the counsel which Balaam gave to Balak. To explain this, let it be noted;

First, That Balaam not only went with the princes of Balak, but also had the reward of his divination; for it is expressly said, Deut. xxiii. 4. Nehem. xiii. 2. that the Ammonites and Moabites hired Balaam. Note,

Secondly, That Balaam, for his reward, gave counsel to Balak to entice the children of Israel to idolatry and fornication: this is hinted in those words, Come therefore, I will advertise thee, (Numb. xxiv. 14.) i. e. what to do to this people now, and what they will do to thee in the latter days: so the Chaldee paraphrast upon the place; I will counsel thee what thou shalt do to this people, that thou mayest make them to sin: so the Jerusalem Targum. This counsel, saith Josephus, was, that Balaam told Balak, upon his departure, that the only way to prevail upon this people, would be to draw them into sin; and to that purpose he counselled him to tempt them with their beautiful women: these were first to entice the Israelites with their beauty and compliant conversation, and when they had entangled their affections they were to consent to their embraces, upon condition that the Israelites would forsake their own law, and worship the god of the Moabites. (Joseph. Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 6.) Note, Thirdly, That this counsel made them err in the matter of Peor; and so not only to commit fornication with the women of Midian, (1 Cor. x. 8.) but also to commit idolatry. Now this Baal-Peor, saith St. Jerome, and other critics, was Priapus, who was worshipped, by shewing of their shame; to which these words of the prophet Hosea may refer, They set up altars to Baal-Peor, and separated themselves to that shame; (ix. 10.) and those of Jeremiah, Ye have set up altars to shame, even altars to burn incense to Baal. (Jer. xi. 13.) And then, as ἐξεχύθησαν, they were dispersed, or ran about after the Midianitish women, answers to the practice of those men who crept into houses, leading captive silly women; so the matter of Baal-Peor answers exactly to the execrable villanies these men committed cum membris pudoris.

Moreover, this passage seems to confirm that exposition, which refers what is here spoken to the Nicolaitans. For St. John speaks thus to the church of Pergamus, I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam; who, as he taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication; so hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which I hate. Now the church-history informs us, this was the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, that* it was lawful to eat things offered to idols, and to commit fornication; as Irenæus, St. Austin, and others teach.

[22] Ver. 16. The prophet.] That Balaam was indeed a prophet of God, and well acquainted with his revelations, the history in the book of Numbers will not suffer us to doubt: for those words, I cannot go beyond the commandment of my God, to do good or evil, (Numb. xxii. 18.) shew he was not unacquainted with the true God; (see also, xxiv. 4.) though after, through a covetous desire of gain, he used enchantments. The madness of the prophet appeared in this, that hearing the ass speak, which argued the miraculous assistance of God enabling him so to do, he goes on in his mad fury, and saith, He would kill him.

Ὑπέρογκα, Swelling words of vanity.] This did the heretics many ways, (ver. 9.) by their barbarous names, quibus terrebant auditores, by which they affrighted their hearers, say St. Austin* and Epiphanius,† and imposed upon them by those vile words; or by those proud words, that they are the spiritual, the perfect, the seed of election, men who have perfect knowledge of God; (see note on Jude 19.) that they have grace, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀῤῥήτου καὶ ἀνωνομάστου συζυγίας, from the ineffable and not-to-be-named conjugation, and ‡ therefore ought to be always meditating the mystery of conjugation; and that § he that being in the world, does not love a woman, so as to enjoy her, is not of the truth; and that except a man be lascivious every day, he cannot enjoy eternal life; and that they being ‖ spiritual, cannot receive corruption by any evil actions they do, or be hurt by any material actions, so as to lose their spiritual substance. In opposition to which vain boasts, these apostles so expressly say, They shall perish in their corruption.

[24] Ver. 19. Ἐλευθερίαν, They promise them liberty.] They promised them a double liberty: first, a liberty to do any thing they pleased, without fear: secondly, a liberty from the eye and hand of their Judge; as we learn from the ὑπέρογκα, swelling words of vanity, cited by Irenæus¶ from them, which are a full comment on ver. 18.

[25] Ver. 20.] From ver. 18. 20, 21. it seemeth to be strongly argued, that they who were once truly faithful, may totally and finally fall away. For, first, that the persons here mentioned were once truly faithful, seems evident from this, first, that they had once ὄντως, truly, and entirely escaped from them that live in error, (ver. 18.) being not then entangled with, nor overcome by, the pollutions which are in the world, through lust, but having escaped them through the knowledge of Christ Jesus: that they turned from the holy commandment in which they formerly had walked: that they were once washed from that mire to which they returned, (ver. 22.) All which cannot be truly said of hypocritical professors, who are still in the gall of bitterness, and the bond of iniquity.

That these men after fell away totally and finally, we learn from these expressions, that they were again allured to wantonness; that they were again entangled and overcome by the pollutions which were in the world, through lust, and therefore brought in bondage; that they turned from the holy commandment delivered to them; yea, with the dog to the vomit, and the washed sow to the wallowing in the mire: and this so far, as that it had been better for them, not to have known the way of righteousness.

[26] Ver. 22. Κύων ἐπιστρέψας, The dog is turned to his vomit, &c.] These two proverbs, of which the first is taken from Prov. xxvi. 11. and the second is common among the writers de Re Rustica (see Schotii adag. sacra, in locum), are very expressive of the folly of those men who return to those vices they had formerly renounced; and therefore the fathers apply them to Julian, returning to that heathenism he had renounced in his baptism: so Nazianzen. 1. THE Second Epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in (both) which I stir up your [1] pure minds by way of remembrance:

2. [2] That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets (of the Old Testament, Enoch, Jude, 14. and Daniel, xii. 2. touching the judgment of ungodly men), and of the commandment of us the apostles of our Lord and Saviour, (or, of the commandment of the apostles of our Lord and Saviour, as St. Jude, ver. 17. that is, to expect patiently, and with unshaken faith, that day, Heb. x. 23. 35. 39. James i. 6. v. 7. 11. 1 Pet. i. 13. iv. 1.)

3. Knowing this first, that (according to their predictions) there shall come in the last days [3] scoffers, walking after their own lusts,

4. And saying, Where is the promise of his coming (to judge the world, and raise his faithful servants from the dead)? for [4] since the fathers (to whom these promises were made) fell asleep, all things continue as (they were) from the beginning of the creation.

5. For this they willingly are [5] ignorant of (Gr. they that are of this mind are ignorant), that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water (viz. dry land) and in the water (viz. that part of it which is covered with the sea):

6. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:

7. But the heavens and earth which now are by the same word are kept in store, (being) reserved unto fire against [6] the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men (who, as the antediluvians have been punished by water destroying the world then, shall be punished with fire destroying it again).

8. But (for farther answer to this question), beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a [7] thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.

9. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness (concluding thence, that he hath changed his purpose, or will not perform it); but is (in this) long-suffering to us-ward, [8] not (being) willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

10. But (though it be thus deferred for a time, yet) the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, (i. e. suddenly and unexpectedly to them, Luke xxi. 34. 1 Thess. v. 2, 3.) in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up.

11. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved (by fire designed to punish the ungodly), what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?

12. Looking for [9] and hasting to (prepare for) the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements [10] shall melt with fervent heat.

13. Nevertheless, according to his promise, we look for (καινοὺς δὲ οὐρανοὺς προσδοκῶμεν, we also do expect) [11] new heavens and a new earth, [12] in which dwelleth righteousness.

14. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that [13] ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

15. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is (designed for the) salvation (of you Jews); even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the (spirit of) wisdom given unto him hath written unto you, (in these words, Rom. ii. 4. Despisest thou the riches of his goodness and long-suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance? And more especially in these, And so all Israel shall be saved, &c. Rom. xi. 26. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all, ver. 32. See the preface to the Epistle to the Hebrews.)

16. [14] As also in all his Epistles, speaking in them of these things; [15] in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, to their own destruction.

17. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the (se) wicked (scoffers), fall from your own steadfastness.

18. But (rather) [16] grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 1. ΤΗ'Ν εἰλικρινῆ διάνοιαν ὑμῶν, Your sincere minds.] A sincere desire to know, and regard to the truth, being once seated in the mind and heart, we shall readily embrace and firmly stand in the truth delivered to us.

[2] Ver. 2.] That these words should relate to that notable destruction of the unbelieving Jews, foretold by Christ, seems not very probable; since the believers are instructed to be mindful of these commands, that they might be armed against the scoffers, mentioned ver. 3. who said, Where is the promise of his coming? Now that the thing questioned by them was not our Lord's coming to the destruction of the Jews, but to the judgment of the world, is evident; it being styled emphatically, ἡμέρα κρίσεως, the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men, ver. 7. 10—12.

[3] Ver. 3.] Since both St. Peter, and, as St. Jude tells us, the rest of the apostles, were so careful to mind those to whom they writ, or preached, of these scoffers, we may conjecture that these scoffers were then come; though in respect of the prophecies concerning them, they were yet to come; whence Jude saith of them, These are they that separate themselves, &c. ver. 18, 19.

Ἐμπαῖκται, Scoffers.] St. Jude seems to teach us, that these scoffers were the heretics mentioned in the former chapter, viz. the Simonians, who, being Samaritans, held still their old heresy,* that there should be no resurrection of the flesh; and therefore walked after their own lusts: for those of whom, saith he, I have treated, and am speaking, are they of whom the apostles did forewarn you, ver. 17, 18.

[4] Ver. 4. Ἀφ' ἧς, viz. ἡμέρας.] For from the day that the fathers (to whom this promise of a resurrection, and a heavenly country, Heb. xi. 16. is supposed to be made, and who had foretold this judgment to come upon the wicked, Jude 14. have slept, we see no such thing verified to them; nothing answering their predictions, but all things continue as they were. That ἀφ' ἧς should signify except that, I find no instance or example.

[5] Ver. 5. Λανθάνει γὰρ αὐτούς.] That is, that consider not God's power in making the world, which must enable him also to destroy it, if he please; and that by his word the earth was separated from the waters which covered it, and gathered into its channels, so that the dry land, which we call earth, appeared; and that by these very waters, descending partly from the heavens, and partly from the great deep, (Gen. vii. 11.) the earth was again overwhelmed, for the sin of the antediluvians (eight persons being only preserved); so that those wicked men, which then lived, perished in their wickedness; and so the prophecy of Enoch was remarkably fulfilled upon them.

[6] Ver. 7. Εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, To the day of judgment.] From these words it seems to follow, first, that the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, and the conflagration of the world, must be contemporary; and that therefore new heavens and new earth, in the literal sense, must vainly be expected before the final judgment of ungodly men. Secondly, That the ungodly are not to be judged, or punished by fire, before the conflagration of the world: for the heaven and earth that now are, are to be burnt up with that very fire by which the ungodly are to be destroyed, they being left in the midst of those flames, whilst the godly, being snatched up into the air above the reach of them, shall be for ever with the Lord; (1 Thess. iv. 16.) for the wicked are reserved unto the day of judgment, to be punished; (2 Pet. ii. 9.) that fire in which they are to be tormented and destroyed is reserved unto the same day; (Matt. xxv. 41. 46.) the fallen angels, for whom the fire is prepared in which the wicked shall be punished, are reserved to that day: (2 Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6.) and, lastly, Sodom and Gomorrah, who perished by fire and brimstone, are set forth ὡς δεῖγμα, as an example of that punishment the wicked shall suffer at that great day of retribution: (2 Pet. ii. 5. Jude 7.) they are not therefore to be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, before that day. Moreover, that the world was to be dissolved by fire, was the opinion of Anaximander, Anaxiphanes, Anaxagoras, Archelaus, Diogenes, and Leucippus. (Apud Stob. Eclog. Phys. p. 44.)

[7] Ver. 8. Χίλια ἔτη, A thousand years.] That is, though

* Ἡγήσαν μὲν νεκρῶν ἀνάστασιν καὶ ἀπιστοῦσι. Epiph. lib. i. p. 25. Hær. Samar. Valentiniani etiam Λέγουσι μὴ εἶναι νεκρῶν ἀνάστασιν. Just. Mart. p. 207. 253.

God defer his coming to this judgment a thousand years or more, we must not think this long; for in respect of him whose duration is eternal, and so who ever lives to make good his promises and threats, a thousand years are as one day. In like manner, Zosimus,* in his history, produces a prediction from the sibyls, or from one Phaellon, and then adds, Let none think that this prophecy was of some other thing, because it was fulfilled, μετὰ χρόνους οὐκ ὀλίγους, a long time after, πᾶς γὰρ χρόνος τῷ Θεῷ βραχὺς ἀεὶ τε ὄντι, καὶ ἐσομένῳ, for all time is short to that God who ever is, and ever will be. Mr. Mede indeed saith, that these words cannot be thus interpreted, because the question is not, whether the time in which they expected the coming of the Lord, were long in respect of God, but only in respect of us, and so he would have the words interpreted thus, The day of judgment spoken of shall be a thousand years. But (1.) the text saith not, one day shall be a thousand years, but as a thousand years, and that again not absolutely, but only παρὰ Κυρίῳ, with respect to God. (2.) Here is no question mentioned touching the length of time, either with respect to God, or us, but only touching the truth of God's promise: (ver. 4.) and to this the interpretation well agrees, that God's promise may be true, and in his time fulfilled, though he, who ever lives to make it good, should defer it a thousand years. And, (3.) that this respects God's promise, and not the length of the day of judgment, is evident from the ensuing words.

[8] Ver. 9. Μὴ βουλόμενός τινας ἀπολέσθαι, Not being willing that any should perish.] Note here, that when it is said, God would have all men come to repentance, it is certain that this will refers to all to whom the preaching of the gospel is vouchsafed, to all to whom in the times of ignorance God winked at, for now he commandeth them all every where to repent. (Acts xvii. 30.) When therefore it is said, he is not willing any one should perish, he must be supposed to mean, he would have none to whom the gospel is vouchsafed, to perish. Vain therefore here are the descants of Esthius upon this place; as, v. g.

First, When he says, God would have none to perish, because he gives to all some general means of conversion to God, though they be not sufficient for that end without these special aids he will not give them. For certain it is, that he who wills not the means necessary to bring them to repentance, wills not that they should come to repentance: and he that determines to withhold the means, which being withheld they must perish, wills they should perish.

Secondly, When he restrains this to the elect, saying, God is not willing any of them should perish; for the words are too general to admit of this restriction, for they run thus, first, He would have all to come to repentance; he would not that they should perish. Secondly, He is here speaking of the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men, and gives this reason why it is deferred, viz. because God is long-suffering, and would not any man should perish. He therefore must in reason be supposed to speak of God's long-suffering in the general.

Thirdly, When he adds, He would not any man should perish, because he excites good men to pray they may repent, and so not perish. For if this prayer be according to the will of God, then must it also be his will they should not perish; if it be not, they cannot thus pray in faith or with expectance to be heard, because they know, according to his doctrine, they do not pray according to his will: nor can God excite them thus to pray.

[9] Ver. 12. Προσδοκῶντας καὶ σπεύδοντας τὴν παρουσίαν, And hastening to the coming.] Though πρὸς here may be taken from the foregoing words, yet σπεύδω hath sometimes an accusative case like this without it. As when Thucydides saith, σπεύδω τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, I hasten to the government; and Pindar,* μὴ βίον ἀθάνατον σπεῦδε, i. e. ἐπὶ βίον ἀθάνατον.

[10] Στοιχεῖα δὲ καυσούμενα, And the element being burnt, shall be dissolved.] That the elements cannot be here taken in the common sense, Mr. Mede proves well, because one of them is that fire which shall consume these elements; but, that they signify the planets, he proves from the testimonies of Justin Martyr,† Theophilus of Antioch,‡ of Polycrates,§ and other ancient fathers. So ἐνέργεια στοιχείων is the influence of the stars, Wisd. vii. 18. and στοιχεῖα ἐπουράνια, the celestial signs or constellations, as Valesius proves (in his notes upon these words of Polycrates bishop of Ephesus,‖ κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν μεγάλην στοιχεῖα κεκοίμηται, in Asia great lights are extinct,) out of Diogenes Laertius and Epiphanius: and since the planetary bodies are found to be as much earth as that we tread on, and borrow all their light from the irradiations of the sun, I think there is no need of those criticisms which turn παρελεύσονται, they shall pass away, into they shall be changed, and καυσόμενα λυθήσονται, they shall be dissolved being burnt, into they shall be refined; whereas, if they be refined as silver is by fire, they must be dissolved as that is. Nor see I any reason why we should prefer either an unusual or metaphorical, before the proper import of these words.

[11] Ver. 13. Καινοὺς οὐρανοὺς, New heavens and new earth.] That this cannot refer to the millenium, supposed to be promised in the Revelation of St. John, appears, not only because this Epistle was writ before the Revelation, which, saith Irenæus,¶ was seen "ad finem Domitiani imperii," about the end of the reign of Domitian, whereas St. Peter suffered martyrdom in the reign of Nero; but also, (1.) because the millenium of St. John is peculiar to the martyrs, and those who have suffered for the cause of Christ; the new heavens and earth, here mentioned, are the common expectation of all Christians, who upon this account are admonished to be found of him without spot, and unblamable, in peace, (ver. 14.) (2.) I grant, that the apostle is here speaking of the destruction, not only of the sublunary heavens and earth, (ver. 12.) by fire: but this concession is so far from doing any service to the hypothesis of the millenium of St. John, that it doth perfectly destroy it: for this conflagration of the world is contemporary with the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men: and by that very fire which consumes the world, are they to perish. (See note on ver. 7.) So doth the Scripture constantly express the punishment of the wicked, saying, that at the end of the world the angels shall cast them into a furnace of fire, (Matt. xiii. 28.) and that Christ shall come in flaming fire to take vengeance on them. (2 Thess. i. 7, 8.) Whereas the millenium of St. John must be at an end before that day: for after he had spoken of the first resurrection, and the conclusion of one thousand years, in which they were to reign who were then raised, and of the insurrection of God and Magog against them; I say, after the conclusion of those years, doth he introduce one sitting on a great white throne, and the dead both small and great standing before him, and being judged out of those things which were written in the book, according to their works. (Rev. xx. 13, 14.)

I also grant, that after the apostle had spoken of the conflagration of the world, he hath these words, We also do expect new heavens and new earth; but then I add, that these words are not to be rendered thus, Nevertheless, after this violent dissolution of the world, we expect new heavens and new earth, which are to succeed them: but rather, as Dr. More renders them, But before this conflagration we expect them; or rather, But besides this conflagration, we expect new heavens and new earth. As if the apostle should have said,—I hitherto have answered this question of these scoffers, by shewing what substantial mutations have been, and will be, brought upon the world by the word of the Lord, and his coming to judge his people: this also I think fit to add in answer to them, That we Christians expect the coming of our Lord to make such a moral change in the affairs of the church, as will amount to the new creation of heaven and earth, promised to the Jews: (Isa. lxv. 16—18.) so that these scoffers have no cause to doubt of our Lord's coming in behalf of his faithful servants, since he will come to raise his church, by his calling the Jewish nation to the faith, and so to such a glorious state.

Nor is it to be wondered that the apostle should speak of these two things together, in answer to that question, Where is the promise of his coming? seeing the Jews thought them connected, expecting these new heavens and new earth, at the coming of the Messiah, and his coming at the end of the world; according to that question of the disciples to our Lord, When is the time of thy coming, and of the end of the world? Matt. xxiv. 3. In the end of the world (saith R. Saadiah Gaon) there shall be to the Jews a world full of joy and exultation; so that their heaven and earth shall be as it were new, as it is said, Isa. lxv. 17. (See this more fully in Mr. Mede, p. 535—537.)

[12] Κατὰ τὸ ἐπαγγελμα αὐτοῦ, According to his promise.] This cannot relate, as I have proved, to St. John's discourse of these new heavens, &c. for this farther reason, That he speaks of them only as in a vision, not by way of promise; it remains therefore, that the new heavens and new earth promised by Isaiah, be the thing here referred to. Now these new heavens and new earth are manifestly promised to the Jewish nation, to whom also the apostle here writes: nor can they possibly admit of any other sense, or be primarily accomplished upon any other people: for God having said by his prophet, Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, immediately adds, Be ye (Jews) glad, and rejoice for ever in what I do create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy; and I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people. Now sure this new heaven and earth promised to the Jews must be created before the conflagration of the world, that is, before the Jews be burnt to ashes, they being not likely to be converted afterward. St. John indeed speaks of his new heaven and earth, after he had mentioned the day of judgment; but that he doth this by a prolepsis, is evident from this consideration, that after his whole discourse of these new heavens and earth, the new Jerusalem coming down from heaven, and of the bride, and the Lamb's wife, i. e. the Jews converted then to Christ, follow these words, Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to render to every one according to his works, xxii. 13. which words contain a repetition of what was said, xx. 13. to shew that what was mentioned there, was not to be accomplished till after the appearance of the new heavens and the new earth.

[13] Ver. 14. Ταῦτα προσδοκῶντες, Expecting these things.] These words, directed to the Jews then living, seem to prove, that in some inferior sense this promise of the new heavens, &c. was to be made good in their times: for why should he exhort them to this diligence, on the account of what should only happen one thousand seven hundred years after they were dead? for he plainly speaks to them to whom St. Paul had written, ver. 16. and therefore to the Jews of that present age.

[14] Ver. 16. Ὡς καὶ ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐπιστολαῖς, As also in all his Epistles.] I do not think it necessary so to understand these words, as if the apostle were said to have spoken in all his Epistles, that the long-suffering of God was designed for their salvation; for I do not find any thing of that nature in many of them: he speaks indeed generally of Christ's coming to judgment in them, but that seems not pertinent to the text. I therefore give the sense of the words thus: As also, according to the same wisdom, he hath written in all his Epistles, speaking in them of these things, of which I am now discoursing, that is, of the day of the Lord's coming, and of the preparation we should make for it.

[15] Ἐν οἷς, In which.] This cannot relate to the Epistles of St. Paul, because the words being of the neuter gender, cannot agree with ἐπιστολαί, epistles, which is of the feminine; but to those things of which St. Peter had been discoursing in this chapter, and which were so wrested by the unlearned and unstable, that some of them thought, long before the writing of this Epistle, that the day of the Lord was instant, (2 Thess. ii. 2.) and so became unstable in the faith, (ver. 15.) Some said, The resurrection was past already, and thereby overthrew the faith of some; (2 Tim. ii. 18.) some, wanting patience to expect it longer, left the assemblies of Christians, (Heb. x. 18.) and some questioned whether this promise would be made good at all, as here, ver. 4. 9. the resurrection of the flesh being by some thought a thing absurd, they holding that it was *incapable of salvation; and the resurrection of the same body being by some looked on as a thing impossible; and these seem to be the δυσνόητα here mentioned.

[16] Ver. 18. Αὐξάνετε ἐν χάριτι, Grow in grace.] That grace signifies generally, in the New Testament, the favour of God to us, see note on 2 Cor. vi. 1.

* "Carnis salutem negant, et regenerationem ejus spernunt, dicentes non eam esse capacem incorruptibilitatis." Iren. lib. v. cap. 2.

FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JOHN.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

CONCERNING the author of this Epistle, all ages have agreed that it was St. John, the apostle of our Lord and Saviour.

As for the time when it was written, some (both ancient and modern) writers think his Epistles to be the last of his works, and therefore to have been written in the last years of Domitian. But Dr. Hammond hath very well observed, that this Epistle must have been written some time before the great destruction which befel the Jews: 1. Because he speaks of the last hour as now at hand; which that it must be understood of the last times of the Jewish state, see note on ii. 18. 2. Because he speaks of the antichrist, ii. 18. and the false prophets, iv. 1. which were then among them, or come into the world; such as Christ tells us were to be the immediate forerunners of that destruction, Matt. xxiv. 24. declaring, that they went out from them of Judea, ver. 19. 3. It being written by an apostle of the circumcision, it is not doubted but it was written to the Jews; but that it was an Epistle to the Parthians, as St. Austin,* Posidonius in his Index, and Idacius, contra Verim. aver; as I know nothing can be said against it, but that it only is asserted by authors of a later date: so, if Parthia be taken for the whole empire, as it was enlarged by the Arsacidæ, it is a farther proof, not only that this Epistle was written to the Jews, who, saith Josephus,† abounded in Babylon and Mesopotamia, and had there three famous universities, one of them at Neerda, mentioned by Josephus; but also, that many of the ten tribes were then converted, they being seated in Mesopotamia and Media: for the text saith, that they were carried away into Assyria, and placed in Halah and Habor, by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 11. Now all these places, saith the learned Bochart,‡ are to be found thereabouts; and therefore St. John, being an apostle of the circumcision, may well be supposed to have written to them, though perhaps he was never there; as St. Paul writ some of his Epistles to churches he had never seen.

Whence it was written, neither Scripture nor any thing in antiquity that I have met with, gives any ground for a conjecture.

The occasion of it seems to be, 1. To arm those Jewish converts against those loose and pernicious doctrines which had obtained among the Jews, viz. that solifidian doctrine of being righteous by a faith, that is not fruitful in good works, or without doing righteousness, 1 John ii. 29. iii. 7. 10. being children of the light, without walking in the light; favourites of God without obedience to his laws, or love to his servants. 2. Against the madness of their zealots, abounding every where among them, who thought their zeal for God and for his laws would atone for their hatred and murder of their brethren; and for all the other sins, which, saith Josephus, they did so greedily commit. (See note on Rom. ii. 1. 24. James i. 26.) And, 3. to preserve them steadfast in the truth, which they had heard from the beginning, against those deceivers, antichrists, and false prophets, which were then among them, ii. 19. 26. iv. 1—3. and to continue them steadfast in the belief that Jesus was the Christ the Son of God, v. 1.

And here, because that question hath made so great a noise of late, "Whether salvation or perdition depends upon believing or rejecting this one proposition, That Jesus was the Messiah," as, saith the author of the Reasonableness of Christianity, p. 43. adding, p. 47. that "all that was to be believed for justification, was no more but this single proposition, That Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ, or the Messiah;" I shall endeavour briefly to state and explain this matter, and so give farther light to those words of this Epistle, iv. 2. 15. v. 1. 5. which seem to say the same thing.

Whereas then this author challenges all the systematical divines, p. 192. "to shew that there was any other doctrine, upon their assent to which, or disbelief of it, men were pronounced believers or unbelievers, and accordingly received into the church of Christ as members of his body, as far as mere believing could make them so, or else kept out of it:" this I shall undertake to shew,

First, From the express words of Christ, who requires of all his disciples, in order to their admission into the church by baptism, faith in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Matt. xxviii. 19. saying, He that believeth (this) and is baptized, shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned, Mark xvi. 16. he adds with an asseveration, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you, John vi. 53. clearly declaring the necessity of faith in his body given, and his blood shed, for the remission of sins, to justification and salvation; we being justified by his blood, and through faith in his blood, Rom. iii. 25. v. 9.

Secondly, From the plain declaration of St. Paul, who,

* Qu. Evang. lib. ii. cap. 39. † Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 16.

among the first things he preached to the Corinthians, as things by the belief of which they should be saved, mentions three articles; first of all, that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, 1 Cor. xv. 1—4. 2. That he was buried. And, 3. that he rose from the dead. In the same chapter he plainly asserts the necessity of believing the resurrection of the body, ver. 19. 32. Among the foundations and first principles of the doctrine of Christ, from which all Christians were to go on to perfection, he reckons the doctrines of repentance, of faith towards God, of baptism, of laying on of hands (for the receiving of the Holy Ghost), of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment, Heb. vi. 1, 2. These therefore were then necessary to be believed by all Christians. The doctrine of the sufficiency of faith in Christ's death for justification without the works of the law, is by the same apostle declared to be so necessary, that he saith of them who gainsaid it, Christ is become of no effect to you, ye are fallen from grace, Gal. v. 2. 4.

Moreover, it will be easy to account for the practice of our Lord and his apostles, who insist so much and lay so great stress upon this one article, if we consider who they preached to, and how much was contained in, or necessarily depended upon, the cordial belief of this one article.

First, then, our Lord and his apostles, whilst he was on earth, preached only to the Jews, Matt. x. 6. that is, to them to whom pertained the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the service of God, and the promises, Rom. ix. 4. and to whom were committed the oracles of God, Rom. iii. 2. i. e. those Scriptures which were able to make them wise to salvation, with faith in Christ Jesus, 2 Tim. iii. 5. i. e. if they, to the belief of them, added faith in Christ, they teaching them the knowledge of the true God, and the way in which he would be worshipped, and shewing them what was good, and what the Lord required of them. They also were writ by, and made frequent mention of, the Spirit of God, of the new covenant God would establish with them, of the sufferings of Christ, and of the glory that should follow, 1 Pet. i. 11. of his prophetical, priestly, and his kingly office, of an Emanuel that should be born to them, whose name should be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of peace, Isa. vii. 1. 14. ix. 6. It is not therefore to be wondered, that whilst our Saviour was on earth, he only called them to repentance, and faith in the promised Messiah.

Moreover, St. Paul's sermon, Acts xiii. was preached to the children of the stock of Abraham, ver. 26. and yet he preached to them not only that Jesus was the Christ, but also that he died, and rose again, and that remission of sins was to be obtained through his name; and that by him all that believed were to be justified from all those things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses, ver. 38, 39. And though we find him once disputing in the school of one Tyrannus, we seldom find him preach any where but in a Jewish synagogue. Others also preached to the same persons; for they that were dispersed upon the persecution of St. Stephen, preached to the Jews only, Acts xi. 19.

We have in the whole Acts of the Apostles, mention only of four persons who were not Jews by birth, to whom the gospel was thus preached; one of these was the eunuch, who was before a worshipper of God, as is probably conjectured, of the Jews' religion; and therefore came up to Jerusalem to worship. St. Paul preacheth to Lydia in a Jewish synagogue, Acts xvi. 13, 14. and she was also one that worshipped God, and so in all probability of the Jews' religion. The centurion to whom St. Peter preached, was one that feared God, wrought righteousness, was much in prayer and alms; and yet St. Peter, before his baptism, preaches to him and his friends, of the word that God sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ; declaring how he was anointed by God with the Holy Ghost, healed all that were oppressed of the devil, suffered and rose again, that he was made Lord of all things, that he was ordained of God to be the Judge of the quick and the dead, and that through his name whosoever believed in him should receive remission of sins, Acts x. 36. 43. The only heathen family that St. Paul admits to baptism, is the jailor's; and he first preaches to them the word of the Lord, Acts xvi. 32. i. e. say even the Socinians, he summarily expounded to them * who this Jesus, this Son of God, was, what miracles he did, how he was crucified by the Jews, raised up again by God, taken up into heaven, made Lord of all things; what promises he had made, what precepts he enjoined. I know this author saith, that preaching the word was only preaching that Jesus was the Messiah; but the Scriptures cited by him do not say so: for the word, mentioned Acts x. 37. is the whole word which God sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ. It is the word of the gospel, Acts xv. 7. It contains the whole ministry of the gospel, Acts vi. 4. All the counsel of God being the word of his grace, which was able to build them up, and give them an inheritance among them who were sanctified through faith in Christ, Acts xx. 27. 32. It cannot therefore be concluded from the preaching of our Lord or his apostles, that they thought nothing more was necessary to be believed by Christians saving this one article, that Jesus was the Christ.

Secondly, The belief of this proposition, that "Christ is the Messiah, and the Son of God," may well be represented as the chief initiating article of Christian faith; because where it is heartily professed, it carries with it a profession of believing all Christ's sayings, and of obeying all his precepts: and where it cordially is embraced, it produceth both his faith and practice. That "Jesus is the Christ," as it is the principal article of pure faith, the most peculiar doctrine of our religion, as it stands opposed to that of Judaism; so it doth virtually comprehend all other doctrines of moment in it, regarding either faith or practice. For to believe him to be the Christ, is to believe him to be a Prophet sent from God, to teach the way of life unto us, John iii. 3. even that Prophet which was to come into the world. Hence Christ applies these words to himself, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath appointed me to preach the gospel, &c. Luke iv. 18. Now sure we are obliged to embrace as truth whatsoever was taught by such a Prophet, and to obey all his precepts upon pain of destruction; for whosoever will not hear this Prophet, shall be destroyed from the people, Acts iii. 23.

Again, To believe him to be the Christ, is to believe him to be the Son of God, according to that profession of St.

* Woltzog. in locum.

Peter, Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God, Matt. xvi. 16. and the inquiry of the high-priest, Art thou the Christ, the Son of God? Matt. xxvi. 63. Now this lays an obligation upon us to hear, that is, obey him; according to those words of God, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear him, Matt. xvii. 5. It is also to believe him to be our Lord and King, according to those words of the angel, To you is born a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord, Luke ii. 11. and of Nathanael, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel. Now this relation calls for obedience: for why (saith our Saviour) call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say? Luke vi. 46. and that on penalty of ruin from him, when he shall say, Bring these mine enemies, who would not I should reign over them, and slay them before me, Luke xix. 27. It was also Jesus who was called Christ, even that Jesus who was to save his people from their sins, and a Saviour to give repentance and remission of sins, Matt. i. 21. Now upon such a King, and such a Saviour, we may securely rely for the obtainment of all the blessings and rewards which he hath promised to the obedient. Hence we may learn, that it was highly reasonable, that the apostles should begin their preaching with proving and persuading this doctrine; that they should give such great commendations, annex such excellent privileges, offer such high rewards, to the hearty belief of such a comprehensive article, and should admit them to baptism who professed it; since "by that baptism (saith this author, p. 196, 197.) they owned themselves the subjects of this Jesus whom they believed to be their Messiah (i. e. the Prophet sent from God to teach them), and received him for their Lord and King; and this was the solemn visible act whereby they who believed him to be the Messiah, received him as their King, and professed obedience to him, and so were admitted as subjects into his kingdom." For as every one who was circumcised, became a debtor to obey the whole law of Moses, Gal. v. 3. and therefore to believe it; so every person baptized, being of age, doth by that very baptism profess to believe all the doctrines, and obey the precepts, of the holy Jesus, in whose name he is baptized. And therefore, though St. John here says, He that confesseth that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God, iv. 15. and, Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God, v. 1. yet he requires of the same persons, in order to the same ends, that they should walk in the truth of the gospel, in conformity to the example of Christ, and to the love of God, and in obedience to his commands; and adds, that he that is born of God sinneth not, neither can sin; clearly insinuating, that this proposition, when cordially embraced, will produce a faith and practice answerable to it in our lives.

1. THAT which was [1] from the beginning (of the gospel-dispensation, that) which we have heard, which [2] we have seen (i. e. discerned as clearly as if we had seen it) with our eyes, (that) which we have looked upon, and our hands have (as it were) handled, of the Word of life, (declare we to you;

2. Nor have ye the least reason to suspect our testimony, either of this life, or the author and procurer of it:) for the life (we speak of) was manifested (in the author and the promise of it), and we have seen (or known), and bear witness (to it), and shew unto you [3] that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;

3. That which we have seen and heard (of this Word of life) declare we to you, that ye also may have [4] fellowship with us (in the same life): and truly our fellowship is [5] with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

4. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full (i. e. that believing this eternal life, ye may rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory, 1 Pet. i. 8, 9. For which cause ye must carefully attend to another message he hath sent by us;)

5. This then (and this) is the message which we have heard of him (i. e. from God by Jesus Christ), and declare unto you, that God is light (a pure and spotless Spirit), and in him is no darkness at all; (nothing of impurity or iniquity in his commands which are all holy, Rom. vii. 12. or in his actions, as in the heathen deities, he being holy in all his works.

6. And therefore) if we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not (speak) the truth:

7. But if we walk in the light, [6] as he is in the light (endeavouring to be holy, as he is holy), we have [7] fellowship one with another, and the [8] blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all (those) sins (which might obstruct our communion with this Holy God, and our attainment of the life thus manifested to us.

8. And of this expiation we have all need, for) [9] if we say that we have no sin (to be thus cleansed from), we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us; (for in many things we offend all, James iii. 2. and therefore are required to pray daily for the remission of our sins, and have even after our regeneration need of this advocate for the propitiation of our sins, ii. 1, 2. See 1 Kings viii. 46. Eccles. vii. 21.

9. But) if we confess (these) our sins, he (who hath made this new covenant in the blood of Christ, that he will be merciful to our iniquities, Heb. viii. 8.) is faithful (to his promise), and just to forgive us our sins (upon the satisfaction made to his justice by the death of Christ), and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

10. (But) if we (continue to) say that we have not sinned (and therefore do not need this expiation through the blood of Christ), we make him a liar, (who hath declared, both in the Old and New Testament, that all have sinned, and fallen short of the glory of God, Rom. i. 23.) and his word is not in us.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. Ὃ ἮΝ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς.] This I here render, From the beginning of the gospel-dispensation; because I find that is the constant import of the phrase in this Epistle, and elsewhere, where it relates to what Christians had heard and seen, as here. In this sense is, That which ye have heard, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, used six times by our apostle in these Epistles; viz. First Epistle, ii. 7. 24. twice; iii. 11. Second Epistle, ver. 6. So, The commandment which we have received, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, First Epistle, ii. 7. Second Epistle, ver. 5. doth necessarily import its being Christ's new commandment of love.

So, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς αὐτόπται, are those who from the beginning of Christ's preaching were witnesses of what he said and did, Luke i. 2. And in this sense Christ saith to his disciples, Ye have been with me, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, John xv. 27.

[2] Ὃ ἑωράκαμεν, Which we have seen.] That is, in the Scripture-phrase, said to be seen and looked upon, which is as truly known and discerned by us, as if we had seen it. So the Jews are said to do the things which they have seen with their Father, John viii. 38. and to have seen the end of the Lord's dealing with Job, James v. 11. So we are said to see God, or not to see him, 1 John iii. 6. Third Epistle, ver. 11. To see the life here, ver. 2. So also ψηλαφᾶν, when applied to spiritual things, is not to touch with the hand, but to apprehend with the mind, Acts xvii. 27. I confess, all these things are more properly true of the Word made flesh; of whom the apostles declared what they had heard from him, and seen of him, who saw his glory, John i. 14. and what one of them had touched. But then the Λόγος agreeing only to the Divine nature, a metaphorical sense must be allowed, in seeing and handling that.

[3] Ver. 2. Τὴν ζωὴν τὴν αἰώνιον, ἥτις ἦν πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, That eternal life which was with the Father.] Thus of our eternal life, the apostle saith, it is hid with Christ in God, Colos. iii. 3. and of the evangelical dispensation, that before the revelation of it by Christ and his apostles, it was a mystery hid in God, Eph. iii. 9. But this also may be applied to the Divine Λόγος, styled by this apostle, Life eternal, v. 20. who was in the bosom of the Father, and was manifested to us, John i. 18. Yet two things seem to favour the first interpretation.

First, That the phrase here used, being not ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν, He subsisted in the beginning of all things; but only, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἦν, he was from the beginning: this phrase excludes not his creation, as the other seems to do; and, as I have observed, it chiefly is applied, by this apostle, to the beginning of the gospel-dispensation.

Secondly, That though ὁ λόγος and ζωὴ, absolutely put, are spoken of Christ, yet ὁ λόγος τῆς ζωῆς, is never used concerning the person of Christ, but is expressly used of that word by which eternal life is manifested; as when we are bid to hold fast, λόγον ζωῆς, the word of life, Phil. ii. 16. and when the apostles are bid to teach, τὰ ῥήματα τῆς ζωῆς, the words of this life, Acts v. 20. (See Acts xiii. 16.)

[4] Ver. 3. Κοινωνίαν μεθ' ἡμῶν, Fellowship with us.] It doth not follow hence, as Esthius imagines, that no man can have fellowship with God, who hath not fellowship with the church (though that be doubtless true of fellowship with the invisible church, united to Christ by the Spirit, and so made a habitation of God through the Spirit, and of fellowship in doctrine, and communion with the church of the apostles): for, as like precious faith with us is only such faith as we have, 2 Pet. ii. 1. so here, Fellowship with us, is only such fellowship as we have.

[5] Μετὰ τοῦ Πατρὸς, With the Father.] We being heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ, Rom. viii. 17. and being united to, and having communion with, the Father and the Son, by the Spirit of both dwelling in us, John xiv. 21. 23. Eph. ii. 21, 22. Rom. viii. 9. 11. and he being to us the earnest of this life, 2 Cor. i. 22. v. 5. Eph. i. 13, 14. who seals us up to the day of redemption, Eph. iv. 30.

[6] Ver. 7. Ὡς αὐτός ἐστιν ἐν τῷ φωτὶ, As he is in the light.] That this metaphor of light relates not to the knowledge or the felicity, but to the purity of the Divine nature, appears, (1.) from the injunction, to walk in the light, as he is in the light; for we are not any where bid to resemble God in knowledge or in happiness, but we are commanded to be holy as he is holy. (2.) From the darkness set in opposition to it; which doth not refer so much to the ignorance of men, as to the vices they practised in a state of ignorance. (See note on Rom. xiii. 12.)

[7] Κοινωνίαν ἔχομεν μετ' ἀλλήλων, We have communion with one another.] Some manuscripts read, μετ' αὐτοῦ, with him; which either is the true reading, or gives the true sense of the other reading: i. e. We have communion with God, and he with us; as is evident from ver. 6. Moreover, the apostle had said nothing before of our communion with one another, but only, of our fellowship with God, ver. 6. with the Father and the Son, ver. 3. which makes it reasonable to refer the words to that communion, of which the apostle so often speaketh in this Epistle. (See ii. 5, 6. 24. iii. 24. iv. 13.) Notwithstanding, it is true, that then we have communion with one another, by virtue of that Holy Spirit which enlightens us, and enables us to walk in the light.

[8] Τὸ αἷμα Χριστοῦ, The blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin.] This cannot well relate to that effect of the blood of Christ, which we call justification by faith in his blood, or the remission of our past sins, by virtue of our faith in Christ dying for us; for that follows immediately upon our faith, and cannot require that a habit of purity, or of walking in the light, should precede it: it therefore seemeth to refer to those sinful infirmities and defects, which, in this state of imperfection, cleave to our best actions, and even good men are still subject to, and which do not deprive us of the Divine favour, or of an entrance into that new Jerusalem, into which nothing enters that is polluted or unclean; because in this new covenant of grace, established in the death of Christ, his blood doth cleanse all faithful and sincere Christians from the guilt of them.

The blood of Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.] Here note, that these words confute the quakers, who hold that those who are in the light, are guilty of no sin: for were this so, they could be cleansed from none by the blood of Jesus; see the text defended, Examen Millii.

[9] Ver. 8—10.] The question is, of whom the apostle speaketh here, whether of sincere Christians, after their conversion to the Christian faith, or only of them considered before they entered on that state. That St. John here speaks only of the latter, is argued from these considerations:

1. That the apostle doth plainly teach the contrary to the first exposition, by saying, He that is born of God, sinneth not, iii. 9. v. 18. But to this I shall return an answer in the comment on those places.

2. That these words run in the preterperfect tense, If we say, οὐχ ἡμαρτήκαμεν, we have not sinned; whereas some single acts of lesser sins they were then still subject to, to whom he speaks.

Ans. True; and therefore he adviseth them to confess them, that they might obtain forgiveness of them: now confessing of them must be after they have been committed.

3. Because this phrase, ἁμαρτίαν ἔχειν, to have sin, is still used of such sins as will condemn us at the last, John ix. 41. xv. 22. 24. xix. 11.

Ans. The text cited from xix. 11. is impertinent; the other two may be taken absolutely, as to the matter spoken of: i. e. they had been guilty of no sin of infidelity, if Christ had not come to them, or if he had not proved his mission, (xv. 22. 24.) or if he had wanted means to discern the truth; (ix. 41.) nor would their sin of infidelity have been condemning, had they confessed it, and forsaken it.

Since then the apostle was speaking (ver. 7.) of them who walked in the light, who had communion with God, and who were cleansed from the guilt of sin; and (ver. 8.) goes on to add, If we say we have no sin; it seems more probable, that he speaks there at least of the same persons.

Note also, that some of the Jews* professed to be ἀναμάρτητοι πρὸς Θεὸν, καὶ μηδεμιᾶς μετασχόντες, supply ἁμαρτίας, free from all sins and offences against God; and of such may the last verse be interpreted. They varying in this, from the doctrine of other Jews: for Maimonides† truly saith, Nullus homo dari potest qui non peccet, vel ignoranter in dogmate et sententia aliqua amplectenda, aut qualitate eligenda quæ non eligenda est, vel ob iræ aliorumque effectuum vehementiam et prædominationem.

CHAP. II.

1. MY little children, these things (concerning the necessity of walking in the light, and putting off the deeds of darkness,) write I unto you, that ye sin not (i. e. that ye live not in any course of sin). And [1] if any man (through the infirmity of the flesh be overtaken with a) sin, we (Christians) have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, (the Just One, in whom was no sin, 1 Pet. iii. 18.)

2. And [2] he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but [3] also for the sins of the whole world.

3. [4] And hereby (Gr. in this) we do know that we know (Gr. have known) him (truly and acceptably), if we keep his commandments.

4. He that saith, I (have) know-(n) him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, (he is a false pretender to the knowledge of God; for such persons do in words profess to know God, but in works they deny him, being disobedient, Tit. i. 16. They likewise know not Jesus Christ according to the truth, iv. 21.)

5. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the [5] love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

6. [6] He that saith he abideth in him (in Christ by the Spirit) ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

7. Brethren, I write [7] no new commandment unto you (when I thus call upon you to walk in the light, as he is in the light, or to walk as Christ walked), but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning (of Christ's preaching, John iii. 21. viii. 12. xii. 35. see note on i. 1.) the old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8. [8] Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him (who is the author of it; for no such light ever came into the world before, and no such love was manifested to the world before,) and in you, (who before were darkness, but are now light in the Lord, Eph. v. 8. children of the light and of the day, 1 Thess. v. 5. and to whom, not long ago, the light appeared, 2 Cor. iv. 6. and who are taught of God to love one another, 1 Thess. iv. 9.) because (by your late receiving the gospel) the (former) darkness (ye were in) is past, and the true light now shineth (in and upon you: wherefore the night of ignorance and darkness being far spent, and the day being nigh at hand, and shining more and more upon you, ye are obliged to put off the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light, Rom. xiii. 12.—Or thus; Again (being now to speak to you of Christian love), a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him (for thus he speaks, A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you, John xiii. 34.) and in you: because (it shews) the darkness (you were in whilst Jews, bearing affection only to them of your own nation and religion) is past, and the true light (of the gospel) now shineth (upon you).

9. He that saith he is in the light (that he lives under the influences of the light of the gospel, and walks accordingly to it), and (yet) hateth his brother (wishing ill to him, and, from that disaffection doing ill offices to him), is (whatsoever he professes to the contrary) in darkness even until now. (But)

10. He that loveth his brother (as Christ loved us, being willing to do him all kind offices which he is able, from love to God, and as a fellow-member of Christ's body,) abideth in the light, and there is [9] no occasion of stumbling (Gr. no scandal) in him:

11. But he that hateth his brother [10] is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither (the way leads in which) he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes. (John xii. 35.)

12. [11] I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15. Love not the world, (i. e. neither the men of the world, who will not own you, but hate and persecute you, iii. 1. 13. and who live in wickedness, v. 19. love them not, so as to be conformed to their manners, Rom. xii. 2.) neither the things that are in the world, (the pleasures, honours, or enjoyments of it, so as to cleave to them, Matt. vi. 24. or to be unwilling to part with them for Christ's sake, and to secure the favour of God, Matt. xix. 28.) If any man (thus) loveth the world the love of the Father is not in him (for seeing God is to be loved above all, he loves him not at all truly, who cleaves to any other thing in opposition to him, or hazards his favour to secure it).

16. For all that is in (vogue or esteem with the men of) the world, the lust of the flesh (all voluptuous enjoyments which tend to sensuality and intemperance, and making provision for the flesh), and the lust of the eyes (the desire of gold, silver, stately houses, rich furniture, fair gardens, which tend to gratify the eye), and the pride of life (the desire of places of dignity, high titles, all the honour, glory, and splendour of the world, which tends to gratify our pride), is not of the Father (they are not desires excited by him, nor is it according to his will, that we should set our hearts upon them), but is (the desire) of (the men of) the world (whose chief concern is to gratify these sensual appetites).

* Jos. de Bello Jud. lib. vii. p. 990. n.

17. And the world passeth away, and the (things which minister to the) lusts thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

18. Little children, it is the last time (or hour of the Jewish economy): and as ye have heard that [12] antichrist shall (shortly) come, (so) even now are there many antichrists; (i. e. opposers of Christ, and deniers of him to be the Christ, ver. 22.) whereby we (may) know that it is the last time.

19. [13] They went out from us, (Christians of Judea, Acts xv. 1. and from us the apostles, Acts xv. 24.) but they were not of us: (but were false brethren, Gal. ii. 4. and false apostles, 2 Cor. xi. 13.) for if they had been of us, (conspiring with us the apostles and true churches of Christ, in the doctrine and truth of the gospel,) they would no doubt have (Gr. μεμενήκεισαν ἂν, they might have still) continued with us (preaching that doctrine which we teach): but (they went out from us), that they might be made manifest [14] that they were not all (Gr. that they all were not) of us.

20. But ye have an unction [15] from the Holy One, [16] and ye know all things (ye to whom I write; which shews, he speaks not of the Christians of all ages in general, but of them in particular).

21. I have not written to you because ye know not the truth (i. e. to instruct you as persons ignorant of it), but because ye know it, and that no lie (uttered by these antichrists and false prophets) is of (or hath any communion with) the truth (of the gospel).

22. Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? (i. e. who so emphatically deserves that title, seeing) he is antichrist (by way of eminency), [17] who denieth the Father and the Son.

23. (And let not the Jewish antichrists pretend, this belongs not to them who know the Father; for) whosoever denieth the Son (of God), the same hath not (the true knowledge of) the Father.

24. Let that (doctrine) therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning (preached to you: for) if that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain (and bring forth its due fruits) in you, ye shall continue in the Son, and in the Father, (united to them by the Spirit, who also will instruct you in the saving knowledge of them both, John xiv. 23. vi. 56.)

25. [18] And this is the promise which he hath promised us (who thus remain in him), even eternal life.

26. These things have I written concerning them that deceive you (i. e. who endeavour so to do).

27. [19] But (this not out of absolute necessity, as if through ignorance ye could not otherwise be preserved from their seductions, ver. 2. for) the anointing which ye have received of him (who is your head), abideth in (or among) you, and (so) ye need not that any man (should) teach you: but as the same anointing (i. e. spirit of wisdom and knowledge) teacheth you all things (necessary), and (for it) is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.

28. And now (καὶ νῦν, now therefore), little children, abide in him (in the profession and practice of what he hath taught you); that when he shall appear, we may have confidence (of the life promised to them that do so, ver. 25.) and (may) not be ashamed before him (Gr. may not be put to shame by him, or, go ashamed from him,) at his coming (to judgment, iv. 17. as being judged by him unworthy of this life; as we shall not be, if we be found doing righteousness: for,)

29. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him; (as being born again of the Spirit derived from him, and so become a son of God, and an heir of life, Rom. viii. 14. 17. and by this Spirit sealed up unto the day of redemption, Eph. iv. 30.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐᾶν τις ἁμάρτῃ, And if any man sin.] Though this is not to be interpreted of sins of infirmity only; yet since the apostle is here speaking of his little children, whose past sins were already forgiven them, for his name's sake, (ver. 12. 16.) and the apostle would not encourage them in wilful or habitual sins, I think, as it relates to them, it chiefly is to be referred to those sins of ignorance, weakness, and infirmity, which will be pardoned by the tenor of the new covenant, through Christ's intercession.

[2] Ver. 2. Ἱλασμός ἐστι περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, He is the propitiation for our sins.] In the Old Testament, the sin-offering which made atonement for a trespass, that it might be forgiven, is called, κρίος ἱλασμοῦ, the ram of atonement, Lev. vi. 6, 7. Numb. v. 8. and that which in the law is φέρειν, or προσάγειν τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, to bring an offering for sin, is in Ezekiel, προσφέρειν ἱλασμὸν, to bring an atonement, or propitiation. (Ezek. xliv. 27.) When therefore it is said here of Jesus Christ, that he is ἱλασμὸς, the propitiation for our sins; and, iv. 10. that God sent him into the world, to be, ἱλασμὸν, the propitiation for our sins; have we not reason to conclude, he was so our propitiation, as were all the sin-offerings of the Jews for them, viz. by suffering in our stead, to make atonement for our sins, and so to render God propitious to us, in the forgiveness of them? Moreover, why is he styled Jesus Christ the Just, or Righteous, who made propitiation for our sins, if he intended not to intimate, that the just suffered in stead of the unjust, to make an atonement for their sins? To this Crellius replies, that δίκαιος should be rendered, not the just, but the faithful.

Ans. This is to say, It must here signify, not what it ordinarily and truly signifies, but what it both improperly and rarely signifies; and when it is ascribed to Christ, as here it is, it never signifies: for it is ascribed to him elsewhere ten times in the New Testament, Matt. xxvii. 24. Luke xxiii. 47. Acts iii. 14. vii. 52. xxii. 14. 2 Tim. iv. 8. 1 Pet. iii. 18. Rev. xvi. 5. and in those places it doth always signify that just or righteous person; yea, in this very chapter, and the next, it is twice spoken of him, first in these words, ver. 29. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him; and, iii. 7. He that doeth righteousness, is righteous, even as he is righteous: where it is evident, that it retains its proper sense. Why therefore, in the place contested, should it import that which, when it is applied to Christ, it never signifies?

Obj. And whereas Crellius objects, That the apostle speaks of Christ here, as of our advocate in heaven, where he doth not satisfy God, or suffer any punishment on our account:

Ans. I answer, That seeing Christ there intercedes, by virtue of his blood shed to satisfy for our offences, and of the death he suffered as the punishment of our iniquities: the parallel runs clearly thus; That as the sacrifices of the Old Testament were slain, and the blood shed, before it was brought to the mercy-seat, and yet the high-priest made atonement with it, when, at his entrance into the holy place, he offered up that blood to God, in his peculiar presence; so, though our Lord was slain, and shed his blood on earth, yet may he make atonement in the presence of God with it, by virtue of the sufferings he endured when his blood was shed.

[3] Περὶ ὅλου τοῦ κόσμου, For the sins of the whole world.] i. e. Of all men in general. For when he saith, He is the propitiation for our sins, sure he intends this comfort to all them to whom he speaks, and means not, that Christ was the propitiation for some of their sins only; for this would have left them all in doubt, whether this advocate, and this propitiation, did belong to them, but would have comforted none of them. When then he adds, He is the propitiation, not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world, he in like manner must extend this phrase to all men in the world.

Again, when he saith, He is the propitiation for our sins, he doth not mean, that he was so sufficiently, but not intentionally: for what comfort would that afford them, that his death was sufficient to procure the pardon of their sins, had God designed it for that end, unless they also knew that he intended it for their propitiation? When therefore he proceeds to say, And not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world, he must mean also, that he was the propitiation for their sins, not only sufficiently, but also in his gracious intention. And indeed, otherwise, it might as properly have been said of the fallen angels, or the whole host of devils, he is the propitiation for their sins, as for the sins of those who are not elected; seeing, had God designed it for that end, Christ's death, by reason of its intrinsic value, might have been sufficient to procure atonement for the sins of fallen angels. Lastly, The import of these words cannot be only this, He died, or is the propitiation, for the sins of the elect throughout the world. For (1.) the whole world, in Scripture, never signifies the elect only, in opposition to the wicked in the whole world; but in this very Epistle, and in these words, We know that we are of God, and that the whole world lies in wickedness, (v. 19.) plainly signifies, the wicked of the world, in opposition to the faithful Christians. (2.) Would it not be strange, and alien from the mind of Scripture, to say, The whole world is elected to salvation; the whole world shall be justified by Christ, and sanctified by his Spirit dwelling in them, and obtain a happy resurrection? and yet all this must be true of the whole world of the elect. Why therefore are none of these things equally affirmed of the whole world, as well as that Christ died, and is the propitiation, for the sins of the whole world, if they be words of equal latitude and truth? These arguments are as strong against the exposition of others, who say, The apostle means, not only for the sins of the Jews, but also of the gentiles.

If we sin we have an advocate with the Father, and he is the propitiation for our sins.] Moreover, this being spoken by this apostle to his little children, whose past sins were already forgiven, (ver. 12.) must relate to their future sins, to which they might be afterward obnoxious, and therefore must suppose them still subject to sins of infirmity.

[4] Ver. 3.] It is a rule in divinity, that verba notitiæ denotant affectum, adde et effectum: i. e. "That when the knowledge of God, or Christ, is put absolutely, it signifies a knowledge which is fruitful in love; and obedience, as the effect of that love and knowledge." Whence they who disobey him are still, in Scripture, said not to know God, 1 Sam. ii. 12. Hos. v. 14. Jer. ii. 8. ix. 3. Tit. i. 16. and here, ver. 4. and they that do what is acceptable and delightful to him, are said to know him, Jer. xxii. 15, 16. xxiv. 7. xxxi. 33, 34. Hos. ii. 19, 20. John x. 4. Eph. iii. 19.

Moreover, it is observable, that many of the Jews had an apprehension, that their knowledge and belief of the true God would be sufficient for their justification and acceptance with him: whence they are represented, as boasting in God, and in the knowledge of his will, Rom. ii. 17, 18. and expecting justification on this account, that they believed there was one God, James ii. 19. and this might cause the apostle to be so diligent in teaching them, That the true knowledge of God consisted in keeping his commandments.

[5] Ver. 5. Ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, The love of God perfected.] The love of God, here, may signify either God's love to us; as when it is said, Who shall separate us from the love of God which is (shewed to us) in Christ Jesus? Rom. viii. 39. and, that the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, through the Spirit that he hath given us, Rom. v. 5. (see Jude 21.) and then this love is perfected in us, by that assurance the Holy Spirit giveth of it, and that humble confidence we have of it, because we keep his commandments; (iii. 21, 22.) so the apostle seems to interpret this perfection in love, iv. 16—18. or, secondly, this love may signify, our love to God and Christ; as when Christ upbraids the pharisees with the want of the love of God, (Luke xi. 42.) and saith to the Jews, I know that ye have not the love of God in you; (John v. 42.) and when Christ saith, He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father; (John xiv. 21.) and, (ver. 23.) If any man love me, he will keep my word: and my Father will love him, and we will come to him, and take up our abode with him; and this love is perfected in us, by keeping his commandments; because that shews, we are fully instructed in the nature of that love, which is in one sense of perfection: (see note on 1 Cor. ii. 6.) and it engages us to the sincere performance of our whole duty to God, which is another sense of the word perfection: and hereby we know that we are in him, even by his Spirit, by which God abideth in us, (iii. 24.) and who sheds abroad the sense of the Divine love in our hearts.

Note also, that hence we may pass a certain estimate of necessary and fundamental doctrines; for if they be such as are necessary to the love of God to us, or to that love of ours to him, which consists in keeping his commandments, they are doctrines truly necessary to salvation: if not, they cannot be so; because we may truly love God, and abide in his love, without the knowledge of them.

[6] Ver. 6.] For seeing we abide in God the Father and the Son, only by the communion of the Spirit, (iii. 24. iv. 13.) whence he that is in Christ, is one Spirit with him, (1 Cor. vi. 17.) and he that hath not the Spirit of Christ, is none of his, (Rom. viii. 9.) we that are animated with the same Spirit that was in Christ, as we are enabled, so also are we thereby engaged to walk after his example, or to walk in the light as he is in the light, (i. 7.)

[7] Ver. 7. Οὐκ ἐντολὴν καινὴν, No new commandment.] Most interpreters conceive, this relates to the commandment of Christian love, that being the commandment which they are said to have heard from the beginning, (iii. 11.) and said to be, on that account, no new commandment, (Eph. ii. 5.) and yet being styled by Christ, a new commandment. (John xiii. 34.) Nor are the arguments of Episcopius against this exposition cogent: for whereas,

Obj. 1. He objects, That these words seem to be spoken, to remove the thought of some, that he was propounding a new doctrine which they had not learned; whereas no man who was acquainted with the law of Moses, or even with that of nature, could think the law of charity was new:

Ans. I answer, It is not the law of charity in general, which our Lord and his apostles style a new commandment; but that, of loving one another, as he had loved us. (John xiii. 34, 35.) And this might justly be looked on as a new commandment; it being a commandment of laying down our lives for the brethren, (iii. 16.) and therefore a commandment not contained in the law of nature, nor in that of Moses.

Obj. 2. Whereas he adds, That these words, I write unto you, seem to respect not any thing that was to follow, but which was said before; and to contain this sense, When I write this to you, I write nothing new:

Ans. I answer, That it may be so; for having told us, that he that saith he abideth in Christ, ought also to walk as he walked; he may well be conceived to have an especial eye to the great example of love Christ shewed to mankind, both in his life and death. Yet his exposition given in the paraphrase seems also very probable, by reason of the following words, Because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth; and therefore I shall have respect to both.

[8] Ver. 8.] The ceremonials of the law are sometimes called a shadow, but never darkness; and though the Alexandrian manuscripts read σκιὰ, a shadow, yet, because all other copies read σκοτία, darkness, and the following words, ver. 9. 11. shew that this is the true reading, and because it is so easy, in short writing, to mistake σκοτία for σκιὰ, the interpretation of these words, which depends upon that reading, cannot be relied on.

[9] Ver. 10. Σκάνδαλον ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν, i. e. There is nothing at which he will fall, or stumble.] So Psal. cxix. 156. Great peace have they that love thy law, καὶ οὐκ ἐστὶν αὐτοῖς σκάνδαλον, and they have no stumbling-block. The labour of love they must undergo; the evils they may be exposed to, will not hinder them from doing the duty they owe to God, and to their brother, for his sake; but they go on securely and cheerfully in it; for perfect love casts out fear, (iv. 18.)

[10] Ver. 11. Ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ ἐστὶ, Is in darkness.] i. e. He lives in great ignorance of his duty, and of the way to life, as not guiding his actions by that light of the gospel which hath appeared unto him.

[11] Ver. 12—14.] Note, that these words may either relate to the foregoing; and then they are to be interpreted, as motives to walk in the light, and as Christ walked, and in particular to walk in Christian love, thus; I have written to you, children, touching this love, and walking in the light, and after Christ's example, because your sins have been forgiven, for his name's sake; and so, in gratitude to him who hath procured the pardon of them, you ought to walk as he walked, and to love the brethren: ye also have known the Father, and had experience of his love to you, and therefore stand obliged to imitate his love to you, and to walk in the light, that you may still have fellowship with him.

I have written to you, fathers, because ye have known him who was from the beginning, i. e. Christ Jesus, and so know how to walk by his example, and to imitate his obedience to the Father, and his love to mankind.

I have written to you, young men, because ye are strong, by virtue of the word of God abiding in you; and by the sword of the Spirit, and shield of faith, have been enabled successfully to combat and overcome that wicked one, who tempts you to the deeds of darkness, and to hatred of the brethren, (iii. 10.)

If they relate to the words following, they must be an exhortation to little children, to take off their affections from the world, and place them upon God and Christ, on the account of the love and mercy shewed to them by God the Father through Christ. To the fathers so to do, because they have known Christ, how dead he was to the world, and how he despised the pleasures, honours, and enjoyments of it. To the young men so to do, because they had overcome the wicked one, all whose temptations arise from some allurements or affrightments of the world. Or, lastly, the words may be extended to all he saith to them in this whole Epistle; and then both expositions may take place.

[12] Ver. 18. Ὁ ἀντίχριστος, Antichrist cometh:] To wit, then, in the last hour. And this being represented, as the character by which they might know that the last hour was now come, it is manifest, that the last hour cannot signify the end of the world, or include the times of the last judgment; but must be restrained to the last times of the Jewish state, which only were then instant, or at hand.

Secondly, The ὁ ἀντίχριστος, antichrist then in being, if it refer to any nation, must be the nation of the unbelieving Jews, persecuting and opposing Christianity with their whole might, and denying Jesus to be the Christ, or promised Messiah; and then the many antichrists here mentioned may be the false prophets, and deceitful workers, who transformed themselves into the apostles of Christ, (2 Cor. xi. 13—15.) who preached Christ not sincerely, but out of contention, (Phil. i. 15.) who as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so also did resist the truth, (2 Tim. iii. 8.) who were men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth. (1 Tim. vi. 5.)

out from Judea, taught the brethren, That except they were circumcised after the manner of Moses, they could not be saved: (Acts xv. 1.) and from the apostles; for so they speak, We have heard, that τίνες ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξελθόντες, some going out from us, have troubled you with words perverting your souls, saying, That ye ought to be circumcised, and to keep the law, (ver. 24.) The persons who taught the doctrines are styled ψευδάδελφοι, false brethren, Gal. ii. 4. ψευδαπόστολοι, false apostles, deceitful workers, ministers of Satan, 2 Cor. xi. 13. 15. dogs, evil workers, the concision, Phil. iii. 2. their doctrine tended to the subversion of souls, Acts xv. 24. to the corrupting and turning the minds of men from the simplicity of Christ, 2 Cor. xi. 3. to hinder the truth of the gospel from continuing with them, Gal. ii. 5. to make Christ die in vain, ver. 21. to cause Christians to fall from grace, so that Christ should profit them nothing, Gal. v. 2. 4. So that they were false prophets, false apostles, and antichrists, in the worst of senses; and by going out from the apostles and churches of Judea, to preach this destructive doctrine to the gentiles, which both the whole church of Judea, and the apostles assembled for that purpose, flatly disowned and censured; it sufficiently appeared that all the preachers of these doctrines, so opposite to Christianity, and destructive of it, were not of them. These therefore, doubtless, were some of those many antichrists which the apostle speaks of here, as writing to the Jews; and they also divided, and separated themselves from the church, and became heretics under the name of Cerinthians, Nazarenes, and Ebionites. Cerinthus * spread his heresy in Asia, the province of St. John, saith Theodoret, and was † contemporary with the apostles: whence the church ‡ desired him to write against Cerinthus and the Ebionites: and St. John § left the bath, because Cerinthus the enemy of truth was in it. Moreover, these words, they were not of us, cannot be interpreted of the elect, but of the church in general; for, from them they went out, and with them might have remained; not from the elect, who are not visible, nor could they have remained with the church of the elect, who were never of them. Secondly, Their going out from them for a season, was no certain argument they were not of the elect; since it is confessed, they may fall totally, though not finally.

[14] Ὅτι οὐκ εἰσὶ πάντες, That they all were not of us.] So ver. 21. Πᾶν ψεῦδος οὐκ, No lie is of the truth: Οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σὰρξ, No flesh shall be saved, Matt. xxiv. 22. Οὐ δικαιωθήσεται πᾶσα σὰρξ, No flesh shall be justified, Rom. iii. 20. (See Gen. iv. 15. Psal. cxliii. 2. Luke i. 37. Hab. ii. 9.)

[15] Ver. 20. Ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἁγίου, From the Holy One].] i. e. From Jesus Christ, emphatically so called, Acts iii. 14. Apoc. iii. 7. But then that unction is the Holy Spirit, which he hath given to them that believe: for he being anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, (Psal. xlv. 7.) anointed by God with the Holy Ghost, (Acts x. 38.) this grace is given to Christians, according to the measure of the gift of Christ, (Eph. iv. 7.) and we all beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same likeness, as by the Spirit of the Lord. (2 Cor. iii. 18. see the note there.)

[16] Καὶ οἴδατε πάντα, And ye know all things,] Belonging to the saving truths of the gospel, he being promised to teach them all things, (John xiv. 26.) and to lead them into all truth: (John xvi. 13.) so Œcumenius; * You have received in baptism the unction of the Holy Spirit, who leads you into all truth.

[17] Ver. 22. Ἀρνούμενος τὸν Πατέρα, That denieth the Father, or, Hath not the Father.] To deny the Father, here, is not, to deny him to be the true God, as the heathens did; but, (1.) to deny the truth of his testimony: for, He that believeth not in the testimony which God hath given to his Son, hath made him a liar; (v. 10.) whereas he that receives his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true. (John iii. 33.) (2.) To deny the doctrine of the Father, or that doctrine which proceedeth from him; for, He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God. (John iii. 34.) Whence it is evident, that he who denieth the Son, cannot thus retain the true knowledge of the Father, because no man hath seen God at any time; the only-begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him. (John i. 18.) He only hath done it; for no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him. (Matt. xi. 27.) By him only can we come acceptably to the Father, so as to have life; for, he is the way, the truth, and the life: (John xiv. 6.) and by him only are we taught how to worship the Father in spirit and in truth. (John iv. 23, 24.) Hence Christ so often tells the Jews, they therefore wanted the true knowledge of the Father, because they knew not him, saying, Ye neither knew me, nor my Father; if ye had known me, ye should have known the Father also: (John viii. 19. xiv. 7.) and these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me. (John xvi. 3.)

Ver. 23.] See Examen Millii.

[18] Ver. 25.] For the fruit of the Spirit is life, (Rom. viii. 6. 11. 13. 16, 17. Gal. vi. 8.) and he is given as the earnest of our future inheritance, to seal us up to the day of redemption: (2 Cor. i. 22. v. 5. Eph. i. 13, 14. iv. 30.) and this life he hath often promised to us, John v. 25, 26. 29. vi. 27. 29. 33. 39, 40. 47. 50, 51. 54. 57, 58.

[19] Ver. 27. Καὶ ὑμεῖς, "vos quod attinet," and as for you.] So Isa. lix. 21. And I, i. e. as for me, this is my covenant, lxi. 18. vaani, κἀγὼ, as for me. (See 1 Chron. xxviii. 2.)

The quakers and other sectaries hence argue against the necessity of the ministerial function, or any teachers of the word, it being here said, You need not that any teach you, &c. And others say, This seems to make all Scripture, and all that the apostle writ to them, needless. But for answer to this objection, I say,

1. That it must be granted, that in those times of the effusion of the Spirit, and his miraculous gifts upon believers, this unction was promised to teach them all things necessary, who had then no other rule of knowing what was so, but by the teaching of the apostles and prophets then among them, acted by this Spirit, and teaching in their assemblies, and doing other public offices by this afflatus, and by the spirit of wisdom and instruction then imparted to them; and hereby they were enabled to distinguish betwixt pretenders to the Spirit, and those who were really acted by him, (see note on iv. 1—3.) and to know they dwelt in Christ, because he had thus given them of his Spirit; (John iii. 24. iv. 13.) which things do certainly imply, that they who then had the Spirit, could certainly know they had it, and make an argument of it to try the doctrines and spirits of others, and much more in themselves; but now these sensible indications and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, are long since ceased, and therefore now they are to be directed by those writings which were indited for their perpetual use, by men assisted with that Spirit, who led them into all truth: and surely, if, in those times, when the gifts of the Spirit were so generally vouchsafed, they were yet taught by apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and doctors, assisted by the Spirit for that work; it is reasonable to believe that, now these gifts are ceased, believers should yet be instructed by pastors and doctors, assisted by the Scriptures indited by these spiritual men. And therefore,

Secondly, It is observable, that the apostle doth not here absolutely say, they need not any one should teach them, but only that they need not any one should teach them but as this unction taught them. Now the apostles having this unction in the highest measure, these words cannot exclude their teachings, or render them unnecessary, but rather must confirm them as a standing rule to all posterity. Till then these sectaries can shew that they have still such an immediate and extraordinary afflatus of the Holy Spirit, as was then vouchsafed to the primitive Christians, they cannot hence conclude the outward ministry of the word, by pastors and doctors set apart for that work, to be unnecessary.

CHAP. III.

1. BEHOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called [1] the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not (i. e. doth not acknowledge and affect us Christians), because it knew him not. (The heathens being wholly ignorant of the true God, and the Jews not knowing him according to his will, John viii. 55. xv. 21. xvi. 3. and as he had discovered himself to them by his Son, 1 John ii. 23. And this may comfort you against the persecutions of the world, that it is their want of that saving knowledge of the true God, which ministers so great advantage to you, which causes them to disaffect you.)

2. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not appear what we shall be (made farther partakers of, as the complete import of that title): but (this) we know, that, [2] when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

3. And every man that hath this hope in him (of seeing him in glory), doth purify himself, even [3] as he is pure, (in whom was no sin, ver. 5.)

4. [4] Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.

5. And ye know that he (i. e. Christ, ver. 8.) was manifested to take away our sins, (not only by suffering to remove the guilt of our past sins; but also to purify us from the power and dominion of it, that henceforth we might not serve sin, Rom. vi. 6. that ἁμαρτίας ἀπογενόμενοι, being freed from sin, we might live unto righteousness, 1 Pet. ii. 24.) and in him is no sin (and so our likeness to him must consist in ceasing from it).

6. Whosoever (therefore) abideth in him sinneth not: [5] whosoever (thus) sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him (as the truth is in Jesus, Eph. iv. 21.)

7. Little children, let no man deceive you (with pretensions, that faith without works of righteousness will make you righteous before God; for only) he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he (i. e. Christ) is righteous (by doing the will of his Father, John xv. 10.)

8. [6] He that committeth sin is of the devil: for the devil (thus) sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested (to the world), that he might destroy the works of the devil.

9. Whosoever is born [7] of God doth not commit sin; for his seed (the word of God, Matt. xiii. 1 Pet. i. 23.) remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

10. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever [8] doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither (is) he (so) that loveth not his brother (and so both these children are of the devil).

11. For this is the message which ye have heard from the beginning (or, from the first preaching of the gospel), that we should love one another, (from a pure heart fervently, 1 Pet. i. 23. and as Christ hath loved us, John xv. 12.

12. And if we be not the children of the devil, but of God, we shall) not (be) as Cain, who was [9] of that wicked one, and (therefore) slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? (viz.) Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous, (as God himself testifieth by respecting the offering, not of Cain, but of Abel; and this begat in him that hatred which concluded in his brother's death.

13. And) marvel not, my brethren, if (in like manner) the world (the seed of Cain, who are also of that wicked one, John viii. 44. 1 John v. 19.) hate you (i. e. if they persecute and kill the just, as being condemners of their actions, and alien from their ways and manners, in affection, aim, desires, and therefore hated by them, John xv. 19. for whatsoever they may do to destroy this life).

14. We know that we have passed from death to life (i. e. that we have obtained a right to escape death eternal, and enjoy everlasting life, John v. 24.) because we love the brethren (in deed and truth, ver. 18. for this is a sign that we are translated from darkness to light, ii. 10. and so are the children of the light; yea, that we are born of God, iv. 7. and therefore are children and heirs of God, Rom. viii. 17.) He that loveth not his brother, abideth in (the state, and under the sentence of) death, (he is still in that darkness of sin and ignorance, ii. 11. which will end in eternal death.

15. For) whosoever hateth his brother is (in the disposition of his heart, and the construction of God's law,) a murderer, (Matt. v. 21, 22.) and ye know that no murderer (being so great and wilful a violater of the moral law) hath eternal life abiding in him; (he therefore must be obnoxious to death eternal, till with holy David, by a deep and long repentance, he is delivered from blood-guiltiness; as in the case of David, 2 Sam. xii. 13.)

16. Hereby perceive we the love of God (to us), because he (who was his beloved Son, at his command, John x. 18.) laid down his life for us (i. e. for our salvation, and the propitiation of our sins); and we (also) ought (in imitation of this example) to lay down our lives (i. e. expose them to the death) for (the salvation of) the brethren (going on in the prosecution of our duty, to win them to life eternal, though with the hazard, and even the loss, of this temporal life).

17. But (if love requires us to part even with life for them, then) whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need (of some of them), and (yet) shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him (not being moved out of compassion to his indigence to give him what he hath to spare), how dwelleth the love of God in him?

18. My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue (only, James ii. 16.) but in deed and in truth (in true affection of heart, 1 Pet. i. 22. and in sincerity of action, Rom. xii. 9. by love serving one another, Gal. v. 13. not pitying only, but relieving them according to their wants, and our ability to supply them).

19. And hereby we (may) know that [10] we are of the truth, and shall [11] assure our hearts before him.

20. [12] For if our heart (the inward witness of our thoughts and actions) condemn us (of want of sincerity, and obedience to the truth of the gospel), God is greater than our heart, (both in holiness to condemn) and (in knowledge to perceive the evil of them, for he) knoweth all things.

21. (Whereas,) beloved, if our heart (after a diligent search of it, and a comparing of our actions with the law of liberty,) condemn us not (of insincerity in our obedience), then have [13] we (humble) confidence towards God (in our addresses).

22. And whatsoever we ask (according to his will, John v. 14.) we receive of him, because we keep his commandments and do those things which are pleasing in his sight.

23. And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.

24. And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him (i. e. in God), and he (God) in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by (the efficacious gifts of) [14] the Spirit which he hath given us.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 1. ΤΕ'ΚΝΑ Θεοῦ, The sons of God.] The Jews were styled the children and the sons of God, because they owned him as their God and Father, and entered into covenant to serve him, and so became a holy people to the Lord. and he had chosen them to be his people. (Deut. xiv. 1.) So we all are sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus. (Gal. iii. 26. John i. 12.) The land in which they dwelt is styled The Lord's land, Hos. ix. 3. and they, as being his first-born, (Exod. iv. 22.) have it given them for an inheritance; but we, as being in a more spiritual sense the sons of God, are heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ, as being those that shall reign with him in his heavenly kingdom. (Rom. viii. 17. see the note there.) They in that land enjoyed the majestic presence of that God who dwelt among them; and therefore, saith he, the land is mine: (Lev. xxv. 23.) we, as his sons, shall be admitted to his celestial presence, where we shall see him as he is, (ver. 2.) The enjoyment of that land was unto them a type of the heavenly Canaan, which the faithful among them were to enjoy; and therefore they are represented as strangers and sojourners with him in it: whence the apostle tells them, that there remained yet a rest for the people of God: (Heb. iv. 9.) and the patriarchs are said to have confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims upon earth, and thereby to declare, that they desired and sought a better country, that is, a heavenly; and that upon this account God called himself their God, viz. the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, because he had prepared for them a city. (Heb. xi. 13. 16.) Now because they in their own persons could not enjoy this heavenly country without a resurrection, hence the evangelist informs us, that they were the sons of God, τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, as being sons of the resurrection; the redemption of their bodies from corruption, and the ἀναβίωσις, reviviscence of that which once died and saw corruption, being the consequent of this υἱοθεσία, adoption, or sonship of God's children; hence therefore doth our Saviour firmly prove the resurrection from those words, I am the God of Abraham, &c. (Matt. xxii. 32. Luke xx. 36, 37.) And thus you see how great is the love of God in owning us as his sons; and have also a just comment on the following words.

[2] Ver. 2. Ἐὰν φανερωθῇ, When he doth appear.] Note here,

1. That as the Hebrew word ב, so the conjunction ἐὰν, signifies as well when (or, postquam, after that,) as if. So, Judg. vi. 3. ἐὰν ἔσπειραν, when Israel sowed; 1 Sam. i. 22. ἐὰν ἀπογαλακτίσω, when I have weaned him; Prov. iii. 24. ἐὰν καθῇ, ἐὰν καθεύδῃς, when thou liest down thou shalt not be afraid: so, Judg. xxi. 21. Psal. cxxxviii. 7. Prov. iv. 12. (see Nold. Partic. p. 87. 89.) so, John xii. 32. ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ, when I am lifted up; xiii. 20. ἐὰν πέμψω, when I send; xiv. 3. ἐὰν πορευθῶ, when I go away. Note,

2. That this is spoken of Christ, seems evident, (1.) from the word φανερωθῇ, which is used of Christ, ver. 5. and agrees properly to him alone; and (2.) from the phrase we shall be like him, viz. who shall change our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body, (Phil. iii. 21.) and cause us to bear the image of the Lord from heaven, by being raised with glorious and incorruptible bodies. (1 Cor. xv. 47. 49.) And from the words, we shall see him as he is, i. e. in glory; this being his prayer, that they whom God had given him, might be with him, and behold his glory. (John xvii. 24.)

[3] Ver. 3. Καθὼς ἐκεῖνος, As he is pure.] For he being manifested to take away our sins, (ver. 5.) and to destroy the works of the devil in us, (ver. 8.) they who expect to be made like to him hereafter, must be so here in purity and righteousness. But then let it be noted,

First, That this imitation doth not require our likeness to him we are to imitate, in the manner or inward principle of his actions; but only in the quality, and, as far as human frailty will permit us, in the measure of them: for instance, it is as necessary for God to be absolutely perfect in holiness and goodness, as to be God; and yet we must be holy as he is holy, and perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect. And it is generally asserted in the schools, That the obedience and perfect holiness of Christ did necessarily result from the most intimate union of the Divine and human nature, and from that grace of unction which he received without measure; whereas our holiness and obedience must be acts of choice, and so our holiness and virtue will proceed, not from an inward principle, which doth necessitate us to be good, but from the choice of our own wills; and yet we must walk as he walked, and must purify ourselves as he is pure..

Secondly, This imitation doth not require an absolute equality, or full proportion of our actions to the example set before us, this being not consistent with the frailty of our human nature. For the example here is that of the holy Jesus, in whom was no sin, and who performed perfect obedience to the whole law of God; whereas in many things we offend all, and our obedience will be still imperfect in this life. When therefore we are commanded to be holy and perfect as God is, to walk as Christ walked, and to purify ourselves as he is pure, it is sicut similitudinis, non æqualitatis; i. e. the word as binds us not to equal them in holiness and perfection, but to bear such a likeness to them in these perfections as may discover that we truly aim at being holy in all manner of conversation, and heartily endeavour to continue so, through the whole tenor of our lives.

Vain then is that objection of the Socinians, That were Christ truly God, we could not possibly expect, nor therefore would it be our duty, to imitate him; for seeing the example of God himself is made the matter of our imitation, the argument must equally conclude against the Deity of God the Father. In a word, a likeness to him as far as human frailty will permit, may be our duty, though he should be God: a perfect likeness to him who did no sin, could never be our duty, though he were but man.

[4] Ver. 4. Ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, He that committeth sin;] i. e. Who lives in the commission of it, lives in an opposition to the law of God; for he is of the devil, ver. 8. he is not born of God, ver. 9. which could not be truly said of him that is guilty of any one sin, or violation of God's holy law.

[5] Ver. 6. Whosoever sinneth, οὐχ ἑώρακεν αὐτὸν, οὐδὲ ἔγνωκεν αὐτὸν, hath not seen him, neither known him.] To know God, in the sense of this apostle, is to know him as he is revealed by Jesus Christ, and represented to the world by him. Hence Christ saith, If ye have known me, ye have known the Father also; (John xiv. 7.) and denies that the Jews knew God, because they knew not him. (John viii. 19. xv. 21. xvi. 3.) To see God, is to see his will, love, and goodness, as it is revealed by Jesus Christ; and thus saith Christ, He that hath seen me hath seen the Father: (xii. 45. xiv. 9.) because he is only known to them, to whom Christ Jesus doth reveal him. (Matt. xi. 27. Luke x. 28. John i. 18. vi. 46.) And in this sense all that the apostle saith in this Epistle of seeing and knowing God is true, viz. that he who knoweth God, as he is revealed by Jesus Christ, keepeth his commandments, ii. 3, 4. He loves his brother, iv. 7, 8. he that is of the world, knows not God, iii. 1. nor he that committeth sin, as here.

[6] Ver. 8, 9. Ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, He that committeth sin.] i. e. He that lives or goes on in any way of sin. That this is the true import of this phrase in the writings of this apostle, will appear, (1.) from the same phrase used in his Gospel, πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. (John viii. 34.) Now to be the servant of sin, is plainly to continue and to live in it; (Rom. vi. 1, 2.) to yield obedience to it in the lustings of it: (ver. 12.) for then sin reigns in our mortal bodies, (ibid.) and we are slaves and subjects to it; then doth it, κυριεύειν, lord it over us, and we are δοῦλοι εἰς ὑπακοὴν, servants to yield obedience to it, (ver. 14. 16.) Though the conscience may boggle at it, our reason may condemn it, our will be somewhat averse to it, so that in obeying it we do the evil we would not; yet if ἐμπλακέντες ἡττώμεθα, we are so entangled as to be overcome by it, we are servants to corruption; for of what a man is overcome, to that is he brought in bondage. (2 Pet. ii. 19, 20.) If the law of our members leads us captive to the law of sin, (Rom. vii. 23.) so that we yield our members instruments of unrighteousness to sin, we so commit sin as to be the servants of sin: and he that is born of God, cannot (thus) sin, because by that new birth he is made free from (the service of) sin, (John viii. 36.) and become a servant to righteousness: (Rom. vi. 18.) he hath that seed within him which alienates his mind and his affections from sin, and that Spirit which causes him to mortify the deeds of the flesh, (Rom. viii. 13.) to die to sin, and to live to God. (Rom. vi. 10.)

(2.) From those words, neither can sin, for so he doth not do it, as he cannot do it. Now that doth not import that a good man cannot be overtaken with a fault. (Gal. vi. 1.) No, even those little children whose sins are forgiven, and who have known the Father, may and will be obnoxious still to some infirmities, and wanderings out of the way, (ii. 1.) They may sin not unto death, and therefore may have still the spiritual life remaining in them, (v. 16—18.) But the true import of that phrase is this,* That he hath such an inward frame of heart, such a disposition of spirit, as renders sin exceeding odious and hateful to him; so that he cannot entertain the thoughts of doing it, or a temptation to commit it, without the utmost detestation, and the greatest horror, and so can very rarely, and only through surprise, or want of due deliberation, or through such violent temptations as prevent or hinder his consideration, be obnoxious to sin; and when he comes to consider of such an action, is presently condemning himself for it, bitterly repenting of it, and for the future watching most carefully against it. Thus, they that are evil cannot speak good things; (Matt. xii. 34.) A good tree cannot bring forth bad fruit; (Matt. xvii. 18.) The world cannot hate those that are of it; (John vii. 7.) The Jews could not hear Christ's word; (John viii. 43.) could not believe; (John xii. 39.) The world could not receive the Spirit; (John xiv. 17.) They that are in the flesh cannot please God; (Rom. viii. 7, 8.) The natural man cannot know the things of God; (1 Cor. ii. 14.) The church of Ephesus could not bear the wicked. (Rev. ii. 2.)

(3.) From the phrase, he that committeth sin is of the devil; for it is not he who committeth one or more sins of infirmity, for so did Christ's disciples while they were with him; nor he who committeth one great sin through the power of a strong temptation, of which he bitterly repents, and from which he returns to his obedience; for thus did David and St. Peter, who yet were not then the children of the devil; but they who comply with the lusts of Satan, and who will do them. (John viii. 44.)

* Ita de Catone Min. Velleius Paterc. "Homo virtuti simillimus, et per omnia ingenio diis quam hominibus propior, qui nunquam recte fecit ut facere videretur, sed quia aliter facere non poterat." Hist. R. lib. ii. cap. 35. "Omnibus humanis vitiis immunis." Ibid.

The other interpretations which are given of these words, seem either vain and impertinent, or false and dangerous. And,

1. Vain is that sense which some put upon these words, He that is born of God, "non debet peccare," ought not to sin, or, that it is absurd for him to sin; for the apostle speaks not of what he ought not to do, but of what he doth not. Such is that also of those fathers, who interpret this of him who is perfectly born of God, by a παλιγγενεσία, or a resurrection from the dead; for the apostle speaks not of what he shall not do hereafter, but of what he doth not do at present.

2. False seems to be the sense which Origen, St. Jerome, and Ambrose, put upon the words, that he that is born of God sinneth not, "quamdiu renatus est," whilst he is born of God, because he ceaseth to be a child of God when he sins; for this is not only confuted by the examples of David and St. Peter, whose faith under that great miscarriage failed not, (Luke xxii. 32.) but by the words of the apostle, Little children, if we sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins, (ii. 1.) who yet is only the advocate for the sons of God. For the same reason I cannot assent to that exposition which saith, A child of God cannot be guilty of any great or deliberate crime, as Tertullian de Pudicitia, cap. 19.

3. Dangerous is the exposition of St. Bernard,* that they who are born of God sin not, "quia etiamsi peccata illis neutiquam imputentur," because their sins will never be imputed to them: and of those who think it sufficient to say, He sins not without great reluctancy, or not willingly, the evil that he doeth being that which he would not do; for the will of that man, who, after some contest in his soul, yields to the commission of sin, is more strongly inclined to sin than to the avoiding of it, and so is not renewed. Nor doth the apostle say, He that is born of God sins not willingly, or without reluctance; but absolutely, He doth not commit sin.

I conclude this note with that of our judicious Gataker, He that is born of God sinneth not: that is, Vitam a peccato immunem quantum potest sibi proponit, nec peccato unquam sponte dat operam; si aliquando præter animi propositum deliquerit, non in eodem persistit, sed errore agnito, ad institutum vitæ pristinum quamprimum quantumque potest, festinus revertitur.

[7] Ver. 9. Ἐκ Θεοῦ, Of God.] By the Spirit and the Word; (John iii. 6. 8. James i. 18. 1 Pet. i. 23.) that is, he is preserved from, and hath his heart framed into a hatred and loathing of, sin: 1. From the word of God treasured up in his heart, demonstrating to him the vileness of sin, that he may hate it; the danger of it, that he may fly from it; I have hid thy word in my heart, that I might not sin against thee; (Psal. cxix. 11.) and by attending to it as his rule, and taking heed to his ways according to his word, (ibid. ver. 9.) 2. By the Holy Spirit abiding in him, as a new principle of life lusting against the flesh, so that we cannot do the things which that would have us do. (Gal. v. 16, 17.)

[8] Ver. 10. Ὁ μὴ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην, That doeth not righteousness.] That is, he that doth not (from a heart studious of conformity to him who is righteous, ver. 7. and in obedience to his law, commanding us to live righteously,) exercise himself in sincere endeavours of walking righteously through the general course of his life, is not a child of God; because he only is born of God, and hath the Divine nature in him, who thus doeth righteousness. (1 John ii. 29.) And he who doth not in truth, and in actions demonstrating the sincerity of his affection to his brother, (ver. 18.) shew his love to him, he hath no true love to God, (iv. 21.) and so is not born of God, nor can he be the child of God, since he obeys not his commandments, (v. 1.)

[9] Ver. 12. Ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ, Of that wicked one.] The Jews say that Cain was begot of the seed of the devil; this the apostle mystically expounded, saying of Cain as our Saviour doth of the Jews in general, (John viii. 44.) that they were of their father the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning, because they did his work, being maliciously bent upon the murder of our Lord.

[10] Ver. 19. Ἐκ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐσμὲν, We are of the truth.] i. e. We are rightly acquainted with, and truly live according to, the rules delivered in that gospel which is emphatically styled the truth. (See note on Rom. ii. 8.) This is the truth so often mentioned in these Epistles, 1 John i. 6. 8. ii. 4. 21. iv. 6. Second Epistle, ver. 1—4. First Epistle, iii. 3, 4. 8. 12. and in the Gospel, i. 14. 17. iii. 21. iv. 23, 24. v. 33. viii. 32. xvii. 17. xviii. 37.

[11] Καὶ πείσομεν τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν, And shall persuade our hearts;] viz. That we are so in the sight of God.

[12] Ver. 20. Ὅτι ἐὰν, For if our hearts condemn us, ὅτι μείζων.] Some are inclined to read, ἔτι μείζων, God is yet greater than our hearts; and others to make it an expletive, or to approve of those few copies where it is wanting: but seeing it is retained in most copies, and is translated by the Arabic profecto, this I believe to be the true import of it here; and to confirm this import, let it be noted, that the Hebrew chi, which in its primary import signifieth for, and is by the Septuagint rendered ὅτι, doth also signify certe, and is by our translation often rendered surely, or certainly. So, Gen. xliii. 10. For if we had not lingered, chi, LXX. ἤδη ἂν, surely we had returned twice; Exod. iii. 11. chi, LXX. ὅτι, surely I will be with thee; iv. 25. chi, LXX. ὅτι, surely a bloody husband art thou; Numb. xxii. 23. chi, LXX. ἂν, surely I had slain thee; Judg. vi. 16. καὶ, surely I will be with thee; Ruth i. 10. surely we will return with thee; 1 Kings i. 13. chi, LXX. ὅτι, surely Solomon shall reign after me; Josh. ii. 24. chi, LXX. ὅτι, truly the Lord hath delivered the land into our hands; Psal. lxxvii. 12. chi, LXX. ὅτι, surely I will remember thy works of old; cxii. 6. chi, LXX. ὅτι, surely he shall not be removed for ever. (See Job xxviii. 1. Isa. vii. 9. see Examen Millii here, ver. 16. v. 10. 12.)

[13] Ver. 21. Παῤῥησίαν ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, We have confidence with God.] When is it, saith Philo,* that a servant may use, παῤῥησίαν πρὸς τὸν δεσπότην, confidence towards his lord? Is it not then, ὅταν ἠδικηκότι μὲν ἑαυτοῦ οὐδὲν συνειδῇ, when he is not conscious of doing any evil against him?

[14] Ver. 24. Ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος, By the Spirit.] So the word Spirit is taken in the words following, (iv. 1.) and so was he given in those times to them that believed. (Acts v. 32.)

CHAP. IV.

1. BELOVED, [1] believe not every (pretender to the) Spirit (of God), but try the spirits whether they be of God (or not): because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

2. (And, for your direction in this trial,) hereby know ye the Spirit of God (from that of error): Every spirit (i. e. person pretending to the Spirit of God, or of prophecy,) which confesseth that Jesus Christ (Gr. Jesus Christ which) is come in the flesh is of God:

3. And every (pretender to the) Spirit which confesseth not that Jesus Christ (Jesus Christ which) is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

4. Ye (to whom he hath given this Spirit, iii. 24.) are of God, little children, and [2] have overcome them (these antichrists and false prophets): because greater is he (the Spirit) that is in you, than he (the spirit) which is in the world.

5. They (these antichrists and false prophets) [3] are of the world: (setting up to be temporal princes, and to give the Jews dominion over the heathen world, and) therefore speak they of the world (i. e. of that temporal dominion over the heathens, which the carnal Jews expect, when their Messiah doth appear), and the world (he that is worldly-minded) heareth them.

6. [4] We are of God; (deriving our faith and doctrine from that Jesus who was a Prophet sent from God, and delivered his doctrine in his name: as therefore he said to the Jews then, so we his disciples say now,) he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. (John viii. 47. vi. 45.) Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error. (See note on ver. 1—3.)

7. Beloved, let us (who are of God, ver. 6.) love one another: for love is of God; (the fruit of his good Spirit in us, Gal. v. 22. 1 Pet. i. 22.) and every one that loveth is born of God, (by the Spirit, John iii. 5.) and (this resemblance he hath to him, in love to mankind in general, and to those he hath so highly loved in particular, ver. 9, 10. shews that he) knoweth God (aright, because he keepeth his commandments, ii. 3, 4.)

8. He that loveth not (his brother) knoweth not (Gr. hath not known) God (aright); for [5] God is (the God of) love.

9. In this was manifested (the greatness of) the love of God towards us, because that God sent his only-begotten Son into the world, (and freely gave him up to the death, Rom. viii. 33.) that we might live through him.

10. [6] Herein is (the demonstration of his) love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us (first, ver. 19.) and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins (which deserved death, and so to fit us for eternal life).

11. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

12. (And say not, that it is enough that ye love God again, though ye love not your brother, ver. 20. for) no man hath seen God at any time, (as we daily see and converse with our brother; and therefore, if we love not him whom we have seen, how can we love God whom we have not seen? ver. 20. but) if we love one another (after his example, though we see him not, we may be sure that) God dwelleth in us (by his Spirit), and (that) his love [7] is perfected in us.

13. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit (who by his powerful energies proves whose Spirit he is).

14. And (by the Spirit given to us according to his promise) we have seen (i. e. perceived) and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. (See note on ver. 3.)

15. [8] Whosoever (believeth this our testimony) shall (from his heart believe, Rom. x. 9. 19. and) confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God (by the Spirit of adoption).

16. And we (by this Spirit) have known and believed the love that God hath (shewed) to us, (in sending his Son to be the Saviour of the world, ver. 10, 11. 14.) God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him, (ver. 7.)

17. Herein is our love made perfect, (i. e. exactly corresponding to the Divine pattern and command, note on ver. 12. so) that we (who thus love) may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world, (conforming ourselves to the pattern of God's affection to mankind, and walking as Christ walked, ii. 6.)

18. [9] There is no fear (of failing at that day) in love (thus perfect); but perfect love casteth out fear: because (that) fear (which takes away this boldness) hath torment (in it; torments the mind with dreadful expectations, and) he that (thus) feareth is not made perfect in love.

19. [10] We love him (and testify this love to him by loving our brother for his sake, after his example, and in obedience to his command), because he first loved us.

20. [11] If any man say, I love God, and (yet) hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

21. And (he moreover shews, by his disobedience to the command of God, the want of true affection to him; for) this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1, 2.] THE Jews being then generally in expectation of their Messiah, were divided into two parts; a remnant who believed that he was come already, and that our Jesus was the very person promised under that character; and a more prevailing part of them who rejected him and looked for another. Now among these appeared many who took upon them to be the Messiah, or the Prophet promised by Moses, like unto him, saying, Lo, Christ is here, and lo, he is there; (see the note on Matt. xxiv. 24. 26.) and these declaring themselves prophets, must also pretend to the spirit of prophecy, and do this as Josephus saith they did, προσχήματι θειασμοῦ, under the pretence of a Divine afflatus. These, saith the apostle here, are antichrists; i. e. pretenders falsely to be Christ, in opposition to him who was truly so: nor could they belong to him, or truly confess him, who was the Word made flesh. Now the strength of this argument depends on these considerations, that the effusion of the Spirit, promised in the times of the Messiah, could only belong to them who owned and believed in the true Messiah; this being made one character of the true Messiah, that he should baptize them who believed in him with the Holy Ghost. (Matt. iii. 11.) This promise of the Father, as the Holy Ghost is styled, was to be sent by Christ, (Luke xxiv. 49.) to his disciples, (John xvi. 7. xv. 26.) to be sent in his name: (John xiv. 26.) and when he came, his office was to enable those who received him to testify of Christ, that he was indeed risen from the dead, and was the Christ, (John xv. 26. Acts i. 8. v. 32.) and to convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him. (John xvi. 9.) The condition of receiving him was faith in Christ; (John vii. 37. Acts ii. 38, 39.) and by his assistance did his disciples prove that Jesus Christ, who appeared to the Jews in the flesh, and was crucified among them, was the Christ. He therefore who was made partaker of the χαρίσματα, of the Holy Ghost, must be one who believed in that Jesus who suffered in the flesh for us; and therefore they who denied this, could not be assisted by that Spirit who was only sent by him, and given to believers: whence the apostle saith, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus anathema, as these false prophets, who owned him not, must do, (1 Cor. xii. 3.) and that no man could say that Jesus was the Christ, but by the Holy Ghost: that is, he could not confess and testify to the world this truth, but by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, promised and given to believers for that end. (See ver. 6. 13—15.)

Note therefore, that the apostle is not here speaking of the trial of doctrines, but of spirits, not of the faith necessary to be believed to salvation, but only of the faith necessary to the reception of the Holy Ghost, that unction which would teach them all things. (1 John ii. 27.)

[2] Ver. 4. Καὶ νενικήκατε, And have overcome.] The doctrine which you preach and confirm by these gifts, and distributions of the Holy Ghost, hath mightily prevailed over all the opposition which the unbelieving Jews, and their false prophets, and false apostles, make against it; because the spirit which acts in them is only able to work by them τέρατα ψεύδους, false, counterfeit, and lying wonders; whereas the Spirit that is in you, enables you to confirm the truth with real miracles, and signs, and divers distributions of the Holy Ghost, by which God beareth witness to the truth of that doctrine which you preach. (Heb. ii. 4. Rom. xv. 19. 1 Thess. i. 5.)

[3] Ver. 5.] That the hopes of dominion over the heathens, encouraged some of them to set up for the Messiah, and others to fight, see the testimonies of Josephus, note on James iv. 1—3. And on this account they rejected the true Messiah, because his kingdom was not of this world.

[4] Ver. 6.] When the Romish prelates have once proved they are of God, as the apostle did, it will be time to consider the inference of Esthius from this place, That he that is of God must hear their prelates and their church, and come to them to be resolved of any doubt.

[5] Ver. 8. Ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη, God is love.] The apostle by these words intends not to express what God is in his essence, or to say, as the schools do, that he is love essentially, and love causaliter, as being the cause; or objectivè, as being the object of his love; but that he is so demonstrativè, and ἐνεργητικῶς, shewing great philanthropy to men in all his dealings with them, or his dispensations towards them, as appears from the two following verses.

[6] Ver. 10. Ἐν τούτῳ ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη, Herein is love.] Here the apostle most lively doth express the freedom and the greatness of the love of God; the freedom of it, in that he loved us first, when there was nothing in us to deserve or move affection but our misery; but many things which both deserved, and might have moved him to the execution of his wrath, we being enemies to God by wicked works: the greatness of it, first, in the person sending, the great God of heaven, who humbles himself even to behold what is done in heaven and earth; oh, therefore, what is man that he should be thus mindful of him? Secondly, The person sent, τὸν μονογενῆ, his only-begotten, τὸν ἴδιον υἱὸν, his proper Son: (Rom. viii. 32.) for if to call God πατέρα ἴδιον, his proper Father, was to make himself equal to God, (John v. 18.) the Father himself by calling him his proper Son, must equally exalt him. Hence even Episcopius here declares him to be so called, because "essentiam suam à Patre per veram generationem accepisset," he had received his essence from the Father by a true generation: for it is certain that the apostle is here extolling the love of God to the highest pitch, and therefore must use this phrase, the only-begotten Son of God, in the sublimest sense in which that word is used in Scripture. Thirdly, The place whither he was sent, into that world which lay in wickedness. Fourthly, The errand for which he was sent; 1. to give up himself a sacrifice for the propitiation of our sins: (see note on ii. 2.) 2. to procure to us, who were dead in trespasses and sins, eternal life.

[7] Ver. 12. Τετελειωμένη, His love is perfected in us.] He then loves us entirely, according to those words of Christ, If any man keep my words, my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him: (John xiv. 23.) or, then is our love to him entire, because then we love him so as to keep his commandments, (ii. 5.) and so as to follow that example of love which he hath set us; and as he is, so are we in the world, (ver. 17.)

[8] Ver. 15.] For to as many as received him, gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; (John i. 12.) and because we are sons, God hath sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba Father. (Gal. iv. 6.) Only let it be noted, that this hearty confession must be attended with a readiness to believe all that this Son of God hath taught us in his Father's name, for if he say the truth, why do we not believe him? (John viii. 46.) and a firm purpose to obey his commandments, for why call we him Lord, Lord, and do not the things that he saith? (Luke vi. 46.)

[9] Ver. 18. Φόβος οὐκ ἔστι, There is no fear in love.] Christ having so expressly promised a Come ye blessed to the charitable person, (Matt. xxv. 34—36.) and the apostle recommending it as the most excellent of Christian graces, (1 Cor. xiii. 13.) and the fulfilling of the law, (Rom. xiii. 8. 12.) when this love is made perfect in us, it may well give boldness, and cast out fear of condemnation in the day of judgment.

Others expound the words thus: There is no fear of what we may lose or suffer in (perfect) love (of our brother), but (such) love casteth out (this) fear, for fear (of what we may lose or suffer) hath torment in it: (and therefore) he that thus feareth, is not made perfect in love (to him).

[10] Ver. 19.] That is, whosoever thus loves God, and shews it by loving thus his brother, can challenge nothing on that account as due from God; it being God's preventing love to him, which gave the rise to all the love he bears to God, or to his brother for his sake. If therefore any person be constrained by this love to that obedience which testifies the sincerity of his affection to God, or to imitate his love to us by fervent love to the brethren, it is the Divine philanthropy which hath excited this affection in him. Or, if ἀγαπῶμεν be the subjunctive mood, the sense runs thus: Let the great love of God to us, mentioned ver. 9, 10. provoke us to returns of love to him, and to our brethren for his sake; since we do hypocritically pretend to love him, if we do not shew it by fervent charity towards his children, and our brethren.

[11] Ver 20.] That is, if what we have more opportunity to do, and can perform with less difficulty, we do not do, how shall we perform what is more difficult? Now we have our Christian brethren still in our view, they are the object of our senses, we daily converse with them; and their wants and miseries being the object of our senses, must naturally move compassion in us; and so it is less difficult to express our love to them, than to that God whom we have not seen, and who is only present to our minds by raised meditations, which do not naturally occur to us, and which we cannot long continue, and so is more difficult than the love of our brother.

CHAP. V.

1. WHOSOEVER believeth that Jesus is the Christ [1] is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him, (as being by his new birth partaker of the Divine nature, and created anew after the image of God, Eph. iv. 24. Colos. iii. 10.

2. And this note is reciprocal; for) by this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments, (when our affection to God prevails upon us to do to them all acts of charity he hath required, and by his example recommended to us, 1 John iii. 11. 23. iv. 21.)

3. For this is (the genuine test of) the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments (to the true lover of him) [2] are not grievous.

4. For whosoever is born of God overcometh the world (his affections are taken off from it, and set upon his God; and so it cannot be grievous to him to part with it, or suffer the loss of any worldly good, to secure the Divine favour): and this is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith, (to wit, that faith which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, Heb. xi. 1. which gives us the assurance of a better and a more enduring substance, and so makes us take joyfully the spoiling of our goods, Heb. x. 34. and patiently endure those light afflictions which are but for a season, as knowing they work for us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. iv. 7.)

5. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? (And so the author of eternal salvation to all that obey him; for hence we know that we have eternal life, v. 11—13.)

6. This is he [3] that came by (or, with the testimony of) water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not [4] by water only, but by water [5] and blood. And it is [6] the Spirit that beareth witness (and on his testimony we may rely), because the Spirit is truth.

7. (The law judges that sufficiently proved, which is confirmed by two or three witnesses, Deut. xix. 15. That Jesus is the Son of God, ver. 5. is thus proved, by witnesses from heaven, and on earth:) for [7] there are three that bear record (to this truth) in (and from) heaven, the [8] Father, the [9] Word, and the [10] Holy Ghost, and these three are one (as in testimony, so in essence).

8. And there are three that bear witness on earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three [11] agree in one.

9. [12] If we receive the witness of men (in these cases), the witness of God is greater (of more validity and certainty, than that of men; he being neither liable to ignorance nor falsehood: and if his testimony be of such force, we must believe that Jesus is the Christ): for this is the witness of God, which he hath testified of his Son.

10. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself (as having in himself that Spirit of God which gives this testimony to Christ): he that believeth not (this testimony of) God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record which God gave of his Son.

11. And this is the (subject of this) record, that God hath given to us (Christians the promise of) eternal life, and this life is in his Son, (he being the hope of glory, Colos. i. 27. this life being hid with Christ in God, Colos. iii. 4. and he being our life, ibid. he being the author and procurer of it, and having power to confer it on us, John xvii. 2.)

12. He that hath the Son hath life: and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life: (for we are all the children of God, through faith in Jesus Christ, Gal. iii. 26. and if children, then heirs, Rom. viii. 17.)

13. These things have I written to you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have (by promise, a right to, and, by the Spirit, an earnest of) eternal life, and that ye may (more firmly) believe in the name of the Son of God.

14. And this is the (farther) confidence that we have in (and through) him, that, if we ask any thing (of God, iii. 21, 22.) according to his will, he heareth us; (according to Christ's promise, John xiv. 13—15. vii. 16. xvi. 23, 24.)

15. And if we know that he heareth us, whatever we (thus) ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him, (iii. 22.)

16. If any man see his (sick) brother sin a sin which is not [13] unto death, (i. e. for which God hath not peremptorily threatened, and required that he should die for it, as he did to them that were guilty of murder, Gen. ix. 5, 6. Numb. xxxv. 30, 31. and for idolatry, Deut. xvii. 2—5.) he shall ask (of God restoration of his life and health), and he shall give him life for them that sin not (thus) unto death. There is a sin unto death (of which God hath denounced, That he that doeth it, shall die for it): I do not say, that he shall pray for it (i. e. for deliverance of the person guilty of it from death).

17. All unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin (of unrighteousness against our brother, which is) not unto death (the law requiring, not that the guilty person should die for it, but only, that he should bring his offering, and make reparation for it).

18. We know, that whosoever is born of God sinneth not (thus, iii. 15.) but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not: (see note on iii. 9.)

19. And we know that we are (begotten) of God, and (that) the whole world lieth (still) [14] in wickedness.

20. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is (the) true (God), and we are in him that is true, (even, or, to wit,) in his Son Jesus Christ. [15] This is the true God, and (in him is) eternal life.

21. (Having therefore this knowledge of the true God,) little children, keep [16] yourselves from idols (or, false gods). Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. 'ΕΚ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται, Is born of God.] The Jews gloried in this title, that they were the children of God, and had him for their Father, (John viii. 41, 42. 45.) they being called his sons, Deut. xiv. 1. xxxii. 19. Psal. lxxii. 15. and his first-born, Exod. iv. 22. The apostle therefore here informs them, that this relation would stand them in no stead, unless they were born again of water, and of the Spirit, (John iii. 5.) or baptized into the name of Christ, and, by that faith, had power to become the sons of God, (John i. 12.) and also loved those Christians which were born of him; which the unbelieving Jews, and the false teachers among them, were so far from doing, that they every where persecuted the true believers. (See note on iii. 1.)

[2] Ver. 3. Βαρεῖαι οὐκ εἰσὶν, Are not grievous.] Because his will is conformed to the will of God, and so he only doth what he would do, and his affections are chiefly placed upon him, and so he is then doing what he chooseth and delighteth in; and it cannot be grievous to be employed as we would, and as we do delight to be.

[4] Δι' ὕδατος, By water.] i. e. With the testimony of water, or the testimony given to him by St. John at his baptism; for when John was baptizing, he testified of him, saying, This is he that cometh after me, who was before me. (John i. 27, 28.) He also declared, that he came baptizing, for this very end, that he might be made manifest to Israel; (ver. 31.) and testified, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him, and I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record, That this is the Son of God, (ver. 32—34.) Hence is he styled, A man sent from God, who came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe, (ver. 6—8.) Hence do St. John's disciples say to him, He to whom thou bearest witness, baptizeth, John iii. 26. And Christ himself appealeth to his testimony, John v. 32, 33. Now this testimony could not be rejected by them, for all men held John as a prophet; nor durst the pharisees themselves deny that his testimony was from heaven. (Matt. xxi. 25, 26.)

[5] Καὶ αἵματος, And blood.] For he died in testimony of the truth, and came into the world for this end, that he might bear witness to the truth: (John xviii. 37.) whence he is said to witness before Pontius Pilate a good confession, viz. that he was the Son of God, or the Messiah, the King of the Jews: (1 Tim. vi. 13.) this he also testified to the high-priest, (Matt. xxvi. 63, 64.) and for this testimony was he condemned as worthy of death: (ver. 66.) for this they mock him at his sufferings, that he said, he was the Son of God, (Matt. xxvii. 43. Mark xv. 32.) and at his death he commends his spirit to God, as his Father. (Luke xxiii. 36. 46.) The miracles which attended his crucifixion were so great, that they forced the Jews, the centurion, and those that were with him, to confess, Truly, this was the Son of God, (Matt. xxvii. 54.) and the whole multitude to smite their breasts. (Luke xxiii. 48.) In a word, the Spirit which assisted the Baptist, proclaimed him, The Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world: (John i. 29.) and that supposeth, he was to offer up himself unto the death, for the propitiation of their sins: yea, he himself doth frequently declare, that he was to be slain; (Matt. xvi. 21.) to be delivered into the hands of men, and killed; (Matt. xvii. 22, 23.) to be condemned to death, (Matt. xx. 18, 19.) and to rise again the third day; that he was to be lifted up upon the cross; (John iii. 14.) and that being thus lifted up, he would draw all men to him. (John xii. 32.) Now what impostor would lay this as the foundation of the truth of all his sayings, and all the hopes of any blessings which were to be expected from him, that he should be crucified, and die an ignominious and painful death? Or what could tempt him thus to die, who had no hopes to rise again, if he were not the true Messiah, or the Son of God? How was it possible he should be raised from the dead, but by the mighty power of God? And is it reasonable to imagine, that the God of truth should thus exert the greatness of his power, in confirmation of a lie? that he should work so great a miracle, in favour of a vile impostor falsely usurping his name? or give such large credentials to one who falsely did pretend to be a prophet sent from God, and to be honoured as his Son by all men?

[6] Καὶ πνεῦμά ἐστι, &c. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness.] Here it is to be noted, that the witness, in this verse, is only styled, τὸ πνεῦμα, viz. that Spirit which enabled Christ to heal diseases, cast out devils, raise the dead, and work all sorts of miracles, for confirmation of his mission: but in the seventh verse, he is styled, τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, the Holy Ghost; which doth distinctly signify the inward gifts, by which the understanding is enlightened, and is enabled to perform things which by nature it could not do, without the immediate workings of the Holy Ghost; as, v. g. the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, prophecy, discerning of spirits, the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of them. That there is ground for this distinction, will appear from these considerations.

1. Because our Saviour, whilst he was on earth, gave to his apostles, and the seventy disciples, power to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; (Matt. x. 8. Luke x. 9.) and yet the evangelist St. John informs us, that the Holy Ghost was not yet, because that Jesus was not glorified. (John vii. 39.) Our Saviour also tells his disciples, that the Holy Ghost would not come, till he departed; (John xvi. 7.) and St. Peter, that our Lord being exalted to the right hand of God, received the promise of the Holy Ghost. (Acts ii. 33.) The Holy Ghost must therefore signify something distinct from the power of working miracles.

2. The prophecy of Joel, which by St. Peter is mentioned as the promise on which the giving of the Holy Ghost was founded, is only a promise of visions, dreams, and prophecies, but not of miracles; and the gifts of the Spirit, mentioned by the prophet Isaiah, are only those of wisdom, knowledge, understanding, counsel, courage, piety, and of the fear of the Lord; no mention being made there of signs and wonders.

3. Because, throughout the history of the Acts of the Apostles, where St. Luke hath occasion to mention the miracles which the apostles and primitive professors did, he always uses these words, τέρατα, σημεῖα, δυνάμεις, wonders, signs, and powers: but where he speaks of persons prophesying or speaking with tongues, he doth as constantly ascribe this to the Holy Ghost descending on them.

And, lastly, where the Scripture mentions these things together, it puts a manifest distinction betwixt signs and wonders, and the gifts and distributions of the Holy Ghost. Thus God, saith the apostle, bare witness to the doctrine which they preached, by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, καὶ πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμοῖς, and distributions of the Holy Ghost, Heb. ii. 4. (See Rom. xv. 19. Gal. iii. 5.)

The Spirit therefore bare witness to Christ on earth, by the enabling him to do so many mighty works in confirmation of his mission, to heal all manner of diseases, sicknesses, and maladies, to command the wind and seas to be obedient to him, to cast out devils, and to raise the dead, and by assisting his apostles and disciples to do these things in his name: for that not only his disciples, but even our Lord himself, did cast out devils by the Spirit of God, he himself expressly testifies, Matt. xii. 28. and saith moreover, That in him was fulfilled that of Isaiah, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, wherefore he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken in heart, to preach deliverance to the captives (to sin and Satan), and to give sight to the blind. (Luke iv. 18. 20.) Hence St. Peter speaks thus to Cornelius and his friends, You know how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power, who went about doing good, and healed all that were oppressed of the devil. (Acts x. 38.) And to these works thus wrought by the assistance of the Spirit of God, our Lord doth frequently appeal, as to a sure testimony that God had sent him: for, the works (saith he) that I do in my Father's name, bear witness of me: (John x. 24. v. 36.) yea, they shewed that the Father was in him, and he in the Father. (John x. 37, 38. xiv. 10, 11.)

[7] Ver. 7. Τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, There are three that bear witness in heaven, &c.] I shall say nothing of the dispute, whether this verse be genuine or not, seeing the learned Dr. Mills treats so copiously on that subject, in his edition of the New Testament. I only note, that the places cited from Tertullian and St. Cyprian, agree not exactly with the words of St. John; seeing they speak "de Patre, Filio, et Spiritu Sancto," not of the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost. The objections of Schlictingius against this verse are these:

Obj. 1. That this verse, though it be introduced with ὅτι, for, hath no coherence with the former verse.

Ans. It coheres well with it, thus: The witness of the Spirit ought in this matter to be received, because he is the Spirit of truth, sent from the Father, and the Son; for in the testimony of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven is contained the witness of the Father, and the Son also: so that we may truly say, There be three that bear witness.

Obj. 2. But if so, the testimony of the Father is included in the testimony of the Holy Ghost.

Ans. True: and by this these three witnesses become one in testimony; and yet they differ, as the person sending, and the person sent.

Obj. 3. The Λόγος, or Word, is the Son of God; and therefore, to say he testifies of the Son of God, is to make him testify of himself.

Ans. It is confessed, that the same person is both the Λόγος, and the Son of God; but the thing testified, is not, that Christ was the Λόγος, or the Son of God, by eternal generation, or by his miraculous conception; but that he was the Christ, the promised Messiah, and in that sense the Son of God: and to this the Divine nature might give testimony.

[8] Ὁ Πατὴρ, The Father] Testified this at his baptism, by a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, &c. (Matt. iii. 17.) and at his transfiguration, saying again, This is my beloved Son, hear him: (Matt. xvii. 5, 6. see note on 2 Pet. i. 14—16.) and chiefly, by sending of the Holy Ghost, which he had promised in the times of the Messiah, and who is therefore styled, The promise of the Father. (Luke xxiv. 49. Acts i. 4.)

[9] Ὁ Λόγος, The Word.] Not only by appearing to St. Stephen, (Acts vii. 56.) and saying to Saul, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest, (Acts ix. 5.) but chiefly, by shedding the Spirit on the apostles and other believers, according to his promise; for, he being exalted to the right hand of God, and receiving from the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath (saith St. Peter) shed forth this which you now see and hear: wherefore, let all the house of Israel know, that God hath made this Jesus Lord and Christ. (Acts ii. 33. 36.)

[10] Τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, The Holy Ghost,] The power from on high they were to be endued with, (Luke xxiv. 49.) by falling down from heaven upon his disciples; whence they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake with tongues, to men of all nations, the wonderful things of God. Till his descent upon them, they were not to stir from Jerusalem, as being not fitted for their work: (Acts i. 4.) but when he was once given to them that believed, they proved and bare witness, that God exalted Jesus to his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour. (Acts v. 31, 32.) And this our Lord, by his omniscience, foretold that he should testify of him; (John xv. 26.) yea, that at his coming, he should convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him; of (his) righteousness, because he was gone to the Father; and of judgment, because the prince of this world was judged, and cast out of his kingdom by him. (John xvi. 9—11. and xii. 31.)

And thus it is easy to discern how these three are one in testimony, because both the Father and the Son give in their testimony by the Holy Ghost: but then if these be three witnesses properly so called, they must be three persons; and more especially the Holy Ghost, by whom the other persons do bear witness, must be so; and if his testimony be also the testimony of God the Father, and the Word, he must be one in essence with them: for if the Spirit be a creature, how can his testimony be formally the testimony of God? as it is styled, ver. 9. 13.

[11] Ver. 8. Εἰς ἓν εἰσιν, Agree in this one.] If by ἓν εἰσι, ver. 7. were meant no more than εἰς ἓν εἰσι, here, why did the apostle change the words, since these three also are one in testimony, as that imports this only, that they confirm this fundamental truth, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God? especially if we consider what is insinuated, ver. 6. that of these three, the Spirit only beareth witness properly; the other, by some action of the Spirit attending them, and by the testimony of others of it; the water, by the Spirit descending on Christ whilst he was in the water; and the Baptist's testimony, that by this sign God had declared to him, that he was the Christ; the blood, as it assures us, that he who shed it died for the truth.

[12] Ver. 9. Εἰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαμβάνομεν, If we receive the witness of men.] This is not so to be interpreted, as if the three witnesses on earth related only to the testimony of men; and the three from heaven, only to the testimony of God; and so that the apostle intended here to signify, we had greater reason to believe the witnesses in heaven, than those on earth: for, 1. the testimony of the Spirit and of the Holy Ghost, are of equal certainty and validity: and, 2. John Baptist being sent from God, (John i. 6.) and his baptism being from heaven, and not of men, (Matt. xxi. 25.) was also, in effect, the testimony of God. The import therefore of these words is rather this: If the testimony of two or three men be thought sufficient to give credit to any matter in all courts of judicature, surely the testimony of that God, (ver. 8.) who cannot lie or deceive us, must be of greater force and strength to produce faith in us.

Ver. 13. Ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον, καὶ ἵνα πιστεύητε.] Here the Codex Alexandrinus reads thus, ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον οἱ πιστεύοντες· so also reads the Vulgate and the Syriac; the Arabic thus, Hæc scripsi vobis, O qui creditis in nomen Filii Dei, ut sciatis quod vitam habetis æternam quamdiu creditis in nomen Filii Dei. Œcumenius, ἵνα πιστεύητε. ἀδιαστάκτως καὶ ἀμώμῳ πίστει.

[13] Ver. 16. Ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον, A sin unto death.] Note here, that the phrase, He shall give him life, cannot reasonably be interpreted of eternal life, for that depends not on the prayers of other men; nor can they be certain that their intercession shall prevail for it, since it belongs only to them who truly repent and reform their lives. 2. Because the person to be prayed for, is one that hath not sinned unto death; i. e. hath not committed a sin which renders him obnoxious to death eternal. 3. They who interpret this phrase, A sin unto death, of a sin on which eternal death will certainly follow, by the decree of God, (1.) make the duty here enjoined impracticable; for who can know when his brother's sin is thus to death, or not? who is acquainted with any such decree of God? (2.) They make the difference betwixt a sin unto death, and not to death, to consist, not in the nature of the sins themselves, but in the decree by God passed upon the sinner. (3.) They make the apostle say, He dares not encourage them to pray for the salvation of them who are at present in a state of death and condemnation, which is against the tenor of the Scripture. (See Rom. x. 1.) The words, If a man see his brother sin a sin not unto death, seem like unto those of St. Paul, If he see him overtaken with a fault, (Gal. vi. 1.) i. e. with an act of injustice against his brother, to awaken him out of which sin, God hath inflicted sickness on him, as he did on the Corinthians. (1 Cor. xi. 30.) The words, Let him ask, and he shall give him life, seem parallel to those of St. James, The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up. (See the note on James v. 15.) If this interpretation will not stand good, consider, that after all the miracles and distributions of the Holy Ghost, vouchsafed in confirmation of the gospel, too many of the Jews apostatized from the profession of it, relapsing to their former Judaism: and this apostacy may here be termed, the sin unto death; it being also that which our Saviour represents as the sin against the Holy Ghost, which should not be forgiven. (Matt. xii. 32.) And they who commit it, being men (saith the apostle) whom it is impossible to renew unto repentance, (Heb. vi. 4—6.) and to whom there remaineth nothing but fearful looking for of judgment, (Heb. x. 26, 27.) the apostle might well add, I do not say, that you shall pray for them.

[14] Ver. 19. Ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ.] In Satan, who worketh in the children of disobedience, (Eph. iii. 2.) and leads them captive at his will; (2 Tim. ii. 26.) whence, by faith in Christ, we are said to be translated from the power of darkness, (Colos. i. 13.) from the power of Satan, (Acts xxvi. 18.) and recovered from the snare of the devil.

[15] Ver. 20. Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς, He is the true God.] That this is not spoken of Christ, the Socinians endeavour to prove, because the article is here added to the word Θεὸς, God; which is never, say they, done when Christ is called God. But this is manifestly false; for Thomas saith expressly of him, Ὁ Κύριός μου, καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, My Lord, and my God; (John xx. 28.) and the apostle, Ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς, who is God over all, blessed for ever. (Rom. ix. 5.) We prove that this is spoken of Christ;

1. Because the demonstrative pronoun οὗτος, most appositely relates to that, which immediately went before; now this is Jesus Christ the Son of God.

To this the Socinians* answer, That this is not always so; these relatives often referring to what is more remote: and so this οὗτος may refer to the true God going before. To this we reply;

1. That when this happens to be so, the necessity of referring it to what is more remote, is evident from the text, and necessary from the nature of the thing; as when it is said, Acts iv. 11. οὗτος, This is the stone set at nought by you builders, this cannot be referred to the man that was made whole, ver. 10. and Acts vii. 19. οὗτος, He dealt subtilely with our nation; this cannot refer to Joseph, but to the king of Egypt: so also, Acts x. 5, 6. 2 Thess. ii. 9. 2 John 7.: but here is no necessity of referring the pronoun to any thing more remote, but on supposition that Christ is not truly God.

2. This never happens when the pronoun relates to any thing that is spoken of professedly, but only when the nearest antecedent is only mentioned accidentally, and by the by. So, Eph. ii. 7. Many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confess not, that Jesus is the Christ; οὗτος, he is a deceiver, and an antichrist; where the pronoun refers not to Christ, because he is there mentioned only by accident, as being the object of the error of those seducers; and so it is in all the other places cited. But here the apostle is professedly speaking of Christ, through the whole verse; and of the Father, only as we, by Christ, are taught to know him. And,

* See Cl. Ars Critic. par. ii. cap. 9. p. 121.

3. To refer this to the true God going before, makes the apostle guilty of a tautology, by saying, The true God, he is the true God.

4. Of the same person it is said, He is the true God, and eternal life. Now eternal life is in this very chapter thrice ascribed to the Son, as the author of it, ver. 11, 12, 13. He is styled ζωὴ, life, John i. 4. v. 26. xiv. 6. xvii. 2. Our life, Colos. iii. 4. Christ is here also styled, Ὁ ἀληθινὸς, The true; as also, Rev. iii. 7. xix. 11. And otherwise, the Greek should have been ὦμεν, that we may, or might be, to answer to γινώσκωμεν, that we might know; and not ἐσμὲν, we are, in the true.

[16] Ver. 21. Ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων, From the idols,] Or false gods of the heathens, among whom you live: so, 1 Thess. i. 9. They turned ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων, from idols, to the true and living God: thus, An idol is nothing in the world, i. e. no true god, because there is but one true God, 2 Cor. viii. 4. Thus, to eat things offered to idols, συνειδήσει τοῦ εἰδώλου, with conscience of the idol, is to eat it with apprehension, that there was somewhat of power or virtue in that God to whom it was offered. Nevertheless, because these false gods were still represented by, and worshipped in, their images,* and they were thought necessary to the worship of their deities; therefore the apostle useth here the word idols, and equally forbids that way of worshipping the true God.

SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JOHN.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

THAT St. John the apostle was the author of the First Epistle, is confessed by all the ancients; and that the same person was the author of this Epistle, is evident from the exact agreement of almost every word of this with the former, except the preface and conclusion. For,

First, These words in the fifth verse, I write no new commandment to you, but that which you have had from the beginning, That ye love one another; are the same with those, 1 Ep. ii. 8. 10. iii. 10.

Secondly, These words in the sixth verse, This is love, That we walk after his commandments; are the same with 1 Ep. v. 3. and the following words are in the sense the same with iv. 21.

Thirdly, These words in the seventh verse, For many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh: he is a deceiver, and an antichrist; are in sense the same with 1 John ii. 18, 19. 26. iv. 1—3.

Fourthly, These words, ver. 9. He that transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, hath the Father and the Son; are in sense the same with 1 John ii. 24.

Fifthly, These words, ver. 12. That your joy may be full; are expressly found, 1 John i. 4.

Moreover, the arguments which Grotius advances to the contrary, as magna argumenta, are of no force against, but rather may be used as confirmations of, this assertion, That St. John the apostle was the author of this Epistle. For whereas it is objected, that Eusebius puts this, and the following Epistle, among the doubtful Epistles, leaving it uncertain, whether they were written by the apostle, or by John, presbyter of Ephesus, to whom they were ascribed, saith St. Jerome; it is to be noted from Eusebius, that though by some they were doubted of, yet were they known to many of the ancients:† yea, this Second Epistle is cited twice by Irenæus, as the genuine Epistle of St. John the apostle and disciple of our Lord, declaring, That they who denied that Jesus Christ was come in the flesh, were ‡ seducers and antichrists, ver. 7, 8. and they who bid the heretic God speed, are partakers of his evil deeds; which are the words found, ver. 10.

And in the council of Carthage, held anno Domini 256. Aurelius‖ cites the tenth verse, as the words of St. John the apostle of the Lord.

Clemens of Alexandria* makes mention of the larger Epistle of St. John; which supposeth, he had writ one or more shorter.

And Epiphanius saith,† that the Alogi, who rejected his Gospel and Revelation, would perhaps reject his Epistles also. So that we have here the testimony both of the east, and of the west, concerning the true author of this Epistle, that it was John, the apostle and disciple of our Lord; which sure must be proof sufficient against a bare doubt, or the silence of some men about this matter, of which Origen‡ speaks. The other arguments of Grotius are so fully answered by Dr. Hammond, in his preface to this Epistle, that it is superfluous to say any thing upon that subject.

As for the name catholic, that also seems to be given to this and the following Epistle; not as being written to all in general, some of the ancients conceiving this was written only to one family, as was the other to one person, but, as Cotelerius§ notes, because they were admitted by many churches, and read as catholic Epistles.

1. THE [1] elder to the [2] elect lady and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not only I, but also all that have known the truth:

2. For the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us [3] for ever:

3. Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love (or, the true and beloved Son of the Father).

4. I rejoiced greatly that I found (those) of thy children walking [4] in the truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

5. And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment, but that which we had from the beginning (of the gospel), that we love one another. (See note on 1 John ii. 7.)

6. And this is love, that we walk after his commandment: (v. 3.) and this is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it (ii. 24. i. e. We should continue walking according to the truth of the gospel, which it concerns us now especially to be careful of).

7. For many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ [5] is come in the flesh (or, Jesus Christ coming in the flesh). This is a deceiver and an antichrist. (See note on ii. 18. 22. iv. 1—3.)

8. Look to yourselves, that we lose not the things that we have wrought, but that we may receive [6] a full reward.

9. Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that [7] abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

10. If there come any one unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed (i. e. have no familiarity with him, and wish him no success in his enterprises):

11. For he that biddeth him [8] God speed is partaker of his evil deeds (as shewing friendship to him that does them, and wishing well to them; for by this he shews he is willing he should succeed in them).

12. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write (them) with paper and ink (as I do this Epistle): but I trust (ἐλπίζω γὰρ, for I hope, say some copies,) to come unto you, and speak face to face, that your joy may be full.

13. The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Amen. (See note on ver. 1.)

ANNOTATIONS.

[1] Ver. 1. ΠΡΕΣΒΥΤΕΡΟΣ, The elder.] That the apostle should in this Epistle conceal his name, as in the former he had done, is so far from being an argument to conclude he was not the author of it, that it proves rather the contrary; he being, as it is observed by Dr. Hammond, the only apostle that affected to conceal his name, and who, in his Gospel, scarce ever speaks of himself without some circumlocution.

That he should call himself elder, and not apostle, as St. Peter also doth, is no more an argument against the apostleship of the one, than of the other. The word elder, being a name of honour and dignity belonging to the chief of their tribes, agrees very well with the office of apostles, set over the twelve tribes of the house of Israel. But if this Epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, as is probably collected from that caution given in it, ver. 7, 8. to beware of the deceivers that were gone out into the world, that they might not lose the things which they had wrought; the apostle could not then be so aged when he writ it, as he is generally thought to have been, though he might be then seventy years old, and therefore aged. (See note on Philem. 9.)

[2] Ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ, To the elect lady.] That the apostle wrote this Epistle to a single person, who was of honourable descent, and therefore styled lady, will not follow from the mention of her children, ver. 4. seeing that phrase is used both of the members of the Jewish, and of the Christian church: (Isa. liv. 1. Gal. iv. 25. 27, 28. 31.) not from the words, I hope to come to you, and speak mouth to mouth; for so St. Paul did to the church of Jerusalem, when he declared to them what things God had wrought by him, and Barnabas: (Acts xv. 4.) and so might St. John do to that, or any other church. It seems rather, from the words, I have many things to write to you; and from the children of the elect sister, mentioned ver. 12, 13. that it should be some Christian church: and then I think there is great reason to conjecture, it must not be that of Ephesus, but some Jewish church, and most probably that of Jerusalem, the mother of all churches. For,

1. All the other Epistles, excepting that one to Gaius, which pass under the name of catholic, were written to the Jews, and so this probably must be so.

2. As other churches are styled συνέκλεκταὶ, elected together with her, 1 Pet. v. 13. so is the church of the Jews styled, throughout the Old Testament, the elect; and the converts of them in the New, the elect, Matt. xxiv. 22. and, the election, Rom. xi. 5. 7.

* Φαίνεται δὲ καὶ Ἰωάννης ἐν τῇ μείζονι ἐπιστολῇ, τὰς διαφορὰς τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἐκδιδάσκων, ἐν τούτοις, Ἐάν τις ἴδῃ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἁμαρτάνοντα ἁμαρτίαν μὴ πρὸς θάνατον. Strom. ii. p. 389.

§ Not. in Epist. Barnab. p. 6.

3. The phrase, The word that ye have heard, the truth you have received, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, seems most properly to agree to them, to whom it was necessary that the word of God should be first preached. (Acts xiii. 41.)

4. This church, being that church from whence the word came out to all other churches, who all received of her spiritual things, she may on that account, by the apostle of the circumcision, be well styled κυρία, as being the lady and mother of all other churches: and so we find, that anciently both she and her bishops were at first preferred before other bishops and churches; whence the emperor Justinus,* in his epistle to pope Hormisda, saith, That all churches favour the church of Jerusalem, as being the mother of all churches. But yet, if this Epistle was written after the destruction of Jerusalem, this interpretation cannot stand.

[3] Ver. 2. Εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, For ever.] This seems to assert the perpetuity and indefectibility of the church of God; for where the truth of the gospel is for ever, there must be a church for ever.

[4] Ver. 4. Ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, In the truth:] i. e. In the doctrine of Christ, as the Father hath commanded, saying, This is my beloved Son, hear him. (Matt. xvii. 5.)

[5] Ver. 7. Ἐρχόμενον ἐν σαρκὶ, Coming in the flesh.] It appears from the epistle of Ignatius to the church of Smyrna, that there were then heretics, or rather infidels,† who denied that Jesus Christ had taken upon him true flesh, saying, He only had the appearance of it, and suffered only in appearance: and these are thought to be the followers of Simon Magus, who, taking upon him to be Christ, said, that he ‡ appeared in Judea as a man, not being so, and seemed to suffer, when he did not so. Saturninus,§ one of his followers, taught, that Christ only appeared as a man, and suffered in appearance only. But the apostle could not here put in this caution against him, because he was not yet in being when this Epistle was indited. According to the other rendering of the words, denying Jesus Christ who is come in the flesh, they will signify the same as denying him to be the Messiah, and so respect the unbelieving Jews, and be designed to establish them to whom he wrote, against that apostacy which was then among the Jewish converts.

[6] Ver. 8. Μισθὸν πλήρη, That we lose not——a full reward.] Hence it follows, that it is not only lawful, but is the duty of a Christian, to serve God, with respect to the recompence of reward. 2. That they who once walked in the truth, as they had received a commandment, (ver. 4.) had Christian charity, (ver. 5.) even that love which enabled them to walk according to God's commandment, (ver. 6.) might lose those things which they had wrought.

[7] Ver. 9. Ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ, He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ.] These words being in sense the same with those we find, 1 John ii. 22—24. seem to shew, that the doctrine of Christ, here mentioned, is this fundamental doctrine, that Jesus is the Christ: and then, the not abiding in it, must be the apostatizing from it to Judaism; which St. Paul and the apostles of the circumcision so much laboured to prevent.

[8] Ver. 18. Χαίρειν αὐτῷ μὴ λέγετε, Bid him not God speed.] This precept seems to be taken from the Jews, who were forbid to say אשרי, God speed, to a man that was excommunicated, or was doing any evil action. Hence it is forbidden by their canons,* to say, God speed to a man that is ploughing on the sabbath-day. They also are forbid to come within four cubits of a heretic, or of a person excommunicated; and much more, to admit him into their houses. But yet this doth not forbid us to shew humanity towards a distressed heretic (seeing he ceaseth not to be of the number of those whom we should pity, and pray for); but only is a prohibition from doing any thing, which imports a consent to, or approbation of, his evil actions.

ANNOTATIONS.

[1] ἸΩΑΝΝΟΥ τοῦ ἀποστόλου ἐπιστολὴ καθολικὴ τρίτη, i. e. The Third Epistle General of the apostle John.] That this Epistle was written by the author of the First and Second, and therefore by St. John the apostle, appears by the agreement of them in words and phrases. For,

First, The elder, ver. 1. I rejoiced greatly, that thou walkest in the truth, ver. 3. He that doeth good, is of God; he that doeth evil, hath not seen God; are the usual phrases of the First and Second Epistles.

Secondly, Those words, I have no greater joy, than to hear that my children walk in the truth; are in sense the same with the fourth verse of the Second Epistle. The thirteenth and fourteenth verses are in words the same with the twelfth verse of that Epistle.

Thirdly, Those words, ver. 12. And we bear witness, and ye know that our witness is true, do characterize this apostle: for as they are words of confirmation, importing an apostolical authority, so are they twice used by this apostle, John xix. 35. xxi. 24. and by him only.

[2] Ver. 1. Gaius.] This Gaius, who is here commended for his charity to, and entertainment both of the brethren and strangers, (ver. 5.) and especially of those who went out from the church of Jerusalem, to preach the gospel among the gentiles, and who had given testimony of his love, before the church, seems to be Gaius of Corinth, styled by St. Paul, Gaius, my host, and of the whole church, Rom. xvi. 23. where there is intimation of his charity to the brethren, and to himself, given by St. Paul to those at Rome; and so a testimony of it, from one of them who went out to preach the gospel among the gentiles, taking nothing of them. And indeed Paul and Barnabas went out upon this errand, first from Antioch, by the direction of the Spirit, (Acts xiii. 4.) then from Jerusalem, being sent by that church to Antioch; (Acts xv. 30.) and they went out, ὑπὲρ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, for the name of Christ, (ver. 26.) taking nothing of the gentiles. (1 Cor. ix. 5, 6.) So did also Titus and Timothy, and all that were sent by St. Paul to Achaia: (2 Cor. xii. 17, 18.) so did they at Thessalonica; (1 Thess. ii. 9.) and so did none of the rest of the apostles, or brethren of the Lord: (1 Cor. ix. 5, 6.) so that we have no ground from Scripture to refer this to any other. And whereas it is said, that Gaius of Corinth was the convert of St. Paul, 1 Cor. i. 14. whereas this Gaius is here styled one of St. John's children, and so must be supposed to have been the convert of St. John: to this it may be answered, that St. John calls all to whom he writes, his children, 1 John ii. 1. 12. 18. 28. iii. 7. 18. v. 21. and so the word children signifies with him no more than the word Christian brethren; and the elders and fathers being oft of the same import, he, styling himself an elder, may well call them he writes to, children.

[3] Ver. 4. Ἵνα ἀκούω, Than to hear.] This construction of the conjunction ἵνα, saith Betuleius, is sufficient to shew that this is the Epistle of St. John, it being almost peculiar to him to use this conjunction for ὅτε, or ὅταν, or ἢ ἵνα· as, John xv. 8. In this is my Father glorified, ἵνα, when you bring forth much fruit: and, ver. 13. Greater love than this hath no man, i. e. ἵνα, than that a man lay down his life for the brethren; xvi. 2. The time will come, ἵνα, when they will put you out of the synagogues: and, ver. 32. The hour cometh, ἵνα, when you shall be scattered. (See note on 1 John iv. 17.)

[4] Ver. 6. Οὓς προπέμψας ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, Whom if you bring forward, as is worthy of God;] i. e. As it is fit to receive the ministers of God: so, to receive Phebe, ἀξίως τῶν ἁγίων, is to receive her, as becometh Christians to receive the saints. (Rom. xvi. 2.) The word προπέμψας, is the word still used concerning them who are to be sent forward in preaching the gospel, or in their travels concerning the affairs of the church. (See Acts xv. 3. xx. 38. xxi. 5. Rom. xv. 24. 1 Cor. xvi. 6. 11. 2 Cor. i. 16. Tit. iii. 13.)

[5] Ver. 7. Ὑπὲρ γὰρ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ ἐξῆλθον, For his name's sake they went forth.] That is, saith one, They were expelled, or cast out; referring this to the Christians, who, by the persecution of the unbelieving Jews, were driven from Jerusalem. (Acts viii. 1.) But, first, the word ἐξῆλθον, they went forth, is only used in the forcible sense, when mention is made of devils going forth, from those they possessed, at Christ's command, and never of any Christians expelled from any place for the profession of Christianity. Secondly, The apostle speaks manifestly here of those who went out as the apostles and ministers of Christ to preach to the gentiles; whereas they of the dispersion, mentioned Acts viii. 1. went out to avoid persecutions, and preached to the Jews only, not thinking it lawful to converse with, or preach to, the gentiles. (Acts xi. 19.)

[6] Ver. 9. Ἐγραψα, I wrote.] I had written, so the Vulgar: I would have writ, so the Syriac: the Hebrews often use the præteritum for the plusquam perfectum: and Vossius observes of the aorist, that it is so called, because it is used sometimes for the perfect, sometimes for the preterperfect tense; and then ἔγραψα may be rendered, I had written. (See examples of this nature, note on 1 Cor. v. 9.) The apostle then seems here to obviate an objection, why he writes to Gaius a single person, and not to the whole church; declaring, that he would have writ to the church, but then Diotrephes and his party would have hindered the effect of his writing. Now who this Diotrephes was, is wholly uncertain: I see no ground for the conjecture of Grotius, that he was a gentile convert, who would not admit those Jews, who professing Christianity, still observed the rites of the law, into the Christian assemblies. Esthius, on the contrary, conjectures, that he was one of those Jewish zealots who held it necessary, that even the gentile converts should be circumcised, and observe the law; and rejected those who had declared for the contrary, as we know from St. Paul, and the council at Jerusalem, St. John had done: and that there were men in Corinth and Galatia, who, upon this account, opposed the apostles, we learn from those Epistles; but read not of any gentile converts who would not receive the weak Jews, or be hospitable to them, on the account of their observance of the law, much less of any of them who opposed themselves to the apostles upon this account. Moreover, the subject of the apostle's writing, being to exhort Christians to receive them, who had gone out to preach the gospel among the gentiles, taking nothing of them; and all that did so, as far as we know any thing of them, being against these impositions, the apostle could not fear they should not be received, because observers of the law; but, on the contrary, because they were dead to the law.

[7] Ver. 10. Ὑπομνήσω, I will remember his works.] Private offences against ourselves must be forgiven, and forgotten; but when the offence, εἰς τὴν πίστιν ἐμπόδιον φέρει, is an impediment to the faith, and very prejudicial to the church, it is to be opposed, and openly reproved.

GENERAL EPISTLE OF ST. JUDE.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

HAVING proved, note on ver. 1. that Jude the apostle was the author of this Epistle, I have nothing more to add, by way of preface to it, but the words of the learned Dr. Lightfoot, which are these:

"As the Second Epistle of St. Peter, and this of Jude, are very near akin, in style, matter, and subject; so it is fairly conjecturable, that they were not far removed in time, speaking both of wicked ones, and wickedness, at the same height and ripeness. It may be Jude stands up in the charge of his brother James among the circumcision of Judea, and directs his Epistle to all those who were sanctified and preserved in those apostatizing times, as his brother had done to all the twelve tribes in general.

"In citing the story of Michael the archangel, contending with the devil about the body of Moses, ver. 9. he doth but the same that St. Paul doth, in naming Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. iii. 8. namely, allege a story which was current, and owned among that nation, though there was no such thing in Scripture; and so he argueth with them, from their own authors and concessions: for among the Talmudists, there seems to be something like the relics of such a matter; viz. of Michael and the angel of death disputing, or discoursing, about fetching away the soul of Moses.

"His alleging the prophecy of Enoch, is an arguing of the very like nature; as reciting and referring to some known and common tradition that they had among them. To this purpose, the book Sepher Jesher, a Hebrew writer, speaketh of Enoch after such a tenor; and in both these he useth their own testimonies against themselves, as if he should have said at large, These men speak evil of dignities; whereas they have, and own a story for current, that even Michael the archangel did not speak evil of the devil, when he was striving with him about the body of Moses: and whereas they shew and own a prophecy of Enoch, of God coming to judgment, these are the very men to whom this matter is to be applied." Which words give a sufficient answer to the only objection made against the authority of this book; viz. that it cites apocryphal writings.

1. JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and [1] brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called (Gr. to the called, who have been sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in (the faith of) Jesus Christ):

2. Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me (Gr. I thought it necessary) to write unto you, and exhort you, that you should earnestly contend for [2] the faith which was once delivered to the saints.

4. For there are certain men crept in unawares (Gr. for certain men have entered, viz. into the church), who were of old [3] ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, [4] turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denying the only [5] Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

5. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though you once [6] knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people (of Israel, of whom you are a part) out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed [7] them that believed not.

6. And the angels [8] which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day.

7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to [9] fornication, and going after strange (Gr. other) flesh, are [10] set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

8. Likewise also [11] these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities.

9. Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil, (he disputed [12] about the body of Moses,) durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee.

10. But these speak evil of [13] those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves.

11. Woe unto them! for they have gone [14] in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished [15] in the gainsaying of Core.

12. These are [16] spots in your [17] feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear (of intemperance, or eating things offered to idols): [18] clouds they are without water, carried about of winds: [19] trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots

13. [20] Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; [21] wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

14. And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, [22] prophesied of (Gr. to) these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh [23] with ten thousand of his saints,

15. To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him.

16. These are [24] murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh [25] great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration [26] because of advantage.

17. But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before (by) the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ;

18. How that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. (See note on 2 Pet. iii. 2, 3.)

19. These be they [27] who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit.

20. But ye, beloved, building up yourselves in your most holy faith, praying in [28] the Holy Ghost,

21. [29] Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

22. And of some have compassion, [30] making a difference (betwixt the beguilers through subtilty, and the beguiled through simplicity):

23. And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire, [31] hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

24. Now unto him that is able (and willing to do his part, see note on Rom. xiv. 4.) to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy,

25. To the only wise God (who alone is infinite in wisdom, and hath wisdom from himself, and who is) our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power (ascribed), both now and ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἀδελφὸς Ἰακώβου, The brother of James.] This characteristic is sufficient to assure us, this Epistle can belong only to Jude the apostle, (distinguished from Judas Iscariot by this title, that he was Judas the brother of James, Luke vi. 16.) and to confirm the title given to this Epistle by the ancients, The General Epistle of Jude the apostle: this being a plain demonstration of the point, Grotius will have these words, The brother of James, to be an addition of some transcriber; but this being said without any proof, lays the whole Scripture uncertain, since every man may say, if that will be sufficient without proof, that what he dislikes is the addition of some transcriber. Tertullian* is positive that Enoch "apud Judam apostolum testimonium possidet," hath the testimony of Jude the apostle to confirm his prophecy; and among the apostles of Christ, Origen† reckons Peter, the writer of two Epistles, and James and Jude. That in this Epistle he doth not style himself an apostle, can be no argument to conclude he was not an apostle; since the same argument will prove, that St. James and St. John, and even St. Paul, were no apostles.

[2] Ver. 3. Τῇ ἅπαξ παραδοθείσῃ πίστει, The faith once delivered to the saints.] Here, saith Esthius, the apostle insinuates that which the fathers teach; viz. that nothing can be added to the faith, because it was delivered all at once as a depositum, so to be kept that nothing ought to be added to it, or taken from it. Whence it is evident to a demonstration, that the new articles added by the Trent council to the Apostles' Creed, can be no articles of the Christian faith, as being not delivered by Christ, or his apostles, to the world, nor known to the Christians for many ages after their decease.

[3] Ver. 4. Προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα, Before ordained to this condemnation.] Gr. Of whom it was before written, that this should be their condemnation: for, that this cannot be meant of any Divine ordination, or appointment of them to eternal condemnation, is evident, first, because it cannot be thought, without horror, that God doth thus ordain men to perdition before they had any being. Secondly, The word κρῖμα here relates not unto sin, but punishment, the fruit of sin: so, Mark xii. 40. They shall receive, περισσότερον κρῖμα, greater punishment. Thinkest thou this, O man, that thou shalt avoid, τὸ κρῖμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the judgment, or punishment, of God! Now God ordaineth none to punishment but sinners and ungodly men, as these persons here are styled. And, thirdly, these were men of whom it was before written, or prophesied, that they should be condemned for their wickedness: for, ver. 14. Enoch προεφήτευσε prophesied before to (or of) these men, saying, That God would come ποιῆσαι κρῖσιν, to do judgment upon all, and to reprove all the ungodly among them; and in the parallel place of St. Peter, (2 Pet. ii. 3.) their punishment is styled τὸ κρῖμα ἔκπαλαι, the punishment long ago denounced against them; viz. that they should be reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished, (ver. 9.) that they should perish in their corruption, (ver. 12.) they being the men to whom the blackness of darkness was reserved for ever, (ver. 13.) And this is the very thing that both St. Peter, from ver. 4. to 13. and St. Jude, from this verse to ver. 16. set themselves to prove: and this also is the import of the word προεγράφη, Rom. xv. 4. ὅσα προεγράφη, whatsoever things were before written, were written for our instruction; and Gal. iii. 1. (see the note there.) He speaks this of them (saith Œcumenius*), because St. Peter and St. Paul had before spoken of them, that in the last time there should come such deceivers; and before them Christ himself, saying, Many shall come in my name, and deceive many. And against this interpretation of Œcumenius and Dr. Hammond, there lies only this objection, that the judgment mentioned by Christ and his apostles, not long before, cannot so properly be called κρῖμα τὸ ἔκπαλαι, the judgment long ago denounced; nor could these ungodly men be styled οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι, the men prophesied of old, on that account, so well as if this be referred to the prophecy of Enoch, Jude 14. or to the words spoken before by the holy prophets, 2 Pet. iii. 2. For ἔκπαλαι and πάλαι joined with προγεγραμμένοι, ibid. seem plainly to import some ancient time in which this judgment was denounced against these ungodly men.

[4] Μετατιθέντες, Turning the grace of God into lasciviousness.] This agrees exactly with the lewd doctrines of the Nicolaitans, mentioned note on 2 Pet. ii. and as exactly with the doctrine of Simon Magus, that they who believed in him and his Helena might freely do what they listed, "secundùm enim ipsius gratiam salvari, sed non secundùm operas justas," men being to be saved by his grace, and not by works. (Iren. lib. i. cap. 29. Theodoret. Hær. Fab. lib. i. cap. 1.)

[5] Καὶ τὸν μόνον δεσπότην Θεὸν, καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἀρνούμενοι.] These words may be thus rendered, And denying Jesus Christ our only master, God and Lord. And that they ought to be thus rendered, is argued, 1. because one article only is put before all these words, δεσπότης, Θεὸς, Κύριος, which shews they all belong to the same person. 2. Because the person who is here δεσπότης Θεὸς, the only master, God, is by St. Peter, 2 Pet. ii. 1. styled τὸν ἀγοράσαντα αὐτοὺς δεσπότην, the Lord that bought them: now it is Christ who bought us with the price of his own blood. To the first of these arguments Grotius and Woltzogenius answer, That it is common in Scripture to affix one and the same article to divers persons, and in particular to God the Father, and to Christ: as, v. g. No fornicator, or unclean person, shall have any inheritance in the kingdom, τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ, of Christ and of God, Eph. v. 5. I charge thee ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Tim. v. 21. which, 2 Tim. iv. 1. is τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, and 2 Pet. i. 2. in the knowledge, τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Ἰησοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, of God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. (See 1 Tim. vi. 13.) To the second argument it may be answered, That in Scripture, not only Christ, but the Father, is said to have bought and purchased us, Acts xx. 28. 1 Cor. vi. 20. and that he is the person intended by St. Peter, see the note there. And seeing the word δεσπότης is never elsewhere ascribed to Christ, I think our version, which puts the comma after God, is without just exception. Note also, that Simon Magus denied both the God of Israel and Jesus Christ, declaring, that he himself was that * infinite Power, which appeared to the Samaritans as the Father, and to the Jews as the Son of God; and so he and his followers denied both the Father and the Son.

[6] Ver. 5. Εἰδότας ὑμᾶς ἅπαξ τοῦτο.] The Jews knowing the destruction, which God brought upon the unbelieving Jews in the wilderness, as well when St. Jude writ, as before, it seemeth not so proper to say to them, you knew this once, as to say, you knew it before, which seems to be the import of the word ἅπαξ, ver. 3. and in those words of Samson, Judg. xvi. 21. ἐξελεύσομαι ὡς ἅπαξ, I will go forth as before, and, xx. 31. The Benjamites began to smite them, ὡς ἅπαξ καὶ ἅπαξ, saying, They flee before us, ὡς τὸ πρῶτον; as before. Or, secondly, it may be rendered fully, plainly, or certainly, for τὸ ἅπαξ, saith Phavorinus, is put ἀντὶ τοῦ ὄντως, βεβαίως, for verily and firmly; and Suidas saith it is used ἀντὶ τοῦ διόλου ὁλοσχερῶς for entirely and fully, and so it answers to the Hebrew achatz, or achad, which signifies truly, or certainly, and is rendered by the Septuagint, ἅπαξ.

[7] Τοὺς μὴ πιστεύσαντας, Them that believed not;] i. e. Saith Grotius, Those that obeyed not, for such shew they believed not at all, or not aright. But this note is needless here; for the Scripture expressly saith, They perished in the wilderness, because they believed not in God, but tempted, i. e. distrusted, him, ten times, Numb. xiv. 22. Psal. cvi. 24. and St. Paul, We see then they could not enter in because of unbelief, Heb. iii. 18, 19. Heb. iv. 2.

[8] Ver. 6. Μὴ τηρήσαντας τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀρχὴν, Not keeping their original estate, ἀλλὰ ἀπολιπόντας τὸ ἴδιον οἰκητήριον, but leaving their proper habitation.] That which we are to enjoy for ever, is in the style of Scripture called, τὸ ἴδιον, our own, that which is proper to us; that which we are to leave to others, τὸ ἀλλότριον, as in those words, If you have been unfaithful in that which is another man's, who will give you that which is your own? (Luke xvi. 12.) These angels being therefore primarily designed to live for ever in the highest heavens, the regions of light and bliss, they are here styled their proper habitation. (See note on 2 Pet. ii. 4.)

[9] Ver. 7. Τὸν ὅμοιον τούτοις τρόπον ἐκπορνεύσασαι, Fornicating then, and going after other flesh in like manner,] As these do now. Of both these crimes the Nicolaitans were notoriously guilty: for, first, they held that matrimony was a mere human institution, that obliged no man's conscience; and so did "indiscretè vivere," live without making any difference betwixt one woman and another. And, secondly, they practised unnatural lusts, and Sodomitical copulations, as may be proved from the testimonies of Irenæus,* Clemens of Alexandria, the Constitutions of the Apostles, Epiphanius, and others.

[10] Πρόκεινται δεῖγμα, πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκην ὑπέχουσαι, Are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.] That this is spoken not of the cities themselves, but of the inhabitants which dwelt in them, i. e. of them, who had given themselves over to fornication, and gone after flesh, is evident; but yet I conceive they are said to suffer the vengeance of eternal fire, not because their souls are at present punished in hell-fire, but because they and their cities perished by that fire from heaven, which brought a perpetual and irreparable destruction on them and their cities: for, first, we have proved, note on 2 Pet. ii. 6. iii. 7. that even the devils themselves are not tormented at present in that infernal fire, but only will be cast into it at the day of judgment; and therefore neither do the wicked Sodomites yet suffer in those flames. Secondly, I would admonish you,' saith the apostle, though you once knew this, that Sodom and Gomorrha thus suffered the vengeance of eternal fire. Now from the history of Genesis, and the writings of the prophets, they might know that these cities, and the inhabitants of them, were overthrown, εἰς αἰῶνα, with a perpetual desolation; (Zeph. ii. 9.) but they could not know from thence that their souls were afterward cast into hell-fire. Thirdly, Τὸ δεῖγμα, an example, is to be taken from something visible to, or knowable by, all who were to be terrified by it, especially when it is δεῖγμα προκείμενον, an example manifested, and proposed: now such was not the punishment of their souls in hell-fire; but nothing was more known and celebrated among authors, sacred and profane, Jewish, Christian, and heathen writers, than τὸ πῦρ καταβάσιον ἐπὶ Πενταπόλεως, the fire that fell down upon Pentapolis, or the five cities of Sodom, they being mentioned still in Scripture as the cities which God overthrew with a perpetual desolation; in the apocryphal writings, the waste land that yet smoketh, and the plants bearing fruit that never come to ripeness, being, saith the book of Wisdom, μαρτύριον τῆς πονηρίας, a testimony of their wickedness, (Wisd. x. 7.) and of the Divine vengeance on them for it. The author of the history of the Maccabees saith, that God destroying them by fire and brimstone, (Macc. iii. 2. 5.) παράδειγμα τοῖς ἐπιγινομένοις κατέστησεν, left them an example to the ages to come. Philo saith,† that the cinders, brimstone, and smoke, and the obscure flame as it were of a fire burning, yet appearing about Syria, are memorials of the perpetual evils which happened to them. Josephus adds,‡ that the things which are said of Sodom, ἔχει πίστιν ἀπὸ τῆς ὄψεως, are confirmed by ocular inspection, there being yet visible some relics of the fire coming down from heaven, and the shadows of the five cities. This region, say Clemens Romanus,§ and other Christian writers, being condemned by fire and brimstone, made it apparent that God reserves the wicked for punishment and stripes. Even heathen writers* do confess that it was traditionally received, that formerly there were fruitful fields, and large cities, which were afterward consumed by thunder and lightning. And, fourthly, this sense may be farther confirmed from the parallel place of St. Peter, who saith, that God reducing the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha to ashes, condemned (the inhabitants of) them by that overthrow, proposing them for an example of his vindictive justice upon them who afterward should live ungodly: where plainly the τέφρωσις, the reduction of those cities with their inhabitants into ashes, or the burning them by fire and brimstone falling down from heaven, is mentioned as the thing which placed them as an example of God's vengeance on the ungodly to all future ages; nor could any thing be a more fit example of it: for since St. Peter hath informed us, that the heavens and the earth that now are, are reserved to fire against the day of judgment, and destruction of ungodly men, when the earth and the works that are therein shall be burnt up, what could be a more exact emblem of that day, when God will come in flaming fire to take vengeance on the wicked, and leave them burning with the earth for ever, than was this burning of the cities and the inhabitants of Sodom, by fire and brimstone falling down from heaven? Nor is there any thing more common and familiar in Scripture, than to represent a thorough and irreparable vastation, whose effects and signs should be still remaining, by the word αἰώνιος, which we here render eternal. I will set thee, εἰς ἔρημον αἰώνιον, in places desolate of old, Ezek. xxvi. 20. I will destroy thee, and thou shalt be no more, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, for ever, ver. 21. I will make thee ἐρημίαν αἰώνιον, a perpetual desolation, and thy cities shall be built no more, xxxv. 9. (See also Ezek. xxxvi. 2. Isa. lviii. 12.) They have caused them to stumble in their ways, to make their land desolate, and σύριγμα αἰώνιον, a perpetual hissing, Jer. xviii. 15, 16. I will bring you, ὀνειδισμὸν αἰώνιον, an everlasting reproach and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten, Jer. xxiii. 40. xxv. 9. I will make the land of the Chaldeans a perpetual desolation, θήσομαι αὐτοὺς εἰς ἀφανισμὸν αἰώνιον, they shall sleep, ὕπνον αἰώνιον, a perpetual sleep, Jer. li. 39. And this especially is threatened, where the destruction of a nation or people is likened to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrha; thus, Babylon shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrha, οὐ κατοικηθήσεται εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα χρόνον, It shall never be inhabited, Isa. xiii. 19, 20. and again, Jer. l. 40. The like is said of Edom, Jer. xlix. 17, 18. and of Moab, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrha, ἠφανισμένη εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, a perpetual desolation, Zeph. ii. 9.

Ver. 7, 8.] The grammatical exposition of these words seems to be thus: Even as, ὡς καὶ, and as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the other cities who were like to them in fornication and unnatural lusts, were exemplarily punished; ὁμοίως μέντοι καὶ οἱ οὗτοι ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, so likewise do these filthy dreamers act, defiling the flesh as they did: and as the men of Sodom contemned the good angels, which came to [11] Οἱ ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, These filthy dreamers.] These dreamers of dreams, or vain imaginations; for I find not that the word ἐνυπνιάζω bears any impure sense, as ὀνειρώττω sometimes doth. The apostle therefore seems to refer to the delirious fancies of their filthy Æones, Prunice and Calacauth, which gave the rise to all the filthiness the Nicolaitans committed, and after them the gnostics and the Carpocratians. (See the note on 2 Pet. ii. 11.) And therefore Clemens of Alexandria* saith of these Nicolaitans, and their successors the gnostics, and the Carpocratians, that St. Jude speaks of them in these words prophetically, the Nicolaitans being only then in being, and the gnostics and Carpocratians succeeding them.

[12] Ver. 9. Περὶ τοῦ Μωσέως σώματος, About the body of Moses.] That the body of the Jews, and their service, should be here called the body of Moses, and that these words are to be referred to Zech. iii. 1. seems not very probable, seeing in that prophet there is no mention of Michael, or of the body, or the death of Moses: nor doth Onias speak of the body of Moses, 2 Macc. xv. 12. but περὶ παντὸς Ἰουδαίων συστήματος, of the whole Jewish nation. Moreover, that Moses was not buried by the Jews, we learn from the Scripture, which saith, No man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day, Deut. xxxiv. 6. and therefore Philo saith,† he was buried χερσὶν οὐ ϑνηταῖς, ἀλλ' ἀϑανάτοις δυνάμεσιν, not by men, but angels: that there was an altercation betwixt Michael the archangel, and Samael the prince of devils, about the body of Moses, we learn from the traditions of the Jews;‡ and it is most probable it was not only that his sepulchre might be unknown, lest the Jews, who were prone to idolatry, should worship him; but about the ascent of it into heaven, he being taken away as Enoch and Elias were, and not dying the common death of all men (which Satan contended he ought to do,§ διὰ τὸν τοῦ Αἰγυπτίου φόνον, for killing the Egyptian), but disappearing only. Hence the Jews say, "ascendit ad ministrandum Excelso," that he ascended to minister to the Lord. And Philo saith,‖ God brought him πλησίον ἑαυτοῦ, near to himself, saying to him, Stand with me, and that by the Word of God, μετανίσταται, he was translated, whence he was present with Elias at the transfiguration of our Lord. But see the note on Matt. xvii. 3.

[14] Ver. 11. Ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ τοῦ Κάϊν, In the way of Cain.] Seducing their brethren, as he did, to their destruction. Ἢ καὶ σπερμοφαγοῦντες τὸν δυνάμει ἀδελφὸν ἀποκτίννυσιν, ὃν ἡ τοῦ σπέρματος τελεσφορία ἤνεγκεν ἂν εἰς βίον. Œcumenius.—After the error of Balaam.] See the note on 2 Pet. ii. 15.

[15] Τῇ ἀντιλογίᾳ τοῦ Κορὲ, And perished in the gainsaying of Core.] i. e. Saith Grotius, shall certainly perish in it: for as he, so they, being unworthy, usurp διδασκαλικὸν, the dignity of teachers: being, saith St. Peter, ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι, false teachers, (2 Pet. ii. 1.) pretending to be inspired prophets, when indeed they are ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, dreamers of vain dreams; and to be apostles, when they are only false apostles.

[16] Ver. 12. Σπιλάδες, Spots.] Σπίλας πέτρα τις, the word signifies a rock, saith Phavorinus. They are hollow stones or rocks in the sea, against which ships split, say the Lexicons; Σπιλάδες τοῖς πλέουσιν ὀλέϑριοι ἀπροσδοκήτως ἐπιγενόμεναι, rocks which are pernicious to navigators, who fall upon them unawares; to which these persons are compared, because ἀνέλπιστον κακὸν, they bring an unexpected mischief upon them that feast with them.

[17] Ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις, In their feasts of charity.] I see no necessity of referring this to the Christians' love-feasts, celebrated after the holy sacrament. It is observed by Dr. Lightfoot, note on 1 Cor. x. 16. that in the evening of the sabbath the Jews had their κοινωνία, or communion, when the inhabitants of the same city met together in a common place to eat together; and that they had near to their synagogues their ξενοδόχια, or places where strangers were entertained at the public charge, and where they had their dormitory: these surely were more likely places for such persons to come to, and play their pranks in, than the love-feasts of the Christians.

[18] Νεφέλαι ἄνυδροι, Clouds without water, carried about with the wind.] Such clouds, saith Œcumenius, refresh no places with their showers, for they have no water in them, but they blacken and darken the places over which they hang: even so these men distil the waters of life upon none, but blacken them with their filthy practices, being moved to them by the impulse of Satan, as these clouds are moved by the winds.

[19] Φθινοπωρινὰ, Trees without fruit, twice dead.] i. e. Saith Œcumenius, by casting their fruit and their leaves too, which give a beauty to them: and something like this, saith he, happens to these men, who twice die, casting off their fruit, διὰ τῆς σπερμοφαγίας, and putting away the beauty of a sober conversation; whence they are rooted up out of the garden of the church.

[20] Ver. 13. Κύματα ἄγρια, Raging waves of the sea.] To which, saith he, they are likened for the instability of their life, καὶ ἐκ τῆς εὐδιαλύτου αἰσχρότητος· τοιοῦτος γὰρ ὁ πρὸς ὃν παρεικάσϑησαν, ἀφρὸς τῶν κυμάτων.

[21] Ἀστέρες πλανῆται, Wandering stars.] The Jews, saith Grotius, were wont to call them who took upon them to be teachers, stars: so the apostle calls these false teachers wandering stars; because they kept not their station, but wandered from the truth, having no true light in them.

[22] Ver. 14. Προεφήτευσε, Prophesied.] From these words we learn, that Enoch was a prophet, which he shewed even in the name he gave to his son Methuselah, by the spirit of prophecy, which signifies, saith Bochartus,* That when he is dead shall ensue an inundation of waters; whence that of Stephanus concerning Enoch or Hannock, ἐδόϑη δὲ χρησμὸς ὅτι τούτου τελευτήσαντος πάντες διαφϑαρήσονται, there was an oracle given out, that when he was dead all men should be destroyed.

Προεφήτευσε τούτοις, He before prophesied to them.] This is said very appositely, the prophecy of Enoch being directed to them who, in like manner, had corrupted their ways by carnality or fornication, (Gen. vi. 2.) and by idolatry, (iv. 26.)

[22] Ἐν μυριάσιν ἁγίαις, With his ten thousand saints.] i. e. With his glorious attendance of myriads of angels; so called, Heb. xii. 22. So was he present at Mount Sinai when he delivered the law; whence the Psalmist saith, The chariot of God is myriads of angels: so the Chaldee; And the Lord is among them as in Sinai, Psal. lxviii. 18. So, Deut. xxxii. 2. The Lord cometh from Sinai with his myriads of holy ones: with myriads of holy angels, say the Talmud of Jerusalem, and Jonathan; and Zech. xiv. 5. The Lord my God shall come, and all his holy ones with him, i. e. and all his guards of angels; those who attend him sitting on his throne, (Dan. vii. 10.) or coming to execute judgment. (Matt. xvi. 27. xxv. 31. 2 Thess. i. 7.)

[23] Ver. 16. Murmurers and complainers.] I find nothing of this nature applicable to the Nicolaitans and gnostics in church-history; only the apostle having said, Be ye not idolaters, nor fornicators, with respect to them, 1 Cor. x. 7, 8. adds, Neither be ye murmurers, ver. 10. And the Pseud-Ignatius calls them συκοφάντας, malos calumniatores, Ep. ad Tral. §. 11. But the Jews, of whom the Nicolaitans were a part, were notorious for their complaints against that Providence, which seemed to neglect, and deal so hardly with such zealots for God as they were, as you may see in Joseph. de Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 34. p. 990. B.

[24] Ὑπέρογκα, Great swelling words.] This Dr. Hammond refers to Simon Magus, exalting himself above all that is called God; but ὑπέρογκα being only proud swelling words, called by St. Peter in the parallel place ὑπέρογκα ματαιότητος, swelling words of vanity, by which they allured, through the lusts of the flesh, to lasciviousness, those who were clean escaped from them that live in error; (2 Pet. ii. 18.) I think it may more probably refer to the words relating to their lusts mentioned in the note upon that place.

[25] Ὠφελείας χάριν, Because of advantage.] See note on 2 Pet. ii. 3. 14.

[26] Ver. 19. Οἱ ἀποδιορίζοντες ἑαυτούς, Separating themselves.] Of the Jewish zealots we read, that they separated and withdrew from all who were not circumcised: (Acts xi. 3. Gal. ii. 12.) but of the Nicolaitans and gnostics we read no such thing, but rather that they assembled with the Christians, or Jews, in their feasts of love, (ver. 12. 2 Pet. ii. 13.) Ἀποδιορίζεσθαι therefore, as it respects them, may rather signify that they distinguished themselves from others as more perfect, and as φύσει πνευματικοὶ, *by nature spiritual, styling all other Christians ψυχικοὶ, animal men; which perhaps made the apostle return this character upon them, as being truly sensual persons.

[27] Ver. 20. Ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, In the Holy Ghost.] The Holy Ghost, in the New Testament, always signifies some afflatus, or χάρισμα, of the Spirit; and seeing the person of the Holy Ghost cannot here well be understood, it seems to follow, that the apostle here speaketh of that gift of prayer, which by the Holy Ghost was conferred upon them in their public assemblies and Christian exercises, where they prayed by the Spirit, (1 Cor. xiv. 15.) and spake to one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, being filled with the Spirit: (Eph. v. 18, 19. Colos. iii. 16.) and so this passage is interpreted by Œcumenius† and Dr. Hammond.

[28] Ver. 21. Ἑαυτοὺς τηρήσατε, Keep yourselves, &c.] Hence it is evident, that we are not so kept by the power of God, but that something must be done on our parts, to preserve ourselves in the Divine favour. And also, that men once in this state, may neglect to keep themselves in the love of God.

[29] Ver. 22. Διακρινόμενοι, Making, or putting, a difference.] Discerning which of them are to be treated with this mercy, which of them with sharp reproof. That this is the true sense of the word διακρινόμενοι, see note on Rom. xiv. 23. Œcumenius, and some manuscripts, read not ἐλεεῖτε, of some have compassion, but ἐλέγχετε, some reprove, putting a difference betwixt them who are to be rejected, and them who only are to be reproved.

[30] Ver. 23. Ἐσπιλωμένον χιτῶνα, Hating even the garment.] To hate and fly the garments spotted with the flesh, is only to hate every thing that doth defile, though in the least degree, for so the leprous and unclean garment did. This text can therefore yield no argument against the use of our ceremonies, till it be proved there is some defilement or impurity in the use of them.

PARAPHRASE

ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

REVELATION OF ST. JOHN.

By MOSES LOWMAN.

A

PARAPHRASE

REVELATION OF ST. JOHN.

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

SIR JOSEPH JEKYLL,

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

I BEG leave to present to your Honour, an attempt to give some light to the book of the Revelation, in order to make it more generally useful than we can hope it will be, while neglected, as too dark and difficult to be understood.

An honest endeavour of doing service to the public, will, I am persuaded, always meet with your countenance, who have the public good so much at heart. I shall esteem it a great happiness, if the execution of this design shall appear any way worthy your Honour's approbation and patronage.

Whatever difficulty there may be, in some particular representation or expression in these prophecies, the chief intention of them seems sufficiently plain, as it is without question of great use.

Warnings and cautions against prevailing corruptions; exhortations and encouragements to faithfulness and constancy in the cause of truth and righteousness, of virtue, and piety, which abound in these prophecies; are lessons of great importance in themselves, and, experience shews, are proper for every age.

These prophecies describe a melancholy state of long and prevailing corruption; but it is the business of prophecy to foretell things as they shall really be, how afflictive soever: and when future times shew an exact conformity between the prophetic description and the real state of the world and Christianity, for a series of many hundred years, and in a great variety of circumstances, beyond all reach of guess; it will greatly confirm the evidence of the Christian religion, and in particular the inspiration of this author, one of its principal witnesses.

An accomplishment of prophecies to our own times, assures the accomplishment of what remains. Every new accomplishment gives a new attestation to the credit and authority of Christianity, a new support to the faithfulness and constancy of good men, and a strong consolation, that though a long and gloomy state of corruption is foretold, yet the same spirit of prophecy has assured us, that the cause of truth and righteousness shall be maintained during the most powerful prevalency of error and corruption, and that it shall finally and surely triumph over them in the end.

The all-wise providence of God is used to fulfil these promises, by raising up persons at several times, though few in number, who shall espouse the cause of truth and virtue, and exert themselves in the protection of it.

When persons in eminent stations, of distinguished abilities and influence, shall act steadily from a disinterested and wise concern for the good of the public, from principles of sincere piety, from unbiassed affections for truth and virtue, and with unshaken constancy in defence of impartial, civil, and religious liberty; we are directed by these prophecies to consider them, as raised by God, the guardians of truth and virtue, and set up by his providence to prevent the total suppression of them, through the prevalency of error and iniquity.

Such persons will be the delight of the wise and the good, as they are the happiness of mankind. Virtues so amiable will force applause, how much soever a greatness of mind, satisfied with virtue as its own reward, may choose to decline it.

But I consider my duty to your Honour, and will not gratify my own desires, however pleasing to myself, in what may be disagreeable to you; especially as I am sure great and public virtues can never be unknown, though never pointed out to observation.

I shall, therefore, only beg leave to express the great pleasure I have in this opportunity of giving a public testimony of that high esteem and respect, with which I am,

Your Honour's

Most faithful, and most humble servant,

MOSES LOWMAN.

PREFACE.

THE book of the Revelation, notwithstanding the pains and application of many persons of great ability and learning to explain it, seems yet, to the generality of Christians, very dark and obscure: many look upon it as a sealed book still, never to be explained to any certainty or satisfaction. No wonder, then, they account it lost labour to read or study what they can never hope to understand.

A great critic (Scaliger) was pleased to say, Calvin was wise, because he did not write upon the Revelation. And another, who has written with great reputation on the other books of the New Testament (Dr. Whitby*), confesses, he did not do it for want of wisdom; that is, as he says, because "I neither have sufficient reading nor judgment to discern the intendment of the prophecies contained in that book."

However, the book of the Revelation is, for very good reasons, received as one of the sacred books of the New Testament; the reasons for which are to be seen in many authors, and are represented, with great evidence and strength, by Sir Isaac Newton,† who observes, he does not find any book of the New Testament so strongly attested, or commented upon so early, as this.

Mr. Lardner has collected, with great care and faithfulness, the testimonies of the most early Christian writers to the books of the New Testament, in a late excellent treatise of the Credibility of the Gospel-History. I shall just mention the testimony of the most eminent, to the authority of this book as a part of the holy Scripture.

Tertullian wrote about the year of Christ 200. and so somewhat above a hundred years after the time in which St. John writ the Revelation. He observes,‡ "John, in his Apocalypse, is commanded to correct those who eat things sacrificed to idols, and commit fornication." And again, "We have churches, disciples of John; for though Marcion rejects his Revelation, the succession of bishops, traced to the original, will assure us, that John is the author of it." It is no wonder Marcion should reject the Revelation, who rejected all the Old Testament, and of the New received only the Gospel of St. Luke, and ten Epistles of St. Paul, which also he had corrupted and altered.

Somewhat before this, Clement of Alexandria,§ quotes these revelations as St. John's: "As John says in the Revelation." And he refers to them as the words of an apostle, or having the authority of apostolical writings.

Yet earlier, Theophilus, of Antioch,‖ in a book of his against the heresy of Hermogenes, makes use of testimonies from John's Apocalypse.

We have another witness of great character still nearer the times of St. John: Irenæus [writ about A. D. 178. within seventy or eighty years of him. He expressly ascribes the Revelation to John, the disciple of the Lord. His testimony to this book, as Mr. Lardner observes,¶ "is so strong and full, that considering the age of Irenæus, it seems to put it beyond all question, that it is the work of St. John the apostle and evangelist."

Still nearer the times of St. John, Mileto, bishop of Sardis,* one of the seven churches, writ a book on the Revelation of John. Some think it was an entire commentary; however that be, it will shew he esteemed it a book of canonical authority.

Justin Martyr, a person of eminent name, about the year of Christ 140. and so about fifty or sixty years after the writing this book, expressly calls it a prophecy, and ascribes it to John the apostle;† "A man from among us (says he) by name John, one of the apostles of Christ, in the revelation made to him, has prophesied." In fine,

The church, nearest the times of writing this book, received it with so full consent, that in a very few years, as Dr. Mills‡ observes, it was acknowledged and placed in the number of apostolical writings, not only by the churches of Asia, but by the neighbour churches of Syria and Samaria, by the more distant churches of Africa and Egypt, by Rome, and the other churches of Europe. Such reasons there are to receive this as one of the books of the holy Scriptures of the New Testament, that hardly any one book has more early, full, or authentic attestation given to it.

Now all who thus receive it, must acknowledge that it proceeds from a spirit of prophecy; and that spirit itself declares, i. 3. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein.

If we suppose this of the book of Revelation, as we must, if we own it to be a book of holy Scripture, we must acknowledge also, that how dark soever the words of this prophecy may be, they are yet sufficiently intelligible to be greatly useful.

Obscurity of prophecy from the nature and design of prophecy.]—Yet considering the nature and design of prophecy, the style and manner of expression used in it; we are not to expect prophecies should be as easily understood, as doctrines or precepts delivered in easy expression, plain argument, and the common familiar forms of speech. The nature and intention of prophecy was not to gratify our curiosity, to know future events, or, as it were, to tell the fortunes of the church and world, but to answer wise and good ends, to confirm our patience and constancy, to encourage our hope and trust in God, in assurance of his protection of the cause of truth and righteousness, that is, of true religion. The design of prophecy is to answer these good ends, when we might be tempted to forsake true religion, by the power of prevailing error and reigning corruption; or, when we might be greatly dejected, and despair of success, where opposition to true religion is so powerful and violent, as hardly to leave a reasonable prospect of bearing up against it. In such a state of things, which often has happened, it has been the use of prophecy, to keep up the hearts of good men with lively and affecting representations of the majesty, the power, and the goodness of God, of God's care to protect the cause of true religion, of the sure power of his providence to order all things in the world, and future course of things; the providence of God being absolute over the greatest empires and most powerful kings, to raise them up or to cast them down, to direct them to fulfil his will, and appoint them to accomplish whatever he designs, for the safety of his people. And, finally, the design of prophecy is to represent these things in such manner as shall fix our attention, and confirm our faith in the truth of God's promises, and his faithfulness, surely to accomplish his word in all things.

When such events of future time are foretold, as shall in their accomplishment confirm these sentiments of God, his goodness, power, and faithfulness, and in such strong and lively representations as shall engage the attention, and make deep impressions on the mind; they answer a very wise and useful design, and in a good sense, they are then of greater use than plainer precepts of constancy and perseverance, or plain promises of encouragement and reward, in more easy words and expressions.

There is then a manifest advantage to the intention of prophecy, in the manner and style of foretelling things to come; from whence, however, it must come to pass, that prophetic writings will be somewhat more difficult to be understood than others: and yet they are sufficiently plain to raise those sentiments of God, and his providence, and excite that faithfulness and constancy in true religion, they were designed for.

The prophecies of the Revelation of the same use with the prophecies of the Old Testament.]—Such was one great use of the prophecies of the Old Testament. They often spoke of the times of the Messiah's first appearance in the world, in a manner very suitable to encourage the faith and constancy of good men, in the several states of the Jewish church and nation.

They taught the church, that God would maintain his true religion, and protect his true worshippers, till the promised Messiah should come; but these prophecies were delivered in a manner not so easy to be understood, as the precepts, exhortations, and reproofs, in the writings of the same prophets. However, they were still plain enough to encourage the faith and patience of the church at those times, and particular enough to determine the person of the Messiah when he should appear, and to distinguish him sufficiently from every other person of the world, that should make pretensions to his character as the Christ. The ends of ancient prophecy, as a very eminent and learned interpreter of several prophets has observed, * were these: "God still seeking their good, he sends his prophets to reprove them, and exhort them to repentance; and, for comfort of the godly among them, to give them the assurance of the coming of the promised Messiah in his due time, to set all things right for their good."

In the first ages of Christianity, as well as in aftertimes, good men were apt to be greatly discouraged with an afflictive state of the church, and powerful opposition to religion; they hardly knew how to reconcile such a state of providence with what they hoped for in the kingdom of the Messiah, so kind and powerful a protector of his church.

It is easy to see how much such thoughts might disturb their minds; they had a promise of Christ's second coming, as the Jewish church had of his first appearance, but they were liable to many afflictive providences, as the former church was till the time of his appearance. It was wise and proper, by a prophecy in the Christian church, to support the minds of good men under these afflictions, with assurance of Christ's second coming, in its due time, and of the watchful providence of God over the cause of true religion in the mean time. Thus the prophecies of this book are to us in the Christian church, of the like use, that the prophecies of Christ's first appearance were to the ancient church.

Obscurity of those prophecies from interpreters.]—Though some obscurity arises from the nature and style of prophetical writings, yet, to speak freely, I conceive the obscurity of this book is not so much owing to any thing in the book itself, as to the methods taken by several to explain it, and that nothing has really so much darkened it, as the common attempts made to interpret it.

Some have been so over-curious to find some mystery in every word and every thing, that the plain and direct meaning of the spirit of prophecy has been overlooked or removed out of sight; the pure imagination of interpreters often very pretty and ingenious, but very foreign to the purpose of the prophecy, has frequently lost or set aside the true meaning of it.

Others having formed a scheme of prophecy to themselves, and fixed in their own opinions the events that were to accomplish the several parts of it, contrive how to force all things to their scheme; which not perfectly agreeing with the design and order of the book itself, the interpretation must necessarily be attended with such intricacy in the order of the prophecy, and such different and opposite application of the several parts of it, as must make it very dark, if not altogether unintelligible. And yet, where men of great name lead the way, they seldom fail of having many followers; and the more men are engaged in supporting an imagination, or arbitrary scheme, without foundation from the prophecy itself, the more they lose sight of the real meaning and true intention of it.

It is a very judicious observation of Mr. Calvin, concerning the interpretation of prophecy, "Although the vision be obscure, the design of it is not uncertain; and, if we will be content with moderate understanding, here is nothing so intricate, but we may understand the sum of the prophecy; but the curiosity of interpreters has done mischief, who, while they criticise upon every syllable, childishly trifle in many things. Nothing therefore is righter, than to attend carefully to the design of the prophet, to regard the circumstances of the time, and to follow an analogy between the signs and the things signified by them."* If to this we add such events in history, as sufficiently answer the predictions of prophecy, we have as much certainty as I think was designed by the prophecy, I am sure, as much as is sufficient to edification.

It is on this plan I propose to consider the prophecies of this book, to be content with a moderate understanding of the design of the prophecy, and of the things revealed in it; to take my scheme of the prophecy entirely from the book itself; to explain the meaning of the prophetic expressions, by a plain account of their use in the preceding prophets, from whom most of them are taken, and to verify the predictions by such known events in history, as may fairly and without force be applied to them.

This prophecy is a proper prediction of things future.]—The author of this book himself declares, that it is a proper prophecy, or prediction of things future and to come, as well as a description of the present state and condition of the churches, i. 19. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter: and, iv. 1. St. John heard a voice, which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee the things that must be hereafter.

Some of these predictions related to things not far off the time of the vision and prophecy, and which were soon to be accomplished. The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass, i. 1. And blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand, i. 3.

What period of future time this prophecy regards.]—Yet, as this revelation is designed also to shew things that must be hereafter, it will be of great help to the interpretation of it, to understand what period of time this prophecy regards. The book itself seems plainly to design a much longer period than many learned men have assigned to it. Some have supposed such expressions as these, which must shortly come to pass, and the time is at hand, and the like, point out a very short period; so that the whole prophecy should be accomplished in a few years after the vision. These expressions will indeed shew the accomplishment of the things foretold in this prophecy was soon to begin; but, I think, they can determine nothing at all concerning the time when it was to end, especially against full evidence in the same book of prophecy, that the period is much longer, and reaches from the time of the vision to the day of judgment.

To omit more general reasons, which yet have their degree of probability: in particular, the perpetual use of prophecy to the church in all ages, the wisdom and goodness of providing such support to the faith and constancy of the church, in every state of affliction, which seems to be the design, and therefore the true key of the whole Revelation, makes it probable, that the spirit of prophecy did not design this support for the church in a few of the first ages of Christianity only, but that it designed the same consolation and support for every after-age; that the faithfulness and power of God would, in all times, verify these truths; that though the church and true religion should be opposed, afflicted, and oppressed, yet it should be preserved and protected, and prove in the end victorious. It is well observed of the Scriptures in general, agreeable to the notions and expectations naturally founded on the Divine perfections, "God did from the beginning make, and has all along continued to his church, or true worshippers, a promise, that truth and virtue shall finally prevail, shall prevail over the spirit of error and wickedness, of delusion and disobedience."* How natural it is then to suppose, when a revelation is given to encourage the constancy of good men, in times of affliction, that it should reveal the protection of Providence, and assure a wise care of the cause of truth and religion in every age, that it should not be confined to a small proportion of that time, in which the church would have the same trials, and stand in need of the same encouragements.

But there are two evidences in the prophecy itself which, as I apprehend, are so full to the point, that they are sufficient to determine it.

First, The duration of the period of this prophecy, is, in some places, marked out as well by numbers of years, as by prophetic descriptions. The time of the beast, for instance, is thus described: And power was given unto him to continue forty-two months, xiii. 5. It is observed of the woman persecuted by the dragon, And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, unto her place, where she is nourished for a time, times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent, xii. 14. The time in which the witnesses were to prophesy, clothed in sackcloth, is in like manner described: And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth, xi. 3.

This various computation of the same time, and so agreeable to the manner of expressing time in prophecy, sufficiently, I think, determines the duration of this period to one thousand two hundred and sixty years, which is itself a much longer continuance than these interpreters will allow to the accomplishment of the whole prophecy, who confine it to the most early times of the church, because it is said, The time is at hand. And it is farther to be observed, that this period, to which the prophecy assigns a duration of one thousand two hundred and sixty years, is not to commence from the time of the vision, but after a long series of prophecy had been previously fulfilled; for the order of the prophecies of this book are thus represented: first, six seals are opened, to each of which a proper prophecy belongs, chap. vi.; upon opening the seventh seal, seven angels have seven trumpets given to them; six of these angels sound their trumpets, to each of which also belongs a distinct prophecy, viii. ix.; so that this period, of one thousand two hundred and sixty years, is the third period of prophecy; and after two former periods have had their accomplishment, this must considerably lengthen the time to which the whole book of Revelation refers.

I am sensible, that prophetic numbers do not always express a determinate duration or space of time, any more than they always express a certain number. Prophecy, I acknowledge, uses numbers sometimes, as other expressions, in a figurative meaning, as symbols and hieroglyphics. Thus, the number seven sometimes does not denote the precise number of seven, but figuratively denotes perfection, or a full and complete number; and the number ten sometimes does not mean precisely ten in number, but many in general, or a considerable number, and frequency of action, or doing the same thing several times; as the use of those expressions in Scripture plainly shews, and of which I have given some instances in the notes.

Yet, the variety of computing the same duration, by days, months, and times, and this in manifest allusion to the prophecies of Daniel, who thus reckons the time of the Messiah's first appearance, and mean a determinate number of years, will hardly admit of any other meaning as the intention of the prophecy in that place, which I hope the reader will find fully proved in the annotations.

Secondly, This observation will be farther greatly confirmed, by considering how expressly the prophecy itself declares, that it reaches to the last times, and in which the mystery of God, or several dispensations of prophecy towards the church, should be fully accomplished. An angel lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things that are therein, that there should be time no longer: but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets, x. 5—7. Or rather, as it should have been translated to the true sense of the original, In the day of the voice of the seventh angel, when it shall sound, ὅταν μέλλῃ σαλπίζειν, and the mystery of God shall be finished, καὶ τελεσθῇ τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ θεοῦ. That is, In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when it shall sound, and the mystery of God shall be finished; or, In the times and period assigned for the sounding of the seventh angel, time shall be no more, and the mystery of God shall be finished. As if the angel had said, Though the time is not yet come, when the church's trial by afflictions shall cease, yet the time of fulfilling that prophecy shall not long be delayed; then the happy state of the church shall begin, which shall finish the mystery of God. So that this period of prophecy will conclude with finishing the mystery of God, or dispensations of Providence towards the church.

It is farther to be observed, that the prophecy itself places at the conclusion of it the general resurrection and judgment. And I saw the dead (says St. John), small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books according to their works; and the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, they were judged every man according to their works, and death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death, xx. 12, &c. A series of prophecies, which reaches to the resurrection and last judgment, seems plainly designed to reach to the end of all time.

Order of the several prophecies, and several periods.]—The book itself seems also to shew farther very plainly, the order of the several prophecies, according to their several periods, as well as the whole duration, from the time of the vision, to the finishing the whole mystery of God's providence towards the church.

There is a general distribution of these prophecies, into the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter, i. 19. ἃ εἰσι καὶ μέλλει γίνεσθαι μετὰ ταῦτα. The things which are seem to refer to the then present state of the seven churches; which description, with the warnings, encouragements, and exhortations proper to it, is contained in epistles delivered to each of the churches, in the second and third chapters.

The fourth chapter reveals a new state of things, in a new vision: a voice said unto St. John, Come up hither, and I will shew thee the things that must be hereafter, iv. 1. ἃ δεῖ γενέσθαι μετὰ ταῦτα. I will reveal unto thee, what shall come to pass in after-times, and in successive order, after the things revealed in the foregoing part of the prophecy shall be fulfilled.

These prophecies are again distributed into several periods, plainly distinguished from each other, and manifestly successive to each other.

One of these periods is distinguished by the opening of a book, sealed with seven seals; and, at the opening of each seal, representing in a figure some event proper to each seal; and ends with sealing of the servants of God to the number of one hundred and forty-four thousand, ch. vi. vii.

Another period begins upon the opening of the seventh seal. This period is distinguished by giving seven trumpets to the seven angels that stand before God, viii. 1, 2. Six of these trumpets are sounded in their order, as the seals were opened in the foregoing period, and each of them hath particular events proper to each, chap. viii. ix. This period ends with a new vision; an angel gives St. John a little book: he is ordered to measure the temple, and the seventh angel sounds, chap. x.

There is a third period, called, the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound. This period is represented as a time wherein the mystery of God shall be finished, at the end of which there shall be a new and very different state of things. It is to be a time in which the church shall long struggle with great afflictions and persecutions; yet, at the end of it, the dragon, the old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, shall be bound for a thousand years, that he may deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years shall be fulfilled, though after that he will be loosed again for a little season.

This period seems to be described by several representations, by measuring the temple, and giving part of it to be trodden under foot by the gentiles, by two witnesses prophesying in sackcloth, by a woman escaping into a wilderness, and by the rising of a monstrous wild beast. The events proper to the period, are represented by seven vials full of God's wrath, poured out on the earth.

The duration of this period is exactly the same in the several representations; the gentiles are to tread the holy city under foot, forty and two months, xi. 2. The witnesses are to prophesy in sackcloth, a thousand two hundred and threescore days, ver. 3. The woman which fled into the wilderness hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days, xii. 6. And power was given unto the beast, to continue forty and two months, xiii. 5.

These periods of prophecy successive to each other.]—As the book itself thus distinguishes these prophecies from each other, so it seems plainly to shew they are successive to each other. They seem ranked into such order, as to make this observation obvious and necessary, that they are not intended to describe contemporary events, but such events as should follow one another in order, as the periods themselves are represented to succeed each other. So that there is no ground, I conceive, to consider the prophecies which belong to these periods as synchronisms; on the contrary, each of these prophecies seems fixed to that particular period of time to which it belongs; which periods are manifestly represented not as contemporary, but as an order and series of successive times and events.

The order of succession in these three periods is very particular, as their distinction from each other is very manifest.

As the first period is distinguished by seven seals, the second period by seven trumpets, and the third by seven vials, so the seven angels received the seven golden vials, after six of the trumpets had been sounded. The six trumpets were sounded, viii. 9. the seventh angel began to sound, ix. 15. but the angels received not the seven golden vials, till in the days of the voice of the seventh trumpet, when the power and authority of the beast were established, and men had received the mark of the beast, and worshipped his image; for the plague of the first vial fell upon them, xvi. 2. So that this period of the vials commenced after the period of the trumpets was over, and the events prophesied in it were fulfilled.

The period of the trumpets, in like manner, plainly follows the period of the seals. It is expressly said, when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven for half an hour. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God, and to them were given seven trumpets, viii. 1, 2.

This natural order will, I conceive, free us from that intricacy and difficulty which a supposition of synchronisms, and contemporary events in the different periods, have occasioned in the interpretation of this book: and it may greatly help us, in applying historical events to the several prophecies, to look only at such as fall within the time to which the period belongs.

The book itself will moreover, I conceive, sufficiently determine the proper time to which each period belongs, and shew to what period of history the period of prophecy refers. If the duration of each period can, in general, be very nearly determined, so that the beginning and ending of it can be reasonably fixed to any near time, the order and succession of the periods will point out the contemporary times of history; and if the events of history shall sufficiently answer the descriptions of prophecy, it will make our application of them more satisfactory, and give greater weight to such interpretation.

The proper time of each period sufficiently determined.]—The book itself seems plainly to make the general key of the whole revelation, the particular key of each period; so that one and the same wise and useful design is the general design of the whole, and the particular design of every part of it. So far is this book from being loose, uncertain, and immethodical, that it keeps always one and the same useful design in view, and carries it through every particular in the most exact order.

The general design of this prophecy is to support the minds of faithful Christians, under all afflictions on account of religion, to teach them, that however true religion should be opposed, however they might suffer for the Christian faith and worship, they might assure themselves of God's care and protection. Though God did not design to place his church in such a state of outward power and prosperity, as to be free from afflictions and persecution (which therefore they were not vainly to promise themselves, and weakly to expect), yet they might promise themselves, and expect, that God would preserve the true religion, by the care of his providence, from being bore down by any power of opposition; that he would often severely punish the enemies of true religion, and make known his judgments upon them, as heretofore on Egypt and Babylon; that he would give often, to the faithful and constant, deliverance out of their dangers, success and victory over their enemies; that he would often raise up eminent and powerful persons, who shall defend and encourage the Christian faith and worship, and that in the end truth and righteousness shall prevail over all opposition from error and unrighteousness, and the patience and constancy of the faithful shall be finally crowned with a state of complete peace, perfection, and happiness.

These were great encouragements, and consolations of very great use to the church at all times. It was not fit to dissemble the true state of providence with respect to the church; for the state of the Christian church, whatever some might promise themselves, would often be afflictive: yet it was very fit to remind good men, in strong representations, of their encouragement and support, that God would maintain the cause of truth against all opposition, often give evident marks of a Divine protection, for the safety of the church, and in the punishment of its enemies.

"The church persecuted, afterward victorious, and in a peaceful state, is certainly the true key of the Revelation," says a very learned interpreter.*

This general key of the whole Revelation seems also the proper key of each particular period: the whole prophecy, after many intermediate dangers in a state of opposition and trouble, ends in the happiness of the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven. In like manner, each particular period describes a state of danger, opposition, and trouble, and ends in a state of peace, safety, and happiness.

Thus the first period of the seals enumerates great troubles and afflictions, but ends with sealing the servants of God in their foreheads, which was to be a time of peace and safety to the church. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice, to the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads, vii. 2, 3.

The second period in order, which is the period of the trumpets, describes also several heavy and severe judgments on the sounding of the several trumpets; so that an angel flying through the midst of heaven, said with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth, viii. 13. and yet, upon the sounding of the seventh angel, which begins the third period, there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, xi. 15.

The day of the voice of the seventh angel, which is the third period, describes again a time of trouble and affliction; the dragon persecutes the woman, xii. 13.; the persecution of the beast is of long continuance, for power was given him to continue forty-two months, xiii. 5.; seven vials full of the wrath of God are poured out, attended with grievous plagues, yet in the end Babylon is destroyed, the old dragon bound, and they who had not worshipped the beast, live and reign with Christ a thousand years, xx. 3.

It is an obvious remark, that each of these periods are represented by the same number of seven; there are seven seals in the first period, seven trumpets in the second, and seven vials in the third. Seven is a sacred number in the Jewish church, and in the rotation both of days and years, is made a time of religion and rest. It is not therefore an unfit emblem, that the church, after a time of labour and trouble, shall enjoy a time wherein it may serve God in peace and rest. However that be, and whether the spirit of prophecy designed such an allusion or no, it is plain, that this scheme of the different periods, as well as of the whole book, mentions a time of affliction and trial, which shall end in a time of safety, liberty, and peace.

This observation, I conceive, will go a great way to fix thegeneral duration of these three periods, and sufficiently determine, to a near time, the beginning and ending of each. As each must have, in its period, some remarkable opposition to the Christian church, a trial of its faith and patience, by some great dangers and afflictions; so it must end in some remarkable deliverance out of those troubles, and some favourable providence to the church for its safety, peace, and liberty, in the profession of the Christian faith and religion.

To what historical period each period of prophecy belongs.]—At the time of these visions, St. John was in banishment for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ; and the church was under persecution so long as the empire continued heathen. Severe persecutions were almost perpetually renewed: a little before the times of Constantine they were so severe, that they seemed to threaten the utter destruction of all who could not be forced to renounce the Christian faith, and fall in with the idolatrous worship established in the empire. The last persecution under Dioclesian destroyed incredible numbers, that the persecutors boasted, they had effaced the name and superstition of the Christians, and had restored and propagated the worship of the gods: yet the Divine Providence, after several great revolutions, made way for the authority of Constantine the Great, who put an end to a long persecution of ten years, gave freedom to the churches, and finally, when, upon the death of Licinius, he obtained the sole authority, he gave all protection and countenance to the Christian church, and all assistance to promote the Christian faith and worship; so that the same power which before persecuted, now protected the Christian faith.

Time of the first period.]—The first period of prophecy then seems naturally to point out this period of history, which in general answers it with great propriety and exactness, and will, I think, direct us to look for the fulfilling the several parts of it, in some of the events of providence, between the time of the vision, and about the year of Christ 323. when the opposition of the idolatrous power of Rome gave way to the protection and favour of Christian emperors.

Time of the second period.]—It was not long the church enjoyed this peace: the Roman empire, in a short time, began to lose its power, and became unable to protect the peace and liberty of the church; a swarm of idolatrous nations from the northern countries, under several names, broke in upon the Roman empire, and divided the western empire into several separate and independent governments, or kingdoms; so that the Christian faith and worship were in as much danger from the idolatry of the northern nations, who had divided the Roman empire among themselves, as they were before in danger from the idolatry of the Roman empire itself. It pleased God also, to permit that impostor Mahomet, and his successors, to gain so much ground, and spread that imposture so far, and so fast, that it seemed to threaten the ruin of the Christian name and religion in the east: yet the idolatrous northern nations were soon themselves brought to the Christian religion, and to use all their power and authority to protect and promote it. And though the Saracens made great inroads for some time, yet was their progress stopped both in the east and west. Charles Martel, * by a memorable battle, (A. D. 734.) in which some authors account three hundred and seventy thousand slain, preserved the western parts of the Roman empire from their future incursions, and enabled the Christians in Spain to maintain themselves against them, and even oppose them with such power, as finally drove them quite out of their kingdom. And the Christian religion remained in all those places which the northern nations had formed into kingdoms out of the Roman empire.

Here is now a period of history very naturally applicable to this second period of prophecy; it contains a very memorable time of danger, and as memorable a deliverance in the establishment of the peace and liberty of the Christian church, and seems sufficiently to point out the time of this period, from about the year of Christ 323. to about 750. In which compass of time, therefore, we seem directed to look for the accomplishment of the several particular predictions contained in this period.

Time of the third period.]—The third period seems also determined to a near time both of its beginning and ending, by the prophecy itself.

The duration of this period is sufficiently determined by the time of the beast, the time of the woman's being in the wilderness, the time wherein the holy city should be trodden under foot; these times are variously expressed, but plainly in such manner as to express the same duration. It is said to be for forty-two months, xi. 2. xiii. 5. for a time, times, and half a time, xii. 14. And these ways of numbering seem explained by another: the time of the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth is mentioned to be a thousand two hundred and threescore days, xi. 3. And again, the time of the woman in the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God for her, is expressed by the same number, that they should feed her a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

The difficulty then of assigning the historical time of this period seems to lie chiefly in this: At what time this thousand two hundred and threescore prophetical days, or years, are to begin; or, which will be the same, at what period in history we are to begin the power of the beast, the flying of the woman into the wilderness, and treading the holy city under foot: for these are the calamities of this period, as the happiness with which it closes is the destruction of the beast, the binding of Satan, and the peaceful state of the church for a thousand years, till Satan shall be loosed again for a little season, xx. 3.

Our chief inquiry then will be, When this power was given unto the beast, which was to continue for forty-two months? Let us see whether the prophecy itself doth not sufficiently point out this time to us.

The emblem of a beast, according to the use of it in Scripture-prophecy, denotes an empire or government, as the four empires denoted by the beasts in Daniel's vision sufficiently shew.

In explaining the mystery of the beast, and the woman which carrieth her, the angel expressly declares, And the woman which thou sawest, is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth, xvii. 18. This seems sufficiently to direct our consideration of the beast as an empire or government, and that of the city of Rome, or Roman dominion. It seems farther confirmed by the description of the beast, having seven heads, and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, xiii. 1. We have these expressions yet farther explained; The seven heads (says the angel) are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. And they are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space, xvii. 9, 10. again, ver. 12. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast; or, shall reign at the same time and period with the beast: as, in the following words, and these have one mind, means, they have the same design and intention.

The prophecy then seems to represent the beast as one empire, though in several different forms of government in succession, five of which were fallen or passed at the time of the vision; one is, says the angel, or was the present form of government at that time; and the form of Roman government at the time of the vision, was to be sure the imperial, which is therefore to be accounted the sixth. The next, or seventh form of government, was not yet come; and when it came, it was to continue but a short space. It follows, And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. The meaning of which remarkable expression, is, I conceive, to this purpose: After the sixth head, or form of Roman government, which was then in being, there shall be another form of government, which on some accounts may be called a seventh; and, in that reckoning, the beast spoken of would be the eighth head, or form of government: yet, on some other accounts, that seventh could hardly be called a proper form of Roman government; so that in that reckoning, the beast spoken of might be accounted one of the seven, and so next in succession, in the proper government of Rome, to the sixth, or imperial form of government. This form of government is moreover to be set up in the same time or period with the ten kings or kingdoms, erected in the Roman empire, and by their assistance, giving their power to the beast, ver. 13.

From these considerations, we have a period in history sufficiently marked out for this period of prophecy.

Besides the order of the periods, this being the third, and not therefore to begin till the two former are finished, it cannot begin till the northern nations, who brake in upon and divided the empire, had established their respective kingdoms, and were converted to Christianity, and gave their protection to the profession of it; nor till the imperial government was passed away, as the five preceding forms of government had before it; nor yet till another form of government, which in some sense might be called a seventh, though not strictly and properly, was also passed, to make way for this form of government in Rome, which on some accounts might be reckoned the eighth, and yet, for other reasons, was to be numbered among the seven. To this, I think, we may yet add another mark of this period, in which the beast is described, the beast which was, and is not, and yet is, ver. 8. Or, as St. John saw in the vision of this beast, xiii. 3. I saw (says he) one of his heads, as it were, wounded to death, and his deadly wound was healed, and all the world wondered after the beast. And again, speaking of the second beast, he observes, ver. 12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth, and them that dwell therein, to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. These descriptions seem plainly to represent the Roman government, or empire, of which this beast is the symbol, as once in a state of great authority and power, afterward as having very much, almost quite, lost that power; yet, in the end, recovering its power, and reviving its authority again: as one wounded unto death, but whose deadly wound was healed again, even to the wonder and astonishment of the world.

This seems to describe to us a time, when Rome, once the mistress of the world, who reigned over the kings of the earth, should lose her power either altogether, or so far as to preserve but a very faint resemblance of it: yet afterward, notwithstanding such loss of power, it should recover to a very great degree of power and authority again.

Here are a great many circumstances, which must concur in a period of time which can answer, with any propriety, this description of prophecy; and where so many circumstances really concur in history, it is a very great evidence, such period of time is intended by the prophecy; and it is a great confirmation of the truth and authority of the prophecy itself, that predictions of a time, to be distinguished by so great a variety of circumstances and important events, should be so exactly accomplished.

Now, the Roman history represents the state of the Roman empire, after the invasion of the northern nations, most agreeable to the description of this prophecy.

After the northern nations had entirely subdued the power of the Roman empire, they settled themselves in the several parts of it, and erected several sovereign and independent dominions in France, Spain, Britain, and Italy itself.

The Goths possessed themselves of the best part of Italy,* especially about Rome, and took at last the city of Rome, A. D. 476. Odoacer, king of the Heruli, obliged Momyllus, who was also called Augustulus, to abdicate the empire. He possessed himself of the government of Rome and Italy, but without the title of emperor of Rome, or any other title taken from Rome, or making the city of Rome the seat of his empire or residence. He was styled king of Italy, and Ravenna became under Theodoric and his successors, after the defeat of Odoacer, the seat of the Gothic kingdom of Italy.

But, after some time, Justinian grew powerful in the eastern empire, or empire of the Greeks; and, after many victories in other parts, sends his victorious armies into Italy, under the command of the great generals Belisarius and Narses. They broke the power of the Gothic kingdom in Italy, and recovered the greatest part of Italy to the obedience of the emperors of Constantinople. The Greek emperors administered their government of Italy by deputies or lieutenants, who were styled dukes of Italy, as a very eminent historian remarks,† "Exactis autem Gothis, expulsor ipse, victorque Narses, a Justiniano imperatore summæ rerum præpositus, titulo ducis Italiæ sumpto, Italiam, per hos provinciarum præfectos, pro suo arbitrio, administrabat."

But in a short time, the Longobards, or Lombards, invaded Italy, about the year of Christ 568.‡ They make a very swift progress, insomuch, that, in the third year of their invasion, they proclaim Alboin king of Italy;* and, in effect, made themselves masters of all Italy, except Rome and Ravenna. At this time, though Rome was in the obedience of the eastern or Greek empire, yet still Rome was not the seat of the government; the chief governor resided at Ravenna, with the title of exarch of Ravenna; and imperial Rome, once the mistress of the world, was fallen into the low condition of a small dutchy, subject to the exarchate. These exarchs continued, and with them this low condition of Rome, about one hundred and eighty-five years, from Longinus, who was made first exarch, A. D. 568. to Eutychius, the last exarch,† when Aistulphus, king of the Lombards, took Ravenna, A. D. 752.

* Sigonius de Occident. Imperio, p. 251. 258.

This conquest of Ravenna by the Lombards had very great consequences; it at first gave Aistulphus an occasion of claiming Rome, as a part and parcel of the exarchate, which he had now annexed to his kingdom of Italy: for so he sets forth his title and pretensions to Rome, as part of his dominions. "Quod cum ipse exarchatum Ravennatem teneret, ex antiquo instituto, se tanquam exarchum, Romanis quoque imperare, æquum esse, interpretabatur."‡

Aistulphus, to make good his claim, upon the Romans refusing tribute, enters their territory, and prepares to besiege their city. The pope alarmed, you may be sure, with so near danger, immediately sends to Pepin of France, to pray his protection and assistance. The popes had lately very much obliged Pepin, in confirming the deposition of Childeric, the last of the first race of the French kings, to make way for Pepin and his family to the crown. Pepin had many reasons to protect the pope against the growing power of the Lombards in Italy: he first then endeavours by ambassadors to persuade the Lombards from committing hostilities against the city of Rome, and leave the pope in quiet; but persuasions not prevailing, he enters Italy with an army, beats Aistulphus, forces him to a treaty, in which he obliges him not only to renounce his claim and pretensions to Rome, as part of the exarchate he had conquered, but, moreover, to surrender the whole exarchate to the Pope, and gave the temporal government of Rome, and the exarchate, for ever, to the pope and his successors, as the patrimony of St. Peter.

But the next year, Pepin being returned into France, Aistulphus, who could not think of performing so disadvantageous a treaty, again enters the Roman territory, and prepares for the siege of the city: Pepin returns into Italy with a powerful force; Aistulphus raises the siege of Rome, is himself besieged by Pepin, and finally forced to confirm and execute his treaty, and make over the whole exarchate to the church of Rome, or to St. Peter and his successors, for ever. Thus Pepin wrested the exarchate from the hands of the Lombards,§ refused to restore it to the eastern empire, but confirmed it to St. Peter and his successors: the keys of the several cities belonging to the exarchate, together with the grant or charter, being with much solemnity laid on the altar of St. Peter, A. D. 756.

Thus Rome, which had lost the imperial government, A. D. 476. and had rather the show and appearance of a new form of government, than a real and proper government, under the Greek emperors, and their exarchs of Ravenna, for about one hundred and eighty-five years, obtained a perfectly new form of government, when it became the patrimony of St. Peter, and which has been the only form of government in Rome ever since.

The power of Rome seemed quite extinguished, and the Roman authority and dominion received a deadly wound, when the Goths put an end to the empire; imperial Rome was then brought so low, that no ground of rational hope was left, it should ever recover its power and authority again; and yet, after so many years, it revived once more, this deadly wound was healed, and it has continued a very long time: one of the most extraordinary forms of government the world ever saw.

This new form of government was raised and conveyed to the popes, as successors of St. Peter, by one of the principal kingdoms founded by the northern nations, on the ruins of the Roman empire; and this authority and dominion of the popes have been preserved to them all along, by the help and assistance of the several kingdoms erected in like manner.

In this history, we may also see, on some accounts, an eighth form of Roman government; or, as it may on other accounts be called, a seventh, according as the exarchate of Ravenna shall be accounted or not accounted a proper form of Roman government. This, though it can but improperly be called a form of Roman government, yet was the only government, from the destruction of the imperial power, A. D. 476. to the establishment of the temporal power of Rome in the papacy, A. D. 756. that is, for very near the space of three hundred years.

It is farther worthy of observation, that the bare ecclesiastical supremacy of the pope, how great soever under another civil government of Rome, would never have been a proper government of Rome; but the power of the supremacy itself would have been bounded by it, and hindered from establishing an ecclesiastical monarchy. It is therefore very justly observed by one well-skilled in history and politics,* "Though the church was never so abounding in riches, and in great numbers of ecclesiastics, yet it was absolutely necessary, that the pope, if he intended to establish an ecclesiastical monarchy, should not be in any way dependent on any temporal prince, but that he should reside in a place which was free from all subjection to any civil power but himself, that he always should be possessed of such an estate as might be sufficient to maintain his grandeur, and not be liable to be taken away from him on any pretence whatsoever; where also his adherents might find a safe retreat, whenever they should be pursued by the civil power."

In this period of time then, which begins the last form of Roman government, and which perfected the papal supremacy and spiritual monarchy, by a considerable independent temporal dominion, we have a very proper and natural agreement of history, with the description of this prophecy. This may, I think, direct us to a surer method of fixing the date of it, than uncertain inquiries, when the papal supremacy was established; for I conceive, the prophecy rather points out the temporal power of the pope, as the last form of the government of Rome, which was also what principally established his supremacy, and perfected the project of spiritual monarchy.

Period 4.]—When this period shall have continued forty-two months, a time, times, and half a time, a thousand two hundred and threescore days, according to the style of prophecy, The beast shall be destroyed, the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, shall be bound a thousand years, xix. 20. xx. 2. This state of the church will be a fourth remarkable period.

Period 5.]—Yet when these thousand years shall be expired, Satan shall again be loosed out of his prison for a short time: this will make a fifth period, xx. 7.

This shall, for once more, occasion a new attempt of error and wickedness against truth and righteousness; but this attempt shall end in the final ruin of all the enemies of religion: fire shall come down from God out of heaven, to devour them; and the devil, the deceiver, shall be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night, for ever and ever, xx. 9, 10.

Period 6.]—Upon this the prophecy represents, as the conclusion of all things, the general judgment, the second death and punishment of the wicked.

Period 7.]—The happiness of the righteous and faithful servants of God and Christ, in a state of glorious immortality, make a seventh period, in an endless sabbath.

This order of the prophecies is, I think, intelligible and natural; and, I believe, more agreeable to the important facts in history, than other systems: and yet it is the truth of history, which alone can shew us, what has been the providence of God towards the church and world, from the time of this vision of St. John to our own days.

It is certain, such a plan of prophecy, and order of history, will well answer the useful designs of prophecy in general: to prepare the church to expect opposition and sufferings in this present world; to support good men under all their trials of faith and patience; to give encouragement to perseverance in the true religion, whatever dangers may attend it; to assure the attention of Providence, and the protection of God to his own cause, that no opposition shall finally prevail against it; that the judgments of God shall punish the enemies of true religion; that their opposition to truth and righteousness shall surely end in their own destruction; when the faithful perseverance of true Christians shall be crowned with a glorious state of immortal life and happiness.

If, by explaining this book of Revelation upon this plan, we shall find these intentions answered, and these truths verified in history, and confirmed by experience, we shall attain what is worth aiming at, to make this book appear more intelligible, certain, and useful, than it is commonly thought to be. For which reason, as many good persons have not that attention to it they ought, they miss that encouragement, hope, and improvement, they might receive from it; and, I think, with some greater advantages than from a plainer manner of delivering even the same truths in other books of the holy Scriptures: for almost every thing that is sublime, lively, and moving in the law and the prophets, receives new force in the strong representations, figures, images, and expressions, of this book.

The great truths concerning the majesty of God, the wisdom and care of his providence, the dignity, authority, and power of Christ, the protection of the church, the restraint and punishment of their enemies, and the final happiness of all who shall faithfully persevere in the true Christian faith and worship, are here delivered in such awful manner, such animated expressions, and such striking representations, as must greatly warm the spirits of good Christians. A regard to this book of Revelation, as a prediction of events by a spirit of prophecy, which therefore will surely come to pass, and which cannot fail of their accomplishments, serves very wisely and powerfully to guard against the fears of men, by a full assurance of hope in God. It will animate every one who looks upon the promises and threatenings of this book, as a sure prediction of what shall come to pass, to resist every temptation of error and wickedness, with faithfulness, constancy, and zeal. The lake of fire and brimstone, and the terrors of the second death, the portion of the fearful and unbelieving, the glory and happiness of the holy Jerusalem, and a right to the tree of life, the portion of all the faithful, are represented in so strong and lively images, as are fit to fix the attention, and make way to the heart and affections, and engage them with zeal to follow the wise directions of understanding and judgment: and an exact conformity between these prophetic descriptions, and the real state of the church and world, for a long series of some hundred years, continually gives new evidence to the truth of the Christian revelation, and to the authority of the books of the New Testament; it greatly confirms our faith in the promises, and thereby gives them their full force and influence upon us.

As this seems to be the improvement the Holy Spirit of prophecy designed in this book of Revelation, let us consider whether a religious attention to these designs will not enable us to make this very useful improvement of it. There is reason to hope it may: for it is one prophecy of this book, Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein, i. 3.

Objections considered.]—Yet notwithstanding these reasons, to recommend to us the study and improvement of these revelations, it may be proper briefly to take notice of some common objections which too often prejudice the minds of many against them.

Uncertainty of application.]—I have already observed, what I hope is sufficient to answer the charge of obscurity from the style of prophecy; but the objection goes farther than to the obscurity of expression. This book of Revelation represents, some say, a great many persons and events, times and things, which men know not how to apply with any sufficient certainty. Hence we find so much difference between interpreters, and the same prophecy applied to a great variety of events, times often fixed, and often mistaken, that it should seem a point of plain wisdom not to be over-busy in such uncertain applications.

It will ever be a point of wisdom, not to be over-busy, or over-confident in any thing, especially in fixing periods of time, or determining seasons, which it may be are not to be determined, it may be are not fit to be known. It is a maxim of greater wisdom than it is usually thought, Seek not to know what should not be revealed. Such are many future events. The precise time of our Saviour's coming to judgment was not revealed, because not fit to be revealed: the uncertainty of his appearance was of greater service to preserve a care of religion, than the revelation of it would have been; for the uncertainty itself gives many useful exhortations: Watch, for ye know not at what hour the Son of man cometh. Suppose then, some of the events described in this prophecy should be of doubtful application; suppose the precise time of the downfal of the beast, the slaying and resurrection of the witnesses, and the beginning of the thousand years' happy state of the church, should not so be determined, but it would admit of different calculations, may it not be wise, and therefore fit, it should be so? The certainty of those events in a proper time, though that time should not be precisely determined, will answer the greater ends of useful instruction; and if the revelation should go no farther than this, it would yet be a revelation of great benefit and advantage, as the certainty of the day of judgment in its proper time surely is, though of that day and hour knoweth no man.

Besides, there is another wise reason, why the persons and events described in this prophecy should be express enough for the purposes of religious improvement, for the patience, hope, encouragement, and constancy, of the church, and yet remain with some uncertainty as to a particular application. It was no way fit, for instance, that the several woes and plagues prophesied to befal the Roman state and empire, should stand so plain in a book of Christian revelation, that every one could apply them to particular emperors, or any present administration of government. It was not fit, for instance, that Trajan, Hadrian, Severus, or Diocletian, should be so described, as that all men should presently perceive they were personally pointed out. This might have rendered the sacred books of the Christian religion suspected as treasonable libels against the peace, the power, and the very being of the Roman empire. The persecutors of Christianity might have made this a plausible pretence to justify their greatest severities against the Christians, as enemies to the peace and government, as well as to the religion, of the empire. These are therefore uncertainties not to be complained of, because they are wisely fit and proper.

Yet still the great descriptions of God and Christ, of their care and power; the description of the old dragon, and his opposition to the church; the dangers and afflictions of the church, from idolatrous persecuting enemies; the duty of the church in the hour of danger and temptation; the security of the church by Divine protection; the sure victory and final happiness of the church in the end, which are the things of chief design and principal use: these are all express enough, and none of these are either of doubtful or uncertain application. And even as to the other particulars, he that hath an ear to hear, that will carefully and modestly endeavour to find out the meaning of these prophecies, may, I think, attain to a good and useful degree of understanding, in what the Spirit saith unto the churches; and may find the several particular events of these prophecies of as certain application, as it is convenient such prophecies should be.

Danger of enthusiasm.]—There is moreover another prejudice against the careful study of this book. Some think, or at least pretend to think, that a regard to prophecies and predictions, and especially to the prophecies of this book, may have dangerous consequences. It may, as they say they fear, be an encouragement to enthusiasm, and become an occasion of great disorders in the world, which sure it is wisdom carefully to watch against.

Enthusiasm, it is true, often has, and may again produce very mischievous effects. The church, at the time of this prophecy, saw one of the most memorable and fatal instances, in the rebellion of the Jews; and the destruction of their temple, city, and nation, which followed upon it. But though enthusiasm may abuse the best and most innocent principles in the world, or at pleasure make what principles it pleases, and move men by unhallowed means to promote the holy kingdom of Jesus, as we have too many instances of it; yet sure I am, there is no encouragement to it in any part of the Christian religion, or in any part of these prophecies. Here are no directions, or the least encouragement given to the church, or Christians, as saints, but to patience and perseverance, in the faith and hope of the gospel, from the protection of God: no encouragement of sedition or mutiny, of violence or injustice, no, not to their greatest enemies, or in their greatest dangers. The true means and methods of their safety will be found of a quite different nature. The time and way of the church's deliverance is every where represented, as appointed and directed only by the orders of God and Christ. Angels are every where represented as the appointed ministers to execute these orders; angels are to sound the trumpets of God's judgments, and to pour out the vials of God's wrath: so that the whole representation seems as if designed to teach Christians, they were to be watchful against all manner of rash and mutinous attempts of their own, and not run into rebellion upon any pretence of religion, as the Jews did, and met their ruin in it. They are directed to wait the time God has appointed for their deliverance; hoping that God will, by his own hand of providence, execute his designs of their protection and deliverance, in the most fitting time, and in the fittest manner, and by the most proper means: so that, except the wisdom and prudence of their own conduct, which is the duty of all men at all times, and is the farthest thing in the world from enthusiasm, either in life or religion, the church has no other directions in these prophecies, but to stand still, and see the salvation of God. The whole scheme of this prophecy then, is so far from being an encouragement to enthusiasm, that it is a wise preservative against it; for the general doctrine of the whole book is this,—that the patience of the saints is the way to their victory.

Upon the whole, in these interpretations we are not to expect demonstrations, or such proofs as shall be liable to no manner of objections, or that some weak and warm heads may not wrest these prophecies as they do the other scriptures, and may do any principles whatsoever, to extravagant designs and actions: it should be sufficient to satisfy us, if we find a proper and likely sense of the prophetic expressions and descriptions, suited to the manifest wise design of the whole prophecy; and if these interpretations are supported by an application of events in history, that are justly applicable both to the prophetic descriptions, and to the series and order of the prophecies; if they are events worthy a spirit of prophecy to reveal, and agreeable to the spirit and intention of this prophecy in particular; we may, without exposing ourselves to the charge of being over-credulous, reasonably rest satisfied with them.

Then, we may represent these prophecies to ourselves in that noble and useful view in which a great author has placed them: (Bossuet, Explic. of the Revelation, Pref.)

"In the Gospel of St. John we read the life of Christ on earth: a man conversing with men, humble, poor, weak, and suffering, we behold a sacrifice ready to be offered, and a man appointed to sorrows and death; but in the Revelation of St. John, we have the gospel of Christ now raised from the dead. He speaks and acts as having conquered the grave, and triumphed over death and hell, as entered into the place of his glory; angels, principalities, and powers, being made subject unto him, and exercising the supreme universal power he has received from the Father over all things in heaven and earth, as our Saviour, for the protection of his church, and for the sure happiness of his faithful servants in the end."

SCHEME AND ORDER OF THE PROPHECIES

IN THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

	Chap.	A. D.
INTRODUCTION, A prophetic vision in the isle of Patmos, representing Christ, his care of the churches, promising a revelation, with cautions and exhortations suitable to the then present state of the church, and to the future state of the church in after-ages, to encourage patience and constancy in the faith	i. 19.	95
FIRST PART OF REVELATION, relating to the things that are, or the then state of the church:
Seven Epistles. Seven epistles to the seven principal churches in Asia, describing their present state, with cautions and exhortations suitable to it	ii.
SECOND PART OF REVELATION, relating to the things that shall be hereafter, or to the state of the church in the ages to come, after the time of the vision, with cautions and exhortations suitable to it	iii.
Scene of the visions. The throne of God, the consistory above, and heavenly church, representing God's power, majesty, authority, providence, and sure event of all his purposes	iv.
A sealed book, containing a revelation of the state of the church in after-ages, given to the Lamb to open, or to Jesus Christ to reveal, for the good of the church, by St. John:
Chorus of angels and saints; or, the whole heavenly church sings a psalm of praise to the Lamb	v.
The Revelation begins by opening the sealed book, which describes the future state of the church in seven successive periods	vi.
SEVEN PERIODS.
First period, shewing the state of the church under the heathen Roman emperors, from about the year 95. to about the year 323. The seals of the book opened in order		95–323
Seven Seals.
1. First seal represents a white horse, the rider with a crown, going forth to conquer; signifying the kingdom of Christ, or Christian religion, prevailing against the opposition of Jews and heathen.
2. Second seal represents a red horse, power given to the rider to take peace from the earth; signifying the first memorable judgment on the persecutors of Christianity, in the destruction of the Jews under Trajan and Hadrian		100–138
3. Third seal represents a black horse, the rider with a balance to measure corn; signifying great scarcity of provision, near to famine, in the time of the Antonines		138–193
4. Fourth seal represents a pale horse, the name of the rider Death; signifying a great mortality and pestilence, wherewith the empire was punished in the reigns of Maximin and Valerian		193–270
5. Fifth seal represents the souls of the martyrs under the altar, their reward and deliverance in a short time; signifying the severe persecution in the reign of Dioclesian, with an encouragement to constancy, suitable to such times of difficulty,		270–304
6. Sixth seal represents earthquakes, sun darkened, stars falling from heaven; signifying great commotions in the empire, from Maximian to Constantine the Great, who put a period to the persecution of Rome heathen		304–323
Interval between the first and second periods, represents an angel sealing one hundred and forty-four thousand with the seal of the living God; signifying great numbers forsaking the idolatrous worship of the heathen Roman empire, and embracing the profession of Christianity	vii.
Chorus of the heavenly church blessing God for his salvation. One of the elders shews unto St. John the happiness of those who were faithful and constant to true religion, in the great trial of so grievous persecution	9.
Second period reveals the state of the church and providence in the times following the reign of Constantine, during the invasion of the empire by the northern nations; the rise and first progress of the Mahometan imposture, till the stop put to it in the western empire, which reaches from about the year 337 to the year 750.	viii.	337–750
Seven angels receive seven trumpets to sound.
Seven Trumpets.
1. First trumpet represents hail and fire mingled with blood, cast on the earth; signifying great storms of war to fall on the empire, and the blood that was shed in the reigns of the Constantine family, and their successors, till things were settled under Theodosius		337–379
2. Second trumpet represents a mountain burning with fire, cast into the sea, whereby it became blood; signifying the invasion of Italy by the northern nations, and taking the city of Rome by Alaric		379–412
3. Third trumpet represents a burning star falling upon the rivers, which became bitter; signifying the ravages in Italy, putting an end to the Roman empire, and founding a kingdom of Goths in Italy itself		412–493
4. Fourth trumpet represents a third part of the sun and moon darkened; signifying, the wars in Italy between Justinian's generals and the Goths, whereby the exarchate of Ravenna was erected, and all the remaining power and authority of Rome quite suppressed		493–

	Chap.	A. D.
5. Fifth trumpet represents the bottomless pit opened, and locusts coming out of it; signifying, the rise of the Mohammedan religion and empire, and the great progress of both, till a stop was put to them by a contention for the succession	ix.	568–
6. Sixth trumpet represents four angels loosed, which were bound in the river Euphrates; signifying, the reunion of the divided Saracen power, the invasion of Europe by them, and threatening the conquest of it, till defeated by Charles Martel		635–
Third period of the vials reveals the state of the church and providence, in the times of the last head of Roman government, represented by the beast, for one thousand two hundred and sixty years, to its final overthrow, from about the year 756. to about the year 2016		756–
An angel, or Nuntius, brings a little book, the remainder of the sealed book opened by the Lamb, and gives it to St. John to eat; signifying, a farther revelation of what was to follow in order of time, to the end of the world	x.	2016
Three general descriptions of this period:
1. First general description represents the temple measured; part given to the gentiles; two witnesses prophesy in sackcloth one thousand two hundred and sixty days; signifying, the corrupt state of the church, and the constancy of some faithful witnesses to the truth, though under severe persecutions during this whole period	xi.
2. Second general description represents a woman forced to fly into the wilderness for safety; and protected there one thousand two hundred and sixty days; signifying, the persecution and preservation of the church during the same period	xii.
3. Third general description represents a monstrous wild beast rising out of the sea, with seven heads, ten horns, as many crowns, and titles of blasphemy, who was to continue forty and two months; signifying, that new Roman power, which should use its authority to promote idolatrous worship, and to persecute all who would not submit to it, and should be supported by another power like unto its own form and constitution, during the same period	xiii.
Chorus of the heavenly church celebrates in a hymn the happiness of those who remain faithful and constant	xiv.
Nuntius, an angel, comes down from heaven to declare the certain and severe punishment of the enemies of truth and pure religion, in this period.
Seven angels receive seven cups full of the wrath of God; signifying, that the enemies of truth and pure religion, in this period, shall be severely punished in the course of it, as well as they shall be utterly destroyed in the end	xv.
The oracle gives order to the seven angels, to pour out their vials or cups	xvi.
Seven Vials.
First vial poured on the earth; a grievous sore on the worshippers of the beast, signifying the great commotions throughout the whole empire, under the family of Charles the Great, by which that family becomes extinct, and by which both the empire and crown of France are transferred to other families
2. Second vial poured on the sea, it becomes as the blood of a dead man; signifying, the great bloodshed of the holy war, to recover Jerusalem from the Saracens		1040–
3. Third vial poured on the rivers and fountains; they become blood; signifying, the bloody civil wars between the Guelphs and Gibellines, the papal and imperial factions, when the popes were driven out of Italy into France		1190
4. Fourth vial poured on the sun, which has power given it to scorch men; signifying, the long wars in Italy, Germany, France, and Spain, occasioned by a long schism in the papacy. Turks take Constantinople, and put an end to the eastern empire. Pestilential diseases occasioned by intemperate heat		1200– 1371 1378–
5. Fifth vial poured on the seat of the beast, or his throne; signifying, the Reformation, and the confirmation of it by the principal states of Europe, notwithstanding all opposition from the pope, and in opposition to the papal authority		1530 1560–
6. Sixth vial poured on the river Euphrates, makes way for the kings of the east. This seems, in the order of the prophecies, to be yet future; but may likely mean some invasion of the pope's dominions from its eastern boundary, or the Adriatic		1650 1670– 1850
7. Seventh vial poured on the air, the seat of Satan's empire, describes the utter ruin of this persecuting idolatrous Roman government, or mystical Babylon, at the end of this period		1850– 2016
Nuntius, an angel-interpreter, more fully explains the character of this idolatrous persecuting power, which should corrupt the church, and persecute the faithful, during this period	xvii.
Another angel sent from heaven, to confirm the utter and lasting destruction of this mystical Babylon, as a punishment for her idolatrous corruptions and persecution	xviii.
Chorus of the heavenly church sings the praise of God, for his righteous judgments	xix.
A vision of Christ, leading an army out of heaven, strongly represents the certain accomplishment of this prophecy.
Fourth period. An angel sent from heaven to shut up Satan in the bottomless pit, as in a secure prison, for one thousand years, during which time there will be a happy state of the church, in purity, peace, and prosperity	xx.
Fifth period. After the thousand years of the church's prosperity shall be expired, Satan will be loosed again for a little season, a new attempt will be made to revive the corruptions of the church, and a spirit of persecution, which shall end in the final destruction of Satan's power, and of all the enemies of pure and true religion	7.
Sixth period. The general resurrection and final judgment; the everlasting destruction of the wicked,	11.
The seventh period concludes the whole prophecy, in the vision of new heavens, and a new earth, representing, in strong images, the extent, security, riches, and grandeur of the heavenly Jerusalem; signifying, the consummate happiness of the heavenly state	xxi.
Thus, the prophecies of this revelation issue in an eternal SABBATH: The sure reward of all who shall be found faithful and constant in the true religion of Jesus Christ	xxii.
The CONCLUSION confirms the truth and certainty of these prophecies, warns against corrupting them, exhorts to hope the accomplishment of them; a useful spirit and temper, to give good men consolation in all their present afflictions, and to preserve them from the corruptions of religion, how prevailing soever in their own times; which is
The useful moral and principal doctrine of these prophecies	6.

CHAP. I. SECT. I.

CONTENTS.

This chapter is an introduction, or preface, to the prophecies contained in this book. It represents the first vision St. John saw; the manner in which this revelation was made to him; and gives, in very lively figures, a view of the majesty, glory, and power of our Lord Jesus Christ, now in his exalted state: it teaches Christ's care of his church, now he is sat down at the right hand of God, in very beautiful and strong expressions, taken chiefly from the ancient prophets; very proper to confirm the faith and patience of good Christians, and encourage their perseverance, under all their afflictions and fears: the principal doctrine and design of the whole book.

Ver. 1. THE Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servant things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel to his servant John:

2. Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

3. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.]

Ver. (1.) This book contains a discovery or revelation of many secrets, which Christ made known concerning the present and future state of his church in this world; and which the Divine Wisdom directed should be made known, by a revelation from himself, to his faithful servants; containing an account of many things that should shortly begin to be accomplished, and which he revealed by his [1] angel to his servant John, in the following visions. (2.) Which revelations St. John has faithfully recorded, as they were revealed to him by Christ, even as he faithfully testified what he had seen of Christ's actions on earth. And what follows is a true and faithful relation of what he saw in his prophetic visions. (3.) And they are of such use to the faithful Christian, that he will be truly blessed, who shall so read and attend to the words of this prophecy, as to follow the counsels and instructions contained in it, who shall persevere in the faith, worship, and patience, of the gospel; for they are of immediate and constant use, as they will very soon begin to be accomplished, and will be punctually fulfilled in their order to the end of time.

4. John to the seven churches whi h are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne;

5. And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful Witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood,

6. And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.]

(4.) I John, therefore, who saw these visions, and record them for the benefit of the church, salute the seven churches which are in Asia, to whom I more immediately direct this revelation, wishing them all manner of spiritual happiness, from the eternal God, and from his [2] Holy Spirit; (5.) And from Jesus Christ our Saviour and Lord, who is a faithful Witness, whom God raised from the dead, the first-fruits of our resurrection, and thereby gave us full evidence and reasonable assurance of our own resurrection from the dead, and has made him supreme head over all persons, of what authority, dignity, or power soever, to whom we have the greatest obligation, as he has so loved us, as to wash us from our sins in his own blood, (6.) and has sanctified us to the service of God, consecrating us as his church, a kingdom of priests, to honour God and his Father, and to give us the privilege of a near approach unto him, with assurance of acceptance and favour: to him let the churches ascribe glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

7. Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

8. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.]

(7.) This prophecy, which I now record, you may observe, is agreeable to former prophecies, concerning the power and majesty of Christ's kingdom; Daniel prophesied of his coming with the angels of the host of heaven;* [3] and Zechariah, That they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn;† and our Saviour himself,‡ That all the tribes of the earth shall mourn; for they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. Such manifestations then of his glory and power, the Christian church had all reason to believe and hope for. (8.) And we have the more reason to heed, and give credit to these predictions of prophecy, because they are, in effect, promises of the supreme Governor of the world; who is ever the same unchangeable being, able to accomplish all his purposes from the first beginning of time to the last consummation of all things.

SECT. II.

9. I JOHN, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, like the sound of a trumpet.

11. Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it to the seven churches, which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis and Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

12. And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And, being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks.]

(9.) Know then the time and occasion of these revelations I received from Christ, were thus: I who am a fellow-sufferer with you, on account of the gospel of Christ, was in banishment in the isle of Patmos, for my faithful adherence to the religion of Jesus Christ, and the truth of his gospel. (10.) There, on the day distinguished in the Christian church by the name of the Lord's day, on which the church is used to assemble for religious worship, the spirit of prophecy came upon me, in like manner as upon the ancient prophets; and the first thing I perceived, was a voice, strong and loud as the sound of a trumpet, and, attending to it, I heard this voice from heaven, or oracle of God, distinctly saying unto me, (11.) I am Alpha and Omega, I begin, and I finish all things, from the creation of the world, to the end of time, and the consummation of ages; regard the revelations thou shalt receive, as coming from me; write them down to preserve them for the use and benefit of the church, and send them in particular to the seven churches which are in Asia, who are concerned in the present use of them. (12.) This voice of the oracle called me to great attention, and made me turn to see whence this voice might proceed; then the spirit of prophecy continued the revelation in a prophetic vision, [4] for I saw as before my eyes the following representation: I saw seven golden candlesticks, or a lamp made of pure gold, having seven branches, like to the lamp in the holy place in the temple.*

* Dan. vii. 13. † Zech. xii. 10. ‡ Matt. xxiv. 30.

13. And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.]

(13.) And as the priests, when they dressed the lamps, stood in the midst, to light the middle and largest of the branches first; so I beheld a person in the midst of this lamp, as if trimming the branches, not in the appearance of an angel, but in an appearance of human shape as a man; he was dressed in the rich habit peculiar to the high-priest; he wore the robe of the ephod, girt with the curious girdle, of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine-worked linen.†

14. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15. And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.]

(14.) The appearance of his person was also very glorious, somewhat like the appearance of the Ancient of days, in Daniel.‡ The upper part of his body, his head, and hair, were exceeding white, and of [5] great lustre; his eyes had a piercing brightness, (15.) and the lower parts shone like the finest amber, or a refined and polished metal, and his voice was strong and full, like the sound of the sea, or some very great water.

16. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.]

(16.) I perceived farther, that this venerable person held in his right hand, as it were, seven stars, and a sharp two-edged sword seemed to go out of his mouth, and his whole appearance was as glorious as if I had beheld the full lustre of the sun at noon-day, when shining in its greatest brightness.

17. And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last:

18. I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

19. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter;

20. The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.]

(17.) The sight of such a person, with so majestic appearance, struck me with great awe; insomuch, that, like a man in a swoon, I lost my senses for a time, but he raised me up, by laying his right hand upon me, and encouraging me, as the angel did Daniel;* and said unto me, Be not afraid, for though you may observe something in this vision of the majesty, power, and authority of my everlasting kingdom; (18.) yet observe also, this vision represents the High-priest and Saviour of the church, who died to redeem it unto God, and consecrate it a peculiar people, and who now ever lives to protect and bless it; and who has all authority and power in this life, and in the separate state of departed souls, after this life, to save it for evermore. This I confirm as a certain truth. (19.) Therefore lay aside your fear, and attend to the design of this vision; write down, and keep on record, what this vision reveals concerning the state of the church, of my power, and care of it, which are things of great concern to the church, and regard partly the present state of the church, and partly the several states of the church in future [5] times. (20.) To begin then to explain the meaning of this vision, observe what is to be understood by the mystical representation of the seven stars, and the seven golden candlesticks, or branches of the lamp: the stars are intended to signify the angels, pastors, or bishops of the churches; and the candlesticks to signify the churches themselves, consecrated to the service of God, following the instructions of their faithful bishops, in purity of doctrine, worship, and manners, shining as lights in the world, and honouring their profession of my gospel, and religion, before men.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. By his angel.] In the style of prophecy, from whence the expressions of this book are chiefly taken, every thing is called an angel, that notifies a message from God, or executes the will of God. A prophetic dream is an angel; the pillar of fire that went before the Israelites, is called God's angel. The winds and flames of fire are angels to us, when used by God as voices to teach us, or rods to punish us: so that God is properly said to reveal by his angel, what he makes known, either by voice, by dream, by vision, or any other manner of true prophetic revelation.

[2] Ver. 5. From his Holy Spirit.] The Holy Spirit, I think, is meant by the seven Spirits which are before the throne. Seven, in the language of prophecy, often expresses perfection, and may better be understood of the most perfect Spirit of God, the author of all spiritual blessings, than of seven angels, as a more natural interpretation of the expression in prophecy, as well as much more agreeable to the manner of the gospel-blessing, from Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

[3] Ver. 7. Angels of the host of heaven.] Rabbi Saadias Gaon observes the clouds of heaven, they are the angels of the host of heaven; this is the great magnificence and power, which God shall give unto the Messiah. (Vide Pearson on the Creed, art. 7. p. 293. and Bishop Chandler's Defence of Christianity, p. 130.)

* Exod. xxv. 31. † Exod. xxxix. 5. ‡ Dan. vii. 9.

* Dan. x. 10.

[4] Ver. 12. In a prophetic vision.] The Jews accounted all degrees of prophecy were included in dreams and visions; "In istis autem duabus partibus, somnio inquam et visione, continentur omnes prophetiæ gradus:" (Maimonides, More Nev. par. ii. cap. 26. p. 293.) but yet the Jews were wont to make a vision superior to a dream: (vide Smith's Select Discourses of Prophecy, p. 175.) so that this book is represented as the highest degree of prophetic revelation.

[5] Ver. 14. Of great lustre.] So λευκὸς, which we translate white, properly signifies. Thus, Rev. xx. 11. And I saw a great white throne; that is, a throne with a glorious lustre, "λευκὸν (candidum) hic intellige splendidum cum majestate." (Grot. in loc.)

This being an appearance of the Schechinah, is to be considered as that always was, a representation of the Divine presence, majesty, and glory; therefore the glory in which the Schechinah appeared in ancient prophecy, is very properly applicable to it.

[6] Ver. 19.] This distinction of things relating to the present state of the church, and of things relating to the future state of the church, in after-times, may direct to one observation concerning this prophecy; That this first vision should seem to relate to the present state of the church; the following visions, to the future state of the church; which, I think, makes it more probable, to understand the epistles to the churches, as relating to the present state of the church in the days of the apostle, than to understand them as prophetic representations of the successive states of the church, to the end of time: but I enter not into the opinions of learned men, on that question, proposing to set the prophecies of this book in a plainer light, if I can; not to make them darker, by new disputes, than they were before.

CHAP. II. SECT. III.

CONTENTS.

In this and the following chapter, we have the prophecies which concerned the then present church, or the things which are: (i. 19.) by which the state of the seven churches in Asia, at the time of the vision, seems to be described, in what was commendable, and deserved encouragement; in what was faulty, and called for reproof and reformation. This part of the prophecy is designed to shew the constant care of Christ over the church, both in the punishment of apostacy, and in the blessings of faithfulness and constancy. Each of these epistles is then to be considered as proper directions and encouragements, cautions and warnings, in every state of the church, where there are like commendable things to be praised and encouraged, or like faults and miscarriages to be reproved and amended; and it will represent the state of the church in every age; as, in every period of time, there will be some like things to be commended, and to be blamed. This is a representation of the state of the church, most proper to the design of the prophecy, to encourage faithfulness, patience, and perseverance, under all the discouragements the church might meet with; Christians were not to be discouraged on the one hand, because all things in the churches were not as they ought to be; nor yet, on the other hand, were they to neglect or overlook any miscarriage or imperfection, on pretence, that the church in this world cannot arrive at perfection. They were to amend what was faulty, to improve what was imperfect, and to remain constant in the purity of Christian faith, worship, and manners, when the protection of Christ their Saviour promises them victory in the end, and to crown that victory with the glorious reward of eternal life.

1. UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; [1]

2. I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: [2] and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3. And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted. [3]

4. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.]

(1.) As the churches in Asia now labour under many discouragements and great trials of their faith and patience, write to them, as in my name, these directions and instructions proper for their warning and encouragement; declare, as from the Holy Spirit of revelation, my care of them, and power to protect them. In particular, write after this manner to the church of Ephesus; Though I am in heaven, yet I am concerned for the protection of my religion on earth, I will protect my ministers, who are careful to enlighten the church with the knowledge of truth and righteousness, of peace and happiness, according to the revelation of my gospel; and I will give all encouragement to the churches, and assistance, proper to answer their character, as lights of the world, to adorn the Christian religion by purity of doctrine, worship, and manners. (2.) And let the church of Ephesus farther know, in this solemn manner, that in my observation of its behaviour, I take a particular notice of what deserves commendation; that it is careful to preserve good works; that it is diligent and zealous in the duties of religion; that it has shewn a patience and constancy, as well as diligence and faithfulness, and expressed them in a very proper manner; not bearing those evil persons who would have corrupted the purity of the church with wickedness of life, and, examining the doctrines of such, who would have imposed their errors on the pretence of apostolical authority, preserved the purity of faith and doctrine, as well as of life and manners. (3.) Let them know, I observe, that these things commendable in the church of Ephesus, are very eminent; they have borne great afflictions, they have long had patience, and, from a right principle of affection to my name and gospel, in which they have been very constant, as well as diligent, have not fainted under any difficulties or opposition. (4.) However, there are some things in the behaviour of this church that deserve reproof and censure, notwithstanding all that is commendable in it.

Tell them, in my name, You have suffered your former affection to abate and cool; your affections for the institutions of the gospel, your charity for each other as brethren, and members of the true church of the living God, are not so warm and lively as once they were.

5. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

6. But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. [4]

7. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.]

(5.) Take notice then of this declension of thy love, as a miscarriage that calls for repentance and reformation; this can only consist in regaining your former warmth of affection, so as to excite you to your former eminent acts of love and charity: if you neglect this warning and advice, if you will not repent and do your first works, I will soon punish your negligence and disobedience, by depriving you of those privileges of the true church, for which you are losing your esteem and affection. (6.) Yet still there is this encouraging in you, that though your love and affection are cooler than they were, yet you highly disapprove and warmly condemn the idolatrous liberties and unclean practices of the Nicolaitans, which I also highly disapprove and condemn. (7.) Let him therefore who is disposed to receive useful instruction, attentively consider what the Spirit of wisdom and prophecy reveals to the church, and let him be encouraged to faithfulness, perseverance, and constancy, in the Christian religion, being assured, that whosoever shall fight this good fight so as to overcome the enemies of truth and righteousness, so as not to be turned back from the holy commandment, by the temptation of an evil world, shall enjoy a state of full perfection and happiness in eternal life, as the first parents of human race would have continued in the happiness of their paradisaical state, if they had not lost the privilege of the tree of life, being overcome by the temptation of eating the forbidden fruit.

8. And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;]

(8.) Write also another epistle to the church in Smyrna, and give it to understand these things, as a revelation from a most powerful and affectionate Saviour, from him who was before all things, and of whose kingdom, and power, there shall be no end: As my obedience to death shewed how one dearly beloved of God might be afflicted in this life; and as my death has obtained eternal redemption for my people, and the new covenant confirmed by it has called them to the hope of everlasting salvation, so I am also raised from the dead, and live for ever, and have entered into the glory, the reward of my sufferings, which may greatly encourage and support all who shall be partakers with me, in suffering for righteousness' sake, that they shall also be partakers with me in glory.

9. I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich,) and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.

10. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation [5] ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.]

(9.) Let them know, I am not unacquainted with their true state and condition; I know their painful diligence in the good works of religion, and the many troubles they meet with on account of it; and, in particular, their low and poor condition, as to the riches of this world; though they have reason to account themselves rich, as they abound in good works, and enjoy the favour of God, with the hopes of the true religion; let them farther understand, I am sensible of the opposition they meet with, from a party which boasts in the privileges of the true church, but whose pretences are false and blasphemous; who are so far from being the true church of God, that they are a synagogue of Satan, by promoting error, superstition, and wickedness, the very things wherein the kingdom of Satan consists. (10.) Direct them, that they fear none of these sufferings, which such evil persons may inflict upon them; though God, for the trial of their faith and patience, may permit them to be cast into prison, and they may have great trouble for some considerable time, yet exhort them to be faithful even unto death, if their trial should reach to the danger of their lives, as well as of their liberty; assuring them, that their faithfulness shall finally be rewarded, with a crown of infinitely more value than the corruptible crowns men have in so high esteem here, even with a state of perfection, happiness, and glory, for ever.

11. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.]

(11.) Let then every man attentively consider, what the Spirit of wisdom and revelation hereby teaches the church, and be encouraged to faithfulness and constancy, in the profession and practice of true Christianity: for whoever shall thus overcome the temptations of the world, shall not be hurt by the death of his soul in the world to come; but shall be delivered from the punishment of the wicked and faithless, when they shall be doomed to everlasting destruction.

12. And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges;]

(12.) Send also an epistle to the bishop of the church in Pergamos; let them know these instructions and admonitions come from their Saviour; who, though he has a constant care of the churches, and their ministers, yet was represented in the vision you saw, (i. 16.) with a sharp sword going out of his mouth, to acquaint them, the power of the sword is an essential right of my government; that I shall be as ready to punish apostates and enemies of my kingdom, as I am ready to protect and bless my people, in their perseverance and constancy, according to those rules I have settled, and declared in my word.

13. I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.]

(13.) Let them know, I consider what is commendable in them, every circumstance that makes their patience and constancy more eminent; I consider their good works, and I consider also, the temptations of the place where they live, where the powers of darkness and corruption have a numerous and powerful party. Yet, in this time of severe trial, when the evil spirit of persecution prevailed to put a faithful servant of my gospel to death in their city; so great was the power of Satan among them; yet they could not be prevailed upon to deny my name and religion.

14. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication.

15. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate.]

(14.) Notwithstanding this exemplary constancy, let them also understand there are some things that deserve reproof, and require reformation; they have some among them who have fallen into the prevailing corruptions. As the wicked advice of Balaam prevailed upon the children of Israel to commit fornication with the daughters of Moab, and so to join with them in their idolatry; which trespass was punished by a plague among the congregation of the Lord: * so there are some in the church of Pergamos, who give into the corruption of eating things sacrificed to idols, and allow themselves to commit fornication. (15.) There are some who go so far as to justify those miscarriages, by receiving the principles of the Nicolaitans, which I greatly disapprove, as most inconsistent with the purity of the Christian faith and religion, as revealed and taught in my gospel.

16. Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the [6] sword of my mouth.]

(16.) Charge them therefore to repent of these miscarriages, and to return to the Christian purity of doctrine and manners, by a thorough reformation; otherwise, as these sins were punished, in former examples, by a plague, I also will very soon punish them in such manner as shall shew my high displeasure at so great miscarriages in my church.

17. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, [7] and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.]

(17.) Let all who are disposed to receive useful instruction, carefully attend to these encouragements and warnings given by the Spirit of prophecy. He who, from these encouragements, shall overcome the temptations of the world, shall receive an abundant reward; I will bestow upon him all the rewards meant by the spiritual manna, the true bread of God, which came down from heaven; † and I will give him a stone, with an inscription on it, not as a ticket or warrant, to receive such small rewards as are usually given to those who obtain a victory in the public games, or assemblies; but such as shall be a warrant to receive so great a reward, that none can rightly comprehend the value of, but such who shall be possessed of it: and know, in experience, how great privileges, grace, favour, and happiness, it entitles them to, in the inheritance of the new Jerusalem.

18. And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira, write; These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;]

(18.) Write also to the bishop and church of Thyatira, as from me, who, though I was a man, by my natural descent from the family of David, yet am also truly the Son of God, and was declared to be so by the power of the Spirit, who discern all the secrets of men's hearts, how concealed soever they may be, whose ways will be found glorious in purity and upright judgment, who exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth.*

19. I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.]

(19.) I observe and commend thy good behaviour in many things; all thy good works are remembered by me, which are done in my service, out of love to me, my name, and my gospel; as I approve thy faith, patience, and constancy, in times of temptation and affliction, so I am pleased to find your affection and zeal in my service improving, that, after a long time of patience, your faith, affection, and constancy, appear more eminent than at the first.

20. Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

22. Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23. And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and will give unto every one of you according to your works.

24. But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan (as they speak), I will put upon you none other burden:

25. But that which you have already hold fast till I come.]

(20.) Yet, observe, there are some things in your conduct I take notice of which deserve blame, and call for reformation: you give too much allowance and countenance to some evil persons, who, like that wicked woman Jezebel, who defiled Israel with her idolatrous and lewd practices, set themselves to teach, and, on wicked pretences to prophecy and revelation, to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols, both which are contrary to the truth and purity of the doctrine and worship of my gospel. (21.) Though I have given these persons a long time to consider the evil of their behaviour, and to reform it, yet they are so corrupt in their minds, that they still remain impenitent and obstinate, and give no signs or hopes of amendment. (22.) Know, then, I will take a time severely to punish these persons for their evil principles and wicked practices; and this punishment shall reach all who are partakers with them in their wickedness, as well as themselves; instead of ease and pleasure, they shall have sorrow and tribulation; and this threatening shall be accomplished, as surely as the punishment was, which the prophet Elijah denounced in the name of the Lord against Jezebel, † except they repent of their evil deeds, and forsake them. (23.) Let them know, the punishment of these false teachers, and their followers, shall be so great, and so remarkable, that the churches shall observe a Divine power in it, and learn to respect and honour the administration of my government; who, as I know the secrets of men's hearts, and most concealed principles of action, so I exercise judgment, in giving to every man according to his works. (24.) But, as many have kept themselves from these evil doctrines, which the deceiving spirits have been so industrious to propagate; and which, though they boast in them as deep knowledge and wisdom, are indeed the deep arts of deceit and error in the kingdom of Satan, to bring in all sort of corruption, by teaching to account things unlawful and sinful, as indifferent and innocent: let all who have kept themselves from these pollutions be assured, my gospel shall impose no new burden upon them, nor lay any new restraints, as these false teachers would insinuate; but only confirm the laws of truth, righteousness, and goodness, to make them free from sin, the truest and most valuable freedom and liberty. (25.) Let them be careful to hold fast to the end, the doctrines and precepts they have already received from my gospel, as necessary to true religion, and to please God, and no other things that can affect their real liberty shall be imposed upon them.

26. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations:

27. (And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers:) even as I received of my Father.

28. And I will give him the morning-star.

29. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.]

(26.) To encourage them farther in their faithful constancy, acquaint them in my name, if they overcome these temptations, and keep the faith and holy commandment of my gospel, so as to persevere unto the end, in truth and righteousness, I will make good the promise made to the church in prophecy, that it shall prevail against the superstition of the heathen world, whether maintained by the heathen nations themselves, or introduced by others into the Christian church. (27.) For truth and righteousness shall prevail against error and wickedness; the church shall have a power, by my protection, like that I received from my Father;* however obstinate any may be in opposition to truth and purity, my power shall break their obstinacy, and give success to a faithful defence of my gospel, against all the idolatrous and immoral principles of the heathen nations.[8] (28.) I will yet farther reward the constancy of my faithful servants; I will give them so clear understanding in the privileges, promises, and blessings, of my gospel, as if a day-star arose in their hearts;† they shall see with great clearness, as by a bright light, the great encouragement and certainty of their reward, and rejoice in hope that the end of their warfare shall be victory, and their victory shall be crowned with a glorious reward; for they themselves shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as stars, for ever and ever.‡ (29.) Let every one who is disposed to receive useful instruction attend to these directions, which the Spirit of revelation and prophecy designs to teach the churches.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. WALKING in the midst of the golden candle sticks,] Is an expression taken from the office of the priests, in dressing the lamps, which was to keep them always burning before the Lord. I conceive, therefore, walking, here, may be designed to signify not only a care to observe and know the true state of the churches; but moreover, to assist and promote their improvement in religion, or to assist the churches in their proper character, as consecrated to the service of God, that they may shine as lights in the world, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation. (Phil. ii. 15.)

[2] Ver. 2.] This observation of the commendable behaviour of the church of Ephesus, seems to direct us to observe how acceptable in the sight of God the care of the primitive churches was, to preserve purity, by proper discipline, and a zeal against wickedness, as inconsistent with the profession of the gospel, as Mr. Waple well observes on the place.

[3] Ver. 3.] This third verse, as Mr. Waple observes, being much a repetition of what was said in the foregoing verse, seems to intimate, that the sufferings, the diligence, and the patience of this church, were very eminent and remarkable: for so a repetition of the same thing sometimes signifies in Scripture-language.

[4] Ver. 6.] However antiquity differs concerning the original of the sect of Nicolaitans, it sufficiently agrees as to the libertine principles and impure practices they taught, used, and defended. Insomuch, that they allowed lewdness and adulteries, as well as idolatrous sacrifices, by placing them among things indifferent, and pleaded in justification of their own liberty, in the use of both. And thus it seems to be explained in this very chapter, (ver. 14.) teaching to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication.

[5] Ver. 10. Ten days,] I conceive, is not to be understood literally; a short time of affliction indeed! hardly agreeable to a description of that tribulation this prophecy seems to prepare the church for. In Scripture-language, ten times, is many times, Gen. xxxi. 7. 41. ten women, are many women, Lev. xxvi. 26. ten sons, are many sons, 1 Sam. i. 8. ten men, are many men, Eccles. vii. 9.: and in common speech, ten signifies many; as Mr. Daubuz has observed in several passages of Plautus. (Symbolical Dict. p. 96.)

[6] Ver. 16. I will fight against them with the sword of my mouth,] Is, I think, an allusion to the sword, one of the ensigns of magistracy and government, to express the jus gladii, or the power of the sword, in the execution of justice and punishments. But as the word of God is the measure by which he proceeds, in punishment and protection, this being the declaration of his mind and will, the power of the sword, in the execution of justice, is ever to be considered, as used agreeably to such measures as the word of God has declared, according to the promises and threatenings contained in his revelation, or the word that goeth out of his mouth.

[7] Ver. 17. The hidden manna] May refer to the words of Christ, John vi. 51. I am the living bread which cometh down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever. A much greater instance of God's favour and grace, than feeding the Israelites with manna from heaven.

[8] Ver. 27.] The kingdom of Christ, and his power over the nations, signify the success of his gospel, and of the true religion revealed and instituted by him, in opposition to the errors, idolatry, and wickedness, which had corrupted the heathen world.

CHAP. III.

1. AND unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.

2. Be watchful, and strengthen the things that remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.]

(1.) Write also an epistle to the bishop of the church in Sardis, to let the church know, as from me, who have all spiritual gifts in my power and disposal, and the bishops and pastors of the churches under my care and protection, that I know their behaviour and their state; I know, that though they make a fair profession of the Christian faith, yet they have very much lost the life and influence of true religion; though they keep up a reputation among men, they have lost it in the sight of God, who regards the heart and inward temper. (2.) Exhort them therefore, that they carefully watch over themselves; and, in especial manner, to confirm those good principles and dispositions, which are grown so weak as to be near extinguished: for even the good things, which still in part remain among them, are very defective, and want much of that perfection, which true religion and my gospel require, to make them acceptable in the sight of God.

3. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

5. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.]

(3.) Direct them, that they seriously call to remembrance what doctrines they received, when my gospel was first delivered unto them, that they may closely adhere to the rule of faith, worship, and life, they were then taught; when they compare their present temper and actions with the purity of that rule, let them observe wherein they have departed from it, that they may be concerned for their miscarriage, and sincerely careful to amend it: for if they disregard this direction, they are to expect some sudden and unforeseen judgment, which shall come upon them at unawares, as a thief is used to surprise a house in the night. (4.) But let them also know, for their encouragement, though this is the bad state of the greater part of their church, it is not of all; there are a few who have preserved themselves from the common corruption, who have kept their purity, and acted truly agreeable to their Christian profession; let them know, I account them worthy of great honour and happiness, and I will confer distinguishing marks of honour and favour upon them. [1] (5.) Let them understand, that this honour and favour shall be shewn to every one, who, by perseverance in faith and purity, shall overcome the temptations of this evil world; his name shall remain secure in the register of those who are entitled to the promise of eternal life: [2] I will myself own them to be my disciples, and acknowledge them true members of my church, in the presence of my Father, and his holy angels, at the day of final judgment, which shall confirm to them the inheritance of everlasting glory and happiness. (6.) And let every one who is sincerely concerned to improve by these useful instructions, carefully meditate on these directions which the Spirit of prophecy here sends to the churches.

7. And to the angel in the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth;

8. I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.]

(7.) Write likewise to the church of Philadelphia, as from me, who am that Holy One, whom the Father hath anointed with the Holy Ghost, and with power, to the holy office of mediator between God and men, whose doctrines and promises are all true and faithful, who have received all power and authority in my spiritual kingdom, as the promised Son of David: so that none can exclude from the privileges of the kingdom of heaven, those whom I shall receive into them; and none can bestow them upon those to whom I shall by my word and judgment agreeable to it, deny them. (8.) Let them understand, I know their state and condition; I have given them a great opportunity of propagating my gospel, and of improving themselves in holiness and comfort, the true blessings of it, nor shall it be taken from them: but as they have been faithful to my religion, though in a weak state of worldly power, greatness, and riches, [3] and have not given up my authority, or the obligation of my doctrines, to any of the prevailing corruptions;—

9. Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan (which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie); behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

10. Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

(9.) I will therefore powerfully protect them against all those evil persons, who boast themselves to be the true people and church of God; but, by promoting the cause of error and wickedness, prove themselves, by sure marks, to be in the party of Satan: insomuch, that I will make those very persons, by whom they are now opposed and despised, to submit themselves to them, and honour them, as convinced that I favour them with particular marks of my affection; and I will cause them, as disciples, to sit down at their feet, to learn the truth from their instructions. [4] (10.) And encourage them with this hope, that as they have hitherto faithfully followed my directions to patience and constancy, in their present trials, I will give them farther gracious assistance to persevere in greater temptations, and more general trials. When Christians every where shall have the sincerity of their faith and their constancy put to a new trial, theirs shall be approved and found sincere, even at that time, when many shall fall from their constancy, and forfeit the blessings of true religion. [5]

11. Behold, I come quickly: hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.]

(11.) Exhort them to continue in their good state and constancy, whatever trials they may still meet with, for they will shortly meet with other trials; let them be careful, lest by yielding to any new temptations, they lose their hope, and their reward at last.

12. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the [6] name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name.]

(12.) For he that endureth to the end, and so shall overcome, has a glorious reward prepared for him: he shall have a high degree of honour in the presence of God, which he shall securely enjoy, without fear of losing it: he shall enjoy the glory of God, in the true heavenly church; and he shall be made a partaker of my own glory, in the perfection and full happiness of the heavenly state.

13. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.]

(13.) Let every one who is desirous to learn the useful instruction of this encouragement to patience and perseverance, diligently attend to what the Spirit of prophecy teaches the churches, and directs them to observe in this Epistle.

14. And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the beginning of the creation of God;

15. I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: [7] I would thou wert cold or hot.]

(14.) Finally, direct also an epistle to the bishop of the church of the Laodiceans, as from their Saviour, whose character is the truth itself, whose word may be fully relied upon in all things, and what he bears witness to is faithful and true, and shall surely be performed, and who is able to accomplish every thing he promises, as he was the author of the whole creation, and has supreme dominion over every creature. (15.) Acquaint them, I know their temper, how indifferent they are in the cause of religion; they make some pretences to it, but with no sincere or affectionate zeal.

16. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth.

17. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

18. I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see.

19. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.]

(16.) Let them know from me, such indifference in religion is highly disagreeable to me, as lukewarm water to the stomach; and if they continue in this bad state, I shall surely reject and cast them off, as the stomach rejects what is greatly disagreeable to it. (17.) Shew them their present duty, now they are so much mistaken in themselves; now they imagine themselves to be in so good a state as to want nothing; acquaint them, that indeed they are in want of all things truly good. They are in a wretched and miserable state, as they are poor in the fruits of righteousness, ignorant of the true perfection of religion, destitute of the righteousness which is of God by faith to forgive and cover their sins, and of the image of God to adorn their souls. (18.) Exhort them, that they be more zealous and careful to obtain the true riches, that they may be rich before God in good works, that the righteousness of God by faith may cover their sins, and the sanctification of his Spirit adorn their souls; and, by a true understanding in the nature and perfection of religion, they may see what they are to hope for, and to aim at. (19.) Then they will understand the wisdom of Providence, even in their afflictions and trials; they will then observe a kind design in them, and improve them as a wholesome discipline of warning, correction, and amendment.

20. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me.

21. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.]

(20.) Direct them to consider this present warning, as a proper opportunity of improvement; which, if they shall mind, and faithfully comply with, as my church and people ought to do, they shall enjoy the comfort and blessing of my presence and favour; then their reward shall be great in the end. (21.) For he that shall overcome his temptations, shall as surely have all his sufferings rewarded, by a portion in the happiness and glory of my kingdom, as my sufferings have been rewarded, according to God's promise, with supreme dominion, and universal authority over all things in heaven and in earth.

22. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.]

(22.) And let every one who is well disposed to know his duty and his happiness, carefully mind, and faithfully attend to, these instructions, which by the Spirit of revelation and propheey I send unto the churches.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 4.] White or shining garments were marks of favour and honour; under the law, they were the garments of the priests, and worn in the courts of princes. Thus Pharaoh honoured Joseph, by arraying him in vestures of fine linen, as well as putting a gold chain about his neck. (Gen. xli. 42.) A white garment is also an emblem of purity, and therefore interpreted in this prophecy, (Rev. xix. 8.) of the righteousness of saints, as well as a mark of honour: whence we see the propriety of this emblem, of white or shining garments, to express the peculiar honour and favour God would shew to them who remained constant and faithful in the purity of the Christian faith, worship, and life.

[2] Ver. 5.] This book of life, is an allusion to some book or register, in which person's names were enrolled, and by which they had a claim to certain privileges. I think it is not material, whether it refer to the registers in which the genealogies of the priests were kept, in which, if a man was not registered, he was rejected, as not belonging to the family of priests; or whether it refer to the common registers, in which the names of free citizens were used to be enrolled, and by which they were to prove their right to the privileges of free citizens; for either will sufficiently explain the meaning of the expression: and they who are written in the Lamb's book of life, as it is called, Rev. xxi. 27. are sometimes represented as priests, sometimes as fellow-citizens with the saints, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven. The general meaning is, They shall have a sure evidence on record, of their right to all the privileges and blessings of the true Christian church, included in the promise of eternal life.

[3] Ver. 8.] "By strength here cannot be understood (says Mr. Waple, on the place) inward and spiritual strength, or zeal and courage to propagate the truth; for that was great in them, and they have a high character and commendation given them for it by our Saviour: it means, that outward human strength, in which the might of the world consists, 1 Cor i. 27." It seems a commendation of their zeal and courage, that, without countenance and protection, and in an afflicted condition, they should yet shew so much faithfulness and constancy.

[4] Ver. 9.] Some interpreters understand this expression, to worship before thy feet, to denote submission and respect, instead of opposition and contempt; others, that it is an allusion to the Jewish custom, of disciples sitting at the feet of their teachers, to hear their instructions: I thought it therefore not improper to mention both in the paraphrase.

[5] Ver. 10.] This hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, seems to relate to the persecution under Trajan; which was greater and more extensive than the preceding persecutions, either under Nero or Domitian.

[6] Ver. 12. I will write upon him the name of my God, &c.] Is an allusion to inscriptions usual on pillars, which sometimes expressed the privileges granted to cities; sometimes the names of benefactors, in memory of privileges granted: the general meaning is, to shew the great privileges and happiness of the faithful members of the church, in the constant favour of God. Thus the happiness of the church is expressed in ancient prophecy, The name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there, Ezek. xlviii. 35. And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the Lord, Isa. lxii. 12. This promise may well signify, that they who are faithful to God and Christ, to the end of this life, shall enjoy all the happiness of the church, in the heavenly state of perfection and glory. How great an encouragement to preserve the purity of Christian faith and worship, against all corruption, and to promote a reformation, wherever it is corrupted!

[7] Ver. 15.] I would thou wert cold or hot, May be understood as an expression of great dislike, not as a proper wish or expression of what men really desire; though, on some accounts, even no profession of religion is preferable to an insincere and unaffecting profession of religion. This dishonours the profession of religion, which the other does not; and men are more likely to be brought to a sense of religion, when yet they have none, than when they satisfy themselves with a form of religion, without the power; which seems to be the temper Christ condemns in this church.

CHAP. IV. SECT. IV.

CONTENTS.

The former vision which St. John saw, contained in the foregoing chapters, represented the state of the church, as I apprehend, at the time of the vision, or, in the words of the oracle, The things that are, (i. 19.) and gave suitable directions to the churches, to encourage their faith and patience, and exhort their constancy and perseverance. Now St. John records a second vision, in which the oracle revealed to him, the things which shall be hereafter, (i. 19.) or the things which were to come to pass, in successive order, from the time of the vision till the mystery of God should be finished. In order to raise the greater attention of the church, and to represent the certain event, and great concern, of the things revealed in this vision, God himself is represented as seated on his heavenly throne, in the midst of his angels and saints, and the whole general assembly of the heavenly church; in which the glorious majesty and almighty power of God, his faithfulness to his covenant and promise, in the care of his churches, and favour to them, are described in very lively and beautiful images; together with the high regard the churches ought always to have for the counsels, designs, and orders of Providence, declared and published in so solemn manner, in the general assembly of heaven, or, in the language of the Jewish doctors, in the consistory above, as Maimonides expresses it,* "Non facit Deus quicquam, donec illud intuitus fuerit in familia superiori;" or, in another expression, "Ipse et domus judicii ejus;" as if it was an order or decree published and registered in the supreme consistory of heaven. A very proper and useful preface to the several revelations of the following visions.

1. AFTER this, I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.

2. And immediately I was in the Spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat upon the throne.†]

(1.) After I had seen the foregoing vision, and writ down the directions I was ordered to send to the seven churches, a new vision was represented to me, of another kind; I perceived a part of the heavens opened, through which, as through a door, I could behold what was done therein: and the first thing I perceived, was a strong and loud voice, like the sound of a trumpet. [1] This voice called upon me, saying, Come up hither, and the orders and decrees of Providence in after-times shall be revealed unto thee. (2.) Immediately upon this, the Spirit of prophecy came upon me, and I had the following prophetic vision, strongly and distinctly represented to me, as before mine eyes. [2] This vision I saw was like that of Ezekiel, when he saw the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord; for

* More Nevochim, par. ii. lib. vi. p. 200, 201. † Ezek. i.

I beheld, as if a throne was set up, and placed in heaven, and I beheld a person as sitting upon the throne. [3]

3. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a [4] sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

4. And round about the throne were four-and-twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four-and-twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold.]

(3.) The person who appeared to sit on the throne, made a very majestic and glorious appearance, with a lustre that may be expressed to common conception, by the precious stones which the greatest princes of the world were wont to use as their ornaments, when they appeared in their highest grandeur and magnificence. There was moreover in this representation, a rainbow of a very beautiful colour, round about the throne; so that I beheld a representation, expressive of God's glory, majesty, authority, power, and faithfulness, to his covenant and promise. (4.) Round about this throne, on every side, at some distance from it, were placed seats for twenty-four persons, and twenty-four elders, or persons appearing with the habits and dignity of magistrates and chief ministers, were seated upon them, so as to encompass the throne; they wore white and shining garments, proper to persons of high dignity and honour; and as persons of chief distinction in the courts of the greatest princes: they wore also crowns or coronets of gold upon their heads.

5. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunders, and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.]

(5.) From the throne itself, there came flashings of a bright flame, which darted round about like lightning; and it was attended with such loud sounds as very much resembled the noise of thunder, as it was usual in the Divine appearances to represent the awful majesty of the one true God, the King of Israel. [5] And as in the holy place in the temple, there were seven lamps continually burning before the presence, so here I saw, as the likeness of seven lamps burning before the throne of God, to signify the seven Spirits of God, with what purity, constancy, and zeal, the spirits of just men made perfect serve God in the general assembly of the heavenly church. [6]

6. And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind.*]

(6.) And as there was in the temple a large vessel, or laver of brass, called a sea, from the great quantity of water it held for the use of the priests, in the time of their service, that they might wash themselves, and be clean, and not die, for ministering before God under any pollution: so here I also beheld a vessel, much more glorious than the brazen sea; for it was made of transparent crystal, of great brightness and beauty. [7] And I saw moreover, in the middle of each side of the throne, in the whole circuit round about, four living creatures, [8] or cherubim of Ezekiel, which he saw in his vision; they appeared full of eyes, not only before but behind, so that they had a direct and full view every way of all things round about them.

* 1 Kings vii. 23. Exod. xxx. 18, &c.

7. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast was like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.*]

(7.) These living creatures had the same likeness and appearance of the cherubim in former visions: for the first of these living creatures had a countenance or face as a lion, the second as a calf, the third as a man, and the fourth was in appearance like a flying eagle; to express the strength, firmness, and constancy, the understanding and good-will, and the ready activity, with which they serve God.

8. And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.]

(8.) These living creatures were moreover represented as in Isaiah's † vision of the seraphim; they had each of them six wings, which they used in part to express their reverence, covering their faces and feet, in part to shew readiness and expedition in performing the orders and commands of God; and every day and night they join in the adoration and worship of God, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, who ever wast, and for ever wilt be, the one true God, the everlasting Lord, and supreme Governor of all beings. [9]

9. And when those beasts give glory, and honour, and thanks, to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever,

10. The four-and-twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.]

(9.) And when the cherubim, the representatives of the angels, who were nearest the throne, began their adoration and praise of God by a solemn thanksgiving, saying, Glory, honour, and thanks, be to the living and eternal God, who sits upon the throne; (10.) they were immediately answered by the twenty-four elders, who were round about the throne, at some farther distance; who rising from their seats, and taking off their coronets, in the most humble posture of adoration, prostrated themselves before the throne, and worshipped the eternal living God who sat upon it; and joined in a doxology, saying, (11.) Thou, O Jehovah, art most worthy to receive the joint adoration of angels and saints, ascribing all glory, honour, and power, unto thee: for thou art the supreme God of all, who hast created all things; to whose will and power they all owe their beings at first, and by whom they all still continue to be what they are.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1.] THIS may probably allude to the custom of the Jewish church, that upon opening the gates of the temple, the priests sounded their trumpets, to call the Levites and stationary-men to their attendance.

[2] Ver. 2.] We have before observed, that a vision was accounted the highest and most perfect kind of prophetic revelation, on i. 12.

* Ezek. i. 10. † Isa. vi. 2, 3.

[3] This representation of the throne of God is very agreeable to several descriptions of the ancient prophets, as Isa. vi. 1—3. Ezek. i. 26. x. 1. Dan. vii. 9.

[4] Ver. 3.] Many interpreters have observed a mystical meaning in the colours and properties of the precious stones here mentioned; thus in the jasper, which Grotius supposes a diamond, he finds an emblem of the invincible power of God: Mr. Daubuz, who considers it only as a stone of a white and bright-shining colour, looks upon it as a symbol of good-will and favour. Thus, the sardine stone, which is of a red colour, with some signifies the active power of God; with others, it is a symbol of anger and displeasure in God, and therefore of destruction; to teach men, if they obey his oracle, he will shew them the brightness of his countenance; but if they despise it, he will at last shew them the redness of it, or his fiery anger, in their destruction. And thus the beautiful green of the emerald is supposed to signify great good-will and favour: but as it does not appear to me, that the prophetic representation intended such mystical meanings, in the colour of the stones, I shall choose to omit them; especially, as all who have a mind to know them, may find them in almost every exposition. [We may observe, I think, concerning the prophetic style of Scripture, what the abbot Fleury has justly remarked concerning the poetical:—We are not to imagine each word and circumstance has a particular application; the whole figure generally tends to one point only, or directly means but one thing: the rest is added, not to make a part of the comparison, but to paint more lively the thing from whence the comparison is taken. Calmet Dissert. vol. i. p. 113.] But the rainbow we have reason to consider as a representation of God's faithfulness to his covenant and promise, as God himself had appointed it a token of his covenant; and promised, that when the bow shall be seen in the cloud, I will remember the covenant that is between me and you. (Gen. ix. 13—15.)

[5] Ver. 5.] There is an observable difference in the several descriptions of the throne of God, in the prophets, that it may be very proper to take notice of it: the glory, or Schechinah, in the temple, is represented as under the wings of the cherubim; for the cherubim spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubim covered the ark. (1 Kings viii. 6, 7.) In Isaiah's vision, the glory of the Lord is represented, as sitting on a throne, and above it stood the seraphim; (Isa. vi. 1, 2.) that is, above the place on which the throne was set, as attending ministers to him that sat upon the throne. In another vision, there is the likeness of a firmament over the heads of the living creatures, (Ezek. i. 22.) whom the prophet elsewhere calls the cherubim; (Ezek. x. 20.) or the cherubim were represented, as bearing up a crystal vault or seat, on which the throne of Jehovah was placed over their heads, and which they supported with their wings. This different description will be explained by an easy observation, that the Schechinah, or glory of the God of Israel, is represented in the temple, as the presence of a king in his palace; his throne is supposed seated in an apartment of state, and the cherubim are so placed, as to form a sort of canopy of state, under which he sits. In the vision of Isaiah, Jehovah is represented as sitting on his throne, or bed of justice, held in open court, in the porch, or at the gate of his palace; then the cherubim appear as attending ministers of the court, to receive and execute the orders of it. In the vision of Ezekiel, Jehovah is represented as going forth in solemn procession, and having his throne, or chair of state, borne up on the wings of cherubim, as the great kings of the east were used to be borne on the shoulders of their servants.

[6] The seven lamps, or candlesticks, are emblems of the church, and the seven Spirits of God, of the all-perfect gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost. I have joined both senses together in the paraphrase, so as to unite both meanings into one; and to express what seems to be the principal intention of the figurative expressions, with what purity and perfection God is served by those who are wholly sanctified, and made perfect, in all grace and holiness, in the heavenly state.

[7] Ver. 6.] Several interpreters understand this crystal sea to be an emblem of the known rite of receiving converts into the Christian church by baptism, of the purity that sacrament signifies, and of the blood of Christ, by which they are washed and cleansed from their sins. To be sure, it has an allusion to that purity that is required in all persons, who have the honour and happiness of a near approach to the presence and throne of God.

[8] Four living creatures, so they are interpreted, Ezek. i. and so they should have been translated here; four beasts is a very improper expression, and may much darken the meaning of the vision.

[9] Ver. 8.] Mr. Mede, and many who follow him, suppose this description of the living creatures to be taken from the standards of the camp of Israel: supposing the standard of Judah was a lion on the east side of the camp; the standard of Ephraim an ox on the west side; the standard of Reuben, a man on the south side; and the standard of Dan, an eagle on the north side; and that these ensigns or standards figuratively expressed the strength and power of a lion, the constant labour and usefulness of an ox, the reason and prudence of a man, the quick sight and activity of an eagle: so that this represented the Christian church and priesthood, and expressed the several qualities of courage, labour, prudence, and activity, with which the Christian church and ministry were to maintain the honour of God, and cause of true religion in the world. But however ingenious and plausible this conjecture appears at the first sight, many learned persons, who have exactly considered it, find it has very little evidence or proof to support it. There is no mention of any such standards in Moses or the whole Scriptures, in Josephus or Philo, or in any ancient writer, who can give any weight or authority to it. The reasons with which Aben Ezra endeavours to support it, are so weak in the opinion of the learned Bochart, that he has not scrupled to call them ridiculous: "Sed hoc commento putidius nihil est." (Hieroz. lib. iii. cap. 5. s. 8.) There are, moreover, many reasons which make it highly improbable the Jews should use such standards in their camp, it being the unanimous opinion of the Jews, that images, as military standards, were contrary to their law, which forbade the making of images. And it is very unlikely, that when that people had suffered so much for making a golden calf, Moses should immediately make not only the image of a calf, but several other images, as ensigns or military standards, for a people so prone to idolatry; as the learned Witsius has more largely observed, Ægyptiacorum, lib. ii. cap. 13. These living creatures seem much more likely to be taken from the cherubim, in the visions of Isaiah and Ezekiel, and in the most holy place, which are plainly designed as a representation of the angels, which are ever represented in Scripture as attendant on the Schechinah, or glory of God, according to the Psalmist, Psal. lxviii. 17. The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels; the Lord is among them, as on Sinai, in the holy place. The great use of angels in this vision, and their great number, so that St. John heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, (v. 11.) make it probable, that as the twenty-four elders are placed about the throne, as representatives of the Jewish and Christian churches, now united into one, so the four living creatures, or cherubim, are alike representatives of the angels, who are round the throne of God, and minister to him. And so, according to a great author, the form of the cherubim expresses the great understanding and power of the angels; "Cherubim summam, secundum Deum, scientiam et potentiam angelorum indicasse." (Spencer, de Leg. Hebræ. lib. iii. cap. 5. dissert. 5. p. 253.)

And this will also give a plain reason, which otherwise is not so easy to account for, why these living creatures, or cherubim, are nearer the throne than the twenty-four elders, and why they begin the worship of God before them; and it may also shew, how proper this representation was of the cherubim, in the holy place, to shew they are only to be considered as the servants and ministers of the one true God, and how improper to be made ensigns or standards, lest the people should esteem them as gods going before them, as they did account of the golden calf.

CHAP. V.

1. AND I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals.]

(1.) I farther beheld in my vision, and perceived, that the person who sat with such glorious majesty on the throne, in the midst of the cherubim and elders, the representatives of saints and angels, held in his right hand a roll of writing, but so rolled up, that what was written therein could not be read; nor could the volume itself be unrolled, to read it, it being sealed without, or on the backside, with seven seals, figuratively expressing, that the counsels of God, to be executed in their appointed time, though registered, as it were, and recorded, were yet, for the present, hid from the knowledge of all; as none can tell what is contained in a writing closely sealed up. [1]

2. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?]

(2.) And I beheld in my vision, an angel of chief power, as attendant of the heavenly court; making proclamation with a strong audible voice, Is any being able, and fit to reveal, and make known, the counsels of God, registered in this book, and to bring them into execution?

3. And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.]

(3.) And no being throughout the whole creation, neither of angels, nor saints in heaven, nor of men alive, nor of any departed souls, was able or sufficient to reveal these counsels of God, and to accomplish them; there was not one able to attain a clear understanding and knowledge of them for themselves; so that the contents of this sealed book were known to no person whatsoever. [2]

4. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

5. And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.*]

(4.) This gave me a great concern, insomuch that it melted me into tears, being greatly affected with the thought, that no being whatsoever was to be found able to understand, reveal, and accomplish the counsels of God, fearing they would still remain concealed from the church. (5.) But I was soon relieved of my fears, and comforted by the voice of one of the elders, who bade me refrain from weeping: for though none was yet found able to reveal and execute these purposes of God, in the course of future providence, yet there is one person described in ancient prophecy, as the Lion of the tribe of Juda, and the Root of David, God's anointed King and Saviour, the true Messiah, who has obtained power, and is sufficiently able, to reveal those counsels of God to the church, and assure their accomplishment, by bringing them into execution. [3]

6. And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.]

(6.) Upon this, I observed in my vision a new representation, as of a Lamb that had been slain a sacrifice, standing just before the throne; and nearer, as within the circles of the cherubim and elders, than either of them; this Lamb was not only represented as a sacrifice, but with seven horns and eyes, to express, figuratively, all-perfect power, wisdom, and goodness, whereby he was able to reveal the will of God, and direct all things, with respect to the world and church, according to it; and to accomplish all God's designs of providence and grace. [4]

7. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.]

(7.) Being greatly comforted with this part of my prophetic vision, my hopes were farther raised, when I saw this person, so fully qualified to reveal and execute the purposes of God, actually undertake the performance of it: for I farther saw in my vision, this Lamb of God draw near, and receive the sealed book out of the right hand of the person sitting on the throne.

8. And when he had [5] taken the book, the four beasts and four-and-twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints.

9. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us unto God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

10. And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

11. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders: and

* Gen. xlix. 9, 10. Isa. xi. 1. 10.

the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

12. Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.]

(8.) No sooner had Christ received the book, and taken upon himself to reveal and execute the will of God contained in it, for the gracious protection of the church, and restraint of its enemies; but the whole consistory above, and heavenly church, joined in a solemn act of praise and adoration to the Lamb. I beheld the cherubim, in conjunction with the elders, prostrate themselves before him; each of them had harps, and golden censers with incense, fit representations of the prayers of the church, and expressive of the most solemn worship; as thus the priests and Levites in the temple were used to worship the God of Israel. [6] (9.) They joined in praising the Lamb with a hymn, of a new composition, expressive of his peculiar honour, and their peculiar engagements; saying, Worthy art thou, O Lamb of God, to undertake the revelation and the accomplishment of the designs of God's providence towards the world, and of his grace towards the church: for thou wast slain a sacrifice of propitiation, to take away the sins of the world, and by thy blood hast redeemed many unto God, not only of the Jews, but of all nations of the earth; (10.) and hast made thy church a kingdom of priests unto God, consecrated to his service, and honoured with a near approach to his presence, to offer up prayers, acceptable and well-pleasing in his sight; and therefore we may assure ourselves, from such grace and power, that thy kingdom and church shall be protected from the world, and finally prevail over it. [7] (11.) When the cherubim and elders had thus expressed their adoration of the Lamb, in singing this new hymn to his praise, the whole assembly and congregation of heaven joined together with them; a number of angels, not to be expressed, united their voices with the cherubim and elders; (12.) saying, Worthy is the Lamb of God, who was slain, to redeem us unto God by his blood; to receive from his church an acknowledgment of his great power, and riches of grace, of his wisdom and strength; to whom we ought to ascribe all honour and glory, with all the devotion of a grateful and thankful mind.

13. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever.]

(13.) I farther heard this act of praise, on so solemn an occasion, carried throughout every part of the creation, like the whole congregation of Israel, joining with the priests and Levites, in their worship: for every creature, with one voice, said, Let us ascribe all blessing, honour, glory, and power, to him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb of God, our Saviour, for ever and ever.

14. And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four-and-twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.]

(14.) This solemn act of worship, I perceived, was concluded by the cherubim, saying, Amen; and the twenty-four elders falling down, and prostrating themselves before the true God, who liveth and reigneth from everlasting to everlasting. [8]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1.] THIS roll was not written on the backside, as well as within, as our translation seems to represent it, and as some interpreters have understood it: but, as Grotius has observed,* there ought to be a stop after the word within (ἔσωθεν), and it should be read, written within, and sealed on the backside, or, on the backside sealed. "Ita hoc distinguendum, ut diximus; non enim dicit librum 'intus et extra scriptum,' sed 'intus scriptum, extra signatum.'" And this much better agrees with the design of sealing the book so carefully, according to the interpretation of a sealed book, by the prophet Isaiah, And the vision of all is become to you, as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned; saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot, for it is sealed. (Isa. xxix. 11.) And though there is a passage in the prophet Ezekiel, that speaks of a roll, or book written within and without, (Ezek. ii. 9, 10.) it is to be observed, that roll was delivered open to the prophet, and spread before him, and not sealed at all; but the case is very different in a book or roll so firmly sealed as this: so that it was not to be read by any, as appears by what follows.

[2] Ver. 3.] No person whatsoever, is the true meaning of the original, οὐδεὶς, man is not in the original.

[3] Ver. 5.] We may here observe, how expressly St. John confirms the application of these prophecies of Moses and Isaiah to Jesus, as the Christ and true Messiah.

[4] Ver. 6.] Horns are symbols of power and strength. Thus the Psalmist calls Jehovah his strength, and the horn of his salvation, (xviii. 2.) They also signify a king, or monarch, a kingdom, or monarchy. Thus, in Zechariah, The horns which scattered Judah, (i. 19. 21.) are the kings or kingdoms of the heathen, who led the Jews into captivity at several times, and prevailed against the kingdoms of Judah and Israel. Eyes are a proper representation of observation, knowledge, understanding, and wisdom, and express fitly a wise direction and administration of government. Thus, Moses speaks of the knowledge and wise direction of Hobab, Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes. (Numb. x. 31.) The seven Spirits of God, we have already observed, (on i. 4.) signify the most perfect Spirit, the author and giver of all spiritual blessings: so that this description of Christ represents him invested, as Mediator, with all authority, power, wisdom, and grace, able to reveal and execute the whole will of God, concerning the church and the world.

[5] Ver. 8.] Some interpreters understand the delivering of this book into the hands of Christ as an act of inauguration, or investiture into his regal power and authority; and that many of the expressions here used, are taken from the ceremonies of solemn investitures, in which, Mr. Daubuz observes, there are instances of several sorts of investiture by a book: but however ingenious this conjecture may be, it is supported, I think, only on a supposition, that the date of this vision begins at the ascension: and so with a solemn inauguration of Christ into his kingdom. But as this supposition does not so well agree with the time of the vision, when St. John was banished to Patmos, I only just mention it, and leave it to the reader's judgment.

[6] Harps were a principal part of the temple-music; vials were also of common use in the temple-service: they were not like small bottles, which we now call vials; but were like cups on a plate, in allusion to the censers of gold, in which the priests offered incense in the temple.* These censers were a sort of cups, which, because of the heat of the fire burning the incense, were often put upon a plate or saucer. The common custom of drinking tea, and other hot liquors, out of a tea-cup and saucer, will shew the form of these censers. To offer incense to God, or before his presence, in the temple, was an act of honour and religious worship, peculiar to the priest's office; and the prayers of the church are often compared to it. Thus the Psalmist, Let my prayer be set before thee as incense, (cxli. 2.) So that these expressions well represent the whole heavenly church of angels and saints, offering a very high act of religious worship and adoration unto Christ.

[7] Ver. 10.] Christ and his church reign on earth, when the truth and purity of the Christian religion prevail against the opposition and corruptions of the world: it is thus only the kingdom of Christ, which is not of this world, is set up in it, and the spiritual powers of his throne established; which lays no claims to any coercive powers of outward force, inconsistent with a dominion, which alone consists in willing submission, and voluntary obedience.

[8] Ver. 14.] It was the custom, in the temple-worship, for the singers to make pauses. In every psalm, say the Talmudists, the music made three intermissions; at these intermissions the trumpets sounded and the people worshipped. (Vid. Lightfoot, Temple-Service, cap. 7.)

CHAP. VI.

SECT. V. First Period of the Seals.

CONTENTS.

St. John had seen, in the former part of his vision, a representation of the majesty, glory, power, and supreme authority of God; and the sealed book, in which was contained the orders of Divine Providence towards the church and the world, delivered to Christ, the Lamb of God, to open and reveal it, for the encouragement of the church to patience and faithfulness; together with the adoration of the church on this solemn occasion. Now this revelation of Christ begins with a prophetic representation of the future state of the church and world, so far as the wisdom and goodness of God thought fit to make it known, for the consolation of his faithful people.

This chapter contains the first period of prophecy, and a description of the state of the church, under the heathen Roman empire, from the time of the date of the prophecy to about the year of Christ 323. as I have endeavoured to shew in the preface. Each of the prophetical descriptions is, in part, some figurative or hieroglyphical picture and motto; or some representation, in the style and figurative expressions of ancient prophecy, describing some particular dispensation of Providence, proper and peculiar to the several successive states of the church and empire, during the space of time contained in this period. In which, therefore, we may hope to find both a wise and kind intention, in making known these dispensations of Providence to the church, and a useful and profitable meaning of this first period of prophetical revelation.

1. AND I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the voice of thunder, one of the four beasts saying, Come and see.]

(1.) After I had beheld the sealed book delivered into the hands of the Lamb of God, that he might reveal the orders of God's providence contained in it, for the consolation and encouragement of the church, I farther beheld in my vision, that he proceeded to open the seals of the book in order; and when he had opened one of the seals, I heard one of the four cherubims, who were near the throne, call upon me with an audible voice, and strong as if it had been the sound of thunder, and he said unto me, Come up nearer unto the book, that you may see what appears in it, now it is opened.

2. And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.]

(2.) I immediately obeyed the voice, and looking into that part of the book or roll that was unfolded, upon opening the seal, I saw a sort of hieroglyphic figure, with a motto. The picture was after this manner: there was drawn the figure of a person, sitting on a white horse, who had a bow in his hand, and a crown given unto him; so that he appeared as a prince riding in solemn procession, with his ensigns of state, as princes and generals were used to march, when setting out on some great expedition. He had a bow, an ensign of war; a crown, an ensign of command and victory; and he rode on a white horse, a symbol of joy and triumph. And, agreeable to this meaning, there was this motto, Go forth conquering, and to conquer: a promise of success, victory, and triumph. (See the history of the first seal at the end of this chapter.)

3. And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.]

(3.) I farther saw, in my prophetic vision, when the Lamb opened the second seal, and so unfolded another part of the roll, or book, that what was contained in that part of the roll lay open to sight. Then the second of the cherubim called upon me, as the first had done before, saying, Come near the book, and look upon this description, which is designed to represent the state of the church, and world, in the following period of Providence.

4. And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.]

(4.) And when I came near, and saw what was contained in that part of the roll, I perceived a description, as in a picture, or on a medal, of another horse, as in the foregoing representation, but of a different colour: for this horse was not white, but red, or of a bloody colour, [1] a figure of great slaughter, by means of the person sitting on him; which the motto, or legend, explained accordingly; To take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another. This meaning of the representation was farther confirmed, by another figure of a great sword, put into the hands of the rider, signifying such a state of providence, as that the enemies of the Christian faith should fall upon and destroy each other, and execute upon themselves, with their own hands, the judgments of God, which were due to their opposition to the truth, and their persecution of righteousness. (See the history of the second seal at the end of this chapter.)

* Reland, de Spoliis Templi Hierosolymitani, p. 105.

5. And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat upon him had a pair of balances in his hands.]

(5.) I farther observed in my vision, that the Lamb opened the third seal; and I heard the third of the cherubim calling upon me, to come and see what was contained in that part of the roll now opened to sight. And looking upon it, I perceived another figurative representation; for I beheld the picture of a person riding upon a horse, of a different colour from both the former. The horse on which this rider sat was of a black colour, expressive of a time of mourning and affliction; [2] and the person that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand, but not as a common representation of exact justice and righteous judgment, but to weigh corn and the necessaries of life, to signify great want and scarcity, and to threaten the world with famine, the next judgment of God to the sword. [3]

6. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see that thou hurt not the oil and the wine.]

(6.) This meaning of the representation was confirmed by a voice from the cherubim, saying, In the times of this prophecy, the price of a measure of wheat shall be a penny, and three measures of barley shall cost the same price; the whole wages of a man's labour for a day shall only purchase so much corn, as is a usual daily allowance: so that all he can get must be laid out on the very necessaries of life, without any provision of other conveniences for himself or family, and a scarcity of oil and wine will make exactness in their measures very necessary also. [4] (See the history of the third seal at the end of this chapter.)

7. And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see.

8. And I looked, and behold a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and hell followed with him: and power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the field.]

(7.) I farther beheld in my vision, as the Lamb went on to open the seals, that he unfolded that part of the roll which was fastened by the fourth seal, and the last of the four cherubim, which were about the throne, called upon me, to observe what appeared upon the opening of it. (8.) I then beheld another figurative representation: I saw, as in a picture, a horse of a different colour from the three former: this was a pale horse, an emblem of mortality and death. [5] And the person who sat upon this horse had the name of Death given unto him; and to shew that this was intended, not of any figurative death, but of a proper death of the body, a figure representing the grave, or hell, was made his attendant; [6] and the meaning of this figurative description (see the history of the fourth seal at the end of this chapter) was explained by a motto, or inscription, Let them kill the fourth part of the earth; intimating, they should destroy a very considerable part of the heathen Roman empire, by the several judgments of God, the sword, famine, pestilence, and wild beasts. [7]

9. And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held:]

(9.) Upon opening the fifth seal, I beheld something new in my vision; I saw a great number of persons, who had been slain in the several persecutions of the church, who had persevered in the worship of the true God, according to the gospel of Christ, [8] lying at the foot of the golden altar of incense; [9] intimating, that their constancy unto the death was an offering well received, and acceptable in the sight of God.

10. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?]

(10.) And I heard these martyrs of Jesus expressing their faith in the promises of Christ, for whose religion they had suffered, by saying with united voices, O Lord God, thou art righteous in all thy ways, and faithful to all thy promises: now thy church has suffered a long time, and thy kingdom has been greatly oppressed by the kingdom of Satan; when will it please thee to make way for the glorious state of thy kingdom, and peaceful state of thy church, by breaking the power of Satan, and of the idolatrous persecutors of it?

11. And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also, and their brethren that should be killed, as they were, should be fulfilled.]

(11.) I farther beheld, that hereupon, unto each of these persons was given a white shining garment, a robe expressive of the favour and acceptance of God, and a mark of approbation, honour, and dignity. [10] But, with respect to the judgments of God, which were to make way for the deliverance and peaceful state of the church, they were directed to wait a little longer; for though many had been slain already for the testimony of Jesus, yet there were other of their brethren, who should bear a like honourable testimony to the Christian faith and religion: however, this remaining time of trial should be short, for a little season only, when the testimony of the faithful martyrs of Christ should be completed; and then God, according to their prayers, would make way for a peaceful and prosperous state of the church. (See the history of the fifth seal at the end of this chapter.)

12. And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;]

(12.) I farther beheld in my vision, when the Lamb proceeded to open the sixth seal, there was represented to me a view of great disorder and confusion, of such changes and alterations, as if the world was about to be dissolved, and the order of nature to be set aside; for it seemed as if the earth was shaken with violent convulsions, as by a universal earthquake; that the sun shined not with its usual lustre, but looked black and dark, as in a total eclipse; that the moon, instead of appearing with its usual brightness in the heavens, looked of a dusky red colour, as blood.

13. And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.]

(13.) Even the stars also seemed to disappear out of their places in the heavens, and like meteors to fall down upon the earth, or as blasted fruit is blown down from the trees upon the ground, by a violent storm.

14. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.]

(14.) Yet farther it was represented to me in my vision, as if the order of heaven and earth was to be totally changed, so as not to be restored again. The alterations were so great, as if the heavens were no longer spread over the earth, but rolled up together as a roll of parchment, and the mountains and islands, the most secure from the danger of earthquakes, as having the firmest foundations, were not only shaken, but quite thrown down and destroyed, so as never to be restored again; to signify, [11] according to the expressions of ancient prophecy, such a downfal of the empire and power of Rome heathen, as should never be recovered; but the power of these idolatrous enemies of the Christian faith should cease and be no more, as the power of the Assyrians and Babylonians, the ancient enemies of God's people, was destroyed, and never recovered.

15. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains.

16. And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:]

(15.) And so great was the punishment of these enemies of the Christian faith, that it reached persons of all ranks, states, and conditions, and filled their hearts every where with great apprehensions and fears; so that even those who had the highest authority, and governed the world as kings, such as were invested with great power, such as had grown very rich, persons in command and authority, or famous for strength or valour, persons of every condition, whether bond or free, endeavoured to find out some hidden place of safety and retreat, if possible, to conceal themselves, that these judgments might not reach them. [12] (16.) Nay, they were so concerned and dispirited, that they were rather desirous to be buried under the rocks and mountains, than so exposed to such terrible judgments, from the anger and power of the great Lord of the world, whose religion they had long opposed and persecuted. [13]

17. For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 4.] WHEN the Moabites saw the waters red by the shining of the sun upon them, they said, This is blood: so naturally is the red colour a representation of blood. (2 Kings iii. 22, 23.)

[2] Ver. 5.] Black, in ancient prophecy, is an emblem of affliction; and, in particular, an affliction occasioned by famine: thus, in the expressions of Jeremiah, Lam. v. 10. Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine.

[3] Thus famine is expressed by the prophet Ezekiel, iv. 16, 17. Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem: and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment: that they may want bread and water, and be astonished one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

[4] Ver. 6.] The measure of wheat is a chœnix, and the price a Roman denarius, or penny; of which Grotius* observes, the Roman penny was the daily wages of a workman, and a chœnix the allowance of corn for his daily provision: so that a penny for a measure of wheat, will in general appear a very excessive price; since corn, for one day's provision, would cost a whole day's wages. In another way of computation, if we reckon the measure of the chœnix to be about a quart English, and the Roman penny, or denarius, to be about eight-pence English,† the nearest a common computation of both, and there is no need here of more exactness, corn at that price will be above twenty shillings an English bushel; which, when the common wages of man's labour was but eight-pence a day, shewed a very great scarcity of corn, next to a famine.

[5] Ver. 8.] Pale is a usual epithet of death; "Pallidam mortem, dicunt poetæ," says Grotius.

[6] It is not unlikely, that the figures representing death, and the grave, might have their names expressed by some motto, or inscription; it was a thing so well known in the medals of those times, to write the names Pietas, Felicitas, Virtus, &c. under the figures designed to represent them.

[7] These are called the four sore judgments of God, in the ancient style of prophecy. Thus the prophet Ezekiel, (xiv. 21.) For thus saith the Lord God; How much more when I send my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast? Or, as the same prophet expresses those judgments of God, which none should escape, (xxxiii. 27.) Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts to be devoured, and they that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence. The meaning of which prophetic threatening is plain, that the judgments of God were to be so great, and so universal, that men should be able to find no place of security against them, but some one judgment or other should meet them every where.

[8] Ver. 9.] The word of God, and the testimony which they held, is a description of faithful Christians, who persevered in the Christian faith and worship, notwithstanding all the difficulties of persecution. They are called, the remnant which keep the commandment of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ, Rev. xii. 17. They are also described, as the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, Rev. xx. 4.

[9] Many suppose the expression under the altar, does allude to the ceremony of pouring out the blood, at the bottom or foot of the altar; but Dr. Hammond on the place has very justly observed, I think, "That this altar in St. John's vision, was not the altar of sacrifice in the court of the temple, but the altar of incense which was in the holy place; the whole scene of this vision being the sanctuary within the veil, where the altar of incense stood, the altar of burnt-offering standing without in the court." The blood of the martyrs is not compared with the blood of propitiatory sacrifices, but with the offering of incense on the golden altar; which offering was accompanied with the prayers of the congregation, to recommend them to God, according to the observation of a very learned author;* "Cum enim suffimenta sacra ita populi preces adumbrarent, ut sacerdos altera Deo adolens, alteras etiam ritu symbolico illi commendare," &c. A fit emblem of God's gracious acceptance of the constancy and perseverance of the faithful.

[10] Ver. 11.] When persons were approved, upon trial of their fitness for the priest's office, they were clothed with white garments, the proper habit of the priests: and rich garments, which it was usual for princes to send as presents, according to the customs of the eastern nations, were public marks of the prince's favour, and that he designed to confer honour on the persons to whom he presented them. This representation seems much to favour the immediate happiness of departed saints, and hardly to consist with that uncomfortable opinion, the insensible state of departed souls till after the resurrection.

[11] Ver. 14.] Great public calamities are described in the prophets, says a very celebrated author,† as if the order of nature was overturned, the earthquakes, the sun and moon are darkened, and the stars fall from heaven. This observation will give a plain and just sense to this part of prophetic description. There is no need with some to understand these expressions of real earthquakes and eclipses, the prophetic style plainly shews they are figurative expressions, describing great calamities and changes, which the judgments of God would bring upon the earth. The prophet Joel, describing in the beautiful images of prophetic style, a famine to be occasioned by a great number of locusts, which were to devour the whole fruits of the earth, thus expresses it, (ii. 10.) The earth shall quake before them, the heavens shall tremble, the sun and moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The prophet Isaiah, prophesying of a great destruction of God's enemies, for their opposition to his church, which he calls the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompences for the controversy of Zion, xxxiv. 8. he thus describes it, ver. 4. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from a fig-tree. The general meaning of which expressions is explained in the following verse, ver. 5. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven; behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. In like manner, the same prophet thus expresses the judgments of God in the punishment of sinners, xiii. 10. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. The meaning of which is thus explained in the next words, ver. 11. I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible. The prophet Ezekiel uses the same images, to express the downfal of oppressive empires and power. Thus, in the prophecy of the destruction of the empire of Egypt by the empire of Babylon, Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8. And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God. As the prophecy contained in this revelation relates to the heathen Roman empire, and their punishment as persecutors of the true religion and Christian faith, there is a plain general meaning of these expressions, applicable to those calamities and judgments, by which that persecuting power was to be destroyed.

It is farther observed by many interpreters, that chief and principal persons, such as princes and rulers, are figuratively expressed by sun, moon, and stars. It is an ingenious observation of Mr. Daubuz,* "That by the sun may be more particularly meant the heathen emperors; by the moon, the powers next to the supreme; by the stars, the less principal ruling powers of the idolatrous Roman empire; and farther, that by heavens may be meant the whole superior state of the Roman pagan world, civil and religious; and, finally, that by mountains and islands may be meant the strength and riches throughout Rome and its provinces, especially the idolatrous temples, with their treasures and revenues." These are ingenious conjectures, but I think not so plain and sure, as the general meaning fixed by the unquestionable use of these images in the former prophets.

[12] Ver. 15.] Thus the prophet Isaiah describes the fears of idolaters, and their apprehensions of the judgments of God, ii. 19. And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

[13] Ver. 16.] These expressions seem to be taken from the prophet Hosea, who thus describes the consternation of those who had fallen off to idolatry in Israel, when their idolatrous places of worship should be destroyed, and they should be punished for their apostacy, x. 8. The high places also of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come upon their altars; and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us: that is, according to a very learned interpreter,† such calamities shall befal them, as shall make their lives tedious to them, and worse than any kind of death; so that they shall wish to die, rather than live as they do.

HISTORY OF THE SEALS.

First seal.—The person who seems here represented, is Jesus Christ, who had received a kingdom from the Father, which was to rule all nations; concerning whose kingdom it was foretold, that, all opposition notwithstanding, it should be preserved, and prevail; so that finally, all enemies to it should be subdued, and the kingdoms of this world should become the kingdom of God, and of his Christ. These figurative representations of authority, government, success, and triumph, may be properly applied to the Christian religion, or kingdom of God and his Christ, now beginning to spread far and wide; and to comfort the faithful in Christ Jesus, that however the Jews on the one hand, or the heathen Roman empire on the other hand, greatly opposed and persecuted them; yet they should see the punishment of their enemies, both Jewish and heathen, and the cause of Christianity prevail over both, in a proper and appointed time. These expressions, and the interpretation of them, may receive some light from the style of the Psalmist, Psal. xlv. 3, &c. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the king's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee. Thy throne, O God, is for ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre. We have farther reason for the application of this prophecy to Christ, and the success of his kingdom, from an after-passage in this Revelation, xix. 11, &c. And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse, and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns, and he had a name written which no man knew but himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called, THE WORD OF GOD. And again, xvii. 14. These (the kings that gave their power and strength to the beast) shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings, and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful. Thus with great propriety to the order and design of this Revelation, the dignity and power of Christ, the protection and success of his gospel, is the first part of prophecy, for the consolation of the faithful, as it is the chief end and design of this book.

Second seal.—According to the order we have observed in these prophecies, the several parts of each period being successive to each other, as well as the periods themselves, the events in history to answer this prediction are to begin in the first period of the heathen Roman empire, and nearest to the time of the vision; and then this prophecy will fitly refer to the mutual slaughters of the Jews and heathen, the common enemies of the Christian faith, and persecutors of the Christian religion; thus taking peace from the earth, and killing one another. If this vision, as some learned men have thought, was in the time of Nero's persecution, and so before the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, the dreadful slaughter of the Jewish nation in that war may be described by it; in which, according to some,* one million five hundred thousand, according to others, two millions of Jews were slain, besides the Romans slain by the Jews. But if this vision was in the time of Domitian's persecution, as is the most common and likely opinion, it will refer to some event in history, after the destruction of Jerusalem; for that slaughter being passed, can hardly be supposed the meaning of a prophecy, or prediction of a judgment to come. Now the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian will sufficiently verify this representation. In the latter end of the reign of Trajan,* the Jews rebelled in Egypt and Cyprus, and are reported to have put to death, with great marks of cruelty, four hundred and sixty thousand men; yet the Jews were every where subdued, and prodigious numbers slain by the Romans. Eusebius† remarks on this part of history, "that the doctrine and church of our Saviour daily increased; but the calamities of the Jews were aggravated with new miseries."

Not long after, in the reign of Hadrian, the Jews were led into a new sedition, headed by one who pretended to be the Messiah, who was called Bar Chocab, or Son of the Star; because he gave out, he was the Star foretold by Balaam. The whole Jewish nation rose against the Roman government, and for some time did great mischiefs to the Romans; but at last they were entirely cut off by the Romans, though with great loss to themselves. In these wars, besides what was lost on the Roman side, the Jews had a thousand cities and fortresses destroyed, with the slaughter of above five hundred and eighty thousand men.‡ Thus the persecutors of the Christian faith and church perish by each other's hands. The Romans, by their idolatrous worship of Jupiter Capitolinus, provoke the Jews to rebellion, and the Jews are destroyed following a false Messiah, as their leader, when at the same time they rejected the true Messiah, and persecuted his followers; and they fall by the hands of a heathen nation, which had joined with them, in opposition to the Christian faith and profession: so that even the temporal evils the church was permitted to suffer by the persecution of its enemies, were not so great and dreadful as the calamities and judgments the providence of God permitted the persecutors themselves to bring upon each other, by their own hands: so that the faithful had no reason to complain, as if their afflictions were peculiar to themselves, or greater than what their enemies were corrected with. This period of history was about forty years after the vision.

Third seal.—According to the order of prophecy we have observed in this book, the events in history, to answer this prediction, are to be found in the next part of this period of the heathen Roman empire, or after the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian; now Antoninus Pius succeeded Hadrian, A. D. 138. Antoninus the philosopher, partly with Verus, and partly alone, and after them Commodus, governed the Roman empire, till within a few months of the reign of Severus, who began his empire, A. D. 193. a space of above fifty years.

Let us then see what the history of those times affords us, agreeable to this prophetical description. I think the description itself plainly expresses a great scarcity of provision; and though it does not foretell such a scarcity of provision as should amount to a famine, when no bread at all was to be had, which scarce ever happened in so many countries at once, as were subject to the Roman empire; yet it foretells, that bread, the staff of life, should be so scarce as to be sold at an excessive price, so as to be a very heavy judgment on the greater part of mankind, who have their bread to get by their daily labour.

* Usher Annal. 688.

* Xiphilin ex Dione, Trajanus. † Hist. Eccl. lib. iv. cap. 2.
‡ Xiphilin ex Dione, Hadrianus.

The fourth general persecution was within this period, near sixty years after the third general persecution by Trajan, A. D. 107. For Antoninus the philosopher, notwithstanding his other good qualities, had a strong superstition and zeal for the heathen religion, and began a new persecution against the Christians, about the year 165.

The state of the empire, under the reigns of this Antonine family, does properly and exactly answer this prophetic description.

But it will be proper to observe previously, that Mr. Mede, and, after him, Mr. Waple, and others, seem to have been led into a great mistake, in their interpretation of this prediction, by a conjecture without reasonable foundation.

The third beast, or living creature, according to Mr. Mede's* supposition of the standards of the camp of Israel, stood to the south; and therefore sheweth, as he observes, "this seal beginneth at the coming of an emperor, from that quarter, viz. Septimius Severus, an African, an emperor out of the south."

But as there seems to be little foundation for supporting a prediction, from the bare situation of the beasts, east, west, north, and south, if they had really been taken from the standards of the camp of Israel, there is yet less foundation for that supposition, as it is very uncertain, and indeed very improbable, the camp of Israel had any such standards from whence they are supposed to be taken, as we have observed more at large, on iv. 8. There was no need therefore for Mr. Mede to reject the common interpretation, so natural and proper, because the event was not answerable in the reign of Severus, since it was on no good foundation he fixed it to the reign of Severus: for if the beasts were not taken from the standards of the camp, or if they did not answer the situation of the standards, east, west, north, and south; or, finally, if standing to the south did not, in the intention of the prophecy, confine the time to the reign of an emperor born in Africa, there is no sufficient reason to confine this prophecy to the reign of Severus.

It is, on the contrary, for considerable reasons, directed to that part of the period of the heathen Roman empire, next after the preceding prophecy, which referred to the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian; and therefore may well be looked for in the reigns of the Antonine family: let us then see, whether, in those times, history does not take notice of famine, and scarcity of provisions, as worthy the honour of a character in Mr. Mede's expression.

The testimony of Tertullian,† who lived in those times, is very plain, and allowed by Mr. Mede; he mentions unseasonable weather, and bad harvests, the judgments of God, for persecuting the Christians. "Doleamus necesse est, quod nulla civitas impune latura sit sanguinis nostri effusionem.—Areæ ipsorum non fuerunt, messes enim suas non egerunt: cæterum et imbre anni præteriti, quod commeruerit genus humanum, apparuit, cataclysmum, scil."

But, says Mr. Mede, if the harvest failed in Africa some time, when Hilarianus was president, which he saith it did, it follows not therefore that this was general through the Roman empire, or in the age of Severus: whether it was in the age of Severus, is nothing material, but Africa was the granary of Italy, and a failure of harvest there must occasion a scarcity of provision in great part of the Roman empire: besides, it is observable, that Tertullian speaks of such a scarcity as was felt in every city, and that the rains that occasioned it were so great, as to threaten the world with a second flood.

But let us consider what the historians take notice of, with respect to a scarcity of provisions in Italy, and Rome itself, under the reign of the Antonines.

Aurelius Victor, in the reign of Antoninus Pius, observes, that the scarcity of provisions occasioned such a tumult in Rome, that the common people attempted to stone him, which he chose rather to suppress by fair means, than by severity. *"Usque eo autem mitis fuit, ut cum ob inopiæ frumentariæ suspicionem, lapidibus a plebe Romana perstringeretur, maluerit ratione exposita placare, quam ulcisci seditionem."

Julius Capitolinus† farther takes notice, that Antoninus Pius was fain to supply the scarcity of wine, oil, and corn, out of his own treasury; and that famine was one of the evils with which the empire was afflicted in his reign. "Vini, olei, et tritici penuriam, per ærarii sui damna emendo, et gratis populo dando, sedavit.—Adversa ejus temporibus hæc provenerunt, fames de qua diximus," &c.

In the reign of his successor, Antoninus the philosopher, we have a like account of scarcity of provision, to a famine; Mr. Echard‡ has thus expressed it: The birth of this prince (Commodus) was signalized by many deplorable disasters, particularly the river Tiber, by an inundation, overwhelmed a considerable part of Rome, bore along with it a multitude of people and cattle, ruined all the country, and caused an extreme famine; this inundation was seconded by earthquakes, burning of cities, and a general infection of the air, which immediately produced an infinite number of insects, who wasted all that the floods had spared. This account is taken, I suppose, from Capitolinus and Victor; for Julius Capitolinus thus mentions these calamities:§ "Dabat se Marcus totum philosophiæ, amorem civium affectans; sod interpellavit istam felicitatem securitatemque imperatoris, prima Tiberis inundatio, quæ gravissima fuit; quæ res et multa urbis ædificia vexavit, et plurimum animalium interemit, et famem gravissimam peperit."

Aurelius Victor thus:‖ "Terræ motus, non sine interitu civitatum, inundationes fluminum, lues crebræ, locustarum species, agris infestæ prorsus, ut prope nihil, quo summis angoribus alteri mortales solent, dici seu cogitari queat, quod non illo imperante sævierit."

In the next reign, of Commodus, Xiphilin¶ observes from Dio, there was such scarcity of provisions, that the people of Rome rose, and actually killed Cleander, the emperor's favourite, in the sedition. "Nam cum esset forte magna inopia rei frumentariæ, eamque Dionysius Papyrius præfectus annonæ fecisset majorem, ut populus Romanus culpam in Cleandrum propter furta quæ faciebat, conficeret, haberetque odio, eumque, id quod accidit, interficeret."

This scarcity of provisions, in every reign of the Antonines, continued to the empire of Severus, who heartily set himself to remedy so great an evil, and made it the great care of his life; which plainly shews, it was a very pressing evil; and that, through frequent wars, bad harvests, and a mismanagement of the public stores, scarcity of provisions was a distinguishing judgment of those times. So Ælius Spartian observes, in the life of Severus, * "Rei frumentariæ, quam minimam receperat, ita consuluit, ut excedens ipse vita, septem annorum canonem populo Romano relinqueret."

And thus also the reign of Severus appears a proper end to the judgment of this prediction.

Fourth seal.—The period of history, which in order of time answers to this period of prophecy, is the state of the Roman empire, after Severus, which begins about the year 211. In this time the persecution of the church was very severe; so that our ecclesiastical historians reckon four of the general persecutions, in the space of less than thirty years, under the reign of Maximin, Decius, Gallus and Volusian, and Valerian.

In this period of time, the several sore judgments of God were united, in the punishment of a persecuting empire, the sword, famine, and pestilence. The sword and famine, which were judgments of the foregoing seals, are continued in this, and the pestilence is added to them. The pestilence seems to be made the more distinguishing judgment of this seal. The name of the person sitting on the pale horse was Death,† which is the proper expression in the Scripture-language for the plague, as the prophet Jeremiah uses the word מות, death, for the plague; and the LXX. render דבר, pestilence, by θάνατον, death. Accordingly, we find all these judgments, in a very remarkable manner, in this part of history.

The state of the empire was very much disturbed both by foreign wars and intestine troubles; very few of the emperors but met with a violent death: so that besides thirty persons, who all pretended to the empire at once, there were twenty acknowledged emperors in the space of sixty years, from Caracalla, A. D. 211. to Aurelian, 270. These intestine divisions gave great heart and strength to the enemies of the Roman empire, and great advantages to the Persians, and northern nations, against it; so that Valerian, in whose reign the persecution was very violent, was taken prisoner by Sapores (or Sha Pur), king of Persia, kept captive by him, and treated with great severity to his death. Famine and scarcity of provisions are the usual effects of war, especially of civil wars. The spoil of armies, the fears of the country, and the want of hands for husbandry, hardly fail of producing scarcity, near to famine; especially when unseasonable weather shall also spoil the fruits of the earth. Mr. Mede observes from Dionysius of Alexandria, and Cyprian, that both war and famine were the judgments of these times.

* Cap. 8. † Vid. Grot. on Matt. xxiv. 7.

After these things, says Dionysius, speaking of the persecution of Decius, war and famine came upon us.* St. Cyprian, † in his Apology for the Christians, to Demetrius, proconsul of Africa, takes notice of the more frequent wars and famines of those times, that they were falsely charged upon the Christians; "Sed enim cum dicat plurimos conqueri, quod bella crebrius surgant, quod lues, quod fames sæviant, quodque imbres et pluvias serena longa suspendant, nobis imputari, tacere ultra non oportet." It is remarkable that Cyprian, in the same Apology, expressly declares his judgment, that these great calamities were according to former predictions, and brought upon the world, not because the Christians rejected the idolatrous Roman worship, but because the Romans rejected the worship of the true God. "Quod autem crebrius bella continuant, quod sterilitas et fames sollicitudinem cumulant, quod sævientibus morbis valetudo frangitur, quod humanum genus luis populatione vastatur, et hoc scias esse prædictum —Non enim, sicut tua falsa querimonia et imperitia, veritatis ignara, jactat et clamitat, ista accidunt, quod Dii vestri a nobis non colantur, sed quod a vobis non colatur Deus."‡ And, finally, he makes this the consolation of the Christians in their sufferings, "Certi et fidentes, quod inultum non remaneat, quodcunque perpetimur; quantoque major fuerit persecutionis injuria, tanto et justior fiat, et gravior, pro persecutione, vindicta." §

Pestilence seems designed the judgment of this prediction; Mr. Mede observes, ‖ from Zonaras and Lipsius, that a pestilence, arising from Ethiopia, went through all the provinces of Rome, and for fifteen years together incredibly wasted them. Neither did I ever read of a greater plague (saith an eminent man in our age), for that space of time or land. This pestilence is mentioned by Zonaras, in the reign of Gallus and Volusian, about the year 251.¶ The words of Zonaras are so agreeable to the prophetic description, that it may be useful to insert them:—He (Gallus) was very severe to the Christians, many being put to death by a persecution, not less grievous than that of Decius; under him the Persians renewed their motions, and settled in Armenia; an almost innumerable company of Scythians fell upon Italy,  and ravaged Macedonia, Thessaly, and Greece; a part of them, from the Palus Mæotis, broke through the Bosphorus into the Euxine Sea, and laid waste many provinces; and many other nations rose against the Romans. Moreover, a plague then infested the provinces, which beginning in Ethiopia, spread itself almost through the whole east and west, destroyed the inhabitants of many cities, and continued for fifteen years. Zosimus,†† a heathen historian, takes notice of the same calamity: While war raged in every part, a pestilence spread through all towns and villages, and destroyed the remainder of mankind; that so great a destruction of men had not hitherto ever happened in former times. I shall only add the short character of Eutropius, of the times of these emperors, Gallus and Volusian; he observes, their reigns were only memorable for pestilence and grievous distempers: "Sola pestilentia, et morbis, atque ægritudinibus, notus eorum principatus fuit."*

Fifth seal.—The period of history which in order of time answers to this period of prophecy, is the state of the church and Roman empire, after the reign of Aurelian, about the year of Christ 275. which we have endeavoured to shew was the period of the foregoing seal.

This period is marked in the prophetic description, by a time of severe sufferings, in which many gave up their lives, in honourable testimony to the Christian faith and religion; but it is also described but as a short time before their sufferings should end, and the church should enjoy a state of peace and prosperity, in a quiet and free profession of the Christian faith and worship. This seal then naturally leads us to consider the state of the church and empire, in the reigns of Dioclesian and Maximian.

Dioclesian began his reign about the year 284. which he appointed the beginning of a new civil era; but which the Christians, on account of the heavy and grievous persecution in his reign, were used to call the era of the martyrs: this was indeed the last, but the most extensive and furious of all the persecutions. We have a large account of it from Eusebius and Lactantius, who were themselves witnesses of it. It may however be sufficient to represent it in the words of Mr. Echard, † who has well abridged the larger accounts: "As this was the last persecution, so it was the most severe of all others, like the last efforts of an expiring enemy, who uses his utmost power and strength to give a parting blow. It were endless, and almost incredible, to enumerate the variety of sufferers and torments; it is sufficient to observe in this place, that they were scourged to death, had their flesh torn off with pincers, and mangled with broken pots, were cast to lions, tigers, and other wild beasts, were burned, beheaded, crucified, thrown into the sea, torn in pieces by the distorted boughs of trees, roasted by gentle fires, and holes made in their bodies for melted lead to be poured into their bowels. This persecution lasted ten years under Dioclesian, and some of his successors; and the incredible number of Christians that suffered death and punishment, made them conclude, that they had completed their work; and in an ancient inscription they tell the world, that they had effaced the name and superstition of the Christians, and had restored and propagated the worship of the gods. But they were so much deceived, that this hastened the destruction of paganism, and shortly after Christianity became victorious, and triumphant over all the powers and artifices of mankind." Thus exactly does this period of history answer the description of prophecy, in a state of very great sufferings; but which, for the consolation of the faithful, was very near its end.

Sixth seal.—The period of history, which in order of time answers to this part of prophecy, is after the heavy persecution of Dioclesian. It was to be but a short time after, in the expression of the prophecy, a little season, when there should be a very great change and alteration in the heathen Roman empire, attended with great calamities brought on the persecutors of truth and righteousness; even such as should break in pieces their oppressive power.

* Eutropius, lib. ix. † Rom. Hist. vol. ii. p. 533.

And the next state of the Roman empire will fully answer this description.

Dioclesian and Maximian resigned the empire, and retired to private life, being both forced to it by Galerius, as Lactantius very particularly relates it.* Upon the death of Constantius, and the accession of his son Constantine to his part of the empire, Maxentius got himself declared emperor at Rome; Galerius, to suppress this rebellion, persuades Maximian to resume the empire, which he does; but, in a short time, has the mortification of being deposed; and soon after, for attempting the life of Constantine,† is forced to put an end to his own life, by an ignominious death.

Galerius was smitten with a very loathsome and incurable distemper, attended with such insupportable torments, that he often endeavoured to kill himself, and caused some of his physicians to be slain, because their medicines proved ineffectual: he at last began to think of the Christians; he put an end to their persecution by a public edict, in which he in particular requires their prayers for his recovery, "Unde juxta hanc indulgentiam nostram, debebunt Deum suum orare pro salute nostra, et Reipublicæ ac sua."‡ Yet soon after this public acknowledgment in favour of Christianity, he died of his loathsome distemper, about the year 311.

Constantine, who became a great favourer of the Christians, marches against Maxentius, who opposes him with a great army of one hundred and seventy thousand foot, and eighteen thousand horse; after a fierce and bloody battle, Maxentius was defeated by Constantine.§ Upon this victory, Constantine, who had secured by it the whole empire of the west, gives free liberty for the open profession of the Christian religion.

In the east, Maximin revoked the liberties granted the Christians, makes war with Licinius; but being defeated, with great slaughter of his numerous army, puts many heathen priests and soothsayers to death, as cheats. Not long after, ‖ as he was endeavouring to try the event of a second battle, he was struck with a violent distemper, with intolerable pains and torments all over his body; he wasted to nothing, became quite blind, and died raging and in despair; confessing upon his death-bed,¶ that all this was but a just punishment upon him, for his spiteful and virulent proceedings against Christ and his religion. Lactantius has these remarkable words, "Cum jam terra marique perterreretur, nec ullum seperaret refugium, angore animi ac metu confugit ad mortem, quasi ad remedium malorum, quæ Deus in caput ejus ingessit." And so, taking poison, he died in that miserable manner.

Constantine in the west, and Licinius in the east, remained now sole emperors; Licinius severely persecuted the Christians in his part of the empire; a war breaks out between the two emperors; Licinius, notwithstanding a stout resistance, was overthrown, and forced to fly: but soon a second war began, which was carried on with greater fury than ever; Licinius is again defeated in a general battle,†† in which, it is reported, one hundred thousand men were slain. He is taken prisoner; and though his life was then spared, yet, upon new attempts against the life of Constantine, he is put to death, and with him ended all the heathen power of Rome.

A little after this, Constantine removes the seat of the empire from Rome to Constantinople, forms a new model of the Roman government and empire, puts the administration of the government into the hands of four principal officers, called prætorian præfects, abolishes all the power of paganism, and establishes the Christian religion throughout the empire.

Thus, by great and frequent calamities, in which so many emperors had their share one after another, this wonderful change was wrought in the heathen Roman empire; their power to oppress and persecute the Christian religion fell, like the Assyrian and Babylonian persecutors, never to rise any more.

This part of history is so easily applicable to the prophetic description, that I shall only represent it in the words of Mr. Daubuz:* "From this account it appears, that the pagan Roman emperors were deprived of their government, and came to miserable ends:—that the pagan Roman Cæsars fell in battle, or were put to death:—that the religion of the idolaters received a mortal wound, all the colleges of pontifices, augurs, vestals, in a word, all the pagan priests and religious officers throughout the empire, being brought under the power and dominion of a Christian prince:—that many of the pagan officers, civil and military, were displaced, and Christians put in their room:—that there was a thorough change in the government, and that paganism lessened by degrees, till it entirely disappeared:—that the greatest of the persecutors acknowledged and confessed the justness and cause of God's judgments:—and, lastly, that upon this change, all the idolaters, upon account of their horrid cruelties and barbarities against the Christians, could not but be in daily expectation of the severest punishments."

To this I shall add but one remark, That this part of history is very proper to the general design of the whole Revelation, to support the patience, and encourage the perseverance, of the church, in such an instance of God's power and faithfulness in the protection of the Christian religion, and punishment of its enemies. We see, in this period, during the persecution of Rome heathen, the church in a state of trial and suffering, yet preserved and protected, and finally obtaining a state of peace and safety, when all the power of their persecutors was totally destroyed by God's overruling providence. This history verifies the general truth of all the prophecies, and the particular predictions of each of them severally. A strong encouragement to the patience and constancy of the true church!

CHAP. VII.

SECT. VI. Interval between the first and second Periods.

CONTENTS.

The former chapter concluded the first period, and the sufferings of the church under the persecution of the heathen Roman empire. The second period of prophecy begins with the opening of the seventh seal, and is contained in the events which attend the sounding of the trumpets; an account of which we have in the eighth and ninth chapters. In this chapter, I conceive, we have an account of a little pause, or interval, to describe the state of things, for a short time, between the two periods. After these things, that is, after the prophetic vision that represented the first period, St. John saw, in other visions, what is related in this chapter. This seems a representation of a state of peace and quiet throughout the earth, especially in the Roman empire, and of the great number of persons in every nation, which came into the profession of Christianity; of the encouraging protection that was given to the Christian church, of thankful acknowledgments for the goodness and power of God and Christ, by the whole church, in such eminent instances of favour and protection; and, finally, of the happy state of all the faithful confessors and martyrs, who, after a short time of tribulation, for the faith of Christ, and constancy in his religion, have attained to a state of everlasting rest, in happiness and glory.

Thus wisely does this part of prophecy promote the principal design of the whole, to encourage the faith and patience, the hope and constancy of the church, under all opposition and sufferings. It seems designed to shew, with the certainty of prophetic revelation, that as God directs all things in the world by his providence, so he will direct them to serve the designs of his goodness to the church; and that the great revolutions of the world shall often be in favour of true religion, and for its protection; and to assure the faithful, that all they suffer for the sake of truth and righteousness, shall soon be rewarded with a state of peace, honour, and happiness.

1. AND after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the winds should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.]

(1.) Now after my former visions, which represented the providence of God towards the church and world, to the downfal of the heathen Roman empire, the state of the church and world next to follow, was also represented to me in another prophetic vision; in which I beheld four angels, representing the government of providence, as directed by God's will and command, and executed by his messengers or ministers. [1] Those angels were represented, as placed at the four chief points from whence the winds are used to blow, to restrain them from blowing with violence on any part of the world: to shew, God designed in his providence, to put a stop to the tumults and commotions that had before so much disturbed the world, and to give the church and world a time of peace and rest [2] for a season.

2. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,]

(2.) I farther beheld in my vision, another angel, as ascending from the eastern point of the heavens, who appeared with the seal of God in his hand, as sent on some particular message; this angel, as he came on, made proclamation with a loud voice, that the commotions and disorders of the world should cease for a time;—

* Daubuz Explanat. of seal sixth, 258.

3. Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.]

(3.) That a state of peace and quiet should continue, until he had sealed the servants of God, till many should receive the distinguishing mark or seal of the Christian church, the sign and testimonial of their Christian profession, and consecration to the service of God, and of God's peculiar favour to them, as his church and peculiar people. [3]

4. And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed a hundred and forty and four thousand, of all the tribes of the children of Israel.]

(4.) And the number of those who were thus sealed, and consecrated to God, as his church and peculiar people, was very great; a number that figuratively expressed many persons of all people and nations, professing the Christian faith, and serving God in the worship of the Christian church, now the true Israel of God, it being the square number of twelve, multiplied by a thousand. [4]

5. Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6. Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephthalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7. Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8. Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.]

(5—8.) This great number of people, which professed the faith and worship of the Christian church, were in proportion out of every place and nation, as if a proportional number had been sealed out of every one of the tribes, into which the children of Israel had been divided, according to the number of their patriarchs, as if now all the nations of the earth who were to be blessed in the Christian church had succeeded in their room, as the true Israel of God; for it was represented to me in my vision, as if twelve thousand were sealed in the tribe of Juda, as many in the tribe of Reuben, and a like number in every one of the other tribes.

9. After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;]

(9.) After I had beheld this happy and prosperous state of the church, at the end of so many and grievous afflictions, I saw, in my prophetic vision, the whole church of heaven, joining in a solemn act of praise. The song of praise began with the united voices of an innumerable company of persons of all nations and countries, who were clothed in white garments, marks of piety, honour, and dignity; and they had palm-branches in their hands, emblems of joy and victory;—

10. And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.]

(10.) And they said with a loud voice, Salvation be ascribed unto our God, the supreme and sovereign Lord of all, who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb of God, who has all power to protect and save his faithful servants. [5]

11. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God,]

(11.) Then the angels of God, who stood round about the throne, and the twenty-four elders, with the four living creatures or cherubim, prostrated themselves before the throne of God, joining in the same act of worship and thanksgiving with the saints.

12. Saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.]

(12.) For they said, Amen, to their hymn of praise; and added, Let all with a sincere and devout heart, ascribe unto God, blessing, glory, wisdom, thanksgiving, honour, power, and might, for ever and ever. Amen.

13. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?]

(13.) To give me a more exact information concerning these persons who were clothed in the white robes of purity, honour, and dignity, one of the elders led me on by a question, to ask of him a fuller account of them.

14. And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.]

(14.) Whereupon he gave me this account of them: These persons whom you behold appearing in this state of honour and happiness, were very lately in a state of great afflictions and suffering for the sake of their faith and constancy; but having kept the faith, they have received the blessings Christ obtained by his blood, for his church and faithful people; they are now cleansed from all impurity, adorned with all perfection, and advanced to this state of glory and happiness in which you see them.

15. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.]

(15.) They are counted worthy to appear in the immediate presence of God, even here before his throne, and have obtained the honour and happiness of a constant attendance upon God; and, like his angels, cease not day or night to praise him: and the presence of God will be an everlasting spring of happiness and joy to them.

16. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.]

(16.) They shall no more be subject to any of their former troubles or afflictions. None of the natural or common evils of the world below shall reach them any more.

17. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.]

(17.) For it shall be the care of the Lamb of God to bless them, who has all power to make them completely happy. He shall bless them with perpetual everlasting joys; and every sorrow, with every cause of sorrow, shall be fully taken away for ever. [6]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 1.] AN angel, in prophetic style, expresses every thing that brings a message from God, or executes the will of God, as, a prophetic dream, a pillar of fire, &c. (See note on i. 1.)

[2] Winds are emblems of commotions, and very properly, as they are the natural causes of storms. Thus this figurative expression is used, and explained by the prophet Jeremiah, xlix. 36, 37. And upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them towards all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcast of Elam shall not come. For I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life: and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the Lord; and I will send my sword after them, till I have consumed them. To hold the winds, that they should not blow, is a very proper prophetic emblem of a state of peace and tranquillity.

[3] Ver. 3.] Sealing has several intentions in the style of prophecy, which may be seen in Mr. Daubuz's Symbolical Dictionary; as, preservation and security, secrecy, confirmation, and authority. But, I conceive, the principal meaning here is to denote propriety, in allusion to the custom of sealing things, that it might be known to whom they belong. Now, as the sacraments of circumcision under the law, and baptism under the gospel, were used as public marks of consecration to God, as his peculiar people, and of God's favour to his church, as his peculium, this expression, of sealing the servants of God, may well be understood, I think, of a great addition to the numbers of the Christian church by baptism; or receiving the seal of the Christian religion, the mark of God's peculium.

[4] Ver. 4.] This single passage, says the Bishop of Meaux, may shew the mistake of those, who always expect the numbers in the Revelation to be precise and exact: for is it to be supposed, that there should be in each tribe twelve thousand elect, neither more nor less, to make up the total sum of one hundred forty and four thousand? It is not by such trifles, and low sense, the Divine oracles are to be explained: we are to observe, in the numbers of the Revelation, a certain figurative proportion, which the Holy Ghost designs to point out to observation. As there were twelve patriarchs, and twelve apostles, twelve becomes a sacred number in the synagogue, and in the Christian church. This number of twelve first multiplied into itself, and then by a thousand, makes one hundred forty and four thousand. The bishop observes,* in the solid proportion of this square number, the unchangeableness of the truth of God and his promises; perhaps it may mean the beauty and stability of the Christian church, keeping to the apostolical purity of faith and worship.

[5] Ver. 10.] This vision, especially when compared with the former in the fourth and fifth chapters, is to be understood, I conceive, of the church in heaven; as heaven seems to be the proper scene of the vision, so the innumerable company of saints with whom the angels join in the following words, in the presence of God and the Lamb, is most naturally to be understood, I think, of those who, having been faithful unto death, had received the crown of immortal life, in the state of heavenly happiness. And I question, whether the praises of the church on earth will answer the prophetic description, or the intention of the prophetic Spirit, in the great encouragement it designed to give to faithfulness and constancy. I think, to understand it of the heavenly church, is a natural sense of the expressions, a sense proper to the design of the prophecy, as it represents the faithful martyrs and confessors, once so great sufferers on earth, now blessed saints in heaven.

[6] Ver. 17.] Interpreters are not agreed in the proper meaning of this description. Some understand it, of the peaceful and prosperous state of the church on earth. In some cases, very strong expressions of prophetic style, are to be softened to a sense that will agree to a happy state of the church in this world. Others, who observe the force of these expressions, and how much they agree with the description of the new heavens and new earth, chap. xxi. understand it of the happy state of the church for one thousand years, which they also suppose a resurrection-state of the martyrs. I shall only observe, that as the time of the thousand years is, according to the order of this prophecy, very distant, I think, from the time to which this part of it refers, I can by no means suppose the Spirit of prophecy designed this description should be applied to the state of the millenium. And though the description may be softened to such a sense, as may represent the peaceful and prosperous state of the church under Constantine, yet, I think, the sense given in the paraphrase is more agreeable to the expressions of this description, and to the design of the prophecy; which, when united together, are the surest rules of interpretation to follow.

CHAP. VIII.

SECT. VII. Second Period, of the Trumpets.

CONTENTS.

This chapter opens the second period of this prophecy, which begins upon opening of the seventh seal, and is distinguished by the sounding of seven trumpets. This period of the trumpets contains a prophetic description of the state of the world and church, for a considerable space of time after the empire became Christian, during the continuance of the empire in the successors of Constantine. It describes the great devastation of the Roman empire, by the several nations that broke in upon it, and finally put an end to it. It describes a time of great calamity, a state of new trials. It shews the church what it was to expect in new dangers, and opposition, after it should be delivered from the persecution of the heathen Roman government. And when the Christian religion should have the protection of the laws, and the favour of the emperors, the church would still have great need of caution, watchfulness, patience, and constancy; and there would be still this encouragement to faithfulness and perseverance, that though the opposition in this period of time would be very great, yet neither should this prevail against the cause of truth and righteousness; the Christian faith and religion should be preserved, and in the end triumph over this opposition, as it had before over the former opposition, from the heathen emperors of Rome. And thus fully answers the general design and use of the prophecy, to direct and encourage the constancy of the Christian church in faith and patience, whatever opposition it may meet with from the world.

* In loc.

1. AND when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.]

(1.) After the space of time allowed for sealing the servants of God, and a great addition was made to the Christian church, which greatly lessened the power, and weakened the opposition of idolatry to Christianity; I had a farther revelation in my prophetic vision, to shew what would be the state of the church and world, after so great a change in favour of the Christian faith and religion. I observed, that now the Lamb opened the seventh and last seal; and hereupon it was represented to me, as if there had been a state of silence in heaven for about half an hour, like the silence in the temple-worship, when the whole congregation was at private prayer and devotion.[1]

2. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets.]

(2.) I farther beheld in my vision, seven chief angels standing before the throne of God, as attendants to receive his orders, and to execute them, after the manner of the great princes of the east, who were used to be so attended by the princes and chief officers of their court. And I beheld also in my vision, that seven trumpets were given to these seven chief angels, to each of them one.

3. And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne.]

(3.) Then I saw another angel, like the priest chosen to offer incense, by lot, standing at the golden altar, having a golden censer, and much incense,[2] to offer with the prayers of the saints, who were at their private devotions in silence: this incense the angel offered at the golden altar, which was before the throne, there being in this representation of the heavenly presence no veil, and so no distinction between the holy and most holy place.

4. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hands.]

(4.) And I perceived the smoke of the incense, which the angel offered with the prayers of the saints, who were at their private devotions, ascended up before God. A testimony of God's gracious acceptance of their worship, and of the continuance of God's protection and blessing to his faithful worshippers.

5. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth: and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake.]

(5.) I farther beheld in my vision, that the angel who had offered the incense took his censer; and going down from the golden altar to the altar of burnt-offering, he filled it with burning coals, and cast them down upon the earth: and immediately thereupon, there arose a terrible storm, with great noise, thundering, lightning, and earthquake, representing new commotions in the world, and some great calamities by the righteous judgment of God.[3]

6. And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.]

(6.) This part of the vision having prepared my attention to observe what should be revealed at each angel's sounding of his trumpet, as before upon opening the seals, in order, I perceived the seven angels preparing to sound their trumpets.

7. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.]

(7.) The first angel soon sounded his trumpet: upon which there followed a great storm of hail, and even of fire mingled with blood; which burned up and destroyed a great part of the trees, and green grass of the earth. A proper representation of great commotions and disorders in the world, attended with great bloodshed, and destruction of many of the several ranks and conditions of men.[4] (See the history of the first trumpet at the end of this chapter.)

8. And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood;]

(8.) I then perceived the second angel sounded his trumpet; and I beheld, as if a great mountain, all on fire, had been cast into the sea; by which a very considerable part of the waters of the sea was turned into blood.

9. And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships was destroyed.]

(9.) And a very great part both of the creatures which live in the sea, and the ships that pass on it for business or defence, was destroyed in great numbers. A proper figurative representation of a farther judgment, which should reach the capital city of the empire, and many of the provinces; destroying their power and riches, dismembering them from the empire, and depriving it of all future support and assistance from them.[5] (See the history of the second trumpet at the end of this chapter.)

10. And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters;]

(10.) And I farther perceived in my vision, that the third angel sounded his trumpet; upon which, I beheld a representation as of a large star, all on fire, which, like a flaming torch, fell down from heaven upon a great part of the rivers, and fountains of waters.

11. And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.]

(11.) Upon which, as if wormwood had been mixed with the waters, it made them so bitter, they were no longer wholesome to drink; but, like waters infected, they occasioned the death of many people. Denoting a farther judgment on the Roman empire, on the capital and seat of the empire; signifying a thorough desolation and downfal, not only weakening it, by dismembering its provinces, but putting an end to all power and authority of the government itself.[6] (See the history of the third trumpet at the end of this chapter.)

12. And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so that the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

(12.) I moreover beheld in my vision, when the fourth angel sounded his trumpet; and the events which were to follow upon it were represented by a very great and gloomy darkness: as if a thick cloud had so darkened the air, that neither the light of the sun, moon, or stars, could be perceived through it; so far was it from the brightness of a clear day, that there was not so much as the brightness of a clear night, but all around was cloudy and dark. A fit representation, to express the last desolation of the imperial city, which God's righteous judgments had doomed (as Babylon heretofore) to a loss of all power, and of all authority. [7] (See the history of the fourth trumpet at the end of this chapter.)

13. And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound.

(13.) After this, I farther perceived in my vision, that an angel flew, as it were, through the midst of heaven, and proclaimed, for the information of all, with an audible voice, Though the judgments signified by the four trumpets which have already sounded are very great and formidable, yet greater judgments still remain to be inflicted on the earth, in the events that are to follow upon sounding the three trumpets that yet remain. [8]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 1.] MOST interpreters agree, this silence in heaven for half an hour, is an allusion to the manner of the temple-worship, that while the priest offered incense in the holy place, the whole people prayed without in silence, or privately to themselves. (Luke i. 10.) On the day of expiation, the whole service was performed by the high-priest; to which particular service Sir Isaac Newton* has observed an allusion: "The custom was, on other days, to take fire from the great altar in a silver censer; but on this day (of expiation), for the high-priest to take fire from the great altar, in a golden censer; and when he was come down from the great altar, he takes incense from one of the priests, who brought it to him, and went with it to the golden altar; and while he offered the incense, the people prayed without in silence: which is the silence in heaven for half an hour." It is true, on the day of expiation, the high-priest did all the service himself; he used a golden censer, and took his hands full of incense: yet it may be a question, whether the mention of a golden censer, and much incense, may not refer to the great glory and perfection of the heavenly worship, as well as to the peculiar service of the high-priest. On this supposition, a golden censer, and much incense, will not require the hands of a high-priest; for the offering of incense was usually assigned, by lot, to any one of the priests of the course: and this, I think, will be found more agreeable to the following parts of the prophetic description.

[2] Ver. 3.] These censers were the same with the vials full of odours, mentioned v. 8. the offering incense on the golden altar, seems to determine this allusion to the constant offering of incense in the temple, and not to the service peculiar to the high-priest on the day of expiation; and fully shews the propriety of this vision, in not representing the high-priest; which, in this prophetic vision, would have been the Lamb, as personally officiating in this act of worship.

[3] Ver. 5.] These voices, thunderings, lightning, and earthquake, seem to me, to mean something very different from "an allusion to the voice of the high-priest reading the law to the people, and other voices, and thunderings from the trumpets and temple-music, at the sacrifices and lightnings from the fire of the altar."* Nor can I conceive, that the voices, thunder, lightning, and earthquake, consequent upon the angel's casting fire into the earth, shew, "That during the offering of the incense, or at least immediately upon it, the voice of God was heard, his word was preached, and the gospel was spread to the enlightening of man."† These expressions much rather denote some great judgment on the earth, or Roman empire. Thunders and lightnings, when they proceed from the throne of God, (Rev. iv. 5.) are fit representations of God's glorious and awful majesty; but when fire comes down from heaven upon the earth, it expresses some judgment of God on the world, as in this prophecy, xx. 9. And fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them: and in like manner, when great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath, xvi. 19. there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings, and a great earthquake. This being mentioned previous to the sounding of the trumpets, I think it may be understood as a general description of the many calamities of this period, notwithstanding the seeming secure prosperity of the Christian church.

[4] Ver. 7.] A thunder-storm and tempest, that throws down all before it, is a fit metaphor to express the calamities of war, from civil disturbances or foreign invasion, which often, like a hurricane, lay all things waste, as far as they reach. In the language of prophecy, this is a usual representation; so the prophet Isaiah expresses the invasion of Israel by Shalmaneser king of Assyria: Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, which as a tempest of hail and a destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down to the earth with the hand. (Isa. xxviii. 2.) And the same prophet in general thus expresses the judgments of God; Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts, with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire: (Isa. xxix. 6.) meaning likely the invasion of Sennacherib. The prophet Ezekiel expresses the judgments of God on the prophets who deceived the people, saying Peace, where there is no peace: Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury, and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to destroy it, (xiii. 13.)

It is likely here is also an allusion to one of the plagues of Egypt, which was a destroying storm or tempest; For the Lord sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground, and the hail smote throughout all the land of

Egypt, all that was in the field, and brake every tree of the field. (Exod. ix. 23.)

It is a just observation of Sir Isaac Newton,* "That in the prophetic language, tempests, winds, or the motions of clouds, are put for wars; thunder, or the voice of a cloud, for the voice of a multitude; and storms of thunder, lightning, hail, and overflowing rain, for a tempest of war, descending from the heavens, and clouds politic. In like manner,† the earth, animals, and vegetables, are put for the people of several nations and conditions. Trees, and green grass, express the beauty and fruitfulness of a land; and when the earth is an emblem of nations and dominions, may signify persons of higher rank, and of common condition."

"Trees here (says Mr. Waple‡), according to the prophetic scheme of speech, signify the great ones; and grass, by the like analogy, signifies common people;" or as Mr. Mede,§ "from the analogy it is easily gathered, that green grass is taken for the common people, when, as here, it is joined with trees."

Whether it was the intention of the prophetic style to be so particular, I take not upon me to determine; but it seems plain, it is designed to express some great calamities brought on the empire, when it is represented as a storm that destroyed not only the green grass, which is more easily blasted, but which destroyed also a great part of the trees, which are supposed more likely to withstand the violence of a storm; and it seems to point out these calamities as the effect of wars and bloodshed throughout the Roman empire, in the beginning of this period.

[5] Ver. 9.] In the style of prophecy, a mountain signifies a kingdom, and the strength of it, its metropolis, or capital city. Thus the prophet Jeremiah foretells the downfal of Babylon, li. 25. Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth; and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain. The prophet himself explains the literal meaning of these figurative expressions, ver. 27. Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz. The plain meaning of the figure of a burnt-mountain, seems also taught by the prophet, ver. 30, &c. They have burnt her dwelling-places; her bars are broken. One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to shew the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end, and that the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burnt with fire, and the men of war are affrighted. The general meaning of this prophecy is farther thus explained, ver. 58. Thus saith the Lord God of hosts; The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burnt with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary. All efforts to preserve their city and empire, says Mr. Lowth on the place, shall be as insignificant, as if men wrought in the fire, which immediately destroys all the fruit of their labours: or, as the words may be better translated, And the people shall labour for a thing of nought, and the folk shall weary themselves for that which shall be fuel for the fire; i. e. they shall not be able to preserve their city, but it shall be taken, and become a prey to the flames.

Great disorders and commotions, especially when kingdoms are moved by hostile invasions, are expressed in the prophetic style, by carrying or casting mountains into the midst of the sea. Therefore we will not fear though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea. (Psal. xlvi. 2.)

The sea, in the Hebrew language, is any collection of waters, as Mr. Daubuz* observes. Now, as waters are expressly made a symbol of people in this prophecy, xvii. 15. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are people, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues: the sea may well represent the collection of many people and nations into one politic body or empire; and when a sea is considered as an empire, or a collection of people into one body politic, the living creatures in that sea will be the people, or nations, whose union constitutes this empire. And the prophet Ezekiel, by a like figure, describes the destruction of the inhabitants of Egypt, by the death of all the fish of the rivers, xxix. 3, &c. Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt.——I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales.——I will leave thee thrown on the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers. These expressions seem explained by the prophet to this meaning: Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

Ships, from their use in trade, are a proper representation of the riches of a people; and as they are of use in war, especially to the maritime nations, they are proper emblems of strength and power. As ships were of both uses in the Roman empire, they may well be understood both of the riches and power of the Roman empire.

Thus we have a description, in this part of the second period of prophecy, of a judgment to come on the empire, in which the capital should suffer much, many provinces should be dismembered, as well as invaded, and the springs of power and riches in the empire should be very much diminished. Let us consider how the next period of history agrees with the description of prophecy.

[6] Ver. 11.] Stars, in prophetic style, are figurative representations of many things; among others, they signify kings, or kingdoms, eminent persons of great authority and power. Thus, in the prophecy of Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 17. There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel. Thus, the power of the horn of the he-goat, prevailing over other powers, is represented in Dan. viii. 10. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. The downfal of the kingdom of Babylon is represented by a like figurative expression, the fall of Lucifer, or the morning-star, Isa. xiv. 12. How art thou fallen, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! The most natural interpretation of this symbol seems to be this: That as the rising of a star denotes the rise of some new power or authority, so the fall of a star from heaven, signifies the fall of some kingdom or empire.

Rivers and fountains of waters may be considered as the source and spring of waters, which running in a common channel, make a sea. And then, as a sea, or collection of waters, denotes a collection of many people into one government, the rivers and fountains of waters may represent the seat of the empire or people, which have enlarged their dominion, by reducing other nations into provinces; so that, in this sense, rivers and fountains of waters may denote the original country or seat of the empire, in distinction from the provinces.

* P. 18. † Ibid. p. 19.
‡ In loc. § On the Revelation, p. 85.

* Symbol. Dict.

Rivers, and fountains of waters to supply them, may also be considered as necessaries to the support of life. Drying up rivers and fountains of waters, expresses a scarcity of things necessary: thus, when Hosea prophesies that Samaria shall become desolate, he thus expresses it; Though he be fruitful among his brethren, an east wind shall come, the wind of the Lord shall come up from the wilderness, and his spring shall become dry, and his fountain shall be dried up: he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels, (xiii. 15.) And thus the prophet Isaiah describes the destruction of Egypt, xix. 5. And the waters shall fail from the sea, and the river shall be wasted and dried up.

And, finally, there seems an allusion in this description, to one of the plagues of Egypt. And Moses and Aaron did so, as the Lord commanded; and he lifted up the rod, and smote the waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants; and all the waters that were in the river were turned into blood. And the fish that was in the river died; and the river stank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt. (Exod. vii. 20, 21.) Here, then, we have a prophecy, which aptly expresses a judgment to come on the seat of the Roman empire, which should destroy the power of it, in its spring and fountain, and cut off all its necessary supports; as when rivers and fountains, so necessary to life, are infected, and become rather deadly, than fit for use.

[7] Ver. 12.] Darkening, smiting, or setting, of the sun, moon, and stars, says Sir Isaac Newton,* are put for the setting of a kingdom, or the desolation thereof, proportional to the darkness. And when darkness is opposed to light, Mr. Daubuz observes,† as light is a symbol of joy and safety, so darkness is a symbol of misery and adversity. According to the style of the prophet Jeremiah, Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness, (xiii. 16.) The darkness of the sun, moon, and stars, is likewise observed to denote a general deficiency in government, as the prophet describes a day of severe judgment: For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible. (Isa. xiii. 10, 11.) And thus the prophet Ezekiel describes the destruction of the kingdom of Egypt, xxxii. 7, 8. And when I will put thee out, or, as in the margin, extinguish thee, quite deprive thee of all authority and power, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God. As this is the meaning of these figurative expressions in general, it is also a good rule of interpretation, to apply the particular meaning of such descriptions, according to the subject, to the order and scene of action then referred to, and intended to be represented by such descriptions.* In this view, considering that the subject, order, and scene of action, are the downfal of the Roman empire, and of the power and authority of Rome the imperial city, it will very fitly and properly represent an entire extinguishing of all authority and power in Rome, once the seat of empire; putting out or extinguishing, in the language of Ezekiel, the splendour of authority and power, as well as taking away the full exercise of it. Not only the brightness of the day, and light of the sun, but the fainter light of the night and moon, nay, even the little glimmering light of the stars, shall be put out.

[8] Ver. 13.] Several interpreters suppose this part of the vision a representation of some faithful witnesses, against the superstition, idolatry, and growing corruptions, of those times. So Mr. Daubuz observes, "Preaching against errors, is prophesying against them; and by that bringing down the judgments of God upon the impenitent, he supposes the dreadfulness of the woes of the three trumpets, is proclaimed to the corrupt members of the church; because, as they were endued by the Divine revelation, with more knowledge than before, being all Christians by name, they therefore deserve to suffer more for their crimes than plain heathens, such as were chiefly concerned in the former judgments." The greater guilt of a corrupt church, is indeed a good reason for severe punishment, and will justify the ways of Providence, in these heavy judgments on the empire, now Christian, yet going fast into corruption of doctrine and manners, and even to incorporate the heathen superstition and idolatry into the Christian worship; but whether this part of the vision means any more than to raise attention to the following events, which were to be very calamitous and extensive, I shall leave to the judgment of the reader.

HISTORY OF THE TRUMPETS.

First trumpet.—Let us briefly consider, how this prophetic representation was verified in correspondent history.

The former period put an end to the persecution of heathen Rome, by the empire of Constantine the Great, a Christian prince, and protector of the Christian religion, about the year 323. Then was a time of peace and rest to the empire, as well as the church; which answers well to the time appointed for sealing the servants of God in their foreheads: but this is represented as a short time; and the angels soon prepared themselves to sound, when there would be new commotions to disturb the peace of the empire and church.

If we look into the history of the times which immediately followed this great revolution of the Roman empire, under Constantine, from heathen to Christian, we shall find it thus: Constantine came to the whole power of the empire, about 323. and continued possessed of that power about fifteen years, to the year 337.

During all this time, the empire had a state of tranquillity, unknown for many years: there were no civil disorders; and though the Goths made some incursions into Mæsia, the most distant parts of the Roman dominions, they were soon driven back into their own country. The profession of Christianity was greatly encouraged, the converts to it from idolatry were innumerable; so that the face of religion was, in a very short time, quite changed throughout the Roman empire. Thus the providence of God, notwithstanding all opposition, brought the Christian church into a state of great security and prosperity.

But on the death of Constantine, the state of things soon altered again. He was succeeded by his three sons, in different parts of his empire; by Constantine in Gaul; Constans in Italy; and Constantius in Asia, and the east. Constantius, in a short time, sacrificed his father's near relations to his jealousy of power:* differences arose between Constantine and Constans; Constans surprised his brother Constantine, and put him to death. In a little time after, Constans himself is put to death by Magnentius, who assumed the empire. At the same time, Constantius, in the east, was hard pressed by the Persians; but apprehending greater danger from Magnentius, marches against him: the war between them was very fierce and bloody; insomuch that Victor† observes, it almost ruined the whole strength of the Roman empire; "Hoc tempore Constantius cum Magnentio apud Mursiam dimicavit; in quo bello pæne nunquam amplius Romanæ consumptæ sunt vires, totiusque imperii fortunæ pessumdatæ."

A little after this bloody intestine war, all the Roman provinces were invaded at once, from the eastern to the western limits,‡ by the Franks, Almans, Saxons, Quades, Sarmatians, and Persians; so that, according to Eutropius,§ "Cum multa oppida barbari expugnassent, alia obsiderent, ubique fœda vastitas esset, Romanumque imperium non dubia jam calamitate nutaret."

It is a very remarkable part of this history, that this storm of wars fell so heavy on the great men of the empire, and in particular on the family of Constantine, though so likely to continue in so many of his own children and near relations; and yet, in twenty-four years after his death, these commotions put an end to his posterity, in the death of his three sons; and, in three years more, extinguished his family, by the death of Julian, in a battle against the Persians.

The following reigns of Jovian, Valentinian, Valens, and Gratian, to the time that Gratian nominated Theodosius to the empire, are one continued series of trouble, by the invasion of the several provinces of the empire, and bloody battles in defence of them, for about the space of sixteen years, from the year 363 to 379. Claudian has well expressed the misery of those times to his son Honorius:‖

> "Omnibus afflictis, et vel labentibus ictu,
> Vel prope casuris, unus tot funera contra > Restitit, extinxitque faces, ugrisque colonos > Reddidit, et leti rapuit de faucibus urbes.
> Nulla relicta foret Romani nominis umbra,
> Ni pater ille tuus jam jam ruitura subisset
> Pondera," &c.

These great calamities, which, in so short a time, befel the Roman empire, now Christian, and in particular the family of Constantine, by whom the great change, in favour of Christianity, was brought about, was a new and great trial of the faith, constancy, and patience, of the church. As it became the wisdom and justice of Divine Providence to punish the wickedness of the world, which caused the disorders of those times; the wisdom and goodness of Christ chose to forewarn the church of it, that it might learn to justify the ways of Providence, and not to faint under the discipline of affliction, when the great misimprovement of the best religion had made it both proper and useful; and when likely such afflictions, so soon after their great deliverance from the opposition of Rome heathen, would be very unexpected, and the more discouraging.

Second trumpet.—The former period of history, was from the death of Constantine the Great to the reign of Theodosius; who for some time preserved the empire from invasion, and left it to his sons, Arcadius and Honorius, A. D. 395.

The youth and weakness of these princes, the intrigues and ambition of the chief ministers and governors of the eastern and western parts of the empire, the jealousies and contentions between Stilicho and Ruffinus, so weakened the empire, that it soon became a prey to the northern nations. Sigonius,* who has given us an accurate history of these later times of the Roman empire, observes, that the empire itself began to shake on the death of Theodosius: "Theodosio exempto, simul etiam robur ac dignitas ipsius titubare imperii cæpit." The chief men of the empire, to serve their private ambitions, excited Alaric, at the head of the Goths, to invade Greece; Alaric enters Greece, the straits of Thermopylæ being purposely left open to him; he lays waste the whole country, destroys the cities, puts to death all the males grown up to age, and gives all the women and children, with the whole riches of the country, in plunder to his army, according to Zosimus.†

The year 400. or five years after the death of Theodosius, is marked out as one of the most memorable and calamitous that had ever befallen the empire. "'Annus hic (says Sigonius‡) a Christo nato quadringentesimus, omnium, quos occidens vidit, maxime memorandus extitit . . . . . Neque enim ullum sive bellicæ calamitatis, sive barbaricæ feritatis, sive vesanæ cujusdam libidinis, excogitari exemplum potuit, quod non in ipsas provincias, civitates, agros, hominesque passim cum maxima atrocitate sit editum." Five years after, A. D. 405. Rhadagaise entered Italy with an army of two hundred thousand men; and though he was defeated by Stilicho, yet he had ravaged the country, before his defeat, with such success, that the heathen Romans publicly declared Rome was given up to destruction, because it had forsaken the worship of the heathen gods; and that the only way to restore the Roman fortunes, was to restore the ancient Roman religion, or idolatry, as Sigonius§ observes.

In the latter end of the year 406. the Alains, Vandals, and other barbarous people, passed the Rhine, and made the most furious irruption into Gaul, that had yet been known; passed into Spain, and from thence over into Africa; so that the maritime provinces became a prey to them, the riches and naval power of the empire were much diminished, and almost quite ruined.

But the heaviest calamity fell upon the capital, and city of Rome itself: for Alaric enters Italy in the year 409. and after wasting all the country round about, "oblata omnia oppida populans, ac miserabili strage vastans," says Sigonius, at length laid siege to Rome, which was then afflicted both with famine and a pestilential distemper.* The city was forced to save itself from this danger, by all its riches, and purchased a peace of Alaric on very hard conditions. He raises the siege for awhile, but soon returns; is received into the city, and makes Attalus the governor of Rome emperor: soon after he deposes Attalus, and makes peace with Honorius, on condition he should be acknowledged his associate, and have Gaul given to him and to his army. "Fœdus his conditionibus est percussum, ut Alaricus socius Honorii esset, atque in Gallia sedes sibi suisque locaret."† However, not satisfied with Honorius, and his performance of the conditions agreed between them, he continues the siege of Rome, and at last takes it, and gives the plunder of it to his soldiers, which also occasioned its being set on fire; so that Sigonius‡ represents it, on all those accounts, as a very great and memorable calamity. "Insignis fuit calamitas, et rerum humanarum contemplatione memorabilis, quod urbs quæ de omnibus gentibus triumphaverat, tam facile a barbara et adventitia gente, capta, spoliata, atque combusta sit."

This calamity of the capital city of the empire, was followed by the spoil of the greatest part of all Italy in like manner, in which the Christian bishops, and their churches, were principal sufferers. "Alaricus, urbe capta et spoliata, egressus, animum inde ad ulteriorem populandam vastandamque Italiam contulit: itaque Latium, Campaniam, Apuliam, Calabriam, ita cum toto exercitu peragravit, ut locum nullum intactum a vexatione ac direptione reliquerit. Atque imprimis, quasi Romana victoria efferatus, in ecclesias, sacerdotes, episcoposque, extorquendi auri gratia, debacchatus, simul omnia humana divinaque jura polluerit."§

It is worthy observation, that this great calamity which befel the Roman empire, both in Italy and in the capital itself, much increased the prejudice of the heathen Romans against the Christian religion; as if Rome had suffered greater calamities now it was Christian, than while it was heathen. A fit period of history, and becoming the Spirit of prophecy to reveal to the church, to confirm the faith and patience of the church, in such a state of providence, with a full persuasion of the justice and wisdom of it; and that still the cause of true religion should be supported even under so great calamities as these: but with an admonition, that the justice and wisdom of God would punish the sins of Christians, as well as of heathens; and that the outward profession of the best religion should not be a protection against those judgments they had deserved by their iniquities; for God, the righteous governor of the world, is no respecter of persons: Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? says God to his own church of Israel, (Jer. v. 6. 9.) when their transgressions were many, and their backslidings increased.

Third trumpet. — The last period of history, correspondent to the foregoing prophecy, ended in the peace which Italy and Rome enjoyed, after the taking of Rome by Alaric, and dismembering many of the provinces of the empire, when Athaulphus left Italy, and went to settle in Gaul. The emperor Honorius returned joyfully to Rome, to the great satisfaction of the city, in the year 412. "Honorius Romam repetiit, ac lætus, tanquam exonerata aliquando tandem incumbentium Gothorum mole Italia, secunda vicennalia Ludorum apparatu magnifico edidit, populo Romano, post diuturnas tenebras lucem se tandem aliquam otii ac libertatis aspicere, gratulante."*

Yet, though Rome and Italy recovered themselves into a pretty good state of peace and liberty, many of the provinces were quite dismembered from the empire. The Goths, Burgundians, Franks, Vandals, &c. possessed themselves of the better parts of France and Spain.

Valentinian, son of Placidia, succeeded his uncle Honorius, about the year 425. In his time began those new invasions of the empire, which put an end to the imperial dignity and power of Rome, and founded a new kingdom in Italy itself.

In the year 427. Genseric, with an army of eight thousand Vandals, seized on Africa, and founded a kingdom there. The Romans had given up the defence of Britain, so that the Britons were fain to call in the Saxons to their aid, in the year 449.† Atila, though soundly beat at Chaalons, in the year 451. so that one hundred and seventy thousand, or, according to some, three hundred thousand, fell in the battle; yet, the next year, he marches with another numerous army into Italy, and destroys all before him. "Jam omnia quæ intra Apenninum et Alpes erant, fuga, populatione, cæde, servitute, incendio, et desperatione repleta erant; nullaque mali facies aberat, nefaria per omnes ordines, sexus, et ætates, barbarorum avaritia, crudelitate, ac licentia pervagante."‡

Rome and Italy were scarce freed from these troubles, when new evils succeeded.

Genseric is invited from Africa to revenge the murder of Valentinian: he lands in Italy in the year 455. marches directly to Rome, takes the city, and plunders it, carries away all the public and private riches, makes an incredible number of the citizens captives, and takes the empress Eudoxia (who had desired his assistance to revenge the death of Valentinian), together with her daughters along with her, into Africa.

The name of the Roman empire continued for a few years longer, as in a dying condition, under several successors, till the year 476. Odoacer, drawing together an army of the several nations in Germany, enters Italy by the Trentin, subdues the whole country, takes the city of Rome, and in it the emperor Momyllus, or Augustulus, whom he deposes, and takes to himself the title of king of Italy.* Thus Italy, and Rome itself, became the possession of the conquerors; and the Roman name, power, and empire, were from that time extinct. "Atque his quidem variis atque ancipitibus rerum temporumque successibus, Roma, jam quartum, post Christi annum jam quadringentesimum, capta, Italiaque a barbaris firmo tandem possideri imperio cœpta est." †

Odoacer did not indeed continue his kingdom long; for Theodoric, at the head of the Goths in Illyricum, attacked Odoacer's new-founded kingdom in Italy; and, according to Paulus Diaconus,‡ so fully with the consent of Zeno, then emperor of the east, that he made a grant of Italy to Theodoric. "Italiam ei per pragmaticam tribuens, sacri etiam Velaminis dono confirmavit." Theodoric engages Odoacer, overcomes him, and puts him to death; and so founded the Gothic kingdom of Italy, which continued many years under his successors, till it was subdued by Narses for the emperor Justinian, A. D. 553.

Thus Rome itself, and Italy, the seat of the empire, according to the prophetic description, became a prey to the barbarous nations, and followed the fate of the provinces.

However, even under the Gothic kingdom, Rome, though it lost the supreme authority of empire, was permitted to retain some appearance of its ancient form of government and magistracy. Theodoric made Ravenna the seat of his kingdom; yet Rome retained its senate and consuls, and the image of its former government. "Jam vero nullum Romanum institutum mutavit; siquidem et senatum, et consules, patricios, præfectos prætorii, præfectum urbis... cæterosque qui fuerunt in imperio, magistratus retinuit." §

Fourth trumpet.—This figurative representation will very properly express the following period of history, and the true state of the city of Rome, once the imperial city, and mistress of the world.

We have seen, in the former parts of this period, the loss of the imperial authority, when Theodoric founded the Gothic kingdom of Italy, and made Rome subject to it, A. D. 493. But it was observed, that he then left to the city of Rome some appearance and splendour of its ancient government, in a senate, consuls, and other magistrates.

Now, in the reign of Justinian, emperor of the east, this new kingdom of Italy is overthrown, and new and great calamities befal that miserable country. "Gothorum in Italia imperium concidit, atque ipsa Italia omnis atrocissimarum calamitatum exempla persensit."

In the course of this war, Belisarius, the imperial general, takes Rome, A. D. 536. The next year, Vitiges, king of the Goths, besieges it with an army of one hundred and fifty thousand men. In this long siege, which continued above a year, the Romans were afflicted both with famine and pestilence, and suffered extremely, though at length the Goths were fain to raise the siege. Totilas, king of the Goths, afterward takes Rome, A. D. 546. it is retaken by Belisarius the next year, and again taken by Totilas about two years after.

During this war, which lasted for twenty years, Rome was besieged and taken five times: the city and whole country suffered all the evils of war in every place; and the event was, to reduce Rome to the lowest and meanest condition, in the loss of all authority and power, being made entirely subject to the exarchate of Ravenna.

For Narses, having quite subdued the Gothic kingdom of Italy for the emperor of the east, was constituted governor of the whole country, with the title of Duke of Italy,* and all the governors of the several cities were only inferior officers under him.

A little after, the exarchate of Ravenna was established by the emperor Justin II. Longinus is sent into Italy: he appoints a new form of government: the seat of government was from that time fixed at Ravenna, and every city of Italy entirely subjected to the exarch, both in things civil and military. "Is (Longinus, says Sigonius,) primum Ravennæ, non Romæ, præfecturæ sedem posuit; nec se ducem, sed exarchum Italiæ, quemadmodum et Africæ exarchus erat, vocavit; et provinciarum consularibus, correctoribus, præsidibusque sublatis, singulis civitatibus singulos duces imposuit, ac varios eis, ad reddenda jura, judices assignavit." †

Thus Rome lost all her dignity and authority, her senate and consuls, and was put upon a level with all the lesser cities and towns of Italy, and became also a small dutchy of the exarchate. "Parem itaque faciens urbem Romam aliis Italiæ vel urbibus vel oppidis, hac una in re illam honoravit, quod impositum tunc magistratum præsidem appellavit, sed qui successerunt appellati sunt duces; ut postea per multos annos, sic Romanus appellaretur ducatus, sicut Narniensis, Spoletanusque est dictus; neque post Basilium, qui cum Narsete consul fuit, vel consules Roma habuit, vel senatum legitime coactum, sed a duce, Græculo homine, quem exarchus ex Ravenna mittebat, res Romana per multa tempora administrata est." †

This was a new form of government, altogether unknown before; and though it might be called, in some sense, a form of Roman government, as the exarchs of Ravenna were lieutenants for the Roman emperors of Constantinople, yet it was such a form of government, by which Rome seemed to have received a mortal wound: for that imperial city was deprived by it of all authority and power, and seemed to have lost all hopes of ever recovering them again, when it was made a small dutchy, entirely subject to another city, where the emperors, lieutenants, or exarchs, had fixed the seat of their residence and government of Italy; and this, by the appointment and constitution of the emperors of the east, in virtue of their claim to the sole authority of the Roman empire.

(1.) On the sounding of the fifth angel which followed, I saw in my vision a star fallen from heaven, or an angel come down from thence, to whom was given the key of the abyss, or bottomless gulf; which fitly expressed a commission from God, to permit Satan, at the head of the kingdom of darkness, to infest the world with some new and great temptation, as if Satan, at the head of his apostate angels, was let loose to disturb the earth, and deceive the nations of it.

2. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.]

(2.) And I beheld in my vision, that the angel who had the key of the bottomless pit opened it, and immediately there seemed to break out of the pit a very thick and dark smoke, as if it had been the smoke of a burning furnace; and the smoke was so thick, that it intercepted the light of the sun, and made the whole air dark round about. A very proper representation of great errors, darkening the understanding, obscuring the truth, and attended with violence and destruction. [3]

3. And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power.]

(3.) I farther perceived this smoke out of the bottomless pit brought locusts along with it, and scattered them, over the earth; and they had power given unto them, not unlike the natural power of scorpions, to do harm. A proper similitude to express a great multitude of people, marching with great speed and swiftness, to plunder and destroy their neighbours. [4]

4. And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men who have not the seal of God on their foreheads.]

(4.) I observed one thing very peculiar to these locusts, and different from what was to be expected from the natural locusts: they had an express direction, not to prey upon or destroy the grass, trees, and fruits of the earth, as natural locusts are used to do; but, as persons compared to locusts, for multitude, and swiftness to spoil, they were to hurt men, and yet to hurt only such as had not the seal of God on their foreheads. Which may properly mean, that these locusts are to be understood figuratively, for a great number of spoilers; as if Satan, at the head of the powers of darkness, was leading on a great company, both to corrupt and ravage the world: yet, in this extraordinary judgment of God on a corrupt church, he would take care to preserve the interest of true religion and Christianity among a faithful people. He would protect them in such manner, that they should preserve their religion, and the profession of it, notwithstanding the great difficulties those enemies to Christianity should bring upon them.

5. And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man.]

(5.) And I farther perceived, they did not receive a commission to take away men's lives, when they invaded and spoiled them; they were to torment them for a space of time, for five months: and their torment was resembled to the pains and uneasiness which men feel, when they are bit by a scorpion.

6. And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.]

(6.) Yet, though they had not a commission to take away men's lives, they should make their lives so uneasy and miserable to them, that they would rather choose death than life, and desire to die rather than remain in their misery. [5]

7. And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns of gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.]

(7.) The appearance of these locusts was such, as in part resembled the locusts described in the ancient prophets; but in part differed from those descriptions, as well as from the description of natural locusts. They were like unto horses prepared for battle; but they seemed to have a sort of golden coronets on their heads, and to appear with the countenance and visage of men. [6]

8. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.]

(8.) Yet, with a manly countenance, they dressed their head and hair, in an effeminate manner; and were as ready for rapine, and intent upon it, as if they had teeth hard and strong to devour, as the teeth of lions. [7]

9. And they had breast-plates, as it were breast-plates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.]

(9.) As they were thus fitted to destroy, they were also well defended against opposition, as if they were armed with iron breast-plates; and they invaded their enemies with a great noise, as if many chariots and horses were rushing into battle. [8]

10. And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.]

(10.) They had moreover this peculiar in their form, that they had tails as scorpions, and in them stings, by which they were able to do great hurt and mischief in the places which they invaded; and thus, though locusts, they were able to torment as scorpions do. [9]

11. And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.]

(11.) Though the natural locusts have no king, [10] yet these figurative locusts have one, who is the angel of the bottomless pit, that evil spirit, the prince of the power of darkness, who, from the constant evils he is designing and doing in the world, is called the Destroyer.

12. One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.]

(12.) Such woful judgments the church is to expect, when the righteous providence of God shall give permission to the destroyer to punish the sins of men; and even when this woe shall be passed, the church is to expect yet farther woes, when the sixth and seventh angels shall sound their trumpets. (See the history of the fifth trumpet at the end of this chapter.)

13. And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God,]

(13.) I farther perceived in my vision, when the sixth angel sounded his trumpet, a voice, as coming from the golden altar which stood before the presence of God, as in the temple, or from the altar of incense, the place of prayer and intercession; where the angel having a golden censer, offered incense with the prayers of all saints, (viii. 3.) to express that no intercession should avail to prevent any longer the execution of the following woes. A just punishment of the world, for sins unrepented of, and of the church, for great corruptions unreformed. [11]

14. Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.]

(14.) This voice from the altar of incense was directed to the sixth angel, who had just sounded his trumpet, commanding him to set the four angels at liberty, who, for the present, were restrained in and about the eastern parts; that their restraint being taken off, they may again execute the judgments of God, by invading the several parts of it.

15. And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.]

(15.) Accordingly, the restraint was taken off from the four destroying angels, and they were permitted to afflict the inhabitants of the earth for a determined time; their restraint was taken off but for a season, as if the very time was ascertained by years, days, months, and even hours, in which they have a permission to punish the world, by taking away the lives of a considerable number of the inhabitants thereof. [12]

16. And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them.]

(16.) I soon perceived in my vision a farther explication of these four destroying angels, let loose for a determined time, to slay a great part of the inhabitants of the earth; for there appeared a most numerous army of horsemen, too many to be expressed almost in plain numbers, being two hundred thousand thousand. [13]

17. And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breast-plates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire, and smoke, and brimstone.]

(17.) As these armies of invaders were represented very numerous, so both horses and riders appeared very terrible; the horsemen appeared in bright and shining armour, having breast-plates as of fire, jacinth, and brimstone, which appeared like a mixture of fire and smoke; and the horses they rode upon had a terrible appearance, as well as their riders: for their heads looked fierce as lions, and they seemed to cast fire and smoke out of their mouths. [14]

18. By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and the smoke, and the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.]

(18.) And by these terrible armies, a great part of the people whose countries they invaded was killed and slain; so that the miserable inhabitants of those places suffered all the evils of slaughter and bloodshed, as well as of rapine and spoil.

19. For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.]

(19.) And the power of these formidable armies to do hurt was so great, that they were likened to those serpents of which naturalists speak, with two heads, one at each end of their body, capable therefore of doing harm, both with their mouths and tails: so that not only was their front terrible when they marched, but they did great mischief also in their rear, and wherever they left parties behind them, in the countries they had overrun. [15]

20. And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:]

(20.) Yet, notwithstanding these severe judgments upon the world, for the corruption of true religion, they who escaped them were not reformed by them; they still went on to corrupt the purity of religious worship, with downright idolatrous practices, as well as they gave themselves up to all unrighteousness and wickedness: for they worshipped devils, or demons; they made angels, and the souls of departed men, as well as the images of the saints, the object of their prayers and adoration.

21. Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.]

(21.) In such a general corrupt state of religious worship they continued, as might be expected, impenitent and unreformed in the iniquities of common life: so that all the abominable iniquities of the heathen world were found among them; such as deceit, injustice, uncleanness, and debauchery, poisonings, and open murders. Just reasons why they were visited with so awful judgments, and why they were given up to the farther punishment of that dreadful woe that follows under the next and last trumpet. [16] (See the history of the sixth trumpet at the end of the Annotations.)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 1. A star fallen from heaven.] Stars, in the language of prophecy, signify angels. The angels of the heavenly host, as well as the angels or bishops of the churches, seem to be called stars in Scripture; as when, at the creation, the morning-stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, Job xxxviii. 7. In like manner, when this abyss, or bottomless pit, is shut up, it is represented in this prophecy, to be done by an angel coming down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit. These expressions are so nearly the same, as well as upon the same subject, that they may well be taken in the same sense, and so used to explain each other. It is a general expression of the Jews, concerning the works of God, that he sends an angel to do them: so that Maimonides* observes, "Non enim invenies Deum ullum opus fecisse, nisi per manus alicujus angeli." And Hermas,† who lived very near the time of this revelation, and seems to have designed, in several passages, to imitate it, speaks of the angel, appointed over the beasts, appearing for his preservation; "Misit Dominus angelum suum, qui est super bestias, et obturavit os ejus, ne te dilaniaret."

This expression then, a star fallen from heaven, or, an angel come down from heaven, with a key to open the bottomless pit, seems naturally to mean the permission of Divine Providence of these evil and calamitous events, which are described to follow upon opening the bottomless pit, which could not have happened but by the permission of the Divine Providence, and according to the wise and holy orders of the Divine government: for the providence of God could as surely have prevented the temptations of Satan, and the powers of darkness, as if Satan and his angels had been fast locked up, and secured in a safe prison; so that he sends an angel, his messenger, with the key of the bottomless pit, to open their prison, and permit them to go out, to teach, that they can only act so far as they have leave and permission, and can always be restrained and shut up again, at the good-will and pleasure of the supreme Governor of the world.

* More Nevoch. par. ii. cap. 6. † Hermæ Pastor. lib. i. vis. 4. s. 2.

[2] The abyss, or bottomless pit, is explained in the prophecy itself, to be that place where the devil and Satan are shut up, that they should not deceive the nations. (Rev. xx. 1—3.) The abyss seems also to be used in the like sense, when the devils besought Christ, that he would not command them to go out into the deep; in the original, into the abyss, or bottomless pit (εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον). The learned Grotius* observes, that this abyss, or bottomless pit, is the same with what St. Peter calls hell, or Tartarus: For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, σειραῖς ζόφου ταρταρώσας, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment. (2 Pet. ii. 4.)

Now this prison of Satan, and of his angels, by a righteous judgment of God, is permitted to be opened, for the just punishment of apostate churches, who would not repent of their evil works. We may then say, with an eminent interpreter,† "Behold something more terrible than what we have hitherto seen! hell opens, and the devil appears, followed by an army, of a stranger figure than St. John has any where described." And we may observe from others, that this great temptation of the faithful was to be with the united force of false doctrine and persecution. "Hell does not open of itself (as the bishop of Meaux observes); it is always some false doctor that opens it; by which means Satan is loosed to deceive the nations."

[3] Ver. 2.] As a great smoke hinders the sight, so do errors the understanding. He keeps to the allegory, says Grotius; for smoke takes from us the sight of the stars; smoke, especially when proceeding from a fierce fire, is also a representation of devastation. Thus, when Abraham beheld the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, (Gen. xix. 28.) Lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of the furnace. The great displeasure of God is represented by the same figurative expressions of smoke and fire. Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth. There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it. (Psal. xviii. 7, 8.)

[4] Ver. 3.] Locusts and grasshoppers are expressly made to signify both the multitude of the eastern nations invading Israel, and the swift progress and destruction they made: Judg. vi. 5. For they came with their cattle and their tents; and they came as grasshoppers for multitude, for both they and their camels were without number: and they entered into the land to destroy it. And thus also the locusts, in the prophet Joel, i. 6. are represented; For a nation is come upon my land, strong, and without number. The same word in the original, אַרְבֶּה, is, in the one place, translated grasshopper, in the other, locust.

[5] Ver. 6.] The time in which these locusts were to torment men, seems an allusion to the time in which natural locusts are used to do harm, and after which they die. They are hatched, as Bochart observes, about the spring, and die at the latter end of summer; so that they do not live above five months. So that learned interpreter* of Scripture understands the expressions at the fifth and tenth verses: "Ita quod, versu quinto et decem, nocent hominibus per quinque menses, videtur ideo dici, quia locustæ verè natæ, sub finem æstatis obeunt; nec supra quinque menses vivere solent."

The time of five months may likely mean, that the invasions of this people meant by the locusts should be, after the manner of the locusts, during the summer months. This seems a more natural meaning than a certain number of prophetic years, during which space of time their power should continue, as some interpreters have thought. If any have the curiosity to see an interpretation of these five months, for one hundred and fifty years, at the proportion of thirty days to a month, he may find it in Mr. Daubuz and Waple, or in Mr. Mede. He may see another interpretation for three hundred years, because the five months are twice mentioned at the fifth and tenth verses; but as I see no reason for such interpretation, so I perceive no certainty in the application.

The torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man, is great and very painful, according to the learned Bochart. He observes, from Dioscorides, "Cum quis a scorpione morsus est, locus quam primum inflammari incipit, durusque esse et ruber, et vehementi dolore affectus."† Inflammation and violent pain are fit similitudes to express great uneasiness and torment. The same learned author farther observes, that scorpions, as locusts, hurt only during the summer months. "Nec frustra est, quod mysticis locustis, quæ scorpionum caudas habent, non datur potestas nocendi hominibus, nisi per menses quinque: quippe ut locustæ, ita nec scorpiones, diutius nocent, nam per frigora torpent, nec quidquam ex iis est periculi. Tertullianus, 'familiare periculi tempus æstas.'"‡

[6] Ver. 7.] Joel, speaking of the natural locusts, observes, the appearance of them is as the appearance of horses, and as horsemen so shall they run, (ii. 4.) This representation of the swift motion, is supposed by some to be an allusion to the form of their heads, as the head of a locust naturally resembles the head of a horse. "Locustæ (says Bochart§) ab Italis vocantur cavalette; hinc Albertus, lib. xxvi. Caput habent figura equi." And Theodoret, on this passage of Joel: "Si quis locustæ caput diligenter consideret, persimilem equo inveniet." It is, to be sure, a beautiful representation of the swiftness and expedition with which an army, consisting principally of horsemen, invade and ravage a country.

Some interpreters‖ understand these crowns of gold they wore on their heads, to represent the victories of this people, by faces as the faces of men, that they had seemingly reasonable and plausible pretences for their invasions.

‡ Ib. lib. iv. cap. 29. § Ib. lib. iv. cap. 4. ‖ Waple on the place.

Others understand it a description of the proper habit of this people, that they should wear ornaments on their heads, like crowns or mitres. "The mitre of the high-priest was called by the ancient Greeks, tiara, cidaris, and sometimes diadema; they were a sort of linen turban, commonly white: and such were the diadems of kings, which Ammianus calls fasciolam candidam, regiæ majestatis insigne."* This linen covering of the head, with the plate of gold, in which Holiness to the Lord was inscribed, is called the holy crown: so that a turban, with a gold ornament, in the language of the Scripture, is a crown of gold. (Lev. viii. 9.)

[7] Ver. 8.] By hair, as the hair of women, some understand, that their pretences should be insinuating and deceitful; but it seems rather to refer to some effeminacy in their dress, by which this people should be distinguished, probably such an appearance as Mr. Daubuz has described from Pliny,† "Arabes mitrati degunt, aut intonso crine, barba eraditur præterquam in superiore labro." So that the Arabians, though they affected to wear great mustaches, yet wore long hair, tressed and plaited after the manner of women; and hereby, says Mr. Daubuz, is set forth, together with this their custom, their effeminacy and lust, to which they were extremely addicted. Servius, on Virg. Æn. lib. ix. ver. 616. "Et habent redimicula mitræ, Pilea virorum sunt, mitræ fœminarum. . . . Alii mitras meretricum esse voluerunt."

Teeth, like the teeth of lions, is a description of locusts in the prophet Joel, Whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great lion, (Joel i. 6.) to express great rapaciousness, and how easily they destroy all before them.

[8] Ver. 9.] It is observed of the locusts in Joel, ii. 8. When they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded. And it is observable, says Mr. Daubuz, that the natural locust hath about its body a pretty hard shell, of the colour of iron, "Armavit natura cutem," says Claudian; so that herein the symbol of the breast-plate is exactly suited to the natural locust. The prophet Joel, ii. 5. also describes the locusts, like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap . . . . or, as a strong people set in battle array; to express the terror and consternation they shall occasion by their invasions.

[9] Ver. 10.] Whether these tails, and stings as scorpions, were designed to express, that these people should spread the poison of error and delusion, where they come, or only to express the great pain and uneasiness their invasions should occasion, I leave to the judgment of the reader.

[10] Ver. 11.] It is an observation of Agur, The locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands. (Prov. xxx. 27.)

[11] Ver. 13.] In this prophecy, as well as in other passages of Scripture, especially the prophetical, the several providences of God are represented by the ministration of angels, whom God sends as his messengers, to execute his will. It may be here understood, as a publication of the purpose and design of Providence, from the horns of the altar of incense; so that no intercession should prevent it.

[12] Ver. 15.] It has been a question, why these angels are represented as four. Some interpreters have supposed the number four relates either to four princes, or four principalities. Hence some suppose the four angels to be one of the Turkish princes, and his three sons, as Mr. Daubuz. Mr. Mede takes them to be the tetrarchy, or four governments of the Turks in Asia, Aleppo, Damascus, and Antioch; or, according to Sir Isaac Newton,* the four kingdoms of the Turks seated upon Euphrates: that of Armenia Major, seated at Miyapharekin, Megarkin, or Martyropolis; that of Mesopotamia, seated at Mosul; that of all Syria, seated at Aleppo; and that of Cappadocia, seated at Iconium. But as these governments were not erected till the death of Meleeh Schah, who died A. C. 1092. they far outrun the date of the present period, even by some hundreds of years.†

Nor does there appear any necessity to understand the four angels, either of four princes, or of four governments; for the number four, as Mr. Daubuz‡ observes, is often a number denoting a universality of the matters comprised, as in Jer. xlix. 36. the four winds signify all the winds; in Isa. xi. 12. the four corners of the earth, denote all the parts of the earth; and in Ezek. vii. 2. the four corners of the land, signify all parts of the land of Judea: and therefore, with Philo,§ four is a number of universality in nature. It should seem then a very natural interpretation of the four angels, to understand them of the whole power of these destroyers, gathered together from the four corners, or every quarter of the land they dwelt in; and spreading themselves towards the four winds, or the several parts of the earth, without restraint.

The time here spoken of, an hour, a day, a month, and a year, may also be understood in general for a limited time and season, as in this prophecy the ten kings are said to receive power, as kings, one hour with the beast, or at the same, and during the same time. (Rev. xvii. 12.)

Mr. Daubuz‖ seems to have expressed the general meaning of these words very well; the aforesaid angels were prepared by God, for a year, month, day, and hour; namely, so as to be ready, upon any occasion of warning, to put this great event in execution: so that there seems no necessity of making this time three hundred and ninety-one prophetic days, denoting so many years. It rather seems to signify, that these incursions of the destroyer should be under a limitation, and like the inroads of an enemy, who in a short time are beaten back, or, at a set time, usually retire of themselves.

Some¶ understand the third part of men, as a symbolical character of the Roman empire, as the Roman empire has been computed to be one-third part of the earth. And a very learned person supposes, that the trumpets principally, if not solely, regard Europe, the famous τὸ τρίτον, or third part of the world, known in the days of the vision. But, I conceive, this expression is chiefly designed to signify many, or a very considerable part; as in the foregoing parts of this vision, (chap. viii.) the third part of trees was burnt up; the third part of the sea became blood; the third part of the creatures died; a star from heaven fell upon a third part of the rivers; and a third part of the waters became wormwood; a third part of the sun was smitten; and the day shone not for a third part of it: and afterward, the tail of the dragon drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth, (xii. 4.) A third part therefore seems most plainly and naturally to mean a considerable part of the whole; and to destroy a third part of men, will then signify, that the destroying armies, represented by the four angels, now loosed from the river Euphrates, which had been one of the great boundaries of the kingdom of the Jews, and was then of the Roman empire, should take away the lives of a great number of persons, whose countries they should, on this permission, invade.

[13] Ver. 16.] The number in the original is myriads of myriads, which I suppose is to be understood of many myriads; as when we say, thousands of thousands, to express many thousands, or a company almost innumerable. We can hardly conceive this number was intended to be the real muster of any army whatsoever, which never was known to consist of any thing like two hundred millions of horsemen. It seems then to mean, that the armies of these destroyers should be principally horsemen; and that their numbers should be so great, that the report of them should be hardly credible.

[14] Ver. 17.] The colour of fire is red, of hyacinth blue, and of brimstone yellow: these are the colours of fire and smoke mingled together. The learned Dr. Hammond observes,* these three colours may be used (as in prophetic style it is ordinary) to express a terrible appearance, which is commonly represented by a flaming fire. It is not indeed impossible, as the same learned interpreter observes with Grotius, that by fire, smoke, and brimstone, may be meant fire-balls, or darts, with something burning at the end of them, called falaricæ, engines of known use, especially in sieges; but there is no sufficient reason, I think, to make it more than conjecture. There is still less reason, I conceive, to make these expressions signify cannon and gunpowder, the use of which was absolutely unknown, some hundred of years after the time this prophecy was to be fulfilled, in the successive order of the prophecies of this book. Besides, it is to be observed, this is a description of the breast-plates of the horsemen, not only of their weapons or engines of war; and seems therefore to describe properly, the terror of their appearance when marching to war.

[15] Ver. 19.] The power in the mouth and in the tails, as serpents, is plainly an allusion to those serpents which are supposed to have two heads, one at each end of their body, as Pliny describes the Amphisbena;† "Geminum caput Amphisbenæ, hoc est ad caput, et ad caudam, tanquam parum esset uno ore fundi venenum." A proper representation of a furious and terrible invasion.

Whether it be farther meant by these expressions, according to several learned interpreters, that they did not only do mischief by their conquests, but also by false doctrines; that they should not only pull down the states, and destroy the people they invaded, but that they should also plant a false religion in the places they conquered; I shall leave entirely to the judgment of the reader.

[16] Ver. 21.] I have rendered the original word φαρμακειῶν, poisoning, rather than sorceries, or witchcrafts. Herein I have followed the learned Grotius, "In eadem domo, alii alios veneno necabant." This wicked practice of poisoning grew general, especially in Italy, and, according to historians, in the church of Rome itself; but the reader is at liberty to prefer the other sense given by interpreters, and to understand by it witchcrafts, sorceries, charms, exorcisms, and pretended miracles, by which men are often seduced to idolatry, and kept in idolatrous practices: or we may understand, with a learned author,* "the numberless artificial methods of making men very religious, without any virtue," to be what the Scripture calls sorceries.

HISTORY OF THE TRUMPETS.

Fifth trumpet.—The foregoing prophecies of this period have brought us, by various steps, to an entire subversion of the western empire, when Rome lost all its authority and power, was no longer a seat of government, but a petty dutchy governed by an officer appointed by the exarch of Ravenna, and serving under him; who, as the emperor's lieutenant, had the chief command through all his dominions in Italy. This exarchate began, according to Sigonius, A. D. 566. according to Petavius, A. D. 568.

The present prophecy describes a very remarkable judgment, which should follow in the course of providence. It is marked, by peculiar circumstances of woe and afflictions, as if Satan, at the head of the powers of darkness, had broke the prison of the bottomless pit, and was come abroad into the world, to spread all the evils of ignorance, error, deceit, violence, spoil, and slavery, among men.

There are many circumstances in this description, peculiar and distinguishing marks of this judgment: the ignorance and error they should propagate, their number and hardiness, the customs, habits, and manners, of this people, and of their invasions, the mighty progress they should make, and their different treatment of Christians and idolaters, are sufficient to point out this memorable event of Providence to our observation. This new trial of the faith and patience of the saints, and new judgment of God upon such Christians themselves, as corrupted the purity of Christian faith, worship, and manners, was worthy the Spirit of prophecy to reveal; and the protection of the church, so as to preserve the Christian faith and religion, in a time of so great danger, was a very wise and useful encouragement to the faith and constancy of the church, which is the general and immediate intention of all the revelations of this prophecy.

The next scene of providence, which greatly surprised the whole world, as well as the Christian church, was the rise of Mohammed, and a more wonderful progress of a new religion, and a new empire, than the world had ever seen before.

About the year of Christ 606. Mahomet† (as his name is usually writ) began to pretend to revelation, and converse with the angel Gabriel, in a solitary cave near Mecca in Arabia. In the year 608. which was the fortieth of his age, he began to take to himself the style of the apostle of God; and to propagate his imposture, he pretended not to deliver a new religion, but to revive the old religion God first gave to Adam:* and, by many other specious pretences of receiving his revelations from the angel Gabriel, he gained several proselytes. Yet the people of Mecca, where he lived, were so averse to his imposture, that they resolved to strike at the root, and prevent the spreading of farther mischief, by cutting him off who was the chief author of it;† so that he was forced to fly from Mecca to Medina, then called Yathreb. This was in the year 622. from which flight of Mahomet, the Hegira, or computation of time among the Mahometans, begins.

From this time he tells his disciples, his religion was not to be propagated by disputing, but by fighting.‡

Accordingly, the next year, 623. he fell upon the traders of Mecca, though guarded by one thousand men, and beat them;§ and spent the rest of the year in robbing, plundering, and destroying, all those who would not come in to him, and embrace his religion.‖

The next year, he continued the same course, and fought a battle with a larger number of his opposers, in which he was overborne, and himself grievously wounded. To prevent the ill effect this disgrace might have on the minds of his followers, he taught them, that the time of life being determined by God, they who should be slain in battle, died no sooner than they must otherwise have done; and as they died fighting for the faith, they gained the crown of martyrdom, and the rewards of paradise.¶

In the year 627. he was attacked by an army of ten thousand men, from which danger he very dexterously extricated himself; and, the same year, was inaugurated in the supreme authority, and made head in all things civil and religious.††

In the year 629. Mahomet had an army of ten thousand men;‡‡ so that he very soon brought most parts of Arabia into his power.

In the year 630. he turned his arms towards Syria. In 631. all the Arabs came in and submitted to him; and, in the following year, he himself died, being sixty-three years of age, according to the Arabian account, which make only sixty-one of ours;§§ so that Mahomet, in the space of twenty-three years, founded a new religion, and a new empire, throughout the large country of Arabia, a country bigger than Germany, Italy, Spain, France, Great Britain, and Ireland, together: which, as Dr. Prideaux observes, "God has permitted, in his all-wise providence, to continue a scourge unto us Christians, who having received so holy and so excellent a religion, through his mercy unto us in Christ Jesus our Lord, will not yet conform ourselves to live worthy of it."

This new government and religion were in some danger, on the death of its founder, by a competition for the succession; but Abubeker,‖‖ who succeeded, soon suppressed several rebellions, and in particular subdued Moseilam, who pretended himself a prophet, in opposition to Mahomet; and having settled his affairs pretty well at home, thinks of putting in execution Mahomet's commission, of fighting for the religion of God.¶¶ He therefore sends armies into Babylon and Syria, and summons his forces together, by this remarkable letter:

"In the name of the most merciful God, Abubeker, &c. to the rest of the true believers, health and happiness, and the mercy and blessing of God, be upon you. I praise the most high God, and I pray for his prophet Mahomet.* This is to acquaint you, that I intend to send the true believers into Syria, to take it out of the hands of the infidels; and I would have you to know, that fighting for religion is an act of obedience to God."

In this short reign, which was but two years and a few months,† the Saracens made a great progress, beat the army of the Greek emperor, and slew, according to their own account, fifty thousand men, took Damascus, and entered far into Syria. Omar, who immediately succeeded Abubeker, reigned ten years and a half, drove all the Jews and Christians out of Arabia; subdued Syria, Egypt, and other parts of Africa, besides the greatest part of Persia; took the city of Jerusalem; and in the battle of Yermouk, as Abu Obeidah, the general, wrote to the calif,‡ they killed one hundred and fifty thousand, and took forty thousand prisoners; and adds, As to those that fled into the deserts and mountains, we have destroyed them all, and stopped all the roads and passages; and God has made us masters of their country, and wealth, and children.

Othman continued the Saracen conquests; the whole Persian empire fell into his hands, in the year of the Hegira 31. A. D. 651. and Syria, with Egypt, were brought into full subjection. But,

Upon the death of Othman, the quarrel about the succession put a considerable stop to the Saracen arms. This seems to make the death of Othman a proper period to the first progress of the Mahometan empire and religion, and a proper end of that part of history that is correspondent to this part of prophecy.

To this account of the rise of the Mahometan religion and empire, it may be proper to subjoin some remarks on the customs of this people, the manner of their making war, and invading their neighbours.

It was observed from Pliny, that the Arabians wore a sort of turbans, or mitres, on their heads; that they dressed and twisted their hair in a particular manner, so that one party of the Saracens was distinguished by it from another. It is remarkable, says Ockley,§ the sect of Ali have not only a turban after a different fashion, but they also twist their hair after a manner quite different from the rest of the Mussulmans.

They used also the custom of wearing beards:‖ Ebn Hannif, Ali's governor of Basora, had his hair cut off, and his beard spoiled, in contempt. "Ubi cum Ebn Haniffum ipsi ab Hali præfectum prehendissent, crinibus avulsis, et barba depilata demiserunt." At least, according to Pliny, they left some hair, like mustaches, on their upper lip: so exactly did their dress answer the description of crowns, faces of men, and hair as the hair of women.

The care of the Arabians about their horses, and the excellency of their breed, are taken notice of by all who mention them.

It is well known, the manner of invading their neighbours was by sudden incursions during the summer months; retiring again, and dispersing themselves to their own homes, during the winter; and gathering together the next spring, for a new summer's invasion.

According to the military laws and constitutions of the Mahometans,* war was forbid during the sacred months, which were the two first and the two last: "Aggredi bello hostes suos omni tempore fas esse pronunciavit (Mohammed), exceptis quatuor mensibus anni, duobus primis, et postremis; qui propterea sacri appellantur."

A sufficient number is appointed by the same constitutions,† to be sent out yearly, as may make the Mahometans equal or superior to the enemy: "Istiusmodi copiarum eductio, singulis annis ad minimum semel fieri debet."

Their military laws make also a great difference between those people they call Harbi, and the People of a Book. The Harbi were either atheists, and persons of no religion, or idolaters, who did not worship the true God, according to any book of revelation; these were not tolerated in the Mahometan law, but they were to be prosecuted with war, till they embraced the religion of Mahomet. But the People of the Book were such as worshipped God, according to some book of revelation, as the Jews and Christians; these were to be prosecuted with war till they embrace Mahometanism, or agree to pay a tribute: but then they were to be left in peace, and in the quiet use of their own religion, even where the Mahometan authority was fully settled.‡ Thus the very laws of Mahomet made provision not to kill those who professed the worship of the true God, but only to torment them by their invasions, and making them tributaries.

It was moreover a common injunction to spare, as much as possible, the countries they invaded: Destroy not palm-trees (says Abubeker to Yesid), nor burn any fields of corn; cut down no fruit-trees, do no mischief to cattle, only such as ye kill to eat.§

Yet the military laws adjudged so many persons to captivity, and the condition of the women in particular was so deplorable, being so much in the power of persons who gave the greatest liberty to their lusts, that though their lives were spared, many were like to prefer death itself to the hard condition to which they were reduced.

Upon the whole, the sudden invasion of the Saracens, the swift and almost incredible progress of their arms, many circumstances peculiar to this people, and their invasions, which sufficiently distinguish them from all the invasions of the northern nations, very properly answer the prophetic description of these locusts out of the bottomless pit.

Sixth trumpet. — The period of history which corresponds with this period of prophecy, is determined by the successive order of prophecies and events to the times soon following the former history, which described the rise and amazing progress of the Saracen empire and Mahometan religion; which, like locusts out of a bottomless pit, spread themselves in a very short time over a great part of the world. I shall not therefore take notice of Mr. Mede's application of this prophecy to the rise and progress of the Turks, or Ottoman empire founded by them; though Mr. Mede's great learning and reputation have caused many others to follow him, yet the rise of the Ottoman empire is so low, that it is by far too great a step from A. D. 655. in which the former prophecy ended: for Othman, the founder of the empire, died in the year of the Hegira, 727. A. D. 1326.* This time will farther also fall far into the time of the next period of prophecy. These considerations make such application, I think, inconsistent with the order of the book itself, which it seems plainly to mark out to us in successive periods.

Let us see then, whether the history of the Saracen empire, in the times that soon followed after the foregoing prophetic description of the rise of it, does not answer this description, and is not most likely designed by it.

One considerable mark of this period, is loosing the four angels which were bound in the great river Euphrates, (ver. 14.) signifying, that the providence of God had, for some time preceding this period, laid a restraint upon these furious invaders of their neighbours, and the progress of their imposture.

Accordingly we find, that upon the death of Othman, about the year 655. there were great contentions concerning the succession;† Ali, Moawiah, Telha, and Zobier (or Azzobier), had each of them a considerable party to advance them to the califate, or succession in the Saracen empire. These pretensions occasioned several quarrels, which put a stop to the foreign conquests of the Saracens, and ended in the almost entire ruin of Ali's family, and therein of Mahomet's own; for Ali had married Mahomet's daughter.

At the death of Othman, Moawiah was governor of Syria, and Amron of Egypt.‡ Ali, at the first, obtained a complete victory over Telha and Zobeir, two of his competitors; yet Moawiah and Amron resolved to stand it out to the last against Ali.§ These contentions occasioned the deaths of so many persons, that at last three men, zealous for the Saracen affairs, agreed to kill all the three pretenders to the califate: one of them struck Moawiah in the reins, but the wound proved not mortal;‖ another of them, mistaking for Amron a person whom Amron, being indisposed, had appointed to supply his place that day in the mosque, killed him dead on the spot; and going to execution, said, without any concern,—I designed Amron, but God designed another.¶ The third of these conspirators had better success in the execution of his design against Ali; for he gave him a mortal wound in the head, as soon as he came into the mosque, of which he died in a few days. The contention did not end with the death of Ali; it continued a long time between his family and the family of Moawiah: Hasan, Ali's eldest son, was forced to abdicate in favour of Moawiah;†† Hosein, Ali's second son, with several of his family, was killed in the field: yet still many disturbances were occasioned by the friends of Ali's family, and the enemies of Moawiah's. Almochter, pretending to revenge the death of Hosein,‡‡ is made calif by his party, A. D. 685. he pursued all who had a hand in the death of Hosein, and destroyed them with variety of deaths: he never pardoned any of those who declared themselves enemies of the prophet, nor those whom he could believe to have dipped their hands in Hosein's blood, or that of his relations;§§ so that it is said, that he killed near fifty thousand men of those people, without reckoning those who were slain in the battles which he fought.

These intestine divisions and quarrels bound up the Saracens from their usual invasions and incursions,* and kept them about the river Euphrates, near which most of their battles between each other were fought. Moawiah found it necessary to make a peace with Constantinus Pogonatus, emperor of Constantinople, and even agree to pay him a considerable tribute; and Abdolmelic, one of his successors, was obliged to make a like peace, on promise of paying tribute to Justinian II. the Greek emperor.

Thus were the destroying angels bound up for about fifty years, during the reigns of Ali, Moawiah the first, Yesid, Moawiah the second, Merwan, and Abdolmelic, califs of the Saracens.

But then, these destroying angels were loosed again; the Divine Providence took off the restraint of the Saracen invasions. Walid united the power of the Saracen empire, and invaded the western parts of Europe with such numerous armies, and swift successes, as threatened the loss of all Europe, and even to extinguish the Christian name and religion.

The Saracens passed over into Spain, A. D. 713. The next year, they obtained a complete victory over a numerous army of the Spaniards; they who speak the least, say it was an army of one hundred thousand fighting men: what number was killed, was not known; I suppose, says our historian,† they were so many, it was hard to count them: for this only battle robbed Spain of all its glory, and in it perished the renowned name of the Goths. After this battle, the Saracens divided their forces, and soon overran the whole country; so that in three or four years, they were possessed of all Spain, except a few inaccessible places in the mountains, and which the Saracens slighted. The misery of this invasion, so agreeable to the prophetic description, is so well expressed by the historian,‡ that I shall give it in his own words: "Certain it is, Spain was now in a deplorable condition, almost all brought under the dominion of the Moors; there was no sort of misery but the Christians endured; women were ravished from their husbands, children from their parents, and all they possessed taken from them, without any redress to be hoped for. The country yielded not its usual product, both in regard of the unseasonableness of the weather, and for want of labourers; the churches were profaned and burnt; dead bodies lay about the streets and highways, and nothing was to be seen or heard, but sighs and tears: nor was there any calamity but what Spain groaned under, God permitting the innocent to suffer with the guilty, to punish the horrid wickedness of those times."

But the Saracens did not confine their ravages to Spain; they soon passed the Pyrenean mountains into France. After many ravages in several parts of the country, they came to a decisive battle with Charles Martel, in which Abdirachman was killed, with his numerous army. This victory secured the state of Christianity, which would likely have been the prey of those barbarous invaders, if they had then gained a victory over the French, and possessed themselves of their country, which was then the only rampart of Christianity, as a judicious historian observes.* The infidels, as another historian observes, advanced as to a certain victory; whereupon ensued one of the bloodiest battles, and most obstinate fights, that has been seen in the world: of the Moors, there were four hundred thousand, with their wives and children, as designing to dwell in France.... The slaughter was incredible; three hundred and seventy thousand Moors were killed, and among them their general. This fortunate battle was fought, says Mariana,† in the year of our Lord, 734. twenty-one after the conquest of Spain. It put a full stop to the farther progress of the Saracen armies in Europe, and gave courage and strength to the remaining Christians in Spain; so that in time they drove the Saracens quite out of their country also.

There is another part of this prophetic description which deserves particular notice, and which seems to point out this period of history for the accomplishment of it: the rest of the men, who were not killed by these plagues, yet repented not of their idolatry; the worship of saints and images, which so nearly resembled the heathen idolatry, had made great advances about this time. Leo Isaurus, emperor of the east, was much concerned at it; it gave great offence to the Mahometans, and often provoked them to persecute the Christians as idolaters. In the east, Leo Isaurus, and his son Constantinus Copronymus,‡ at this very time endeavoured to put a stop to these idolatrous customs of worshipping images; and, in order to prevent it, ordered all images to be taken out of the churches: but these endeavours to preserve the church from idolatry, and remove this just prejudice against the Christian worship, were warmly opposed by the bishops of Rome. The emperor Leo had sent his orders into Italy, A. D. 726. to remove images out of the churches there: the then pope of Rome, Gregory II. confirmed the worship of images by a synod, and rejected the order of the emperor, with severe reproaches on himself; and finally, according to Baronius's own account, he excommunicated the emperor, and, on that pretence, forbade all payment of taxes to him in Italy, and freed the people from all manner of obedience to him, as their prince. "Tandem et anathematis pœnam, ita quoque Baronius, eoque prætextu interdictum, quo tributa Italica sisteret, et obedientiam omnem, tam civilem quam ecclesiasticam, toto occidente, deinceps exhiberi Græco Imperatori prohiberet."§

This defence of the idolatrous worship of images, was so obstinate, that at length it prevailed to a solemn confirmation of it, by the authority of councils, both in the east and west; so far were they from repenting of their abominations.

And this brings us to the end of the second period of prophecy, and within a very few years of the beginning of the third period, in the temporal power of the popes of Rome; which was, in some sense, the seventh, or, in another sense, the eighth head of Roman government, as we have before observed,‖ to which the following visions of this Revelation relate.

CHAP. X.

SECT. VIII. Interval between the second and third Periods.

CONTENTS.

The foregoing chapters have given us a prophetic description of the two first periods, or of the state of the world and church, under the persecution of Rome heathen; of the troubles occasioned by the invasions of the northern nations, which broke the power of the Roman empire, and divided it into several new governments; and finally, of the rise and progress of the Mahometan religion and empire, which caused so many evils throughout the greatest part of the world, both in the eastern and western empires.

This tenth chapter seems to be an interval between the second and third periods, in which the scene of the vision alters, preparation is made for a new prophecy, representing a new state of the world and church, for a new period of forty-two months, a time, times, and half a time, or twelve hundred and sixty days, being the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when the mystery of God shall be finished.

The scene of vision is represented different from the foregoing; it is not now before the throne of God in heaven, as in the fourth chapter, but on earth, as the first scene, chap. i. For St. John saw an angel come down from heaven, (ver. 1.) the angel stood on the sea and on the earth, and he lifted up his hand to heaven, (ver. 5.) when he sware that time should be no longer, (ver. 6.)

This introduction to the third period represents an angel coming down from heaven, with a little book open in his hand. A voice from heaven directs St. John to take the little book from the angel, and to eat it up; because he was still to continue his prophecy, and to reveal many things contained in it: for he was to prophesy again, before, or concerning, many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings, (ver. 11.) Or he was to represent, in new prophetic descriptions, the state of the church and world, in the period or times that should successively follow the former times, of which he had already prophesied, and which was to contain a prophecy, as is afterward declared, for the space of twelve hundred and sixty prophetical days. The meaning of which will be best explained by a paraphrase upon the representations themselves.

1. AND I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire:]

(1.) After my former vision, related in the foregoing part of this prophecy, I beheld another vision, introductory to a farther revelation concerning the state of the church and world; for I beheld a mighty angel coming down from heaven: he appeared as clothed with a cloud; a mark of great power and majesty: a rainbow, the symbol of God's covenant and mercy, was on or round his head; and his appearance was very glorious, for his face shone with a lustre like the brightness of the sun, and his feet with a splendour as if they had been a flame, or pillars of fire. [1]

2. And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth,]

(2.) And the angel whom I beheld coming down from heaven, held a little book, or roll, open in his hand, the remaining part of the sealed book, or roll, which the Lamb had opened; and when he was come down to our globe, he stood upon it, having one foot on the sea, and the other on the earth, the chief parts of which it consists; the prophecies yet to be revealed out of the little book, or roll, relating to the greater part of the inhabitants of the world. [2]

3. And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices.]

(3.) This mighty angel, standing on the earth and sea, made proclamation with a voice, loud, strong, and awful, as the roar of a lion. Upon which I heard several distinct voices, as from the clouds of heaven, and loud as thunder.

4. And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.]

(4.) As I was about to write down what was spoke from the seven thunders, I was forbid by another voice from heaven, saying unto me, Do not write down what the voices from the seven thunders have uttered, that they may not be publicly revealed in this prophecy. [3]

5. And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven,

6. And sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things that are therein, that there should be time no longer:

7. But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.]

(5.) But though I was not allowed to reveal what the seven thunders had uttered, yet the angel proceeded to give a farther revelation of the providence of God towards the world, and his church in general; and to confirm the truth and certainty of his revelation, he took his oath in the most solemn manner: for, lifting up his hand to heaven, (6.) he sware by the eternal God, the Creator of all things, that the time of the glorious state of the church, though sure to be accomplished, according to God's promise, in its due time, [4] should not be as yet; (7.) but in the next period, or in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, who was yet to sound the mystery of God, in his providence towards the church, should be perfected; and then, as he had promised in the prophetic oracles, the glorious state of the church should be no longer deferred.

8. And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and the earth.]

(8.) I was then directed by another voice from heaven, to go up to the angel, who stood upon the sea and the earth, and receive from him the little book which he held open in his hand.

9. And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.]

(9.) I thereupon did as the voice from heaven commanded me, and desired the angel to give me the little book, which he did; saying unto me, Take this little book, consider it carefully, and digest it well in thy mind; and thou shalt find, in the events it shall reveal unto thee, an occasion for comfort and joy, for grief and sorrow.

10. And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.]

(10.) I accordingly took the little book out of the angel's hand, and deeply meditated on the contents of it; and found it to contain in part things of great consolation, and in part things that gave me great concern and sorrow.

11. And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings.]

(11.) And the angel from whom I had received the little book, acquainted me, that I was to consider the prophecies contained in it were not intended only for my private instruction and meditation; they were prophecies which concerned the public, many nations, and people, which I was to publish in farther revelations, for the public use and benefit of the church. [5]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1.] TO come in the clouds, or with the clouds of heaven, is, among the Jews, a known symbol of Divine power and majesty.* It may refer to the expression of the Psalmist, Thou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty; thou coverest thyself with light as with a garment: (Psal. civ. 1, 2.) alluding to the bright and shining cloud, in which the Divine presence was used to appear. Grotius observes a like notion among the heathen, that they represented their deities appearing covered with a cloud:

"Tandem venias, precamur,
Nube candentes humeros amictus
Augur Apollo."†

A rainbow, by its natural properties, as a gentle rain while the sun shines, was a proper emblem of God's covenant with mankind after the flood, and fit to be made a sign that God is always mindful of his covenant and promise. The brightness and splendour of the sun, and of fire, were also proper figures to express the majesty of a Divine appearance.‡

[2] Ver. 2.] It is an observation of a great author, § that this description of an angel coming down from heaven, is in the form in which Christ appeared at the beginning of this prophecy; and it may farther direct us to understand this mighty angel of Christ, that he appeared having a little book opened in his hand. The same illustrious interpreter judiciously remarks, "That this little book is the same that he had newly opened; for he received but one book from him that sat upon the throne, and he alone was worthy to open it." It does not seem to be another book, as some have thought, but the remainder of the same book, or roll, which the Lamb took out of the right hand of him that sat on the throne, (v. 7.) It may be called a little book or roll, being only the remainder of what had been opened or revealed already, the seventh and last seal, and so the whole book had been opened before, (chap. viii.) This seems the plainest and easiest account of the little book, as well as most agreeable to the order of the prophecies, this containing what was to happen in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound, (ver. 7.) Earth and sea are, in Scripture-language, a description of our world, or this terraqueous globe, as the heavens and earth are a description of the universe in general, or the whole visible creation; and so the inhabitants of the earth and sea seem in this prophecy to mean the inhabitants of this world: Woe unto the inhabitants of the earth and sea! for the devil is come down unto you; (xii. 12.) that is, when the dragon was cast down unto the earth.

By the earth, the Jews understood, as Sir Isaac Newton observes, (p. 276.) the great continent of all Asia and Africa, to which they had access by land; and by the isles of the sea, they understood the places to which they sailed by sea, or the several parts of Europe: and hence, in this prophecy, the earth and sea are put, he observes, for the nations of the Greek and Latin empires: in this sense the angel, putting his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth, will represent him standing with one foot on Asia, and another on Europe; to signify, the prophecies he was to reveal would relate to both the empires of the east and west: but I think the former sense the more natural.

[3] Ver. 4.] When a voice from heaven commanded the apostle not to reveal what was spoken by these voices, it would be ridiculous to go about to explain it. It is sufficient to observe, it was not proper to remain on record a public revelation to the church in general, however proper it was to be revealed to the apostle in particular, which might be for many wise reasons; though, for what particular reasons, must be as unknown to us as the revelation itself is.

[4] Ver. 6.] That time should be no longer, does not mean, that time itself should be no more; in the original, χρόνος οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι, is literally, the time shall not be yet. Some understand it, that the time of fulfilling the prophecy should be no longer delayed; or, as Grotius on the place, "Non diu erit quin arcanum Dei impleatur:" but, I think, both the intention of the prophecy, and the more literal meaning of the expression, better agree with Mr. Daubuz's interpretation:* "The angel in the vision declares upon oath, that the glorious state of the church shall not be as yet; but that, however, it would not be long to it: for in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound, (that is, in the period of prophecy to which the remainder of the book yet unrevealed relates, under the seventh trumpet,) the mystery of God shall be perfected, as he had declared to his prophets." This was a consolation proper to the general design of the prophecy, as there was but one period of time yet remaining, viz. during the voice of the seventh and last angel; and then the accomplishment of the promises, in the happy and glorious state of the church, should be accomplished and fulfilled, without any farther delay. This was however attended with a most useful caution, That the church is to prepare, in this period, for new trials of faith and patience; though, in the end, the mystery of God shall be finished or perfected.

[5] Ver. 11.] To eat, says Mr. Waple, signifies to meditate and to digest Divine truths. Thy words were found, says the prophet, (Jer. xv. 16.) and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart. Our blessed Saviour uses the same metaphorical expression, when he speaks of himself as the bread of life, in many passages of the sixth chapter of St. John. As this prophecy was to reveal the providences of God, during the period of the seventh angel, in which, as there was a revelation of great opposition to true religion, and persecution of the faithful professors of it, so was there also a revelation of Divine protection, during the time of trial, and of a sure accomplishment of the promised glorious and happy state of the church in the end. The meditation of such a state of providence might well occasion a mixture of joy and grief in the apostle's mind, as it is like to do in the minds of all who so understand it, and consider it.

CHAP. XI.

The third Period.

SECT. IX. First Description of the third Period.

CONTENTS.

We are now come, in this eleventh chapter and the following, to the third and longest period of this prophecy, distinguished by the seven vials, as the former were by seven trumpets and seven seals. As this is a period much longer than either of the foregoing, it seems to have a more full and copious description; and the state of it is represented by several prophetic images, as, by measuring the temple, by the prophecy of two witnesses; by the vision of a woman flying into the wilderness; and the representation of one wild beast rising out of the sea, and of another coming up out of the earth.

So that here are two distinct representations of the state of the church during this period; and another representation of the persecuting power from whence this afflicted state of the church should proceed; and, in the end of this, as in each period, here is a representation of the church's deliverance out of its afflicted state. And, in particular, the afflictions of the church are to end with this period, in the most happy and glorious state of peace and prosperity, of truth, purity, and protection; and not to be succeeded, in a very short time, by a new period of troubles and afflictions, to try the faith and patience of the saints, as the former were.

It appears, that the representation of the two witnesses, of the woman in the wilderness, and of the beast, are several representations of the same time or period, in different views. The time for the witnesses to prophesy in sackcloth, is a thousand two hundred and threescore days, (xi. 3.) The woman is nourished in her place in the wilderness, for a time, and times, and half a time, (xii. 14.) or three years and a half, equal to twelve hundred and sixty days, according to the ancient year of three hundred and sixty days. And so the prophecy itself interprets it, xii. 6. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days. It is farther observed concerning the period of the beast, that power was given to him to continue forty and two months, a time equal to three years and a half, or twelve hundred and sixty days. They are therefore to be looked upon as different descriptions of the same period, for the more distinct explication of the prophecy, and greater certainty of its true meaning.

But, before we enter upon the particular meaning of each representation, it may be proper to observe something as to the proper time of this period, as to its beginning and continuance.

As interpreters, for very different reasons, have fallen into very different accounts of both, it has occasioned no little uncertainty and disorder in the different interpretations given of it.

The papists are very unwilling protestants should find any of the corruptions of the Roman church in this prophecy; they have therefore used all their art and learning to finish all the prophecies in this book, in much less time than twelve hundred and sixty years, in the downfal of Rome heathen, when the empire became Christian, under Constantine, A. D. 323. They must therefore make the time of this period no more than twelve hundred and sixty natural days, or three common years and a half. And in this, the bishop of Meaux* greatly triumphs over the protestant interpreters, that they should make a year not to signify one year, but three hundred and sixty years.

There are also some learned interpreters among protestants themselves, who think the whole prophecy reaches but to a small period of time. Grotius,† and after him Dr. Hammond, in support of that opinion, make the duration of this period much less than twelve hundred and sixty years: for to understand the twelve hundred and sixty days, according to the style of prophecy, for so many years, is inconsistent with their favourite schemes, and must quite overthrow them.

But it appears, I conceive,‡ from many reasons, that the opinion which assigns a short time to the whole prophecy, is without all foundation, and expressly contrary to the intent of the prophecy, which is to extend to the day of judgment.

It is also a considerable circumstance, to strengthen the interpretation of days by years, that as it is agreeable to the style of prophecy, it is most agreeable to the plan of this prophecy. It is a good rule of Grotius, § that the circumstances of the subject ought to direct how we are to understand an expression: "Vox hebdomadis generalis est, et tam de annis quam de diebus, rebusque aliis accipi potest; quomodo autem accipienda sit, docere nos debet loci cujusque materia." Let us then see, how justly preferable the prophetic interpretation of a day for a year is in this place.

It is agreeable to the ancient style of Scripture, in the days of Moses, Numb. xiv. 34. After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall you bear your iniquities, even forty years. The punishment of the people was to be as many years as the days of their transgression; so that each day for a year, seems an allusion to some known method of counting, in which days were answered by years.

‡ Vid. Preface.
† On Rev. ii. 10.
§ On Rev. ii. 10.

The prophetic style of Ezekiel farther confirms it: Ezek. iv. 6. the prophet is directed to lie on his right side, and bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days. This is explained to signify, according to the style of prophecy, so many years: I have appointed thee each day for a year, or, as in the margin, a day for a year, a day for a year. So that, in this figurative interpretation, each day, in the prophetic representation, is to be answered by a year in the historical event.

In the prophecy of Daniel, this manner of prophetic expression is used again; Dan. ix. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. All who consider this a prophecy relating to the Messiah, for which there are abundant and unanswerable reasons, must consider the seventy weeks as so many times seven years, not as so many weeks of natural days.

It is a criticism below such great men as Grotius and the bishop of Meaux, that because hebdomas signifies a number of seven, it may signify seven of any thing, according to the circumstance of the place; and therefore a week (hebdomas), which is so called because it contains seven days, may signify seven years. A week primarily signifies seven days, and properly nothing but seven days: a week (hebdomas) never did naturally signify seven years, and only can do so, as the figurative expression of prophecy puts a day to signify a year.

The particular circumstances of this prophecy add a farther strength to this interpretation, that the twelve hundred and sixty days are to be understood of so many years.

The order of the prophecies of this book shews, that these twelve hundred and sixty days contain the whole time of the third period; or, all the time wherein the witnesses prophesy, the woman is in the wilderness, and the beast has power given unto him: that is, all the time of the last state of the church's sufferings, to that glorious state of the church, when Satan shall be shut up in the bottomless pit for a thousand years. In this period the seven vials of God's wrath are to be poured out, and all the historical events that relate to them accomplished; this period is to last till the mystery of God shall be finished. These events are too many, and the times in which they are to be accomplished too long, to be comprised within three years and a half, or twelve hundred and sixty natural days.

The order of the periods shews this third is not to begin until the two former are passed; until the nations which had destroyed the Roman empire had divided it among themselves; till the imperial government of Rome was passed away,* as the preceding forms of government were before it; till another form of government should be established in Rome, which, on some accounts, should be called the seventh, and on other accounts the eighth form of government; when Rome, once the powerful mistress of the world, after she had lost her dominion, and seemed to lose it without hope of recovery, should be restored to power and empire again, which was to continue during the twelve hundred and sixty days of this period, and then to be utterly overthrown, and never to rise again.

Now, as a great variety of concurring circumstances shews the beginning of this period, about the year 756. when the popes were invested with the temporal dominion of Rome, in which only time the several descriptions of this period do all exactly agree; the twelve hundred and sixty days of this prophecy are to last so long as this power is to continue: which seems evidently to shew, that we are not to understand twelve hundred and sixty natural days the time of this period, but so many prophetic days, in which a day is given for a year.

It being necessary to premise so much concerning the prophetic account of time in this period, I shall only farther observe, that we have three distinct representations of it in the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth chapters.

The first, by the figure of measuring the temple, and prophesying of the two witnesses.

The second, by the figure of the woman in the wilderness. And,

The third, by the power and persecution of the beast.

I proceed to explain each of these, as they are severally represented, in their order.

1. AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein.]

(1.) After this, I beheld in the visions of prophecy, a new representation of the future providence of God towards the church and world; for there was a measuring rod put into my hand, with which I was directed to measure the temple, and the court wherein the altar stood, in which the priests worshipped God, and performed the duties of their office, and into which such as offered private sacrifices for themselves were admitted. A proper representation of the true worship of God, and of such as were true worshippers of him.

2. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.]

(2.) But as to the other court of the temple, the place where the Israelites were used to assemble, when they come up to the temple to worship, I was directed not to measure it, for this reason, that it should become common and profane, being permitted to be used and possessed by gentiles. A fit representation of great corruption in the common and usual worship of God, by heathen doctrines and idolatrous modes of worship: which state of corruption, I was informed, was to continue for the space of forty-two prophetic months, or twelve hundred and sixty years. [1]

3. And I will give power to my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days clothed in sackcloth.]

(3.) Yet in this prevailing state of corruption, God will raise up witnesses to the truth, who shall sufficiently testify against the prevailing false doctrines and idolatrous worship, and denounce the judgments of God against the apostacy. These witnesses, like the prophets of old, shall

* Vid. Preface.

prophesy in garments of mourning, and meet with great oppression; yet they shall persevere with an immovable Christian courage, to assert the truth, and oppose the corruptions, of this period, during its whole continuance. [2]

4. These are the two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.]

(4.) This small church of faithful worshippers, who refuse to comply with the more general corruptions of faith and worship, shall be constantly supported and encouraged in the profession of true religion; faithful instructors shall excite them to constancy and perseverance, and they shall glorify God by a constant testimony of truth; as if a lamp was kept always burning, by a continual supply of oil from a living olive-tree, constantly feeding it with oil, that it may never go out. [3]

5. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.]

(5.) Moreover, the judgments these witnesses to the truth shall denounce against such persons as reject their testimony, and persecute them for their sincere and faithful warnings, shall as surely be executed, as the judgments denounced by the former prophets were; God will assuredly punish those who reject and despise their warnings, with many great and severe judgments. [4]

6. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.]

(6.) God will vindicate the honour of these witnesses, and the truth of their testimony, by as great and remarkable judgments in their times, as in the times of any of the ancient prophets; as when, for instance, Elijah prayed, and it rained not on the earth; or, as when Moses turned the waters of Egypt into blood. God will surely avenge their cause as his own, and punish their enemies with all those plagues, which, according to his direction, they shall denounce against them. [5]

7. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.]

(7.) Notwithstanding, during the time these witnesses shall faithfully bear their testimony to the truth, and against the corruption of the Christian faith and worship, that persecuting power, which, according to a following representation, is to arise in this period, out of the bottomless pit, shall continually oppose these witnesses, and so far prevail, as to inflict many evils, even to death itself, upon them. [6]

8. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.]

(8.) And these faithful witnesses shall be treated with such cruel severity by their persecutors, that they shall be denied the common decency of burial. Such persecuting powers may well be compared to Sodom or Egypt, for pride, wickedness, and cruelty, to those who put Christ himself to death, for bearing testimony to the truth: yet, in all their distress, they may comfort themselves, that they suffer with Christ, and for his cause, and from persons whose idolatry and cruelty make them as Sodom or Egypt. [7]

9. And they of the people, and kindred, and tongues, and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.]

(9.) The corruption in the days of this period shall be so very great, that the people in general, in all places, shall be violently prejudiced against these faithful witnesses; insomuch, that they shall, with great inhumanity, deny them the decencies of burial, and express the fierceness of their displeasure and wrath, by all methods of public disgrace. [8]

10. And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.]

(10.) And the inhabitants of the earth shall greatly rejoice in this persecution; they shall express it by sending gifts to one another, as a testimony of mutual congratulation, on occasions of public joy. For now they hope to be delivered from the trouble and uneasiness, occasioned by the reproofs of these prophets, and the judgments they threatened them with, on account of their corruptions. [9]

11. And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them who saw them.]

(11.) Yet, notwithstanding the cruelty of these persecutors prevailed, while the beast was permitted to make war with the saints, and to overcome them, it shall be however but for a limited time; then the power of God shall be manifested, in a remarkable manner, for their deliverance: as if dead bodies were raised to life, and made to stand upon their feet, those faithful witnesses shall, with surprising success, maintain and propagate the true worship of God, to the great terror and amazement of their persecutors. [10]

12. And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither: And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.]

(12.) As these witnesses were represented raised from the dead, in conformity to the resurrection of Christ; so farther, in imitation of his ascension into heaven, they are represented as ascending in a public manner, in the presence and to the great confusion of their enemies, who shall behold them, after all their oppression, exalted by the glorious power of God, to a state of great honour and influence, as well as of security and peace. [11]

13. And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.]

(13.) This great power of the witnesses, and prevalency of their doctrines, shall however be attended with great commotions in the world, with great and signal calamities inflicted on that great city, which had for so long time opposed the truth, and oppressed the faithful. A very considerable part of its power shall be taken away, and many persons shall be cut off in her defence, and many others shall be affrighted with the judgments of God, and made sensible of the wickedness of oppressing truth and righteousness, and shall glorify the true God, by forsaking their idolatry, and assisting the cause of pure and true religion. [12]

14. The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly.]

(14.) Let not, however, any person imagine, that the church shall be free, in this third period, from opposition and persecution, and try their faith and patience, any more than in the two former periods; for a third woe is to follow upon the second, to try them that dwell upon the earth. [13]

15. And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.]

(15.) I then perceived in my vision, that the seventh angel sounded his trumpet, upon which proclamation was made with a loud voice in heaven, declaring, that the kingdom of God, and his Christ, the true Christian religion, should triumph over all opposition, and flourish with great success and prosperity throughout all the future ages of time.

16. And the four-and-twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God,]

(16.) And the twenty-four elders, whom I saw in my first vision, representing the true church of God, as sitting on seats placed round about the throne of God, arose from their seats, and prostrated themselves before God, to worship him.

17. Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken unto thee thy great power, and hast reigned.]

(17.) And they worshipped God by a solemn act of praise, saying, We give thanks unto thee, O Jehovah the Almighty, and everlasting God, that it has pleased thee to shew thyself superior to all the opposition of the world, that thou art able to protect, and, according to thy promise, to exalt thy faithful servants in the end.

18. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward to thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth.]

(18.) For though the nations of the earth have, with great fury, persecuted the true religion, now the day of thy wrath is come, to punish them in righteousness, and to vindicate the cause of thy servants, who have been faithful unto death: the time is come to finish the mystery of thy providence towards the churches, and to give the reward promised to prophets, and confessors, and all true Christian worshippers, of every kind and degree: and to destroy them at the last, who, for so long time, by their false doctrine and persecution, had corrupted and destroyed the greater part of the world. [14]

19. And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.]

(19.) Upon this, I beheld the temple of God in heaven opened, so that I could see the ark of the covenant, the mercy-seat, and place of God's presence, for it was not hid behind a veil; representing not only a state of peace and liberty for the church, the place of worship being opened, but also that, in this state of the church, the true worship of God will be used in great perfection. This happy state of the church shall be attended with great and heavy judgments on the enemies of true religion; a storm of vengeance shall come down from heaven on their heads, terrible as when earthquakes are joined to thunder and lightning. [15]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 2.] A MEASURING rod was a sort of pole about ten feet long, made of a kind of reed, which was both strong and light, such as was commonly used in measuring buildings and lands. Lightfoot* observes, "that (besides the priests who ministered in the court where the altar stood) persons offering a sacrifice came into the court of the altar to present their sacrifice before God, and lay their hands upon it."

This representation seems to be taken from the prophet Ezekiel's vision, (chap. xl.) in which he beheld a person with a measuring rod, taking the dimensions of the buildings of a temple; shewing the prophet, in vision, the model or plan of a new temple, to encourage the Jews to faithfulness in their religion, with the hopes of seeing the temple and true worship of God restored again. The temple and temple-worship was a proper figure of Christ's church, and of the spiritual worship instituted by him. It was, therefore, very proper to represent the state of the Christian church by like figures. What is peculiar in this, and wherein it differs from Ezekiel's representation, is the direction to measure only the temple and inner court, where the altar stood, but to exclude the other court. This signifies plainly enough, that, in this period of the church, but a small part should be preserved in purity; that there would be some sincere and faithful worshippers, but they would be few in comparison with a greater and more numerous part of the church, which should be corrupted with the doctrines of heathenism, and corrupt the worship of God with idolatrous customs; as if the outward courts had been given up to the gentiles to profane, while the few faithful worshippers of God, who adhere to the faith and worship taught in the word of God, shall be confined, as it were, within the inner court.

One general representation of this period, then, is after this manner: God will preserve a church in purity of faith and worship, but it will consist only of a small number, when, at the same time, the greater part of the church shall fall into great corruptions; in particular, they shall corrupt the Christian faith and worship with many false doctrines and practices, taken from heathen superstition and idolatry.

[2] Ver. 3.] This representation shews in general, that as God raised up prophets in the ancient church, to witness against the idolatrous corruptions of religion, and denounce the judgments of God against those who were guilty of them, so it should be in this corrupt state of the Christian church. It is a sufficient reason, why these witnesses are said to be two, as two was the legal number of witnesses, and as, in the times of the ancient prophets, on greater occasions, two were usually joined together, as Moses and Aaron in Egypt; Elijah and Elisha, in the apostacy of the ten tribes; Zerubbabel and Joshua, after the Babylonish captivity. As this testimony of the witnesses is to be of equal duration with the apostacy itself, it cannot well be meant of any two particular persons; nor is there, I conceive, any reason to understand it of any two particular churches, or bodies of men, in perpetual succession. It sufficiently answers the prophetic description, if there be, during the time of the apostacy, a sufficient, though small number, who, like Elias and Elisha, shall testify and declare against the idolatrous customs and practices of their times.

Calmet justly observes, "These witnesses do not mean two particular persons, but all the martyrs in general." The name of prophesying here signifies persons full of the Spirit of God, preaching God's word, and bearing witness to the truth.

[3] Ver. 4.] This representation of the candlesticks and olive-trees seems taken from the prophecy of Zechariah, (chap. iv.) in which Zerubbabel and Joshua are represented by two olive-trees on each side of the candlestick, which empty oil through two golden pipes out of themselves, (ver. 11, 12.) to express, that Joshua and Zerubbabel should be protected by Divine Providence, to go through all the difficulties which lay in the way of finishing the temple, and re-establishing the Jewish state, not indeed by human force and power, but by God's protection, and his all-powerful providence; not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.

[4] Ver. 5.] When Ahaziah sent companies to seize on the prophet Elijah, fire came down from heaven, and consumed them. (2 Kings i. 10.) And God threatens those who rejected the warnings of the prophet Jeremiah, (Jer. v. 12. 14.) They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see sword nor famine . . . Wherefore, thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Because ye speak these words, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them. That is, God would certainly bring on Judah and Israel, all those judgments with which he had appointed to punish them for their obstinate apostacy. The certainty of these judgments is well expressed in these words, And if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. The enemies of truth and righteousness shall have no power to protect themselves against the judgments of God, or find any means to escape, when God decrees their punishment.

[5] Ver. 6.] What God does, according to his word by his prophets, is, according to the style of prophecy, said to be done by them. Behold, (says God to the prophet Jeremiah, i. 9, 10.) I have put my words in thy mouth. See, I have set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build and to plant. In the prophet Hosea, Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of my mouth, are observed by interpreters to be equivalent expressions. (Hosea vi. 5.) Thus, when God brings those judgments upon the world, which he directed his prophets to declare in his name, they may be said, in the style of prophecy, to smite the earth with plagues, as they will; because God will accomplish what, according to his word, they shall denounce against the opposers and corrupters of true religion.

[6] Ver. 7.] What we render, when they shall have finished their testimony, Mr. Daubuz renders, while they shall perform their testimony. The original may mean, the time of their testimony, as well as the end of it; ὅταν τελέσωσι, as, ὅταν παραδίδωσιν ὑμᾶς, when they deliver you up. (Matt. x. 19.) And τελέω signifies to perfect and complete a thing, as well as to end or finish it: so Christ, upon account of his sufferings, is said to be made perfect through sufferings. (Heb. ii. 10.) The most probable sense appears to be, that the witnesses are to meet with opposition and persecution, during the whole of this period; as the woman was to be in the wilderness, and the beast was to have power twelve hundred and sixty days, so the witnesses were to prophesy, and to be persecuted during the same time. They are not single persons, but a perpetual collective body of men, or a succession of witnesses, against the errors and false worship introduced into the church.

[7] Ver. 8.] The great city, is that city which reigneth over the kings of the earth, (Rev. xvii. 18.) or Rome, the empress of the world. Streets of the great city, are its public places throughout its dominions; for the great city is not considered so much in its buildings, as a seat of empire. It is Rome, and the Roman empire, says the bishop of Meaux; and, taking the great city for Rome, and its empire, he adds, it is literally true, that Jesus Christ was crucified there, even by the Roman power. And it is moreover true, that the same Rome which crucified Christ in person, crucified him also every day in his members. The general meaning of this passage is well expressed by Mr. Daubuz; "The dead bodies of the witnesses shall lie throughout the extent, in the most conspicuous places, or the chief and principal parts of the antichristian jurisdiction."

[8] Ver. 9.] The time in which the people shall shew this inhumanity to the witnesses, is said to be three days and a half, which is not to be understood literally for so many natural days only. "Can any man believe (says Mr. Mede), that the small space of three days and a half, is sufficient either for spreading the fame of the death of the witnesses, or for sending the messengers with gifts to and fro among the nations?"—"Yet the expression (says Mr. Daubuz) is very suitable to the decorum of the symbol of a dead body, that will keep no longer unburied without corruption." There seems, I think, an allusion in the three days and a half, to the time of our Saviour's lying in the grave. Such was the humanity of the times in which Christ suffered, that they permitted his friends to lay his body in the grave; but such shall be the inhumanity of these persecutors, as to deny the rites of burial. Why the time is signified by three days and a half, we shall see farther on ver. 11.

[9] Ver. 10.] The prophets, who reproved the corruption of their times, were used to be accounted disturbers of the public peace, and were often an uneasiness to persons, who, however corrupt they were, could not bear reproof. Thus, when Ahab saw Elijah, he said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel? The prophets, who preach against the errors of the world, are treated as public enemies, seditious persons, and even as the cause of those public calamities, which they foretell as the punishment of a perverse generation.

[10] Ver. 11.] A day sometimes signifies a season, or undetermined portion of time: The day of temptation in the wilderness was forty years. (Heb. iii. 8, 9.) Day and year are sometimes joined together, for season and time in general: Isa. xxxiv. 8. For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompence for the controversy of Zion. So dies is used with elegance, by the best authors, for time in general: "opinionum commento delet dies."

It is a good rule to judge what portion of time may be designed by such indeterminate expressions, to consider what is necessary or proportional to the season spoken of. In this place, as Mr. Waple observes, it seems to be necessary that three days and a half should be brought to comport with three times and a half, twelve hundred and sixty days, and forty-two months. Thus the time of the witnesses' suffering will be in proportion to the time of their prophecy, which is to be a time of persecution. It will agree with the other representations of the same state of the church, by the woman in the wilderness, and the season of the beast, or time of his persecuting power, which relate to the same period, and help to explain it.

[11] Ver. 12.] To be exalted to heaven, or cast down to hell, signifies, in Scripture-language, the happy state of those who enjoy the blessings of true religion, or the miserable condition of those who are deprived of them for despising them. Thus our Saviour speaks concerning Capernaum: And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down unto hell. (Matt. xi. 23.) The destruction of Satan's power by the kingdom of God, or the success of true religion by the gospel, against the idolatry and wickedness of the world, is expressed in the same figure, Luke x. 18. I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. The pride of Babylon is, in like manner, described, by the prophet Isaiah, xiv. 13. For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God. The fall of that haughty persecuting empire is described in the same figurative language, ver. 12. How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! In this sense, the ascension of the witnesses into heaven, will mean the great success of the doctrines of pure religion taught by them, and the mighty efficacy with which they shall prevail, in the reformation of the church from idolatrous and superstitious corruptions.

[12] Ver. 13.] Interpreters are much divided, as to the tenth part of the city which fell by the earthquake, whether it denotes Rome under the papacy, as Mr. Mede supposes Rome at present to be just the tenth part of ancient Rome; or, whether it means some notable part of the ten kingdoms into which the Roman empire was divided in this period; or suppose, with some, the kingdom of France, or, with others, the fall of the Greek church and empire of Constantinople, under the power of a Mahometan government, or whether it may not mean the whole papal jurisdiction, because it is represented in prophecy under the figurative expressions of ten toes, ten horns, ten kings.

This diversity of opinion had its rise, it may be, from an endeavour to fix too particular a sense on a general expression. We have already observed, (ii. 10.) that the numbers ten and seven are figurative numbers, denoting multitude, frequency, and perfection. A deliverance out of the many troubles of life, is expressed in the book of Job, by being delivered out of seven troubles, (v. 19.) The seven Spirits of God figuratively express the perfect grace of God's Holy Spirit; the number ten, in like manner, is used to denote many or often. Jacob complained, that Laban had changed his wages ten times, or very often. (Gen. xxxi. 7.) When Elkanah said to his wife, (1 Sam. i. 8.) Am not I better to thee than ten sons? the plain meaning is, than many sons. In like manner, Solomon observes of wisdom, (Eccles. vii. 19.) Wisdom strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city; or, than several mighty men. These instances, more of which may be seen in Mr. Daubuz,* are sufficient to shew, that the numbers seven and ten may be understood of many, or a sufficient number of any thing. The tenth part of the city falling by an earthquake, may then be understood very properly of some considerable part of the empire, the city being considered as the seat of empire and government; it may signify the downfal of some considerable supporters of the beast's persecuting power. The slaughter of seven thousand men may, in like interpretation, mean, such as shall continue to support and assist the antichristian power of this period, in opposition to the kingdom of God and Christ, to the cause of truth and righteousness.

There seems to be a propriety, in these more general expressions, in a general representation of this period, the more particular account being reserved for the after parts of the vision: so that this part of the prophecy seems to shew, that judgment shall come on the persecutors of the true church, in full proportion to their iniquities, when the faithful witnesses to the truth shall be eminently protected, and their cause shall wonderfully prevail.

[13] Ver. 14.] We have the mention of three woes, ix. 12. One woe is past, and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter. This first woe was under the sounding of the fifth angel, when the bottomless pit was opened, with the rise of Mahomet's power and imposture; the second woe is reasonably understood, to be during the sounding of the sixth angel, when the four angels were loosed to slay the third part of men, (Rev. ix. 13—15.) when the Saracens were permitted to endanger the whole western empire, and the Christian name and profession every where; the third woe, which was soon to follow the second, will begin its proper order, in the day of the voice of the seventh angel. It may be proper to observe, the woes are designed to represent an afflicted state of the church, rather than calamitous times to the inhabitants of the world in general: so that we are, I think, to consider it as a useful prophetic warning, that this third and last period would call for as much caution and constancy as either of the former. They who will faithfully adhere to the purity of true religion, must expect to find opposition, and meet with woe.

[14] Ver. 18.] "Κρίνειν, judicare, sæpe est vindicare, itaque שפט, quod est κρίνειν, vel δικάζειν, judicare per ἐκδικεῖν vindicare vertitur," as Grotius† observes. So that, to judge, or try the cause of the dead, or of the martyrs for the truth of the Christian religion, may very naturally be understood to mean, a vindication of their cause, by some eminent act of Providence in favour of it; as to vindicate, is a proper sense of judging; and, I think, more proper to the order and intention of the prophecy, than to understand it of the general judgment, which, according to the order of these prophecies, is not to be till after the prosperous state of the church, in which Satan is to be bound for a thousand years.

[15] Ver. 19.] Grotius thinks, that the lightnings and thunderings belong to the next chapter, and refer to a new prophecy; but we may observe, the end of this period is described in the same manner, xvi. 18—21. These voices, thunders, lightnings, and great hail, are interpreted expressly of an exceeding great plague, so that men blas-phemed on account of it. This is called, giving unto Babylon the cup of the wine of the fierceness of God's wrath; to express the great calamities and desolation with which God, at the end of this period, will punish the obstinate persecutors of his pure worship and true religion, and publicly vindicate the righteous cause of his faithful martyrs.

CHAP. XII.

SECT. X. Second Description of the third Period.

CONTENTS.

We come now to a second representation of the same third period of prophecy, that is, the state of the church and world in the days of the voice of the seventh angel; or, while the woman who fled into her place in the wilderness was nourished there for a time, times, and half a time, or three years and a half, equal to forty-two months, which are equal to twelve hundred and sixty prophetical days, the exact time in which the witnesses were to prophesy. As the former representation shewed, that true religion should be preserved among a few faithful confessors, though in a constant state of severe persecution, so this represents the state of the church, under the figure of a woman, persecuted so as to fly into desert places to hide herself; yet preserved and fed there, notwithstanding all endeavours of a furious serpent, ready to destroy her.

This plainly describes an afflicted and persecuted state of the church in general, during this period; in which, false and idolatrous worship shall be in great power, and the faithful profession of the true religion shall expose men to great danger: that however, still the true worshippers of God shall be preserved though in an obscure state, and be enabled, notwithstanding all opposition, to keep and maintain the truth unto the end.

1. AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars:]

(1.) I beheld, in a second vision, another representation of this period: there appeared in heaven the figure of a woman, in the most glorious manner imaginable: she seemed to be surrounded with sun-beams, as with a glory; to stand upon the moon, and to have a crown upon her head, in which twelve stars were set as so many diamonds, an image that strongly expressed a state of great dignity and honour. [1]

2. And she being with child, cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.]

(2.) This woman was farther represented to me in the vision, as a fruitful mother, ready to be delivered of a child, and to bless the world with a fair and numerous posterity. [2]

3. And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads.]

(3.) Besides the figure of the woman, I beheld a representation of another nature: there appeared a great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, and a crown on each of his heads, to shew there was a fierce and powerful enemy of the church, intent to make use of all its power, if possible to destroy it.

4. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was to be delivered, for to devour her child so soon as it was born.]

(4.) The power of this dragon was represented so great, that he seemed, by his tail, to strike a great number of the stars out of their places in the heavens, and throw them down on the earth: he seemed to watch the woman with great attention, whom he perceived ready to be delivered, with manifest marks of a design to destroy the child, so soon as it should be born. A fit figure to express the great power of Satan, and his kingdom, their constant opposition to truth, and unwearied endeavours to stop the progress and success of the gospel. [3]

5. And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron, and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.]

(5.) However, the woman ready to be delivered brought forth a man child, to intimate, that the Christian church should be continued by a constant succession of converts, notwithstanding all opposition. Thus Christ's kingdom should prevail over all enemies, and break all opposition, as the ancient oracles prophesied concerning him, That he should rule all nations as with a sceptre of iron. As soon as this child was born, I beheld it caught up to God and his throne, to intimate God's care and protection of the true Christian church, and the safety of the church in God's protection. [4]

6. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.]

(6.) I perceived also, that the woman was preserved as well as the child she brought forth; but it was by flying into a wilderness, where she found a place provided for her retreat, and where she was taken care of, by the protection of Divine Providence, during the time of this period: to intimate, the condition of the church would be difficult and dangerous in these times, like the Israelites, when they wandered in the wilderness; or, as Elijah, when he fled from the persecution of Ahab: yet a Divine protection should preserve it, as the Israelites were fed with manna, and Elijah by ravens.

7. And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels.]

(7.) This state of the Christian church, was farther represented by a battle in the air, between Michael and his angels on the one side, and the dragon, or the devil, and his party, on the other.

8. And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.]

(8.) In the conclusion of which, the dragon and his party were so far from obtaining a victory, that they were totally defeated, and driven out of the field of battle.

9. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.]

(9.) Thus the dragon, or old serpent, which in the Scriptures means the Devil, and Satan, who had deceived the world into error, idolatry, and wickedness, was cast down, together with his party and followers: to intimate, that there should be a smart contention between faithful Christians, and the maintainers of error, idolatry, and wickedness, which should at the last end in a complete victory over the enemies of true religion. [5]

10. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of the brethren is cast down, which accused them before God day and night.]

(10.) I perceived this blessing of the church was acknowledged in a public act of praise and thanksgiving unto God, who had thus manifested his power in the deliverance of his people, and the advancement of his own spiritual kingdom, by the profession and practice of Christianity. For now Satan had lost the opportunity of accusing Christians as guilty of impiety, for refusing to conform to the religion of the empire and idolatrous worship of the gods of Rome, or censuring their zeal for the true Christian religion as insincere; asserting, that they would soon renounce the profession of it, if they were to suffer on account of it. [6]

11. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.]

(11.) The patience, faith, and perseverance of the church, were sufficient to shew Satan a false accuser, and obtained a great advantage for them; as they were an eminent proof, that they preferred the cause of true religion to every thing else: and as their Saviour confirmed his doctrine with his blood, they were ready to confirm their testimony, by constancy unto death, according to the grace and spirit which the church should receive from Christ their Lord.

12. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.]

(12.) Let therefore angels and saints, and the whole church rejoice, and be thankfully sensible what salvation Christ has obtained for his people, and shall assuredly bestow upon them. Yet let all the inhabitants of the earth consider, that this victory over Satan notwithstanding, his power is not yet quite destroyed, he will still be able to do great mischief, and will attempt it with the more wrath, as the time of his opposition is much shortened.

13. And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.]

(13.) The devil will shew his wrath upon this great loss of his power, now the profession of Christianity so universally prevails against heathen idolatry, so long supported by the power of the empire; he will still find out new ways to persecute the true church, and those who are careful to preserve the purity of true religion.

14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.]

(14.) However, the true church, represented by the woman, appeared to be assisted against the wrath of the devil; eagles' wings were given unto her, that she might escape into a place of retirement and safety, which was provided for her during the time of this period. [7]

15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.]

(15.) The devil, as the inveterate enemy of true religion, attempted, if possible, to prevent the escape of the church, into a place of safety, though in a secret retirement; he cast out, as it were, a flood of waters, to destroy her, before she should be able to reach the wilderness. [8]

16. And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.]

(16.) But this danger of the church shall be prevented, by a remarkable protection of Divine Providence, raising several of the inhabitants of the earth to help the escape of the faithful worshippers, as if the earth had been commanded to open itself and receive the flood, that it might not overtake them who were flying from it. [9]

17. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.]

(17.) It was moreover represented to me, that though this providential assistance of the church favoured its escape, it rather increased the rage of Satan: he continued with fresh fury, and in all possible methods, to excite and carry on the persecution of the true worshippers of God, according to the purity of the gospel, and revelation of Jesus Christ; who would not submit to the idolatrous doctrines and corrupt worship introduced into the church in this period.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1.] IT was a well-known custom, at the time of this prophecy, to represent the several virtues and public societies by the figure of a woman in some peculiar dress, many of which are to be seen in the Roman coins; in particular Salus, the emblem of security and protection, is represented as a woman standing upon a globe, to represent the safety and security of the world under the emperor's care, as in a coin of Hadrian's: "Globum pede calcans, significans, se imperante, orbi salutem publicam datam."* The consecration of the Roman emperors is expressed in their coins by a moon and stars, as in two of Faustina, to express a degree of glory superior to any on earth.†

Never was any image more expressive of honour and dignity than this in the vision, to stand in the midst of a glory made by the beams of the sun; and upon the moon, as above the low condition of this sublunary world: to wear a crown set with the stars of heaven, as jewels, is something more sublime than any thing whereby antiquity has represented their societies, their virtues, or their deities.

The reader may farther observe in this representation, if he please, with Mr. Daubuz, that the sun may signify Christ; the moon, the Holy Ghost; and the twelve stars, the twelve apostles. Or, he may understand it with Mr. Mede, of the church shining round about, by the faith of

* August. de Num. p. 30. † Bimi Numismata, Tab. 49. 23, 24.

Christ, the sun of righteousness, treading under foot the rudiments of the world, whether Jewish shadows or gentile superstitions, and glorious with the ensigns of the apostolical offspring. Or, he may consider with Mr. Waple, that the apostolical doctrine is the chief ornament, crown, and glory of the church.

But, however he shall choose one or other of these more particular allusions, this will remain a sure general meaning,—that the blessings of true religion, in the revelation of Jesus Christ, as taught by his apostles, that is, of the true Christian religion, deserve the highest esteem and honour, however they may be despised by the world.

[2] Ver. 2.] The metaphor of a mother, blessed with a fair posterity, is very proper to represent the public happiness, by an increase both of numbers and strength. It is an easy figure to consider the church as a mother, and the converts to truth and righteousness, the true worshippers of God, as her children. The expressions which represent her as a woman in travail, may principally mean her fruitfulness, and denote the number of converts to true religion, rather than the afflictions of the church on account of her profession. The happiness of the empire in the fruitfulness of the imperial family, is often expressed in coins, " Fecunditas Augustæ, seculi felicitas."

[3] Ver. 4.] The devil is often represented in Scripture as a dragon, and the old serpent; and the prophecy itself so explains it, ver. 9. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world. He seems represented by a great, and red, or bloody-coloured dragon, to describe both his power and cruelty in opposing true religion. The seven heads, and crowns, and ten horns, is a description so exactly agreeable to the description of the beast, in the thirteenth and seventeenth chapters, that it may, I think, be justly understood as a limitation of the opposition here meant, to the times of the beast, or to that time when the Roman power was represented by ten horns, as well as by seven heads and crowns; or not before ten kingdoms were erected by the nations which broke in upon the Roman empire, and divided it into many independent governments; that is, properly during the time of this third period.

[4] Ver. 5.] Grotius supposes, I think with great probability, that these expressions, And her child was caught up unto God and his throne, are an allusion to the preservation of Joash, in the time of Athaliah's usurpation, when she put to death all the rest of the royal family; (2 Kings xi. 2, 3.) Jehosheba took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain. . . . And he was hid in the house of the Lord six years. He was kept safe in one of the chambers of the temple, till he was brought out by Jehoiada the high-priest, and restored to the kingdom of David. Thus the true worshippers of God shall not all be destroyed by the enemies of religion; some, like Joash, shall be kept safe, as if in heaven, the true temple, till they shall appear publicly with victory over their enemies.

[5] Ver. 9.] Many interpreters understand this victory over Satan, in which he is represented cast down from heaven with his angels, to be intended of the heathen power of Rome; so that idolatry had lost the advantage of the civil establishment throughout the Roman empire. In this period, the temporal power of Rome, as we shall hereafter see, was to be in the hands of one, who styles himself, The head of the Christian church. It was a great victory over Satan and his power, when Christianity had fully prevailed over heathenism in the empire; and we may add, it was also a considerable victory over Satan, when an effectual stop was put to the Mahometan imposture in these western parts: though, as we shall observe in the following parts of this representation, the devil, notwithstanding this diminution of his power, is still to retain sufficient to do great mischief within this period, and will use it with much wrath, against the true worshippers of God and his faithful servants.

[6] Ver. 10.] These expressions, says Mr. Waple, are taken from Job and Zechariah, where the Scriptures, speaking after the manner of men, represent Satan as accusing good and pious men before God. This he does, by aggravating their faults and imperfections, and by exciting wicked men to raise false accusations against them, as was notoriously done against the primitive Christians. Mr. Daubuz observes, the accuser, according to the custom of the eastern nations, and in some cases by the law of Moses, was appointed to be the executioner: (Deut. xiii. 9.) so that when the church is no longer in danger of persecution for the profession of Christianity, Satan is said to be thrown down, as having lost the power of accusing and executing such as make open profession of it.

[7] Ver. 14.] To bear on eagle's wings, is an allusion to the strength and swiftness of an eagle's flight, and does well express the readiness and power with which God does often deliver his church out of its dangers; but whether the two wings of an eagle are here put to signify the eastern and western parts of the Roman empire, of which an eagle is the armorial ensign, I shall leave to the reader's judgment.

[8] Ver. 15.] Floods and inundations often come so suddenly, and with such violence, as to drown or carry away all things within their reach, and give no time for an escape. They are a proper figure to express some great and sudden danger. Nahum thus describes the judgments of God, which shall utterly destroy his enemies, (i. 8.) But with an overflowing flood, he will make an utter end of the place thereof. So that by this similitude, we may well understand some quick and smart attempt of the enemies of true religion, to cut off all hope of safety for the true worshippers of God, even in retirement.

[9] Ver. 16. And the earth helped the woman.] The figure in general is a natural representation of stopping the course of a flood, by receiving it into some great opening or gap in the earth; and earth, taken in its most natural interpretation, for our habitable world, and the inhabitants of it, will fully answer the meaning of the figurative expression. Thus, the general meaning will be to this purpose: The providence of God will raise up some persons, who shall aid and assist true Christians, notwithstanding the violence of persecution. I do not perceive there is need of a more particular application of the word earth, to the corrupt part of the church, and that it became master of its conquerors; the barbarous nations at length receiving the manners, religion, and the very name of Romans.

It seems more agreeable to the design of the prophecy, and of this representation, to understand it of assistance from some persons of power and authority in the world, giving protection to the witnesses, against the growing corruptions of these times, not permitting the decrees and edicts for establishing idolatrous doctrines and worship to be immediately executed, or so suddenly as to suppress all opposition, and not give time for a sufficient number of confessors to stand up in the cause of truth, and continue to maintain it. The historical events, answering this prophetical description, which we shall afterward see, will, I hope, more clearly explain it.

CHAP. XIII.

SECT. XI. Third Description of the third Period.

CONTENTS.

In this chapter we have a farther account of the state of the church and world, in this third period. The representation of the wild beasts in this vision, refers to the same times with the two former visions, of the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth, and the woman flying into the wilderness. Power is given unto the beast to continue, or to make war, and prevail forty-two months, (ver. 5.)

This vision gives a more distinct account of the manner and means by which the true church and worshippers of God should be persecuted, and so greatly oppressed, as is represented by the woman's flying into the wilderness, and slaying the witnesses. So that this representation, in conjunction with the two former, will afford us a sufficient description of the state of Providence, and the church, with the useful lessons of caution, patience, and faithfulness, in times of great corruption and great danger, which are the principal intentions of the Spirit of prophecy, in the whole of these revelations.

1. AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy.]

(1.) After the two foregoing visions, I beheld a third, farther to explain them: I seemed standing by the sea-side, when I perceived a wild beast rising out of the sea, of a very remarkable form. It had seven heads and ten horns, with a crown on each horn, and a blasphemous inscription on each of his heads, to denote a new form of government, that was to be erected in the city of Rome, by the great commotions of the world, after the imperial power had been destroyed, and the empire should be divided into ten distinct and independent kingdoms or sovereignties. [1]

2. *And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.]

(2.) The form of this wild beast, which I saw in my vision, was made up of some likeness to the several beasts of prey, the leopard, the bear, and the lion; the persecuting empire, in Daniel's vision, being represented by these beasts, famous for strength and rapaciousness, in seizing and devouring their prey. They were a proper figure to signify the rise of a new empire, powerful, tyrannical, and cruel: and that the old serpent, the devil, who had hitherto persecuted the true worshippers of God, by the several great monarchies of the world, would engage this new power, advanced in the seat of the last of these monarchies, the Roman empire, to use that power in the persecution of true religion, as the preceding tyrannies had done before it. [2]

3. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded unto death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast.]

(3.) I perceived also, that one of the seven heads of this beast appeared to have received such a wound as seemed to be mortal; but this mortal wound was healed up, though the scar remained as a mark of it. This cure was so remarkable, as occasioned wonder and astonishment in all who beheld it. To signify, that this new power arose in the Roman empire, after that empire had received such a blow in one of its heads, or forms of government, as left no human probable prospect that Rome should ever rise to power and empire any more; and it would be greatly to the astonishment of the world, to see the power of Rome revive again, in the new form of government represented by the beast. [3]

4. And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?]

(4.) The world was generally seduced to comply with the idolatrous practices the old serpent, the devil, introduced anew, by means of this new-erected power in Rome, the greater part of the world acknowledged this authority, and submitted to it without opposition, as thinking it would be in vain to withstand it. [4]

5. And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.]

(5.) The manner in which the beast exercised the power he had received was thus represented, that he greatly magnified himself above others, and claimed unlimited powers and authority to enforce what he required; and the time wherein the beast was permitted to establish idolatry, was the same with the term of the church's state of persecution, represented by the witnesses, and the woman flying into the wilderness, or forty-two months, equal to twelve hundred and sixty prophetical days, or so many years. [5]

6. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.]

(6.) And this new-erected government of Rome used the authority it had attained, in making and publishing constitutions for the establishment of idolatry, in contempt of God and his true worship, and by all methods of oppression and persecution, forcing the church to comply with them, and yield obedience unto them. [6]

7. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.]

(7.) The power of this new Roman government became so great by Divine permission, that it prevailed against the worshippers of God, either to force them to a compliance with the corruptions established by its authority, or to persecute them for their constancy; and this oppressive power was extended far and wide over many nations and people.

8. And all that dwell on the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.]

(8.) Insomuch, that all the inhabitants of the earth, where this new power reached, were prevailed upon to receive his idolatrous constitutions, and yield obedience to his tyrannical authority; such true and faithful servants of God only excepted, who were enrolled in the registers as heirs of eternal life, according to the promises of Christ's gospel, who, from the beginning, was the true propitiation and mediator of acceptance and blessing. [7]

9. If any man have an ear, let him hear.]

(9.) And now let every good Christian, who is desirous to preserve himself in an hour of temptation, and preserve the hopes of eternal life, attentively consider the cautions, warnings, consolation, and encouragement, of this prophecy.

10. He that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.]

(10.) For every one may be assured, that God, the righteous governor and judge of the world, will finally render to every man according to his works, and punish the enemies of his church in due time, with a punishment equal to their tyranny and persecution. This consideration may support the patience and faith of the saints; they shall triumph in the end over all their enemies, God shall vindicate their cause, and maintain his own honour, in the punishment of their oppressors.

11. And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.]

(11.) I farther beheld in my visions another appearance, as of a second wild beast, rising out of the earth, which had two horns, like the horns of a lamb, but his voice was like that of a dragon, to represent another persecuting government, exercising its authority with a show of meekness and charity, but carrying on the opposition of the devil, the old serpent, to pure religion, and promoting idolatry by persecution.

12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.]

(12.) And this second persecuting power had all the powers of the first or new-revived form of Roman government, and used its authority to spread the power of this new Roman government beyond the bounds of its own proper dominion, so as to oblige the several nations to yield obedience to the new authority revived in the city of Rome, after it had been so long deprived of all authority, and seemed to have lost all hope of recovering it. [8]

13. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men.]

(13.) This persecuting power shall also promote idolatrous worship by pretended miracles, as if, with Elijah, they could cause fire to come down from heaven,* at whose prayer fire from heaven burned the sacrifice, and consumed those whom Ahaziah sent to seize him.† [9]

14. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast, saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had a wound by a sword, and did live.]

(14.) The advantages these pretended miracles had obtained over a great part of the world, by their credulity and superstition, were artfully improved to deceive them yet farther, so far as to persuade them to deify the pope, or erect an idol to his honour; so that they were taught it was their duty to pay a religious obedience, in all things, to his authority and orders, as to God himself, and his word.

15. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.]

(15.) This image whereby the pope was deified, is not to be understood of a lifeless and dumb idol; but, like those statues of the heathen gods, which gave forth oracles, as if animated by an indwelling spirit: so the orders and constitutions of the pope were published to the world by the subordinate clergy, as oracles, obliging all nations to a religious obedience, and supporting their authority with all their power, treating all men as worthy of death, who should refuse an entire submission to them in any particular.

16. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads:]

(16.) The obligation of this entire submission and obedience to the papal decrees was carried so high, that every person, of whatever rank or condition, was to make some public acknowledgment of it, as servants were used to be marked by their masters, or as persons consecrated to some heathen deity were used to mark themselves with some figure, as a badge, denoting the deity to whom they were consecrated.

17. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.]

(17.) It was made so penal, for any to omit this profession of obedience to the papal constitutions, that no man was permitted to buy or sell, but was deprived of all commerce with men, and civil privileges of life, if he did not, some way or other, make this profession. [10]

18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.]

(18.) It will be a considerable point of knowledge, in this mystical description, to find out, by a given number, the name of this beast, so as to know when this idolatrous tyrannical power shall arise; and from thence know what power is meant by this prophetical representation. Now there is a certain number, which, in a way of reckoning usual among men, will teach it; that number is six hundred and sixty-six. [11]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1.] A BEAST, θηρίον, signifies a wild savage beast. In the prophecies of Daniel, beasts are known symbols of the monarchies represented in his visions, (chap. vii.) In the after parts of this prophecy, it is expressly interpreted by an angel to mean a king, kingly authority, or government; And there are seven kings, five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth (king or government), and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition, (xvii. 10, 11.) The horns are, by the same angel, interpreted to mean kings, or kingdoms, (ver. 12.) And the ten horns which thou sawest are (or, signify) ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet (at the time of the vision); but receive power as kings one hour with the beast: μίαν ὥραν, in the same season or time with the beast.

* 1 Kings xviii. 37, 38. † 2 Kings i. 10. 12.

The rising of the beast, then, will signify, the rise of some new dominion or government; the rising of a wild beast, θηρίον, the rise of a tyrannical government; and rising out of the sea, that it should owe its original to the commotions of the people: so waters are interpreted by the same angel, ver. 15. In the visions of Daniel, the four great beasts, the symbols of the four great monarchies, are represented rising out of the sea in a storm: I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea, and four great beasts came up from the sea. (Dan. vii. 2, 3.)

Seven heads are interpreted by the angel to signify seven mountains, and seven kings, (xvii. 9, 10.) Hence, we may sufficiently understand, that by this beast was meant a Roman government, different from that in being at the time of the vision, and which was to arise after the imperial government should be passed away, as five other forms of government had passed before it. That some form of government in the city of Rome is signified by it, seems very evident; for the seven heads are, in one figurative meaning, interpreted to signify seven mountains; and it is expressly called, The great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth, xvii. 18. "Urbs septicollis, orbis caput," and "orbis terrarum domina," are sufficient descriptions of Rome in Roman authors, and as well understood as if Rome itself had been expressly named. Upon the heads of this beast were names or inscriptions of blasphemy. This government is elsewhere described as a mystical Babylon, full of names of blasphemy, xvii. 3—5. to signify, that it should establish and propagate idolatrous doctrines and worship; for as idolatry is a reproachful contempt of the one true God, worshipping and serving the creature more than the Creator, it is called blasphemy in the style of prophecy. The idolatry of the Jews is called, burning incense upon the mountains, and blaspheming upon the hills, Isa. lxv. 7. so the prophet Ezekiel, xx. 27. In this your fathers have blasphemed me; that is, by offering their sacrifices on high places, and in groves, according to the rites of the heathen idolaters.

This beast had also ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, or each of his horns was crowned. According to the interpretation of the angel, xvii. 12. The ten horns which thou sawest are (or, signify) ten kingdoms which have received no kingdom as yet, but receive power one hour (or, in the same hour, at the same time,) with the beast.

This state of Roman government then, as it was to be a new form of government, it was also to be contemporary with ten kings or kingdoms, which were to be so many distinct governments, at the same time and in the same period with it. But neither of them was to receive his power, till the king or form of government then in being, that is, the imperial, should pass away, and another was come, which was to continue a short space.

These several descriptions together, all which must be united in the kingdom of the beast, seem plainly enough to denote a new form of Roman government, after the imperial government should cease, and after the exarchate of Ravenna should be suppressed, when the Roman empire should be divided into ten distinct governments or kingdoms; which can be no other than the government of Rome in the hands of the popes.

[2] Ver. 2.] From hence it appears, says Mr. Waple, that this was the fourth or Roman monarchy (in one form of it), because it is made up of the three former, whose people and nations it conquered, and out of whose ruins it grew; and because it had all the qualities of subtilty and cruelty which are thought to be signified by these beasts. It is observed by Mr. Daubuz, that the powers constituting the beast carried on the same design against true religion, though in another form, as the dragon did, when the empire was pagan. The description itself naturally expresses a new power rising up in the Roman state, mighty and terrible, directed by the perpetual enemy of true religion, to persecute the faithful worshippers of God. The general meaning of this part of the vision, is well expressed by Mr. Mede. I saw, saith St. John, the type of the last state of the Roman empire, wherein, governing under the seventh head, it should be divided into ten kingdoms; and yet, even as he had done under his former heads, he should blaspheme the only true God, by the worship of idols. May we not here observe, that the prophecy speaks of the civil power of Rome? why should we then search after it in an ecclesiastical supremacy?

[3] Ver. 3.] The seven heads being interpreted by the angel to signify seven kings, or forms of government, may well direct us to understand, this deadly wound of one of these heads to be the destruction of one of those forms of government, in such manner as to threaten the utter overthrow of all power in Rome, as in Babylon; so that it should never rise to be the seat of empire again: therefore, they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. (Rev. xvii. 8.) The most natural interpretation of which expressions seems to be, that the world beheld with great wonder, a city once so powerful quite destroyed, for some time ceasing to be an empire, and deprived of all authority, yet rising again to empire, and regaining a great authority, in a very surprising manner. It seems also plain, by comparing this description with the seventeenth chapter, that the head which was mortally wounded, was the sixth head or form of government, at the time of the vision; five of the seven kings are fallen, (says the angel to St. John, ver. 10.) and one is, and the other is not yet come. The form of government in being at the time of the vision was the imperial; and after the imperial government ceased in Augustulus, Rome was no seat of government during the exarchate of Ravenna, and had no human prospect of being the seat of empire again, till this new power arose, when the exarchate was given to the popes, and Rome became the seat of their government, and has continued so ever since. It seems also intended by the angel's interpretation, that we should consider the city of Rome, as marked out in this prophecy for the seat of government, to prevent mistakes, that we should not understand this prophecy of an empire or government, in any other place than the city of Rome, though it should take the name and style of the Roman empire, as the Greek emperors, and the emperors of Germany, have severally done. This may give us a good reason, why the city of Rome, in this prophecy, is described by its natural situation, as well as by its government, and why seven heads are interpreted to mean seven mountains, as well as seven kings.

[4] Ver. 4.] They did freely yield themselves in obedience to the beast, says Mr. Mede, as to one who so far excelled in power, that none was able to make resistance. The admirers of the beast, says Mr. Daubuz, look upon him as superior to all other powers, and therefore obey his commands in committing idolatry; and, in doing this, worship also the beast. For to commit idolatry, through fear of any power, makes that power his God, because master of his conscience: as to worship the beast, in the eastern style, was to be subject to it; so to be subject to it, in its idolatrous constitutions, or exercising the great authority and power which it had received from the dragon, may be said to worship the dragon in worshipping the beast, and yielding obedience to its idolatrous constitutions.

[5] Ver. 5.] The mouth speaking great things, seems to be taken from the description of the little horn in Daniel's vision, vii. 8. and is explained, ver. 11. by the voice of the great words which the horn spake: and yet farther, xi. 36. by the description of a king, who shall do according to his will, and shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods: this mouth, speaking great things, may then well signify claims of unlimited authority, a proud and severe execution of tyrannical power. We may here note, says Mr. Daubuz, that to speak great things and blasphemies, are put together, as the one signifies tyranny, and the other idolatry, if we join both together, they will signify to establish idolatry by tyranny; or, according to Mr. Mede, he exercised his power in two things, in blasphemy against God, and persecution of the saints. Power was given to him (the beast) to continue (in the margin, to make war), in the original, ἐξουσία ποιῆσαι· this seems well explained by a power to do what he pleased; meaning either an authority to make what constitutions he should think fit, or power to put those constitutions into execution, by punishing every one who should refuse obedience to them.*

[6] Ver. 6.] Any acts of idolatrous worship may well be expressed by blaspheming God and his name, as they deny to the true God his distinguishing honour, and give it to creatures, whether to images, saints, or angels. The church, as it is called the temple of God, the place of God's presence, is properly also called his tabernacle; they that dwell in heaven, are understood by Grotius of all saints, all Christians, whose conversation is in heaven. This form of expression seems to be taken from the prophet Daniel, viii. 10. where it is said of the little horn which came up out of one of the four horns of the he-goat, or one of the princes which arose in one of the four kingdoms into which the empire of Alexander the Great was divided, that it waxed great even unto the host of heaven, and it cast down some of the host, and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. On these expressions, Mr. Lowth seems justly to observe, that as the faithful are heirs of the kingdom of heaven, so the names and titles of the heavenly church are sometimes given to that on earth; the Christian church is called, The Jerusalem which is above, Gal. iv. 26. and the governors of it are styled angels, Rev. i. 20. In like manner, the host of heaven means here the Jewish church: they which dwell in heaven, especially when mentioned with the tabernacle of God, may be understood according to the prophetic language of the true church, and worshippers of God. Then to blaspheme them that dwell in heaven, will signify the contempt and injurious manner with which this new government of Rome shall treat the true worshippers of God, as well as God himself, and his name. But as many interpreters of great judgment and learning, Mede, Waple, Daubuz, &c. give another sense of the tabernacle of God, and them that dwell in heaven, it will be fit to set it before the reader. By the tabernacle of God, they understand the body of Christ, which is blasphemed by the doctrine of transubstantiation, and the idolatrous practices consequent thereupon, adoring the bread, instead of Christ the tabernacle of God, and blaspheming the heavenly inhabitants, the angels and saints in heaven, by giving them worship and adoration; and, as Mr. Mede adds, disgracing the blessed spirits with contumelious and wicked fables and miracles. Which of these the reader will prefer, must be left to his own judgment; the former seems to me the more probable, as well as the more natural and easy interpretation.

[7] Ver. 8.] Perseverance in the faith of the gospel and true worship of God, in this great hour of temptation, which would deceive all but the elect, is very usefully represented as the character of those whose names are registered in the Lamb's book of life; to shew, that they who endure to the end, shall be saved; and that the salvation of God, through Christ, belongs to none but those who shall persevere. A powerful motive and encouragement to constancy, the great design of the whole revelation; and which is therefore most properly kept in view, in every part of it. We have already observed, to write names in the book of life, is an allusion either to the registers in which the families of the priests, or freemen of cities, were used to be entered upon record, (iii. 5.)

[8] Ver. 12.] Interpreters differ very much as to the true intention of this prophetic description, and what is meant by this second beast coming up out of the earth.

With some * it signifies philosophy, and, in particular, the Pythagorean, a great support of the Roman idolatry, with its pompous speculations and pretences to divination and miracles.

Others suppose it means some one or more sorcerers, or magicians, who were heathen, and made use of by the devil, to support and advance heathenism and idolatry; so that an author of great name† concludes, it is most reasonable to interpret this second beast of Apollonius Tyanæus, who is reported to have done such feats and miracles, as are compared by Hierocles to the miracles of Christ, and preferred before them.

* Clarke, Connexion of Prophecy, p. 44.

* Meaux, Grotius. † Dr. Hammond.

Others * understand this second beast of the pope with his clergy: they observe, "The pope himself, and alone, though he may be termed a false prophet, yet he maketh not up the beast, except his clergy be joined with him; since the beast doth signify a company of men, composed of a certain order of members, like as a beast hath, not one man alone."

Mr. Whiston's † notion seems much the same with this of Mr. Mede: he understands the second beast, of the rise of antichrist, strictly so called, the pope of Rome, and his subordinate hierarchy.

Mr. Waple ‡ observes, "As by the former beast, the papacy, as monarchic and imperial, was fitly represented; so, in this type, there seems to be a representation of the apostate hierarchy, or of the whole body of the ecclesiastics, as antichristian; and a body politic (signified by a beast in prophecy), under two co-ordinate powers or horns, by which the hierarchy of the eastern and western parts of the empire, before the popes came to be a horn, or to have his antichristian supremacy, is very fitly typified."

Mr. Daubuz supposes "the former wild beast consisted of the antichristian civil powers, which were to be in the Roman empire during the second period of the church, and that the Christian ecclesiastic powers, in the said empire, during the said space of time, are the beast which is here intended; and therefore, that the two horns are the successive lines of the bishops of Rome and Constantinople, having under them the whole body of the corrupted clergy, as the former beast had that of the laity; both these bishops having pretended to be universal bishops of the church."

Finally, The illustrious Sir Isaac Newton § observes, "The second beast which rose up out of the earth was the church of the Greek empire; for it had two horns like those of a lamb, and therefore was a church, and it spake as the dragon, and therefore was of his religion; and it came out of the earth, and by consequence in his kingdom."

To take off somewhat of the uncertainty so great a variety of opinions is apt to occasion, let us attend more closely to the prophetic description itself: it will, I apprehend, lessen the number of opinions, to shew some of them inconsistent with plain and obvious circumstances of the prophetic description.

It is an observation of consequence, that the vision of this second wild beast, arising out of the earth, was after the vision of the first beast which rose out of the sea, and cannot signify any power to arise in the Roman empire before that time.

This second beast, moreover, exercised the power of the first beast before him, as a sort of lieutenant or deputy to him; in particular, to bring all persons, where his power reached, to receive the authority of the first beast, to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed, says the prophecy expressly. So that this description is inconsistent with any power opposite to the authority of the first beast, as well as it is with any power that rose up before it.

It seems also very probable, that this second beast, whatever is meant by it, had a power and authority very like the power and authority of the first beast, and very nearly resembling it: he exerciseth all the power of the first beast, ἐξουσίαν τοῦ πρώτου θηρίου πᾶσαν ποιεῖ. He had the exercise of the whole power; so that of what nature or kind the authority and power of the first beast were, the authority and power of the second beast were of the same kind. Hence this description will be also inconsistent with any supposition that makes the authority and power of the second beast contrary to, or different from, the power of the first.

We have already observed, from many concurring circumstances, that the first beast did not arise till the imperial government had passed away; till Rome seemed to have lost irrecoverably the seat of empire; till the Roman empire was divided into ten kingdoms; till the city of Rome should receive a new form of government, and become a seat of empire again; till a government should be erected in the city of Rome, in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, which was to persecute the saints one thousand two hundred and sixty years. All these considerations determine the rise of the first beast out of the sea to be, when the exarchate of Ravenna was given to the papacy, when Rome was made the seat of the pope's temporal dominion, and the last form of Roman government began, which has lasted ever since to this day.

We fully know in history what this power of the papacy is: the popes claim supreme authority, as heads of the church in things religious, and they have civil authority, as sovereign princes, in their own dominion, which is expressively called, The patrimony of St. Peter.

This plain account of the prophetic description, will much lessen, I think, the variety of opinions before mentioned; not to remark, that the philosophy, or magic, of Apollonius Tyanæus, is no form of government, which is the true meaning of beasts and horns, in the language of the prophets. It may be sufficient to shew, that the philosophy of the bishop of Meaux, that the magic and miracles of Apollonius Tyanæus, with the learned Grotius and Dr. Hammond, are absolutely inconsistent with the time of this period, wherein the first beast rose up out of the sea, which yet was before the time when this second beast rose up out of the earth; neither will the prophetic description, for the same reason, agree with Mr. Waple's opinion, that this second beast means the hierarchy of the eastern and western parts of the empire, before the pope came to be a horn, or to have his antichristian supremacy. The same reason holds against Mr. Daubuz's opinion, that the first beast consisted of the antichristian civil powers; and the second beast of the antichristian ecclesiastical powers, especially as he understands it, that, from the times of Leo, there was in the church a double ecclesiastical monarchy of two bishops œcumenical, who pretended to have all the power of the Lamb. For this dispute between the two sees of Rome and Constantinople, was long before the city of Rome became the seat of empire in the papacy; nor can a contest for power between the two metropolitans of the eastern and western empire, be well understood of the power of the second beast, which was to exercise all the power of the first beast; not to weaken or suppress it, but to promote the power of the first beast, and to force all persons to submit themselves to it. And this observation is also a considerable difficulty in Sir Isaac Newton's opinion, that this second beast was the church of the Greek empire. We may observe, that to place the rise of the two beasts, at the division of the empire between Gratian and

* Mede. † P. 242. ‡ P. 288. § P. 283.

Theodosius, A. D. 379.* greatly antedates the true time of the last form of Roman government, and throws back the third period very far into the second, contrary to the order of the prophecy. It is farther to be observed, that the Greek church was so far from using its power and authority, to force all persons to submit to the papacy, that it was used in continual opposition to the authority of the Roman church; it not only denied the pope's supremacy, but separated also, with great warmth, from its communion: and the Roman church is so far from esteeming the Greek church as a friend, that it treats it as an apostate church, in a state of schism and rebellion.

Finally, Mr. Mede's opinion, that the second beast is the pope with his clergy, has many difficulties attending it. The first beast is represented as distinct from the second, and from the ten kings or kingdoms, though they give their power and strength to the beast; and therefore cannot well be the whole state of the ten kingdoms growing up again into one Roman commonwealth, united with the pope as high-priest. Besides, if the power of the pope in Rome be the first beast, the same papal power can hardly be intended, with very little alteration, by the second beast. It must, in all likelihood, signify some distinct persecuting power, of like nature and kind with the first, supporting and advancing the authority of the first. Perhaps it may be said, these observations, by lessening the uncertainty occasioned by so many different interpretations, may make the matter worse, and leave no certain interpretation at all.

I hope not. Let us see, then, whether we cannot find out, what will answer this prophetic description in all its circumstances.

We are then to find out a power, which is to arise after the first beast, in which a supremacy in spirituals was united with the authority of a temporal prince, in the popes.

We are, moreover, to find out a power, like that of the papal government, which is to execute all the power of the first beast; which seems to express a like power, in which civil and religious authority shall be united.

We are also to find out such a power, as shall be used to support and advance the authority of the popes, and force obedience to it.

We need not look far in history, I think, to find a power that fully answers all these characters.

We have seen at large in the preface, how Pepin of France gave the exarchate of Ravenna to the church of Rome: this was the rise of the first beast, in the temporal dominion of the popes over Rome, and the countries that compose the state of the church, as St. Peter's patrimony.

A little after this time, the emperor Charles the Great, and his successors, endowed several churches in their states, with large temporal estates, to which were annexed the jurisdictions and royalties which, in those times, were used to belong to the most honourable tenures, such as earldoms, dutchies, and principalities; whereby they had a temporal authority added to their spiritual, very nearly resembling that of the church of Rome, in virtue of St. Peter's patrimony.

These powers went on still increasing, till, in some short process of time, especially in the Germanic empire, they became to be real principalities. Several bishops of Germany have been, for many centuries, in the rank, and have enjoyed the full powers and authority of sovereign princes; some have attained the highest dignity, and chief administration of the empire, as electors, in all things equal, in some things superior, in dignity and authority, to the other princes of the empire, not excepting such electors of the empire as are kings. This has been long the fixed and settled constitution of that principal government of Europe, which now uses the style of the sacred Roman empire.

It is easy to see, how nearly this authority resembles the powers of the papacy, or first beast; and it is easy to observe, in the constant course of history, that this authority has been used all along, to cause the earth, and them that dwell therein, to worship the first beast, or to obey his commands in all things. By this it is, that popes have had the power, as well as the insolence, to tread on the necks of kings and emperors. And it has been the great support of the idolatrous worship of that church, against all the powerful and promising attempts of reformation.

It is a just remark of Bishop Burnet,* that this appeared so early as the days of Charles the Great himself. "He had raised the church so high, and given it such dominions, and had, by so many repeated laws, established their jurisdiction and temporalities, that it was not perhaps in his power, chiefly in his old age, when the vigour and heat of his spirits had failed, to rectify what was amiss."

To this, I think, all the other parts of this prophetic description will agree, as we shall more fully see hereafter. Nor does it much differ from the opinions of Mr. Mede, Waple, Whiston, and Daubuz. It supposes this description to mean the same body of men, the clergy, subordinate to the pope, promoting his power and authority; it only takes in a point of view, and period of time, more agreeable to the order and circumstances of the prophetic description.

[9] Ver. 13.] The idolatry of the church of Rome has been greatly supported by a pretence to miracles, though the most of them have plain marks of falsehood and imposture; yet the Roman church is so fond of a pretence to miracles, that it has made it one of the marks of the true church, and has persuaded the credulous, ignorant, and superstitious, to believe it, who are always the larger number of mankind.

[10] Ver. 17.] Many learned men have thought these expressions relate to the manner in which Ptolemy Philopater persecuted the Jews; "He forbade any to enter into his palace, who did not sacrifice to the gods he worshipped: whereby he excluded the Jews all access to him, either for the suing to him for justice, or the obtaining of his protection, in what case soever they should stand in need of it." He ordered, by another decree, "That all of the Jewish nation that lived in Alexandria should be degraded from the first rank of citizens, of which they had always hitherto been from the first founding of the city, and be enrolled in the third rank, among the common people of Egypt; that all of them should come thus to be enrolled, and at the time of their enrolment, have the mark of an ivy-leaf, the badge of the god Bacchus, by a hot iron, impressed upon them; and that all those who should refuse to be thus enrolled, and be stigmatized with the said mark, should be made slaves; and that if any of them should stand out against this decree, he should be put to death." Thus the history is related by Dr. Prideaux,* from the third book of the Maccabees.

* Sir I. Newton, p. 282.

* Rights of Princes, p. 135.

[11] Ver. 18.] The number six hundred and sixty-six, is given as a number by which the name of the beast may be found out. The number is designed to have some sort of secrecy in it. The number itself is the same in all the places of units, tens, and hundreds, 666. This some have observed as a part of the mystery; but they should have observed, that though this is true in the English way of numeration, the original does not use three figures, but three different letters of the Greek alphabet, χ ξ ϛ. Prophetic numbers will often require some skill in calculation; to find out, for instance, when days are to be taken for years, or from what time any particular calculation is to take its date.

In the application of this number, some wisdom will be required; perhaps it will principally lie, in finding out after what manner the calculation is to be made. The exhortation, Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, seems to intimate, that if men hit on the right way of counting or calculating, they will find the meaning of it; for it is the number of a man, a way in which men are used to number, says Mr. Waple, as, the measure of a man, is a measure in use among men: (Rev. xxi. 17.) and, to write with a man's pen, is to write with such a pen, and with such characters, as are in use among men. (Isa. viii. 1.)

The great authority of Irenæus, who wrote so near the time, within less than a hundred years of the Revelation itself, and whose master Polycarp was a disciple of St. John, gave great weight to his opinion. Many have taken his manner of counting for granted, that it must be some name, the letters of which will make the number six hundred and sixty-six. And many have been satisfied in the name he proposes to answer this number, which is the Greek word Λατεινος.

There had been more reason to follow Irenæus, had Irenæus himself been fully satisfied in his own interpretation.

It is justly observed by the bishop of Meaux,† that Irenæus does not propose his opinion with any authority, as an interpretation coming from St. John, but as a conjecture of his own. Farther, Irenæus mentions two other names, as answering this number, besides Lateinos; Euanthas and Teitan. He expressly adds, that he is not positive in that matter; and gives this reason for it, if it had been necessary to know the name exactly, St. John would himself have revealed it more clearly. "Nec asseverantes pronunciabimus, hoc eum nomen habiturum, scientes quoniam, si oporteret manifeste presenti tempore præconari nomen ejus, per ipsum utique editum fuisset, qui et Apocalypsim viderat, neque enim ante multum temporis visum est, sed pæne sub nostro seculo, ad finem Domitiani imperii." Thus expressly does Irenæus‡ himself declare, that he delivers his opinion only as a conjecture of his own, and that he knew no particular interpretation of it from St. John.

This number has been found out in so many other names, that this way of reckoning may seem at least very uncertain. The bishop of Meaux finds the number six hundred and sixty-six, in the word DIoCLes AVgVstVs; Grotius in the word ΟΥΛΠΙΟΣ, Ulpius, the name of Trajan; Mr. Daubuz finds it in the Hebrew word רומיית, or Roman; and, besides many other names, F. Feuardentius* mentions, in his annotations on this passage of Irenæus, he finds the number six hundred and sixty-six, in the name of Martin Lauter, which, he says, was the original way of spelling the name of Luther. He farther finds the same number in the word Moametis, as he chooses to spell the name of Mohammed. Many more instances may be seen in Calmet.†

Every one may be sensible, with Irenæus,‡ there is much uncertainty in this way of reckoning; it is with him, "suspicari et divinare nomina, quando multa nomina inveniri possunt, habentia prædictum numerum." And this makes him so cautious, not to appear positive in delivering his own opinion.

Many learned persons have thought, that this way of counting the number of the beast, is not the true secret of calculation. They observe another method of calculation used in this prophecy. One hundred and forty-four thousand is the mystical number of Christ's kingdom, or the true church. It is agreed by interpreters, this number is a square number, raised from twelve as the root; for twelve, multiplied by itself, gives one hundred and forty-four. Twelve is a remarkable number in the Christian church, on account of the twelve apostles, on whose doctrines the faith and worship of the church is built: as it was a remarkable number in the Jewish church, on account of the twelve patriarchs, heads of the twelve tribes of Israel; and as the twenty-four elders seem to be these two numbers added together. Mr. Potter, therefore, and many who follow him, think this number of the beast ought to be calculated in like manner. They observe, this number of the kingdom of antichrist, is to be raised from the number twenty-five, which is not an exact square root, but gives six hundred and twenty-five, near enough to six hundred and sixty-six, which is not a precise square number. They farther observe, that twenty-five is a very remarkable number in the antichristian Roman state, describing the papacy in many of its most essential parts. The particulars of which may be seen at large in Mr. Potter's discourse, and in other authors from him. But this way of calculation is not without its difficulties and uncertainty, any more than the former.

May there not be another method of calculation, more natural and easy than either of the forementioned? A number, that shall shew the time of his becoming the beast, to use Mr. Waple's words? The learned Grotius seems to have had such a method of counting this number in his view, when he explains the words of the prophecy, by the time when idolatry shall revive, and recover strength: "Qui sapit, notet tempus idololatriæ, animos et vires resumentis; ubi id evenerit, apparebit Christi præscientia."

The number six hundred and sixty-six may then be a number, which, counted from a given period in prophecy, may very nearly point out the time when this wild beast shall arise, or when the forty-two months are to begin; in which period, power was given him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them. Thus, the years in Daniel were to be computed from the going forth of the commandment, (Dan. ix. 25.) and the time of the coming of the Messiah was to be learned from that calculation.

If we thus compute the number six hundred and sixty-six, from the time of this prophetic vision, we shall find it falls in exactly enough with the time wherein the papacy received the temporal power, and became the beast, or was constituted the last government of Rome, which is a principal character of the beast in this prophecy.

This new government of Rome was erected, A. D. 756. taking the general received opinion, that the time of this Revelation was about A. D. 94. counting six hundred and sixty-six years from that date, will be A. D. 760. within four years of the time wherein the beast is supposed to rise. And this small difference will be easily accounted for, either by allowing some small uncertainty as to the time of vision, or some small variation from the precise year, for the sake of making the number just six hundred and sixty-six, which has more of the air of a prophetical number than six hundred and sixty-two. Possibly this number may reach four years beyond the investiture, to take in the full and actual possession of what was granted to the church, as St. Peter's patrimony.

This way of counting is sufficiently certain to determine who the beast is, as it points out the time when he was to receive his power, with such certainty, that it cannot be mistaken, with as much certainty as Daniel's weeks pointed out the time of the coming of the Messiah.

And it is a considerable part of knowledge in this prophecy, and would have prevented many mistakes, into which many good and learned men have fallen, with respect to the time when the power of the beast was to begin, and by consequence when it was to end, to have observed, that this number was to be a period of years, from the time of the vision, before which the beast was not to receive his power; and that from the end of that period, he was to continue one thousand two hundred and sixty years.

Nor ought this method of calculation to be set aside, as new and singular; Grotius, we have already seen, seems to have had it in his thoughts. The very learned and industrious Calmet takes notice of this way of computation expressly, that some have thought the number of the beast does not signify the cipher of the beast, but the time when he was to appear. "Que le nombre de 666 ne marquoit pas ici le chiffre de la bete, mais le tems auque elle devoit paroitre." *

SECT. XII. HISTORY OF THE THIRD PERIOD.

THE three foregoing chapters, xi. xii. xiii. are a prophetic description of the third period: they represent the state of providence, and the church, in so many views, in which so many particulars are to concur, that if they shall be found to answer exactly, in time and circumstances, to real historical facts, it will add great weight to the prophecy, to the directions, exhortations, and encouragements, designed by it, to faithfulness and constancy in the Christian faith and worship, to patience in persecution, to hope and trust in the care and power of God, who will assuredly make good all his promises, and encourage us to consider all the prophecies of this book as such.

The prophetic description of this period is the largest and most particular of any, and points out the time when it is to begin, and when it is to end, with greater exactness. The state of the church in this period is agreeable, in general, to the representation of the church in the foregoing periods; a state of danger and persecution, from the enemies of truth and righteousness, under the influence of Satan, endeavouring to deceive the world, and to corrupt it by idolatrous doctrines and worship.

It is represented as a state wherein the number of faithful confessors shall be few, yet enough to bear testimony to the truth, and preserve it, though they shall be persecuted unto death for their testimony, which yet shall continue twelve hundred and sixty years, in spite of all endeavours to suppress it; and, in that space of time, the providence of God shall often appear to vindicate their cause, by severe and heavy judgments on their enemies: and this afflicted state of the church shall end at the last, in victory, peace, and happiness.

The church is farther represented in this period in a state of danger, like the Israelites in the wilderness, or like the prophet Elijah in the persecution of Ahab; that it will have no safety but in places of secrecy and retirement; or, as David was forced to fly for refuge to the wilderness, from the persecution of Saul, so the woman flies into the wilderness from the dragon, who was ready to devour her. In this retirement, the church shall be preserved; so that no attempts of error to corrupt it, or of persecution to destroy it, shall prevail against it. But the prophetic description of this period is most particular, in the account it gives of the means by which the church, in this period, shall be brought into such danger, and the faithful confessors of truth be so oppressed and persecuted.

It describes therefore in this period the rise of a new idolatrous and persecuting power; it describes it by so many and so particular circumstances, as distinctly shew the time when it is to arise, the place where it is to have its seat of empire, the manner in which it shall use its authority, and how long it shall continue; and these are, on many accounts, so uncommon and extraordinary, that nothing but a true Spirit of prophecy could foresee or foretell: for it represents this new idolatrous persecuting power in these remarkable particulars. It is a new government or dominion, arising out of the commotions occasioned by the invasion of the Roman empire.

It was a new government to arise after the imperial government had ceased, and Rome had been under another form of government, which was to continue for a short time.

It was a new government to arise, after the Roman empire was cantoned and divided into several distinct kingdoms, or into ten independent royalties and dominions. It was a dominion to be erected in the city of Rome, so as to make the city founded on seven hills, and once mistress of the world, a seat of empire again in this new government. It was to be a new dominion arising in Rome, at a time when all human views represented the power of Rome so totally subverted, as not to allow any hope of its recovery.

It was to be a government resembling the former Roman empire, in propagating idolatrous doctrines and worship, in opposing the truth, and oppressing all who should make profession of it.

The power and authority of this new Roman government were to be supported, and extended by another power like unto it in nature and kind, by pretended miracles and wonders, and, by outward force, obliging all people to submit to the authority of this new-erected empire in the city of Rome. This new dominion is to continue the persecution of the true church for the space of twelve hundred and sixty years.

And it is a government, which they, who have wisdom in the calculation of numbers, according to the usage of Scripture-prophecy, may find out by the number 666.

These several particulars appear in the description itself, as we have seen in the foregoing explanation of it.

Are there then any real historical facts, that answer to all these various and circumstantial descriptions of prophecy? if there are, they will greatly confirm the truth of the revelation, and should awaken our attention to the design and meaning of it.

The two former periods ended two states of danger to the Christian church; the first, from the opposition of the heathen Roman emperors, by the conversion of Constantine, about A. D. 322. The second danger was from the heathen northern nations who invaded the Roman empire, but who were converted to Christianity themselves, and received it in their several dominions; and from a greater danger, by the surprising progress of the Mahometans, from which this western part of the world was delivered, by that memorable battle in which Charles Martel defeated their numerous army, and slew three hundred and fifty thousand of them, A. D. 734.

About this time, several of the characters of the first beast which rose out of the sea exactly fall in together.

This is a period of time, when the imperial government of Rome entirely passed away. Momyllus, or Augustulus, the last of the Roman emperors, was deposed, and the kingdom of the Goths was established in Italy, the exarchate of Ravenna had taken from Rome all show of authority, and Rome had been governed, for some time, as a small dutchy, in all things subject to it, as a parcel of the exarchate. This seemed a mortal wound to the city of Rome; so that when the exarchate was conquered by the Lombards, A. D. 752. Aistulphus claimed Rome, as belonging to the exarchate.

At this time, the Roman empire was cantoned out,* and divided into many separate and independent kingdoms; so that the ten kingdoms, in the prophetic description, were ready to support this new dominion of Rome with their power.

About this time, the exarchate of Ravenna, which, for some years, kept up a show of Roman government in Italy, under the lieutenants of the Greek empire, was subdued by the kingdom of the Lombards, and that form of government was never revived again.

These very remarkable circumstances, which were all to fall in together at this time, appear to agree very well with the known truth of history.

And if we calculate the number 666. from the year 94. the time of the vision, it falls in with the time in which the order of the prophecies directs us to place the beginning of this period.

But let us proceed, and farther consider some extraordinary events, which happened at the same time, and which answer to the most particular circumstances of the prophetic description.

We find in history, that the exarchate of Ravenna was conquered by Aistulphus king of the Lombards, A. D. 752. Upon this conquest, he claims Rome as a part of it, marches to besiege the city; and Rome, which had been so long in subjection to the exarchate, was, in all human probability, like to remain in subjection to the kingdom of the Lombards: nor was there any reasonable prospect of defending itself, or preserving its own liberty, much less of rising to empire and dominion.

But the pope, who had lately obliged Pepin of France,* flies to him for protection.

Pepin undertakes to support the pope, enters Italy, forces Aistulphus not only to quit all claim to the city of Rome, but to give up the exarchate of Ravenna to Rome; which, after some contest, was solemnly ratified, A. D. 756.

Thus Rome acquired a new state and dominion, in this new patrimony of St. Peter, of which Rome became the seat and capital; and thus, contrary to all expectation, a new form of Roman government arose, which has continued now for near a thousand years: so that this new unexpected government of Rome has already continued longer than any preceding form of government whatever, and has continued in this extraordinary form of government, without any alteration, when the several kingdoms of Europe, especially the several states of Italy, have often changed their masters, and altered even the very forms and constitutions of their government.

That this new Roman government has proved a persecuting power, promoting idolatrous doctrines and worship, will appear, with the plainest evidence, from history.

About this time, superstition was running fast into idolatry; the worship of images, the most common act of heathen idolatry, though expressly forbid by the second commandment, began to be received among Christians. The emperor Leo endeavoured to put a stop to it in the eastern empire; he appointed, by an edict in the year 730. to take all images out of the churches, and burnt them, says Du Pin:† an author whom I the rather choose to use in this historical account, because of his religion as a papist, that his testimony may be freer from all suspicion.

His son Constantine Copronimus followed his father's example, called a council at Constantinople, A. D. 754. of three hundred and thirty-eight bishops, who made a decree against the worship of images. This council, says Du Pin, was not received in the church of Rome, but the emperor ordered his decree to be executed in all parts of the east.

When Irene became mistress of the eastern empire, she resolved upon a new council at Nice, to which she invited pope Adrian, about the year 787. The pope's legates had the first place; Tarasius, patriarch of Constantinople, the second; and the deputies of the bishops of the east, the third. The letters of pope Adrian were read, approving of the worship of images. The council proceeded to decree, that the images of Jesus Christ, the holy Virgin, angels, and saints, were to be placed in churches, to renew their memory, and express the veneration men have for them; and to salute, honour, and worship them, but not with that adoration which is peculiar to the Divine nature.*

* Vid. Preface.

* Vid. Pref. † Hist. de l'Eglise, viii Siecle, vol. ii. p. 540.

Thus ready and zealous were the popes to promote the worship of images: as soon as the acts of the council were brought to Rome, the pope sent extracts of them to France; Charles, then king of France, caused the extracts to be examined by the bishops of his kingdom; they composed a treatise, which was published in the name of Charles the Great, against the decision of the council at Nice; Charles sent this treatise to Rome, and presented it to pope Adrian by Engilbert; but the pope returned an answer, in which he maintained the decrees of the council of Nice.

The authority of the pope could not however carry his point in France, at that time :† a council was held at Frankfort, in the year 794. in which the worship of images was debated, and the council condemned all sort of adoration or worship of images. France and Germany continued long to follow this council of Frankfort, in opposition to the council of Nice, and authority of the pope.‡

It may be of use to remark this opposition to the worship of images, at the beginning of it, for two reasons; the one, to shew that it was all along supported by the authority of the pope, and at length established by their power. The other, to shew in this memorable instance, that the earth helped the woman; the western princes opposed themselves to the pope's authority, gave time and opportunity to the church to confirm the faithful worshippers of God, against this dangerous idolatry, which has been so much increased since, and so fully established by the popes in the councils of Lateran and Trent.

The council of Lateran confirmed the doctrine of transubstantiation, after it had been long contested and opposed in the church. "Verum Christi corpus et sanguis, in sacramento altaris, sub speciebus panis et vini veraciter continentur, transubstantiatis, panc in corpus, et vino in sanguinem, potestate divina."§

This doctrine being thus settled, the proper adoration of the sacrament of the altar was an easy consequence. The council of Trent therefore, over and above the adoration of images and invocation of saints, expressly requires the same adoration of the consecrated elements, as are due to the supreme God himself. "Nullus itaque dubitandi locus relinquitur, quin omnes Christi fideles, pro more in catholica ecclesia semper recepto, Latriæ cultum, qui vero Deo debetur, huic sanctissimo sacramento in veneratione exhibeant . . . . . Nam illum eundem Deum, præsentem in eo adesse credimus, quem Pater æternus introducens in orbem terrarum, dicit, Et adorent eum omnes angeli Dei."‖

Innumerable instances of history will farther shew, how far this new Roman power has supported idolatry by persecution; which is a principal part of the prophetic description. They have not only practised persecution on many occasions, but they have given it the solemn sanction of general councils. By the council of Lateran, all are declared heretics who oppose their decisions, which they call, The holy, orthodox, and catholic faith; of which the doctrine of transubstantiation and the worship of the bread and wine were declared a part. They excommunicate and anathematize all whom they have thus made heretics. Thus condemned, they are given over to the secular powers to be punished: and all the civil powers are obliged to take an oath, on pain of ecclesiastical censures, that they will endeavour to exterminate all who are declared heretics by the church, out of their dominions; and if any civil power shall refuse to do so, after admonition, it shall be certified to the pope, who shall declare all his subjects absolved from their allegiance; and declare, it is free for any catholic to seize his dominions, and exterminate the heretics, to preserve it in the purity of the truth. "Si vero dominus temporalis, requisitus et monitus ab ecclesia, forsan suam purgare neglexerit ab hac hæretica fœditate, per metropolitanum et comprovinciales episcopos, excommunicationis vinculo innodetur: et si satisfacere contempserit intra annum, significetur hoc summo Pontifici, ut ex tunc, ipse vassallos ab ejus fidelitate denunciat absolutos, et terram exponat catholicis occupandam; qui eam, exterminatis hæreticis, sine ulla contradictione possideant, et in fidei puritate conservent." *

We have a remarkable instance how this decree has been executed, in the case of the count of Thoulouse, for not suppressing the Albigenses in his dominions: an army of cross-bearers was raised against him by the pope's means: it consisted, according to Mezeray,† of five hundred thousand persons (though, he supposes, not all soldiers), among which were five or six bishops. They took the town of Beziers, and put all to the sword, to the number of sixty thousand persons; pursuing the war with like cruelty and fury in many other places. And Montfort, the general of this holy war, was rewarded with the greatest part of the count of Thoulouse's dominions; having deposed him, as a favourer of heretics, he was, for his good service, declared lord of all the countries he had conquered.

Immediately after this famous decree of a general council for persecution, and as a comment upon it, the Inquisition began: ‡ Dominick was made first inquisitor by pope Innocent III. This holy office, in the style of the Roman court, has improved the methods of persecution far beyond what was known in the days of ancient Babylon and Rome, and has long been the most dreadful and barbarous tribunal the world ever saw, for all ensnaring arts of injustice in persecution, all inhuman severity and cruelty in punishment; as is evidently proved at large, in Limborch's History of the Inquisition.

To shew, in one instance more, how exactly this persecuting power answers every particular of the prophetic description, I shall just mention the bull of pope Martin V. which directs the persecution of the followers of Wickliffe, John Huss, and Jerome of Prague. "We will and command, that, by this our authority apostolical, ye exhort and admonish all the professors of the catholic faith, as emperors, kings, dukes, princes, &c. that they expel out of their kingdoms, provinces, cities, towns, &c. all and all manner of heretics, according to the effect and tenor of the council of Lateran. . . . That they suffer none such within their shires or circuits, to preach, or to keep either house or family, either yet to use any handicraft or occupation, or other trades of merchandise, or else to solace themselves any ways, or frequent the company of Christian men. And furthermore, if such public and known heretics shall chance to die (although not so denounced by the church), yet in this so great a crime, let him and them want Christian burial. . . . The residue let the foresaid temporal lords, &c. take amongst them, with condign deaths, without any delay to punish." * They are enjoined to punish heretics with condign death; that is, they were to commit them to the flames, and burn them.

It is moreover to be observed, as a farther agreement with the prophetical description, that this tyrannical power, supporting idolatrous doctrines and worship by persecution, was greatly assisted by another like power, in which, as in the papacy, both spiritual and temporal authority were united.

Many bishops, especially the bishops of Germany, had large temporal dominions bestowed upon them, in which they have regal and sovereign authority; they receive homage, and an oath of fealty, from their subjects; they have the supreme power of the sword, both in the punishment of their subjects, and in making war; they coin money, levy taxes, make treaties with the other states of the empire, and with foreign princes; and have all the rights of sovereignty, in as full manner as any of the secular electors or princes of the empire.

A very great part of Germany is thus in the hands of ecclesiastical persons, with temporal jurisdiction. It has been observed, that in about seventy years, from A. D. 936. to 1002. the three Othos, who succeeded each other in the empire, gave two-thirds of the estates of Germany to ecclesiastics; as Heiss,† a Roman catholic historian, informs us. "On remarque meme, que son grand pere, son pere, et lui, ont donné aux ecclesiastiques les deux tiers des biens d'Allemagn."

These ecclesiastical princes of Germany, notwithstanding their temporal sovereignty, have great dependance on the popes; they are obliged to send immediately to Rome, for a confirmation of their elections; and to omit it, is a reason sufficient for the popes to set aside their election as defective; and to take care of the church, or present to it, in case they should find their elections uncanonical.‡

Besides their dependance upon the popes, their interests were so mutually linked together, that they supported them as one common interest with all their joint powers. It would be tedious to enter into a detail of particular instances; I shall only mention one, in the warm contest between the popes and emperors, about investitures.

Hildebrand, a man of business and intrigue, of a bold and pushing temper, was chosen pope about A. D. 1073. by the name of Gregory VII. He resolved to wrest out of the hands of the emperors the investiture of bishops, a power they had long been possessed of, to nominate the bishops in their dominions, and put them into the possession of their bishopricks and estates. The pope resolved to take this power from the emperors, as a thing unjust and sacrilegious; but the true motive, as Mezeray § honestly observes, was a design upon the empire of Italy, and to subject all princes to the power of the papacy. "Son vray motif estoit, le desir de l'empire d'Italie, et d'asservir tous les princes sous la puissance pontificale."

The quarrel between the pope and Henry IV. then emperor, ran so high, that the pope excommunicated and deposed him; and procured Rodolf, duke of Burgundy and Swevia, to be chosen emperor in his place. Many of the ecclesiastical princes, with Sigifrid, archbishop of Mentz, at the head of them, abjured Henry, took up arms against him, and vowed perpetual enmity. Thus an historian of great reputation: * "Atque hi omnes quos memoravimus, ad Saxones sine cunctatione, deserta Cæsaris optimatiumque causa, deficiunt. Ad prætextum mutatæ voluntatis religionem obtendunt, Henricum communi concilio abjurant, se perpetuo ejus fore hostes, quoad vita suppetet, jurejurando sanciunt; postea arma capessunt, Cæsari insidiantur; ejus rebus studentes oppugnant; insontes, et qui neutri parti favebant, qui fidem regi servabant, rebellare recusabant, pacem et otium bello præferebant, armis se commiscere abnuebant,—Simoniaci, Nicolaitæ, hæretici appellabantur, proscribuntur, in sceleratorum numero habentur, aris, sacris, convivio, colloquio, suppliciis, a conspectu conjuratorum arcentur." So zealous were they to cause all, both small and great, to submit to the decrees and authority of the pope.

After the death of Rodolf, the legate of the pope, then Pascal II. excommunicates the emperor again; upon which the diet deposed the emperor, and chose his son Henry (whom they had prevailed upon to rebel against his own father, and assist in dethroning him) for emperor in his room. The archbishops of Mentz and Cologne were deputed,† with the bishop of Worms, to take the crown and imperial ornaments from the emperor; which they executed accordingly. Sigonius himself, a very zealous papist, thus reports it: "Henricum mox, Moguntinus, Coloniensis, et Wormaciensis, antistites, a conventu missi, adierunt, eumque nomine omnium imperatoria insignia sibi reddere imperarunt, quibus filium ejus inducrent." Then alleging some crimes against the church, in his appointment of bishops, said to be committed by him, they added, "Ob has res, pontifici et principibus Germaniæ placuit, te non piorum communione solum, sed regni possessione etiam, deturbare." ‡

Henry V. having thus usurped his father's empire, was very careful at first to please the court of Rome, and favour the ecclesiastical states in all things; but, in some time, considering, that the papal party only made use of him for their own ends, resolved to stand up for the honour and authority of the empire. The quarrel grew warm between him and pope Pascal.§ The emperor enters Rome, takes the pope prisoner, with several cardinals. The pope, in this distress, consents to yield the investitures, in great measure, to the emperor; and, together with the sixteen cardinals, confirmed it by oath on the evangelists. The pope kept up appearances outwardly, but secretly managed by his legates to break his engagements. Hereupon, the better part of the ecclesiastical princes of the empire would not receive the agreement. Albert, who had been the emperor's chancellor, and whom he had lately made archbishop of Mentz, moved by the pope's legates, who every where stirred up the bishops to arms against the emperor, as a person excommunicate, carried on such intrigues in the following diets of the empire, that they decreed, the pope had a right to revoke his agreement in a council.*

The pope accordingly assembled a council at Lateran, A. D. 1112. which burned the agreement between the pope and emperor, and excommunicated the emperor. Upon which the archbishops, bishops, prelates, and chapters, resolved to maintain themselves, in disposing their vacant benefices, by their own election, without any regard to the emperor.† Albert, or Adelbert, archbishop of Mentz, formed a powerful league against the emperor. "Hæc autem ubi trans Alpes perlata sunt (the decrees of the Lateran council) archiepiscopus Viennensis grave in Henricum anathema explicuit, et Moguntinus, cum quibusdam principibus, apertam contra eundem conjurationem inivit."‡

The infidelity of the archbishop of Mentz, against his former master and benefactor (as Heiss § himself, a Roman catholic, observes), was carried on under pretence of the interest of the church, and was supported by the intrigues of Rome; and proceeded so far, that armies on both sides took the field, and were near an engagement: when, to avoid the effusion of blood, and mischiefs of civil war, the emperor was forced to submit to the decision of another council at Rome. This council was held at Lateran, A. D. 1122. and, as was to be expected from such a method of deciding a question between the emperor and pope, it was decided for the pope, in favour of the ecclesiastical elections, and against the emperor's right of nomination and investiture.

Thus this great contested point was gained by the popes: in obtaining which, the ecclesiastical princes of the empire exercised the power of the ecclesiastical prince of Rome before him; and caused the earth, and them that dwell therein, to worship him, and submit themselves to his authority.

There are two other considerable parts of the prophetical description, the historical accomplishment of which we are also to inquire after. They are the two witnesses, and the woman flying into the wilderness.

Several learned persons have shewn, at large, a continual succession of faithful witnesses to the truth of the Christian faith, and who have bore testimony against the usurped authority of the popes, their idolatrous doctrines and worship, which are the main points of the antichristian apostacy.

A very great part of the church, from the beginning, opposed the worship of images: the council of Frankfort solemnly declared against all manner of adoration. "On condemna toute sorte d'adoration, ou de culte des images."‖

In every after age, some persons appeared in opposition to the idolatrous principles and practices countenanced in the church of Rome, and against the tyrannical persecuting power used in support of them.

In the following age, between the years 800. and 900. Claude Clement, bishop of Turin, a disciple of Felix Urgel, opposed not only the worship of images, but all religious use of them. And though Jonas, bishop of Orleans, and others, wrote against Claude, as carrying the point too far, yet, as Du Pin * observes, they disallowed all worship of images.

In the same age, about A. D. 931. Paschase taught the real presence in the sacrament, a doctrine that soon became the foundation of another idolatrous practice, in the worship of the consecrated bread and wine. No sooner was this doctrine published, but many found fault with it; particularly, Ratramnè, a monk of Corbie, wrote a book on purpose against it. John Scott, being also consulted by the emperor Charles the Bald, opposed the explication of Paschase; and, as Du Pin † allows, advanced propositions contrary to the doctrine of the church, concerning the real presence. Their opposition was not only to some expressions of Paschase, as the church of Rome would persuade, but to the doctrine itself, as it is received and taught in the church of Rome.

In the next age, the tenth, there remained many disciples of Claude of Turin, who, in the parts about Piedmont especially, preserved and maintained his doctrine against the worship of saints and images: ‡ or, as Aurelius Rorencus, a Piedmontese historian, observes, from the times of Claude of Turin, that heresy continued throughout the ninth and tenth ages.

There were many also in the same age who adhered to the doctrines of Ratramne, against the real presence, in the English church, as well as others. Odo, archbishop of Canterbury, about the year 934. found many who questioned it: so that he was fain to cure their infidelity by miracles; for, according to the tale, he actually changed the bread into flesh, and the wine into blood, and then turned them back again to their proper forms. "Plurimos, de veritate Dominici corporis dubitantes, ita roboravit, ut panem altaris versum in carnem, vinum calicis in sanguinem propalam ostenderet, et, denuo in genuinam speciem retorta, usui humano conducibilia faceret."§

I mention this instance the rather, as it is not only a proof that the doctrine of the real presence was opposed, but as it also shews what use was made of pretended miracles, to deceive men; as it is one part of the prophetical description, that the world should be deceived by such miracles to worship the beast. St. Dunstan, his successor, took the same course of deceiving the world; he was, in particular, famous for taking the devil by the nose, with a hot pair of tongs; a crucifix is said to have made a speech in favour of his zeal against the married clergy. Such mighty wonders as these had a great influence on men's minds, in those days of darkness and superstition.

And it may not be amiss to observe, once for all, that these miracle-stories are of such consequence in the Roman church,‖ that they are expressly made one of the marks of the true church. But to return:

In the next age, the eleventh, besides the many who adhered to the doctrines of Claude of Turin, Ratramne, and Scott;¶ Berenger, favoured by Bishop Bruno, publicly opposed the real presence, and had many disciples. He was excommunicated, and his writings condemned, together with Scott's book, in a council held at Paris, about the year 1050.; and the doctrine of Berenger was condemned as heretical. The council decreed the author of that heresy, and his followers, should be obliged to retract it, or be prosecuted to death.*

How far soever Berenger might be prevailed upon by force to soften the doctrines he published, which is usually represented by papists as retracting them; Du Pin † acknowledges, that if he did really change his opinion, it could not be but a little before his death; that his doctrines occasioned a considerable controversy in his life, and many of his disciples continued firm to it after his death.

In like manner, in the following twelfth age, Du Pin ‡ observes, in general, "There were many heretics (as he calls them), in many places, who openly attacked the sacraments of the church, and despised her most holy ceremonies: that the severity with which they who were taken were punished, did not hinder the sect from increasing: that their doctrines spread through all the kingdom of France: many heretics appeared, whose chief view was to dissuade men from communion with the church in its sacraments, and to overturn its hierarchy, order, and discipline."

To omit particular persons, historians place in this age the Vaudois and Albigeois: the one so called from Peter Waldo, a merchant of Lyons; the other, from the city of Albi, in the diocess of Thoulouse, to which a great number retired for safety from persecution.

These Waldenses and Albigenses grew numerous and powerful in the following thirteenth age. Pope Innocent III. set himself to put a stop to them; he not only appointed his legates to preach against them, but excited the secular princes and the common people to destroy them. He published a croisade against them, which occasioned a long war between Montfort, general of the cross-bearers, and the count of Thoulouse, in which much blood was spilt, and many lives sacrificed, to the support of the pope's authority, and in defence of idolatrous doctrines and worship.

In the next age, the fourteenth, the Vaudois continued in great numbers, and their opinions spread in almost every country: John Wickliffe, a man of great reputation in the university of Oxford, began in England to oppose the power and authority of the pope, as well as the real presence, and several particular corruptions of the Roman doctrines and worship. He left many writings, says Du Pin, § to support his doctrines, and many disciples, who continued to teach his errors. Wickliffe was supported during his life by many great men; but they who followed his doctrines after his death were very severely persecuted. This occasioned the spreading of his opinions in Bohemia; for some of his writings were carried thither by one of his disciples, Peter Payn: so that, in a little time, the doctrine of Wickliffe corrupted, says Du Pin, ‖ many members of the university of Prague. It is also likely, that some of the Vaudois, who were in many parts of Germany, had also reached Bohemia, and had spread their doctrines there, at the same time that Wickliffe taught them in England.

In the next age, the fifteenth, John Huss, a man of great consideration in the university of Prague, and with him Jerome of Prague, opposed the condemnation of Wickliffe's writings. John Huss continued both to preach and write against the pope, and the corrupt usages of that church, till both were condemned by the council of Constance, and put to death.

Their death greatly moved the Bohemians: many of the nobles of Bohemia and Moravia entered into a league, not to receive the decrees of the council of Constance, and to defend the memory of John Huss and Jerome of Prague. These were called, The Bohemian brethren. They were divided into Calixtins and Taborites; the Calixtins, more strictly following the opinion of John Huss, principally opposed the corruption of the church of Rome in denying the cup in the sacrament to the laity. The Taborites received the common principles of the Vaudois and Wickliffe; denied the doctrine of transubstantiation, the pope's authority, and most of the corruptions of the church of Rome.

The next age, the sixteenth, brings us to the time of the protestant Reformation, by Luther, Calvin, and others; the history of which, and its opposition to the church of Rome, are so well known, that we need not enter into particulars.

Thus we see, how the providence of God raised up witnesses to the truth in every age, who appeared in a public manner, to testify against the general corruption of the church, its idolatrous doctrines and worship, and its persecuting power, notwithstanding all the arts and cruelties used to oppress them.

It may be proper to add a few remarks to this short account of these faithful witnesses, concerning the doctrines they maintained, and concerning the number of those who thus gave testimony to the truth.

Concerning the doctrines they maintained, it is evident, that Claude of Turin, and his followers in Piedmont, in the ninth and tenth ages, were express against all worship of images, one point with which the idolatrous corruption of the Roman worship began, and in which it still very much consists; and these idolatrous corruptions seem to be, what the witnesses were chiefly to prophesy against. Now Claude of Turin believed, says Du Pin,* as the Iconoclasts, "That images ought to be removed out of the churches. In defence of which doctrine, he opposed the authority of a council, and of the pope, who confirmed it, and commanded that images should be every where received."

The doctrines of Ratramne, Scott, and Berenger, opposed the doctrine of the real presence, as soon as it appeared; which soon became another occasion of idolatrous worship: for the council of Trent, as we before observed, decreed the same worship to the consecrated bread, as is given to the true God himself.

In this opposition to the doctrine of transubstantiation, the authority of the pope was directly concerned, as well as the truth of the question; for both councils and popes had made use of their authority in it.

Berenger was excommunicated by pope Leo IX.† in a council, condemned by the councils of Verceil and Paris, and again by pope Victor II.: yet, in answer to pope Alexander II. who wrote to him to renounce his error, instead of obeying, says Du Pin,* he boldly acquainted him, he would do nothing; and remained in his opinions with obstinacy. It is worth remark, that this Alexander was predecessor to the notorious Hildebrand, who, when pope, by the name of Gregory VII. carried the authority of the popes to the highest pitch, and used it in the most tyrannical manner: yet this Hildebrand himself treated Berenger with great mildness, when he had prevailed upon him to make a confession, in words of ambiguous and doubtful meaning (often the case of subscriptions), though there was so much reason to believe he had not altered his opinion. This seems to shew, as Mr. Basnage† justly observes, "that they had a great regard for Berenger; that his doctrine made great progress; and that the Roman church itself was greatly divided about it."

When we come to the times of the Vaudois and Albigeois, we meet with a great deal of unfair management, to misrepresent them and their opinions. They are charged by some popish authors, more especially by the bishop of Meaux, with holding the doctrines of the Manichees.

It is not to be dissembled, says Basnage,‡ that in the many parties who opposed the errors and usurped authority of the popes, there were some Manicheans out of Bulgaria, who, when driven from thence, spread themselves in Italy, and the northern provinces of France; but these are in justice to be distinguished from the Waldenses and Albigenses, and not confounded with them, as the learned Basnage has fully proved against the bishop of Meaux.

Du Pin plainly distinguishes the Manichees from the Vaudois, and assures us they were much worse heretics. There arose, says he, at the same time, many particular sects of heretics worse than the Vaudois, who revived the ancient errors of the Manichees. But he observes of the Vaudois,§ "That they greatly increased in the thirteenth age, notwithstanding the Inquisition, and spread themselves into Arragon, and the valleys of Piedmont, where they continued still holding the same doctrines, till they united, in the year 1536. with Œcolampadius, and the other sacramentaries."

The judicious French historian, speaking of the several sects of those times, observes, it would require a volume to mention all the sects, their several names and opinions, which were alike in some points, and different in others; but I think, say he,‖ "they may be reduced to two, viz. the Albigeois and Vaudois; and that these had very near the same opinions with those whom we now call Calvinists."

He farther observes, speaking of the heretics in the province of Languedoc,¶ "that there were two sorts; the one ignorant, given to dissolute manners, with very gross and foul errors; and these were a sort of Manichees: the other, more knowing, less irregular, and very far from such foul actions, held almost the same opinions with the Calvinists, and were properly Henricians and Vaudois."

De Serres, another French historian, though he warmly condemns the Albigeois for their separation from the church of Rome, yet acknowledges, "he had seen the reasons of their separation in a very ancient manuscript, and that they were perfectly agreeable to those which Wickliffe and Luther renewed; that they would not own the authority of the pope, nor acknowledge him to be universal bishop; that they rejected images, purgatory, the merit of works, indulgences, pilgrimages, vows, celibacy of the clergy, invocation of saints, and trading with sacred things."

A contemporary historian, Puy Laurens, has observed concerning these Vaudois, "that they disputed with great subtilty against the Manicheans. And, by many of their ancient writings, it appears they asserted Rome to be Babylon; that the mass was a pure human invention; that the prayers of the living are unprofitable for the dead; that the invocation of saints is criminal, and the adoration of bread, idolatry:" as may be seen at large in Mr. Basnage's excellent History of the Religion of the reformed Churches. As to the doctrines taught by Wickliffe in England, we may take them from one of our own historians,* a great enemy to Wickliffe and his opinions, which he censures as erroneous, heretical, absurd, and contrary to the catholic faith. But he informs us they were such as these: "That the sacrament is not the true body of Christ, but its figure; that the Roman church is not the head of all churches more than any other church, nor was greater authority given by Christ to Peter than to any other apostle; that the pope of Rome has no more power of the keys than any other priest; that the gospel is a sufficient rule for every Christian in this life. These were the doctrines his followers publicly professed and taught."

Concerning the number of these faithful witnesses, who thus testified against the corruptions of popery, it appears to have been very considerable, although all methods of oppression and persecution were used to destroy them. We have seen them arise in every age of the church, and appear in almost every place, in Italy, France, Spain, England, Germany, and Bohemia. They were so many who protested against the corruptions of popery, that their persecutors were fain to raise numerous armies against them. The many thousands which perished by these armies, and the Inquisition, are a full evidence that they were in themselves a great number, and that they persevered with a surprising constancy in their testimony against the corruptions of the Roman communion, though they were persecuted to death with great cruelty, and after death treated with great inhumanity.

So exactly does the general state of the church and world answer the description of prophecy, in a great variety of events, and for a long time together. We have already seen the prophetical description verified, in the history of near a thousand years, in so long a continuance of a tyrannical power, corrupting the faith and worship of the church, and persecuting the professors of the pure Christian faith and worship; who yet have continued, during all this time, faithful witnesses against these corruptions; who have constantly persevered in their testimony, though under the most cruel sufferings on account of it.

And what but a Spirit of prophecy could have drawn, so long beforehand, a description of so many concurrent events, so very unlikely to happen, and which were to continue for so long a time; and yet so exactly agreeable to historical truth, and the general state of the church and world, for a thousand years together, and yet which was not to begin till near seven hundred years after the prophecy was published? These are strong marks of a real Spirit of prophecy in these revelations, which should greatly recommend them to us, and persuade our serious attention to what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

CHAP. XIV. SECT. XIII.

CONTENTS.

The description of the melancholy state of the church and world, during this period, in the foregoing chapters, might be apt somewhat to discourage good Christians, and the faithful worshippers of God; for though God, by a Spirit of prophecy, had before revealed this suffering state to the church, and so it was represented, as what the wisdom of Divine Providence thought fit to permit, and what was therefore reconcileable to the goodness and power of the great Governor of the world; yet it was a very useful design of these revelations, to subjoin proper principles of consolation and encouragement to such a melancholy representation of temptation, danger, and suffering.

This seems the intention of this fourteenth chapter, in which the scene of the prophetical vision is changed from earth to heaven, from a view of the church under the persecution of the beast, to a view of the church in the presence of the Lamb; delivered from the state of corruption and oppression, so much to be expected from this evil world, and arrived at a state of complete and perfect religion and happiness in the heavenly church.

This vision then represents the sure destruction of the enemies of truth and righteousness in the end, however they may prevail for a time; it shews the very great reward of the faithful, and dreadful punishment of the apostate, who shall fall from the faith and purity of Christian worship, in the day of trial. Thus, this part of the prophecy unites the strongest principles of warning, caution, encouragement, and hope, than which nothing could be more proper or useful for the church, in such a state of providence; or, to the general design of the whole prophecy, which is to exhort and encourage the constancy and patience of the saints, in all their trials. When we consider this chapter in this view, it will shew a more easy, natural, and proper connexion between this vision and the foregoing, than is usually observed; and make the whole plan and design appear more regular and exact, than it is usually thought to be.

1. AND I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him a hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads.]

(1.) After the very melancholy representation I beheld in the foregoing visions, of the state of the church and world, I saw a more comfortable and encouraging vision, in another figurative description of the state of the church. It was represented to me, as if a Lamb (which signified Christ in former visions) was standing on Mount Sion, the place on which the temple stood, and therefore an emblem of the church;* and having with him the symbolical number of a hundred and forty-four thousand, which before had represented the true church apostolical, consisting of faithful worshippers, who had the seal of God, the Father of Christ, represented by the Lamb, a mark of their consecration to God, and that they were owned of God as his chosen and favoured people. [1]

2. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps:]

(2.) I observed farther in my vision, how this glorious heavenly church was employed; for I heard the sound of a voice as from heaven, strong as the roaring of the sea, and loud as thunder, but musical and harmonious, as if a great number of voices were joined in full concert, with symphonies of musical instruments, as in the solemn worship of the temple. [2]

3. And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.]

(3.) For they were engaged in a solemn act of worship before the throne of God, his most immediate presence, in company with those living creatures which represented the angels of God, and with the four-and-twenty elders, who signified the patriarchs and apostles,† as representatives of the Jewish and Christian churches, now united into one. The psalm of praise they sung was of a new composition; the full knowledge and understanding of which was peculiar to those persons who had been truly consecrated to God, and had been delivered from the corruptions so generally prevailing in the world.

4. These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and the Lamb.]

(4.) These persons were such as persevered in purity, not defiling themselves with any of those idolatrous corruptions, which are so properly called fornication and adultery in the ancient prophets. They did not forsake Christ and his true religion, to join in the service or worship of any idol. They were fixed in a constant purpose of following the directions of Christ, and the institutions of his gospel, in whatever they taught, though contrary to the principles and practices in fashion, though they were exposed to trouble and persecution on account of it. As the first-born and first-fruits under the law were holy and consecrated to God, so were these persons redeemed from the rest of mankind, freed from the antichristian corruptions of the church, to serve God according to the truth of the Christian religion, faith, and worship.

5. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.]

(5.) They were such as worshipped God in sincerity and truth; they were upright and honest in their profession, to hear and obey the voice of the Lord their God, not teaching the commandments of men for doctrines of Divine authority, or by false traditions making the commandments of God of no effect. They are accepted of God, however censured or condemned by the world, and declared by the supreme Judge of all members of his true church, which is a glorious church, holy, and without blemish.

* Heb. xii. 22, 23. † Rev. iv. 4. 6.

6. And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.]

(6.) As a farther motive to Christian patience and constancy, this vision of the happy state of faithful Christians was followed by another. I perceived an angel flying through the air, as a messenger of some important news from the upper to the lower world. This was to publish to all people the unchangeable constitution of the Christian religion, which should remain always the same, in the truth of its doctrines, the certainty of its rewards and punishments, to everlasting ages.

7. Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.]

(7.) For the angel declared with a strong voice, to command attention, that God would surely inflict a severe punishment on all manner of antichristian idolaters; the hour of his judgment should as certainly come as it was foretold. It greatly therefore concerned all to fear God, and give glory to him only; for this is the worship due to the Creator of all things, the only supreme Lord and Governor of the whole world. [3]

8. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of her fornication.]

(8.) This more general sentence of judgment against idolatrous corruptions of the Christian faith and worship, was applied more particularly to the antichristian corruptions of this period; for the former angel was followed in the vision by a second, who very distinctly proclaimed, That Babylon was to be destroyed, that great city Rome, which had abused her latter as well as former power, in maintaining and propagating idolatrous doctrines and worship.

9. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,]

(9.) These two angels were followed in the vision by a third, to shew the great importance of the message, and of attention to it. This third angel declared the great danger of complying with the prevailing corruptions of those times; and denounced a severe judgment against all persons who should submit to this antichristian power, or any ways profess obedience to it, by any public act of acknowledgment or homage.

10. The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

11. And the smoke of their torment ascended up before God for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.]

(10.) For he declared every such person liable to the most severe punishment, to the most fearful plagues of Divine vengeance, without hope of any mercy to soften or allay them; the wrath of God shall be as a cup of poison, composed of the strongest ingredients, without any mixture to weaken it: the deadly effects of which no antidotes can prevent. Such shall be the wrath of God, that even death itself shall not free them from it, but their torment shall be great, as if they suffered the pains of the fiercest fire; and they shall suffer this punishment to their greater shame and confusion, in the presence of Christ and his holy angels. (11.) And their torments shall be endless, as well as most severe; the fire that torments them shall never be extinguished, and the smoke of it, which shall ascend up for ever and ever, shall shew it everlasting. Nor shall they have any time of respite or ease; neither day nor night shall bring them any relief; their torments shall never cease, or their pains be lessened for ever. [4]

12. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.]

(12.) In this the patience of the saints shall be manifested and perfected; herein their perseverance will consist, that notwithstanding all the evils of persecution, they continue constant in obedience to the commands of God, as the rule of their religion, and steadfastly maintain the truths of Christ's revelation, the rule of their faith and worship, in opposition to all doctrines and worship contrary to it, by what authority soever they shall be imposed on the church.

13. And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.]

(13.) As a farther encouragement of faithfulness and constancy, I was directed by a particular voice from heaven, to declare the unspeakable blessing of all such who shall be faithful; as they die in the faith, they die in the favour of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Spirit of revelation assures them, not only of an end to all their afflictions in a short time, but that all their patience and faithfulness, in the hour of temptation and persecution, shall be rewarded gloriously in a state of perfect and unmixed happiness. [5]

14. And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.]

(14.) The sure execution of the judgments denounced against the corrupters of the Christian religion, was farther confirmed by another vision. Christ himself was represented sitting upon a bright cloud, which was spread under him, as a seat of judgment. He appeared as a man, or like the Son of man, in the visions of Daniel,* with a golden crown on his head, the ensign of royalty and sovereign power; and, to express the meaning and design of his appearance to judgment, he bore in his hand a sharp sickle, wherewith men are used to cut down or to reap corn.

15. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe.]

(15.) Soon after, I beheld an angel come out of heaven, the true temple, and most glorious seat of God's presence;

* Dan. vii. 13.

he came to bring order, or give the word, as from God, when the execution of his judgments should begin; and spake with a very strong voice to him that sat on the bright cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap, the appointed time of judgment is come, the world is ripe for it, let it be no longer delayed, but immediately executed.

16. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.]

(16.) Whereupon the order of God was immediately executed; the inhabitants of the earth were cut off as corn is cut down with a sickle, at the appointed time of harvest.[6]

17. And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.]

(17.) I farther beheld in my vision, another angel coming out of the true temple, which is in heaven; he also appeared with a sharp sickle in his hands, to assist in this execution, and finish the destruction of the enemies of true religion.

18. And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud voice to him that had the sharp sickle, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.]

(18.) And another angel came out from the altar, on which fire was used to burn continually; he was sent to bring orders to the angel that had the sharp sickle, which he delivered in a loud voice, saying, Begin to put in execution the righteous judgments of God on this wicked generation. The time of God's vengeance, his appointed time is fully come, and the iniquities of the inhabitants of the earth have made them fully ripe for destruction.[7]

19. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God.]

(19.) Immediately upon this order, the angel began to cut down those wicked persons, whose iniquities had made them ripe for destruction, and delivered them over to Divine vengeance, which should press them hard with grievous afflictions, as grapes are pressed in a wine-press.

20. And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horse-bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.]

(20.) The destruction of those enemies of God and true religion, the supporters and favourers of that tyrannical idolatrous power, which had so long and so cruelly persecuted the saints, was great beyond expression; as if their blood had been shed in such quantity, that it covered the earth for many miles, and yet was so deep, as to reach up to a horse's breast.[8]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1.] MOST of these expressions will be found explained in the notes on vii. 10. This seems farther to confirm what we there observed, that we are rather to understand these praises of the heavenly church, than of the church on earth. The plan of these prophecies often introduces the church in heaven as a chorus, with great propriety and elegance, as a noble and moving part of the drama. The church in heaven making suitable reflections on the events foretold in these prophecies, greatly serves to raise the attention of good Christians, and teach the high concern they have in them. How wisely is the church on earth instructed, animated, and encouraged, by the sentiments, temper, and devotion, of the church in heaven, in its most perfect state of glory and happiness!

Some copies read, having his name (the name of the Lamb) and his Father's name written on their foreheads. The sense will be much the same, which way soever we read it.

[2] Ver. 2.] These expressions are a plain allusion to the strength and harmony of the temple-music, where so great a number of voices and instruments were used, in singing psalms and praises to God, in their most solemn acts of worship.

[3] Ver. 7.] In the style of prophecy, to shew the certainty of the prediction, things to be after accomplished are represented as already done. This shews the propriety and elegance of the expression, that an angel should say, The hour of judgment is come, so long before the accomplishment, as another angel, to foretell the future downfal of Babylon, followed, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen. The record of this prophecy by St. John, is a constant preaching of the everlasting constitution of the gospel to men; whether it means any particular opposition to the corruptions of the church in this period, as several learned men have thought, whether it intimates by whom such opposition shall be made, wherein they much differ, I shall leave altogether to the reader's choice. The certainty of the revelation thus solemnly delivered by an angel, seems to me the chief, if not the only, design of the prophecy.

[4] Ver. 11.] We have already seen, that to worship the beast and his image, to receive his mark, in the forehead or in the hand, mean a submission to the authority of this wild beast, the persecuting power revived in the last government of Rome, and so manifestly used to establish the idolatrous doctrines and worship of the Roman church. The wine of the wrath of God, and the cup of his indignation, are expressions taken from the language of the prophets. The portion assigned by the providence of God to men, is called the portion of their cup. It was not only customary to treat friends with a cup of wine, as a mark of affection, but to execute also the sentence of death on offenders, by making them drink a cup of wine in which some strong poison had been infused. Such was the noted execution of Socrates, by a cup of poison. The Scriptures mention a cup of blessing and consolation, and a cup of trembling and astonishment. God speaks to the prophet Jeremiah, of the wine-cup of his fury, which he was to cause the nations to drink, Jer. xxv. 15. and ver. 18. this is explained by making them, a desolation, an astonishment, a hissing, and a curse. Grotius seems to give a just account of the expression without mixture, κεκερασμένου ἀκράτου, to intimate, that the poisonous ingredients were infused in pure unmixed wine, to take a stronger tincture, and become a more deadly potion. The judgment itself may well be understood of all the heaviest evils we feel in the present life, or fear after it, without cessation, and without end. A most useful warning, in an hour of so dangerous temptation; a most powerful encouragement to undergo any sufferings in the cause of truth, when all who betray it, or forsake it, are sure to suffer so much more than any can suffer for their faithfulness and constancy in the defence of it.

[5] Ver. 13.] Some interpreters understand dying in the Lord, to signify being put to death for constancy in the true religion. Others think, to die in the Lord, may mean more generally to die in the faith and obedience of the gospel of Christ, as the bishop of Meaux. "Qui meurent dans le Seigneur, c'est en general tous les saints, et en particulier les saints martyrs, qui meurent pour l'amour de luy."

The expression from henceforth, ἀπαρτὶ, may admit of different interpretations; it will well mean, That as they who die in the Lord have, from that time, finished their state of temptation and affliction, and from thenceforth rest from their labours, in like manner their works follow them; and from that time they receive their reward.

Mr. Daubuz's observation seems natural and just: "The blessedness promised consists in their being happy in their separate intermediate state, and in their having at the resurrection their full reward."

Every one will see, how great this encouragement is to patience and perseverance, the great intention and principal doctrine of all these prophecies.

[6] Ver. 16.] The opinions of interpreters differ very much as to the meaning of this part of the vision. Many seem very wide of the purpose. Harvest may sometimes be taken in a good sense, in some places of Scripture, and may mean God's bringing or gathering together his people; or, in particular, gathering together the saints departed in Christ. But as these expressions are plainly taken from the prophet Joel, iii. 13. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get ye down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great: the harvest and vintage are expressive of judgment. The harvest is ripe, means the same thing as, their wickedness is great, or their iniquity is fully ripe. This sense gives a proper and easy connexion to the several parts of this vision with each other. According to the bishop of Meaux, "After the denunciation of the judgment of God, behold the execution." The general ideas of a harvest and vintage, express the vengeance of God on the enemies of his people. The person who executes this vengeance is Jesus Christ, who himself comes to execute this judgment upon his enemies: so that we may here also observe, it is not an angel, as elsewhere, but the Son of man, Jesus Christ himself, who strikes this blow, who has the chief and principal hand in it, though angels are also sent to accompany him, and assist in the execution; to shew, that this stroke of vengeance on Rome is with all the force of a Divine hand. It is executed, on orders brought by an angel from the temple, or presence of God, out of the temple which is in heaven, (ver. 17.) This may well mean, that there is an appointed time, when the judgment of God shall come on his enemies, as there is in the course of natural providence, a time appointed for the season of harvest. The one shall as surely come in its appointed time as the other.

[7] Ver. 18.] The angel who had power over fire, is an allusion, according to Mr. Daubuz, to the office of that priest who was appointed by lot, in the temple-service, to take care of the fire upon the altar, and who was therefore called *the priest over the fire. Grotius, more simply, having the office of God's vengeance; "habens potestatem supra ignem, habens ministerium iræ divinæ." According to the theology of the Jewish doctors, "Omnis virtus vel facultas, quam præfecit Deus alicui rei, vocatur angelus illi rei præfectus."

[8] Ver. 20.] To tread a wine-press, is a prophetic description of destruction. The expressions of the prophet Isaiah, lxiii. 3. I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me; are thus explained by the prophet himself, I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. The images in this vision are very strong and expressive; the largest wine-presses were used to be in some places out of the city. This is the great wine-press of the wrath of God, and seems to intimate the great numbers that shall be involved in this general destruction. The great quantity of blood mentioned in the vision, is a strong image representing some great slaughter of the enemies of God, and true religion; but what particular judgment this prophecy describes, is not well agreed by interpreters. The order of these prophecies, and the series of this part of them, will not, I think, allow us to understand it of any judgment on Rome heathen, or indeed of any judgment before the time of the third period, in which the beast arose; for before that time none worshipped the beast, or his image, or received his mark, but these are the persons to whom this prophecy plainly relates.

Nor does there seem sufficient reason to understand the harvest of the reformation began by Luther,* whereby the good corn was separated from the earth, or protestants from the idolatry of the Roman church: for the harvest, as well as the vintage, is designed to express an approaching day of great wrath. Nor did the state of Europe, during the reign of Queen Anne,† so exactly answer, I think, to all the characters of this prediction, as some have observed.

The order of these prophecies, and the more natural connexion of this part of them with the rest, direct, as I apprehend, with more propriety, to understand it of the great judgment to be inflicted at the end of this period, on the beast and his followers. It will then mean, that great judgment which is more particularly and fully explained in the eighteenth and nineteenth chapters, and which is to make way for the happy state of the church, prophesied of in the twentieth chapter.

This judgment then seems still to be future. It will be prudent therefore to leave the time of its accomplishment more fully to explain it. In the meantime, we may have, however, as much encouragement to patience and perseverance, as awful warnings against apostacy, and yielding to the common corruptions of the age, as if all circumstances of the judgments foretold had been more particularly revealed. We know, in the strong and lively images of the general description, that this judgment will as certainly come, as the appointed time of harvest; that in the appointed time it shall be executed by a hand which no power can resist, and from which none can escape; that in this day of judgment, God's wrath, and the destruction of his enemies, will be so great and terrible, that the boldest images can hardly represent to our imagination what the enemies of true religion shall feel them to be in reality.

* Maimon. More Nevoch. p. 282.

* Daubuz, p. 449. † Ib. p. 456.

Mr. Waple observes upon this chapter, that a certain order of voices is plainly represented, which being also seven in number, and distinctly reckoned up, may very well be accounted the seven thunders, opened into loud and distinct voices. It is fit the reader should be acquainted with this conjecture, and then that it should be left to his own judgment.

CHAP. XV. SECT. XIV.

CONTENTS.

The prophecy proceeds in this and the following chapters, to open farther the appointed punishment of Rome, for her oppression of the truth, and persecution of the saints. This chapter represents the solemn manner in which preparation is made for the execution of these judgments, as the next describes the actual execution of them. The happy state of God's faithful servants, and the joyful thanksgivings with which they celebrate the goodness of God in the protection of their cause, are very elegantly represented, to encourage their constancy and perseverance.

1. AND I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God.]

(1.) I beheld another wonderful vision, which the Spirit of prophecy represented to me, as in heaven; seven angels appeared, agreeable to the number by whom God executed his judgments in the former periods, who were appointed for the execution of God's last judgments, on the enemies of the Christian church, in which the wrath of God was to be finished, in the full and final destruction of his antichristian enemies.

2. And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God.]

(2.) I moreover saw, as in my former vision of the Divine presence,* that there was a large crystal vessel, like the molten sea, in the temple, but far more glorious. It seemed more shining and lively than bare crystal, having the lustre of a red or fiery colour intermixed with it; round about the crystal vessel stood those happy servants of God, who, by their faith and patience, had preserved themselves from the antichristian apostacy; who had not acknowledged the authority of the beast, by an act of submission. They had, as in the temple-service, harps in their hands, to accompany their psalms of praise with symphonies of music. [1]

3. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.]

(3.) These happy saints, who had obtained the victory by their patience and constancy, were employed in a grateful acknowledgment of the goodness of God, from a joyful sense of their former deliverance and present happiness, as the Israelites sang the praises of God for their deliverance at the Red Sea, in a hymn composed by Moses: so these saints, having obtained a greater deliverance and salvation by Christ, sang a psalm of praise, of the same spirit with that of Moses, but in a style suited to their deliverance and salvation by Christ; saying, Thy works, O Lord God Almighty, are most great and wonderful; thy ways, as the King of saints, are most righteous and faithful.

4. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.]

(4.) What abundant reason have all people, from what thou hast done for us, to worship thee as God, and give honour to thy name, as glorious in holiness; so that none among the gods is like unto thee! All nations shall acknowledge thee the one true God, by worshipping before thee; being convinced, by thy judgments, that in the greatness of thine excellency, thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee; that thou art the strength of thy people, and their salvation. [2]

5. And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:]

(5.) When this hymn of praise was ended, the last judgments of God were farther represented to me in vision. I beheld, as if the most holy place, or inmost part of the temple, the seat of God's glory and of the oracle, was opened, as when the high-priest went into the holy of holies. [3]

6. And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.]

(6.) And I beheld seven angels appointed to execute these judgments, coming out from the most holy place, as having received their instructions from the oracle of God himself. They appeared in habits, like those the high-priest wore, when he went into the most holy place, and consulted the oracle.

7. And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.]

(7.) When these angels, having received their commission, came out of the most holy place, the contents of their commission were revealed in the following prophetic representation: One of the four living creatures, representatives of the angels, gave to each of them a vial or cup, not with incense in it, as in the temple-worship, but each of them was filled with ingredients of deadly qualities, by which were signified the wrath of God; who, as he is the everlasting God, is ever able to judge and to punish his enemies according to their works.

8. And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.]

(8.) Hereupon I farther beheld, as if the cloud of glory, the symbol of God's presence and power, filled the whole temple, as when the presence of God entered the tabernacle of Moses, so that it was not to be approached till the judgments of God should be finished, to express that the glory of God's justice, power, and truth, was highly concerned to see these judgments duly and fully executed. [4]

* Chap. iv. 6.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 2.] INTERPRETERS are not agreed what is meant by this sea of glass, mingled with fire. It is supposed by some* to signify the pure state of the church, and the fiery indignation to be poured out of the vials. Or to denote a multitude of saints,† whose state is to be like a sea of glass, a pure and holy life in a very unsettled condition, while they also endure the fire of persecution; or it is supposed to denote, that God, the searcher of hearts, finds them pure as crystal, and warmed with the love of God,‡ as love is compared to fire, or a holy people, perfectly pure, and inflamed with the love of God. It is also supposed,§ that it is an allusion to the deliverance of the Israelites from the hands of the Egyptians, when they had passed the Red Sea; whereby is signified the preservation and security of the saints, during the pouring out of the vials upon the wicked. But as the scene of this vision is in heaven, and as the vision represents the happy state of those faithful servants of God, who had overcome the corruptions of the world, it does not seem so natural a description of their state in this life; it has a more easy allusion to the sea, or large vessel of water in the temple: but this being a crystal vessel, shining with rays of a lively red, as if fire or some bright light shone through it, it may well represent the more perfect purity and active zeal of the heavenly church; and how much more glorious every thing is in the state of the church above, than the faint and typical representations of it were in the material temple.

[2] Ver. 4.] The bishop of Meaux justly observes, the song of praise, after the passage of the Red Sea, agrees perfectly well to the martyrs, after they had shed their blood, or to those who were passed through a state of persecution to a state of rest and happiness; that, by the song of Moses and the Lamb, we may understand two psalms of praise, or one and the same psalm, composed in imitation of the song of Moses.

In fact, most of the expressions of this psalm, though not in the very same words, yet, in their plain sense and meaning, seem to be taken from the song of Moses, of which it is a sort of Christian abridgment.

[3] Ver. 5.] The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony, seems plainly to be meant of the most holy place. The whole tabernacle was called, The tabernacle of the congregation which is without the veil, which is before the testimony, Exod. xxvii. 21. It is also called, The tabernacle of witness, Acts vii. 44. In this tabernacle, there was the sanctuary, or holy place, without the veil, and another room within the veil, called the most holy place, in which was the visible testimony of God's presence, and seat of the oracle, between the cherubim over the mercy-seat. (Exod. xxv. 22.)

This prophetic representation seems intended to shew these judgments of God, threatened, in these prophecies, to be inflicted on the enemies of truth and righteousness, were surely to be accomplished in their appointed time, as the oracle of God was a sure declaration of his will. It is pronounced as a decree from the throne of the great Lord and Sovereign of the whole creation, which he will certainly put into execution.

[4] Ver. 8.] The cloud of glory was the visible manifestation of God's presence in the tabernacle and temple; it expressed the presence of God, for protection and for judgment. The glory was a sign of protection, at erecting the tabernacle, and at the dedication of the temple: but in the judgment of Korah, the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation, when he and his companions were swallowed up by the earth. (Numb. xvi. 19.) In like manner, when the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron, (ver. 42.) and were gathered together against them, they looked towards the tabernacle of the congregation, and behold the cloud covered it, and the glory of the Lord appeared. This was the forerunner of judgment: for immediately Moses directs Aaron to go quickly and make atonement, because wrath is gone out from the Lord, and the plague is begun, (ver. 46.) So proper is this emblem of smoke from the glory of God, or from the cloud of glory, to express the execution of judgment, as well as to be a sign of favour. Both proceed from the power of God, and in both he is glorious.

CHAP. XVI. SECT. XV.

CONTENTS.

This following chapter contains the judgments themselves signified by the seven vials full of the wrath of God; and gives us a prophetic representation of each of them in their order; and are an exact description of the greater and more eminent judgments of God on the inhabitants of the earth, for their enmity to true religion, and persecution of the saints, during this third and last period.

1. AND I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.]

(1.) All things being thus prepared, the angels having received their instructions from the oracle, and their vials full of the wrath of God from one of the cherubim, I heard the voice of the oracle give the word of command to the angels, to pour out their cups in their order; for the inhabitants of the earth were ripe for those judgments which the justice of God had appointed for their punishment.

2. And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.]

(2.) The first angel immediately obeyed the voice of the oracle, and poured out his cup upon the earth. This was followed with a grievous plague upon those who had fallen in with the corruption of the Christian faith and worship, or were assisting in the persecution of the faithful witnesses against the prevailing corruptions. They were themselves punished with great afflictions, as if a noisome and painful ulcer had broke out on their bodies. (See the history of the first vial at the end of this chapter.)

3. And the second angel poured out his vial on the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.]

(3.) After the judgments of God signified by pouring out the first cup on the earth, the second angel obeyed the command of the oracle, and poured out his cup on the sea. Upon which the waters of the sea became as congealed blood, so that no creature could live in the sea, but died; to represent another great judgment, the effect of the wrath of God upon the promoters of the great apostacy, and persecutors of God's faithful servants and witnesses. [1] (See the history of the second vial at the end of this chapter.)

4. And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.]

(4.) After this I beheld the third angel poured out his cup full of the wrath of God, in its order. This cup was poured on the rivers and fountains of waters, so that they were changed into blood. An emblem of great bloodshed, the righteous punishment of those antichristian powers, for shedding the innocent blood of God's faithful servants. [2]

5. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shall be, because thou hast judged thus.]

(5.) The angel who ministered in the execution of this judgment of God on the kingdom of the beast, acknowledged the righteousness of God, and began his praise, saying, How does thy righteousness appear in thy ways of providence, O God, who art unchangeable in thy perfections, and constant in thy righteous administration of government, throughout all ages! How manifest hast thou made it to them who will attentively consider thy ways, by this judgment on the kingdom of the beast!

6. For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.]

(6.) They have, with a cruel execution of tyrannical oppressive power, shed the blood of thy saints and prophets; and now thou hast inflicted on them the punishment they have so justly deserved, and given them blood to drink by a great effusion of their own. [3]

7. And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.]

(7.) This praise of God was continued by another angel, who stood by the altar, in the presence, to express the consent of the heavenly church, to praise the Lord God Almighty, and to celebrate his justice and faithfulness in punishing the enemies of truth and righteousness, and the persecutors of his faithful servants. (See the history of the third vial at the end of this chapter.)

8. And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.]

(8.) I farther beheld in my vision, the fourth angel obeyed the voice of the oracle; he poured out his cup full of the wrath of God upon the sun, whereby the heat of it was so violently increased, that, like a burning season, it gave great uneasiness and pain to the inhabitants of the earth.

9. And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which had power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory.]

(9.) They were greatly afflicted, as in those violent heats, which are used to burn up the fruits of the earth, to produce scarcity and famine, with an unhealthful air, dangerous distempers, great faintness, and pains. Yet these judgments of God, one after another, made no impression on their hearts, they were still hardened in wickedness; they even blasphemed the name of God, who thus justly punished them, instead of repenting of those sins which had deserved these judgments, and so justly brought them upon them. (See the history of the fourth vial at the end of this chapter.)

10. And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness, and they gnawed their tongues for pain.]

(10.) I farther beheld in my vision, that the fifth angel poured out his cup in his order; in which period the wrath of God was more remarkably to affect the seat, or throne and kingdom, of the beast. The extent, authority, and power of his antichristian empire were to be greatly obscured, and the influence of his government much diminished; so that they bit their tongues for vexation, as persons full of anguish and rage.

11. And blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.]

(11.) Yet still these judgments had no effect to reform these enemies to the truth and purity of the Christian faith and religion; they rather blasphemed the supreme Governor of the world, by accusing his providence, on account of the evils which came upon them, but had no thoughts of repentance for those evil actions, the true reason why they were punished. (See the history of the fifth vial at the end of this chapter.)

12. And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.]

(12.) The sixth angel poured out his cup also, in his order, immediately after the foregoing. The punishment figuratively represented by it, was drying up the river Euphrates, so famous as a boundary against the invasions of the eastern nations, that they might have an easy passage to invade their neighbours; signifying, a way should be prepared for the enemies of this antichristian kingdom to break in upon it. [4]

13. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.]

(13.) I farther saw, in my prophetic vision, another figurative representation, as if the dragon, or emblem of the devil, and the beast, the emblem of this antichristian power, and the false prophet, the emblem of those who, by false doctrines and all the arts of deceit, endeavoured to support and propagate these antichristian corruptions, sent forth unclean spirits resembling frogs; each of them one. [5]

14. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.]

(14.) These three unclean spirits were a representation of persons who had the bad qualities of demons or devils, fully possessed with their bad temper, and engaged to oppose the truth and power of religion, by all the deceitful arts of error and false reasoning, by imposing upon the weak and credulous, by pretences to wondrous and miraculous works. These were employed to use all their evil arts and wicked policy, to excite the princes and great men of the world to unite more firmly against truth and righteousness, the cause of God and religion, and to make a new effort to establish error and corruption.

15. Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.]

(15.) When it was thus foretold, that these evil agents would manage with great art and address, in support of their bad cause, the Spirit of wisdom added a useful caution, that the faithful servants of God should use great care to preserve themselves from being deceived; they should remember the warning of Christ their Lord, that his coming would be with surprise, as when thieves come unexpectedly in the night. Let all then who would faithfully persevere, watch over themselves, to maintain their purity and integrity, lest, when Christ shall come, they be exposed to shame and disgrace, without any covering for their sin and folly.

16. And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.]

(16.) For Satan, by these evil seducing spirits, shall gather many of all ranks of men, into a place where they shall be destroyed, which may therefore, in the style of prophecy, be called the mountain of Mageddo, famous in the history of God's people for several memorable slaughters, and which became a proverbial expression for a place of destruction and mourning. [6]

17. And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done.]

(17.) Upon this great and last effort of the antichristian powers, to support the throne of the beast, the seventh angel, who had the last cup, full of the wrath of God to pour out, poured it into the air, the seat of Satan's empire, and his residence. The meaning of this judgment was explained by the oracle, for a voice from the throne of the temple in heaven declared, It is done, the mystery of God is finished; and this last cup of God's wrath has fully finished God's judgments on the persecutors of his church, in their final destruction. [7]

18. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.]

(18.) When the voice of the oracle had pronounced, It was finished; the air on which the vial was poured, appeared in violent commotions; there followed thunders and lightnings, as if nature was in convulsions; there was such an earthquake as had never been before, since God had placed man on the earth to inhabit it; to represent the very great and terrible commotions of the world, when God should appear in so remarkable a manner, to destroy the powers of the prince of the air, with his associated antichristian powers of the earth.

19. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.]

(19.) The effects of this tempest and earthquake reached the several cities of the antichristian nations, and the great imperial city itself. It quite threw down several cities to the ground, and split the city of Rome in several parts; to represent, that this judgment should punish mystical Babylon with very great and exemplary severity.

20. And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.]

(20.) This punishment was so general on all the antichristian powers, that it reached every place, nor could men find protection against it any where; it was like a hurricane, that reached islands and mountains, and utterly destroyed them, as well as it threw down cities and towns in valleys, and on the land.

21. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.]

(21.) Yet farther, to shew how terrible this judgment should be, besides the representation of thunder, lightning, and an earthquake, by which cities and towns were thrown down and destroyed, there fell a great hail, with stones of so extraordinary weight, as were sufficient to kill all who fled into the open fields for safety; to represent, this severe and heavy judgment was general every where; that none were able in any place to escape their share in the punishment: yet even these judgments could not overcome the obstinacy of the enemies of truth and righteousness. The anguish of their minds on account of these plagues, made them more uneasy and discontented; they blasphemously censured God's government of the world, which at once served to aggravate their guilt, and illustrate the justice of God, in the severity of his righteous judgments upon them. [8]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 3.] EARTH and sea, in Scripture-language, are a description of our habitable world, as heavens and earth are of the universe in general; as we have observed in the note on x. 2. As by earth in the former vial, we understood the countries, with their inhabitants, subject to the new western empire erected in this period, and owning the authority of the beast: so the sea will best be understood of the same persons, under a different figurative description. The difference between the expressions of earth and sea, may very probably mean, that the former judgments were chiefly inflicted on the inhabitants residing in the inland provinces of the western empire; but that the judgments of this vial are chiefly inflicted on such of the subjects of this empire as went out by sea to foreign countries, and aboard fleets, especially on the Mediterranean Sea; which is used to be styled, in Scripture, the sea, and the great sea.

The sea becoming as the blood of a dead man, so that every living soul died in the sea, are descriptions which seem to be taken from the description of the plagues of Egypt; by one of which, (Exod. vii. 20, 21.) all the waters were turned into blood, so that all the fish that was in the river died, and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.

The general meaning of these figurative expressions seems to point out some very great mortality or slaughter, so that many persons shall perish in some undertaking, and lose their lives in some expedition, chiefly carried on by sea. Mr. Daubuz observes, from an expression in the prophet Daniel, vii. 2. That the four winds of the heavens strove upon the great sea; that hereby is meant a comprehension of several kings or kingdoms in a state of war, fighting against each other to enlarge their dominions.* He applies this interpretation to our present prophecy.

* Sym. Dict. Sea.

This vial has its effect in war, the sea being a symbol of a multitude in war. He adds, It must be such a war, that all the corrupted church must be concerned therein; and it must also be on a religious account: the corrupted Christians must, as it were, bring it upon themselves: and that the men concerned in the wars predicted, should die therein.

[2] Ver. 4.] It is observable, there is a great conformity between these three first vials and the three first trumpets, chap. viii. especially as to the parts of the world on which these judgments were to come. In the first trumpet, hail and fire, mingled with blood, were cast upon the earth; at the sound of the second trumpet, a burning mountain of fire was cast into the sea, and the third part of the sea became blood; when the third angel sounded, a burning star fell from heaven, upon the third part of the rivers and fountains of waters. Here the plagues of the first vial, in like manner, fall upon the earth; of the second vial, upon the sea; and of this third vial, upon the rivers and fountains of waters.

We have seen the general meaning of rivers and fountains of waters, according to the style of prophecy, in the note on viii. 10. It may be sufficient just to mention here, that as the countries belonging to any state are divided into earth, sea, and rivers, so this distribution of the kingdom of the beast is an intimation, according to the figurative style of prophecy, that every part of that kingdom should, in proper time and order, receive the punishment due to its apostacy and wickedness.

Dr. Hammond observes, that there is no reason to fix any new critical notion singly to either of these expressions, but to take them altogether for what was meant by the land: as when God is described, xiv. 7. the Creator of heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water, the latter three are set to denote what is elsewhere ordinarily called the earth, and no more, in opposition to heaven, that is, this inferior terrestrial globe, and all in it. According to this meaning of the expressions, these plagues will chiefly denote some judgments to be inflicted on the kingdom of the beast, and the more considerable parts of it. It is a judicious observation in general, that we should carefully avoid carrying any figurative expression of prophecy too far, which has often lost the true meaning in the end.

Probable reasons are however alleged for a more particular application of these expressions. Rivers and fountains of waters may not unfitly signify the original countries, or seats of empire, in distinction from the provinces, as fountains are the original of rivers, which run in one common collection of waters into the sea; and as waters are necessary for life, so, when they are infected and become deadly, they are an emblem of such judgments as should cut off the very supports of life. Finally, the waters becoming blood, so that God gave them blood to drink, because they shed the blood of his saints and prophets, seems farther to shew, that this judgment was to consist in much bloodshed and slaughter; as they persecuted the martyrs by shedding their blood, they should suffer in like manner, and their blood should be shed by each other's hands, according to the expressions of this prophecy, xiii. 10. He that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword; or, in the words of the author of the Wisdom of Solomon, concerning the punishment of Egypt, That they might know that wherewithal a man sinneth, by the same also shall he be punished, (xi. 16.)

[3] Ver. 6.] The remark of the bishop of Meaux on these words deserves to be taken notice of; They have their bellyful of blood, of which they are so greedy, especially in civil wars, where each one seems to drink the blood of his fellow-citizens.

[4] Ver. 12.] The antichristian kingdom of the beast is described all along in expressions taken from the ancient prophets. It has, therefore, in prophetic style, its barrier, called Euphrates, in allusion to that river so memorable in the history of the Assyrian and Babylonian empires, and so often represented in Scripture, the frontier and boundary of the holy land; great rivers, such as was Euphrates, being usually both boundaries and barriers: so that to dry up a river, or the waters of it, that the kings on the other side may pass over it, is a very natural figure to express the invasion of one kingdom by another, and that the usual boundary or barrier is not sufficient to prevent an invasion, or to keep the nations on each side within their own bounds.

The kings of the east, in the language of Scripture, were such as reigned to the eastward of Judea, or on the east side of the river Euphrates. These were, in their order, the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian, who all were to pass the river Euphrates, when they invaded Judea. So that the expression of drying up the water of the river, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared, will very properly signify such kingdoms or empires as shall border on the kingdom of the beast, especially to the east, or to the eastward of the boundaries and barrier of his dominions.

Some interpreters consider this expression as a more particular allusion to the memorable taking of Babylon by Cyrus: for Cyrus took the city by night, having first dried up the stream of the river Euphrates, which ran through the city, by turning the channel into a lake, according to the account given both by Herodotus and Xenophon, as well as by the Scriptures, as Dr. Prideaux observes.*

The Turks are originally an eastern people; their dominions are the eastern boundaries of the pope's territories, especially as Naples and Sicily are accounted fiefs of the Roman see. They may then be intended by the kings of the east, and the river Euphrates may signify the Adriatic Sea, or Gulf of Venice, which is the eastern bounday of the pope's dominions, even of the exarchate of Ravenna, which is most properly the patrimony of St. Peter, in the style of the Roman court. As this sixth vial or cup is to be answered by some historical event, after the preceding weakening of the papal power by the protestant reformation, it seems probable this prophecy is not yet accomplished; I shall not therefore attempt to apply any particular history to it, but shall leave a fuller explication of it to future times, and shall only make these general remarks upon it.

First, That it seems to intend some farther judgment on the pope's kingdom, and most likely by some invasion of his dominions; as it is pouring out a vial or cup full of the wrath of God, it must, I think, be understood of some punishment inflicted on the beast's kingdom, as all the former vials were; and as it is preparing a way for the kings of the east, it most likely means some punishment to be inflicted by an invasion from some empire or kingdom on its eastern boundary.

Secondly, This judgment most probably means some descent of the Turks, who are now the eastern neighbours of Italy, and may some time or other have an opportunity, as they always have an inclination, to break in upon a country that lies so near, and is so inviting; or if any other nation should become the eastern neighbour of Italy, even the empire itself might not spare the Roman territories, the better to support its own pretensions and claims on the other kingdoms and states of that fine country. But this I propose only as a probable conjecture.

Yet I may observe, that I apprehend the order and series of these prophecies will not admit the interpretation of some authors, who understand it of the conquest of the eastern empire, by the taking of Constantinople. This would greatly confound the periods, and throw the prophecies out of all order. This period must, according to the series of the vials, fall in, I think, within some time between the years 1700 and 1900.

Besides, the conquest of the eastern empire will not, as I apprehend, answer a particular judgment on the papal power and kingdom, which seems to be the plain and direct intention of the prophecy itself; so that, without saying what in particular, we may probably conjecture, it will be some future judgment on the papal power, by some future invasion of the pope's dominions from the east. Though it is proper to acquaint the reader farther, that some learned men understand a figurative Euphrates, some obstacles that stopped the princes of Europe from attacking directly the church-empire, especially in its ecclesiastical capacities; that this Euphrates will be dried up, or these obstacles removed, when the terror formerly arising from the bulls, edicts, and censures, of Rome shall be shaken off, and the neighbouring princes and states shall attack the popes themselves, if they shall either excite their subjects to rebellion, or disturb them in their government: or even, if they shall refuse what their powerful neighbours require and demand of them, of which we have some eminent instances in the chief Roman catholic powers, Spain and Portugal themselves not excepted.

[5] Ver. 13.] This is the first time in which the false prophet is mentioned. It is observable, he is always mentioned together with the devil and beast, as one of the three principal enemies of pure religion; he is referred to, as a known character taken notice of before; he is represented as one who wrought miracles before the beast, (xix. 20.) Now, in the description of the enemies of true religion, (chap. xiii.) we have express mention of three chiefs: the devil, the first beast that rose out of the earth; the second beast, that rose out of the sea: this second beast was to do great wonders, to cause them that dwell on the earth to worship the first beast. This agrees so exactly with the character of the false prophet here, that I think we may consider it as a different title of the second beast: for the meaning of which, see notes on xiii. 12.

[6] Ver. 16.] Mageddo, or Megiddo, was a city belonging to Manasseh, out of which they could not drive the Canaanites, when the kings of Canaan fought by the waters of Megiddo. (Judg. v. 19.) It was also famous for the defeat of Ahaziah and Joram, by Jehu, when both the kings of Judah and Israel were slain. (2 Kings ix. 27.) It was afterward memorable for the death of king Josiah, slain by Pharaoh-Nechoh, king of Egypt. (2 Kings xxiii. 29.) So that the mourning in the valley of Megiddo, is used as a proverbial expression by the prophet Zechariah, for a great mourning, (xii. 11, 12.)

Whoever the three unclean spirits are, whether, as Mr. Daubuz has hinted, the monks, the religious knights, and the secular clergy, of the Roman church, or, more at large, all who warmly engage in support of this antichristian throne and kingdom; they yet seem plainly to intimate some powerful league or confederacy, by which the principal popish powers shall be engaged with all their forces in some war, in which they shall be totally overthrown, and which shall end in their final destruction, as seems to be more fully expressed in the description of the seventh vial, or last cup. So that we may conjecture, the fulfilling of this part of the prophecy is reserved for the times near the end of this period; the more full explication of which ought, as I apprehend, to be referred to those times themselves.

[7] Ver. 17.] Satan is represented in Scripture, the god of this world, the chief director and agent of all the corruption in it, and is called the prince of the power of the air, Eph. ii. 2. So that pouring the vial into the air, is a proper expression to point out the very seat and foundation of Satan's power and authority, as god of this world, whereby he worketh in the children of disobedience. Satan is perhaps called the prince of the power of the air, to signify that his power is only in this lower world, or, in the language of Scripture, over things done under the sun, where there are so many children of disobedience, whom he may work up to serve his evil purposes. And this representation seems to intend, that when this last vial shall be poured out, Satan shall be bound up; his power shall be so restrained, that he shall no longer be able to prevail, either to corrupt the truth of the Christian religion, or persecute the faithful professors of it.

[8] Ver. 21.] The fulfilling of this part of the prophecy is, according to the order and series, at so great distance, that we can only guess at the historical events which are to answer them, and even such conjectures will likely be very uncertain too: yet, as these prophecies are designed for the benefit of the church in every age, to encourage patience and faithfulness, from hope in God's promises of protection and deliverance, we learn in general this useful and certain truth,—that the remaining efforts of the antichristian powers against the truth and purity of the Christian faith and religion, whatever they may be, shall as surely be punished in the times yet to come, as we have seen they were punished in the times already past. And farther, we may well be satisfied, that this plague, which will fall in with the times of the last period, at the end of it, suppose, from about the year 1900. to about the year 2016. shall quite destroy the tyrannical and persecuting power of the antichristian kingdom, and make way for the next period, the pure and happy state of the Christian church, which, in the order of these prophecies, is to follow upon the downfal of mystical Babylon, when the dragon, which is the devil and Satan, shall be bound and shut up in the bottomless pit. (Rev. xx. 2, 3.) This may then be looked upon as a sure word of prophecy, that this antichristian power must and shall certainly fall in God's appointed time, though all the powers of wickedness unite all their strength, and collect all their force together to defend it; the last vial shall have as sure an effect, as all the former vials have already had. This should encourage the faith and patience of all saints, exhort them to be steadfast and unmoveable, always to abound in the work of the Lord; for his counsel shall stand for ever, and the thoughts of his heart unto all generations.

HISTORY OF THE VIALS.

First vial.—THIS plague of the first vial, or cup, seems to be an allusion to one of the plagues of Egypt, when Moses and Aaron took up ashes of the furnace, and sprinkled it up towards heaven, and it became a bile breaking forth with blains upon man and beast; (Exod. ix. 10.) or to the afflictions of Job, when Satan, by God's permission, smote him with sore biles from the sole of his foot unto his crown. (Job ii. 7.)

Painful and noisome distempers of the body are very proper emblems of an afflictive condition of life; hence, for every man to know his own sore and his own grief, are expressions of the same meaning in the language of Scripture. (2 Chron. vi. 29.)

Such general interpretations of these plagues, would give us a very useful sense of this part of prophecy, if we were to understand no more of it than this—That the justice of God will, by a series of events in providence, to the end of the world, punish the enemies of true religion, and those who persecute his faithful servants. This would be an encouragement to faith and patience; a reasonable warning not to be partakers in such guilt, lest we also be partakers of such punishments, even though we should be of the same opinion with an eminent author:* "As to the vials, though they do plainly reach in a series to the end of the world, I am not satisfied with any exposition I have yet met with concerning their precise time or contents."

The plan of these prophecies, the order of the periods, the successive series of events, may however, I conceive, give a farther light to the general expressions, and furnish us with particular facts in providence, important in themselves, and properly applicable to the several prophetical descriptions; such as may shew, that the historical events of this period are as agreeable to the revelation of prophecy as any of the former.

It is true, as the same ingenious author observes, "Modesty and sobriety are in all things commendable; and in nothing more, than in the explication of these sacred mysteries." I shall endeavour, therefore, with the modesty due to such inquiries, to mention such events in history as I think applicable both to the description and order of the prophecies; leaving it to the judgment of the readers, to give them what degree of evidence they shall think they deserve: only premising this observation—there is a general use to be made of a more general meaning, for the encouragement of faith and patience, and to warn us against falling in with the great apostacy of this period, though we should not be satisfied with the precise time or contents of each particular judgment signified by the several vials in their order.

These vials, full of the wrath of God, seem plainly determined as to their time, to this third period; and this renders all expositions of them improbable, which refer them to any part of history before the period itself begins. This one consideration may set aside many of the expositions which learned men have given us of them: they are to be poured out upon those who had the mark of the beast, and who worshipped his image; they are therefore to be considered belonging to the times in which the beast reigns, and are to be looked for in the times after the popes were invested with the temporal power of Rome, which is evidently the last form of Roman government, and has now continued to be so for near a thousand years to our times.

It seems farther a very natural rule of interpretation, to consider the vials in successive order, describing the events of providence, at proper intervals, one after another, during the twelve hundred and sixty years in which this third period of prophecy is to continue; so that the last plague is to end with the downfal of this mystical Babylon. Let us then see, whether, following this guide, we may not find out something concerning the times and contents of these vials, which may give us reasonable satisfaction.

This plague of the first vial will then be the first in order; and, in time, this will direct us, I think, to look for it, in the times next to the rise of the beast; and, for its contents, in the first remarkable punishment on the supporters of this antichristian power.

We have already seen, that the pope received the temporal power of Rome, together with the exarchate of Ravenna, as the patrimony of St. Peter, about the year 756. by the assistance of Pepin, king of France.

Charles the Great, son of Pepin, was proclaimed emperor by the pope's means, A. D. 800. This prince carried the French monarchy to a very large extent, having France, Germany, and Italy, within the bounds of his dominion; in quality of emperor, he confirmed the grant of the exarchate to the popes, and enlarged the donation of his father Pepin.*

Charles the Great, like another Constantine, seemed to have laid the foundation of a great and prosperous empire for his family, and a state of great outward prosperity for the church.

But it appeared in a very few years, that notwithstanding all the care of Charles the Great, and his son Lewis, surnamed the Pious, that all sorts of corruption gained ground, and continually prevailed both in church and state. The worship of saints and images, the doctrine of purgatory, and masses for the dead, the doctrine of the real presence, and adoration of the consecrated bread, the perfection and merit of a monastic life, the superstitious and idolatrous worship founded on these doctrines, became the sum of religion. The state of the church in these times is not unfairly represented by a very learned historian.† "Nimis increvit hoc sæculo per civiles et bellicas calamitates, indulgentiamque principum, vitio cleri, ambitione pontificum, desidia monachorum, fœda corruptio et vere antichristiana, in doctrina, cultu, moribus, regimine."

The doctrine of the pope's supremacy and power over the whole church was in particular carried to a great height; great indeed, as represented by the Roman writers;

* Burnet, Theory, lib. iii. cap. 5.

* Heiss, Hist. de l'Empire, vol. i. p. 51.

† Spanheim, Hist. Eccl. Sæcul. 9. cap. 5. p. 1343.

in particular, that the imperial dignity was conferred, and the translation made of the empire from the Greeks to the French, by the proper authority of the Roman bishops: so that cardinal Baronius observes, that the title of the western empire was taken from the Greeks, by the pope's authority, for heresy: "Jacuisse absque possessore titulum occidentalis imperii, a Græcis ob hæreses, auctoritate pontificia, sublatum." This authority is asserted to be seated in the pope, and, by Divine right, in him primarily: "Ex insita ipsi Romano pontifici, concessa divinitus, auctoritate, ex potestate quæ in ipso primario resideat." Hence the whole power of the emperors is said to be wholly from the grace of God, and of the apostolic see: "Igitur Dei, et apostolicæ sedis gratia, totum hoc esse, quod consecuti sunt occidentalis orbis imperatores."* More may be seen to the same purpose in the learned Spanheim.

It would be too long to mention the intrigues by which the popes endeavoured to weaken the imperial power, and render the emperors odious and contemptible, as a noted French historian† observes. "Pope Gregory IV. had a great hand in the troubles of the emperor Lewis the Pious, gave secret encouragement to his sons, in their unnatural rebellion, and to Ebbo archbishop of Rheims, and the bishops of France, when they actually deposed him at Compeign, A. D. 833." ‡ "Fovisse eum (Gregorium papam) nefario studio, rebellionem filiorum Ludovici, in optimum ac munificum in Romanam ecclesiam principem, demerendo sibi Lothario, cujus rei non unum documentum est .... Nec dubium est, quin clam a pontifice inducti fuerint episcopi Gallicani, principibus Ebbone Rhemensi, et Agobardo Lugdunensi, quum deposuere imperatorem, apud compendium diœcesios Suessionensis, anno 833."§ This was so fully known, that many of the clergy of France publicly charged pope Gregory with it. "Quare idem Gregorius Pontifex a Franciæ melioribus episcopis accusatus est, quod immemor esset pastoralis officii, moderationis, jurisjurandi facti imperatori." Du Pin‖ gives very near the same account with Spanheim.

A little after this, pope John VIII. assumed the authority of giving the empire to Charles the Bald of France, in prejudice to the rights of Lewis of Germany, the elder branch. "Mortuo Ludovico imperatore, in præjudicium Ludovici Germanorum regis, fratris natu majoris, ad imperii Romani sceptra provehit, ac coronam imponit, interpretatus sincerum beneficium, et jus apostolicæ sedis."¶ "His holiness (says a popish historian), with the other prelates, judging they had more to get by Charles than Lewis, gave him the preference, and crowned him emperor on Christmas-day, anno 875." But Charles, as the same historian observes, obtained this favour of the pope, at the expense of the rights of his imperial crown and sovereign dignity; insomuch, that, of a superior, which he was before, he became a sort of vassal. He also gave up many of the rights of the Gallican church, and promised by oath to protect the pope against all persons.††

These ambitious views and growing power of the bishops of Rome,‡‡ greatly weakened the government and authority of that family, to which it owed its greatness and support. It proved a painful sore, and incurable ulcer, and was in great measure the cause of those many evils, which for so long a time afflicted the inhabitants of the earth, during the quarrels and contests between the successors of Charles the Great, which ended at last in their ruin, carried the crown of France to Hugh Capet, and transferred the kingdom to another family, and the imperial dignity to the Germans, another nation and people; and in these evils, Italy and Rome itself had their share, according to the righteous judgments of God.

The sons of Lewis the Pious, among whom his empire was divided, could no more agree among themselves after their father's death, than they could with him while he was living, their differences were only to be decided by the sword. The battle of Fontenay, A. D. 841. was obstinate and bloody; a hundred thousand men were slain in battle: a blow that so weakened the family of Charles the Great, that it could never after recover itself. "Depuis le commencement de la monarchie Françoise jusque a ce temps que j'escris (says a celebrated French historian*) il ne s'est point repandu, tant de sang François en quelque journée que c'ait esté; il y perit cent mille hommes, horrible playe, et que affoiblit si fort la maison Carlienne, qu' elle ne s'en put jamais remettre." "Cædes miserabilis facta (says another historian†); omnis prope nobilitas Francica cæsa, pertinaci inter se certamine."

The emperor Charles, surnamed Le Gros, reunited most of the dominions of Charles the Great; he inherited Germany from his father, and upon the death of his cousin Lewis, succeeded him in the empire of Italy and kingdom of France. He was crowned emperor by the pope, A. D. 880. and received king of France, A. D. 884. the French passing over Charles the Simple, as too young for government: but this prince was soon forsaken by his subjects, who chose in his room Arnold, his brother's natural son, about A. D. 887. The defection was so general, that he was reduced to great misery and want; insomuch, that he had not a servant to attend him, nor a penny to buy him bread; only Luitprand bishop of Mentz had any pity for him, and at last kept him from starving. "En sorte (says Mezeray‡) qu'il ne luy resta pas un valet pour le servir, ne un seul denier pour vivre, il n'y eut que Luitperd evesque de Mayence, qui en eut pitié et luy donna a manger."

At the death of this Charles Le Gros, the family of Charles the Great was reduced to two princes, Arnold natural son of Carloman, and Charles surnamed the Simple; but there were several persons of great power descended from some of the daughters of Charles the Great,§ as Eudes earl of Paris and duke of France, Berenger duke of Friuli, and Guy duke of Spoleto in Italy. France chose Eudes for their king; this occasioned continual wars between him and Charles the Simple, till the death of Eudes, A. D. 898. But the differences between Berenger and Guy in Italy were much longer, and afflicted all Italy with great calamities, in which Rome itself could not avoid a considerable share. "Hi summam sibi rerum haud malo consilio asciscere nixi, intestinis populorum discordiis Italiam perturbarunt, ac seipsos prorsus una cum ecclesia perdide-runt: ea tempora in rempublicam inferentes, quibus nulla alia tetriora ac fœdiora fuisse, vel principum nequitia, vel populorum insania, in tota antiquitate inveniuntur."*

It is to be observed, that as the popes had themselves a very great hand in exciting these troubles, so they had a great share in them too. "Major pars, licèt Berengarii causa justior esset, pontificis credo auctoritate impulsa, ad Vidonem se contulit."†

The quarrel soon spread itself into the Roman church. The parties of pope Formosus and Sergius raged against each other with uncommon fury; insomuch, that pope Stephen caused the dead body of Formosus to be dug out of its grave, and after condemnation to be thrown into the river Tiber; made all his acts null and void, and took care to make an emperor of his own party. "Lambertum vero regem Italiæ, factionis suæ partes, exemplo patris, fovent-em, inunxit imperatorem."‡

It would be endless to mention all the calamities these civil contentions brought upon Italy, for near fourscore years, till pope John XII. A. D. 960. implored the assistance of Otho the Great, emperor of Germany, "pro Christianæ religionis, atque Italiæ salutis amore."§ Who accordingly came, and put an end to the troubles of Italy; in acknowledgment of which service, he received the imperial crown from the pope, A. D. 962.

The forementioned calamities were great in themselves, and were also an occasion of many others: for these civil contentions had greatly weakened the western empire, so that the Normans were able to invade and ravage several parts of it; especially in France, where at last they forced a settlement, and erected a powerful dominion in Normandy, so called after their own name. The mischiefs these Norman invasions caused in France, are not to be mentioned, says Mezeray,‖ without horror. Their desire of plunder brought them into the richest provinces, the false zeal for their religion (they were then heathens) made them cruel and bloody, especially to churchmen. From sea to sea there was not a monastery that did not feel their rage, nor a town that was not ransomed, pillaged, or burnt, twice or three times; which, says our historian, made it sufficiently evident, it was one of God's terrible plagues.

On the other hand, the Saracens ravaged Italy, fixed themselves at Tarento, made excursions to the very gates of Rome, and carried off the riches] of the churches without the gates of the city. "Saraceni prædæ libidine stimulati, ex Africa classem Romanis littoribus intulerunt, et procursu ad urbem facto, opimas apostolorum Petri et Pauli suburbanas basilicas, nemine vim propulsante, diripuerunt, ac pretiosis omnibus earum ornamentis ablatis, ipsas etiam basilicæ Vaticanæ valvas argenteas asportarunt."¶

About the same time the Hungarians, then a barbarous and brutal people, broke in upon the German dominions, and plundered Bavaria, Swabia, Franconia, and Saxony. They afterward marched into Italy, routed Berenger, cut his army to pieces, and often renewed their incursions, to the great terror and ruin of the inhabitants of those countries which they invaded.

This was the calamitous state of the western empire for above a hundred years from the death of Lewis the Pious, A. D. 840. to the settlement of the German empire in Otho the Great, A. D. 962. and well agrees to the prophetic description, to the time and order of the prophecies, with respect to each other. By the earth, in the prophetic style of these revelations, is meant the Roman empire, or the countries, with their inhabitants, subject to its dominion. The calamities of these times, as they are related in history, may very properly be called a noisome and grievous sore, Ἕλκος κακὸν καὶ πονηρὸν, a painful malignant ulcer. The order of the prophecies shews what state of the empire is meant, that state of it which falls in with the beginning of the reign of the beast, or of the third period of one thousand two hundred and sixty years. It may therefore sufficiently, I think, point out to us on what earth this first vial was to be poured, on whom this plague was to fall, what was the time, and what were the contents of this vial.

Second vial.—Let us follow our guide in the order and series of prophecy and history, and see whether there are not some very memorable events in the series of providence, which are very properly applicable to this prophetical description.

The pouring out of the first cup, foretelling the judgments of God on the successors of Charles the Great, and the new-founded dominion of the papacy, principally occasioned by the pope's ambition and intrigues, has brought us down to the latter end of the tenth century. Then the empire was fixed in Germany by Otho the Great, and the kingdom of France passed into the third race, the family of Capet, in which it still remains, about A. D. 987.

Let us observe what was the next memorable part of history, after these great revolutions in the western empire, and in the nations which owned the authority of the Roman popes; the order and series of the prophecies direct us to look there, as the proper time wherein to find the contents of the second vial.

From A. D. 1000. to 1100. the corruptions of true religion were greatly increased. A prodigious superstition spread every where during the eleventh century, not only among the lower sort and common people, but among persons of the first rank, even emperors and princes themselves; pretended miracles, apparitions of departed souls, dreadful tales of the pains of purgatory, improved the people's superstition, and enriched the church.*

The whole of religion was placed in penances, masses, legacies to redeem souls from purgatory, pilgrimages, especially to the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem, which ended at last in the holy war.†

This gave a fair occasion to the popes to carry on their ambitious designs, and enlarge their authority in things temporal as well as spiritual; the antichristian power began now to exert itself above all that is called God, and to claim a power of choosing and deposing emperors, and to deprive princes of all civil rights by excommunication. Hildebrand was pope, by the name of Gregory VII. A. D. 1073. he expressly claimed the authority of sovereign judge over all, of deposing emperors, and absolving subjects from their allegiance. He actually used this power towards the emperor Henry IV. and other princes of Europe. In the year 1076. he held a council at Rome, of one hundred and ten bishops, who, after mature debate, concluded,* the pope had reason to deprive the emperor of his crown, and absolve the princes and members of the empire from their oaths. This resolution the pope put in execution, excommunicated the emperor and all his adherents.

Farther, in the year 1080. he renewed his excommunication against the emperor, declares he had forfeited the kingdoms of Germany and Italy, and all royal dignity, forbid all Christians to obey him, gives the kingdom of Germany to Rodolf, exhorting all the princes to take arms against him.†

What troubles, what unnatural rebellions, what bloody wars, this most extravagant claim of power occasioned, the historians of those times relate at large; they are such as in themselves might be esteemed justly a terrible judgment for this antichristian apostacy.

This pope Gregory had other differences with almost all the other Christian princes; he threatened to excommunicate Philip the First, king of France, and usurped a full authority over the bishops, and ecclesiastical affairs of France by his legates; and, in a word, he did all that he could to become the only sovereign monarch of the universe: "Enfin, il fit son possible, pour se faire declarer le seul monarque souverain de tout l'univers."‡ Besides all these flames which the ambition of the popes kindled in the western empire itself, it was the occasion of another most remarkable judgment, which fell grievously on the zealous abettors of superstition and supporters of the papal authority.

Pope Urban II. the next but one to this Hildebrand, continued the quarrel with the emperor, who supported Clement, formerly called Guibert, as pope against him.

Pope Urban went into France, A. D. 1096. and held a council at Clermont; he proposed, with great earnestness, to raise an army, which should march into the holy land, to recover Jerusalem and the sepulchre out of the hands of Mahometans. "Sacram Hierosolymorum expeditionem, incredibili sententiarum gravitate, verborum copia, atque animi ardore suasit."

It is incredible what effect so romantic a project had on the minds of a superstitious people; they received it for the manifest will of God, and fell in with the pope's proposal with wonderful zeal. "Postquam autem peroravit, universi qui aderant, divino quasi spiritu concitati, bellum pro sepulcro Christi recuperando, ingentibus studiis animorum jusserunt, atque in eo apertam se Dei voluntatem sequi velle, altissimis clamoribus responderunt."¶

The pope, to encourage their constancy in such a resolution, promises free indulgence for their sins, to take them into the church's protection, both for their persons and fortunes. "Gratias ego Deo maximas (said the pope) quod vos tanta animorum consensione atque alacritate arma pro Christo redemptore vestro suscepturos esse ostenditis; neque tam repentina in tam diversis gentibus conspiratio, sine gravissimo ipsius esse impulsu potest. Nos autem ut studia vestra, quoad possumus, adjuvemus, misericordia Dei, et beatorum Petri et Pauli auctoritate confisi, omnibus qui ad hoc bellum prodierint, omnia pro delictis suis piacula relaxamus, eosque sub ecclesiæ tutelam, et beatorum Petri et Pauli clientelam, tanquam veræ obedientiæ filios, suscipimus, et ab omnibus vexationibus corporum fortunarumque tutos esse statuimus."*

We here evidently see what hand the pope had in this enthusiastical expedition; but we should observe, there was something deeper than superstition or enthusiasm in this project of the popes, which caused so much effusion of Christian blood. These croisades and voyages beyond sea, says a judicious historian of the Roman communion, occasioned the ruin of many great men, and a multitude of common people; but the popes and kings had great advantages from it, to render them absolute. These (the popes) because they took the authority of commanding these expeditions, of which they were the head; they had the persons and estates of those who took the cross in their protection. It made the use of indulgences and dispensations more common than before; their legates had the management of the alms and legacies which were given for these wars; and it moreover gave the popes a pretence to raise the tenth on the clergy.† In effect, no policy could have so well served the pope's ambition, nor any means be better suited to render his authority supreme and absolute.

We have an immediate instance of the truth of these observations. Clement, who disputed the papacy with Urban, had possessed himself of Rome, but Urban, by the help of those who had listed themselves for this holy war, assaulted Rome, and took it, and forced Clement to retire. "Eo ardore (says Sigonius), quo bellum contra Saracenos suaserat, arma paravit, ac propriis multorum, quos ad sacram expeditionem accenderat, auxiliis usus, urbem oppugnavit."‡

An incredible number of persons soon prepared themselves for this holy war. Pope Urban travelled through Italy, to raise money; the people listed themselves so fast in this spiritual militia, that the countries seemed to be deserted, and all the coasts and havens filled with people setting out on their voyage to Asia. "Ex toto occidente, principes, populique adeo frequentes ierunt, ut crederes, vulgo urbes ab incolis deseri, agrosque incultos, solosque deseri; Urbanus Calabriam, Apuliam, et Siciliam, quas Normanni amici tum ecclesiæ obtinebant, lustravit, atque ingentem pecuniæ summam in commoda ecclesiæ profundendam confecit: Cruce signati, diversis itineribus, terra marique, ita ut omnes oras portusque complerent, trajecerunt."§

This first expedition is computed to consist of more than three hundred thousand men.‖ They met with some success at first. Godfrey of Bouillon, their general, had the honour of receiving the title of King of Jerusalem, having taken it A.D. 1099.¶ yet their victories were so bloody, that in a very short time there remained no more than five thousand horse and fifteen thousand foot of that numerous army.

Yet the fire of enthusiasm still spread through the west; another croisade was raised A. D. 1100. This again consisted of above three hundred thousand more. In this expedition my author observes, that not only several great princes, but moreover many prelates, and even many great ladies, resolved to undertake the voyage. "Et plusieurs prelats, et quantité des dames illustres voulurent faire ce voyage."

Thus, in about four years, six hundred thousand men were sent to perish, through the ambitious views of the popes. These expeditions continued for many years, with an incredible effusion of blood. According to some authors, there perished above two millions of these enthusiasts: others observe, there were hardly any men left in the west, and almost no persons seen, but either infants or widows.

In fine, about the year 1190. the emperor Frederic, our king Richard, Philip Augustus of France, and others, made another fruitless and inglorious expedition; and, after the loss of the greatest part of their armies, were forced to leave what had been so long contended for, with so much bloodshed, in the hands of the Mahometans.

This is a very remarkable part of history; it falls in exactly with the order and series of the prophecies, and is so memorable a judgment on the supporters of the papal apostacy, that I shall leave it to the reader's judgment, whether it does not give light to the time and contents of this second vial.

Third vial.—We have supposed the judgment of the foregoing vial, or cup, to have been the croisade or holy war, by which the ambition of the popes, and gross superstition of the people, had involved a great part of the church and empire in many grievous calamities, and many hundred thousand lives were sacrificed to a wild enthusiasm.

The judgments signified by this third vial, or cup, then, according to the order of the prophecies, will be the next remarkable judgment upon the followers of the beast, which, according to the order of time, must be about A. D. 1200. for a proportional number of the twelve hundred and sixty years of this period. The contents of this vial, or nature of the judgments signified by it, is shedding of blood, in recompence for the blood of the saints shed by authority of the beast. This judgment is chiefly to fall on those parts of the western empire, which were the original seat of the beast's residence and dominion.—Let us then inquire, whether we have not historical events in this period of time, which very properly answer to the prophetical descriptions, and sufficiently verify the truth of this prediction.

We may observe, that the persecuting power of popery was fully established, and raged with greatest fury, during this period of time. It was in this time they were most eminently distinguished for shedding the blood of saints and prophets.

The Albigenses became numerous and powerful;* they were spread through Languedoc, Provence, Dauphiné, and Arragon; they were protected by persons in power, in particular by Raymond count of Thoulouse. Pope Innocent III. sent his legates to suppress them, about A. D. 1198. He gave them commission not only to preach against the Albigenses, but to excite princes and people to exterminate them by a croisade, in which he endeavoured to engage Philip Augustus, then king of France, and the great princes and lords of his kingdom.

Besides all former methods of proceeding against heretics, which one would have thought were severe enough; this pope Innocent III. found out, and established, the new method of the Inquisition.* Father Dominick was made inquisitor about A. D. 1216. When he received his authority from the pope, he declared that he was resolved to defend the doctrines of the faith, meaning the corruptions of the Roman church, with the utmost vigour; and that if the spiritual and ecclesiastical arms were not sufficient for this end, it was his fixed purpose to call in princes to take arms against heretics, that the very memory of them might be destroyed.

Thus, all the severe and bloody methods of persecution were set on foot; a vast army of cross-bearers was raised: Mezeray† says, they were not less than five hundred thousand. They besieged Beziers, took it, and put about sixty thousand to the sword, and proceeded with great cruelty, till they had ruined the count de Thoulouse, and given his estate to Montfort general of the croisade, as a reward for his services.

The severest methods of persecution were established by the famous council of Lateran.‡ The poor Albigenses were every where a sacrifice to the merciless rage of their enemies. The chief zeal of the church, in those times, consisted in putting those they called heretics to death in the most cruel manner they could invent. Thus they made themselves worthy of the judgment, That God should give them blood to drink.

And we shall find this part of the prophecy as fully verified in the events of providence as the former.

There had been great contests between the emperors and popes for a long time about investitures, or the right of presenting to bishopricks and ecclesiastical preferments. The emperors claimed this right, as belonging to their regale, a royalty belonging to the crown; on the other hand, the popes claimed it, as an unquestionable part of the pontifical authority. This contention had occasioned great confusion and disturbance at various times; parties were formed on each side, distinguished by the names of Guelphs and Gibellines: the Guelphs were the papal party, the Gibellines the imperial.

The emperor Frederic II. was excommunicated A. D. 1227. for not going in person to the holy war.§ This so angered the emperor, that he endeavoured every way to mortify the pope. He engaged several of the powerful noblemen of Rome against him; so that the pope was forced to leave Rome, and retire to Perugia. The Guelph and Gibelline faction strove in every place to raise their own party,‖ and to ruin the other; so that almost all the cities in Italy were in civil wars, and the blood of the citizens, in almost every place, shed by their own hands.

However, the emperor embarked the next year for the holy land, but soon found the pope had sent him into Syria, that he might make war against him the better in Italy. He therefore returned, recovered the places taken from him by the pope, ravaged all the pope's dominions even to the gates of Rome. In the year 1237. he beat the army of the league formed against him, after a furious and bloody battle, and put the general and other chief officers to death by the hands of the common hangman. The animosities of the two parties, the Guelphs and Gibellines, were so outrageous, that not only the several cities of Italy were divided, but particular houses and families, so that they gave no quarter to each other.

The death of the emperor Frederic II. A. D. 1250. left the empire in great confusion. Many pretended to the imperial dignity. These contests were sensibly felt in Italy; such cities as held of the empire, either formed themselves into commonwealths, or were governed by princes of their own.* Pope Urban, jealous of the power of Manfred, who had possessed himself of the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, and to recover the power of the Guelph party, which was almost ruined, made an offer of the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily to Charles earl of Anjou, brother to Lewis king of France, on condition he would bring sufficient forces into Italy, to support the almost ruined party of the Guelphs.† Charles accepts the pope's offer, was crowned by Clement IV. on condition to hold those kingdoms of the holy see, by homage, fealty, and an annual rent. His army was joined by the Guelphs, defeated Manfred's army, and so got into possession of both the Sicilies. Upon this, Conradin duke of Suabia, son of the emperor Conrad, and last of the family, was encouraged to enter Italy by the Gibellines, who were not able to endure the power of the Guelphs, so greatly strengthened by the protection of Charles. Both sides came to a battle, in which Conradin was beaten and taken prisoner, with Frederic of Austria who accompanied him, and both had their heads cut off: so that the two great families of Suabia and Austria became extinct, A. D. 1268. This dishonourable execution was by the pope's advice, who near his death gave it for a maxim, The life of Conradin is the death of Charles; "Conradi vita, Caroli mors; Caroli vita, Conradi mors."‡

Rodolph of Hapsburg, afterward emperor, who, by transferring these inheritances into his own family, raised the grandeur of the present house of Austria, could not be persuaded to meddle with the affairs of Italy; so that the government of most cities fell into several hands, just as the contending parties could prevail over each other.

The contest, upon the death of Rodolph, between his son Albert of Austria and Adolph of Nassau, kept the affairs of Italy in pretty much the same state. The feuds between the Guelphs and Gibellines continued and increased, "Jamais les deux partis des Guelphs et des Gibellines, ni furent si acharnez l'un contre l'autre, qu'ils etoient alors."§

Pope Boniface VIII. persecuted the Gibellines and the cardinals Colonna with great severity.‖ This more inflamed the parties against each other; so that the pope was taken prisoner by the Gibellines, the grief of which is supposed to have hastened his end, "Dolore animi confectus periit."¶

Pope Clement V. a little time after, consulted his own safety, and retired with the cardinals into France, where the court of Rome continued for above seventy years, in a sort of banishment from their own country and dominions; in all which time, the Guelphs and Gibellines made war on each other, and Rome was in the greatest confusion.

The emperor Henry VII. resolved to assert the rights of the empire in Italy. Pope Gregory, on the other hand, by secret practices, raised a powerful league against him. He engaged the king of Naples, the cities of Florence, Siena, Lucca, Cremona, Padua, and others, to oppose him. The city of Rome was in great distraction. The Colonnas, at the head of the Gibellines, seized on the Lateran, the amphitheatre, and other principal places of the city.

John, brother of the king of Naples, at the head of the Guelphs,* possessed himself of the capitol, castle St. Angelo, the mole of Adrian, and the Vatican. Platina has represented the disorders of these bloody civil wars, as if the Italians were in every place thirsting after each other's blood, without any bounds to their mutual rage and cruelty. "Intestina mala quotidie, cum magna hominum cæde, in unaquaque civitate, in quovis parvo etiam castello, committebantur, cædebantur cives, necabantur senes, allidebantur infantes, nec ullus crudelitatis modus inerat."

Benedict XII. in order to make as many friends as he could, and keep up an interest in Italy against the emperor, published an edict, whereby he confirmed to all persons, who had seized on the governments of Lombardy, that they should have a just title by that grant to what they had usurped. "Fece un decreto, che tutti i tiranni di Lombardia possedessero le terre, che se havevano usurpate, con giusto titulo."†

Platina farther observes, he pretended a right to make such grants, because, during the vacancy of the empire, all the power of it resides in the pope, who is the only vicar on earth of Jesus Christ, the supreme King. "Suo jure (ut ipse dicebat) tribuit, quod vacante imperio, omnis ejus potestas in pontificem recidat, Jesu Christi, supremi regis, unicum in terris vicarium."‡

The emperor, on the other hand, not to be outdone by the pope in liberality, presented all who had seized on any part of the estate of the pope or church, with a title to possess them as their own, by virtue of the imperial authority.§

Thus were the parties spirited up against each other. The contest continued for above a hundred years, spread itself throughout all Italy; so that there was not a city, scarce a village or a family, in which they did not shed each other's blood in this furious contention. It would be endless to mention particulars; I shall only take notice of one, the massacre in Sicily, usually called, The Sicilian Vespers, A. D. 1282. Pope Nicholas had the chief hand in the plot,‖ and managed the principal parts of it, though it did not break out till after his death, as Mezeray expressly declares. The French were murdered throughout the whole island; they massacred them at the very altars; they ripped up the women with child, and dashed out the children's brains against the stones: eight thousand were murdered in two hours, and they spared the life but of one single person.

When we see in history such bloody contentions, for so long a time, occasioned by the popes' ambition, to wrest the civil authority of the emperors out of their hands, and seize on it for themselves; we have evident proof of this righteous judgment of God, that he gave them blood to drink, as they had shed the blood of his saints.

We see their ambition proved as bloody and destructive to themselves, as to those whom they persecuted for their faithfulness in the cause of truth and righteousness. Here is a remarkable concurrence of persecution on the one hand, and of punishment, by civil contentions and bloodshed, on the other; which are the distinguishing marks of this vial or cup, as the time exactly answers to the series and order of the prophecies.

Fourth vial.—We may still observe a near resemblance between the prophecies of the vials and trumpets; on sounding the fourth trumpet, a third part of the sun was smitten; this fourth angel pours out his vial upon the sun; there is however this difference, that on sounding the fourth trumpet the sun was darkened, and the day shone not—on pouring out the fourth vial, the heat of the sun is so increased, as to become intolerable and painful.

The sun, says an illustrious interpreter,* is put, in sacred prophecy, for the whole species and race of kings, in the kingdom or kingdoms of the world politic, shining with regal power and glory. "Darkening, smiting, or setting of the sun, is put for the ceasing of a kingdom, or for the desolation thereof, proportional to the darkness: and the scorching heat of the sun, for vexatious wars, persecutions, and troubles, inflicted by the king."†

Great troubles are often expressed in Scripture, by burning the inhabitants of the earth. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate; therefore are the inhabitants of the earth burned, and few men left. (Isa. xxiv. 6.) The elegance and propriety of the expression, to scorch men with the heat of the sun, was well understood by the inhabitants of the hot eastern countries, who well knew what great mischiefs hot and burning seasons often occasioned. Our Saviour, when he had used the same figure of a scorching sun in the parable of the sower, Matt. xiii. 6—21. interprets it himself, of tribulation and persecution.

I think it is not material to inquire, what particular effects of a scorching sun are the precise meaning of this prophecy; whether, for instance, famine, on burning up the fruits of the earth, or pestilential distempers, the effects of unwholesome seasons; or, more generally, some great and painful affliction, as the prophet explains a like expression, In the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction. (Isa. xxiv. 12.)

We may understand this scorching men with fire, so that they were scorched with great heat, as a prediction, that the judgments of God should reach his enemies in every place; for the host of heaven and seasons of the year should fight against them, and smite them with destruction, so that they should find no room to escape.

Let us then see whether, in the times which fall in with this vial, according to the order of the prophecies, we shall not meet with such historical facts, as will fully verify this prediction.

The time answering to the foregoing vial brought us down to about the year 1371. when the factions were so well quieted in Italy, that the popes returned to Rome, from their banishment at Avignon in France. As, in the style of prophecy,‡ the sun is put for the whole species or race of kings, in the kingdom or kingdoms of the world politic, so the popes, as heads of this political state restored to the seat of their empire, will be most naturally meant by this figurative representation of the sun; so that the power given to the sun to scorch men with fire, will most probably mean some great and grievous evils brought upon the inhabitants of the earth, by their hot and burning passions of ambition, envy, and covetousness, the causes of many mischievous disorders.

Upon the death of pope Gregory XI. which happened soon after his return to Rome, there followed a great schism, which was the most memorable event, and of greatest consequence, in the history of those times, "L'histoire du schisme des papes est le plus considerable evenement de ce siecle," says the learned Du Pin.*

The citizens of Rome, in order to fix the residence of the popes among themselves for the future, warmly pressed the choice of a Roman, at least of an Italian; there were but four Italian cardinals among the sixteen then at Rome, the other twelve were Ultramontains; so there was little expectation of a plurality of votes in favour of an Italian. However, the multitude continually cried out, they would have a Roman pope, and threatened the French cardinals to cut them in pieces, if they did not choose a Roman, at least an Italian.† At length the people broke into the conclave, and seized the cardinals, continually demanding a Roman pope. Some of the cardinals' domestics having said to them, Have you not the cardinal of St. Peter? immediately, as if he had been duly elected, they clothed him in the pontifical robes, placed him on the altar, and proceeded to adoration, notwithstanding his own declaration, that he was not pope: yet the next day he caused himself to be proclaimed pope, by the name of Urban VI. The cardinals then publicly owned him, yet privately writ to the king of France, and other Christian princes, that it was a void and null election, which they did not intend should be acknowledged.

Urban, trusting likely to his party at Rome, behaved with great pride and insolence, and very much disobliged the cardinals. They retired from Rome to Fundi; there they chose another pope. The better to reconcile the difference between the French and Italians, they chose a German, Robert cardinal of Geneva, who took the name of Clement VII.

Thus a schism began, which continued many years, and divided the several kingdoms and states of Europe; some supporting the cause of Urban, others the interests of Clement, who left Italy, and placed his residence at Avignon.‡ Urban left his seat vacant by death, A. D. 1389. The Italian cardinals proceeded to a new election, and chose Boniface IX. a Neapolitan. In like manner, upon the death of pope Clement, A. D. 1394. at Avignon, the cardinals of that party proceeded to another election, and chose Peter Luna, of Arragon, who was named Benedict. Many attempts were made to heal this breach, but all to no purpose; a renunciation or cession of both the popes was proposed, but that suited the ambition of neither.

The Romans, after the death of Boniface IX. chose Innocent VII. and after him Gregory XII. his successors. The mischiefs of these contentions were at last thought to want the remedy of a general council. A general council was held at Pisa, A. D. 1409. The council deposed both popes, Gregory and Benedict, and chose a new pope, who took the name of Alexander V.

One would have thought this decision should have ended the dispute; here was the determination of a general council, in which there were twenty-two cardinals, twelve archbishops, sixty-seven bishops in person, eighty-five deputies, a great number of abbots, proctors of orders, and chapters, with sixty-seven ambassadors of kings or sovereign princes: and yet both the popes found means to support themselves, and keep up a party; the one chiefly in Italy, the other principally in Spain. Alexander V. chose by the council of Pisa, was received as pope by the greater part of the nations. Upon his death, John XXIII. was chose in his place.

There was now three successors to St. Peter, in three lines of succession, at the same time. John XXIII. appointed a general council to be held at Constance, A. D. 1414. This council pressed him to resign, and declared he ought to do so, as well as Gregory and Benedict.* John did all he could to avoid this ungrateful proposal, but finding he could not gain his point in the council, he retired from it. The council notwithstanding continued, and cited John to appear. Upon his refusal, they declared him suspended from all government spiritual and temporal; and, at last, by a decisive sentence, deposed him. Gregory renounced the papacy, and was confirmed a cardinal; but Benedict continuing to oppose the council, was declared contumacious, a schismatic, and deposed.

The next business was to choose a pope, to whom all would submit, now the former were deposed. The council unanimously chose Martin, anno 1417. This seemed to put an end to a long schism, and to restore the peace of the church. But it soon appeared, the ambition of the popes was restless, and a continual source of disorders and mischievous contentions.

Pope Eugene IV. who succeeded Martin V. was greatly displeased with the council of Basil, for maintaining the authority of councils to reform the church both in head and members. Therefore, A. D. 1432. he published an order to dissolve it. The council could not prevail upon the pope to revoke the decree, yet continued to sit notwithstanding.† They cited the pope to appear before them; he was forced at last to revoke the dissolution, to allow and approve the continuation, with all that had been done by the council in that time; and the decree of the council of Constance was renewed, for the confirmation of the authority of general councils.

Yet still new differences arose: the pope translated the council from Basil to Ferrara, and opened a council there, Jan. 10, 1438. Yet many bishops continue still at Basil, and proceeded so far as to depose pope Eugene, and chose another pope, who was called Felix V.

Thus the schism was renewed by two popes, each at the head of a council‡—Pope Eugene presiding in the council of Florence, to which place he had translated the council from Ferrara; and pope Felix presiding in the council of Basil; and at the same time Germany proposed to call a third general council, to examine the rights of the other two. This schism continued to the death of Eugene, anno 1447. Felix then resigning all his pretensions to Nicholas V. his successor.

From this time (though the schism was ended) the popes were more taken up with the wars of Italy,§ enterprises against the Turks, aggrandizing their temporal power, and establishing their own families, than in any care of religion; which proved the occasion of great disorders.

Alexander VI. was one of the worst of men; he dishonoured his dignity, says Du Pin, by ambition, avarice, cruelty, and debauchery. According to Mezeray, he was one of the most impious and vicious of men; and if there was any one who exceeded him in abominable crimes, it was his own bastard son Cæsar Borgia.*

The disorders and calamities occasioned by these contentions, which the ambition, tyranny, and cruelty, of the popes were the sole cause of, appear every where in the history of these times; neighbour princes and nations were divided by their quarrels, and they set the whole world about them in a flame, by the fire of their contentions: all the principal wars and quarrels of this age had their rise from the ambitious projects of the popes.

This was the chief spring of those long and bloody wars about the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily. Pope Urban, to revenge himself of Jane queen of Naples,† offered the investiture of that kingdom to Charles of Durazzo, and persuaded him to attempt to dethrone her, though he was greatly obliged to her, and even designed by her for her successor. This ungrateful attempt, at the pope's solicitation, made the queen change her mind, and adopt Lewis duke of Anjou for her heir. Charles of Durazzo was crowned at Rome, anno 1380. took Naples without resistance, and put queen Jane to death, together with her husband Otho of Brunswick.

Upon this success of Charles, the duke of Anjou was somewhat in doubt, whether he should pursue his claim; but pope Clement, who had no other way to depose Urban, used all endeavours to press him to it, that it seemed, says Mezeray, he valued not the ruin of the church, both in temporals and spirituals, if he could but establish himself. "Qu'il sembloit, qu'il ne lui importoit pas de la ruine de l'Eglise, au temporel, et au spirituel, pourvu qu'il put procurer son establissement."

As these wars began, so they were kept alive by the intrigues of the popes for above a hundred years, in which France, Spain and Germany had their share as well as Italy.

But these evils, great as they were, were not the only mischiefs the ambition and contentions of the popes caused in these times.

The council of Constance persecuted John Huss, and Jerome of Prague, with great severity, and a dishonourable breach of faith; they were both burned by order of the council, notwithstanding the emperor's safe conduct. Such an unjust and perfidious declaration, That faith was not to be kept with heretics, quite enraged the Bohemians. The emperor Sigismund, who succeeded his brother Wenceslaus in that kingdom, was fain to use the army he designed against the Turks to quiet the Bohemians.‡ The pope sent a legate to raise a croisade against them. There were many lesser skirmishes and battles with the Hussite general Zisca. At length an army of forty thousand horse, and as many foot, was sent against them, anno 1431. with the pope's legate, and many princes of Germany, at the head of it. This great army was defeated by the Bohemians; and they were not at last subdued but with great difficulty, and by reason of differences among themselves, which were raised and managed by the pope's agents, to weaken and destroy them.

Nor were these all the fatal consequences of these ambitious contentions of the popes; they caused a schism between the Greek and Latin churches, and a war between the Christians of the eastern and western empires, which greatly weakened the Christian interest against their common enemies, the Mahometan Turks. They kept up continual quarrels among the Christian princes, which the Turks, who were watching all opportunities, knew how to improve. Mahomet made great advances in Europe; and, A. D. 1453. put an end to the eastern empire, by taking the city of Constantinople, which has continued to be the seat and capital of the Turkish empire ever since. He soon passed over into Italy, took Otranto, left a garrison in it; and nothing seems to have saved Italy from the greatest danger, but the death of Mahomet, and a dispute between his sons about the succession; for Mahomet was eagerly bent on taking old Rome, as he had already taken new Rome, or Constantinople. But the providence of God cut off his power, and put an end to all his designs with his life.

If now we consider the events of providence in this period, not only in a few particular instances, but in the general history and state of the Christian world, in the mischievous effects which the ambition and contentions of the popes caused every where, do they not very fully and properly answer the prophetic description?

The many evils caused by the hot and furious zealots for the pope's ambitious views, were fitly represented by a hot and intemperate season, whereby men were scorched with great heat.

Some interpreters carry the meaning of these expressions yet farther, and conceive they are to be understood in a literal sense also, for intemperately hot and burning seasons, which should destroy the fruits of the earth, occasion famine and pestilential distempers; and it is certain, in the history of this period, that the prophecy is fully verified in this meaning too. Not to enter into a particular detail of the numerous instances the history of this period furnishes us with, there is one so remarkable above others, and which falls out at a time so proper to close this period, that I think it deserves particular notice.

A new kind of disease invaded Germany this year, A. D. 1529. says a very judicious historian: "Men being taken with a pestilential sweating, either died in twenty-four hours; or, if they sweated out the poison, they recovered by degrees their health again: but before any remedy could be found for it, many thousands perished. This distemper, in a very short time, spread itself from the ocean all over Germany; and, with incredible celerity, like a fire, raged far and near. It is commonly called, the sweating sickness of England; for, in the first year of the reign of Henry VII. of England, which was in the year of our Lord 1486. the same plague infested that country: and, because there was no remedy known for such a new distemper, it swept away a vast number of people. At this time also there was a great scarcity of corn and wine; so that all the judgments wherewith God, in his anger, uses to punish an unthankful people, as the sword, pestilence, and famine, fell upon Germany at one and the same time."*

It appears this was a new distemper, and but lately known, yet it was not the first time this period or age was punished with it: "There was a sweating sickness about eleven years before, (A. D. 1517.) being of that malignity, that it killed in the space of three hours; many persons of quality died of it: it was so mortal among the vulgar sort, that in some towns it took away half the people, in others the third part."*

About thirty years before this, viz. the beginning of the reign of Henry VII. "there reigned in the city, and other parts of the kingdom, a disease (says the Lord Bacon), then new, which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness; it was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, and infinite persons died suddenly of it, before the manner of the cure and attendance was known."†

Here we see a new pestilential distemper returning three times in the space of about forty years, and the last time not confined to a particular country, but spreading itself through most parts of Europe.

I cannot leave this part of history, without the account a French historian gives us of it in his own country; as, I think, it greatly illustrates the propriety and elegance of the prophetic description.

"From the end of the year 1528. to the beginning of the year 1534. (says the historian,) Heaven was so angry with France, that there was a continual disorder of the seasons, or rather summer alone had taken all their places; so that for five years there was not two days of frost together. This intemperate heat enervated nature, if I may so express it, and made it impotent; it brought nothing to maturity, the trees blossomed immediately after the fruit, corn did not increase in the ground for want of water; there was such a quantity of vermin, as eat up the young shoots; the harvest did not produce sufficient for the next year's seed. This scarcity caused a universal famine; after which there appeared a distemper called troussegaland, and then a furious pestilence; by which three plagues, above a quarter part of mankind was carried away."‡

Thus literally, as well as in a figurative meaning, there was power given unto the sun to scorch men in this period.

What little effect these judgments of God had on the world for their reformation, to abate their enmity to the truth, or cruelty to the faithful professors of it, we may learn from the infamous conduct of the council of Constance, which, in open violation of the public faith, burned John Huss and Jerome of Prague; and gave a public sanction to that scandalous doctrine, That faith is not to be kept with heretics: and we shall have yet farther instances of it in the following periods of prophecy and history.

Fifth vial.—This vial or cup is poured out on the throne of the beast, so the word is in the original. In the Scripture-language, throne, kingdom, government, authority, dominion, and power, are of like signification: to translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and to set up the throne of David over Israel, is to take the authority and power of government from the one, and give it to the other; (2 Sam. iii. 10.) to establish the throne, is to confirm the kingly power and authority, as God promised David, And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever. (2 Sam. vii. 16.) An enlargement of the throne, signifies an increase of dominion and power, as, when Solomon was set on the throne of the kingdom, the court congratulated David, and wished prosperity to the new king, in these words, God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne. (1 Kings i. 47.)

The throne then of the beast, which our translation has rendered his seat, seems plainly to mean, his authority and power, rather than the city or seat of his residence. For the prophetic language puts a throne to signify, not the seat of a kingdom, but its power and authority. And so this very prophecy explains it; this angel poured out his vial on the seat of the beast, and his kingdom was full of darkness.

Darkness is an emblem of affliction; a kingdom full of darkness will then naturally signify a great diminution of power and decay of authority: so that the distinguishing punishment of the beast in this period, that his kingdom shall be full of darkness, will most properly mean some great and successful opposition to the papal power and authority, which shall much weaken and lessen it, and give such uneasiness to the supporters of it, as shall drive them into a rage, and make them bite their own tongues, as it were, for anger and vexation.

Let us see, then, how this prophetic description is answered by the events of providence, in the times which fall in with this period of prophecy.

The last vial brought us somewhat beyond the year 1500. We shall easily perceive the most memorable events of history which next followed in order of time, were those which prepared the way for the protestant Reformation, and at last fixed and settled it in many considerable kingdoms and states of Europe.

The power and authority of the popes were attacked with success; entire nations were cut off from the kingdom of the beast. A very considerable part of those who had been long subject to his authority renounced it, and have continued freed from it to this day: even the nations which still profess obedience to the pope, have greatly abridged and restrained his power. They have learned to oppose his extravagant claims, and have rendered impracticable any ambitious views of a supreme unlimited authority in temporals and spirituals, which the popes had often aimed at, and at some conjunctures had a fair prospect of establishing.

The care of a wise and good Providence did not permit the kingdom of the beast to rise to such a degree of power, or even by the most cruel exercise of the power it had attained, to suppress altogether the cause of truth and Christian liberty. The blood of the martyrs, instead of destroying their cause, helped to promote it; many were justly displeased with so cruel usage of good men, pitied them for their sufferings, and began to have more favourable thoughts of their opinions. The corruptions of popery grew daily more visible to the world; the scandalous use pope Leo X. made of indulgences, to raise money every where by them, provoked Martin Luther to preach against them. This so nearly touched the power and interest of the pope, that he resolved to put a stop to all such disputes, so dangerous to his authority. He solemnly condemns the doctrine of Luther, and engages the emperor Charles V. to see his bull put in execution. Luther, under the protection of the elector of Saxony, not only continued to maintain his first doctrines, but openly declared himself farther against other corruptions of the Roman church; in which he was followed by many princes and cities of the empire. The doctrines of the Reformation spread so fast, and were propagated in so many places, that it was judged necessary to call a general council, as the only effectual means to put an end to those differences. So a council was appointed to meet at Trent, A. D. 1542. which, after many suspensions and intermissions, ended at last, A. D. 1563.

This council was so artfully managed by the popes, and ended so much to their advantage, so fully confirmed their corruptions, and condemned all doctrines tending to a reformation, that it was unanimously rejected by all who maintained the necessity of a reformation. Instead of proving an effectual remedy to restore peace, it greatly exasperated men's tempers; for, by the decrees passed in the council of Trent, all hopes of reunion or accommodation were entirely cut off. The kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, the northern kingdoms of Sweden and Denmark, many states of the empire and cantons of Switzerland, and great numbers in France, Hungary, and Bohemia, firmly adhered to the Reformation, separated from the Roman communion, and absolutely renounced the papal authority.

The popes, who were accustomed to use other arms besides spiritual, engaged the house of Austria, and several princes, by all possible means, to suppress the northern heresy, as they styled the Reformation; and left no methods they could think of untried, by which they could hope to ruin it: so that wars, invasions, assassinations, massacres, are the principal parts of the history of these times, for above a hundred years. We need but just mention the many bloody wars in Germany, in which Charles V. was endeavouring to destroy the liberties of the empire, with the protestant Reformation, the many civil wars in France, the long wars between Spain and the United Provinces, the Spanish invasion of our own kingdom, the massacre of Paris, the powder-plot in England, the many attempts against the life of queen Elizabeth, the actual assassinations of Henry III. and Henry IV. kings of France, and of the prince of Orange, founder of the Dutch commonwealth; all which are recited at large in every history, and recorded as the most memorable events of those times.

Yet the same histories also shew us, that all these attempts in aid of the pope's authority failed of success. Several kingdoms maintained the Reformation against all opposition, and, by full authority of the supreme civil powers, annulled and made void the usurped authority of the popes; in many countries where yet the government continued in obedience to the pope, as supreme head of the church, the free possession and exercise of the protestant religion was tolerated and indulged.

At length, after many and great struggles, the chief defenders of the pope's cause were brought to confirm and ratify the peace and liberty of the protestant states. The treaties of Westphalia, A. D. 1648. are well called, the basis of the religious liberty of the empire. The treaty of Osnabruck, between the emperor and Sweden, (art. v.) and the treaty of Munster, between the emperor and France, (art. xxxiii.) confirmed the protestant states in their religion, and quieted them in their possessions in the most solemn and authentic manner;* and, what deserves observation, notwithstanding the public and vigorous protestations of the pope to the contrary. Pope Innocent X. had vehemently opposed these treaties in their progress, and no sooner were they concluded and ratified, but he solemnly protested against them, as highly prejudicial to the catholic religion and holy see. He declared them null and void, and freed all persons from any obligations to keep them, though they had sworn to the observation of them. "Nous de notre propre movement, et de notre certaine science, et meure deliberation, et de la plenitude de la puissance ecclesiastique, disons et declarons par ces mesmes presentes, que les dits articles——ont eté de droit, sont, et seront perpetuellement, nuls, vains, invalides, iniques, injustes, condamnez, reprouvez, frivoles, sans force et effet, et que personne n'est tenu de les observer, ou aucun d'iceux, encore qu'ils soient fortifiez par un serment."†

The great opposition made by the pope to these treaties, while they were negotiating, gave the contracting powers reason to apprehend some such protestation at the conclusion of them. It was therefore inserted in the treaty itself, that these articles should be observed, any declaration made or to be made to the contrary notwithstanding. "Sans s'arreter a la contradiction, ou protestation, fait par qui ce soit, ecclesiastique ou seculier, soit au dedans soit au dehors de l'empire, en quelque tems que ce puisse etre, toutes les quelles oppositions sont declarées nulles, et de nul effet, en virtu des ces presentes."‡

It is well known, these treaties of Munster and Osnabruck have continued an essential part of the constitution of the empire ever since; they are generally made the basis of all subsequent treaties, and have very frequently been confirmed by them.

Thus the Reformation proved a great blow to the authority of the popes; many nations withdrew altogether from his obedience, and such as remained to own him head of the church, yet evidently shewed much less regard to his authority than before; and, on some greater occasions, plainly appeared both to oppose it, and treat it with contempt. As this is a very remarkable event of providence in itself, it every way answers the prophetic description of this period, That the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat or throne of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness.

CHAP. XVII. SECT. XVI.

CONTENTS.

The former vision represented a very afflicted state of the church; the true worshippers of God, few in number, driven out from society, flying into a wilderness and desert places for safety from persecution, prophesying in sackcloth, in a state of oppression and mourning, often put to death for their testimony to the truth: yet the time of this afflicted state is limited to one thousand two hundred and sixty years, or prophetic days; at the end of which period, this oppressive persecuting power shall be destroyed, purity, truth, and righteousness, which were oppressed and persecuted, shall flourish in a state of great safety, peace, and happiness.

This is a much longer period of prophecy than either of the two foregoing. To make the true intention and meaning of it more clear and evident, one of the angels who poured out the cups of God's wrath, is sent to St. John as a nuntius, more fully to explain it.

A nuntius, angel, or interpreter, was a known part in the ancient drama. Here an angel is sent to interpret this part of the prophecy to us; and we may justly look upon the angel's interpretation as a sure key, which will warrant an application of the several representations; and so far as an angel from heaven explains it, we may be satisfied we have the true meaning of it: so that by the help of this explication in the prophecy itself, we have a sure interpretation of some of the more important parts of the vision, and of such as will make the interpretation of the rest very likely and probable.

1. AND there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters;]

(1.) After I had seen in vision the afflicted state of the church in this last period, and the punishment of its antichristian enemies, by many strokes of Divine vengeance, one of the angels appointed to pour out the cups of God's wrath called me to him, to explain yet more particularly to me some things concerning these judgments, and the characters of the persons on whom they were to be inflicted, which should sufficiently mark them out to a careful observer, as an idolatrous power, ruling over many nations and people.

2. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.]

(2.) With whose idolatrous doctrines and practices the princes and rulers of the world, together with all sorts of people of every rank, had been greatly corrupted: so that they had been prevailed upon by this prostitute to join in polluting the worship of the Christian church, by abominable superstition and idolatrous practices. [1]

3. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.]

(3.) When the angel had thus informed me of the design of his message, the scene of the prophetic vision was changed to a wilderness, a place of retirement and secrecy; there I saw a new vision, a woman appeared riding on a beast, adorned with scarlet furniture; its form like that I saw rising out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, with many blasphemous inscriptions or titles, to shew that this idolatrous persecuting power was the same antichristian Roman government, meant by the beast that I saw in a former vision rise out of the sea. [2]

4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication.]

(4.) This lewd prostitute, who sat on the beast, was herself clothed in the imperial habit, wearing purple and scarlet robes; she was also very richly adorned with gold and jewels, to shew her high quality and great riches; she had also a golden cup in her hand, wherewith she intoxicated persons, and enticed them to join with her in her superstitions and idolatry. [3]

5. And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.]

(5.) This character of an idolatrous persecuting government, represented by this woman sitting upon a scarlet-coloured beast, appeared manifest by an inscription on her forehead, to this purpose: This is a mystical or figurative personage, meaning, under the name and character of Babylon, a power like that of ancient Babylon, a chief promoter of idolatry, by whose authority it was propagated among many nations. [4]

6. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.]

(6.) When I perceived how cruel and outrageous this government was represented, so as to persecute the most faithful Christians to death, and shed their blood, as if drunk and mad with rage, it struck me with great wonder and astonishment, that a power, professedly Christian, should be so intoxicated with pride and cruelty. [5]

7. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast which carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.]

(7.) Then the angel-interpreter, who was sent to explain this vision to me, more distinctly informed me, that when I should more fully understand what this persecuting power was, how it came by its authority, how it abused it, how severely it should be punished for it in the end, my wonder would be much lessened: I will therefore, says he, give you a more distinct account of the original wickedness and punishment of this mystical Babylon.

8. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names are not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.]

(8.) Know then, and understand, this persecuting power will be a revived authority in the same city of Rome, which was once before destroyed by the righteous judgment of God, for persecuting the truth; another persecuting power shall arise after it, which by means of false doctrines, and those hellish principles by which Satan corrupts the world, and maintains a power over wicked men, shall greatly prevail; a corrupt part of the church, who by their antichristian temper and actions shew they are not true Christians, shall be surprised and pleased with it, and the greater part shall rejoice in the revival of a power, to promote their corruptions, and to persecute all who have conscience and integrity not to comply with them. [6]

9. And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.]

(9.) Let them who have a mind to understand this prophecy, particularly attend to this key of explaining it, and it will give them a good degree of knowledge in the meaning of it; let them lay it down for a maxim, that this persecuting power is the city of Rome, so well known by its situation on seven hills. [7]

10. And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.]

(10.) But, said the angel, observe farther, that seven kings are also signified, to express more distinctly under what state or form of government this persecuting power should arise in Rome. Observe then, that, out of seven forms of government, five are already passed; the present that now is, at the vision, is the sixth; after this there shall be another, which is not yet come, and when it comes, is to continue but for a short time. All these are to be passed in their succession, before that form of Roman government shall arise, which is meant by the beast in this prophecy.

11. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.]

(11.) For the form of government here prophesied of, may on some accounts be reckoned as an eighth; though yet, for other reasons, it may be accounted as a seventh, and shall in its due time be as surely destroyed, as the several forms of government in succession before it were. [8]

12. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.]

(12.) More distinctly to shew you the time of the beast in this prophecy, observe the ten horns, as designed to signify several distinct kingdoms and governments, none of which are yet in being, at this time of the vision, but which are to arise in or about the same time with this last form of Roman government; therefore you are to consider the time of this persecuting power, contemporary with ten other kingdoms, or governments, to be formed hereafter, in the dominions of the Roman empire. [9]

13. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength to the beast.]

(13.) When these kingdoms shall be erected, as all had the same intention of cantoning out some part of the Roman empire, a settlement for themselves, so they shall all join their authority and power (however they may be divided in their respective interests and ambition), to support this antichristian persecution of the faithful servants of Christ.

14. They shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.]

(14.) They shall themselves join in this war with Christ and his church, in persecuting all who should adhere to the purity of the Christian faith and worship; but though the faithful shall suffer much from them, they have this consolation in the same prophecy, that Christ, the King of saints, shall, in due time, overcome these powerful conquerors of the Roman empire: for God has constituted him Lord of lords, and King of kings; and God will assuredly defend and protect those whom he has chosen, and called to the privileges of his church, and who are faithful to the cause of God and religion, against the opposition of the world, how powerful soever it may be.

15. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are people, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.]

(15.) The angel-interpreter farther informed me, that I was to understand by that part of the vision in which I saw the whore sitting on many waters, the great extent of that persecuting power, over many nations and people, being supported by the united force of the several nations that had settled themselves in the Roman empire. [10]

16. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.]

(16.) Yet, for the comfort of the faithful, it is revealed, that these very nations who will thus support the idolatry and persecution of the beast for a time, shall at length grow sensible of her extravagant claims and grievous oppressions, shall be highly displeased with them, and resent them; they shall not only withdraw their protection from her, but shall use their power against her; shall strip her of her ornaments and riches, expose her to shame, and bring her to destruction by fire and sword, and all the calamities of war. [11]

17. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.]

(17.) For God, the supreme governor of the world, in whose hands the hearts of kings are, as well as the hearts of meaner persons, though he permits the kings of the earth to support the idolatry and persecution of the beast for a time, yet it is only for a limited time, during the period of this prophecy; when this word of prophecy shall be finished, then he will put it into their hearts to fulfil his farther will, in the destruction of that power which they before supported.

18. And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.]

(18.) And finally, to understand this vision, observe, that the kingdom of the beast is a kingdom in the same great city which you now see the empress of the world, which has subdued the other empires, and subjected so many kingdoms of the earth to its dominion. [12]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

[1] Ver. 2.] IDOLATRY, in the ancient prophecies, is frequently called whoredom and fornication; the prophet Ezekiel interprets, being polluted, after the manner of their fathers, and committing whoredom after their abominations, by making their sons to pass through the fire, and polluting themselves with their idols, (xx. 30, 31.) The prophet Isaiah, in like manner, describes the propagation of idolatry by Tyre, which was spread every where with their great trade and commerce, by these remarkable words, She shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth, (xxiii. 17.) As it is agreeable to the prophetic style to represent cities in the figure of women, so it is to represent idolatrous and superstitious cities by prostitutes and harlots; Seeing thou dost all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman, says the prophet Ezekiel to Jerusalem, (xvi. 30.) A fit expression to shew the evil of idolatry and superstition, and how hateful in the sight of God. This was one distinguishing character of this antichristian power, which ruled over and corrupted so many nations and people.

[2] Ver. 3.] We have already seen in the notes on xiii. 1. that the monstrous wild creature there described, having seven heads and ten horns, with titles of blasphemy, and in which the forms of a leopard, a bear, and a lion, were mixed together, signified the last form of Roman government, contemporary with the several new kingdoms erected on the fall of the Roman empire, after the form of government at the time of the vision, which was the imperial, should be passed away. The present representation of the great whore or prostitute, sitting upon this beast, signifies, that the same state of Roman government is intended, which can be no other than the idolatrous persecuting power, supported by the papal authority. This the angel-interpreter will shew, I think, with full evidence, in explaining the principal parts of this figurative representation.

The beast seems to be called scarlet-coloured, because a scarlet covering, or rich cloth, was thrown over it: might not that rich horse-cloth be embroidered with gold, and have heads and horns worked upon it, as emblems of power and authority, with proud mottoes, or titles, amounting to blasphemy?

[3] Ver. 4.] Purple and scarlet were the colours of the imperial habit: the purple, in times of peace; and the scarlet, in times of war. It is well known, these are the colours used by the pope and cardinals; so that to be raised to the purple, or to the scarlet hat, is used to express being made a cardinal. The use of jewels for state and magnificence, is too well known to be insisted on. The golden cup in her hand, full of abomination and filthiness of her fornication, may be an allusion to those philters, or love-potions, which prostitutes and lewd women were used to prepare, to inflame the love of their gallants, but by which they often disturbed their senses, and made them run mad; or, it may refer more simply to the common effects of drunkenness and debauchery. Babylon is represented as a golden cup, that made all the earth drunken; the nations have drunken of her wine, therefore the nations are mad. (Jer. li. 7.) The disordered senses and understanding of a drunken man, the natural effects of a debauch, are a proper figurative representation of a disordered understanding and judgment of men, misled by any methods of infatuating deceit into idolatry and gross superstition.

[4] Ver. 5.] It has been observed by interpreters, that lewd women were used to have their names written over their doors, and sometimes on their foreheads; and that criminals among the Romans had an inscription of their crimes carried before them. In the first sense, as Mr. Daubuz observes, "This inscription will denote a public profession of what is signified by it, or a public patronage of idolatrous doctrines and worship." In the second sense, it will denote the crimes for which she is condemned, and was punished by the foregoing plagues. Mr. Waple thinks, "This inscription is rather an allusion to the known inscription on the forehead of the high-priest, Holiness to the Lord; whereby is intimated, that this idolatrous persecuting government was an antichristian church, of a temper and spirit quite contrary to the true worship of the one true God."

The paraphrase of the bishop of Meaux on these words deserves observation. "Babylon is meant by the name of the whore, and Rome by Babylon. This is the most natural sense.—We see then why St. John represents Rome in the name of Babylon, as she had all the characters of Babylon, an empire full of idols and divinations, and a persecutor of the saints, as she was." "Sous le nom de la prostituée c'est Babylone, et sous le nom de Babylon c'est Rome, c'est le sens le plus naturel.... on voit donc pourquoy Saint Jean represente Rome sous le nom de Babylone, dont elle avoit tous les characteres, dominante comme elle, comme elle pleine d'idoles, et de divinations, et persecutrice des saints, qu'elle tenoit captifs."

[5] Ver. 6.] It has been observed, I think justly, that the persecution of Christians, at the time of the vision, was not likely to have occasioned such astonishment in the apostle; but he might well greatly wonder, that Rome Christian, once so famous for purity of faith and patient suffering for the profession of truth, should become another Babylon for idolatry and persecution. From hence, protestant interpreters may with reason infer, that this vision does not represent the persecution of Rome heathen, but of Rome antichristian.

[6] Ver. 8.] This description of the beast, that it was, and is not, and yet is, means, in a plain and easy sense, that this persecuting power once was, then ceased to be, but afterward recovered itself again. Mr. Mede, following good authority, reads παρέσται, and renders it, the beast that was, and is not, and yet is to come, which at length shall ascend out of the bottomless pit. The bottomless pit, gulf, or abyss, is mentioned as the prison of Satan, and his evil angels; opening the bottomless pit, signifies a permission of those powers of darkness, to deceive and corrupt the minds of evil-disposed and wicked men with false doctrines and principles of persecution, through their lusts of ambition and covetousness. (Vid. ix. 1.)

The expression, whose names were not written in the book of life, is intended to shew, that this revival of a persecuting power should be greatly owing to some members of the church itself, but such who had lost the spirit and temper of true Christianity, who were led by ambition and worldly interests, and were ready to fall in with any thing that seemed best to fall in with their inclinations and views. The book of life is an allusion to the registers in which the names of persons were enrolled to remain upon record, as members of a corporation, or freemen of a city; to be registered in the book of life, is to be registered as true Christians, who have a right to the promise of eternal life. (Vid. iii. 5.)

Now this description most exactly agrees with the temporal power of the papacy, which arose by the means of false doctrine, persecution, and assistance of a corrupt part of the church itself. Thus Rome, after it had lost all authority, ceased to be a seat of empire, was itself a small dutchy, subject to the exarchate of Ravenna for many years; yet it revived again, recovered great power and authority, and has long continued the seat of the most extraordinary government the world ever saw.

[7] Ver. 9.] This interpretation of the angel leaves no room to doubt, but that the persecuting power here prophesied of, was to be some empire of which the city of Rome was to be the capital, or seat. Rome was as well known by its situation on seven hills, or montes, as by the name of Rome itself; urbs septicollis, was never mistaken for any other city, Roman authors have so fully determined the sense of it:

"Quæ de septem totum circumspicit orbem Montibus, imperii Roma Deumque locus."*

[8] Ver. 11.] This part of the angel's interpretation deserves particular attention. It has appeared difficult to most interpreters; so that there is great difference between them as to the precise meaning of the several expressions.

The whole scheme and order of these prophecies will by no means admit, that the seven kings should mean seven emperors, in immediate succession to each other; for then the text would make the then reigning emperor the sixth, his immediate successor must be the seventh, the whole twelve hundred and sixty years of this period, with all the time of the two foregoing periods, would be comprised in the single reign of one man, and the whole prophecy would reach no farther than a very few years after the vision.

It is to be observed, that, in the style of prophecy, kings mean kingdoms, or states of government. Daniel interprets the beast in his prophecy to mean kings, that is, kingdoms, empires, and distinct governments. These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth. (Dan. vii. 17.) One of these kings the prophet explains by a kingdom and distinct government, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, (ver. 23.) The prophecy before us points out the same interpretation, The ten kings who have received no kingdom as yet, (xvii. 12.) seem plainly to mean, not so many particular persons, who reigned in succession one after another, in the same kingdom or empire, but so many kingdoms, or distinct states of government, contemporary with each other, and all of them contemporary with the empire of the beast.

The angel-interpreter only observes concerning the first five, that they were fallen or passed away at the time of the vision, and, as Mr. Waple justly observes, without any distinct account of them, their time, names, difference, or the order of their succession among themselves; for which he gives this good reason, because they were of no farther use to this prophecy, than to shew that the one head then in being was the sixth of the seven, after five already past. We have no need, then, to inquire, with great exactness, what these five forms of government were; we may content ourselves with a short account of a very eminent Roman historian, very near the time of this vision. "Rome (he says) was first governed by kings, then by consuls, by dictators, by decemvirs, by military tribunes with consular authority."*

The triumvirates were states of confusion, rather than forms of government; and Augustus settled the imperial government, which was the sixth, the form of government at the time of the vision, and which long continued under his successors, to the time of the destruction of the Roman empire by the northern invasions.

There appears no reason why the imperial government under Christian emperors, should, or even can, be called a new form of Roman government: for all the powers of government were the very same under heathen and Christian emperors. I cannot therefore apprehend, that Constantine and his successors, when the empire became Christian, can be meant by the seventh king, or the kingdom which was not yet come. It seems to me, that the angel-interpreter intimates plainly enough, that the seventh form of government was not to begin till the imperial power of Rome should be destroyed, in whose soever hands it should be. After the imperial power was destroyed, Rome was long subject to the kingdom of the Goths in Italy. It was recovered out of their hands, and continued for some time, during the exarchate of Ravenna, under the eastern empire, governed by a lieutenant, and a duke subject to the exarch, as we have observed more largely before, on chap. xiii.

* Ovid. Trist. lib. i. Eleg. 4.

* Tacitus, Annal. lib. i. cap. 1.

This state of Rome and its government, answers well to the description of the beast, that was, and is not; and shews how this last government of the beast may, on some accounts, be called the seventh, and, for other reasons, the eighth head of government, as the exarchate of Ravenna was in some sense a new form of government, and yet hardly so distinct and proper a form of government, as to be reckoned a different head.

[9] Ver. 12.] What we translate one hour, μίαν ὥραν, ought to have been translated the same hour or point of time, as several learned interpreters have justly observed. We have the sameexpression in the next vers e, μίαν ὥραν, which we have rendered one mind, meaning plainly the same mind. The beast, then, and the ten kings or kingdoms, are to be contemporary powers, or to reign at the same time.

Horns are a usual symbol of strength, as the strength of some of the fiercest beasts lies in their horns. This symbol of strength and power has been anciently used in the prophets, to signify the power of empire and government. Thus the prophet Jeremiah concerning Moab, The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord, (xlviii. 25.) The prophet Zechariah saw the kingdoms that oppressed Judah under the representation of horns: Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and beheld four horns. And I said unto the angel that talked with me, What be these? and he answered me, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem, (i. 18, 19.) In the prophecy of Daniel, horns are most expressly designed to signify the empires of Media, Persia, and Greece; The ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kingdoms of Media and Persia. And the rough goat is the king of Greece; and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king, the founder of that empire, (viii. 20, 21.)

There were ten horns in the representation, to denote ten distinct kingdoms, which should arise in several parts of the Roman empire, which the northern nations should canton out among themselves, and erect into new and distinct kingdoms.

I have before observed, that ten in prophetic language does not always mean a precise number, but is used as a certain number for an uncertain, to express in general several or many; ten times is the same as many times, ten women the same as many women, ten men mean several men, ten sons several sons, as we have observed in the annotations on Rev. ii. 10.

So that there seems to be no necessity of finding a precise number of ten different kingdoms, or just so many different governments, neither more nor less, erected on the ruins of the Roman empire: in fact, in those times of disorder and confusion, they were shifting and variable; but that several new kingdoms were erected, when the northern nations divided the empire among themselves, is well known in history, and evident in the several distinct governments of Europe at this day.

Several interpreters have reckoned up the number of ten precisely with the time when, and the place where, they were erected, from whom every one who pleases may satisfy his farther curiosity. It may be sufficient here to mention the account given of them by the illustrious Sir Isaac Newton.*

1. Kingdom of the Vandals and Allans in Spain and Africa.
2. The kingdom of the Suevians in Spain.
3. The kingdom of the Visigoths.
4. The kingdom of the Allans in Gallia.
5. The kingdom of the Burgundians.
6. The kingdom of the Franks.
7. The kingdom of Britain.
8. The kingdom of the Huns.
9. The kingdom of the Lombards.
10. The kingdom of Ravenna.

Whether we reckon after this manner with our illustrious author, or in a somewhat different manner with others, yet, in general, this division of the Roman empire into several distinct kingdoms, was a memorable event of providence, and distinguishing mark of this period of prophecy: so that we may observe with the bishop of Meaux,—here, without the necessity of being more particular, is a character very remarkable, that so many distinct kingdoms should be raised out of one and the same empire, in Spain, Gaul, Great Britain, Italy, Pannonia, and elsewhere. This is a character sufficient to distinguish this period, especially if we join to it the other parts of the description.

[10] Ver. 15.] This observation of the extensive authority or jurisdiction of the beast, or last government of Rome over so many other nations and people, as well as the immediate subjects of its own government, is another very considerable mark of that persecuting power which the Spirit of prophecy here describes. It strongly points out one circumstance peculiar to the papal government of Rome, and wherein it differs from all other governments in the world, whose jurisdiction and authority are confined within the bounds of their own dominions; whereas the authority of this government reaches all the nations settled in the Roman empire, and all the kingdoms erected by them.

[11] Ver. 16.] The description of this judgment may receive light from a passage in the ancient books of Moses. If (says God) I whet my glittering sword, and mine hand take hold on judgment; I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh; and that with the blood of the slain and of the captives, from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. My sword shall devour flesh. (Deut. xxxii. 41, 42.) The original אכל properly signifies to eat, and figuratively to devour. In like manner, the expression of the prophet Jeremiah, xxx. 16. All that devour thee shall be devoured, is literally, All that eat thee shall be eaten.

The nations of the earth, supporters of this tyrannical power, may resent any attempts made by it against their own authority, as the empire, France, Spain, and Portugal, have often shewn; and yet they may bewail her, and lament for her, as it is represented they will do, xviii. 9. when her utter destruction shall take away a main support of their own superstition and tyranny.

[12] Ver. 18.] This is so plain a description of Rome, as must necessarily determine the meaning of this prophecy to some state or form of government in that city. What state or form of government it is, the other parts of the description do, I think, sufficiently determine, to the reasonable satisfaction of all who are willing fairly to inquire into the true meaning of it: so wonderful agreement in the events of providence, to the prediction, in which so many things were to concur, and for so long a time, is a great evidence of the truth of the prophecy, and a great encouragement to faith, patience, and hope in God, the great and useful design of it.

CHAP. XVIII. SECT. XVII.

CONTENTS.

In the former chapter, the angel-interpreter, or nuntius, has given us a key to the meaning of the prophecy, which describes this third and most lasting period, in which the saints were to suffer for their faith and constancy; that they might expect a time of temptation and suffering; that they might be more careful to confirm their faith and patience, and encourage their perseverance.

This chapter represents another angel sent from heaven, to reveal the sure judgments of God on these enemies of the pure Christian religion, to foretell their sure destruction, and in as eminent a manner, as God ever appeared to punish Babylon or Tyre, the ancient enemies of true religion. This part of the prophecy is very fit and proper for the general design of it, to warn and caution good Christians against the corruption of the time and age in which they live; to give them consolation in all their sufferings, through hope in the protection of God, of deliverance in a proper time, and of a glorious reward in the end.

1. AND after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.]

(1.) Now, after the angel-interpreter had so far explained the meaning of the vision and mystery of the woman, and of the beast with seven heads and ten horns which carried her, another angel was sent from heaven, to shew the sure downfal of this antichristian power: to give weight to this message, it pleased God to send an angel from heaven, as from his court, to declare his decree, and an angel of high and superior rank, to shew the importance of his commission. [1]

2. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.]

(2.) As the angel drew nearer, he proclaimed the decree of heaven with an audible voice, saying, Babylon is fallen; this mystical Babylon shall as surely perish as ancient Babylon formerly did, and become an equal example of ruin. As a city quite destroyed, where there is no more concourse of men, and which is utterly desolate, it shall be a place of resort for hateful birds and beasts of prey. [2]

3. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.]

(3.) The angel declaring the judgment of Rome, shews at the same time the reason of so heavy and severe punishment, because she had not only been guilty of idolatry herself, and with great wrath persecuted the true Christian faith and worship, but had also corrupted the princes and nations of the earth, as if she had given them a cup of poisonous composition, to disturb their understanding, and heat them into rage and fury; she had prevailed upon them to commit the same sins of which she was guilty, and to propagate her corruptions by ambitious views, incitements of luxury, and prospect of gain. [3]

4. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.]

(4.) When this angel had declared the punishment of Rome, a voice from heaven declared what use and improvement good Christians were to make of such a revelation; that they should most carefully keep themselves from falling in with these general corruptions, and no ways assist to support and propagate them. They are warned, on the contrary, with faithfulness, constancy, and zeal, to attempt a reformation of them, at least among themselves, by an open and resolute separation. This is their duty and concern; lest, by aiding or abetting these corruptions, they partake in that guilt, which will make them liable to all the plagues and judgments with which they shall be punished.

5. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.]

(5.) For they may be assured, the time is coming, when such sins as these, like the notorious sins of wicked nations, shall be found ripe for judgment; a decree shall be pronounced against them in heaven, and the execution of it shall visibly shew, that God does not forget, as the workers of iniquity vainly imagine; but will surely remember, in a proper time, to execute justice and judgment, when none shall be able to escape. [4]

6. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double, according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill unto her double.]

(6.) Her punishment shall then be equal to her crimes; she shall not only be punished with a full retaliation for all the injuries and evils with which she has oppressed the faithful servants of God, but she shall be condemned to double damages, and suffer whatever the laws of justice have made the punishment of so great offences. [5]

7. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.]

(7.) When God shall thus arise to punish her, she shall receive sorrow and torment, in full proportion to her former pride and luxury, though she greatly rejoice for the present in her prosperity and glory, as securely settled in her power and authority, without any prospect of danger, or fear of losing it.

8. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burnt with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.]

(8.) Yet her pride and security shall hasten her down-

fal; it shall be one part of her punishment, and which shall greatly aggravate her sorrow, that her plagues shall come upon her at once, in full extremity: all the calamities of famine, death, and utter destruction, shall at once come suddenly upon her; all her pride and power shall not be able to secure her from the justice of God. God, the supreme Lord of the whole world, who judgeth her, is mighty to execute the vengeance he has decreed with irresistible power.

9. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall wail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning.]

(9.) So that even the kings of the earth, and great powers of the world, who were formerly in league with her, supported her in her corruptions, and shared with her in the pomp and luxury of her prosperous state, shall be able to afford her no support, no defence, in this day of God's vengeance; they shall be able to do no more than fruitlessly condole with her, and lament her sad condition, when they shall behold all these calamities come suddenly upon her.

10. Standing afar off for fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas! that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.]

(10.) Instead of being able to help her, they shall themselves be astonished and confounded; like persons thoroughly affrighted, they shall seek to get as far as they can out of the reach of danger, and only express their astonishment at so great and wonderful a revolution, so little thought of, so little expected; they shall only say with themselves, Alas, alas! what a dreadful judgment is come upon the world, that so mighty a city should be so suddenly, so utterly destroyed!

11. And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth her merchandise any more.]

(11.) Her men of business, and skilled in the affairs of life, who gained so much by her preferments, and by employments under her, the men of riches and credit in the several nations which she had corrupted, who were supported in their pride and luxury by her means, shall not be able to help in this hour of her distress, any more than the kings of the earth; they can only weep and mourn for her misery, and for their own loss in her destruction, now all commerce with her shall be utterly cut off, and no man, by her means, shall attain wealth, credit, or power, any more.

12. The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and thyine-wood, and all manner of vessels of ivory, and all manner of vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble,]

(12.) The destruction of Rome shall much resemble the destruction of ancient Tyre, when her great and extensive trade, the foundation of her riches, power, and pride, were totally stopped at once; when she lost all her merchandise, which consisted in all sorts of valuable commodities, such as gold, silver, precious stones, pearls, fine linen, scarlet, and thyine-wood, all curious manufactures in ivory, precious wood, brass, iron, and marble.

13. And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men.]

(13.) She shall trade no more in those things which pride and luxury have set such a value upon, as spices and perfumes, wine and oil, the finest flour and corn, nor shall she trade in beasts and sheep, in horses and chariots, in slaves and the souls of men. [6]

14. And the fruits that thy soul lusteth after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.]

(14.) So great shall the misery of Rome appear in this day of vengeance, that nothing shall be left her in which she was used to have pleasure and delight; she shall be spoiled of all things that served her former greatness or luxury, nor shall she ever be able to recover them, or make up the loss of them.

15. The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off, for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing,]

(15.) Her agents, by whose means she obtained her wealth, and was able to live in such pomp and luxury, and who served her with great zeal, as they shared in her riches and luxury, shall themselves be seized with fear, when they see her torments; they shall then forsake her, and fly as far as they can from her, lest they partake of her punishment, as they were partakers of her guilt, their joy shall be turned into weeping and wailing.

16. And saying, Alas, alas! that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

(16.) They shall utter their sorrow in bitter complaints, saying, Alas, alas! what dreadful calamities have befallen this mighty city, once so admired and adored, which shone in all the pride, and with all the pomp, of riches and grandeur!

17. For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off.]

(17.) But now is suddenly and unexpectedly spoiled of all its great riches, and fallen into the utmost distress of poverty; so that even the lower people, who used to express great reverence and zeal for her, who profited themselves in some inferior offices under her, shall be as useless to her as her greater and more powerful friends; they shall also forsake her, and for their own safety shall get as far from her as they can.

18. And cried, when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!]

(18.) When they see her as a city burnt down to the ground, and her smoke ascending, as it were, from every part of her ruins; they shall cry out with astonishment, Was ever the condition of any city like this, formerly in greatness and glory, now in sudden ruin and misery! [7]

19. And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas! that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.]

(19.) They shall, as is usual in cases of the deepest mourning and sorrow, put ashes on their heads, and cry out with great bitterness of heart, O the inexpressible misery of this great city! she who was used to enrich all who had dealings with her, wherever they were employed in her service; such was her interest, power, and wealth, they were sure to make their fortune by her countenance and favour: yet is she herself suddenly and unexpectedly made desolate, unable to help either herself or her friends.

20. Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her.]

(20.) But, added the angel, though this great event of Divine justice will fill the hearts of many with concern and grief, it will be to the comfort and joy of sincere faithful Christians, for whose consolation these revelations are made. The apostles, prophets, and saints of God, will have reason to rejoice in so wonderful an instance of God's protection and favour; for it is to avenge the cause of his church and faithful servants, God does so severely punish this persecuting city.

21. And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be cast down, and shall be found no more at all.]

(21.) Farther, to confirm the irrecoverable ruin of this persecuting city, another mighty angel appeared in my vision, who plunged a great stone, like a milstone, into the sea, and he explained the meaning of his action by these words: Babylon shall fall, this mystical Babylon shall sink never to rise again; as a stone thrown with violence into the sea sinks to the bottom, and never rises more.

22. And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a milstone shall be heard no more at all in thee.]

(22.) So great and lasting will the ruin of this persecuting city be, that there shall be no more any entertainments of diversion or pleasure for the rich; no more employment for persons skilled in any trade or business; no, not even for the lowest sort of people, such as were used in the meanest services, in preparing corn for the daily food of the inhabitants, and providing the very necessaries of life for them.

23. And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.]

(23.) Nor shall the inhabitants of that ruined city be continued by new marriages, and a succession of families; no bridal-lamp, or songs, no ceremonies of nuptial joy, shall ever more be seen or heard in it; but it shall be quite desolate, and without inhabitants, because it has been guilty of so much pride, idolatry, and cruelty: sins, that God is used to punish with exemplary severity, especially when persons abuse their riches and power, not only to corrupt themselves, but spread their corruptions every where, by their bad example and influence.

24. And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.]

(24.) So great has been her superstition and cruelty, that she has outdone the severest persecutions; she has wantonly spilt the blood of thousands, for being faithful to the truth and purity of the Christian faith and worship; by approving the cruelty of former persecutors, she has involved herself in their guilt, as she is herself guilty of the innocent blood shed throughout the earth, subject to her authority, and in virtue of her canons and decrees: and now having filled up the measure of her own sins, it is righteous in God, so heavy a punishment should fall upon her. [8]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

[1] Ver. 1.] THE description of this angel, as an angel of great power, and the earth was lightened with his glory, seems to allude to the vision of Ezekiel, xliii. 2. when he beheld the glory of the God of Israel; the earth shined with his glory, a bright and shining light usually attended the appearance of angels; and likely the splendour of the appearance was greater, as the angel appearing was more honourable. Sending an angel of superior rank, alludes to the custom of courts in employing persons of dignity, according to the weight and importance of the commission they were to execute.

[2] Ver. 2.] These expressions seem to be taken from the prophet Isaiah, in his prophecy against Babylon, xiii. 19, &c. And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in her pleasant places. What we render, and satyrs shall dance there, the Seventy render, δαιμόνια, demons or devils; the Hebrew שעירים signifies some hairy creature, as a goat. It was a vulgar opinion, as Bochart has shewn, that demons, or evil spirits, were used, of old times, to appear in the shape of goats, or in the form of some hairy creature, and that they were used to have their haunts in forlorn and desolate places;* on which account, this word is sometimes translated demons, or devils. The whole is a strong figurative description of utter destruction.

[3] Ver. 3.] " The Romish clergy (says Mr. Daubuz), by trading in spiritual matters, have gotten vast wealth; these are the merchants of the earth, who, by their popish tricks and trinkets, have gotten a good part of the wealth of the world into their hands. In short, Rome is a great mart (adds our author), the Romish clergy are the merchants and factors, the secular inferior clergy, the monks and friars are the pedlars and hawkers, which retail the merchandise. As for the luxury of Rome, procured by this trade, it needs no proof."

As the destruction of Rome is here compared to the destruction of Tyre, we easily see how proper it was to describe the sins of Rome, by figures taken from the sins of Tyre. The profit of trade created a commerce between that city, then the chief mart of the world, and all nations; so that Tyre spread her luxury and superstition, far and wide, through all parts of the world with her trade. Rome, in like manner, corrupted distant and remote nations, by rewarding her votaries with considerable wealth, encouraging their ambition and luxury; and thus, like Tyre of old, made her corruptions general, and almost universal.

* Lowth, on Isa. xiii.

[4] Ver. 5.] When sins are ripe for judgment, they are said to reach unto heaven, or to come up before the face of Jehovah. So the angel sent to punish the sins of Sodom, We will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord (Jehovah), and the Lord (Jehovah) has sent us to destroy it. (Gen. xix. 13.) Thus the prophet Jonah was sent to cry against Nineveh, for their wickedness is come up before me. (Jonah i. 2.) St. James uses a like expression, The cries of them which have reaped, have entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. It seems an elegant allusion to the methods of justice in human courts, when criminals are actually prosecuted, and their crimes are brought before the court for judgment.

[5] Ver. 6.] By the laws of the Jewish government, some offences were punished by retaliation, or inflicting on the offender as a punishment, that evil which he had injuriously done to his neighbour, to his hurt and damage. It was therefore enacted by the Jewish law, If men strive, and any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot. (Exod. xxi. 23, 24.) In other cases of damage, it was enacted, that the offender should pay double damages.

Thus, in the case of theft, the law requires the thief shall restore double; (Exod. xxii. 4.) it being just the thief should suffer for his offence, as well as make full restitution for the damage he had done. In allusion to these laws of the Jewish government, the punishment of Rome for her idolatry and persecution, is represented as inflicting pains and penalties upon her as an offender, as the laws of justice direct, where injuries are so highly criminal.

[6] Ver. 13.] The several branches of trade here enumerated, are taken from the prophecies of Ezekiel, chap. xxvii. who thus describes the downfal of Tyre, by the loss of all the branches of her trade. Tyre was the great mart of the world, where all things most valued and in highest price were to be bought and sold, to the great profit of that city, as well as of the merchants of the several nations who traded with it. Almost all the expressions in this prophecy are used by Ezekiel, and seem to be copied from his description; even that expression, that she traded in the souls of men, ver. 13. Javan, Tubal, and Meshech, they were thy merchants, they traded in the persons of men. In the original, thy merchants in the souls of men, בנפש אדם רכלך, οὗτοι ἐνεπορεύοντό σοι ἐν ψυχαῖς ἀνθρώπων, Septuagint. The Vulgar Latin renders it mancipia, or slaves. The bishop of Meaux supposes, that by slaves are meant persons of servile condition; by souls of men, or men in general, are meant free persons: to shew, that Rome reduced persons of all conditions, not only bond but free, into some sort of slavery, by subjection to their dominion. I think the persons, or souls of men, in Ezekiel, do naturally mean the merchandise of slaves; but when slaves and souls of men are mentioned both together in this prophecy, may it not point out the nature of that slavery Rome should require of her servants, that they should become her slaves in soul as well as body? At least, it is true in fact, that her slaves lose all religious as well as civil liberty.

It is plain, in general, this is designed to be a figurative, and not a literal description; therefore readers are, I think, at liberty to apply the figurative expressions to such literal meanings as will agree to the general and certain intention of them. But whether each of these wares is designed to point out some particular gainful corruption of popery, may very well be questioned. It is sufficient to answer the general intention of the prophecy, to observe, that Rome shall be deprived of all her wealth, which she procured by her management and intrigues, in the several places where her agents resided, who continually made her returns of great riches, and plentifully supplied her excessive pride and luxury.

It is a pretty observation of Mr. Daubuz, "Rome receives all the luxurious wares mentioned, but she has so infatuated the world, that she pays nothing for them but trumpery; her money are her enchantments and sorceries; her merchants—her superior clergy engross the real wealth of the world to bring it to her; and her returns and exportations are paper and bills, drawn upon heaven and hell, never to be accepted; however, they pass among the common people for payment, as if they were of real value. The merchant, who finds means to get shut of them, takes no care about their intrinsic value, finding gulls who take them off his hands for real wealth."

Whether these wares were designed to signify pardons, indulgences, dispensations, and the like trifles, with which Rome purchases gold, silver, and whatever ministers to pride and luxury, this is a plain and manifest meaning, that she shall be deprived of all her wealth and luxury at once, and of all the means by which she was used to procure them.

[7] Ver. 18.] This wailing of the sailors, by whom, in the allegory of trade, are meant persons inferior to merchants, seems to be taken from the prophecy of Ezekiel, xxvii. 32. And in their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and lament over thee, saying, What city is like Tyrus, like the destroyed in the midst of the sea?

[8] Ver. 24.] This description of the desolate state of Rome, seems to be an imitation of some passages in the prophet Jeremiah, concerning the ruin of ancient Babylon. And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates: and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise, from the evil that I will bring upon her, (li. 63, 64.) This was strictly true of ancient Babylon, which remains a heap of ruins to this day; the city now called Babylon being built in a different place. This part of the prophecy seems strongly to intimate, that Rome shall in like manner be irrecoverably destroyed; a judgment which as yet has not been inflicted upon it. There seems also, in these expressions, an allusion to another passage of the same prophet: Moreover I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the milstones, and the light of the candle. And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment, (xxv. 10, 11.) Music was the entertainment of the rich and great; trade, the business of men of middle rank; preparing bread, and the necessaries of life, the employment of the lowest people; marriages, in which lamps and songs were known ceremonies, are the usual methods of peopling cities, as new births supply the place of those that die. Now, the desolation of Rome is described in such manner, as to shew, that neither rich nor poor, neither persons of middle rank, nor of the lowest condition and employments, should be able to live there any more; it shall not be repeopled by new marriages, but for ever remain desolate and uninhabited, either by persons born in it, or resorting to it, on account of any business or employment whatsoever.

CHAP. XIX. SECT. XVIII.

CONTENTS.

The prophecies relating to this third period concluded with a severe punishment of Rome for her pride, luxury, superstition, and idolatry, and especially for her cruel persecution of all who were found faithful to their duty, in preserving the purity of the Christian doctrines and worship. When Rome thus fell, as ancient Babylon, to rise no more, the heavenly church is introduced as a chorus, or choir, to praise God for his righteous judgments and faithfulness. This excellent hymn of praise, sung by the united voices of angels and saints, the whole assembly of heaven, strongly represents to all Christians, and every church on earth, what grateful sense they ought to have of God's faithfulness in their protection, and of his righteous judgments in punishing the persecutors of truth and religion.

Though, for wise reasons, and for a limited time, God may permit the righteous and faithful to suffer many things from the enemies of truth and righteousness; yet the end, and final event of things, shall surely shew God's faithfulness in the blessing of his people, and justice in the punishment of his enemies. A just reason for consolation, gratitude, and praise.

1. AND after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:]

(1.) When I was thus distinctly informed by an angel, of the total destruction of that persecuting power, which was to arise in this third period, and continue for so long a time, it was represented farther, as if the whole church was assembled together; which I heard, as a chorus, with united voices, begin a hymn of praise to God, saying, Alleluia, let us ascribe salvation, glory, honour, and power, unto Jehovah, the only true God, who is our God.

2. For true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.]

(2.) For his judgments shew him to be just and righteous, faithful and true; his punishment of Rome, in so exemplary a manner, for her pride, superstition, idolatry, and persecution, declares his righteousness; he has illustriously manifested the truth and faithfulness of his promises, in avenging the blood of his servants, on her who so cruelly put them to death for their faith in God, and constancy in his true religion.

3. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever.]

(3.) And they ended their hymn, saying, Alleluia, let God, our God, be praised, who in this last judgment has put an end to the power of persecution for ever. It shall not henceforth, as formerly, rise up again, to persecute the saints; this persecuting city shall lie waste, from generation to generation, never to be restored. [1]

4. And the four-and-twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.]

(4.) After the chorus of the general assembly had ended their hymn, the twenty-four elders, representatives of the united church, the patriarchs, and apostles, and the four living creatures, the cherubim, who were nearest the throne of God, prostrated themselves before Jehovah, and concluded the praises of the heavenly church, saying, Amen, Alleluia, so let Jehovah, our God, be praised.

5. And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great.]

(5.) When this hymn was finished, there came a voice from the throne itself; the oracle pronounced an order to all persons truly religious, to all the faithful servants of God, of whatever state or condition they might be, that they should heartily join in the praise of God, and exalt his name, so glorious in righteous judgment, and faithfulness to his promises. [2]

6. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.]

(6.) Upon this voice of the oracle, the whole church, in obedience to it, began to celebrate the praises of God in another hymn; their united voices were strong, as the sound of innumerable people singing together, that it might be compared to the noise of the sea, or of thunder. They began the praise of God, saying, Alleluia, for Jehovah, the one true God, whose almighty power and supreme dominion reach all creatures, appears to establish his own kingdom of truth and righteousness in the world.

7. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.]

(7.) Let it fill the hearts of all who truly fear God, with gladness and joy, and dispose them to give all honour unto him, now he has so fully and so gloriously accomplished his promises; for now the true church of Christ, his faithful disciples, as his spouse, are appointed and prepared to receive public and eminent marks of his affection, in a state of happiness and dignity, suitable to their relation to him. [3]

8. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.]

(8.) As it is usual for bridegrooms at their marriage to make presents to their brides, of rich ornaments and apparel, so, at this time, the church of Christ shall be presented with suitable ornaments; it shall be adorned with real righteousness and holiness, with a Divine nature and godlike temper, in conformity to God's own perfections: ornaments more valuable, and more honourable, than the most costly or honourable habits of the eastern princes, or of the ancient priests.

9. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they who are called to the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God.]

(9.) The angel then directing his speech in particular to me, bid me take notice of this part of the prophecy, and write it down as a maxim of great use to the patience and consolation of the saints, as they may rest satisfied in full assurance of hope, that all the promises in this prophecy shall be surely accomplished; for they are the faithful, the never-failing word of God.

10. And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus. Worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy.]

(10.) Upon this kindness and condescension of an angel conversing with me, I was going to express my thankfulness and respect, by prostrating myself at his feet; but he immediately stopped me, and informed me, that in this revelation he was employed as a servant of God, together with myself; that I was now to consider him, though an angel, as one of my brethren, whom God employs in revealing things relating to Christ and his church. The visions which revealed to me so many things concerning the future state of the church, proceed from the same Spirit of prophecy as all true revelation does. Worship not me then, says the angel, but God, whose servants we both are in this revelation, and from whom we have both received the same Spirit of prophecy. [4]

11. And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.]

(11.) The prophetic visions were continued; a new scene was presented before me: the gates of heaven were set wide open for an army to march out in order. This army was led by a person riding on a white horse, such as generals were used to ride on solemn processions. He appeared to be the person to whom God had given all power, and committed all judgment, who was to accomplish all the promises of God in faithfulness, and to execute all his threatenings in righteousness, for the protection of God's people, and for the punishment of their enemies.

12. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, which no man knew, but he himself.]

(12.) He appeared with a noble aspect; his eyes were gloriously bright and piercing; his head, to shew his numerous conquests and large empire, was adorned with many crowns: so great was the dignity and authority conferred upon him, that no person besides himself could fully comprehend it. [5]

13. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called the WORD OF GOD.]

(13.) He was dressed in a robe of deep red, as if it had been dipped in blood; to express, that Jesus, who, for his voluntary obedience unto death, when he shed his own blood, was highly exalted, and had a name given him which is above every name, should fulfil this prophecy, in the utter destruction of the enemies of his government: their slaughter should be then so great, that their blood should, as it were, be sprinkled on his garments; then he should be celebrated under the glorious title of the Word of God. [6]

14. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.]

(14.) The prophetic vision farther represented this general followed by the armies of heaven, which marched after their prince and chief commander in great state; themselves richly clothed in splendid habits, wearing the finest linen: to signify, that now the church should attain a state of peace and triumph: their faith and patience should be highly rewarded; their happiness and joy should be far above what Rome ever saw in the glory of a triumph. [7]

15. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.]

(15.) The vision farther represented a sharp sword, coming out, as it were, of the mouth of Christ, to signify, that he had the full power of the sword; and that now he was about to use it, in a strict execution of justice on the enemies of truth and righteousness; that he would chastise them as with an iron rod, and punish them with the most severe vengeance of God's wrath, which is, as his power, almighty, and able to punish his enemies with utter and everlasting destruction. [8]

16. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.]

(16.) Finally, I observed a motto, or inscription, on one part of his garment which covered his thigh, the place where the sword was usually wore; in which inscription he was styled King of kings, and Lord of lords: to signify, that he was really possessed of a just dominion over all the princes and kingdoms of the earth; a dominion which the eastern monarchs, and after them the Roman empire, unjustly attempted, a title which with great vanity they assumed to themselves.

17. And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God;]

(17.) As I beheld this general marching with his army in order, on this great expedition, the event of it in the total overthrow and destruction of his enemies, was declared by the voice of an angel, who seemed to stand in the sun; who, with a very audible voice, invited the birds of prey to the carcasses of the slain, as to a great feast, which the vengeance of God on his enemies would soon provide for them.

18. That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.]

(18.) In which feast, they should prey upon the dead bodies of a numerous army; many persons of the highest rank and character should remain dead, and unburied on the field of battle: so that the birds of prey should feast themselves on the flesh of kings, great captains, and of mighty men, as well as on the flesh of common soldiers, and their horses. [9]

19. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.]

(19.) I beheld also in my vision, another army appear to oppose Christ, and the army of heaven, which he led: the beast, which represented the persecuting power of Rome, in conjunction with the kings of the earth, who aided and supported that persecuting power, gathered all his force together, and headed a numerous army: all the enemies of truth and righteousness combined to oppose a thorough reformation of their errors, superstition, idolatry, and persecution.

20. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he de- ceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.]

(20.) But Christ and his saints obtained a full and entire victory over them; a victory so complete, as when the generals and all the chief officers are made prisoners of war, and the rest of the army is cut to pieces in the field of battle. For the persecuting powers, represented by the beast and false prophet, the principal persons who had supported the apostacy by false doctrines, and imposed on the credulous by pretences to wonders and miracles, were made prisoners, to suffer a more exemplary punishment by the hands of justice; for these were afterward condemned to be burned alive, and had their sentence executed upon them, being thrown into a pit of burning brimstone.

21. And the remnant were slain by the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.]

(21.) As to the rest, the persons of lower and inferior rank, who had abetted the apostacy, and concurred in opposing a reformation, they, like the common soldiers of an army, fell in the field of battle, and were left there unburied, as a prey for the fowls of the air to feed on: a very strong figurative expression of their full and complete destruction. [10]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

[1] Ver. 3.] THE expression, Her smoke rose up for ever and ever, seems to be taken from the prophet Isaiah, where it is explained by the prophet, to mean perpetual destruction. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever. (Isa. xxxiv. 10.)

Mr. Daubuz observes, the two alleluias in this part of the hymn correspond to the messages of the two angels, one of which proclaims the fall, and the other shews its perpetuity. This repetition may however be accounted for, as corresponding with the hymns of the ancient church, in which we may observe, that repeating the word alleluia, is used by the authors as an elegance in the composition.

[2] Ver. 5.] A voice from the throne, is from the glory, or the oracle; this shews the great authority and solemnity with which this order was published. The praise of God, to which this oracle directs, seems somewhat different from that of the foregoing hymn; that hymn was to celebrate the praise of God, principally on account of his faithfulness and justice, in the punishment of a persecuting power, which had long oppressed the faithful servants of Christ. But this, as appears by the following hymn, in obedience to the direction of the oracle, is principally to praise God for the happy and glorious state of the church, consequent upon this punishment of their enemies; that happy and glorious state of the church, suppose, wherein it is said to live and reign with Christ a thousand years, and which is more largely described in the following chapter. For which great goodness of God, all good men are prepared, by this solemn thanksgiving, to express their hearty and grateful acknowledgments.

[3] Ver. 7.] The ancient prophets describe the favour of God to his people, by the affection of a bridegroom: For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as a bridegroom rejoices over a bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee. (Isa. lxii. 5.) The church is represented in the New Testament, in the same similitude of a bride: For I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. (2 Cor. ii. 2.) As marriages were used to be celebrated with great joy, the marriage of the Lamb with his church, is a fit emblem to shew the state of prosperity and happiness to which God will raise it, after all its sufferings for the sake of truth and righteousness.

[4] Ver. 10.] It has been often questioned, how the apostle should ever think of worshipping an angel, as proper worship and religious honour are expressly forbid to any creature, and as idolatry is so great a sin, in account both of the Jewish and Christian religion; and as this answer of the angel did not so fully satisfy St. John himself, that what he offered was sinful, and of itself unlawful, for he offers to do the same thing again afterward, (xxii. 8.) Before we answer this question, we ought, I think, to answer a previous question: Whether the apostle did intend any proper religious honour or worship to the angel at all? The word which we render to worship (προσκυνῆσαι), is used for civil respects, as well as for religious honour; it properly means a known custom of the eastern people, of bowing down to the ground, and kissing the feet of persons of very superior rank. Thus Ruth complimented Boaz: Then she fell on her face; and bowed herself to the ground. (Ruth ii. 10.) Thus Abigail also complimented David: She fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and fell at his feet. (1 Sam. xxv. 23, 24.) The apostle then, notwithstanding any thing in the expression, might mean no more than the most humble act of civil respect; the original word meaning, in general, both civil repsect and religious worship, must be determined to either, by the circumstances of the discourse in which it is used. It will be sufficiently distinguished, I think, by being referred either to the true God, or to a creature.

The reason for which the angel forbids this high act of respect, seems to intimate, that he did not understand it as an act of religious honour; he mentions nothing of the sin or danger of idolatry in it; he only shews it was improper the apostle should give such respect to him; not by shewing it was unlawful to give such respect to any being whatsoever, but because he was a fellow-servant with the apostle, and of his brethren the prophets, as it is more clearly expressed, xxii. 9. As if the angel had said,—I have but received the same Spirit of revelation from God, which you also have. The testimony of Jesus is the true Spirit of prophecy; in him the prophecies of the ancient prophets had their accomplishment; it is still the true spirit and proper intention of prophecy, to reveal things relating to Christ and his church. This is the Spirit of prophecy in the vision you have seen; and if I have now explained any of those revelations to you, the honour is not due to myself, but to God, from whom I received it; let your acknowledgment and thanks be therefore given unto him. This I take to be the plainest account; though the reader should be informed, some learned interpreters understand this action as symbolical or figurative. "To teach and represent unto us, under the person of the apostle himself (says Mr. Waple), that the best men are very apt to be surprised and drawn by the example of others, and by false pretences, into creature-worship; and that such worship is unlawful, let the pretences be ever so plausible; and that the only way to prevent all manner of idolatry, is to keep to the precept here given, of worshipping God alone."*

[5] Ver. 12.] This expression seems to refer to the many characters given the Christ in prophecy, which are so great, that we cannot fully comprehend all that they mean. It has been probably thought by some interpreters, that this part of the description refers to the prophecy of Isaiah: The government shall be on his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. (Isa. ix. 6, 7.) His person and government are represented wonderful and incomprehensible.

[6] Ver. 13.] This title, the Word of God, makes it evident, that the person designed in the vision is the same person whom St. John, in his Gospel, calls by the same name; so that Jesus Christ himself is represented as riding at the head of an army, to take vengeance of the enemies of his religion, and faithful servants.

Mr. Daubuz † observes, "That λόγος, or word, has three several significations; it may signify words, actions, and commands. Christ is the Word of God in all these respects:

"I. He is his Word, because, before his incarnation, and much more since, he has been the great angel of God, to bring messages, or the words of God, to men.

"II. He is the Word of God, because he is the great minister of God, to perform all his works of creation, preservation, and redemption.

"III. As to the word signifying command, Christ is, in respect of that, two ways the word of God.

"1. As he is the executor of all God's commands.

"2. As he is himself the chief commander, and even now joined with God, sitting upon his throne at his right hand; the Prince ἀρχὴ and ἄρχων of the creation, King of kings, and Lord of lords. This account not only shews, our author adds, why Christ is called the Word of God in general, but why he is so called in this place.

"I. Being the Word, as he brings messages, and is the great angel of the covenant, he brings now the greatest errand, the perfection of the covenant in the resurrection, first of the saints, and then of all the dead.

"II. Being the word of God, as he is the great minister, he now comes to perform the most magnificent of God's works.

"III. As he is the executor of God's commands, and is to command and rule under the Father, he comes now to be King of kings, and Lord of lords."

It is observable, that in the temple, the Schechinah, or glory, the presence of God in the most holy place, was the oracle, and the kebla, whence God gave forth his word and command, and towards which presence all the worship of the church was addressed. The oracle was called דביר from דבר, which is often translated λόγος and word. Another Hebrew word אמר, which is rendered λόγος and word, will properly also signify authority and command, and one vested with supreme authority and command. Thus amir, or emir, is a known title of magistracy in the east; and emir al mumunin, is the prince or lord of the true believers, a well-known title of the successors of Mohammed.* Not only the title of emir in the east, but of dictator among the Romans, seems to have come from the same original, as persons whose word and command had sovereign authority.

As in the temple, the Schechinah, or glory, was the oracle and mercy-seat, from which oracle God gave his commands with supreme authority, and at which presence he graciously received the addresses of his church; may not an allusion to this very significant and principal part of the Mosaical institution, be one probable reason, why Christ is styled here the Word of God?

[7] Ver. 14.] The armies of heaven, in the language of Scripture, often mean the angels of God; which, as ministering spirits, who continually attend on his service, may be called the armies of heaven, probably in allusion to the custom of princes, who keep the chief and best of their troops about their persons, as their guard, and in their capital city, the place of their residence; and have their principal and chief officers attending their courts.

In this vision the faithful Christians, who persevered with constancy in the day of temptation, seem represented as received into heaven, and associated with the angels, into the hosts or armies of heaven, as well as in the praises of the heavenly church; so that these armies of heaven may be understood not only of the angels of God attending Christ, but also of such faithful Christians, who had received their crown and reward: they are said to be clothed in fine linen, white and clean; which is just before interpreted to mean the righteousness of the saints.

They seem to be the same persons described before, xvii. 14. And they that are with him, are called, and chosen, and faithful. So that these armies in heaven, which followed their victorious general, seem to include, if not to mean principally, those Christians who had kept the faith against all opposition; to express the high honour and happiness to which they are now advanced.

[8] Ver. 15.] Christ, in the first vision, is represented with a sharp two-edged sword, (Rev. i. 16.) to express one of the principal parts of government, the power of the sword; the jus gladii including the right of making war and inflicting punishments.

To rule with a rod of iron, is an allusion to an expression in Psal. ii. 9. in which it was prophesied concerning the king whom Jehovah had set upon his holy hill of Zion, that he should as easily break his enemies, and all their opposition, as a rod of iron could break in pieces an earthen vessel.

To tread the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God, is an allusion to a passage in the prophet Isaiah, lxiii. 3, 4. usually understood of the Messiah: I have trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled on my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come.

[9] Ver. 18.] This passage is imitated from the prophet

* Daubuz. Waple. † On the place.

* Selden, Titles of Honour, vol. iii. p. 194.

Ezekiel, xxxix. 17, 18. And thou Son of man, thus saith the Lord God; Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field. Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice (or slaughter) that I do sacrifice for you upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood. Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth. . . . Thus shall ye be filled at my table. This is a strong description of a great slaughter and heavy judgment of God, when he shall come to punish his enemies. So it is explained by the prophet, ver. 21. I will set my glory (saith the Lord God) among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them.

[10] Ver. 21.] The general meaning of this strong and beautiful figure is sufficiently plain and intelligible, and sufficient to answer the design of the prophecy, to encourage constancy, faith, and patience; to give consolation and hope, under present oppression and persecution, for the sake of our religion and a good conscience. That the several particulars of this figurative description, have themselves a farther particular meaning, is not so plain and certain. It is, I think, a mark of right understanding, in the language of prophecy, and in the design of prophecy too, to keep to what appears the design and meaning of the prophecy in general, and what the whole of it, laid together, points out to us: and not to suffer a warm imagination to mislead us from the real intention of the Spirit of prophecy, by following uncertain applications of particular parts of it. Who can say, for instance, with any certainty, that the flesh to be eaten, and the birds invited to the feast, have each a particular mystical sense, or that they really mean any thing more than to describe a great battle, defeat, and slaughter?

However, there are, in most figurative descriptions, some particular parts of the representation, that seem, with great probability, designed to point out some chief circumstances to particular observation.

Thus, in this description, the punishment of the beast and false prophet, who were taken prisoners, and condemned to be burned alive, being different from the punishment of the remnant which were slain by the sword, seems to intimate, that the chief and principal maintainers of the apostacy, they who used all their power and all the wicked arts of deceit, in opposition to true religion, shall be punished in proportion to their guilt, and shall suffer in a manner more terrible and exemplary than others. Burning alive is one of the most terrible executions, being cast into a lake or pit of fire, burning with brimstone, images in the mind, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, who are recorded as examples of perpetual destruction, from which they can never possibly recover themselves.

Thus also, as the beast and false prophet do not mean private persons, according to this description, but the powers of bodies politic, in perpetual succession, this very naturally teaches us to consider their punishment in a double capacity; or, to use the words of Mr. Daubuz,* "The design here is to shew us, that Christ will not only destroy at last the persons who at that time shall be in possession of what is signified by the beast and false prophet, but also utterly extirpate the succession of the tyranny and false prophecy for ever: so that the beast and the false prophet are persons in a double capacity, that is, persons in general, enemies to Christ, and also in possession of a power which is to be extinguished with them."

However, this I think we may take as the undoubted meaning of the prophecy in general, that now all the powers of the apostacy shall be destroyed; no opposition shall remain to hinder that happy state of the church, which is to follow in the next period, and which the Spirit of prophecy describes in the following chapter.

CHAP. XX. 1—6.

SECT. XIX. Period Fourth.

CONTENTS.

This chapter represents a new state of the church, upon its deliverance from the persecution and corruption of the third period, or during the reign of the two beasts, for twelve hundred and sixty prophetic days, or years. That long state of opposition is to be followed by a long continuance of peace and prosperity; a fourth period is described, which, among other characters, is to last for a thousand years. The two first periods ended in a deliverance of the church, but those deliverances were of short continuance, and attended with considerable defects; but now, after the church shall have passed through this third trial of faith and patience, it is to attain a state of very great prosperity, and to remain in it for a very considerable length of time. This is that happy state of the church, which, from the continuation of it for one thousand years, is usually called the millenium.

The description we have of it in this chapter is very short, contained within the first six verses; interpreters have, however, abundantly supplied what they thought wanting in the account of prophecy, out of their own invention, it is to be feared, rather than from sure or well-grounded principles of judgment. No wonder then, they differ so much about the true meaning of a prophecy, in which they have mixed so many of their own imaginations; so that the disputes seem not so much what is the intention of the Spirit of prophecy, as which of the interpreters has the finest or the warmest imagination.

Let us then carefully endeavour to distinguish what the Spirit of prophecy plainly intends, from what uncertain conjectures or doubtful reasonings may suggest to our minds, as a more distinct and particular account of it.

The prophecy itself represents it after this manner.

1. AND I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand.]

(1.) After I had seen, in the former prophetic visions, the downfal and punishment of the last persecuting power of Rome, the state of the church which was to follow upon it was represented in a new vision; for I beheld an angel as descending from heaven, like one sent on a message from the throne of God: his commission was expressed by a double symbol: he had a key in his hands, which was the key of the great abyss, or bottomless pit; and he brought also with him a great chain, such as prisoners were used to be bound with to prevent an escape.

2. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years,]

(2.) I soon perceived, in my vision, on what errand this angel was sent; for he seized on the dragon, the old serpent, by which the devil was signified, the great adversary of mankind, and enemy of truth and righteousness, the great seducer of the world into error and wickedness; the angel arrested him, bound him, and committed him to close custody for a thousand years.

3. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.]

(3.) The angel committed him to close custody in a strong prison, he locked him fast up in the bottomless pit, and put a firm seal upon it, that he might not escape, or go about as before, to deceive the nations. Thus was the devil to be confined for a thousand years, though, after that time should be expired, the wise and holy providence of God should take off this restraint, though it should be but for a very short space of time. [1]

4. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.]

(4.) When the church was thus delivered from the power of Satan, by his confinement, either to seduce or persecute it, the happy state of the church was thus farther represented: I saw thrones erected, and persons sat on them, to whom the authority of government, and administration of justice were committed, and such persons were intrusted with it, who had the constancy of martyrs, whom no fears of death could force into any compliance with the antichristian apostacy, but who persevered in the profession of the Christian faith, against all opposition, neither yielding to the general prevailing corruptions, nor making any acknowledgment of subjection to the authority and dominion of the antichristian power of the beast: such as these the Spirit of prophecy declared were the persons to reign with Christ for these thousand years. [2]

5. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.]

(5.) While this happy state of the church shall continue, the party of the beast, they who were united in opposition to pure Christianity, and in persecuting Christ's faithful servants, the remnant who were slain with the sword of him that sat on the horse, (xix. 21.) shall not revive, or recover any part of their former power, but remain altogether unable to disturb the peace or prosperity of the church, till the thousand years shall be accomplished. This happy state of the church may well be called life from the dead, or a first resurrection. [3]

6. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.]

(6.) In this eminently glorious state of the church, happiness and holiness shall not be separate, as they now often are; then they shall be joined inseparably together; they shall be free from all affliction, and from all fears of trouble, when the wicked shall be condemned to the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; the second death shall not hurt them, they continuing faithful in the service of God, to which they are consecrated by the Christian profession, shall live as priests to God and Christ, and shall reign in a pure, peaceful, and glorious church-state, under Christ's protection and favour. [4]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX. 1—6.

[1] Ver. 3.] THE abyss or bottomless pit in which Satan is to be confined for a thousand years, during this happy state of the church, is explained on the first and second verses of the ninth chapter, where an angel is sent to open it, as here to shut up Satan a close prisoner in it. The shutting up of Satan in so close a prison as a pit or dungeon under ground, so sure a confinement by locking it fast, and putting a seal upon it, may well be understood to mean, that for this space of time the devil, who is represented the first in the apostacy, and principal agent in the opposition to truth, righteousness, and religion, shall be fully restrained from the exercise of all influence and power, either to seduce men into error and wickedness, or to persecute men of conscience, constancy, and faithfulness.

As the devil is represented the head or ruler of the evil spirits or angels, a restraint of their power seems also to be intended, in the imprisonment of their chief or head; so that in the general, this seems to be the meaning of the Spirit of prophecy, in this figurative description, that during all the time of this period, that is, for a thousand years, "The church of Christ shall enjoy purity of religion in peace, without any disturbance from those old enemies of mankind, working in the children of disobedience." *

"And this seems to imply (adds our author), that all shall be converted: ——— however, if there be any that remain unconverted, they will, during the imprisonment of Satan, be in so small a number, ——— and so feeble in comparison of the true Christians, that they shall neither dare, nor be able, to disturb the peace of Christ's kingdom." †

It is not improbable, that shutting up Satan in the bottomless pit or abyss may have a particular regard to a restraint on the power of Mohamedism, and effectually stop the prevalency of that imposture, as before opening the bottomless pit had a principal regard to the rise and surprising progress of it, (chap. ix.)

[2] Ver. 4.] This description of the thrones, and of them that sat on them, is not, I conceive, to be understood, as if all who are afterward said to live and reign with Christ a thousand years, were set on these thrones. The expression, I saw thrones, and they that sat upon them, may mean no more, than that some sat on them, how few or how many soever they might be. Though all are said to live and reign with Christ, that may well be understood of a free and full enjoyment of the glorious blessings and happiness of this kingdom of Christ.

The figurative description seems to intimate order and government in this kingdom of Christ, that some were to have judgment given unto them, or to be raised to the authority of magistrates in it. This, as all other governments, was to be made up of governors and governed; and this authority of magistracy was given to them that sat on the thrones, whoever they were, who were judged worthy of such honour and authority in this kingdom of Christ. The expressions seem to be an allusion to the principal court of Israel, in which the members of the Sanhedrin sat on raised seats, or thrones, on each hand of the prince, or president of the assembly. Nor would this representation be improper, though Christ himself should be supposed sitting on the principal seat or throne: for Christ himself, speaking to his apostles, says, In the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. (Matt. xix. 28.) In like manner, this prophecy, And round about the throne were four-and-twenty seats, and upon the seats I saw four-and-twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment, and they had on their heads crowns of gold. These four-and-twenty seats are expressly four-and-twenty thrones, καὶ κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου, θρόνοι εἴκοσι καὶ τέσσαρες.

* Daubuz, on the place. † Ibid.

Thrones, then, as seats of dignity, are to distinguish those who have the administration of government committed unto them from the rest of the people, who are to be governed by them, and can in no propriety be applied to every member of the kingdom, who lives under the protection, and enjoys the blessings, of a government.

It is a question of consequence to the true meaning and right understanding of this prophecy, how we are to understand the souls of them who were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and who are the persons who had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; or, which is the same, who are the persons whom the prophecy intends to represent, as enjoying the blessings of that happy state of the church.

Here interpreters differ widely in their opinion; some understand this description literally, to mean a real and proper resurrection of such persons, who, in the former states of persecution, were put to death for their constancy in the profession of pure Christianity; that is, the martyrs under the heathen empire, and those who were slain under the reign of the beast. It is supposed, that all these saints and martyrs shall at this time be really raised from the dead, for a thousand years before the general resurrection; or, as a very ingenious author* represents it, "Those who have suffered for the sake of Christ and a good conscience, shall be raised from the dead a thousand years before the general resurrection, and reign with Christ in a happy state."

But there are others, who understand this description in a figurative sense; they suppose the prophecy intends such persons as have the true spirit and temper of martyrs, who have like faith, constancy, and zeal, with those whom no persecutions could prevail upon to deny the truth, make shipwreck of a good conscience, or criminally comply with any of the corruptions of their times.

They who are for a literal resurrection of the martyrs, in order to live and reign with Christ for these thousand years, principally insist on the direct meaning of the expressions, *The souls of them that were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus; which they think must mean, The martyrs under the heathen Roman emperors, as beheading was a Roman punishment, and as the very souls that were beheaded, or dead, live again in the millennial state. They farther observe, This is the reward promised to the martyrs, to the souls who cry for vengeance under the altar, and who overcome by death, or by resisting the enemies of Christ and his religion unto death. They observe, This is agreeable to the doctrine of St. Paul, 1 Thess. iv. 16. that the dead in Christ shall rise first; that is, they who died for Christ's sake. This interpretation is confirmed, they think, by the following observation,—that the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished; and therefore this is properly a first resurrection. This shews, they add, that the persons mentioned as dead and living, were once really dead. If they were not, what occasion was there to compare them with the rest of the dead? by which are to be understood, all such Christians who are dead, or shall die, having no title to the first resurrection, as they were neither actually martyrs nor confessors.

These arguments are farther supported by several conjectures, and by an application of some passages of Scripture that are supposed to favour them.

But they who, on the other hand, understand this description in a figurative sense, observe, that all the expressions will very well bear such an interpretation; that it will be more agreeable to the style of prophecy, in particular to the style of this book, which every where abounds in figurative descriptions; that all these expressions are used in the ancient prophets in a figurative meaning, and that there are unanswerable difficulties attending a literal interpretation of them.

Dr. Whitby, in a learned and judicious treatise of the millenium, has considered the whole argument at large, where the reader may find full satisfaction; I shall only set before him the sum of those arguments which seem greatly to confirm the figurative interpretation.

It is observed, in the first place, that all these expressions may very well be understood in a figurative sense. The souls of them which were beheaded for the witness of Jesus,——and which had not worshipped the beast, may easily, according to the manner of prophetic language, signify persons of like spirit and temper with them, of like faith, patience, constancy, and zeal. John the Baptist was Elias, because he came in the spirit of Elias. This is Elias (says our Saviour), which was for to come, Matt. xi. 14. And St. Luke, speaking of John preparing the way for the appearance of the Messiah, thus explains it; And he shall go before him, in the spirit and power of Elias, Luke i. 17. Thus, a state of the church, in which the spirit of the ancient martyrs and confessors, and the purity of those times, shall return, may be described as a church of martyrs, a church so nearly resembling them, in temper, constancy, and zeal.

It is a very easy and natural figure, as well as very common in this book of prophecy, to describe persons by the names of such, whose tempers and characters they imitate and follow. Thus the names of Sodom, Egypt, and Babylon, are so often ascribed to Rome, on account she nearly resembled them in corruption, pride, and cruelty.

* Burnet's Theory, lib. iv. cap. 4.

The other expressions, of a resurrection, of living and reigning, were used before in ancient prophecy, to signify the restoration of the church from a low and afflicted state. Thus the prophet Hosea, exhorting to return unto the Lord, for he hath torn and he will heal; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up; he adds, after two days will he revive us, or make us live again, on the third day will he raise us up, as from the dead, and we shall live in his sight, (vi. 1, 2.)

In this prophecy, when the two witnesses were slain, and their dead bodies lay in the streets of the great city, (Rev. xi. 7, 8.) the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood on their feet; (ver. 11.) or they are represented under the figure of being raised from the dead.

It is moreover observable, that as all these expressions may well be understood in a figurative sense, agreeable to the language of prophecy, so it is more agreeable to understand them so in a book of revelations, delivered throughout in such a style. Every part of these prophecies is so to be understood, the book, the seals, the trumpets, the beasts, the witnesses, the dragon, and old serpent; and why not the resurrection of the martyrs and confessors?

It is also very material, that these very expressions seem to be taken from some passages of Scripture, in which they are plainly used in a figurative sense, and must be so interpreted. There is a remarkable prophecy of Ezekiel, xxxvii. 3. concerning the restoration of Judah, and her return out of the captivity: And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? and I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest. It follows, ver. 5. Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, that is, a spirit of life, or living spirit, and ye shall live. And so I prophesied, as he commanded me, says Ezekiel, ver. 10. and the breath, or spirit of life, came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet. The meaning of these figurative expressions is thus explained, ver. 11, 12. Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are, or signify, the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts. Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. Or, I will bring you out of your captivity, and into the enjoyment of your own country, liberties, laws, and religion.

It is farther to be observed, "how fully the description of the conversion of the Jews answers to the millenium of St. John, who useth the very words by which their prophets had foretold their glorious conversion," as Dr. Whitby has shewn at large.*

Now, as this happy state of the church may well be understood of the fullest accomplishment of the prophecies, which speak of the conversion of the Jews, and receiving them again into the church, which St. Paul calls life from the dead, Rom. xi. 15. this interpretation will be the most easy and proper, as most agreeable to the sense in which they were used in the ancient prophecies, upon the like occasion.

Yet farther, a literal and proper resurrection of the martyrs and confessors, who suffered in the heathen Roman empire and reign of the beast, is attended with many difficulties, so great as render that interpretation very doubtful and improbable.

Dr. Whitby* has remarked, that a proper and literal resurrection is never, in the whole New Testament, expressed or represented to us by the living of the soul, but by the living, raising, and resuscitation of the dead, the raising of the bodies of the saints, of them that slept in the dust, or in their graves, or sepulchres.

The same learned author† farther observes, this doctrine seems not well consistent with the happy state of souls departed . . . . or with the high prerogatives supposed to belong to the souls of martyrs . . . . that this doctrine does not well agree with the accurate description of the resurrection in the holy Scriptures; for in all those descriptions, there is no mention of a first and second resurrection, or that one of them is to be a thousand years after the other. They describe the bodies at the resurrection fit to live in heaven, and not on this earth; they represent the resurrection to be performed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. (1 Cor. xv. 52.) They represent, at that time, the dead in Christ shall rise first; but then also, we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so we shall be ever with the Lord. (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.) The Scriptures speak constantly of the resurrection of all saints, as of a resurrection not to a temporal life on earth, but to an eternal life in heaven. Nor, finally, does the doctrine of a literal resurrection well agree, our author observes, with the genius of Christian faith, or with the nature of Christian hope, or with that freedom and temper of spirit it requires from the professors of Christianity, who are taught not to set their hearts and affections on things on earth, but on things above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. (Col. iii. 1—3.)

To these observations of Dr. Whitby, let me add one or two observations, which the prophecy itself seems naturally to point out to us.

And, first, this prophecy seems to suppose such inhabitants of the earth, during the millenium, as were the inhabitants of the earth when the beast was destroyed, or men in the usual state of natural succession; not persons raised out of the grave, or fetched from the separate state of departed souls.

Here is no intimation, that all good and faithful Christians are to be slain at this time, together with the beast and his followers, to make room for martyrs, and persons who died some hundreds of years before, to inhabit the earth in their room. Besides, they are represented in this state of the millenium, as liable to be misled by the deceitful arts of Satan, and the terrors of persecution; for which reason, the safety and security of the church in this period is represented by laying a restraint upon Satan, that he should not deceive the nations, or shutting him up in the bottomless pit, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled. The inhabitants of the earth, then, are supposed in the prophecy capable of being deceived, and in danger of it, if the power of Satan had not been so fully restrained. The order of the prophecy seems farther to confirm this observation; for when the thousand years shall be expired, Satan must after that be loosed for a little season, and he shall make so bad use of that little time, as to deceive many; so far deceive them, as to gather a very great number of them together, to attack the saints and the beloved city. Must these new enemies of Christ and his religion be some of the old persecutors raised from the dead, or some of the martyrs after their resurrection, seduced by Satan into his party? or must they be, as the prophecy seems plainly enough to suppose, such a succession of men as now inhabit the earth?

* Whitby, Treatise of the true Millenium, chap. 2. s. 3.

* Ibid. chap. 3. s. 1. † Ibid. chap. 4. s. 1.

The prophecy itself gives us occasion to make this farther observation,—that this prophecy places the general resurrection after these thousand years are expired, after Satan shall have made a new attempt against truth and righteousness, and with very great numbers, as the sand of the sea; and after they shall be utterly destroyed by fire coming down from God out of heaven. Now the prophecy describes this resurrection, which is to follow the millenium and defeat of the last attempt of the enemies of truth, as a general resurrection of all persons, without any exception, without the least intimation of so considerable a resurrection, above a thousand years before, as this resurrection of the martyrs must have been, if meant literally. I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God—and the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books, according to their works, (xx. 12.) They who were judged, were the dead then raised to life: then the dead were all raised, small and great.

It should seem then, that a literal and proper resurrection of martyrs, to live on earth a thousand years before the general resurrection and judgment, is not a necessary sense of this prophecy, nor so natural and probable a sense, as the figurative. It should seem, that the literal sense is liable to many difficulties, and hardly reconcileable to the other descriptions of the same prophecy, and to other passages of the Scriptures.

But the figurative interpretation, viz. that this prophecy should mean a happy state of the church on earth, well answers the whole design of the prophecy, and appears the easier and more probable meaning of the words.

The church in peace, free from persecution, and all deceitful arts of Satan and wicked men, enlarged with the conversion of the Jews and fulness of the gentiles, serving God as a kingdom of priests; in the purity of Christian worship, and enjoying all the blessings of Divine protection and grace, may well be expressed by living and reigning with Christ.

This short description will, then, allow a liberty to every one of applying to this happy state of the church whatever other prophecies he shall find relating to the peaceful and prosperous state of the church in the last times. If we take care to apply them in an easy and natural sense, agreeable to the true meaning of this prophecy, and true nature of the peace, purity, and happiness of the church, designed by it, we shall rectify the mistakes, and prevent the dangerous errors, that some may have fallen into, by indulging too far an unreasonable fancy and ungrounded imagination; and the true millenium will be very far from an unreasonable doctrine, or a dangerous enthusiasm.

[3] Ver. 5.] There is mention in this prophecy of two sorts of dead persons; those who were slain by the witness of Jesus, and those who were slain by the sword of him that sat on the horse. As here is an account of the death of faithful Christians by their persecutors, and of their persecutors themselves by Christ, these persecutors are called the remnant, the rest, οἱ λοιποί.

It is very agreeable to the design and connexion of this prophecy, to understand the rest of the dead, who lived not again till the thousand years were finished, of the rest or remnant, viz. of those that were slain with the sword of him that sat on the horse. Thus, the dead church raised to life, and living and reigning for a thousand years, and the enemies of the church remaining dead, and not living again till the thousand years were finished, will exactly agree in the same figurative meaning. This will be a sense consistent with the resurrection of the antichristian party again, for a little season, after the thousand years shall be finished.

Dr. Hammond, though he refers this prophecy to a very different period, yet, from the connexion of the words, perceived this was the true meaning of the rest of the dead. Who the rest of the dead are is manifest, not all besides the martyrs, but those formerly named, ver. 4. that is, they who worshipped the beast or his image, or received his mark in their foreheads or hands.—And therefore these may well be the rest of the dead here, it being punctually said of them, xix. 21. οἱ λοιποί, the rest were slain; and then, that they lived not again till the thousand years were finished, must needs signify, that the church was now, for that space, free from such heathen persecutors, and purified from such avowed mixtures of those vile unchristian practices, which is but the negative part annexed to the positive preceding: so that, to use the words of Mr. Baxter, "The rest of the dead, even the subdued pagans (or papists, say others), were kept as in a state of death, out of power, till the dragon revived their power again, a thousand years after."

[4] Ver. 6.] To reign with Christ may well be understood in a figurative sense, as we are said to be crucified with Christ, and to live with him; or, as Christ himself is said to live in us, Gal. ii. 20. "Happy days of peace and righteousness, of joy and triumph, of external prosperity and internal sanctity, when virtue and innocency shall be in the throne, vice and vicious men out of power and credit, are prophesied of in Scripture, and promised to the church of God."* Such a kingdom, which shall be a kingdom of righteousness as well as peace, under a peculiar Divine presence and conduct, may well be called the kingdom of God, and of his Christ, and they may be said to reign with him, who through his favour shall enjoy all the blessings of that happy state.

CHAP. XX. 7—10.

SECT. XX. Period Fifth.

CONTENTS.

The following verses of this chapter inform us, that the happy days of the church, prophesied of in the foregoing vision, will at length have their period, though they are to continue for a long time, and are not to expire till after a thousand years: yet, then, there shall be one attempt more against the purity of religion, and against the peace and prosperity of the Christian church.

* Burnet's Theory, lib. iv. cap. 5.

Satan is to be released for a little time, or season; but, in that little season, he shall deceive many, and so far seduce them, as to prevail upon them to join with him in his apostacy.

This new attempt against truth and righteousness, shall end in the utter ruin of the enemies of Christ and his religion; they shall be totally defeated, and their obstinate wickedness punished with everlasting destruction.

This state of the church and world, so different from the preceding, deserves to be considered as a new period, which will therefore be the fifth in order.

7. AND when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,]

(7.) I was farther informed in my prophetic visions, that this happy state of the church was not to be perpetual, like the happiness of the heavenly state: for at the end of the thousand years, the extraordinary restraint laid upon the enemies of truth and righteousness should be taken off, as if Satan was let loose out of his prison, to deceive the world into error and enmity against the professors of true religion.

8. And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.]

(8.) No sooner shall this restraint be taken off, but Satan shall again attempt to form and head a party, by seducing men of weak and evil-disposed minds; and he shall find such persons in the several parts of the earth, who, like the descendants of Gog and Magog, the Scythians and Tartars, shall gather together in great numbers, in order to invade and ravage their neighbours, and disturb the peace and happiness of the church.

9. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.]

(9.) They shall come, like the barbarous northern nations, described in foregoing prophecies; they shall make their invasions so suddenly, and with such numbers, that they shall spread far and wide over the peaceful habitations of the saints, and besiege them even in their camps, and capital cities, and threaten to spoil and subdue them. But this attempt shall not be like former invasions of the barbarous nations, who possessed themselves of the countries they invaded, in right of conquest over the former inhabitants; for God shall protect his faithful servants, and destroy their enemies in a very extraordinary manner: God shall send fire out of heaven to destroy them, as he did the wicked inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, (Gen. xix. 24.) and as he threatened Gog and Magog in the ancient prophets. (Ezek. xxxix. 1, &c.)

10. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night, for ever and ever.]

(10.) And the devil, the principal and chief leader of this new apostacy and rebellion against God and the kingdom of his Son, shall then be punished suitably to the greatness of his crime. He shall not only be shut up, and put under restraint as before; but now he shall be cast into a lake of fire and brimstone, where he is to be punished with the beast and false prophet, for ever; his power shall never more revive; his anguish and torment shall be endless, without any hope of relief, to all eternity.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX. 7—10.

THIS period, though it is represented very short, yet deserves particular attention, on account of the circumstance of the time in which it is placed, between the end of the thousand years and the final judgment; and also, as it represents the state and condition of the earth, to be much the same as at present, except an extraordinary restraint laid on Satan, and the extraordinary purity, peace, and happiness of the church, arising from a peculiar protection and blessing of Christ. For we see, no sooner is Satan loosed, and his restraint taken off, but he finds great numbers of persons ready to be deceived, and to join in disturbing the peace, and corrupting the purity, of the church.

The theory of a very learned and ingenious author,* which supposes the happy state of the church for a thousand years cannot be in this present earth, but must be after a conflagration, when it shall be first destroyed, and then restored to a paradisaical state, is attended with a very great, and, as I think, an unanswerable difficulty, from this state of the world, after the thousand years shall be finished.

The ingenious author† is fain to suppose some persons, sons of the earth, generated from the slime of the ground and the heat of the sun, as brute creatures, he says, were at first.

But as such an original of mankind is, I think, unaccountable; so, I hope, the prophecy has no difficulty in it, that stands in need of so strange a solution. For notwithstanding the general peace and purity of the church, the many converts to true religion, and the great number of persons truly religious, and who live up to the principles and in the practice of pure Christianity, there may be also some persons of evil-disposed minds, uneasy with the purity of true religion, easily moved by the passions of envy, covetousness, and ambition, whenever an opportunity shall offer to gratify them. The prophecy says nothing to make this impossible, or improbable; this circumstance rather makes it a likely supposition, and certainly much more natural, than to raise a great number of wicked persons from the dead, or cause them to spring out of the slime of the earth, to revive a new persecution of the Christian faith and religion.

The expressions of this prophecy seem to be taken from the prophet Ezekiel, in the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth chapters. The word of the Lord orders Ezekiel to set his face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him, (xxxviii. 2.)

Magog was a son of Japheth, (Gen. x. 2.) from whom the Scythians are generally supposed to be derived; the Mogul Tartars, a people of the Scythian race, are still so called by the Arabian writers, a people who, above all others, have best preserved the most ancient names, as well as the most ancient customs. The prophet Ezekiel* joins to Gog and Magog, Gomer and all his bands, the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands, (ver. 6.) And, (ver. 15.) Thou shalt come from thy place, out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee. This seems sufficiently to shew, that Gog and Magog, with Gomer and Togarmah of the north quarters, were a northern people, some of the many nations who were comprehended under the general name of Scythians. These were people used to invade their neighbours in great numbers, to spoil their country, and rob them of whatever they could lay their hands on. So the prophet describes them, ver. 13. Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

I shall only add, that the very learned Bochart thinks it credible, that the names of Russians and Muscovites are derived from Rhos and Meshech, mentioned in this prophecy of Ezekiel. "Credibile est ex ראש Rhos et משך Mesech, id est, Rhossis et Moschis, vicinis populis circa Araxim, (de quibus Ezekiel) descendisse Russos, et Muscovitas, gentes in Europæa Scythia celeberrimas, quæque latissime patent."†

The punishment of these spoilers, viz. Gog and Magog and the bands joined to them, is thus described by the prophet, Ezek. xxxviii. 22, 23. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord.

The nations then of Gog and Magog, were a very fit and proper figurative description of the enemies of true religion, and of the faithful professors of it, of their neighbours peace and prosperity.

It may likewise be here, as Mr. Daubuz observes it is in many other places, that the event shall agree with the letter, as well as with the figurative expressions. "There may remain, according to Mr. Pyle, in the farther and more distant parts of the world, much people still persisting in ignorance and gross superstitions. . . . . These rude nations, prompted by envy at the plenty and happiness of the Christian kingdom, and out of desire of riches, spoil, and plunder (which is the true spirit of Satan, the father of mischief), will be permitted to invade the Christian territories in vast bodies and armies."

However it be, whether these expressions be only figurative, or whether they contain also something literal, the substance of the prophecy will be to this purpose: That after the thousand years of peace and purity, the church shall once more be disturbed by persons like the barbarous northern nations, who have often disturbed the peace of the world by their invasions. But it shall prove a fruitless attempt, and end in their complete and final destruction; a day of righteous judgment will come, when true religion, peace, and happiness, shall be united inseparably, without any future molestation, or disturbance, for ever.

CHAP. XX. 11—15.

SECT. XXI. Period Sixth.

CONTENTS.

The course of these prophecies, after many important visions describing the state of the church and world in this present life, brings us at last to the great and final judgment, when the whole scene and mystery of Providence shall be finished. Then the great doctrine, which runs through the whole of these prophecies, will be fully verified, That truth and righteousness shall surely prevail in the end against error and all iniquity; eternal happiness shall be the reward of the faithful, and everlasting destruction the punishment of the wicked. Then all shall be judged, every man according to his works. This is represented as a sixth period of providence; after which there will be in the seventh period an everlasting sabbath, a state of eternal rest and happiness for all the righteous, and of the most perfect worship of God, in the praises and devotions of the heavenly church.

11. AND I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.]

(11.) I farther beheld in another vision, what was to follow upon this full complete destruction of the enemies of Christ and his religion. The general judgment was represented to me after this manner: I saw in my vision a glorious shining throne erected; I then beheld a person sitting on it; at his appearance, the whole frame and constitution of the world altered and changed, and quite passed away; so that the present heavens and earth were found no more. [1]

12. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.]

(12.) Hereupon I beheld in my vision, a general resurrection of all the dead; all ranks and orders of men, the lowest as well as the greatest, appeared before this judgment-seat of God, and they were all judged according to the most impartial rules of justice and equity, as it should appear by their works, whether they were under the condemnation of sinners, or entitled to the mercies of God and promises of eternal life, that they were true and faithful Christians, to whom the salvation of God is promised according to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.[2]

13. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.]

(13.) This judgment was so general, that all the dead, without exception, were raised again to life, to be judged according to their works, whether they died in the sea, and were buried in the waters, or by land, and were buried in graves; all in the invisible state of the dead were brought forth to this universal judgment.

14. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.]

(14.) After this resurrection to judgment, there shall be no more natural death; they who are judged shall not return to their graves again: for death and hades shall be destroyed. But there is a second death, the portion of all who shall be found guilty, and condemned in this day of righteous judgment.

15. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.]

(15.) For as many as shall not then appear, before this impartial Judge, to be true and faithful Christians, and as such registered in the rolls of the true church of Christ, shall be punished as the enemies of God's government, and of true religion; they shall be cast into a lake of fire, and shall suffer a second death, in a state of everlasting destruction. [3]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX. 11—15.

[1] Ver. 11.] THIS expression, The earth and the heavens fled away, and there was found no place for them, seems plainly to intimate such a change and alteration, as will well agree with St. Peter's description, that then all these things shall be dissolved, 2 Pet. iii. 11. This dissolution the same apostle describes more particularly, as to the manner of it: The heaven shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up, (ver. 10.) At this coming of the day of God, the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt, with fervent heat, (ver. 12.) This great change of the present state of the world, is to make way for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, (ver. 13.) Thus, the heavens and earth shall pass away, and there shall be found no place for them.

[2] Ver. 12.] This description of opening the books, and judging out of the things which were written in the books, according to their works, seems an allusion to the methods of human courts of justice. There are stated laws, or rules of justice, by which all accused as criminals were to be tried, and according to which they were to be found guilty, or acquitted. These laws, collected into a body, were called the codex, or book of laws; and when any persons were accused, and found guilty, their actions must appear to be criminal, as against some of the laws in that book. Now the plain evidence of the laws of righteousness, the perfect knowledge God has of all men's actions, the full conviction of every man's own conscience, wherein he has transgressed those laws of righteousness, may sufficiently answer a legal accusation and proof. The sinner will be convicted by his works to have transgressed the laws of righteousness, whether promulgated by the light of reason, or by the authority of particular revelation.

In human courts of justice, it is allowed to every person to make his defence, and urge what he has to offer, either to prove himself innocent, or that he is entitled to favour or pardon.

The book of life seems to allude more particularly to this plea of the person accused. The book of the Revelation of Jesus Christ has promised the pardon and forgiveness of sins, and the gift of eternal life, to all true and faithful Christians. The faith, the patience, the perseverance of true Christians will be proved by their works; these shew them to be true Christians, and therefore that they are entitled to the mercies of God, and the promise of eternal life, according to what is written in the book of life, the book of the Revelation of Jesus Christ, which has brought life and immortality to light.

[3] Ver. 15.] St. Paul's description may give some light to this vision of St. John, 2 Thess. i. 7, &c. The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe, in that day.

CHAP. XXI.

SECT. XXII. Period Seventh.

CONTENTS.

We are now come, in the course of these prophecies, to the end, the consummation of all things.

This vision stands in the prophecy after the last attempt of the enemies of religion had been defeated; after the dead, small and great, had appeared before God's judgment-seat, and were judged according to their works; after all the wicked were doomed to everlasting punishment, and all who were not found written in the book of life were cast into the lake of fire.

This order of the prophecies seems to point out to us, that the new heavens and new earth, represented in this vision, signify that state of unchangeable perfection and heavenly happiness to which the true and faithful servants of the living God shall be advanced, when all their trials and sufferings in this life shall be ended.

Nothing could be more proper to the useful design of these revelations, than such a conclusion of them, with so affecting a representation of the final, complete, and everlasting happiness of all the true worshippers of God, and faithful servants of Jesus. This is a powerful motive to present patience, a firm foundation of present hope, a strong encouragement to zeal in the cause of true religion, and constancy in the uncorrupt faith of Jesus, when such a reward is set before us, and promised to all who shall be faithful to the end.

It is a very ancient observation, which men of closer thought and better sense have long since made, that happiness is the reward of virtue in the end. It is a memorable moral of Euripides,*

Εἰς τέλος γὰρ οἱ μὲν ἐσθλοὶ τυγχάνουσιν ἄξιον.

But here is a sure word of prophecy, which beforehand acquaints us what will be the last period and state of things. The present world, for a few years, a very few in comparison of eternity, will be a state of various sorts of trials and troubles, of evils caused by wicked men, of evils wherewith the righteous Governor of the world punishes their wickedness; but the unchangeable purpose of God has appointed another state of things, when the dead shall be raised, and judged according to their works; all the faithful servants of God and Christ will enjoy a state of eternal life, in perfect peace and security, in complete prosperity and happiness.

It is with great advantage this encouragement is given the church in such a prophecy. An observation of the faithful and punctual accomplishment of the former parts of this prophecy, in times past, for several hundreds of years, serves much to confirm our faith and hope, in as faithful and punctual performance of what remains.

We may be well assured, that God will reward all the faithful with a state of perfect and endless happiness at the last, however he may permit error and persecution to prevail for a time, in this present state of life.

It must be owned, several interpreters of good reputation* understand the following vision, a description of the happy state of the church during the thousand years in which it shall reign with Christ; or to describe the full and complete reformation of the Christian church, during the last period upon earth.

As I can see nothing in the prophetic description to confine it to this meaning, so I apprehend the order of the prophecies, the chief and principal design of them, and the description itself, greatly favour the judgment of those learned writers, who understand these last visions, of the future state of happiness in heaven, after the general resurrection and last judgment.

Thus the seventh and last period concludes the whole plan of Providence, and finishes it in an endless sabbatism.

1. AND I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.]

(1.) After the foregoing visions, in which I beheld a representation of the state of the church and world, to the consummation of all things, I had the final happiness of the true worshippers of God represented to me in a new vision; in which I beheld a perfectly new state of things: the heaven and earth in which we now live, being quite passed away, melted with fervent heat, and dissolved in fire; there was a new heaven and new earth, in which I perceived one thing very remarkable, that there was no sea. To signify, there should be no turbulent, unquiet spirits, to disturb the peace of that happy state; nor should a tyrannical or persecuting power ever arise in it. [1]

2. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.]

(2.) The blessedness of this state was farther represented to me, by the model of a noble city, as a new Jerusalem, which model seemed to descend leisurely out of heaven, as it were, and come nearer to me in the air, that I might observe it more distinctly: I perceived it was set out with all the splendour used at high festivals, or marriage-solemnities. [2]

3. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.]

(3.) Moreover, a voice from heaven attended my vision, and explained the meaning of it more particularly; for the voice from heaven declared, that God would fully accomplish all that good to his faithful servants which his tabernacle signified to them, as the seat of his presence, and testimony of his favour; he would bless them as his favoured people, and as their God he would be their shield and their reward, and bless them with all protection and happiness.

4. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.]

(4.) For such shall be the blessed effects of God's presence with his people, and of his grace and favour to them, that they shall meet with no more troubles and afflictions, to draw tears from their eyes, as, in this present life, all do more or less. They shall no more be subject to death, as all, without exception, are in this mortal state. Every thing that can cause pain, or occasion sorrow, shall be far removed from this happy state. These were the afflictions of mortal life, but now death and the invisible state are no more; all former afflictions are passed away, and shall remain no longer. [3]

5. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful.]

(5.) The happiness of this state was not only declared by a voice from heaven, it was solemnly confirmed by the oracle from the throne: take notice, God will make a full change of all things, in the form and state of the world; nor shall any of its former affliction remain. Record this declaration and promise: they contain nothing but what is most certainly true, and what in its due time shall be faithfully and fully accomplished.

6. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him who is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.]

(6.) And now shall be the consummation of all things; all God's promises shall be accomplished in the full happiness of his servants and saints. God, who will execute all his purposes from the beginning to the end, will perfect the happiness of those who have been faithful to his cause. He will abundantly satisfy their hopes and desires of eternal life; happiness shall ever flow in upon them, as water ever runs from a quick spring, or overflowing fountain.

7. He that overcometh shall inherit all things: and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.]

(7.) Let this be an encouragement to faithfulness, constancy, and perseverance; they who shall resist and overcome the temptations of a corrupt world shall not lose their reward, God himself will be their God, their portion, and their happiness. He will receive them as his children, confirm their right as the sons of God, to inherit all the blessings and happiness of eternal life. [4]

8. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.]

(8.) But the case shall be quite otherwise with all the enemies of true religion, who have either deserted it, or apostatized from it, or opposed it. The cowardly and distrustful, who either had not faith in God's promises, or courage to persevere, on the encouragement of his promises; all who indulged themselves in abominable vices, who, to gratify their lusts, were guilty of murders, whoredom, deceit, idolatry, and lying; all these shall have their portion with the devil, to whose party they joined themselves, and shall with him undergo the punishment of the second death, in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone.

9. And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, and I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.]

(9.) Besides this more general account of the final happiness of the faithful, an angel, as a nuntius, or interpreter, was sent to give me a more particular description of the glory of that blessed state. It was one of the seven angels who had the seven cups full of the last plagues, in the foregoing vision. He called upon me to come to him, and he would shew me more distinctly the model of the holy city, the new Jerusalem, adorned as the bride of the Lamb, on her marriage-festival.

10. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God,]

(10.) Then the Spirit of prophecy changed the scene of my vision: I seemed to stand on a high eminence, from whence I could distinctly survey the whole model of this heavenly city, which was let down from heaven, a model of a Divine plan and workmanship. [5]

11. Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper-stone, clear as crystal;]

(11.) The first thing I observed in the model of this holy city was a most glorious brightness, like the shining light of the Schechinah, formerly the glory of God in the temple, and symbol of his gracious presence with men; so that the model shone as with the lustre of a diamond, to express a surprising beauty and splendour.

12. And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel.

13. On the east, three gates; on the north, three gates; on the south, three gates; and on the west, three gates.]

(12, 13.) I perceived also, that this city was walled about with a very thick and high wall, to express the great safety and security of the inhabitants, free from all danger or fear of any attempt or surprise by their enemies. It had twelve gates, three in each side of the wall, which stood towards the four points of the heaven, east, west, north, and south; and at each of the twelve gates stood an angel, as a centinel or guard: each of the gates was named after the names of the twelve tribes, as appeared by an inscription over them, figuratively shewing, who had a right to be admitted by the guard of angels, through the gates into the city, such as had been faithful members of the true church: and expressing also the great honour of that city, where angels were appointed to do duty as a guard; an honour properly due to the majesty of God's presence, and to the seat of it.

14. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.]

(14.) The foundations of the city wall were also adorned with inscriptions of the names of the twelve apostles of Christ, who had this honour as the founders of the Christian church, by Christ's immediate commission and authority; figuratively shewing, that they who shall build their faith on the foundation of apostolical doctrine and institutions, have a right to the blessings of this holy and happy state.

15. And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.]

(15.) And I perceived, that the angel-interpreter, who was sent to instruct me more fully in these things, appeared to have a golden measuring rod, with which he measured the several parts of this holy city; by which measure was understood, the greatness and extent of the city, the exact order and just proportion of every part of it: to shew figuratively, that this city was prepared for a great number of inhabitants, how small soever the number of faithful Christians may at any time appear; and that every thing relating to the happiness of that state was prepared with the greatest order, beauty, and exactness.

16. And the city lieth four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth. And he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs: the length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal.]

(16.) Upon measuring, it appeared that the city was an exact square, of equal length and breadth, and of a very great extent; for it appeared, upon measure, to be fifteen hundred miles in compass, each side three hundred seventy-five miles long. It was so regularly built, that all the buildings were every where of the same proportions, of a very exact and uniform architecture. [6]

17. And he measured the wall thereof, a hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.]

(17.) Upon measuring the height of the wall, I perceived it was one hundred forty-four cubits, of the common measure among men; for it was such a measuring rod, that the angel made use of in measuring the height of the wall. [7]

18. And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.]

(18.) The walls appeared to be built with unparalleled strength and magnificence, not of brick or squared stones, but of some precious stone, as solid, firm, and beautiful as a jasper; the city was every where adorned with pure gold, and shone with the brightness of crystal. [8]

19. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20. The fifth, sardonix; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.]

(19, 20.) The lower parts of the wall of the city were inlaid quite round, and beautified with a great variety of precious stones, such as were directed to be set in the high-priest's breast-plate of judgment, where was the urim and thummim, which are interpreted light and perfection; and were a proper emblem to express the happiness of God's church in his presence, in the blessing of his oracle and protection. The like ornaments on the foundation of the walls of this city, may well express the perfect glory and happiness of all the inhabitants of it, from the most glorious presence and protection of God.

21. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.]

(21.) Never was any city on earth so richly and so gloriously adorned; for every gate of the city was made of one large entire pearl; and the public place of assembly in the city was paved with a rich stone, shining as crystal, and set in pure gold. [9]

22. And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.]

(22.) There was one thing I observed in this new city very remarkable; there was no temple in it, but the want of a temple was abundantly made up: for Jehovah, the Almighty God himself, and Jesus Christ the Lamb, were instead of a temple. They were present in this city in a much more glorious and perfect manner, than God was ever present in the temple of the earthly Jerusalem. [10]

23. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.]

(23.) Nor had this new Jerusalem any need of the sun to shine by day, or of the moon by night, to give it light, as in the present state of this world; the presence of God himself and the Lamb did enlighten it always without interruption, as the glory of God did the holy of holies in the temple. [11]

24. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.]

(24.) This glorious city shall be the residence of all who have believed with the heart unto righteousness, and made confession with the mouth unto salvation. All true Christians, out of every nation and people, shall have their portion in this glory, which shall be much greater than the richest and most powerful princes ever enjoyed; greater than if we were to imagine all the princes of the earth collecting all the riches of the world together, to beautify and adorn one city. [12]

25. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there.]

(25.) There will be no occasion to shut the gates of this city at any time; not by night, for there will be no night; the perpetual light of God's glory will make perpetual day; there will be no danger or fear of any enemy; the inhabitants shall ever live in full safety and security, in an undisturbed possession of all peace, joy, and happiness.

26. And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.]

(26.) All that can contribute to make this new Jerusalem honourable and glorious, shall be found in it, as if all that was rich and precious throughout the world, was brought into one city, and all centred there.

27. And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.]

(27.) Yet let it be carefully observed, though the gates of this city are always open, they are not open for every one to enter in; all who are unworthy of this happiness, and unmeet for it, will be refused entrance; all impure and vicious, all idolaters, hypocrites, and liars, all men of falsehood and deceit, shall find no place in this holy city, and shall have no portion in this happiness; it is a blessedness peculiar to the saints, and appropriated to them only who have appeared true and faithful servants of God and Christ, and as such are registered among the true Christians, who are to inherit eternal life.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

[1] Ver. 1.] IT is not very probable, the Spirit of prophecy should have a regard to the Theory of a late ingenious author, who has contrived, that there shall literally be no more sea in his new earth, after the conflagration: for however true we may suppose such a circumstance in theory, it could hardly be intelligible to any who should read this prophecy, at least till the theory had discovered it.

We perceive all the other parts of this description are figurative. It is remarkable, that the beast with seven heads, and ten horns, the author of all the calamities of the third long period, rose out of the sea, Rev. xiii. 1. and the same tyrannical oppressive power, under the figure of the great whore, is described as sitting on many waters, Rev. xvii. 1. and in Scripture, any great collection of waters is called a sea; and these waters are interpreted to signify people, multitudes, and nations, and tongues, who were seduced to oppose the truth, and persecute the faithful servants of Christ.

The sea moreover, when raised into a storm, is a proper figure to express the rage, passion, and tumult of unquiet, evil, and seditious minds. Thus Daniel describes the rise of the four tyrannical empires: I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove on the great sea: and four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another; (vii. 2, 3.) to denote the commotions of the world, the unquiet troublesome state of affairs, out of which new tyrannies and oppressive powers usually have their rise.

This circumstance, then, in the new heaven and new earth, that there was no sea, is very proper to express, in prophetic language, that in this happy state, there will be no turbulent, unquiet spirits, to be managed by the ambitious; and therefore no fear any beast should again rise out of the sea. The most judicious Jewish writers understand new heavens and new earth to mean a new state of happiness, in which former sorrows and troubles shall be remembered no more. So Maimonides,* "Quod dixi, creabo novos cœlos, &c. id ita intelligo, quod vos positurus sum in lætitiam perpetuam, loco luctus, et anxietatis prioris, neque illius luctus prioris memoria sit mansura."

[2] Ver. 2.] What St. John saw coming down from heaven, seems to have been the plan or model of the new Jerusalem, which proves nothing where this happy state of the church is to be enjoyed, much less will it determine it to be on earth, as some have argued, because it is said to come down from heaven; for the model in the vision might well do so, wherever it was that the church should enjoy the happiness represented by it.

Besides, to come down from heaven, or from God, in Scripture-language, means the Divine original of a thing, or that God is the author of it. The baptism of John was from heaven, (Mark xi. 30.) because his authority was from God, and not from men. When the apostle mentions the Jerusalem which is above, (Gal. iv. 26.) or the supernal Jerusalem, he seems to mean a state of heavenly original and constitution.

[3] Ver. 4.] Such a state as is here described, free from all pain, sorrow, and death, seems a description of some better state than what this present life and world can afford.

[4] Ver. 7.] The expression, He that overcometh shall inherit all things, seems to refer to the promises made to them who overcome, in the epistles to the seven churches, and very strongly enforces them as motives and encouragement to patience and perseverance. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. He that overcometh, shall not be hurt of the second death. To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the hidden manna. To him that overcometh, and keepeth my words to the end, to him will I give power over the nations: the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels: I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out. Finally, To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I overcame, and am sat down with my Father on his throne. All these promises seem to be summed up and fulfilled in the inheritance of all things, or the complete happiness of eternal life.

[5] Ver. 10.] The paraphrase expresses the sense of coming down from heaven, as it is explained, ver. 2.

[6] Ver. 16.] They seem to have mistaken the proper meaning of these expressions, who understand the height of the city, whether of walls or buildings, to be equal to the length or breadth of it; according to which account, the houses and walls of a city would be out of all proportion. How large soever men may conceive the extent of a city, and of contiguous buildings, houses three hundred seventy-five miles high, are beyond all propriety in the boldest figures. Some interpreters, to avoid this difficulty, have taken in the height of the mountain on which the city is supposed to stand: I say, supposed to stand; for the prophecy no where mentions it. St. John indeed was called up to a mountain, to view the model of the city; but it is not said, that the city itself was situated on a mountain: nor do I conceive, what this supposition serves for, except to make the city a perfect cube, for which I can see no reason, a perfect square answering all figurative meaning full out as well.

Grotius* justly observes, this equality belongs to the walls and buildings, compared with each other, not with the length and breadth of the city. "Non idem dicit quod modo, cum quadratam formam explicaret, sed aliud, nempe, quaqua iret, altitudinem et murorum et ædificiorum fuisse æqualem."

The numbers themselves are evidently typical; they are taken from twelve, the number of the apostles, multiplied by a thousand. As before, the number of the members of the Christian church was represented by one hundred forty-four thousand, being one hundred forty-four, the square number of twelve, multiplied by a thousand. So that this manner of numbering will very properly signify a city, of which faithful Christians are to be the happy citizens, and settled inhabitants; a city which shall have incomparably greater extent, more strength and beauty, than ancient Babylon, Rome, or any other seat of empire ever known in this world.

[7] Ver. 17.] This seems to be the measure of the height of the wall, in which we observe the prophecy still keeps to the mystical number of twelve, multiplied into itself. The height of the wall is represented about seventy-two yards high, according to the lesser cubit, or about eighty-six yards, according to the greater, sufficient to express great security against all attempts, and any surprise by an enemy.

[8] Ver. 18.] I conceive it is the city, and not the gold, which is represented shining as clear glass, or crystal. Our copies which read ὁμοία, which agrees with πόλις, seems a truer reading than ὅμοιον. It is not so intelligible, how pure gold should be like crystal, but easy to conceive the city adorned with crystal set in gold.

[9] Ver. 21.] Grotius supposes, that the gates of the city were made of a fine marble, bright and shining as a pearl; but may not the prophecy design a very strong figure, and suppose pearls in all their beauty, large and firm enough to make the frontispiece of a gate? The street of the city seems well understood by Grotius of the forum, or place of public assembly, which is described as paved either with squares of gold, and crystals, or with crystal squares set in gold borders; than which, imagination can conceive nothing more rich and magnificent.

[10] Ver. 22.] These expressions of this prophecy seem to point out to us, that all that was figuratively or spiritually meant by the temple of God, and his presence with his people, which was the great blessing and glory of Jerusalem of old, shall be fully accomplished, and perfectly answered, in this new Jerusalem; there shall be a fulness of joy and happiness, in this glorious state of the church, from the presence of the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb. Do not these characters describe something more than can be well expected from the best-reformed state of the church in this world?

[11] Ver. 23.] This part of the prophetic description seems to be taken from the Schechinah, or glory of God, in the several Divine appearances. This is represented as a bright and glorious light; the holy of holies, the seat of God's presence in the temple, had no other light than that of the Schechinah, or the glory, that shone over the mercy-seat, between the cherubim. How strong is this figurative representation, to shew, that this happy state of the church shall be, without comparison, more glorious than any former state had been? The Schechinah, or glory of God's presence, shall not be shut up or concealed in one part of a temple, but shall be spread through the whole extent of this spacious city, and every inhabitant shall enjoy the full felicity represented by it.

[12] Ver. 24.] This part of the description seems to be an allusion to the passage of the prophet Isaiah, And the gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising, (lx. 3.) This prophecy raises the idea yet higher, to shew the perfect satisfaction and joy of all persons of every rank and quality, in this happy state, where every thing that can contribute to it shall be collected together, and severally contribute to complete the public happiness.

CHAP. XXII. 1—5.

CONTENTS.

The five first verses of this chapter are but a continuation of this prophetic description of the new Jerusalem, and should have been part of the twenty-first chapter.

1. AND he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb.]

(1.) The angel directed me to observe farther in this plan of the new Jerusalem, which I saw in my vision, that a pure river of water, perfectly fine and clear, perpetually issued out from the throne of God and the Lamb; to represent, a constant provision for the comfortable and happy life of all the inhabitants of this city of God. [1]

2. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.]

(2.) As this river of water of life ran through the chief street in the midst of the city, so there was planted on each side of the river a beautiful row of trees, not only to serve for ornament and refreshment, but which, like the tree of life in Paradise, should make the inhabitants immortal. They yielded a great variety of pleasant fruits, and in such plenty, that they had ripe fruit every month, and so all the year round. Even the leaves of these trees had such healing virtues, that they were a sure remedy against all sorts of weakness and indisposition. [2]

3. And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him.]

(3.) So great will be the happiness of the saints, the faithful in Christ Jesus, that nothing shall break in upon it, or any ways interrupt it; nothing shall be done in this holy city to deserve the displeasure of God: nor therefore shall they be liable to any afflictions, either as punishments, or a useful discipline. They shall continually enjoy the favour and grace of God and Christ, with the blessing and happiness of their presence; they shall serve God with all the gratitude, constancy, and affection, so great obligations require of them. [3]

4. And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads.]

(4.) For in that happy state they shall have so full communications of all grace, holiness, and happiness, from God's immediate presence, that they shall be made like unto him, partakers of his perfections and glory; like the high-priest of old, they shall have Holiness to the Lord on their foreheads, expressive of their entire devotion to God, and an indelible mark of God's favour. [4]

5. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever.]

(5.) In this blessed state, there shall be no interruption of their happiness and joy; there shall be no night, no state of darkness, between the end of one day and the beginning of another; their happiness proceeds immediately from God himself, from his constant and everlasting presence with them, and favour to them; so that they shall enjoy the same unspeakable happiness, without any interruption or diminution, to all eternity. Thus all the faithful servants of Christ Jesus shall reign with their God and Saviour, for ever and ever. [5]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII. 1—5.

[1] Ver. 1.] IT is observed of the city of Babylon, that the river Euphrates was let into it, and ran through it. The first Paradise is represented as watered by a river; a river that went out of Eden, or had its course in that country, ran through the garden to water it. (Gen. ii. 10.) Ezekiel, in his prophetic vision of the new city and temple, has a like representation of waters in great plenty, flowing from the house or temple: Behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward . . . . . And the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar. (Ezek. xlvii. 1.) These waters were in such plenty, that they were deep enough to swim in; a river that could not be passed over, (ver. 5.) These waters were of such excellent virtues, that they gave life to all who drank of them: Every thing shall live whither the river cometh, (ver. 9.)

Water, as necessary to the support of life, and as it contributes in great cities, especially in the hot eastern countries, to the ornament of the place, and delight of the inhabitants, is a very proper representation of the enjoyment of all things, both for the support and pleasure of life. With God (says the Psalmist) is the fountain of life; thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures. The figure of a river of water of life, clear as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and the Lamb, (Psal. xxxvi. 8, 9.) elegantly expresses the glorious and happy immortality which all faithful Christians shall enjoy in this state of perfect and endless happiness.

[2] Ver. 2.] Both the waters of life, and the tree of life, are emblems of immortality: They that eat of the tree of life shall live for ever. (Gen. iii. 22.) The trees of life are so planted, in this description, that all the inhabitants may come at the fruit of them freely, and without hinderance. They yield their fruits so plentifully, and so constantly, that there can be no want in so large and populous a city; and even the leaves have a sovereign virtue against all sorts of indisposition. How elegantly does this represent a most happy state of immortal life?

[3] Ver. 3.] This part of the description of the new Jerusalem seems to point out to us, how much greater the happiness of this state will be, than the happiness of the first Paradise was. In this state, the faithful servants of Christ shall be in no danger of forfeiting their happiness, and losing paradise, as our first parents did. In this paradisaical state, they shall be a kingdom of priests unto God for ever. This seems to describe a state of happiness above the condition of this world, and only to be enjoyed in the heavenly state.

[4] Ver. 4.] To see the face of God, and to stand in his presence, says Mr. Daubuz, implies the most perfect happiness, and is a blessing that only comes to the saints at the resurrection. It is the highest expression in the language of Scripture, to describe the most perfect happiness of the heavenly state; by most divines, the beatific vision is appropriated to that meaning.

[5] Ver. 5.] Night and darkness, in the style of prophecy, signify often trouble and affliction; light, on the contrary, expresses prosperity and joy. In thy light (says the Psalmist) shall we see light; (xxxvi. 9.) or, in the loving-kindness of God we shall find prosperity and happiness. In this state of perfect happiness, no trouble, no affliction, shall be intermixed with their peace and joy; God shall then be the everlasting happiness of all his saints. How fully, how gloriously, are all their afflictions, for his sake, rewarded! What encouragement is this to the faithfulness and patience of the saints, when, whatever their sufferings may be, they shall work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory! Thus ends the doctrine of these revelations, in the everlasting happiness of all the faithful; the mysterious ways of Providence are cleared up; all things finally end in an eternal sabbath, in an everlasting state of peace and perfect happiness, reserved in heaven for all who shall persevere, against the temptations of the world, in the love of truth and righteousness.

CHAP. XXII. 6, &c.

SECT. XXIII. Conclusion, or Epilogue.

CONTENTS.

The prophetic part of this book ends in a perfect happiness of the faithful, great above all imagination, certain as the word of prophecy, and lasting without end. A powerful encouragement and persuasive to constancy in the profession and practice of pure Christianity, whatever difficulties or dangers might attend it.

What follows, to the end, is the conclusion of the whole book, or a sort of epilogue, which confirms the truth of the prophecies contained in these revelations, shews the importance and use of them, and is well fitted to leave them with strong impressions on the hearts of the readers, to preserve them from compliance with any corruptions of the Christian faith and worship, and encourage their constancy in the ways of truth and righteousness.

6. AND he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew to his servants the things that must shortly be done.]

(6.) After this representation of the blessed state of the faithful Christians, in everlasting happiness, the angel who had shewed me the plan of the heavenly Jerusalem, confirmed to me the truth of these prophecies, and the faithful performance of all that had been represented to me in my visions. He assured me, they were not a groundless encouragement to Christian constancy and faithfulness; these promises are not like the deceitful promises of false prophets, or credulous enthusiasts; the same true God who inspired the prophets of the ancient church, so punctually to foretell the circumstances of Christ's first appearance, has sent his angel to support the faith and patience of the Christian church by these revelations, which shall soon begin to be accomplished, and continue to be fulfilled, in a series of events, to the end of time.

7. Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.]

(7.) Christ himself testifies to the truth of these promises; he himself solemnly declares, he will come to accomplish all these things, which will be soon seen, as the events foretold will fall out in their order, and in the periods marked out for them. Blessed then will they be, who shall so attend to the prophecies of these revelations, as faithfully to follow their directions, who shall be excited to constancy in pure and undefiled religion, by the great encouragements and glorious rewards they set before them. [1]

8. And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.]

(8.) And I John, who have committed these revelations to writing, for the constant use of the churches, do solemnly declare, they are no private fancy or invention of my own, but what I was an eye and ear-witness to, having really seen and heard these things in the visions of prophecy, as I have faithfully related them. And now, my visions appearing to be at an end, I bowed myself to the ground before the angel who had shewed me these things, to express the great respect and gratitude I had for a person who had laid me under so great obligations.

9. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Worship God.]

(9.) But the angel hindered me again, as he had done once before, informing me, that I should not consider him as the author of these prophetic visions, but as a fellow-servant of the prophets, and as such employed in the service of God with them; all the praise of the church should therefore be given to God alone, who only is to be acknowledged the author of these revelations, who only gives the Spirit of prophecy for the encouragement and consolation of the faithful. [2]

10. And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand.]

(10.) The angel then gave me in charge not to keep these revelations private to myself, and concealed from the church: for the things revealed in them would soon begin to be accomplished, and the cautions, directions, exhortations, and encouragements, contained in them, would be of great use to give the faithful comfort, hope, and constancy, in the successive times of temptation and trial, that they might learn both to expect them, and to be prepared for them.

11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.]

(11.) The providence of God will indeed permit things to continue in this world, just as these prophecies represent the state of them. Men of evil principles and corrupt hearts will continue in acts of injustice and oppression, and to promote false religion and wickedness, notwithstanding all the cautions of religion or judgments of Providence. Yet the cautions, directions, encouragements, of these prophecies, and the judgments of Providence foretold in them, will have a better effect on good minds, to their perseverance in truth, righteousness, and holiness. [3]

12. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.]

(12.) And let all consider, how these prophecies represent the promise and faithfulness of Christ, as well as how they represent the present state of the church and world; though the wicked will not be reformed, and the righteous shall suffer much from the unjust, yet they may depend upon it, that Christ Jesus will come according to his promise, as soon, and in such a manner, as these prophecies declare. Then he shall bring a glorious reward with him, for all his faithful servants who have endured unto the end; then he shall inflict a just punishment on the unjust and filthy, according to the guilt of their idolatry and persecution.

13. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.]

(13.) For whatever the present appearances of things may be, how much soever error and wickedness may prosper in this world, and truth and goodness be oppressed, yet such are the characters of Christ, as assure the final events of things shall be as he has revealed them in these prophecies. He is the Lord of the whole creation, by whom all things began, and by whom all things are to be finished; so that he will do all his pleasure through all ages of time, to the consummation of all things, and nothing can prevent or hinder the sure and full accomplishment of his word.

14. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.]

(14.) How unspeakably great then is the happiness of all who shall believe the truth of these revelations, as to trust in the faithful performance of them, who shall be so directed by them as to persevere in the purity of Christian faith, and in the practice of undefiled religion, for such have a full assurance of hope, that they shall inherit eternal life, and be received into the blessed state of heavenly perfection and happiness. [4]

15. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.]

(15.) The blessedness of these faithful Christians will appear yet the greater, because this hope and happiness are peculiar to them. The wicked have no right to it, no portion or share in it; all shall be for ever excluded, who, like dogs, bite and devour the innocent and righteous, or who indulge themselves in sins of uncleanness or deceit, who attempt to maintain corruptions of religion by falsehood or forgery. All these shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, xxi. 8. [5]

16. I Jesus have sent my angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and offspring of David, and the bright and morning-star.]

(16.) The Lord Jesus Christ himself finally confirmed the truth and importance of these revelations, by affirming, it was he himself who sent his angel, and who caused me to see the prophetic visions, in which the future state of the church and world was represented to me. The same person who was described in the ancient prophets, as the promised seed of David, the bright Star out of Jacob, and the Day-spring from on high, the true Messiah, or God's anointed, confirmed the truth of all these revelations by his own testimony, therefore all Christians may safely rely upon the truth of them, and comfortably wait in hope of their faithful accomplishment.

17. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.]

(17.) And now the prophecies of this book reveal truths of so much use and consequence to sincere Christians, and true lovers of pure religion; now these promises are so fully confirmed by the Spirit of prophecy, and the testimony of Jesus Christ—the true church of Christ, his spiritual bride, should greatly rejoice in them, and endeavour to confirm their faith and constancy by them. For every one who sincerely desires a portion in these blessings, and will seek for them, as the pure Christian religion directs, shall be sure to receive them, and freely, through the riches of God's grace, as he has promised them. [6]

18. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book:]

(18.) And now I have faithfully and exactly related what I saw and heard in these visions of God, let me solemnly conjure every person into whose hands these revelations shall come, that they treat them with the reverence due to revelations from God; that they venture not to add any thing of their own imagination or invention to them; let them keep close, as far as they can, to the true meaning and intention of the prophetic Spirit; for let them be assured, God will severely punish such impious rashness, by inflicting on them the curses denounced in these prophecies against deceivers, and false pretenders to prophecy.

19. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.]

(19.) On the other hand, let no man dare to strike any prophecy out of this book; let no man set aside or discredit the authority of any of these revelations, as useless, dangerous, or unworthy the Spirit of God; let no man endeavour to pervert their true meaning and intention, to serve any evil views of his own, to the ease, pleasures, or ambition of life. Such unworthy treatment of the word of prophecy will justly forfeit the blessings and happiness with which these prophecies encourage the faithfulness and constancy of sincere Christians. [7]

20. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.]

(20.) As then Jesus, the author of these prophecies, assures a certain accomplishment of them in their times and seasons, let the whole church join with me in saying, Amen. Let all faithful Christians, with joyful hope and hearty desire, continually say, Even so, come, Lord Jesus, accomplish thy promises in their order; and finally crown the faith, patience, and constancy of thy servants with eternal life. [8]

21. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.]

(21.) In the meantime, may the favour and blessing of Jesus Christ our Saviour be with all true Christians; may his grace support and comfort all who suffer for his name, and keep them to the glory of his heavenly kingdom. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII. 6, &c.

[1] Ver. 7.] HERE Christ himself speaks, says Mr. Waple, this being a sacred drama, in which, according to the nature of such representations, several persons are introduced.—The angel, sent to shew these things, declares, in the person of Christ, says Mr. Daubuz, Behold, I come quickly.—And I (said Christ from the throne) will see them all accomplished, according to Mr. Pyle. The general meaning is determinate enough, that these revelations were really from Christ himself, and that he had undertaken to see them fulfilled.

It is not improbable, this vision being in heaven, that the voice of the oracle from the throne, might confirm the testimony of the angel. This sense is agreeable to a following expression, (ver. 20.) He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

[2] Ver. 9.] The prostration of the apostle, or bowing himself to the ground before the angel, has been considered before, (xix. 10.) where we have more largely observed, that it may be understood of a high civil respect, short of proper religious adoration.

[3] Ver. 11.] Mr. Daubuz justly observes, that in the prophetical style, whether the thing be uttered in the past or future, or in the imperative, it is equal. So that to say, He who is unjust, let him be unjust still, is equal to saying, He that is unjust, will still be so, and will not be reclaimed, what persuasive reasons soever may be used for his recovery.

Mr. Daubuz farther observes, He that wrongeth (or the unjust) denotes, in a peculiar manner, throughout this prophecy, the persecutor and murderer of the saints; as the saint that suffers is called δίκαιος, the just, because he is innocent, and will be justified in judgment, by the punishment inflicted on the unjust. He which is filthy, seems principally to denote those who shall be guilty of idolatrous worship. So that, on the one side, here are the persecutors and corrupters of pure religion, by idolatrous doctrines and practices; and, on the other side, the righteous, who keep their integrity, notwithstanding all they suffer for the sake of a good conscience; they remain holy, still will continue separate from the prevailing corruptions of the world, and undefiled by them.

These prophecies then will be of great use, as they shall contribute to the constancy of the righteous and the holy, though they should not effect a general reformation in the world, though men of evil principles and wicked hearts should still remain persecutors and idolaters.

[4] Ver. 14.] Some copies read,* Blessed are they who wash their garments; to which some add, in the blood of the Lamb. But the meaning of both expressions returning at last to much the same thing, the paraphrase will, I think, sufficiently take in both.

[5] Ver. 15.] The several works of iniquity here mentioned, may be understood more generally of all cruelty, uncleanness, falsehood, and deceit; yet they seem more particularly designed to point out idolatry and persecution: as an idolatrous corruption of the Christian doctrines and worship, and a support of those corruptions by fraud and persecution, are the principal evils these prophecies warn us of, and are designed to guard us against.

[6] Ver. 17.] Mr. Pyle has well observed, that, according to the Hebrew style, which commonly uses a substantive for an adjective, the Spirit and the bride, mean the spiritual bride, or the true church of Christ, as glory and virtue is glorious virtue, kingdom and glory, a glorious kingdom. Yet, as this has not been observed by many interpreters, the reader ought to be informed, that some, by the Spirit and bride, mean persons endowed with spiritual gifts; others,† by the Spirit, mean the Holy Ghost making intercession for the saints. But Mr. Pyle's interpretation seems the most natural, that it expresses the desire and care of the church, which is the spiritual bride of Christ.

[7] Ver. 19.] Some interpreters understand these warnings as principally designed against all such persons, who should venture at forging revelations in imitation of these, as there were many such false revelations given out in the first ages of the church; but others understand it as a direction to the church, to consider these revelations as the last authoritative prophecy from heaven, and to warn them of the great danger of infusing into men's minds any other expectations than are agreeable to these visions, or of persuading men to any behaviour unsuitable to the directions of these Revelations, by any wilful false interpretation of them.

[8] Ver. 20.] We may here observe, how St. John uses the expression, the coming of Christ. It seems to have a more general meaning, to denote any eminent instance of Christ's power, in the blessings of the church, or punishment of its enemies, and that the style of Scripture does not confine it to any one particular instance—as, his coming to judgment.

PREFACE.

SCALIGER was pleased to say, "Calvinus sapuit, quia non scripsit in Apocalypsin;" Calvin was wise, because he did not write upon the Revelation. I confess, I do it not for want of wisdom; that is, because I neither have sufficient reading nor judgment to discern the intendment of the prophecies contained in that book. But yet, conceiving that I have either found out the true sense of those words, xx. 4. which usually are alleged as the foundation of the supposed Millenium, or resurrection of the martyrs to reign with Christ on earth a thousand years; or, at the least, have said what is sufficient to shew, it is not necessary to understand them in a proper sense; I have comprised my sentiments of that controversy in the ensuing treatise, which I submit to the judgment of the reader.

INTRODUCTION.

HAVING employed some thoughts upon the mystery of the conversion of the Jewish nation, mentioned by St. Paul, Rom. ix. and comparing the glorious things he there says of it, with what the prophets had foretold of the same thing in very high expressions; I began to compare them with what was written in the Revelation, concerning the new Jerusalem, the new heavens, and new earth, and the "bride of the Lamb made ready for a marriage with him;" and finding that this bride was thought, by the best commentators, to be the Jewish church and nation, represented formerly by our Saviour, as "not having on her wedding-garment," Matt. xxii. 12. that the new heavens and the new earth were the things promised to the Jews; that the new Jerusalem was described in the very words of the prophets and Jewish writers, speaking of that glorious state they expected towards the end of the world; I was strongly inclined to conceive this glorious conversion, which St. Paul saith shall be, even to the gentile, ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, "life from the dead," (Rom. xi. 15.) and which is by the prophets frequently represented as the ζωοποίησις, ἀνάστασις, i. e. the new-birth, reviviscence, resurrection of their dead church and nation, by the Messiah, so that ὁ θάνατος οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι, "death shall be no more," (Rev. xxi. 4.) might be the very resurrection intended by St. John; and the flourishing condition and union both of the Jewish and the gentile church thus raised from the dead, and so continuing in peace and plenty, and a great increase of knowledge and of righteousness, and a return of the primitive purity of doctrine and of manners, might be the reign of the saints on earth a thousand years, which the apostle mentions: this naturally led me to a discourse of the Millenium; which being framed according to this new hypothesis, I shall now offer it to the consideration of the learned, in the following method.

1. I shall state the true Millenium of the ancients; shewing how far it was received, and by whom opposed, in the four first centuries, and what were the particular opinions, which then obtained, concerning the Millenium; and how far the modern patrons of the millenary state have discarded the received opinion of the ancients who embraced that doctrine.

2. I shall show what reason I have to conceive that this Millenium is to begin with the conversion of the Jewish nation; and doth indeed relate to the most happy state and flourishing condition the church of Christ shall at that time enjoy.

3. I shall attempt to answer all that hath been offered to prove a proper and literal resurrection of the martyrs, and other Christian sufferers, and saints, to reign on earth a thousand years; consider the pretences of them who place this reign before the conflagration of the world, as most of the assertors of this doctrine do; and of the reverend Dr. Burnet, who makes it to begin after the conflagration of the world. And,

4. I shall offer some arguments against this doctrine of the Millenium, or of the literal resurrection of the saints and martyrs, to reign on earth a thousand years.

CHAP. I.

§. I. That the doctrine of the Millenium was never generally received in the church of Christ, is proved, 1. From the testimony of Justin Martyr and Irenæus. §. II. 2. Of Eusebius, Origen, and Stephanus Gobarus, and the distinction which then obtained betwixt the allegorists and the disciples of the letter. §. III. An answer to the pretended tradition of Papias, mentioned by Irenæus. §. IV. The Millenium of the ancients differed from that which is now asserted by the most judicious of the modern millenaries, in five particulars: (1.) The ancients generally held that the temple or city of Jerusalem, should be new-built. (2.) That all the just were then to rise, and not martyrs only. (3.) That Jesus Christ should then reign on earth. (4.) That they should fare deliciously, and enjoy corporal delights. (5.) That they should beget children: all which things are denied by the modern millenaries. §. V. The necessity of these doctrines, according to the letter of the Scriptures, cited for the Millenium, by those ancients who espoused that doctrine. §. VI. This error of some of the fathers, as to the Millenium, will not invalidate their authority as to any thing delivered by them as eye-witnesses, or which they deliver as the practice of the church of Christ in their days.

THE patrons of the Millenium do usually say, their doctrine was both generally received in the three first centuries, and was derived by tradition from the apostles; and that the first man who opposed it, was Dionysius of Alexandria. In opposition to this pretence, I shall endeavour to make it appear;

I. That this opinion was never generally received in the church of Christ.

II. That there is no just ground to think it was derived from the apostles, but rather from a mistake of the words of the author of the Apocalypse; or from the notions of the Jews, and of the Sibylline author. (See lib. ii.—iv.)

III. That the new patrons of the Millenium differ in many things of moment from the ancient assertors of it, and have indeed scarce any suffrage of antiquity for that Millenium which they do so stiffly maintain. And,

§. I. That this opinion was never generally received in the church of Christ, appears sufficiently from the confessions and very words of the two first assertors of it, whose writings are still extant, viz. Justin Martyr and Irenæus. I begin with Irenæus, because his words will justify the ancient reading of the words of Justin Martyr, against the criticism upon them, or rather the corruption of them, by Mr. Mead,* and Mr. Daille.† Irenæus therefore speaks thus;‡ "I am not ignorant, that some among us, who believe, in divers nations, and by various works, and who, believing, do consent with the just, do yet endeavour, transferre hæc (Gr. Μεταφέρειν) to turn these things into metaphors," or to carry them from their proper to an improper sense, as metaphors are wont to do: that this is the meaning, is evident from these words following, "But if some have attempted to allegorize these things, they have not been found in all things consistent with themselves, and may be convinced from the words themselves." Again, he complains, that § "the sentiments of some were carried away by the discourses of the heretics; so that they were ignorant of the appointment of God, and the mystery of the resurrection of the just, and the kingdom." Here then we may evidently discern three sorts of men: 1. The heretics denying the resurrection of the flesh, and the Millenium. 2. The exactly orthodox asserting both the resurrection and the kingdom of Christ upon earth. 3. The believers who consented with the just, and yet endeavoured to allegorize and turn into metaphor all those scriptures he had produced for a proper reign of Christ, and who had sentiments rather agreeing with those heretics who denied, than those exactly orthodox who maintained, this reign of Christ on earth. Now these being almost a translation of the words of Justin Martyr,‖ they vindicate the reading of all the manuscript copies of that writer; and exclude the bold criticism of Daille and Mr. Mead. "Tell me truly (says Trypho ¶), Do you [Christians] indeed confess, that Jerusalem shall be built again, and that your people shall be gathered together (there), and rejoice with Christ, together with the patriarchs, and prophets, and those of our nation, or those who are made proselytes before the coming of your Christ, or before you expect your Christ shall come (to judgment)? Or do you only confess this, that thou mayest seem to overcome us in questions?"

Here you see that Justin Martyr did before, ταῦτα ὁμολογεῖν, confess these things, as he doth plainly, p. 243. where Trypho having put the question thus; "What! do you say, that none of us shall have any inheritance in the holy mount of God?" Justin Martyr replies; "I say not so, but that the gentiles who repent, and believe in Christ, shall inherit (it), with all the patriarchs, and prophets, and the just which proceed from Jacob:" and therefore he here answers thus; "I have before confessed, that I and many others are of this mind, that these things shall happen. But then again, I have intimated to you, that many Christians of a pure and pious judgment do not own this; (I speak of Christians of a pure and pious judgment:) for as for those who are called Christians, but indeed are atheists, and ungodly, and heretics, I have told you already, that they teach things wholly blasphemous, atheistical, and absurd (and therefore are not to come into the account of Christians). If therefore you have met with some of them who blaspheme the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and deny the resurrection of the dead, that confess not this, you are not to esteem them Christians (or to take an estimate of the doctrines of the Christians from them). They indeed deny the resurrection of the flesh, and the Millenium;* but I, and all Christians who are exactly and in all things orthodox, know there will be a resurrection of the flesh, and a Millenium in Jerusalem, built, adorned, and enlarged." Here then, as in Irenæus, is a plain distinction of three sorts of men: 1. Of heretics, that were κατὰ πάντα βλάσφημοι, entirely blasphemers of the God of Israel, and deniers of the resurrection of the flesh, and consequently of the Millenium, which supposed this resurrection. 2. Of Christians who were κατα πάντα ὀρθογνώμονες, in all things orthodox, who owned both the resurrection of the flesh, and the Millenium: and Justin Martyr being of this opinion, and declaring here, that he thought it a doctrine delivered by God; it could not be expected that he should affirm of them, that held it not, that they were of a right opinion in all things. 3. Of many Christians of a pure and pious judgment, who did not own this Millenium.

Obj. But "where (saith Mr. Daille) had he made mention before of any such?" I answer with another question, Where had he made mention before of the many who confessed the Millenium, as he here saith he had? Mr. Daille should have considered, that Justin's memory could not serve him to write down all he had discoursed with Trypho, or that he might not think that part of his discourse necessary to be afterward committed unto writing; and then this objection would not have seemed of force sufficient to have authorized him to change Justin's words without any consent of copies, into the direct contradictory words, and for Christians τῆς καθαρᾶς γνώμης, of a pure judgment, to read, Christians μὴ τῆς καθαρᾶς γνώμης, of an impure judgment; since such bold criticisms will evacuate both the sense and force of any testimony.

§. II. 2. This is still farther evident from the ancient writers of the church, who plainly tell us, that this was a particular opinion of some doctors of the church, and never was received by all. "It had its rise (saith Eusebius) from Papias, a man of slender judgment;† but the antiquity of the man prevailed with many of the ecclesiastics to be of that opinion, particularly with Irenæus, and if there were any other of the same judgment with him." Now he that confesseth that most of the ecclesiastics were of that opinion, plainly denies that all were of it. He that particularly speaks of Irenæus, adding, "if there were any other of the same judgment," seems to intimate, they were not many. Origen, in his Philocalia, (cap. 26. p. 99.) saith, they were only τινὲς, some, that held this doctrine, and that so clancularly, that it had not yet come to the ears of the heathens: and in his prolegomena to the Canticles, (f. 69. B.) that they were only simpliciores quidam, some of the simpler sort of Christians. Besides, of all the fathers of the Christian church, none hath spoken more severely and more contemptibly of that doctrine, than Origen, who represents it as a wicked doctrine, a reproach to Christianity; the heathen, saith he, having better sentiments than these. He therefore being then the great doctor of the church, and continuing in great authority amongst all churchmen for above a hundred years; his scholars being also he most celebrated doctors of that age, and one of them, viz. Dionysius Alexandrinus, undertaking to confute this doctrine; and his Philocalia, where we find these severe sayings, being a collection of the two great lights of the fourth century, St. Basil and Gregory the divine; it cannot be doubted but this opinion then lost ground daily, and was generally decried by the learned of those centuries. In a word, Stephanus Gobarus,* in his account of opinions in which the fathers differed from each other, reckons this as the tenth, "That the just shall rise first, and live deliciously a thousand years, eating, drinking, and begetting children: and that there should be no precedence in the resurrection, no millenary delight, no marriage then."

3. This will be more evident, if it be considered, that as the doctors of the church were then of different opinions, so were they then distinguished by different names; as they who denied the Millenium, saith Irenæus, attempted to allegorize the places produced by others for it, so had they upon that account the name of Allegorists; and therefore Nepos, a man, saith Eusebius, from Dionysius of Alexandria, otherwise orthodox, but a writer for the Millenium, styled his book Ἔλεγχον τῶν Ἀλληγοριστῶν, or, A Refutation of the Allegorists. (H. Eccl. lib. vii. cap. 24.)

Accordingly, in Origen,† they who deny the Millenium, are Οἱ τροπολογοῦντες τὰ προφητικά, they who interpret the sayings of the prophets by a trope; and they who assert it are styled, "Solius literæ discipuli," disciples of the letter of the Scripture only; the first, saith he, assert, "Horum vim figuraliter intelligi debere," the passages which they produce from Scripture ought to be figuratively understood; the other, saith he, understand the Scripture, "Judaico sensu," after the manner of the Jews. Epiphanius,‡ speaking of the Millenium asserted by Apollinarius, saith, "There is indeed a Millenium mentioned by St. John; but the most, and those pious men, look upon those words as true indeed, but to be taken in a spiritual sense.".

And here it may deserve to be observed, by the by, That the primitive fathers derived almost all their considerable errors from the Jews: viz. that angels had to do with women, and begat giants of them; that the world was to end soon after the coming of the Messiah; that Elias was in person to usher in his second advent, &c.

§. III. 2. As for the pretended tradition from the apostle John, touching this doctrine, it is only mentioned by Irenæus, as received from Papias; and the words in which it is delivered are sufficient to demonstrate the incredibility and the apparent folly of it: for these elders pretend to have heard from St. John these romantic words; §"The days shall come, in which there shall be vines which shall severally have ten thousand branches, and every of these branches shall have ten thousand lesser branches, and every of these branches shall have ten thousand twigs, and every one of these twigs shall have ten thousand clusters of grapes, and in every one of these clusters shall be ten thousand grapes, and every one of these grapes, being pressed, shall give twenty-five metretas (that is, according to the mildest computation, two hundred and seventy-five gallons) of wine; and when one shall take hold of one of these sacred bunches, another shall cry out, I am a better bunch, take me, and by me bless the Lord:" to omit what he says, from the same tradition, of every grain of wheat, and of apples, seeds, and herbs. Now can any man be so wholly bereft of sense, as to imagine this stuff could ever come out of the month of an apostle? No, certainly, he had it only from the converted Jews, in whose writings, some learned persons have informed me, the words cited by Irenæus from Papias, are yet to be found. As for Papias, the only voucher of this tradition, Eusebius informs us, he was a man of a very slender judgment, as the story cited by Irenæus, from the fourth book of his discourse, may abundantly convince us, there being scarcely any things in the most infamous of Romish legends more fabulous, than, as Eusebius truly saith, his traditional relations were.

§. IV. 3. That the new patrons of the Millenium differ in many things of moment from the ancients, and have indeed scarce any suffrage of antiquity for that Milleninm they maintain, will be apparent, from a just representation of the Millenium of the ancients: for,

1. The ancient millenaries generally held, that the temple or the city of Jerusalem should be rebuilt, and that the land of Judea should be the habitation of those who were to reign on earth a thousand years: so Justin Martyr (Dial. cum Tryph. p. 243. C.) tells the Jews, that the believing gentiles should then dwell, ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῷ ἁγίῳ, in the holy mount, and that they should then acknowledge him, (p. 259. E.) ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τόπῳ τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων, in the same place of Jerusalem where they crucified him: he confesses also to Trypho, (p. 336. B. 307. B.) ἀνοικοδομηθῆναι τὸν τόπον Ἱερουσαλὴμ, "That the place of Jerusalem should be built, and that the saints should spend a thousand years in Jerusalem, built, adorned, and augmented," and that "all Christians entirely orthodox knew this would be so; and therefore they all, (saith he, p. 312. B.) expected τὸν Χριστὸν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ φανήσεσθαι, Christ to appear in Jerusalem." "In the times of that kingdom Jerusalem shall be built," saith Irenæus,* and the Jews shall be restored to the land he gave to their fathers. "He (i. e. Christ) shall build the holy city, (saith Lactantius†), and there shall be the reign of the Just for a thousand years." St. Barnaby is very positive, ‡"That the very temple which was destroyed by their enemies should be rebuilt gloriously." "They feign to themselves (saith Origen§) that the terrestrial Jerusalem should be rebuilt with precious stones, and that the aliens shall be their servants to rebuild it." Hence Dionysius‖ of Alexandria, in his book writ against them, derides their golden Jerusalem upon earth, adorned with jewels, and the restoration of the temple. Whereas, scarce any of our new millenaries dare assert, that this shall be the place of the habitation of the raised saints, and one of them makes the whole earth to become a paradise for the reception of them.

2. They held this resurrection was not to be confined to the martyrs only, but that all the just were then to rise, and reign with Christ: this Justin Martyr confesses touching all Christian people, all the believing gentiles, and the just progeny of Jacob, in the forecited places. Irenæus frequently declares of the just in general, that they shall arise to inherit the promises. Tertullian affirms,¶ that some shall rise sooner, and some later, but that all the just shall rise within the time of the Millenium. "This Millenium (saith Lactantius*) belongs to all the just which ever were from the beginning of the world:" whereas the millenaries of this age do generally, with Dr. Burnet,† say, "The first resurrection, and the reign of Christ, seem to be appropriated to the martyrs." (Rev. xx. 4.)

Moreover, the ancients extended this reign, on earth, not only to the dead, but to the just also, who shall be then alive at this first resurrection; this being a necessary consequent of the former doctrine, that this Millenium belongs to all the just. Thus Irenæus,‡ amongst those, who are to enjoy the Millenium, reckons "those whom the Lord shall find in the flesh, expecting him from heaven, who having suffered tribulation, did nevertheless escape the hands of the wicked." Then "they that are found living, shall not die," saith Lactantius:§ whereas it is inconsistent with the hypothesis of Dr. Burnet, that any of the just should be then living, since this Millenium only begins after the conflagration of the world, and the burning of all things that are in it.

3. The ancients generally consent in this, that Jesus Christ shall then come down from heaven, and be seen on earth, and reign there with his servants. Papias, the first assertor of this doctrine, declares, that "it shall be a reign of Christ bodily upon earth."‖ Justin Martyr tells the Jews, that they should then see him whom they had pierced, and this in that very place of Jerusalem where they had crucified him, that both the and Christians should then be gathered together, and rejoice with him. Victorinus saith,¶ "This is that true sabbath, in quo Christus cum electis suis regnaturus est, in which Christ is to reign with his elect;" and Lactantius saith expressly, "That Millè annos inter homines versabitur, he shall be conversant with men a thousand years." Irenæus seems not so clear as to this matter; yet he declares, the just shall reign on earth, increasing by the vision of Christ; for, saith he, "Christ will be every where seen, as men are worthy to see him:" that which seems most expressly in him to relate to this affair is this; that discoursing of our Lord's promise, To drink new wine with his disciples in the kingdom of heaven, he declares,†† this "cannot be done by him whilst he remains in those celestial regions." But Nepos was express in this, that,‡‡ "after this resurrection, the kingdom of Christ was to be upon earth a thousand years; and the saints were to reign with him in pleasures, or faring deliciously there:" and therefore Dionysius saith of him, and the brethren that magnified his book, that §§ "they had no sublime or magnificent thoughts of the glorious and Divine advent of our Lord, or of our resurrection, and our gathering together, and assimilation to Christ; but hoped then for little and mortal things, and such as men now hope for, in the kingdom of God."

4. They all declare, they shall then fare deliciously, and shall enjoy the richest wines and most delicious fruits, build houses, plant vineyards, and eat the fruits of them: thus Justin Martyr* understands those words of Isaiah, lxv. 21. of the Millenium, viz. "They shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them." And Irenæus saith,† "They shall have a table prepared for them by God, who shall feed them with dainties;" adding, "that the promises he had cited, creaturæ epulationem significant, do signify the banquets they should have upon the creature:" hence doth he tell us of the prodigious clusters of grapes and ears of corn, the vines and the earth shall then bring forth. "The earth (saith Lactantius‡) shall open its fertility, and of its own accord produce fruits plentifully, the rocks of the mountains shall sweat with honey, wines shall run down with streams, and the rivers flow with milk." Of this opinion, doubtless, was Tertullian, in his book De Spe Fidelium: and Nepos, who promised, saith Dionysius of Alexandria, "a thousand years of corporeal delights on earth." Accordingly Gennadius saith,§ "In the Divine promises, we believe nothing concerning meat and drink, as Irenæus, Tertullian, and Lactantius, teach from their author Papias, nor of the reign of a thousand years with Christ on earth after the resurrection, and the saints reigning deliciously with him, as Nepos taught." St. Austin therefore saith of this opinion, ‖ "That it might be tolerable, if they mentioned any spiritual delights which the saints might enjoy by Christ's presence; but since they affirm, that they who then rise, shall enjoy carnal and immoderate banquets of meat and drink without modesty, these things can only be believed by carnal men." And because all this plenty could not be procured and enjoyed, these houses could not be built, nor these vineyards planted, nor this wine brought into the fat, nor this corn into the barn, thrashed, ground, and made fit for these new-raised inhabitants, without hands; the ancients have made provision for this also, telling us, "that they shall be Κυριεύοντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς,¶ such as lord it upon earth;" and therefore Irenæus saith, that which was spoken to Jacob, "The nations shall serve, and princes shall bow down to thee," (Gen. xxvii. 27, 28.) ad tempora regni sine contradictione pertinet, quando regnabunt justi surgentes à mortuis, without all contradiction belongs to this millenary kingdom. "The nations shall not utterly be destroyed (saith Lactantius††), but some of them shall be left to be triumphed over by the just, and subjected to perpetual slavery." "They think (saith Origen‡‡) that aliens shall be given them to be ministers of their delights, who shall either serve at the plough, or be their masons and carpenters to build up their fallen city, and they suppose they shall have of their provisions to eat, and have dominion over their riches, so that they shall come and offer to them gold, and frankincense, and precious stones." Dr. Burnet must either produce these servile nations, as he hath done Gog or Magog, out of the mud, or his opinion must fall into it, unless he hopes to avoid this, by saying, that "in this state it will be part of their diversion and entertainment, to learn mechanics," p. 213.

And because men can hardly do this whole business without beasts, the ancients have made provisions of them also, subjecting to them not only sheep, and goats, and oxen, or bulls; but wolves, and bears, and leopards, and lions, "which, with all other animals* (saith Irenæus), shall be then subject to man." And that the doctor may not be at a loss for the production of these beasts, Stephanus Gobarus† informs him, the doctrine of the ancients was this, "That the just should rise first, Καὶ σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντα τὰ ζῶα, and all those living creatures with them." Now the new millenaries, as they say little of these slaves, and these brute beasts, who are so necessary for the enjoyment of the universal plenty, and the goods of fortune prepared in this state; so are they shy of owning futuras corporis voluptates et luxurias, such luxuries and bodily pleasures, as Origen saith‡ the millenaries of his time did expect.

For, 5. in their Millenium, they were not only to feast and junket it, but also to beget children. "The virgins (saith Irenæus§) shall rejoice in the assemblies of the young men; and they that are left, shall be multiplied upon earth:" accordingly he speaks of some believers, whom God had prepared to multiply those who were left upon the earth, to be under the kingdom of the saints, and minister to this Jerusalem. "They shall beget an infinite multitude (saith Lactantius‖), and their seed shall be holy." "To their other luxuries (saith Origen¶) they add, nuptiarum conventiones, et filiorum procreationes etiam post resurrectionem futuras; the solemnities of marriage, and the procreation of children, even after the resurrection:" and again, "they think (saith he) that after the resurrection we shall eat and drink corporeal meats, and shall use those conjugal duties by which our prayers are hindered, and which cannot be performed without some impurity:" and a third time, they believe,†† "that after the resurrection, we shall, according to the promises of the gospel, eat and drink, and, as some of them say, beget children; these things (saith he), should they come to the ears of heathens, would lay a great imputation of folly upon Christianity, since many heathens have better opinions than these are:" so much are they mistaken who reckon Origen among the patrons of the Millenium. Stephanus Gobarus gives us the opinion of the millenaries in these words,‡‡ "The just shall rise first, and for a thousand years shall fare deliciously, eating, and drinking, and getting children; and after this shall be the general resurrection." Methodius* is the only person who denies they shall be thus employed after the resurrection; and with him doubtless all our modern millenaries do agree, as knowing this unworthy to be the matter of a gospel-promise.

§. V. Moreover, if we consider the Scriptures on which the ancients grounded this Millenium, we shall perceive it necessary that all these doctrines should be maintained by them. For,

1. That the temple or city of Jerusalem should be new-built, and that the land of Judea should be the habitation of those who are to enjoy this new heaven and earth, can never reasonably be denied by those who interpret the sayings of the prophets literally, since they so plainly and so fully speak of a "Mount Zion, to be established upon the top of the mountains," Isa. ii. 2. xxvii. 13. lvi. 7. and of God's promises "to beautify the place of his sanctuary, the house of his glory, and to make the place of his feet glorious," lx. 7. 13. and of "all nations flowing in to her," and being gathered to her, and of all "nations and tongues coming to see her glory," lx. 5. and lxvi. 18. when God had brought them again into their own land.

2. That this resurrection must belong to all faithful Christians, and that they must all reign with Christ on earth, will follow from the literal interpretation of those words of St. John,† "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us to be kings and priests to God, and we shall reign on earth:" (Rev. v. 9, 10.) for, according to the import of these words, if, as Dr. Burnet saith, they belong to the first resurrection, all that have been redeemed by the blood of Christ must reign on earth. This follows also from those words, "I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and (of them) which had not worshipped the beast, nor his image, and which had not received his mark upon their foreheads, nor upon their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years:" (Rev. xx. 4.) for, "they who worshipped not the beast," are all they "whose names were written in the book of life." (Rev. xiii. 8. xvii. 8.) This follows from St. Peter's new heaven and new earth, if truly interpreted by Dr. Burnet of this resurrection; "for these (saith he) we Christians do expect, and therefore are concerned to be found of him without spot, and blameless." (2 Pet. iii. 13, 14.) This follows from the words of St. Paul, if they belong to the Millenium, as he saith they do; for they introduce "the whole creation groaning to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, and all that had the first-fruits of the Spirit, groaning for the adoption," i. e. for the redemption of their bodies from corruption. (Rom. viii. 16. 23.)

3. They must bring Christ from heaven to reign on earth, who contend that this reign is the very time of "the restitution of all things:" (Acts iii. 21.) for the heavens are only to contain him till that time; and who infer this reign of Christ from those words, "They that have part in the first resurrection shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years;" for if they reign on earth without him, they do not reign there with him. Moreover, if he continue still at the right hand of God, with what propriety is this resurrection called, ἡ παρουσία, the presence, the appearance of our Lord, and that from heaven?

4. That in this Millenium they must fare deliciously, drink precious wines, and have those splendid banquetings of which the fathers often speak, must follow from the application of all those passages to this state, which say, "the meek shall inherit the earth," that they shall "drink new wine with Christ in his kingdom,' that they shall receive *"a hundred-fold increase of goods and lands;" that there shall be then a recompence of their alms given, and their feasts made for the poor; and from all that the prophets say, of the fruitfulness of the earth, and of the temporal blessings they shall then enjoy.

5. That the nations shall the nserve them, and even build up Jerusalem for them, cannot be denied by them who literally interpret those words of the prophets, "The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister to thee: the sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee, and they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet: and the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee, shall perish:" (Isa. lx. 10. 12, 13.) "And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen, and your vinedressers; ye shall eat the riches of the gentiles, and in their glory shall you boast yourselves," (lxi. 5. See also xlix. 22, 23.) And,

6. That they shall have wives and children, and, as Irenæus saith, "shall be multiplied upon the earth," must follow from the literal exposition of our Saviour's promise, that they who have lost or forsaken wife or children for his sake, "shall receive a hundred-fold;" for children cannot lawfully be begotten without wives, and the use of the marriage-bed. And, lastly, whereas the Millenium of the reverend Dr. Burnet is to begin after the conflagration of the world, that of the ancients is still placed before it; "We expect it (saith Justin Martyr†) before Christ's coming to judgment." "After this (saith Tertullian‡) shall be the destruction of the world, and the conflagration at the day of judgment, and we shall be changed in a moment into an angelical substance." "God shall after this reign on earth a thousand years, and renew the world," saith Lactantius.§

It therefore deserves to be admired, that learned men, with so much confidence, make use of these testimonies of scriptures, and these authorities of the fathers, to establish their Millenium, and yet so stiffly should deny the consequences which flow so naturally from those scriptures, and reject what these ancients so generally delivered as a part of that doctrine. But, to insist no longer on these things, hence I suppose it evident,

1. That the doctrine of the Millenium was not the general doctrine of the primitive church from the times of the apostles to the Nicene council, as Dr. Burnet hath asserted; for then it could have made no schisms in the church, as Dionysius‖ of Alexandria saith it did, declaring how fully he confuted it, and reconciled the brethren that were contending about it, and prevailed upon Coracius, the author and ringleader of this doctrine, to own he was convinced of his error, and promise he would no more embrace, or discourse of it to the people.

2. That the old doctrine of the Millenium differed in many material points from that which is asserted by the new patrons of it.

§. VI. If any man think it not safe, to discover so much of the nakedness of the fathers as I havedone in this chapter, I answer:

First, That I think it more safe than to let it be confidently said and believed, that they were all millenaries from the first to the fourth century, seeing that shakes the foundation of episcopacy, and the translation of the sabbath to the Lord's-day, and other constitutions derived from the apostles.

Secondly, I answer, That this mistake of the fathers, in a matter which they received from the traditions and notions of the Jews, will not invalidate their authority in any thing delivered by them as witnesses of what they saw with their own eyes, or declared to have been then the practice of the church of Christ: nor will it affect their testimony in any other doctrine which they neither did nor could receive, only on the authority of the Jewish doctors.

CHAP. II

§. I. How far I differ from the ancient and modern millenaries, and in what I agree with them. The proposition that the true Millenium is only a reign of the converted Jews, and of the gentiles flowing in to them: Ibid. §. II. Where it is noted, 1. That all spiritual blessings have been still conveyed from the Jews to other nations. 2. That there will be a glorious conversion of the Jews to the Christian faith. §. III. That the description of this conversion of the Jews, made by their own prophets and writers, answers fully to the Millenium of St. John, which he speaks of in the very words of the said prophets. §. IV. The characters which the patrons of the Millenium give of those times, accord exactly with the characters given by the prophets of the conversion of the Jews. §. V. The prophets seem to intimate, that this conversion shall be effected by a full influence of the Holy Ghost upon them. §. VI. All the passages cited to this effect, from the Jewish writers, speak only of the Millenium, the resurrection, the new heavens and earth belonging to the Jewish nation.

HAVING thus given you a just account of the Millenium of the ancients, and of the true extent of that opinion in the primitive ages of the church; I proceed now to shew, in what things I agree with the assertors of that doctrine, and how far I find myself constrained, by the force of truth, to differ from them.

§. I. I believe then, that after the fall of antichrist, there shall be such a glorious state of the church, by the conversion of the Jews to the Christian faith, as shall be to it life from the dead; that it shall then flourish in peace and plenty, in righteousness and holiness, and in pious offspring; that then shall begin a glorious and undisturbed reign of Christ over both Jew and gentile, to continue a thousand years during the time of Satan's binding; and that, as John the Baptist was Elias, because he came in the spirit and power of Elias; so shall this be the church of martyrs, and of those who had not received the mark of the beast, because of their entire freedom from all the doctrines and practices of the antichristian church, and because the spirit and purity of the times of the primitive martyrs shall return. And, therefore,

1. I agree with the patrons of the Millenium in this, That I believe Satan hath not yet been bound a thousand years, nor will he be so bound till the time of the calling of the Jews, and the time of St. John's Millenium.

2. I agree with them in this, That the true Millenium will not begin till the fall of antichrist; nor will the Jews be converted till that time, the idolatry of the Roman church being one great obstacle of their conversion.

3. I agree both with the modern and the ancient millenaries, That then shall be great peace and plenty, and great measures of knowledge and of righteousness in the whole church of God.

I therefore only differ from the ancient millenaries in three things;

1. In denying Christ's personal reign upon earth during this thousand years; and in this both Dr. Burnet and Mr. Mead expressly have renounced their doctrine.

2. Though I dare not absolutely deny what they all positively affirm, that the city of Jerusalem shall be then rebuilt, and the converted Jews shall return to it, because this probably may be collected from those words of Christ, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down till the time of the gentiles is come in," Luke xxi. 24. and all the prophets seem to declare the Jews shall then return to their own land, Jer. xxxi. 38—40. yet do I confidently deny what Barnabas and others of them do contend for; viz. that the temple of Jerusalem shall be then built again: for this is contrary not only to the plain declaration of St. John, who saith, "I saw no temple in this new Jerusalem," Rev. xxi. 22. whence I infer, there is to be no temple in any part of it; but to the whole design of the Epistle to the Hebrews, which is to shew the dissolution of the temple-service, for the weakness and unprofitableness of it; for the Jewish tabernacle was only a figure of the true and "the more perfect tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man;" the Jewish sanctuary only "a worldly sanctuary, a pattern, and a figure of the heavenly one into which Christ our high-priest is entered." (Heb. viii. 2. ix. 2. xi. 23, 24.) Now such a temple, such a sanctuary, and such service, cannot be suitable to the most glorious and splendid times of the Christian church; and therefore the apostle saith, "The Lord God omnipotent, and the Lamb, shall be their temple."

3. I differ both from the ancient and the modern millenaries, as far as they assert that this shall be a reign of such Christians as have suffered under the heathen persecutors, or by the rage of antichrist; making it only a reign of the converted Jews and of the gentiles then flowing in to them, and uniting into one church with them. This I believe to be indeed the truth of this mistaken doctrine; and therefore I shall set myself more fully to explain and to confirm it. Let it be noted therefore,

§. II. 1. That as the Jews were the first nation which were owned by God as his people, and therefore are styled "his first-born," Exod. iv. 22. "Israel his elect," Isa. liv. 4. "the children of Jacob, his chosen ones," 1 Chron. xvi. 13. Psal. cv. 6. God having chosen them "to be a peculiar treasure to himself above all the people of the earth," Exod. xix. 5. Deut. vii. 6. so all nations of the world have ever since received the word of God and the true religion from the Jewish nation, and Jerusalem hath been still the mother of all other churches. Before the advent of our Lord and Saviour, to them alone, saith the apostle Paul, "belonged the adoption, the glory, and the covenant, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises," (Rom. ix. 3.) and none then could be "joined unto the Lord," (Isa. lvi. 3.) and worship him aright, unless he joined himself to the Jews, and became a worshipper of the God of Israel, or a member of that church.

After Christ's coming in the flesh, the gospel was first sent to them, as being "the children of the kingdom," Matt. viii. 12. our Lord exercised his ministry only among them, whence he is styled "the minister of the circumcision," Rom. xv. 8. and saith, he was not then sent to any but "only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," Matt. xv. 24. And sending his apostles, he forbids them, whilst he was on earth, "to go into the way of the gentiles, or to enter into any city of Samaria," Matt. x. 5. but saith to them, "Go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." After his ascension, they were charged to begin their preaching at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. as accordingly they did, "preaching the word to none but the Jews only," Acts xi. 19. Paul, the apostle of the gentiles, first offers his ministry to them, preaching Christ in their synagogues, "as his manner was," Acts ix. 20. xiii. 5. xiv. 1. xvii. 12. 17. xviii. 4. and declaring "it was necessary that the word of God should be first spoken to them," Acts xiii. 46. the gospel being "the power of God to salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first," Rom. ii. 10. and that through their fall and rejection of it, "the gospel came unto the gentiles," Rom. xi. 28. the halt, lame, and blind, being called to this feast, because those guests first bidden refused to come, Luke xiv. 21.

Note also, that notwithstanding the infidelity of many of them, the first church that ever received the gospel, the doctrine, the sacraments of the New Testament, was the Jewish church, Acts ii. 42. 47. All the churches of the gentiles received the gospel from them, they being "made partakers of their spiritual things," Rom. xv. 27. and the word of God coming out from them to other churches, 1 Cor. xvii. 36. they being all "grafted into their good olive-tree." Hence, in the primitive times, the church of Jerusalem had the pre-eminence of all other churches; to her they went for the decision of their controversies, Acts xv. and the bishop of Jerusalem is therefore styled by the ancients, *"the first bishop, the guide of priests, the top of the heads, the bishop, and chief of the apostles;" and the church of Jerusalem is said to be the church, "cui omnes favorem impendunt quasi matri Christiani nominis," which all favoured as the mother of Christians.

After the fall of antichrist, and before the second coming of our Lord to judgment, the Jews shall be converted, and become a most famous church again. For this mystery the apostle hath revealed, "that blindness in part hath happened to Israel until the fulness of the gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved," as it is written" in the prophet Isaiah, lix. 20. "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord, when I shall take away their sins." These words are as a key to the great things said by Isaiah touching the Jewish nation, and teach us to interpret them of their glorious conversion to the Christian faith, and the gathering them "out of every kindred, and tongue, and nation, and people;" that "at the blowing of the great trumpet they may come from the land of Assyria and Egypt, and may worship the Lord in the holy mount in Jerusalem," (Isa. xxvii. 13.) and they may "fear the Lord from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun." (Isa. lix. 19.) This is that day "when the Lord shall set his hand שנית, a second time to recover the remnant of his people, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth;" (Isa. xi. 11, 12.) when he will so "bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy on the whole house of Israel, as to leave none of them any more there, nor hide his face any more from them;" (Ezek. xxxix. 25. 28, 29.) when he shall so "plant them in their land, that they shall no more be pulled up out of the land that he hath given them:" (Amos ix. 14, 15.) so Tobit saith, that "when Πληρωθῶσιν οἱ καιροὶ τοῦ αἰῶνος, the times of the age shall be accomplished, they shall return from all places of their captivity, and build up Jerusalem gloriously, and the house of God shall be built in it gloriously, as the prophets have spoken thereof," Tobit xiv. 51. vi. 7. And when they shall be thus converted, and receive the gospel, then shall salvation be again derived from them to the gentiles, and they shall be the means of converting such of them as still remain to be converted; and shall draw them to as great purity and zeal, and as great knowledge of the truth, as ever the church enjoyed: for, saith the apostle, "if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing them the riches of the gentiles, how much more their fulness?" And "if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall be the reconciling of them but life from the dead," to the same world? Rom. xi. 12. 15. Of this the prophets speak very fully, saying, "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse which shall stand for an ensign to the people, and to it shall the gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious," Isa. xi. 10. "Behold (saith God), I will then lift up my hands to the gentiles, and set up my standard to the people, and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders, and kings shall be thy nursing-fathers, and queens thy nursing-mothers; they shall bow down to thee with their faces towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet," Isa. xlix. 22, 23. "Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that have not known thee shall run unto thee, because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee," Isa. lv. 5. "The Lord God that gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him besides those that are gathered to him," lvi. 8. "And the gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising: lift up thine eyes round about, and see; all they gather themselves together, they come to thee; thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side; the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the gentiles shall come to thee," lx. 3—5. "And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: therefore thy gates shall be open continually, they shall not be shut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the forces of the gentiles, and that their kings may be brought: for the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish, and shall be utterly wasted," ver. 10—12. "Thou shalt suck the milk of the gentiles, and shalt suck the breasts of kings," ver. 16. "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord; men shall call you the ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the gentiles, and in their glory shall you boast yourselves," lxi. 6. "The gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory," lxii. 2. "Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the gentiles like a flowing stream," lxvi. 12. "I will gather all nations and tongues, and they shall come and see my glory," ver. 18. "And they shall bring all their brethren for an offering to the Lord, out of all nations to my holy mountain Jerusalem; and I will also take of them for priests and for Levites, saith the Lord: for as the new heavens and the new earth which I shall make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall their seed and their name remain," ver. 20—22. "Many nations (saith Tobit) shall come from far to the name of the Lord God, with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the King of heaven, when his tabernacle shall be built again with joy, and he shall make his captives joyful in Jerusalem; yea, all nations shall turn, and fear the Lord God truly," xiii. 10, 11.

§. III. Now here it is easy to observe, how fully this description of the conversion of the Jews, by their prophets, answers to the Millenium of St. John, who useth the very words by which the prophets had foretold their glorious conversion, and saith, they shall be then accomplished. And,

1. St. John speaks of a reviviscence of the church of the primitive martyrs, that suffered "for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God," Rev. xx. 4. (see chap. iii. §. 1.) and with them all the just. Now the very words ἀνάστασις and ἔζησαν, used by St. John, are very frequently used by the prophets, to express the glorious state of the Jewish church; and by St. Paul, to signify the flourishing condition of the gentiles then. St. John saith, they who enjoy this Millenium, shall be "priests to God and Christ," Rev. xx. 6. and the prophet Isaiah saith of the converted Jews, "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God," lxi. 6. and of the gentiles that come to them, "I will take of them to be priests and Levites," lxvi. 21. This was the very thing proposed to the Jewish nation when God entered into covenant with them, that they should be "a kingdom of priests," Exod. xix. 6. Βασίλειον Ἱεράτευμα, "a kingly priesthood," saith the Septuagint, מלכים כהנים, i. e. "kings and priests," saith the Targum. This all Christians are already made, saith St. Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 5. and St. John, Rev. xvi. 5. 10. "We are (saith Justin Martyr*) truly priests to God:" it therefore may be expected men should be more eminently so in that glorious state of the church.

2. St. John speaks of a new heaven and a new earth that he saw, saying, "The former heaven and earth were passed away," Rev. xxi. 1. and introduceth our Lord, saying, "Behold, I make all things new," ver. 5. And the prophet Isaiah introduceth God, thus speaking at the conversion of the Jews, "Behold, I create new heavens and new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into my mind," Isa. lxv. 17. And again, "I have put my word in thy mouth, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people," li. 16. And, thirdly, in the very words of the author of the Revelation, "Behold, I make all things new," xliii. 18, 19. Seeing then these new heavens and new earth must be contempurary with the conversion of the Jews, sure they must be before the conflagration of the world, i. e. before the Jewish nation be consumed to ashes; and therefore can be only a new heaven and new earth, in that moral sense in which Maimonides explains the phrase, when he says, "it signifies, that God will place them in perpetual joy, in lieu of their former sorrow and anxiety; so that the memory of their former sorrow shall no more remain."*

I confess there is this peculiarity in St. John's new earth, that it is said of it, καὶ ἡ θάλασσα οὐκ ἔστιν ἔτι, "and the sea is not yet," because he had all along represented the beast as ascending out of the abyss, "and sitting upon many waters," which were "the peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues, that had submitted to her," Rev. xvii. 1. 15. Now because the beast was utterly destroyed, and Satan was bound up for a thousand years, and Gog and Magog were not to be gathered till then, nor were the armies of the beast which were slain to rise again till the thousand years were past; (Rev. xix. 21. xx. 6.) therefore the apostle saith, that in this new earth, "the sea was not yet."

3. St. John saith, "I heard a great voice from heaven, saying, The tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself with them shall be their God," Rev. xxi. 3. And Ezekiel, the other prophet who, by the ancients, is supposed to speak of the Millenium, saith in like manner, "I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will place them and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore; my tabernacle also shall be with them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people," Ezek. xxxvii. 26, 27.

4. St. John saith, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away, Rev. xxi. 4. so also saith the prophet Isaiah of Jerusalem, that after the former heaven and earth were passed away, "the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying," lxv. 19. that "the Lord will wipe away tears from all faces," xxv. 8. that "they shall not hunger, nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them; for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them," xlix. 10. which words exactly answer to those of St. John, Rev. vii. 16, 17.

5. St. John saith, "The building of the wall of the city was of jasper, and the city was of pure gold like unto clear glass, and the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones," Rev. xxi. 18, 19. and Isaiah saith, "I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and thy foundations with sapphires, and I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones" liv. 11, 12. and Tobit saith, "Jerusalem shall be built up with sapphires, and emeralds, and precious stones; thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold; and the streets of Jerusalem shall be paved with beryl, carbuncle, and stones of Ophir," xiii. 16—18.

6. St. John speaks of "the tree of life planted there," and of "a pure river of water of life, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb," Rev. xxii. 1, 2. And the prophet Zachary speaks of "living water going out of Jerusalem," xiv. 8. And he that passeth under the name of Esdras saith, "They shall have the tree of life planted for an ornament of sweet savour: for unto you (saith he) is paradise opened, the tree of life is planted," 2 Esd. ii. 12.

7. St. John saith, "There shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun," xxii. 5. Isaiah saith the same, lx. 19. And the prophet Zechariah saith, "It shall be one day which shall be known unto the Lord, not day nor night; and it shall come to pass, that at the evening-time it shall be light," xiv. 7.

Moreover, St. John so represents the scene of things following the fall of antichrist, as plainly to inform us, that he is speaking of this glorious conversion of the Jewish nation, and God's marrying her again whom he had formerly divorced; for as the church of Christ is represented as "the Israel of God," Gal. vi. 16. "the commonwealth of Israel," Eph. ii. 12. "the Jerusalem which is above," Gal. iv. 46. "the celestial Jerusalem," Heb. xii. 22. so St. John represents this new scene of things in the same language, saying, "I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven," Rev. xxi. 2. And again, "He shewed me the great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God," ver. 10. Now that this great and holy city, this new Jerusalem, is the Jewish church converted to God, the characters he gives of it will not suffer us to doubt: for, first, he saith, "the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof," Rev. xxi. 23. So saith God of the conversion of the Jews: "They shall call thee, The city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel," Isa. lx. 14. "Thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise; the sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory," ver. 18. 19. He saith, "The gates of this city shall not be shut at all by day, neither shall there be any night there, and they shall bring the glory, and honour, τιμὴν, the substance of the nations unto it," Rev. xxi. 25, 26. Even as Esaias had said, "Thy gates shall be open continually, they shall not be shut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the wealth of the gentiles, and that their kings may be brought," Isa. lx. 11. Lastly, he saith, "The nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of this city, and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour to it," Rev. xxi. 24. which I have shewed to be the very thing foretold by the prophets at the conversion of the Jewish nation.

Add to this, that he introduceth this holy city, this new Jerusalem, "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband," Rev. xxi. 2. and saith, "Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife," ver. 9, 10. and then shews the great city, the holy Jerusalem; and xix. 7, 8. he saith, "He heard a voice, saying, The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready; and to her was granted, that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." Now thus have the prophets represented the Jewish church converted to God: hence is she introduced, speaking thus; "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God: for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels," Isa. lxi. 10. And again, "Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Heph-zibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married," lxii. 4. and ver. 5. "For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee."

§. IV. Add to this, that all the characters which the patrons of the Millenium give of those times, exactly accord with the characters given by the prophets of the conversion of the Jews, and are many of them taken from the very words of the prophets, foretelling those times: for instance,

1. "Indolence and plenty (saith Dr. Burnet, book iv. chap. 7. p. 183.) seem to be two ingredients of this happy state." Accordingly the prophets every where speak, how "the riches of the gentiles shall then flow in to them," Isa. lx. 5. 11. "and they shall eat the riches of the gentiles," lxi. 6. that "there shall be then no hunger nor thirst, no heat nor sun to smite them, no voice of crying or weeping." (See Isa. xxxv. 10.)

2. That it shall be "a time of universal peace, and freedom from war and persecution;" (ibid. p. 184.) and this he proves from the words of the prophets declaring, that at the day, that time when God shall create new heavens and new earth, "the lamb and the lion shall lie down together, and the sucking child shall play with the basilisk, and they shall not hurt in all my holy mountain," as it is written, Isa. xi. 6—9. and lxv. 25. and saying, that "the nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more," Isa. ii. 4. Micah iv. 3. as appears also from the promises, that God will then "make her officers peace," Isa. lx. 17. "and will extend peace to her as a river," lxvi. 12.

3. That it shall be "a kingdom of righteousness," (ibid.) Accordingly of this holy city, Jerusalem, it is said, "There shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and unclean," Isa. lii. 1. "A highway shall be there, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it," xxxv. 8. which exactly answers to those words of St. John, "Into the holy city shall nothing enter that is polluted or unclean," Rev. xxi. 27. And again, "Thy people shall be all righteous," Isa. lx. 21. (See Zeph. iii. 9. Zech. xiv. 20, 21.)

Moreover this, saith he, (p. 185.) will be "a state under a peculiar presence and Divine conduct, because the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell with them:" and this we see was promised at the conversion of the Jewish nation, Ezek. xxxvii. 27.

"The last character (saith he) that belongs to this state, or rather to those that enjoy it, is this, that they are kings and priests unto God;" and this also we have shewed to be promised to the converted Jews, Isa. lxi. 6. lxv. 20.

I add, That as the ancient fathers generally held that the time would come when "all Israel shall be saved," and be converted to the Christian faith; so did they as generally conceive that this should happen at the close of the world,* and about the time of our Saviour's second coming; and most of them speak of it as a branch of the Millenium.

So Justin Martyr says once and again, that †"then the Jews shall see and shall acknowledge him whom they have pierced;" and he confesses to Trypho,‡ "that Jerusalem shall be rebuilt," and that §"Christians shall rejoice with Christ, together with the patriarchs and prophets, and with the Jews and their proselytes;" i. e. the nations then flowing in to them before the coming of our Lord." So Irenæus‖ declares, that then "God will restore them to the land which he had promised, and given to their fathers, and they shall dwell in it in hope:" and Tertullian* saith, that "he will then own the circumcision, 'et Abrahæ gentem, cum ultimò venerit, acceptatione, et benedictione dignabitur,' and at his last coming will vouchsafe to accept and bless the seed of Abraham." And this is suitable to the ancient opinion of the Jews,† that, "in the end of the world, there should be to them a world full of joy and exultation, so that their heaven and earth should as it were be renewed, according to the words of Isaiah," lxv. 17. So the Targum upon those words of Hosea, "The children of Israel shall seek the Lord their God, and David their king, and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days."

§. V. Nor is it to be wondered that there should be then such a glorious conversion of them, and such a flowing-in of the nations to them, seeing the prophets seem to intimate there shall be then a full effusion of the Holy Ghost upon them, somewhat resembling that which was vouchsafed to the first ages of Christianity. So the prophet Isaiah speaks of the desolation of the city, ἕως ἂν ἔλθῃ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς πνεῦμα ἀφ' ὑψηλοῦ, "until the spirit be poured upon them from on high," Isa. xxxii. 15. which is the very phrase in which our Lord promiseth the Spirit to his apostles, Luke xxiv. 49. St. Paul proves their conversion from those words of the prophet Isaiah, "The Deliverer shall come out of Zion, and shall turn away iniquity from Jacob:" with which these are immediately connected, "And this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put into thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, from henceforth for ever," lix. 20, 21. And again, xliv. 3. "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground; I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing on thy offspring." So Ezek. xxxvi. 24. "I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land." And, ver. 27. "I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes." And xxxix. 28, 29. "I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there: neither will I hide my face any more from them, for I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord." And this seems plainly to be hinted in these words of St. Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 15—17. "Even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. Nevertheless, when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away; for the Lord is (the giver of) that Spirit, (or οὗ δὲ) where the Lord is, there is the Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," from subjection to the law, and from that veil which hinders them from turning to Christ.

To this Mr. Mead (p. 761. 767.) conjectures there shall be added a vision of Jesus Christ to them; for, saith God by his prophet Zechariah, xii. 10. "I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications, and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn for him." And Christ being asked, "What shall be the sign of the end of the world?" Matt. xxiv. 3. saith, ver. 30. "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and they shall see all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." And he spake to the Jews thus, "Verily I say unto you, Yet a little while, and you shall not see me till you say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," Matt. xxiii. 39.

Or, that according to the ancient and general doctrine both of Jew and Christian, they shall have an Elias sent to instruct them, a deliverer ἕνεκεν Σίων, for the sake of Zion, as the Septuagint, Isa. lix. 20. for, saith he, "It may be fit to conceive magnificently of so great a work of God, towards a people for whom he hath formerly shewed so many wonders; especially this being the greatest work of mercy and wonder that ever he did for them, far beyond the bringing them forth of Egypt, and leading them in the wilderness." And to this he refers these words of Ecclesiasticus; "Elias was ordained to turn the hearts of the father to the son, and to restore, κἀναστῆσαι, the tribes of Jacob: Μακάριοι οἱ ἰδόντές σε, καὶ οἱ ἀγαπήσει κεκοσμημένοι, καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ζωῇ ζησόμεθα, blessed are they that see, and are adorned with love, for we shall surely live," Ecclus. xlviii. 10. 11. Where note, that their conversion is again represented by a new life, and by the very word used concerning the souls of the martyrs which were slain, Rev. xx. 4.

§. VI. Add to this, that as all the ancient millenaries held, that this reign on earth should be at Jerusalem,* and that the Jews converted then should reign together with the Christians; so all the passages cited from Jewish writers concerning the Millenium, speak only of the Millenium of the resurrection, the new heavens and new earth the Jewish nation shall enjoy. This is apparent from those words on which the Midrash Tehillim founds this Millenium, viz. "Comfort us, according to the days in which thou hast afflicted us," Psal. xc. 15. in Babylon, in Greece, in Rome: from the words cited by Galatinus, lib. xii. cap. 1. from R. Eliezer, cap. 34. "As I live, saith the Lord, I will raise you in the time to come, in the resurrection of the dead, and I will gather you, with all Israel, into the land of Israel:" from those cited from R. Saadias on Dan. vii. 18. "Because the Jews rebelled against their Lord, their kingdom shall be taken from them, and given to the four monarchies who shall possess it in this world, and shall subdue and carry captive Israel, till the age to come, in which the Messiah shall reign:" from the Targum on Hos. xiv. 8. "They shall be gathered from the midst of their captivity;" and on Psal. i. 4. from the passage quoted by Galatinus, lib. xi. cap. 1. from the book Beracoth, that "Israel shall no more make mention of their departure out of Egypt in the age to come, in the days of the Messiah:" and from the words cited by Mr. Mead, Luke xxi. 24. "The Jews shall be carried captives into all nations, till the times of the gentiles be fulfilled, and then they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds:" from the words of Tobit, cited by Mr. Mead, p. 579. "Then the children of Israel shall go into a very long captivity; but the blessed God shall remember them, and gather them from the four corners of the earth." Accordingly, Mr. Mead sums up their opinion thus: "They expect their forefathers, at least such as were just and holy, should rise in the beginning of the same Millenium, and reign in the land of Israel, with their offspring, under the Messiah:" and, saith he, "I can hardly believe that all this smoke of tradition could arise, but from some fire of truth anciently made known to them." And this I freely grant, and do indeed suppose, by asserting a prediction of such a general call of the Jews, near the close of the world, as they styled ζωοποίησις, a reviving, and a resurrection of them. But how comes this tradition to relate to Christian martyrs beheaded for the name of Christ, or to be fulfilled in the resurrection of them only who are chiefly Christians, not of the Jews, but of the gentiles? Mr. Mead solves the matter thus, p. 604. "Under the second sort of these reigners, I would in a particular respect understand the nation of the Jews then converted to the Christian faith, who, coming in towards the end of the day, may, above all others, be said to be those who had not worshipped the beast, nor his image, nor had received his mark upon their foreheads or their hands." And thus will truth prevail at last, but to the ruin of this literal resurrection: for how can they literally be "said to live again, and to have a part in the first resurrection, who were never slain for the faith?" and who are not to be converted, say their own prophecies and traditions, till God createth a new heaven and a new earth, and much less till the fall of Babylon?

CHAP. III.

§. I. This chapter contains an answer to all the arguments produced from Scripture, to prove this literal resurrection of the martyrs, and this reign of them on earth a thousand years, viz. 1. To the chief argument for this opinion, from Rev. xx. 4—6. §. II. To 2 Pet. iii. from ver. 5. 13. §. III. To Heb. ii. 5. compared with i. 6. §. IV. To Matt. v. 5, "The meek shall inherit the earth." §. V. To Rom. viii. 19, 20. "The creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." §. VI. To Acts iii. 20, 21. "The heavens must receive him, till the time of the restitution of all things." §. VII. To Matt. xix. 27—29. "Ye that have followed me in the regeneration, shall sit upon twelve thrones. And they shall receive a hundred-fold now in this life."

I PROCEED now to the arguments produced from Scripture, for the doctrine of the Millenium; to which I hope to return a clear and satisfactory answer, beginning with those words of the Revelation, in which all the assertors of this doctrine place their confidence. And they are these:

§. I. Arg. I. "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years, Rev. xx. 4.

"But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection, ver. 5.

"Blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years," ver. 6.

1. Here, say they, is mention of a first resurrection, antecedent to the general resurrection of the just, who are not to live again, till they who first rise have reigned a thousand years on earth.

2. This resurrection, say they, is proper to those who were "slain for the testimony of Jesus, and the word of God, and were not worshippers of the beast."

3. This resurrection, say they, is not a metaphorical, but a proper resurrection; for the souls, i. e the persons of them that were slain, live again.

4. They do "reign with Christ a thousand years," and that reign, say most of them, is to be upon earth; therefore there is to be a reign of those martyrs, who were "slain for the testimony of Jesus, and the word of God," upon earth a thousand years.

Now, in answer to this argument, let it be noted:

Ans. 1. That it is not the bodies, but the souls of them that are beheaded, who are said to live. Now the word ψυχὴ, rendered soul, occurs six times in this book, this place excepted; and in all these places, it signifies either the soul in separation or distinction from the body, or the living soul; for, vi. 9. "The souls under the altar," not only "cry with a loud voice," but they are "clothed with white robes," ver. 10, 11. Which expressions cannot be well applied to dead bodies, viii. 9. The κτίσματα ἔχοντα ψυχὰς are the creatures having animal souls by which they lived, xii. 11. It plainly signifies their lives, i. e. the souls by which men live, xvi. 3. It is expressly ἡ ψυχὴ ζῶσα, the living soul, xviii. 13. It signifies the lives of men, or else the souls of men, which they did hunt for, or devour, as Ezek. xiii. 18. 20. 22. 25. and ver. 14. ἐπιθυμία τῆς ψυχῆς is, the desire, not of the body, but of the soul: why therefore must this word be here supposed to signify, not the soul, but that dead body opposite to it, which alone properly can be said to rise, and live again?

2. Let it be noted, that a proper and a literal resurrection is never, in the whole New Testament, expressed or represented to us, by the living of the soul; but always by the living, raising, or the resuscitation of the dead, "the raising of the bodies of the saints, of them that slept in the dust," or "in their graves and sepulchres," or who were "buried in the sea," or "in the earth:" if then the Holy Ghost here meant a literal and proper resurrection, why doth he so much vary from the terms he constantly doth use elsewhere, whenever he discourseth of such a resurrection, and take up with the terms so oft applied, in Scripture, to a moral and metaphorical resurrection? As we shall see hereafter.

Ans. 2. I grant, that here is mention of a first resurrection, an antecedent to the general and proper resurrection; but then it plainly is a resurrection, in which all that are "blessed and holy," and over whom the "second death hath no power," have a part, ver. 6. and they are all whose names are written in the book of life, ver. 14, 15. It is a resurrection of all who had not worshipped the beast, ver. 4. and they are all the same persons, Rev. xiii. 8. It is a resurrection of those who are made "kings and priests to God and Christ," which all good Christians are, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 6. and therefore not of martyrs only.

Again, it is a resurrection before the day of judgment, and before the sea, and death, and the grave, deliver up their dead, as the words following intimate, ver. 12, 13. viz. "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened; and another book which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of these things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up her dead that were in it: and death and hades delivered up their dead that were in them: and they were judged, every man according to his works." Where note, that the dead delivered up, were all that were "judged according to their works." It also is a resurrection before Christ's coming "to render to every man as his works shall be;" for this he after promiseth to do, xxii. 12. Whereas, according to the doctrine of the Millenium, Christ had already given to them, whom he had raised to reign with him on earth, the blessing promised "to him that overcometh," Rev. ii. 26, 27. iii. 21. v. 10.

3. The rest of the dead, that lived not again until the thousand years were finished, are not, the just, but the synagogue of Satan, Gog and Magog, ver. 8. For St. John, chap. xix. represents the "King of kings, and Lord of lords," with "the armies which were in heaven, making war with the kings of the earth, and their armies," and giving "their flesh to be meat" unto them; in which war "the beast was taken, and the false prophet, and cast alive into a lake of fire," ver. 20. And then it follows thus, καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ, and the rest of them, who were gathered together to make war with this King of kings, "were slain with the sword that came out of his mouth, and all the fowls were filled with their flesh," ver. 21. Now, it being by the pagan emperors first, and by the beast afterward, that Satan, "the great dragon, made war with the seed of the woman which kept the commandments of God, and had the testimony of Jesus Christ," Rev. xii. 17. these instruments of Satan being thus slain, and overcome by Christ, Satan is bound a thousand years; i. e. he is so long disabled from persecuting and molesting the church of Christ: and during this space, she is raised up to her primitive purity, and flourisheth gloriously, and so is represented as having a resurrection from the dead: this thousand years being ended, Satan is let loose again, and gathers again his instruments, i. e. "the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to battle, and they compass the camp of the saints," Rev. xx. 8, 9. And this is the living of the rest of the dead again, after the thousand years were ended, ver. 5. For it is only, οἱ λοιποὶ, the rest that were slain, xix. 21. that lived again; it is only those who had no share in the first resurrection, and so were neither blessed nor holy, ver. 6. nor had their names written in the book of life; and consequently, those on which the second death had place, which death they suffered when "fire came down from heaven and devoured them," and they were cast "into the lake of fire with the devil," ver. 10. 15.

And that οἱ λοιποὶ, the rest, xix. 21. xx. 5. should signify the same persons, cannot seem strange, if we consider that only four verses intervene betwixt them. And that they must be the same persons, is evident from the connexion of the words, thus; "The rest of the dead lived not till the thousand years" of Satan's binding, and the saints' reign were ended, ver. 5. And when those "thousand years were ended, Satan was loosed, and gathered them together against that church of Christ, which had thus reigned a thousand years, ver. 7--10.

And this interpretation, of "the rest of the dead" rising again, gives a clear answer to the objection of Mr. Mead, against the other senses commonly imposed upon these words, viz. "That it would be a most harsh and violent interpretation, to say, The dead and the living again of the dead, should not be taken in the same sense:" for, according to this exposition, they are exactly taken in the same sense: the dead church living again, in the same metaphorical sense in which the rest of the dead, the enemies of the church, live again, at the end of the thousand years, when Satan is loosed, and gathers them to battle against the church.

4. The souls of them who were "slain for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God," are those Christians who were slain in the time of the ten persecutions; and the souls of them "who worshipped not the beast," are those Christians who chose rather to die, or suffer persecution, than to be guilty of Romish idolatry: and they are said to live again, as the beast which had received "τὴν πληγὴν θανάτου, the wound of death, and one of whose heads was wounded to death, ἔζησεν, lived again," Rev. xiii. 3. 12. viz. in the succession of the antichristian beast, to him which exercised the power of the heathen emperors over the earth, and revived the idolatry of the heathen empire. And as the two witnesses, when slain, are said to live again, "the spirit of life from God entering into them," Rev. xi. 7. 11. because a succession of men of the same faith, and the same opposition to the beast, revive and flourish after they were slain; some here reply, that "this was spoken of the two churches," that they were slain, and lived again, not of the supposita. But why then may not the words of the St. John be spoken of the church of Jew and gentile, then reviving, and not of the supposita? Moreover, these two witnesses are said to be slain, ver. 7. and their "dead bodies to lie in the streets of the great city," ver. 18. to be seen lying there "three days and a half," and not to be suffered to be put into their graves, ver. 9. and "after three days and a half, the Spirit of God" is said to "enter into them, to make them stand upon their feet, and live again." If therefore nothing of this be spoken of the supposita, why should those words, "I saw the souls of them who were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and they lived again," be spoken of the supposita, and not of the churches of the converted Jews and gentiles? This being the prophetic scheme by which the Scripture still represents the glorious restoration of God's church and people. For,

1. The restoration of the church is sometimes represented as a resurrection of it from the dead. So saith the prophet Isaiah, Ἀναστήσονται οἱ νεκροὶ, "Thy dead shall arise, and be raised out of their tombs," xxvi. 19. So God speaks to the Jewish nation by Ezekiel, saying, "I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel," Ezek. xxxvii. 13, 14. The prophet Hosea speaks thus; "In three days, ἐξαναστησόμεθα, we shall rise up again, and we shall live before him," Hos. vi. 2. And the apostle, speaking of this very matter, viz. the conversion of the Jews, saith, "It shall be even to the gentiles, ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, as life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15. Here then is a resurrection of the church of God, agreeable to that which our interpretation of this passage of the Revelation doth import: nor is there any more reason to say the words of St. John respect the supposita, and not the churches, than to say the same of many of the places cited.

Moreover, the Scripture doth more frequently mention the restoration of the church, and her return from a low, captive, and afflicted state, under the metaphor of "a new life, a life from the dead, a reviviscence of God's church and people." Thus when God moved the Persian kings to let the Jews return to their own land, he is by Ezra said to give them, ζωοποίησιν, a reviviscence, Ezra ix. 8, 9. The Psalmist, speaking of himself, as the text, or of God's people also, saith the marginal reading, useth these words, "Thou which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me (marg. us) again, and shalt bring me up again (marg. us) from the depth of the earth," Psal. lxxi. 20. And the church speaketh thus to God, Ζωώσεις, "Thou wilt quicken us," and "we will call upon thy name," Psal. lxxx. 18. And again, "Thou wilt return, καὶ ζωώσεις ἡμᾶς, and revive us, and thy people shall rejoice in thee," Psal. lxxxv. 6. Ζήσονται οἱ τεθνεῶτές σου, "Thy dead men shall live," Isa. xxvi. 19. say Symmachus and Theodotion: Ζησόμεθα. "We shall live in his sight," saith the prophet Hosea, vi. 2, 3. and xiv. 17. "They shall live with their children, and return again," saith the prophet Zachary, x. 8, 9. The son of Sirach saith, "At the coming of Elias ζῷῃ ζησόμεθα, we shall live again," xlviii. 11. But the chief seat of this metaphor is in the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel, where God is introduced inquiring of the Jews in Babylon, Εἰ ζήσεται, "Can these bones live?" ver. 3. and promising to put into them πνεῦμα ζωῆς, "the breath of life," ver. 5. and saying "I will put my spirit into you, καὶ ζήσεσθε, and ye shall live;" and bidding the prophet blow upon them, καὶ ζησάτωσαν, "that they may live," ver. 9. and declaring, that when he had done so, "breath entered into them, καὶ ἔζησαν, and they lived again, and stood upon their feet," v. 10. in all which places, the very word which St. John useth to express the first resurrection is here used to express the return of the church from her obscurity and thraldom to a glorious state. Why therefore may not the word in St. John bear that sense which it so often bears in the prophetic writings, and twice in the New Testament,* when spoken of the gentiles? It hence at last appears, that by this interpretation, I put no force upon the words, but do expound them in the familiar sense in which they are still used upon the like occasion in the prophetic writings.

Now it is generally agreed, by those who own this conversion of the Jews, that it is not to commence till after the destruction of the beast, or the downfal of antichrist, mentioned chap. xviii. And therefore, in the next chapter, he begins his discourse upon it saying, xix. 7. "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready;" i. e. she who was formerly put away, because she was not prepared† for the bridegroom's coming, was now to be married to God again. And, chap. xxi. he reassumes this matter, and shews the bride, the Lamb's wife, in such a description, as will not suffer us to doubt she is the Jewish nation converted to the Christian faith: for he calls her the holy city, and the new Jerusalem; and tells us, in the very words of Isaiah, lx. 3. 10. that the "nations which shall be saved shall walk in the light of this city." He calleth her also the bride to be married to the Lamb; which is the description the prophets make of this converted nation, viz. as "of a bride adorned with her jewels, and as one that is to be married to the Lord." (Isa. lxi. 10. lxii. 4, 5.) And he goes on in a continual description of this new Jerusalem, in the words of the prophets Isaiah and Ezekiel, speaking of the conversion of the Jewish nation. The city also "coming down from heaven," ver. 10. is the new church of the converted Jews, said to come down from heaven, according to the Hebrew phrase; because of that Divine wisdom, and those spiritual gifts and graces with which she shall be adorned from heaven: for, as they were wont to say of one who treated of sublime heavenly things, that he did עלה לרקיע, "ascend into heaven,"* and speak as one who was admitted into the Divine councils, (Deut. xxx. 11, 12. Prov. xxx. 3.) and of those who heard these things, that they were "exalted to heaven:" (Matt. xi. 23.) so the pouring down of these gifts and blessings is represented as "the opening of heaven," and letting them down upon the earth. Thus when St. John receives his prophecy, he "sees a door opened in heaven," and hears "a voice, saying, Come up hither, and I will shew thee what shall be hereafter," Rev. iv. 1. Where note, that the voice he heard then, was "as the voice of a trumpet:" and so the very same voice he heard when he was "in the spirit," Rev. i. 10. The two witnesses also, when they live again, are "called up into heaven," Rev. xi. 11, 12. as being filled with heavenly wisdom. And since the spiritual gifts, imparted to the church, are said to come "from above, from the Father of lights," James i. 7. and they who were made partakers of them, to have "tasted, τῆς δωρεᾶς ἐπουρανίου, of the heavenly gift;" seeing the church of Christ "is the Jerusalem which is from above," Gal. iv. 25. "the heavenly Jerusalem," Heb. xii. 22. it is no wonder that she is represented here as coming down from heaven, when she was, as it were, to have a "new birth" which is "from above," John iii. 3. and to be adorned with "spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ Jesus," Eph. i. 3. and to be reduced to her primitive lustre and purity: for then shall the purity of the church return, and be as it was in the times of the first martyrs for the faith; and the gospel shall be professed, without any antichristian mixture; as they who opposed the beast, endeavoured to preserve it: and thus shall these martyrs and opposers of the beast live again.

A reverend and worthy person, of more than ordinary skill in matters of this nature, is of opinion;

First, "That the first resurrection here mentioned, will be a literal resurrection of them that have lost their lives for the testimony of Christ, to enjoy eternal life in heaven a thousand years before the general resurrection, as the martyrs of the Old Testament arose with the body of Christ," Matt. xxvii. 52. "They shall reign (saith he) with Christ, not on earth, but in heaven, where Christ is, and shall be, till he come to judgment."

Secondly, He is of opinion, "that not only the martyrs shall then rise to heavenly bliss, but that their murderers shall then also rise to eternal punishment:" which he gathers from those words of Daniel, xii. 2. "And many of them that sleep in the dust shall arise, some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting shame and contempt." Now,

First, Against the doctrine of the first and second resurrection, properly so called, I have offered some arguments in the annotations on 1 Cor. xv. and chap. iv. §. 2. I therefore only farther note;

First, That St. Matthew speaks not one word of any martyrs that arose after Christ's resurrection, but only of the arising of some saints that slept, and their going into the holy city, and appearing unto many; which seems rather to make it probable, they were saints who had lived in the memory of those to whom they appeared, and were known. (See the note there.)

Secondly, St. Matthew doth not say, as St. John doth, that "many souls lived;" but, that πολλὰ σώματα, "many bodies of those that slept arose out of their sepulchres:" his words must therefore be understood of a proper resurrection of the bodies of the saints: but it cannot be hence inferred, that the words of St. John bear the same sense.

Thirdly, St. John doth not say, his martyrs shall reign with Christ a thousand years "before the general resurrection," but only, that "they shall reign with Christ a thousand years;" which seems an odd expression, when applied to them who are raised to reign for ever with him: add to this, that after the resurrection of St. John's saints to "reign with Christ a thousand years," Satan is loosed, and raises his armies to fight against, and compass about τὴν παρεμβολὴν τῶν ἁγίων, the camp of the saints, ver. 7—9. which fairly intimates, that the saints, mentioned ver. 6. as partakers of the first resurrection, were still on earth, and not reigning with Christ in heaven.

Lastly, The second part of this opinion seems to contradict many scriptures which expressly teach, that the time of the punishment of the wicked shall be after the sentence of absolution hath been passed upon the blessed, Matt. xxv. 41. 46. when all the good have gone into everlasting life, John v. 28, 29. at the day of judgment, and when we shall appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, Rom. ii. 8, 9. 16. 2 Cor. v. 10. and that they who have persecuted Christ's members, shall be punished at "the revelation of Christ from heaven," 2 Thess. i. 6. 9. at "the conflagration of world," 2 Pet. ii. 9. iii. 7. at "the day of judgment," Jude 14, 15. "when he cometh in the clouds," Rev. i. 7. and that the crown of glory shall be given to the righteous at the same time. (See note on 2 Tim. iv. 8.)

Obj. 2. Some refer to this Millenium those words of Christ, Matt. v. 5. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth;" saying, that "neither David nor our Saviour could understand this otherwise than of a future state; because it is not the meek, but the great ones of the world, that slice the earth among them, and court-flatterers that scramble for preferment."

Ans. But it is evident to a demonstration, that David did understand this of the present earth, or of the land of Canaan; for the tenor of this whole thirty-seventh Psalm is designed to shew, that wicked men shall, by God's judgment, suddenly perish, whilst righteous men lived easily and quietly in the land of Canaan: so ver. 9. "Evil-doers shall be cut off: but they that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth: for yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be, but the meek shall inherit the earth. They that are blessed of him, shall inherit the earth; and they that are cursed of him, shall be rooted out." So ver. 34. "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee, τοῦ κληρονομῆσαι τὴν γῆν, to inherit the earth: when the wicked are destroyed, thou shalt see it." (See also ver. 14. 17. 19. 23, 24, 25, 26.) It is therefore unadvisedly said, the Psalmist "could not understand this of the present earth," and that upon a plain mistake of the import of the phrase; as if inheriting the earth, was enjoying a vast fortune, or a great share of temporal enjoyments here: whereas, the comfort of this life, as our Lord teacheth, Luke xii. 15. "consisteth not in the abundance of the things that we possess." The phrase rather imports, that meekness is the best way to procure us a long and peaceable life on earth, Psal. xiv. 12. 14. 1 Pet. iii. 10. and that the meek person shall ordinarily have the most sure enjoyment of these things, as far as they are needful: that he shall enjoy them with the greatest quiet and tranquillity, without the strife, debate, anxiety, and trouble, which imbitter the enjoyment of these things to others, and with the truest comfort, satisfaction, and contentedness of mind. For, as Chrysostom well observes upon the place, because the Jews had been oft taught this lesson in the Old Testament, our Saviour addresses himself to them in the language they had been accustomed to; this Son of David repeateth and confirmeth to them the promise made by David. And this I judge to be the most natural and truest exposition of these words.

Obj. 3. Our Saviour promises to his disciples and followers, that for the losses they should sustain here on his account, and for the sake of his gospel, they should receive there a hundred-fold, and sit upon thrones with him, judging the tribes of Israel. The words are these: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 27. 28. These thrones must, in all reason, be the same with the thrones mentioned, Dan. vii. Apoc. xx. 4. and therefore mark the same time and state: and seeing, in those places, they plainly signify the millennial state or the kingdom of Christ, and his saints, they must here signify the same in this promise of our Saviour to his suffering followers. And as to the word παλιγγενεσία, which is here translated regeneration, it is well known, that both the Greek philosophers and Greek fathers use that word for the renovation of the world, which is to be at or before the millennial state.

Ans. In answer to this argument, I shall not take notice, that what the argument saith is promised to Christ's disciples and followers in general, is indeed promised only to his twelve apostles, to them who had then lost all, "and followed him," Matt. xii. 17. to them who had "continued with him in his temptations," Luke xxii. 28. The thrones here mentioned therefore, cannot be the thrones spoken of in Daniel and the Revelation; for these thrones are peculiar to the twelve apostles: those in the Revelation are supposed to belong to all who have a share in the first resurrection: the apostles sit upon these thrones, only "to judge the twelve tribes of Israel;" but they "who sit on the thrones," mentioned in the Revelation, are to "rule over the nations, and judge them," Rev. ii. 26, 27. iii. 21. v. 10. 20. iv. 6. But,

Secondly, I grant, the παλιγγενεσία, or regeneration, here mentioned, may be referred to the consummation of the world, and to the new heavens and earth of which the prophets speak: but then I add, this παλιγγενεσία, or new birth, is only that of the church of Christ, that ζωοποίησις, or new life, that ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, life from the dead, she shall receive, when all Israel shall be saved, and the "fulness of the gentiles" shall flow in to them. For,

First, The persons here to be judged, are only the twelve tribes of Israel; which makes it more than probable, that the whole promise made to the apostles respects their government over these tribes, coming in at the close of the world, after the fall of antichrist; and that not by a resurrection of their persons, but by a reviviscence of that spirit which resided in them, and of that purity and knowledge which they delivered to the world; and chiefly by admission of their gospel to be the standard of their faith, and the direction of their lives.

Secondly, It hath been observed already, that the delivery of the Jews from their former captivities and miseries, is always represented as a ζωοποίησις "a giving of life, and a resurrection to the Jews." And thus may those words of St. John be primarily referred to them; viz. "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them:" (xx. 4.) though these things belong not to them only, but in general "to him that overcometh," (ii. 26, 27. iii. 1.) Seeing then their return from their captivity, is, in the style of the prophets, usually represented as a παλιγγενεσία, a reviving, or new life; why may not the time of their most glorious conversion, and collection from all the corners of the earth, be by our Saviour represented under that known metaphor? And this conversion of the Jewish nation, being by me placed in St. John's epocha, viz. after the destruction of the beast, and the death and slaughter of the armies of them that fought for him, or worshipped his image; and her converted members being, in my opinion, the very "bride of the Lamb, which had made herself ready," and, after a long divorce, was now married to God again; I comply in this with all the ancient millenaries, and especially with Justin Martyr,* when he saith, this παλιγγενεσία "is the mystery of all that expect Jesus Christ to appear at Jerusalem," spoken of by Isaiah, chap. lxvi. and that "all Christians entirely orthodox, expect to spend a thousand years in Jerusalem," as the prophet Isaiah hath foretold, saying, "There shall be a new heaven and new earth:" for as these things are spoken by a prophet of the Jews (one sent to speak these things to them), so is it beyond dispute, that they chiefly and immediately concern that nation, and her τεκνογονία, new birth of a numerous offspring, after a long barrenness, (lxvi. 7—9.) and her exaltation to a high estate of excellence and glory; and that so visible to the gentiles that all nations and tongues shall see her glory.

As for the following words, urged stiffly by the ancient and some latter millenaries, viz. "And every one that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or sister, or father, or mother, or wife and children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brothers, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands; and in the world to come, eternal life:" it is, in my opinion,

First, Very unreasonable to interpret these words of blessings to be conferred on men after the resurrection; for they that are thought "worthy to be the sons of the resurrection (saith our Lord), neither marry nor are given in marriage," Luke xx. 35. Whence therefore should they have these mothers, and these children, not to add wives, a hundred-fold? They are made like to angels at the resurrection; and what should such angelical persons do with, what advantage will they reap from, a hundred houses, or a like increase of land, in earth?

If you reply, that these words of our Saviour relate not to the first resurrection; of which this text, which speaks of wives and children, is to be interpreted, but only to the second and general resurrection; I answer, that the words are general, and therefore must include all that are "sons of the resurrection." Moreover, by admitting this double resurrection, the first, in which they that are raised, might marry, or have wives and children, and the second, in which they could not, the objection or inquiry of the sadducees is partly left unanswered; for this distinction doth suppose a resurrection, in which the ground of their inquiry might take place.

Secondly, This wonderful increase is promised, νῦν, at present, ἐν τῷ καιρῷ τούτῳ, in this time of life, Mark. x. 30. Luke xviii. 28. in opposition to what they shall receive "in the age to come." Now the Millenium is still placed, by Dr. Burnet, in the age to come after the conflagration of the world; this promise therefore cannot refer to his Millenium, nor yet to any other which begins after the resurrection of these persons; for that time can with no propriety of speech be said to be now; nor can the blessings then received, be said to be received in this life. Moreover, these blessings are to be received, μετὰ διωγμῶν, with persecutions; it being the known observation of critics and grammarians,* that μετὰ with a genitive case, signifies with, and denotes, τὸν αὐτὸν καιρὸν, the same time; and only with an accusative case signifies after, and denotes ὑστεροχρονίαν, a following time; so that these persecutions must be contemporary with the enjoyment of these blessings; whereas a general peace, and freedom from all persecutions,† is made a necessary character of the millennial state.

Lastly, These words afford an argument against the doctrine of the Millenium; because, according to them, the only blessing to be received, ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τῷ ἐρχομένῳ, in the age to come, is life everlasting; which blessing is confined to heaven, and not to be enjoyed on the earth, our "house eternal being in the heavens," (2 Cor. v. 1.) and our "inheritance eternal reserved in the heavens for us:" and therefore, they to whom the promise is here made, are not in the world to come to live a thousand years on earth, or to enjoy the temporal blessings promised here; because they are not to be enjoyed in the world to come, but now, in this present life; and because the only blessing promised in the world to come, is not to be enjoyed on earth, but is reserved in the heavens for us. (1 Pet. i. 4.)

Obj. 4. St. Peter, in his sermon to the Jews, after our Saviour's ascension, tells them, that he will come again, and that there will be then a restitution of all things, such as was promised by the prophets: "The heavens (saith he) must receive him till the time of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his prophets since the world began." (Acts iii. 20, 21.)

* "Οπερ καὶ διὰ Ἡσαΐου ἐκηρύκτο διὰ πλείονων, ἐν οἷς καὶ τὸ μυστήριον πάλιν τῆς γενέσεως ἡμῶν, καὶ ἁπλῶς πάντων, τὸν Χριστὸν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ φανήσεσθαι προσδοκώντων. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 312. B. et p. 307.

Ans. I answer, That these words cannot be meant of a restitution of all things to their former state: for sure it is very improper to say, there will be a restitution of all things to their former state, "which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets;" for since these things relate to the forerunner of our Lord, Christ's coming in the flesh, his life, death, resurrection, and ascension, the preaching of the gospel to the gentiles, the reign of antichrist, the calling of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles, these things may very well be said to be exhibited, performed, accomplished, and consummated: but I see not with what propriety or truth they can be said to be restored to their former states, or be renewed; and therefore ἄχρι χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, is, by the Syriac, rendered, until the fulness of the time of all things; by the Arabic, till the time in which all things shall be perfected, or finished; by Tertullian,* "adusque tempora exhibitionis omnium;" by Irenæus,† "usque ad tempus dispositionis omnium," i. e. till the time of the exhibition, or disposal of all things; by Œcumenius, till the time that all things do εἰς πέρας ἐλθεῖν, come to an end. And for the confirmation of this import of the word, we have the suffrage of Hesychius and Phavorinus, that ἀποκατάστασις is τελείωσις, the consummation of a thing. Hence then I argue thus against this doctrine: Since Christ is to continue in heaven till the completion or consummation of all things, spoken by the holy prophets, if the Millenium were any of them, Christ must continue in heaven till the consummation of that also, and therefore is not to come down from heaven to reign on earth till the Millenium be ended; nor can that be contemporary with our Lord's second coming, which is from heaven.

The arguments produced in favour of this Millenium, from Rom. viii. 19—21. from 2 Thess. ii. 1. from Heb. i. 6. and ii. 5. and from 2 Pet. iii. 8—12. are sufficiently answered in the notes on those places.

CHAP. IV.

§. I. This chapter contains arguments against the literal resurrection, and the reign of martyrs upon earth a thousand years. First, From the inconsistency of it with the happy state of souls departed. §. II. Secondly, From the accurate description of the resurrection in the Holy Scripture, without any mention of a first and second resurrection, and with such descriptions of the qualities of the bodies raised, the efficient cause, of the time, circumstances, and consequents, of it, which suit not with the doctrine of the Millenium. §. III. Thirdly, From the inconsistency of it with the genius of the Christian faith, and the nature of the gospel-promises.

HAVING thus shewed, that Scripture and antiquity afford no sure foundation for this supposed resurrection of the saints and martyrs to reign with Christ on earth a thousand years; I proceed now to shew the inconsistence of this doctrine, with many things delivered in the Holy Scripture.

§. I. First, This doctrine seems not well consistent with the happy state of souls departed, recorded in the sacred writings; for can it rationally be supposed, that those "spirits of just men made perfect," which are now with Christ, (Heb. xii. 23.) and, being "absent from the body are present with the Lord," (2 Cor. v. 8. Phil. i. 23.) should leave those blessed mansions, or quit that happy state, to live on earth again a thousand years? that they who are already "entered into rest," (Luke xxiii. 43.) and who enjoy all the delights and satisfactions which paradise itself affords, should quit that station to enjoy peace and plenty upon earth? can they expect to be more righteous and holy, or to have more Divine and heavenly speculations, or better company, or a more full fruition of their Lord on earth, than they enjoyed in paradise? if not, who can imagine that God should thus degrade them after so long enjoyment of those happy regions, or that they should voluntarily quit those mansions for any temporal enjoyments of the body, any meat or drink, or earthly pleasures, which they had formerly denied themselves, and were even dead to whilst they lived here; or for any temporary converse upon that earth in which they only lived as pilgrims and strangers, still "looking for a better country, that is, a heavenly?" (Heb. xi. 13. 16.) And if this change seems not consistent with the state of happy souls in general, much less will it comport with those especial privileges and high prerogatives, supposed by some fathers to belong unto the souls of martyrs, viz. that they do instantly receive their crowns, and are admitted to a fuller vision, and a more intimate enjoyment of the God of heaven; for the higher their advancement is, the greater must their degradation be, when they return again to live on earth. So that this doctrine seems least of all consistent with the state of those Christian sufferers, who are supposed to be the very persons for whom it chiefly was designed, and to whom it is chiefly promised.

Secondly, Let us compare the resurrection mentioned by the Holy Scripture, with that supposed by the millenaries, and we shall easily discern, that no man reasonably can desire to enjoy the latter, who can be made partaker of the former.

They who believe the resurrection promised in Scripture, expect our Lord "from heaven to change their vile bodies into the likeness of Christ's glorious body." (Phil. iii. 21.) The millenaries expect him to change or to restore them into such bodies, as shall be still mortal, corruptible bodies; for else, what need of meat and drink, what pleasure can they reap from their plenty? The first expect, "this corruptible should then put on incorruption, this mortal put on immortality." (1 Cor. xv. 53.) The second, that it should do this only after a thousand years; for they suppose, (book iv. chap. 9. p. 206.) "that nature may be weak," and they may be "desirous to be dissolved" in the millennial state. The first expect, that their "dishonourable bodies should be raised in glory," (ver. 43.) The second, that they be first raised with their dishonourable parts. The first, that the body should be raised "a spiritual and a celestial body," bearing "the image of the heavenly Adam," (ver. 44. 48.) The second, that it be first raised an earthly body, bearing the image of the earthly Adam. And oh! how inglorious, how despicable, is the resurrection which these men expect, compared with the resurrection promised in the Holy Scripture! How much more happy would the saints and martyrs be, could they immediately enjoy the Scripture-resurrection, than by enjoying that which the millenaries have allotted to them? "And why should any one conceive they should not do it? Is it because there is a necessity they should first live on earth a thousand years,* to prepare them for heaven and eternal glory; 'Ut paulatim assuescant capere Deum,' as Irenæus† says, that they may by degrees enlarge their capacities, fit and accustom themselves to receive God; or, as he says in another place, that 'they may become capable of the glory of the Father,' that is, capable of bearing the glory and presence of God?" Sure this is not for the credit of the martyrs, that they should not be fit or capable to receive God, and enjoy the glory of the Father, without employing their contemplations and devotions upon earth a thousand years, when these holy persons, who rise not till the general resurrection, shall from that time be "for ever with the Lord," (1 Thess. iv. 17.) and be immediately partakers of the beatific vision? Moreover, what is it that must be thus fitted and capacitated by contemplation to receive God, and to enjoy this blessed vision? Is it not the soul? and can she not as well contemplate him under the altar or the throne, or whilst she doth abide in paradise? Is coming down from those celestial regions to this dull earth, the way to elevate the soul to heaven? Will putting on a corruptible body, a body needing plenty of earthly things, and finding pleasure in them, be the way to quicken and invigorate her heavenly flights and aspirations? Or, is there no true friendship,* no ingenuous conversation to be had in paradise, that the soul must descend to earth to enjoy it? Or, is it necessary, as Tertullian† and others‡ argue, by way of retribution, "that the body which hath suffered, may be rewarded in like kind;" i. e. that it may be now gratified with bodily delights, the pleasures of the throat and palate, fine clothes, and innocent diversions here on earth? As if a "change of this vile body into the likeness of Christ's glorious body," were not a better and far more glorious reward of all its sufferings.

* Dr. Burnet, book iv. chap. 9. † Lib. v. cap. 32.

Arg. 2. §. 2. A second argument against this doctrine, of a proper resurrection to reign with Christ a thousand years on earth, is taken from the accurate description of the resurrection contained in the Holy Scripture. For,

First, in all the descriptions the Holy Ghost so largely gives us of the resurrection, and the future judgment, in the evangelists and the epistles, there is no mention of a first and second resurrection, or of any prerogative of some saints above others in it, or of any precedence of any before others, as to the resurrection of their bodies; which might have reasonably been expected, had this doctrine been then received in some of those places where the thing is so largely and critically discoursed on, as to inform us twice, that the order of the resurrection shall be this, "that the dead in Christ shall rise first," (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.) and then, "we that are alive shall be changed," and that Christ is raised "as the first-fruits," and that "afterward they that are Christ's" shall be raised "at his coming:" here, I confess, is mention made of an order in the resurrection; for it is said, "In Christ shall all be made alive, every man in his own order," 1 Cor. xv. 33. but then the order is expressed thus, "Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's." Whereas, according to the millennial hypothesis, the words should rather have run thus, "Christ the first-fruits," then the martyrs, and a thousand years after the residue of the just: in the Epistle to the Thessalonians also, there is no order of the resurrection of the dead mentioned; but of them altogether, and without distinction, it is said, "them that sleep in Christ will God bring with him, and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

In answer to this argument, we have been told, that "as the Scripture speaks of the resurrection in gross, without distinguishing first and second, so it speaks of the coming of our Saviour, without distinction of first and second." But this is a great oversight; for the Scripture gives express notice of Christ's coming ἐκ δευτέρου, "a second time," for the salvation of his servants, Heb. ix. 20. and of his "coming again," to receive them into those mansions he is gone to prepare for them, John xiv. 3. There being therefore equal reason to expect a like distinction betwixt the first and second resurrection properly so called; the constant silence of the Scriptures, as to that matter, is no small prejudice against that hypothesis, which doth suppose a first and second resurrection.

Secondly, The Scripture in those places containeth many things which seem most plainly inconsistent with that doctrine; for either in those places the Scripture speaketh only of the second resurrection exclusively of the first, and then it is not true which Mr. Mead asserts, that "the day of judgment, and the time of the resurrection, include both the Millenium and the general resurrection;" or, that "the Scripture speaks of the resurrection in the gross, without distinguishing betwixt the first and second;" for, if it speaks only of the second exclusively of the first, it must speak of it distinctly from the first, or it must in those places intend to speak of both conjunctly and without distinction; and then what is said in them must be applicable to them both without distinction.

Again, The Scripture in those places speaketh many things: first, as to the nature of the resurrection, and the qualities of the bodies raised. Secondly, As to the efficient cause of the resurrection, our Lord Jesus. Thirdly, As to the time of the resurrection. Fourthly, As to the circumstances, and the immediate consequences of that resurrection, which are by no means applicable to the first and the particular resurrection supposed by the millenaries, but only to the general resurrection, which all Christians own. And,

First, That which the Scripture saith of the nature and the qualifications of the bodies raised, is this, that they shall be raised "glorious, spiritual, immortal, and incorruptible bodies;" for then "this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality;" (1 Cor. xv. 42. 49.) then shall we bear "the image of the heavenly Adam," or of that Lord from heaven who shall "change our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body;" (Phil. iii. 21.) then shall we "be clothed upon with our house from heaven, and death shall be swallowed up in victory." (2 Cor. v. 1. 4.) Now, can a body raised in glory, i. e. in clarity and in splendour, shining like the sun, and made "like to Christ's glorious body," and "like unto the angels," as they shall be, saith Christ, who are "thought worthy of the resurrection," have any need of all the plenty which Dr. Burnet hath prepared for it on earth? Can it feed upon or relish any of the banquets which God, saith Irenæus, and all the ancient milleuaries, hath prepared for it? Can a body raised in power, i. e. free from all renitency, all pain and lassitude, continue still, as Dr. Burnet (book iv. chap. 9. p. 206.) makes the bodies of his raised millenaries to do, under such weakness of nature as "will not suffer them to continue long under strong passions, or intenseness of mind?" Can a spiritual body, free from grossness and ponderosity, from needing rest, sleep, clothing, sustenance, receive advantage from that universal plenty, (chap. vii. p. 184. 186.) or need those goods of fortune, that external felicity, that temporal happiness, he hath provided for it upon earth? Can these men, raised with immortal and incorruptible bodies, which have already "swallowed up death in victory," wish to be dissolved, as he saith they will? (p.206.) Can the devil, when loosed, be so foolish, as to summon up his armies to fight against and kill them who are immortal, and can die no more? Can Gog and Magog, with all their numerous host, hope to prevail against them, or even dare to assault such shining radiant bodies as they then will have? In a word, can such bodies need or receive any farther exaltation to fit them for heaven, or for their elevation into the clouds, to be for ever with the Lord? If not, why should they live a thousand years on earth after God hath thus fitted and prepared them for their habitation in the highest heavens? I therefore do imagine, that when the patrons of this millennial resurrection find themselves thus pressed, they will assign to their new-raised inhabitants of the earth, a body capable of enjoying the good things on earth, and taking pleasure in those goods of fortune they have there provided for them, and leave their bodies to be changed after the Millenium, "into the likeness of Christ's glorious body," and to suffer then another change into celestial and spiritual bodies, though not another resurrection: and it seems necessary for them to admit of the forementioned absurdities, or to admit of this hypothesis; for when the apostle saith, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed," their new-raised inhabitants must belong to the dead, and so be raised incorruptible, and so incapable of those earthly goods they mentioned, as their reward on earth; or to the living, and then they must be changed. And yet the shift is plainly contrary to the account St. Paul hath given us of the resurrection of the body; for he expressly saith, that when this corruptible, weak, dishonourable, earthly body, shall be raised, it shall be raised in incorruption, glory, power, and be a spiritual body; that to the natural succeeds the spiritual body, to the earthy the heavenly body; (1 Cor. xv. 43, 44.) to the body bearing the image of the earthy, the body bearing the image of the heavenly Adam: whereas this shift must infer a body raised not in glory, or in incorruption, not a spiritual and a heavenly body, and so make these martyrs twice bear the image of the earthy Adam, or at least at their resurrection not to bear the image of the heavenly. Again, they who are then alive, and shall be changed, saith the apostle, are only those who never slept in the grave, (ver. 51, 52.) Now this cannot be true of martyrs raised from the dead, and so the change here mentioned cannot belong to them.

Secondly, This doctrine seems inconsistent with what the Scripture most plainly hath delivered concerning our Lord Jesus, the efficient cause, as well as the exemplar, of the resurrection of those that are Christ's; for he that is the author of this resurrection, is ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, the Lord coming down from heaven, to effect it, 1 Cor. xv. 47. our Lord descending down ἀπ οὐρανοῦ, from the heavens, 1 Thess. iv. 16. The time when God shall give to those that have been persecuted and afflicted, rest with the apostles, who sure will have a share in the first resurrection, is the time "of the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ from heaven," 2 Thess. i. 7. The time of this Millenium, say the patrons of it, is the time of the "restitution of all things." Now at that time, saith the apostle Peter, our Jesus is to be "sent down from the heavens," (Acts iii. 20, 21.) they being only to contain him till that time. And one would think, that if the saints must reign with Christ on earth a thousand years, he must be with them on the earth: but this the patrons of the Millenium will by no means own, but look upon it as a great absurdity. For, that "Christ should leave the right hand of his Father, to come and pass a thousand years here below, living upon earth in a heavenly body; this, I confess (saith Dr. Burnet*), is a thing I never could digest. And "I dare not imagine (saith Mr. Mead†) of this presence of Christ in his kingdom, that it should be a visible converse upon earth; for the kingdom of Christ ever hath, and shall be regnum cœlorum, a kingdom whose throne and kingly residence is in heaven." Here then the Scripture-account of the resurrection, that it shall be effected by the Lord Jesus coming down from heaven, and the Millenium of the ancients, is at once rejected; for, as Lactantius saith, "the Son of God shall come, and be conversantamong men a thousand years, and rule them with a righteous empire; he shall reign with them upon earth;" so was this the avowed doctrine of all the ancient millenaries: for they not only did assert his reign on earth, but assigned Jerusalem as the peculiar place of his residence, whilst he reigned upon it.

Thirdly, This doctrine is still more evidently repugnant to the time assigned for the resurrection of the just; for they are to be raised, saith the apostle, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; (1 Cor. xv. 52.) for the trumpet shall sound, and (then) the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we" that are alive, and have not slept, "shall be changed; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Here we are taught, that the dead in Christ, and so the martyrs, shall not be raised till our Lord's descent from heaven; that then they shall be raised in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; that, immediately upon their being raised, they that are then alive shall be changed. St. Jerome* therefore said, with good ground, that the apostle by these words, "cunctam primæ et secundæ resurrectionis excludit fabulam," destroys the fable of the first and second resurrection; by asserting that the resurrection of all that are dead in Christ, and sleep in him, shall be performed "in a moment," and "in the twinkling of an eye, at the sounding of the last trump," and "at the shout" or voice "of the last angel:" which leaves no room for a whole thousand years betwixt the first and second resurrection, unless the angel should be supposed to shout, or the trump sound, a thousand years. "The hour cometh (saith our Lord, John v. 28.) when all that are in their tombs shall hear my voice, and shall come forth." And sure that must be a long hour which lasteth a full thousand years. Again, there shall be pious persons living and unchanged, when all the pious that were dead are raised; "for the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we that are alive shall be changed," (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.) we that have not yet slept, saith the apostle. Place now the Millenium after the conflagration of the world, and all things in it, and where will you find these pious men alive, or how will you preserve them from those flames? Dr. Burnet† finds a great difficulty, not common to all, as he imagines, but peculiar to his own invention, of a Millenium after the conflagration of the present earth; viz. "how Gog and Magog should get into this new earth, the wicked being all consumed in those flames." He is not hardy enough to say that this is the poetic tale of the giants, though he saith (p. 219.) it hath great affinity with it. And therefore he produces these men, according to the philosophy of Lucretius and Mr. Hobbes, (p. 220.) "from the slime of the earth, and the heat of the sun, as brute creatures were at first:" but whence come these pious men that have not yet slept, into this new earth, is a fresh difficulty; and to this the doctor hath yet nothing to say, for he either thought not of them, or was unwilling to take up with the rabbinical notion, that they had eagles' wings given them to mount up into the air, whilst the earth was on fire.

Fourthly, This doctrine seems inconsistent with many circumstances of the resurrection mentioned in the Holy Scripture, for that speaks constantly of the resurrection of all saints, as of a resurrection not to a temporal life on earth, but to an eternal in the heavens. "They shall come forth out of their tombs to the resurrection of life, John v. 28. He that seeth and believeth in me, he that eateth my flesh, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day," vi. 54. That teacheth us, that when Christ comes again, they shall be received into the heavenly mansions prepared for them, John xiv. 2, 3. and xvii. 24. "and shall be with him where he now is; that when Christ, who is their life, shall appear, they shall appear with him in glory," Colos. iii. 14. that "when he doth appear, they shall be like him, and see him as he is." Whereas, according to the hypothesis of the millenaries, when Christ appears, and when he comes again, they who have been his choicest and most faithful servants shall not immediately be raised to eternal life, but first to that life which is but temporal; they shall not be received into heavenly, but into earthly mansions; they shall not be glorified with him, appear with him in glory, be like him in his glory, or "see him as he is," till they have spent a thousand years on earth to fit them for those blessed mansions, and to prepare them for this beatific vision. Moreover, it is said of all the dead in Christ, of all that slept in Jesus, that they shall be raised first, and that then immediately we "that are alive shall be snatched up with them in clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and then we shall be for ever with the Lord." Now if this be so, surely we cannot expect afterward to live on earth a thousand years; for, as Nyssen puts the question,‡ Τί ἐστι χρεία τῆς κάτω γῆς οἷς ἡ μετάρσιος ζωὴ ἐν ἐλπίσιν ἐστίν, What need is there that they should live below on earth, who hope thus to live in heaven, and to be ever with the Lord? Especially since these words plainly seem to speak not of a temporal, but an eternal life with Christ, not by enjoyment of him upon earth, but by translation from it to heaven? Again, when the same apostle saith, "This I say, brethren, that flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God, neither shall corruption inherit incorruption," (1 Cor. xv. 20.) and thence concludes, "that the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed;" does he not sufficiently insinuate that we shall be raised not to enjoy an earthly but a heavenly kingdom, and that our raised bodies being glorified, shall not consist of flesh and blood? And what then will they do with all that plenty, and that great affluence of the goods of fortune, which the millenaries do so highly value? In a word, the comfort which the apostle gives the Thessalonians concerning their departed friends,* who had suffered much affliction, persecution, tribulation, and doubtless many of them death, for Christ's sake, is only this, that they who remained alive should not prevent them in the enjoyment of the happiness promised to the body, but "the dead in Christ should rise first," and then the living should be changed; not this, that these sufferers for the sake of Christ should rise a thousand years before the rest to reign with Christ on earth, which yet is by the millenaries deemed great matter of their consolation, and so was very proper to have been mentioned there, had it been any article of Christian faith.

Arg. 3. §. 3. This reign of Christians upon earth agrees not with the genius of Christian faith, or with the nature of Christian promises, or with that frame and temper of spirit it requires from the professors of Christianity. For,

1. The Christian is represented as one who is entirely dead to the world, and to the things of the world; one who is not to love it, or the things of it, who is to use it as if he used it not, as one "whose conversation is in heaven," (Phil. iii. 19.) and it is made the character of one who is an enemy to the cross of Christ, that he minds earthly things; whereas, if this be a true gospel-promise made to Christians for their consolation and encouragement, under the troubles of this present world, that they shall, after this life is ended, live again on earth a life of indolence, and peace, and plenty, in the enjoyment of the goods of fortune: if this be one great part of the reward which God hath promised to those that suffer for his name, sure it becomes them to have their minds and their affections set upon it, and to live in expectation of it, and to desire to enjoy these goods of fortune, this peace and plenty upon earth; and it would rather be the character of those who bear the cross, in prospect of these blessings, to mind earthly things. That, saith St. Paul, which makes the sufferings of this present world so light unto us, is this consideration, "that we look not at the things which are seen, but which are not seen," not at things temporal, but eternal, (2 Cor. iv. 17, 18.) even at "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," (v. 1.) Whereas if this be one of the great and precious promises contained in the gospel, and made for the encouragement of Christians to suffer for Christ's sake, they must then look not only at things eternal, but things temporal; or for a temporal house on earth, as well as one eternal in the heavens, for their supposed reign on earth will be but temporal.

Again, The exhortation of our Lord, in his admirable sermon on the mount, runs thus: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, but lay up treasures in heaven; for where your treasure is, there will your hearts be also:" (Matt. vi. 19—21.) And again, "Provide yourselves bags that wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not." (Luke xii. 53, 34.) St. Paul exhorts all that are risen with Christ to "set their hearts and their affections not on things on the earth, but on things above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God," (Colos. iii. 1—3.) and that because they are dead with Christ unto these worldly things, "and their life is hid with Christ in God;" so that when "Christ, who is their life, shall appear, they shall appear with him in glory." And yet if our Lord Christ, in that very sermon, as the millenaries suppose, encouraged them to suffer with patience and meekness upon this consideration, that they "should inherit the earth," and had pronounced them blessed upon this account, surely they might have suffered upon this very prospect of laying up for themselves treasures upon earth in this Millenium, and might have had their hearts and affections placed upon them: for wherefore are they bid to lay up treasures in heaven, and to set their affections on things above, but because these are the blessings promised as the reward of Christian piety and patience? if then these blessings to be enjoyed on earth after the resurrection be one great part of the reward which God hath promised to the piety and patience of the Christian, what reason can be given why he should not seek and set his heart upon them also? If it be so great a privilege to have a part in the first resurrection, to enjoy this indolency, peace, and plenty upon earth, that the apostle styles them blessed who have a part in it, should they not seek and set their hearts upon that very thing in which their happiness consists? And yet the comfort which our Lord and his apostles do afford those Christian sufferers, is only this, that "great is their reward in heaven;" (Matt. v. 12. Luke vi. 23.) that "when they are tried, they shall receive a crown of glory;" (James i. 12.) and that they "have in heaven a better and a more enduring substance:" (Heb. x. 34.) which as it placeth the reward and comfort of Christ's suffering members not on earth, but in the heavens, and so gives us just reason to conclude our Lord and his apostles knew nothing of this reign on earth, or thought it no great matter of their consolation; so did it give occasion to the ancients to conclude thus,* "if the inheritance of martyrs be in heaven, their reign on earth can be no better than a fable."

Moreover, it is evident that all the ancient patrons of the Millenium held that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs and prophets, were to be sharers with the Christians in this reign on earth, and that then would the promised Canaan be made good to them: whereas the apostles plainly tell us, that they expected no reward on earth, nor did they mind that Canaan where they dwelt, but only waited for a heavenly country: "They confessed (saith the apostle) that they were strangers and pilgrims upon earth," that "they were not mindful of that country whence they came out, but sought a better country, that is, a heavenly." (Heb. xi. 13. 16.) Since then these holy patriarchs and choice friends of God, not only sought not after, but even disdained any inheritance on earth; seeing the only country they did expect and look for was a heavenly country; seeing this only was the inheritance God, as their God, provided for them, and therefore that only which they were to enjoy at their resurrection, when they completely were to be made and treated as the sons of God: surely in vain must Christians hope for any reign on earth with them, who, professing themselves pilgrims and strangers in it, declared they were not mindful of such a habitation in the land of Canaan, and who are at the resurrection to be made like the angels, and to enjoy not any earthly, but that heavenly country, which God hath graciously prepared for them.

In a word, to foretell times of peace and plenty to succeeding ages, to raise the expectation of a people whose backs are bowed down, and have been long enslaved and afflicted, is very suitable to this Divine economy; but to promise plenty, and the goods of fortune, as the reward of Christian piety and patience, and let them know that if they suffer for the sake of Christ, he will be sure to raise them up to plentiful enjoyments of the goods of fortune, this is too mean, too much beneath the sublime spirit of Christianity, to be one of her great and precious promises.

BENEVOLO

PRÆFATIONIS CAPITA.

§. 1. In hac præfatione proponitur, 1. Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ de regula fidei sententia. §. 2. 2. Ostenditur hanc Regulam à Millio labefactari, partim multiplicando lectiones variantes sine ratione, sine modo, et contra omnium fere codicum, versionum, patrum et scholiorum antiquorum fidem, in unius Vulgatæ, Copticæ, aut Ethiopicæ versionis gratiam; et partim agnoscendo corruptelas, interpolationesque haud paucas, ab ipsis Ecclesiæ Christianæ incunabulis, ævoque pene Apostolico, S. Scripturis accidisse. §. 3, 4. Elucidantur hæc ex orthodoxorum de hæreticis querelis, et ex iis quæ ethnicis, et hæreticorum antesignanis SS. Codicum fidem sugillantibus, respondent Patres. §. 5. Objectioni ex verbis Origenis περὶ τῆς τῶν Ἀντιγράφων διαφορᾶς responsum datur. §. 6. De Millii prolegomenis notandum, 1. Male illum asserere patrum haud paucos codices mirum in modum vitiatos habuisse. 2. Patres diversis exemplaribus usos esse, et subinde unius, subinde alterius textum, prout ferebat animus, usurpâsse. 3. Ea de scholiis, glossisque marginalibus quæ privatorum libros respiciunt, ad codices Græcorum patrum perperam à Millio applicari, in quorum Ecclesiis, fatente eodem Millio, libri emaculati, integri, et à Scholiis fere liberi permanserunt; quod etiam testimoniis, et argumentis è patrum scriptis deductis, confirmatur. §. 7. Denique agitur de regulis in varia lectione discernenda observandis, et quid à nobis in tribus his libris actum sit, ostenditur.

TANDEM aliquando improbo labore pensum hoc arduum absolvi, de quo pauca dicenda habeo.

1. De operis totius momento.
2. De Millii prolegomenis.
3. De iis quæ in hoc opere à me sunt præstita.

§. 1. Ea est constans ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, et omnium evangelicorum, seu protestantium sententia, S. Scripturam regulam perfectam, satisque perspicuam continere, ex qua omnes fidei articuli creditu necessarii, omnesque morum regulæ ad salutem obtinendam requisitæ, dignoscantur. Hanc normam qui destruit, aut huic saluti obtinendæ minus idoneam reddit, eo ipso fidei nostræ fundamentum subruit, et protinus evertit.

Et quanquam id certum esse fateor, non ita divinam Providentiam S. Scripturis invigilâsse, ut nulla in eas menda irrepserint, est tamen rationi consonum existimare, eum, qui S. Scripturas pro sola ecclesiæ regula per omnia sæcula instituerit, ita huic regulæ prospexisse, ut fini suo obtinendo numquam impar esset, aut inhabilis. Nec enim infinita sapientia consilio suo cadere unquam potest, nec bonitas summa, nedum justitia exigere ut vitam suam ad eam normam, sub pœna gravissima, componerent Christiani, quæ huic officio præstando, ob corruptelas ei admistas, sit minus idonea.

Est tamen certum hanc fidei nostræ regulam ab iis plane subverti, qui negant textum originalem adeo purum, et incorruptum ad manus nostras pervenisse, ut inde fidei articulos, aut morum regulas ad salutem necessarias, certo, et explorato dignoscamus.

§. 2. Doleo igitur, et moleste fero tam multa me in Millii prolegomenis invenisse, quæ hujus fidei normam vel plane labefactare videantur, vel saltem aliis ansam nimis speciosam præbeant de ea dubitandi; aut demum pontificiorum, aliorumque contra hanc regulam ratiunculis robur adjiciant et firmamentum.

1°. Etenim ipsa variantium lectionum immensa moles multorum animos suspensos reddit, iisque suspiciones haud parvas injiciet, parum quid certi ex libris in omni commate, immo in omni fere commatis parte variantibus, expectari posse. Depravationem illam textus Græci, quæ ejus auctoritatem labefactet, ex magna illa lectionum varietate, quam in exemplaribus Græcis R. Stephani invenit, arguit Morinus; quantos igitur de textu eodem triumphos agent pontificii, cum viderint eas lectiones à Millio, per sex lustra in eo opere sudante, quadruplo auctiores factas, et demum appendice copiosa locupletatas?

Id insuper causæ nostræ haud parum officere existimo, quod corruptelas, interpolationesque haud paucas, ab ipsis ecclesiæ Christianæ incunabulis, ævoque pæne apostolico S. Scripturis accidisse fidenter Millius pronunciet. De exemplari, quo usus est Clemens Alex. sic loquitur, "Illud nonnihil passum esse ex incertis notulis marginalibus, nimirum ab initio fere Canonis N. T. Scholiastæ (μεταθέντας τὰ εὐαγγέλια quos vocat Clemens noster, Stro. iv. p. 490.) ad oras Codicum explicatorias stricturas apposuerunt; ex his autem, textu ad quem spectabant, clarioribus scilicet, scribæ, pro arbitrio, alias atque alias intromiserunt in corpus libri, etiam genuinæ lectionis loco, modo obscura ea esset, aut (quod nonnunquam) in speciem absurda; Admissæ vero in plurima mox apographa transierunt, auctoque post à lectoribus glossarum marginalium, adeoque et lectionum interpolatarum numero, factum ut posteriores libri fuerint fere prioribus hac in parte maculatiores. Hujusmodi scholia aliqua irrepserunt in Clementis codicem." Prol. p. 61. Col. 1.

Quorsum hæc tendunt unico exemplo demonstrabo, hæresecos Ar-temonis fautores qui ψιλὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν σωτῆρα γίνεσθαι, i. e. Christum merum hominem fuisse, acriter contendebant, affirmabant priscos quidem omnes, ipsosque apostolos ταῦτα παρειληφέναι, καὶ δεδιδαχέναι ea quæ ab ipsis dicuntur et accepisse, et docuisse ad Victoris P. R. tempora, à Zephyrini autem temporibus, qui Victori successit, παρακεχαράχθαι τὴν ἀλήθειαν, adulteratam fuisse veritatem, quibus respondet Anonymus apud* Eusebium, ἦν δ' ἂν τυχὸν πιθανὸν τὸ λεγόμενον, εἰ μὴ πρῶτον μὲν αντέπιπτον αὐτοῖς αἱ θεῖαι γραφαὶ, "hoc forte credibile videretur, nisi iis repugnarent primo quidem S. Scripturæ, deinde fratrum quorundam scripta Victoris ætate superiora, nempe Justini, Miltiadis, Tatiani, et Clementis.". Si autem S. Scripturæ, prout hic Millius dicit, interpolatæ fuissent, scribisque, et scholiastis tunc permissum fuisset pro arbitrio in corpus textus adulterinas lectiones pro genuinis admittere, anonymi hujus adversus hæreticos defensio rem adhuc dubiam reliquisset. Porro Clemens, in loco allegato, ne verbum quidem habet de scholiis marginalibus, aut stricturis ad oram librorum positis, et postea in textum ndmissis sed tantum περὶ τινῶν μετατιθέντων τὰ εὐαγγέλια, i. e. qui unum pro alio ponentes sententiam evangelicam mutabant, v. g. textus hæc verba, ὅτι αὐτοὶ υἱοὶ θεοῦ κληθήσονται; alii sic exprimebant, ὅτι αὐτοὶ ἔσονται τέλειοι; alii sic, ὅτι αὐτοὶ ἔξουσι τόπον ὅπου οὐ διωχθήσονται, hoc autem ab hæreticis, de quibus ibi loquitur Clemens in scriptis suis, factum esse nullus dubito. Hæc autem inter variantes hujusce textus lectiones locum unquam obtinuisse prorsus nego, nec vel uno testimonio probavit Millius.

§. 3. Præterea laudabili opera passim in Prolegomenis suis ostendit Millius, nihil detrimenti S. Codices ex hæreticorum corruptelis accepisse. Immo plane asserit, proleg. p. 75. Col. 1. "Sententiam hanc de adulteratione S. textus ab hæreticis in præsidium dogmatum suorum facta, merum somnium esse, si unius fere Marcionis, ejusque sequacium corruptelas excipiamus, è quibus tamen ne una quidem aliqua invasit in exemplaria, Catholicorum. Quid vero hinc emolumenti nobis accedit, quidve causæ nostræ ex eo subsidium, quod hæc ab hæreticis factanon fuerint, quæ Millius ipse à Catholicis factitata esse non tantum lubens agnoscit, sed multoties asserit? Rem uno exemplo elucidabo: Objiciunt Marcioni Tertullianus, et Auctor Dial. contra Marcion. p. 151. eum loco ἄνθρωπος, 1 Cor. xv. 47. substituisse κύριος, quibus in variis lectionibus accedit Millius. At proleg. p. 35. et 139. "hoc e Catholicorum libris, in quos irrepserit, Marcionem in suum Catholicon recepisse" dicit, atque ita Catholicos incusando hæreticum absolvit. Hoc exemplo præmisso audiamus quid patres de hæreticorum Bibliis, sacrique codicis corruptelis pronunciant.

Primo negabant patres hæreticos eosdem habere codices, easdemve Scripturas cum orthodoxis, idque hac potissimum ratione moti, quod in dogmatum suorum defensionem scripturarum verba corrupissent: Salvianus nempe, quibusdam dicentibus, "eadem illos legere quæ nos legimus, eosdem apud illos prophetas Dei, eosdem apostolos, eosdem evangelistas esse," ad hunc modum respondet,† "Quomodo eadem quæ ab auctoribus quondam malis, et male sunt interpolata, et male tradita; ac per hoc non jam eadem, quia non possunt penitus dici ipsa, quæ sunt in aliqua sui parte vitiata—Nos ergo tantum Scripturas S. plenas, inviolatas, integras habemus, qui eas vel in fonte suo bibimus, vel certe de purissimo fonte per ministerium puræ translationis haurimus." Sin vero idem S. Scripturis quæ apud orthodoxos receptæ, et in ecclesiis continuo lectæ essent, contigisset, quod Millius toties ingeminat, si patres S. Codices, quarto, et quinto sæculo, mirum in modum interpolatos in medium attulissent, eosque pro genuinis scripturis accepissent, easdem ipsas Scripturas quæ primitus ecclesiæ sunt traditæ. haudquaquam habuisse fatendum est; si demum interpolationibus, glossematis, scholiis ad marginem adscriptis bis millies, ut tradit Millius, vitiati essent ii, quos nos habemus, codices, idem utique de nobis judicium ferendum est.

Præterea Scripturas incassum ab hæreticis vitiatas esse monet Epiphanius, atque in ipsorum tantum perniciem, quod eæ adhuc in ecclesia orthodoxa salvæ, et integræ reservatæ essent; sic enim Marcionem alloquitur, "*licet ea quæ scripta sunt, non ea fide referas, qua salvatore pronunciata sunt, Ἀλλ' οὔνγε σώζονται οἱ τόποι ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τῆς ἁγίας ἐκκλησίας. Loca tamen in evangeliis S. Denique Πάσης μὲν τόλμης καὶ πονηρίας ὑπόδειγμὰ ἐστι, τὰ μὲν γεγραμμένα παρακόπτειν, ἃ δὲ μὴ γεγραμμένα προστιθέναι, μάλιστα ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ ἀκαταλύτῳ ὄντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, summæ, inquit, audaciæ, et flagitii est delere quæ scripta sunt, quæ nusquam scripta sunt addere, præsertim in evangelio quod in æternum stabile est. Teste autem Millio, adeo in Evangelia hæc grassati sunt scribæ et librarii, ut sex centum supra mille varias lectiones se notasse asserat, immo multoties ait codices seculi quarti, quo Epiphanius floruit, omnes interpolatos, ipsiusque Epiphanii codicem maculatum fuisse, ut cæteri istius ætatis sequentiumque; adeo omnium; scholiis, insititiisque vocabulis, ut frustra esset, cum Epiphanio, ad Evangelia in S. ecclesia servata, aut exemplaria ejus ætatis provocare; immo quod ultimæ temeritatis, summique flagitii loco ponit Epiphanius, id eo seculo à scribis et librariis factitatum esse fidenter pronunciat. Vide Proleg. p. 75. col. 2.

§. 4. Restat ut quæ ab ethnicis et hæreticorum antesignanis, contra S. Codicum fidem olim objiciebantur inspiciamus. Objecit hoc olim Christianis Celsus, "fidelium quosdam in S. Scripturas multum sibi ipsis indulsisse, iis enim, inquit, usitatum fuit,§ πολλαχῆ μεταχαράττειν ἐκ τῆς πρώτης γραφῆς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, καὶ μεταπλάττειν, variis modis transformare evangelium, et ab eo quod primo scriptum erat, in aliud transferre." Eandem calumniam renovans Faustus Manichæus,‖ "multa, inquit, à majoribus nostris eloquiis Dei nostri inserta verba sunt, et quæ nomine insignita ipsius, cum ejus fide non congruant, præsertim quia nec ab ipso hæc sunt; nec ab ejus apostolis scripta, sed, multo post eorum assumptionem, à nescio quibus; et ipsis inter se non concordantibus." Celso respondet Origenes protinus negando id unquam à fidelibus factum fuisse, aut veri Christiani crimen hoc uspiam fuisse, viz. μεταχαράξαντας (φησὶ) τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἄλλους οὐκ οἶδα, ἢ τοὺς ἀπὸ Μαρχίωνος, καὶ τοὺς ἀπὸ Οὐαλεντίνου οἶμαι, καὶ τοὺς ἀπὸ Λουκιάνου, i. e. à nemine alio mutatum evangelium scio præterquam, à Marcionis, Valentini, et forte à Luciani discipulis, qui, monente¶ Epiphanio, per omnia κατὰ Μαρχίωνα sentiebant. De his autem Marcionis et aliorum hæreticorum corruptelis, ne una quidem, inquit Millius, invasit in exemplaria Catholicorum, Prol. p. 75. Col. 1. c. 6. Fausto Man. respondet Augustinus. "Quis tandem tanto furore cæcatur, qui dicat hoc mereri non potuisse apostolorum ecclesiam, tam fidam, tam numerosam fratrum concordiam, ut eorum scripta fideliter ad posteros trajicerent, cum eorum cathedras, usque ad præsentes episcopos, certissima successione servarat, cum hoc qualiumcunque hominum scriptis, sive extra ecclesiam, sive in ipsa ecclesia, tanta felicitate proveniat." Porro nullo modo potuisse Manichæos, qui jam in manibus essent omnium codices Christianorum falsare, hoc argumento probat Augustinus, "quia mox ut facere cæpissetis, vetustiorum exemplarium veritate convinceremini; qua igitur, inquit, causa à vobis corrumpi non possunt, hac causa à nemine potuerunt: Quisquis enim hoc primitus ausus esset, multorum codicum vetustiorum autoritate confutaretur, maxime quia non una lingua, sed multis eadem Scriptura contineretur.

At vero liberius multo cum S. Scripturis agit Millius. Is enim

summo studio, parique arte, bis mille locos invenit, in quibus exemplaria, ab Ecclesia ad nos transmissa, corruptelis obnoxia fuisse, fidens pronunciat, quorum non pauca textui originali ab ipsis Ecclesiæ primordiis inserta esse lubens agnoscit: v. g. Annotatis in Matth. iv. 10. ὀπίσω μου, inquit, MSS. Cod. plurimi non agnoscunt, et licet jam olim ab apostolorum fere ævo in exemplaribus nonnullis lectum constet, aliunde tamen assutum videtur ex Matth. xvi. 23. vel Luc. iv. 8. à scriptore memori, sciologue, quod in plurimis aliis locis factum videmus. Ad Cap. quinti v. 22. hæc habet, τὸ εἰκῇ, videtur omnino Scholion esse è margine alicujus libri in textum admissum, vetustum tamen, et quod apostolicorum fere temporum codices invasit. Ad v. 27. hæc apud Millium nota occurrit, τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, additum videtur ex v. 21. idque jam olim à primis Christianismi seculis, habent enim Irenæus, et vulgatus. Multa his similia passim observabit sedulus lector tam in Prolegomenis, quam in variis lectionibus ejusdem Millii. Id denique animadversione, immo reprehensione dignum existimo, quod eodem judice sciolus lector, adnotator quispiam, plus millies originalem textum interpolationibus suis fœdavit, maculavit, corrupitque; et quod prius marginale scholion fuit, haud rarius, inquit, in textum irrepsit, omnesque codices continuo pervasit: hoc enim fieri minime potuisse sine summa Ecclesiæ Christianæ incuria, et Præpositorum, in quorum manibus essent hi codices, mira oscitantia et socordia, manifestum est; multoque minus hæc scholia imaginaria in omnes codices per totum Christianum orbem sparsos, et in alias linguas translatos pervaserint, nisi ex composito res ageretur. Dum enim hi codices sacri omnibus in locis continuo legerentur, et exemplaria originalia, aut ex originalibus fideliter conscripta, in manibus fidelium quorumcunque, et in ecclesiarum omnium scriniis conservata essent, nemo sanus existimabit hæc aliter nisi ex mutua eorum conspiratione fieri potuisse. Adeo ut mihi temperare vix possim quin quæ Fausto Manichæo, de S. Scripturarum corruptelis loquenti, *Augustinus respondet, ea Millio regererem, Videris id agere ut omnis de medio Scripturarum auferatur autoritas, et suus cuique animus autor sit quid in quaque Scriptura probet, quid improbet; id est, ut non autoritate Scripturarum subjiciatur ad fidem, sed sibi Scripturas ipse subjiciat, non ut ideo pluceat illi aliquid, quia hoc in sublimi autoritate scriptum legitur, sed ideo recte scriptum videatur, quia hoc illi placuit.

§. 5. Objectio. Dicat tamen aliquis nos frustra laborare cum Epiphanio, et Augustino contendentes exemplaria S. Codicum in ecclesiis fidelium pura, atque integra asservata esse; is enim ipse Origenes qui ea ab hæreticis solis corrupta fuisse pronunciat, alibi contrarium disertim asserere videtur his verbis, † Πολλὴ γέγονεν ἡ τῶν ἀντιγράφων διαφορὰ, εἴτε ἀπὸ ῥαθυμίας τινῶν γραφέων, εἴτε ἀπὸ τόλμης τινῶν μοχθηρᾶς τῆς διορθώσεως τῶν γραφομένων, εἴτε καὶ τῶν τὰ ἑαυτῆς δοκοῦντα ἐν τῇ διορθώσει προστιθέντων, ἢ ἀφαιρούντων, i. e. "Magna exemplarium existit discrepantia, sive ob quorundam scriptorum socordiam, sive ob audaciam aliorum, perverse quæ scripta sunt emendantium, sive ob eos qui quæ ipsis videntur in emendatione adjiciunt, aut subducunt." Hæc quidem Veter. Testamenti exemplaria Græca potissimum respicere ex verbis immediate sequentibus manifestum est, τὴν μὲν οὖν ἐν τοῖς ἀντιγράφοις τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης διαφωνίαν θεοῦ διδόντος, εὕρομεν ἰάσασθαι, discrepantiæ quæ est in Vet. Testamenti exemplaribus, Deo dante, remedium adhibuimus. Est tamen ingenue fatendum eundem Originem, eodem in loco, occasione verborum Christi (ad divitem profitentem se mandatum illud, Diliges proximum sicut teipsum, à juventute sua observasse) dicentis, Vende omnia quæ habes, futili plane ratione adductum suspicari hæc verba, Diliges proximum sicut teipsum, à Servatore cum non essent dicta, ab aliis προσερρίφθαι, i. e. inserta esse, et in suspicionis istius subsidium hæc verba adducere, καὶ εἰ μὲν μὴ καὶ περὶ ἄλλων πολλῶν διαφονία ἦν πρὸς ἄλληλα τῶν ἀντιγράφων ὥστε πάντα τὰ κατὰ Ματθαῖον μὴ συνᾴδειν ἀλλήλοις, ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ εὐαγγέλια, κἂν ἀσεβής τις ἔδοξεν εἶναι ὁ ὑπονοῶν ἐνταῦθα προσερρίφθαι, οὐκ εἰρημένην ἀπὸ τοῦ Σωτῆρος πρὸς τὸν πλούσιον τὴν ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον ὡς σεαυτὸν ἐντολήν, i. e. nisi de aliis multis discrepantia esset exemplarium inter se, adeo ut omnia quæ a Matthæo sunt dicta non consonent cæteris evangeliis, et similiter se res haberet in reliquis evangeliis, forte impius esset qui suspicaretur hæc verba, Diliges proximum tuum sicut teipsum, à Servatore erga divitem, cum non sint dicta, à quopiam inserta esse.

Respondeo primo. Homiliam octavam in Matthæum à veteri translatione per Merlinum editam, Græcis quæ in hac sectione de divitis, et Christi interloquio occurrunt, plane respondere, in ea tamen hæc ultima verba quæ ex Origenis Græcis citavimus, omnino prætermissa esse, ex quibus suspicandi ratio oritur ea, quæ jam in Græcis Origenis occurrunt, olim in iis inventa non esse, sed ab aliis ea postea ejus textui addita fuisse.

Respondeo secundo. Nihil aliud hic adducit Origenes præter suspiciones iniquas, et minime necessarias suspiciones, inquam, non necessarias. Fatetur enim in eadem homilia Origenes ita hæc verba intelligi posse, ut nullus suspicioni suæ sit locus relictus, Iniquas dico, nec enim ad exemplaria Matthæi emendatiora, aliave hic provocat, sed primo suspicandi hanc causam ducit ex ratione plane futili, et inepta; nempe quod ei qui hoc præceptum, Diliges proximum sicut teipsum, servasset, non potuit Christus dicere si vis perfectus esse, vende quæ habes, quasi qui sensu judaico proximum suum, i. e. Judæum dilexisset, eo ipso perfectus haberetur. Secundo, quod ipsum locum Marcus et Lucas exponentes, neuter hoc addidit, quasi in Matthæo nihil dici potuisset, quod non pariter eadem verborum plenitudine in Marco, et Luca poneretur. Ex quibus constat nullam prorsus rationem habuisse Origenem suspicandi hæc verba in Matthæi exemplar inserta fuisse.

Tertio respondeo διαφωνίαν τῶν ἀντιγράφων discrepantiam exemplarium quam in hoc loco Origenes recenset, non esse discrepantiam exemplarium in eodem textu, nedum in eodem Evangelio, sed tantum discrepantiam textus unius Evangelii à verbis alterius Evangelii, nec enim dicit omnia quæ sunt in Matthæo, μὴ συνᾴδειν ἑαυτοῖς sibimetipsis non consentire, sed ἀλλήλοις reliquis evangelistis consona non esse; neque hoc probat, sive ex aliis verbis sive codicibus Matthæi, sed ex eo tantum quod hæc verba Matthæi apud Marcum et Lucam desiderantur; denique coronidis loco hæc addit, "quod in Græcis feci, in exemplariis Novi Test. hoc ipsum me facere posse sine periculo non putavi; tantum suspiciones exponere me debere, rationesque et causas suspicionum non esse irrationabile existimavi." Percurrat jam lector integras duorum tomorum in evangelia expositiones, et mecum inveniet eas totas in evangeliorum inter se διαφωνίαις enumerandis impendi, de commatis cujusdam variante lectione ne verbum quidem proferre. Id ergo tantum hic dicit Origenes quod apud patres alios non tantum in confesso est, sed tanquam indicium sinceritatis evangelistarum in evangeliis suis conscribendis adducitur, et præsertim à Chrysostomo * his verbis πολλαχοῦ διαφωνοῦντες ἐλέγχονται, sæpe discrepantes inveniuntur evangelistæ, hoc autem, inquit, maximum veritatis indicium est, aliter enim rem ex composito se egisse suspectum esset, νυνὶ δὲ καὶ ἡ δοκοῦσα ἐν μικροῖς εἶναι διαφωνία, nunc autem hæc quæ videtur esse in minutioribus, discrepantia omni eos suspicione liberat.

tiunt, enumerantur; en ergo Millii de iis judicium, Proleg. p. 89. Theodoreto ad manum fuisse recentioris calami exemplar, et quidem graviter interpolatum, et (p. 102.) interpolationes Oecumenii, quod omnium fere codicum, plurimæ. Chrysostomus, quo in exegeticis nemo laxior, is, inquit Millius, exemplar nactus est ex accuratioribus istius ævi, genuinam apostolorum Scripturam cum aliàs, tum et in locis ubi ab ea descitum in excusis nostris, ut plurimum referens, sæpius nimirum quam alii cum Italica sua versione hallucinatur, et tamen post exantlatos omnes Millii labores, nulla alia comparuit versio vetus Italica, nulla unquam comparebit, ab ea quam Hieronymus ab infinitis mendis, defectibus, additamentis, et confusionibus, Simonio teste, liberavit; de ea quam Millius sibi per somnium creavit, operosiùs egimus libro primo, eamque tam multis argumentis convellendo, integrum pene prolegomenon opus diruimus.

Id etiam in Millii prolegomenis advertendum est, nempe male illum colligere ex eo quod Epiphanius, Basilius, aliique patres interdum loquuntur περὶ ἀντιγράφων ἀκριβεστάτων seu ἀδιορθώτων,* eos exemplaribus diversis usos fuisse, et subinde unius, subinde alterius textum, prout ferebat animus, usurpâsse. Quis enim exemplaribus iis uteretur, quæ ipse minus correcta, aut accurata pronunciat, cum ei ad manus essent emendatiora? id forte fieri potuisset ab Origene ex tempore perorante, id inter Latinos ab Hieronymo factum esse aliquando contra adversarium pugnante, ex ejus operibus, et verbis liquet, ab aliis hoc factum esse nego. Nec unquam de iis exemplaribus verba faciunt patres Græci, nisi ubi de lectione vera controversia oritur, aut inter se variant exemplaria, ex eorum igitur verbis id tantum constat, quod doctioribus notum est, habuisse eos ad tempora Tertulliani, exemplaria primæva apostolorum manibus exarata, à tempore Origenis, et Eusebii exemplaria accurata, ad quæ, cum opus esset, provocare solebant, certaquè media ex quibus emendatiora à non correctis, accurata ab inaccuratis, ab interpolatis genuina distinguere potuerunt, quæ quidem omnia non ad confirmanda, sed potius ad refutanda Millii prolegomena multum valeant.

Est insuper illud ex ipso Millio in prolegomenis, p. 33. col. 1. imprimis observandum "inter codices ecclesiarum et privatorum hominum hoc fere interfuisse, quod isti, prout è librariorum manibus exierant, emaculati, notulisque marginalibus liberi, ferè integri in ecclesiarum tabulariis remanserint, hi vero ab ipsis, in quorum gratiam fuerant conscripti statim fere inter lineas, aut ad marginem, glossis, scholiisque fuerint conspersi, maximopere in id incumbentibus S. literarum studiosis ut textum S. quem apud se habebant, explicatiorem, suisque usibus magis indies et magis idoneum redderent." Ex quibus duo ducoporismata.

Primo, ex codicibus vetustissimis occidentalis ecclesiæ, et præsertim Cant. Clar. Ger. parum subsidii ad lectionem genuinam dignoscendam expectari posse; ii enim, monente Simonio, oculari teste, ejusmodi scholiis, glossis, et emendationibus nunc eâdem manu, quâ libri ipsi, nunc aliâ conscriptis undique referti sunt: cum enim à scribis originalis textus planè insciis conscripti essent, aliorum manu, qui Græcè sciebant, aut exemplaria Latina proprius & accuratius inspexerant, nunc ocius, nunc serius fuerant emendati.

Secundo, id serio animadvertendum est male à Millio hæc, quæ privatorum tantum libros respiciunt, applicari ad codices Græcorum patrum, in quorum ecclesiis, fatente Millio, libri emaculati, integri, & à scholiis fere liberi remanserint. Et præcipue ad codices Episcoporum orientalium, quibus tam ante, quam post Origenis, Pierii, Pamphili, & Eusebii diligentiam, exemplaria ἀκριβέστερα defuisse nemo sanus existimabit; is enim † Eusebius, Origenis, Pierii, Ammonii et aliorum codicum lectissimorum usuram cum nactus esset, "inde quinquaginta volumina novi fœderis, ad Constantinum M. transmisit, ecclesiis Constantinopoli et alibi agentibus ideo mittenda, quod earum usum ecclesiis maxime necessarium esse intelligebat, quæque idcirco ab antiquariis vetustissimis, et exacte scribendi peritissimis, describi fecit." Alexandriæ etiam in ecclesia, S. literarum sede nobilissima, non defuiess lectissima exemplaria agnoscit Millius, Prol. p. 71. unde Athanasius Constantis Aug. literis rogatus, transmisit ipsi πυκτία τῶν θείων γραφῶν, S. Scripturarum volumina. Idem Eusebius * nos docet plurimos fuisse apostolorum successores qui post eorum obitum Salutaris regni cœlestis semina spargebant ἀνὰ πᾶσαν εἰς πλάτος τὸν οἰκουμένην, per universum terrarum orbem, munusque evangelistarum obibant iis qui fidei sermonem nondum audivissent, et qui præcipue hoc in animo habuerunt τὴν τῶν θείων εὐαγγελίων παραδιδόναι γραφὴν, q. d. Evangeliorum Scripturas tradere; quæ si quis animo expenderit ei haud parum verisimile censebitur hos omnes ecclesiæ Antistites libris interpolatis, scholiis et marginalibus notis vitiatis, S. Scripturæ textum posteris tradidisse, aut omnia exemplaria sæculi istius in quo florebant, utut id Millius ubique pronunciat, interpolata et vitiata fuisse. Nec enim de iis tam aspere judicare par est, quibus in promptu esset exemplaria ἀκριβέστερα adire, et quibus nec ingenium defuit textum ab his glossematis et scholiis marginalibus discernendi, nec erga S. Scripturas ea reverentia, quæ ipsos ad istam discretionem faciendam sedulo moveret.

Respiciamus titulos illos, quibus S. Scripturas adornabant primorum sæculorum patres; ab iis etenim βιβλία θεῖα, libri deifici, verba divina, θεῖαι γραφαὶ, καὶ θεόπνευστοι, sæpius dicebantur. An ergo paterentur manus sive sacrilegas, sive temerariis divina hæc Dei eloquia interpolationibus suis corrumpere, et depravare? certum est apud nos, inquit † Josephus, has nostras Scripturas divinas esse, unde à tempore Prophetarum, οὔτε προσθεῖναί τις οὐδὲν, οὔτε μεταθεῖναι τετόλμηκεν, nemo ausus est iis addere quidpiam, aut detrahere: cum ergo eadem fuerit Christianis erga Scripturas S. reverentia, nonne jure merito expectandum fuisset eos pari diligentia curâsse, ne quid hujusmodi, in Novi Fœderis norma, et regula contingeret. Expendamus denique quanto studio providerent, ne eorum scripta vel à librariis negligentius transcriberentur, vel ab aliis mutarentur. Priscos enim illos, et sanctissimos ecclesiæ antistites tanquam pulcherrimum exactissimæ in his rebus diligentiæ exemplum posteris proponens ‡ Eusebius, dicit primo Irenæum adversus eos qui τὴν ὑγιῆ τῆς ἐκκλησίας θεσμὸν, sinceram ecclesiæ legem adulterabant, varias epistolas conscripsisse. Secundo in finem libri sui de octonario, sive Valentinianorum Ogdyade, hanc eum clausulam adjecisse; ὁρκίζω σε τὸν μεταγραψάμενον τὸ βιβλίον τοῦτο, adjuro te qui conscripseris hunc librum, per Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum—ut conferas quod transcripseris, et diligenter illud emendes ad examplar ex quo transcripsisti, atque adjurationem hanc similiter describas, et exemplari tuo inseras; qui autem tantam diligentiam adhibuerunt in scriptis suis integris conservandis à librariorum negligentia, et aliorum quorumcunque corruptelis, et depravationibus, eos de S. et θεοπνεύστοις Scripturis in eadem integritate sanctæ ecclesiæ reservandis non minus sollicitos fuisse merito existimandum est.

§. 7. Nostra quod attinet, in primo libro satis monstrasse me puto harum lectionum variantium fundamenta incerta esse, et penitus inidonea ex quibus hodierni codices in dubium vocentur: ne tamen me lector hic nimium præstitisse existimet, aut media omnia sustulisse ex quibus de lectione genuina certum, vel saltem idoneum in quo acquiescat judicium, feratur; dico,

Primo, id certum, et extra dubium esse videatur ubi patres in his rebus versati variasse lectionem textus pronunciant, variantem ibi lectionem ante eorum tempora obtinuisse, de qua non aliter judicium fieri potest, ubi in neutram partem aliquid pronunciant, quam ex priorum patrum lectione, versionibus antea conceptis, aut textus ipsius circumstantiis. Ex. gr. dicit Origenes § quosdam Hebr. ii. 9. legisse non prout textus habet χάριτι Θεοῦ, sed χώρις Θεοῦ, lectionem tamen hodiernam huic præponendam esse non tantum ex eo constat quod versiones omnes et patrum plerique cum ea consentiunt, sed quòd de gratia Dei in eo manifesta quod filium suum dilectum morti pro nobis tradidit, S. Scripturæ passim loquantur de Christo sine Deo, sive seposita quasi Deitate, patiente, prorsus nihil.

Secundo, ubi patrum multi, nullo refragante, cum versionibus antiquis, et codicum manuscriptorum majori parte, in una lectione conveniunt, eam lectionem certo genuinam pronuncio; hic enim locum obtineat illud Tertulliani quod apud omnes unum invenitur, non est erratum, sed traditum; cum vero in diversa abeunt, ea lectio, cæteris paribus, verisimilior censenda est, quæ potiori autoritati innitatur.

Tertio, in Epistolis, in quas extant quatuor Græca Scholia, cum totidem versionibus antiquis, ubi Græca Scholia cum versionibus universim in una lectione conspirant, id veræ lectionis indicium existimo minime respuendum; hinc Millium in eo potissimum culpandum existimo, quod sexcenties (ut in variarum ejusdem lectionum diligenti examine probatum dedimus) ab hisce omnibus, aut fere omnibus, unius Italicæ, Æthiopicæ, aut Copticæ versionis gratia, in vera lectione assignanda, deviaverit.

Quarto, ea lectio quæ sensum integrum relinquit, cæteris paribus, ei præferenda est quæ sensum mutilum et imperfectum exhibet, eumve interrumpit; eique multo magis quæ sensum penitus corrumpit: Nec enim concedendum est in scriptis θεοπνεύστων virorum vel sensum prorsus defuisse, vel verba quibus integrum eum exhiberent: Excipiendi sunt hic defectus ex idiomate linguæ profluentes, ut descendebat in domum suam δεδικαιωμένος, ἢ ἐκεῖνος, Luc. xviii. 14. aut ex contextu facile supplendi, ut 2 Thess. ii. 7. μόνον ὁ κατέχων, ἄρτι (sup. καθέξει) ἕως ἐκ μέσου γένηται. His adde, Quinto, regulam Waltoni tertiam; viz. Lectio quæ, cæteris paribus, sensum fundit clariorem, et cum antecedentibus et S. Scripturæ analogia magis congruentem, contrariæ præferenda est. Antecedentium enim, et consequentium consideratio, et locorum similium collatio ad veram lectionem eruendam plurimum conducunt. Exemplis paucis hanc regulam elucidabo. Contendit Millius his verbis, ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται, Heb. x. 38. addendum esse μοῦ post τὸ ἐκ πίστεως, sic enim textum hunc patres quidam allegant: sic. LXX. Interpretes legunt, Hab. ii. 4. Obstat tamen præter Græcorum scholiorum omnium cum textu consensum, id quod hunc locum idem Apostolus, Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11. eodem prorsus modo allegavit. Contendit acriter idem Millius, Gal. ii. 5. in his verbis, οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξομεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ, τὸ οὐδὲ tollendum esse, in annotatis ibi ad Millium id perperam dictum esse probavimus, ex antecedentibus, et consequentibus, et integro apostoli scopo.

Ex operis hujus secundo libro ediscat primo Lector, id quod caput rei est, textum N. fœderis salvum, et satis integrum ad nos pervenisse, nec potuisse Millium in opere triginta annorum labore assiduo, industria summa, arteque non exigua, et sæpe non ingenua, versatum, variasque lectiones suo marte, et aliorum adminiculo undique colligentem, ejusdem αὐθεντίαν convellere, nedum labefactare.

Secundo, varias lectiones quæ morum regulam, aut fidei articulum vel unicum respiciant, vix ullas esse; quæ sensum verborum in re momenti alicujus mutent, paucissimas. Hoc ultro fatetur Millius, prol. p. 142. col. 2. his verbis. " In his codices omnes conveniunt, et si forte locus aliquis qui summi momenti esse videtur, uni, alteri, seu etiam quamplurimis codicibus exciderit (id quod non nisi in uno loco factum est, quod viderim, nempe 1 Joh. v. 7.) idem tamen quoad sensum alibi inculcatus occurrit, ut proinde neutiquam inde periclitetur Christiana veritas." In hoc nobiscum conveniunt pontificiorum critici probatissimi. Ita * Dupinius, esse varias lectiones haud paucas ex editione N. Fœderis Oxoniensi etiam oculis pateat, eas autem omnes parvi sane momenti esse, et ex parte potissima vel librariorum vitia, vel minutissima παραράματα. Idem agnoscit Simonius infra citandus; sed testimoniis non est opus: inspiciat aliquis loca omnia à nobis diligenter collecta, percurrat exempla omnia insigniorum S. Scripturæ locorum, à Morino recte, vel perperam adducta, ex oculari inspectione inveniet ea nec morum regulam ullam, vel fidei articulum usquam respicere, nedum labefactare.

Tertio, ex nostra variantium lectionum uberiori discussione in capitibus ejusdem libri sequentibus, liquido constabit, nec in minutioribus istis, et pæne frivolis, deesse nobis, potissima saltem ex parte, testimonia, quibus hodierni textus lectio stabiliatur, quod etiam ultra constabit ex diligenti examine locorum fere omnium, quos ex vulgatæ, seu potius Italicæ versionis autoritate, pro genuinis nobis obtrudit Millius. Id enim in iis omnibus vel gratis, atque ex mera ipsius conjectura, dictum esse, et contra majorem testium molem probavimus, vel ipso Millio teste, contra omnem MSS. codicum, et excusorum fidem, quo nihil fortius dici potuit ad fidem istarum lectionum minuendam.

De tertio libro id tantum dico, brevem esse, at forte, Epilogi saltem et appendicum gratia, non contemnendum.

OPERIS TOTIUS PARTITIO.

§. 1. Opus D. Millii suis laudibus exornatur, et in quibus deficiat, aut operis instituto minime satisfecerit, indicatur. §. 2. Operis nostri suscepti ratio redditur. §. 3. In Millii collectaneis multa inter lectiones variantes immerito locum obtinere ostenditur. §. 4. Lectiones variantes ad tria genera reducuntur.

QUAM propositam sibi in magno suo opere rationem habuit Cl. Millius, eam nemo satis laudare potest: In animum enim suum induxit Novum Testamentum pristinæ suæ restituere integritati, fidam ex criticorum arte exhibendo regulam qua ab emunctioris naris hominibus inter varias lectiones veræ à falsis discernerentur; atque ex hac statuit genuinam firmare lectionem in locis circiter mille, Bernardi sui judicio, læsam et interpolatam, atque atheis hoc pacto, cæterisque religionis nostræ hostibus cavillandi occasionem præcidere; cum è lectionibus ipsis variantibus, ex quibus omnia in libris nostris incerta esse arguunt, egregie stabilitum viderint S. codicis textum. Quod quidem munus in se susceptum si feliciter absolvisset, nulli dubium est quin ille theologorum commodis egregie inservisset, operamque navasset ecclesiæ Christianæ longe gratissimam, atque utilissimam.

§. 2. Grave quidem onus in me ante recepi quam aut de magnitudine rei, aut de grandi appendice, et prolegomenis, autoris ipsius magis quam textus menda corrigentibus, aliquid possem suspicari. Pollicebar enim olim, parum cautus expectatissimum illud opus editum modo esset me in vivis agente, eo consilio expensurum me esse, ut multitudo variarum lectionum ad compendiolum, si fieri posset, redigeretur. Jam vero annos septuaginta natus, acie etiam oculorum obtusiore facta, rudem meruisse videar. At cum promisso meo nihil sit mihi sanctius, aut antiquius, impedimentis hisce omnibus susque deque habitis, improbo labore libellum tandem confeci, qui Deo gloriam, commodum ecclesiæ, S. textui plus roboris exhibeat, benevolique lectoris exspectationi, ut spero, satisfaciat.

In prolegomenis, et appendice multum discrepat Millius à collectaneis quæ textui subjiciuntur, secum igitur sæpissime pugnat, et non modo non cohærentia inter se dicit, sed maxime disjuncta, atque contraria. Itaque si inter vivos numeraretur, ipsi forsan non ingratum foret, quod viderit se à seipso vindicatum, suumque maturum judicium subitis ejusdem cogitationibus anteponi. Quod si falso aut male allegatorum locorum reum fieri graviter molesteque ferret, ego etiam ad illa * παραράματα proferenda invitissimus accessi. Cum vero ingens opus susceptisset quod non nisi junctis, ut ait, plurimorum laboribus confici potuit, facile credam non ipsi integritatem, sed accuratam aliis diligentiam defuisse.

§. 3. De instituti mei ratione sciat lector me in primo libro illius vestigiis acriter institisse: cum enim ingentem hunc cumulum coacervasset aggregando lectiones variantes partim patrum Græcorum versionumque orientalium, aliarumque vetustate insignium, ex quibus, inquit, eluceant Græca primævorum codicum è quibus effluxerint, partim versionis Italicæ, et patrum Latinorum, qui Italicum in scriptis suis, ut ait, adhibent, partim quoque MSS. magnæ et venerandæ antiquitatis, sub iisdem capitibus quam parum ei profuit impensus labor, indicavi, ostendens insuper nullam textus corrigendi causam fuisse, nisi cum ad unum omnia, vel saltem major pars eorum inter se convenissent, quod non ultra viginti locis, idque levioris momenti, unquam accidit. Cum ergo totius operis Milliani hoc sit fundamentum, primus liber in eo labefactando totus versabitur.

In chartis suis valde laboriosis tantam rerum sylvam congessit Millius, quantam nec enumerare velim; nec de singulis judicium ferre, si vellem, possem; sigillatim enim cuncta persequi, et aliis molestum, et mihi ad munus nostrum obeundum haud esset necessarium. Licet etenim hæ variæ lectiones molis permagnæ fuerint, sunt tamen dimidia ex parte eo nomine protinus indignæ; ex reliquis earum paucæ receptæ lectionis sensum afficiunt, mutantve. In his tamen levioris momenti expendendis haud parum laboravi. Et ubi textum interpolatum esse Millius contendit, aut παρεμβλήσεως incusat, judicium meum interposui, textumque pro modulo meo, vindicavi. Ordinis autem gratia has quas appellat varias lectiones ad tria genera reduxi.

Primo, sunt ergo multa quæ inter variantes lectiones locum tenent, et tamen in numero earum sunt minime reputanda, nam ut præteream ea quæ de initio, defectu, sine manuscriptorum in græca, aut latina lingua, scripsit.

Primo non illæ variantes lectiones merito dicendæ sunt quæ ex oscitantia, incuria, inscitia, aut ignorantia scriptoris aut librarii evenerunt: eadem enim opera quæ in Bibliis Anglicanis mendæ occurrunt typographicæ, pro variis lectionibus habeantur: vix tamen caput occurrit in quo non aliquid hujus generis reperias.

Secundo, neque illæ inter variantes lectiones recensendæ essent quæ à MSS. cod. fere omnibus, et antiquis versionibus, plenoque omnium patrum consensu dissentiunt, et discrepant; has enim si admiseris, quænam ullibi rejiciendæ forent? Sexcentis autem in locis lectionem quandam ex fide solius Italicæ, Copticæ, Æthiopicæ, &c. genuinam esse asserit, contra omnium codicum, aut fere omnium fidem, contra versiones omnes, reclamantibus etiam istis patribus qui locum illum allegarunt ad unum omnibus. Vide Proleg. à p. 42. ad 48.

Tertiò, multo minus pro variis lectionibus habendæ sunt quæ adulterinis evangeliis, aut hæreticorum pravitati ortum suum debent; quanta autem profert ille ex evangelio Nazaræorum, aut Ebionitarum! quam frequenter nos monet, hunc, vel illum versiculum ab his, aut illis hæreticis repudiatum † fuisse! Longa Epiphanii narratio de locis à Marcione corruptis sparsim huic operi inserta est, ut moles in immensum cresceret. Et demum in prolegomenis circiter viginti ex depravatis illis archetypum ipsum fideliter exhibuisse, acriter contendit p. 36. col. 1.

Est, quarto, valde incongruum patrum glossemata, aut interpretamenta pro variis lectionibus exhibere; eadem enim de causa patrum scrinia compilasse potuit, centies tamen, imo bis centies, illi in confesso est, hoc vel illud quod à recepta lectione variat, natum fuisse ex interpretamento, ex glossemate, atque ex altera parte sublatum fuisse aliquid quod offenderit.

Quinto, tollenda sunt denique errata ipsius autoris, cujus generis copiam non minimam annotata exhibent, atque ita acervo multum decrescente, onereque sublevato ad reliqua progredior.

§. 4. Secundo, ex variis lectionibus occurrunt quædam majoris momenti et ponderis utpote quæ aut sensum verborum adeo mutent ut textum vere alium exhibeant, aut quæ doctrinam morum normamque vivendi respiciant, aut quæ ad veritatem confirmandam, nodosve expediendos felicius inserviant; has autem modicas (Deo sint gratiæ) et paucas, excutio diligenter, atque in textu corroborando, et diluendo quæ contra adducantur, enitor sedulò, atque hoc pensum absolvo in libri secundi capite primo.

Supersunt adhuc variantes lectiones innixæ quidem auctoritati patrum quorundam, aut versionum, aut MSStorum cod. venerandæ antiquitatis. Sicut tamen textus significationem aut non omnino, aut leviter saltem immutant, ita textus ipse pari auctoritate, atque exemplarium copia, plerumque nititur. Quoniam autem hujus generis pene innumeræ sunt, partitionem quandam earum feci.

Primo, quæ in quatuor evangeliis, atque actis apostolorum continentur, illas in quinque species divisas, in capite secundo libri secundi edissero.

Secundo, quæ ad epistolas spectant, eas pariter eundem in modum ad rationem revoco capite insequenti.

Tertio, inania et levia, quæ numerum plane superant, ad capita quædam reduxi, ad singula eorum digitum libro tertio intendens, et specimen aliquale exhibens, ex quo studiosus lector de reliquis conjecturam faciat. Porro, in hujus libri et operis totius epilogo, id paullo diligentius curavi, ut pontificiis, aliisque religionis nostræ hostibus solide responderem. Nempe iis qui objiciunt quod variantes tot lectiones textum suspectum reddant, aut saltem in dubium adducere videantur, ideoque quod sacra Biblia nullo modo sufficere valeant, ut nos in iis omnibus quæ ad salutem creditu factuque necessaria sunt, erudiant.

CAPITIS PRIMI LIBRI PRIMI.

ARGUMENTUM.

§. 1. Ex patrum scriptis, aut S. Scripturæ allegationibus non posse certò colligi eos aliter quam hodiernus textus se habet, legisse. Adstruitur primò ex eo, quod sæpe allegarint S. Scripturæ τμήματα non ex textu inspecto, sed ex memoria. §. 2. Secundò aliquoties summatim, et quoad sensum tantum, verborum nulla ratione habita. §. 3. Tertiò, quia multa textui sæpe adjiciunt. §. 4. Quartò, verba multa, imò periodos non rarò omittunt. §. 5. Quintò, quia patres iidem qui interdum aliter citant, cum editis, in aliis locis, conveniunt. §. 6. Sextò, quia multas Scripturarum περικοπὰς frequenter congerunt, quæ in diversis locis, quoad sensum, occurrunt, nec ῥητῶς alicubi inveniuntur. Hæc omnia exemplis plurimis confirmantur, ibid.

CAPUT PRIMUM. SECTIO PRIMA.

UT de his variis lectionibus rectius judicemus, operæ pretium duxi in earum fontes inquirere, atque utrum firmum exhibeant lectionis variantis fundamentum sedulo investigare, quod quidem præstare conabor, Millium κατὰ πόδα sequendo per omnia illa capita, ex quibus has lectiones se collegisse profitetur. Dico igitur primò sanctos patres apud Scripturam S. alia legisse olim verba, quam quæ nos jam legimus; aut exemplaribus usos fuisse diversis ab iis quibus nos jam utimur, male colligi ex eo quod è novo Fœdere passim testimonia citant, editis nostris parum congruentia. Est enim criticorum omnium, et speciatim P. Simonii * judicium, citationibus patrum, raro scilicet accuratis, non temere credendum esse, nec ad earum fidem Græca exemplaria corrigenda, Hoc enim (inquit Simonius) sine magno S. Scripturæ detrimento fieri non potest. Grotius etiam vir magni judicii, et emunctæ naris, idem vere, et libere pronunciat, Veteres, inquit, scriptores sæpe utuntur testimoniis ex scriptura, sed ita ut appareat codicem ab illis non inspectum. Quare non est quod eo nomine suspecta nobis sit recepta lectio. "Non raro patribus usitatum, inquit Heinsius, (prolegomenis in exercitationes S.) ut intenti rebus, sensum potius quam verba spectent, neque raro prætermittunt aliquid, vel addunt, sed et voces alias reponant, de memoria ne dicam, cui tribuisse plusculum nonnunquam videntur. Primò autem quid tam sibi proprium, aut quasi suum patres esse volunt quam ut ταυτοδυναμοῦντα, sive alia quæ idem notant, aut notare existimant, in adducendis locis, verba, aut vocabula reponant. Iidem nonnunquam quod desiderari credunt, ipsi adjiciunt. Nihil æque usitatum iis quam ut alios, atque alios conjungant locos, sæpe quæ in medio sunt, aut præcedunt, prætermittunt: libenter enim quæ dicuntur, contrahunt, hæc autem patrum citationibus contigisse dicit ex eo quod ἐκ προχείρου, hoc est è memoria, ex tempore, et inconsulto codice, eas adducerent." Horumque omnium exempla in medium se protulisse ait, Ne quis temere ex iis græcum textum emendandum esse existimet.

Imprimis, autem allegasse sæpissime patres τμήματα quædam S. Scripturæ non è textu, sed ex memoria, (quæ licet Thesaurus, rerumque custos sit, eas tamen, sine scripto, verbis semper iisdem reddere non valet) exemplis, et Criticorum fide dignorum Testimoniis, probatum dabimus.

Exempli gratia, apud Apologiam Justini M. Ed. Oxon. à sectione 18. ad 24. occurrunt citationes bene longæ desumptæ ut plurimum ex concione Christi in monte habita, et ex sermone ejus non dissimili apud Lucam cap. sexto memorato, sed pleræque omnes variant à textu quem agnoscunt Biblia nostra, Græci scriptores, et versiones antiquæ. Idcirco D. Grabii in citationes è Matt. v. 28. xviii. 9. hæc est annotatio, Martyri commodum visum fuit tum hic, tum in sequentibus, non ipsa Christi verba, prout in sacro evangelii codice extant, exacte omnia recitare, seu sententiam aliquando eorum imperatoribus ethnicis tradere.

Cum † Irenæus pharisæorum quæstionem citet ad hunc modum ἐν ποίᾳ δυνάμει τοῦτο ποιεῖς, ἐξουσίᾳ, inquit Grabius, habent omnes tres evangelistæ (adde etiam ταῦτα, Matth. xxi. 23. Marc. xi. 28. Luc. xx. 2.) sed Irenæus, aut Marcosii, ex memoria allegarunt. Cum in eodem capite Irenæus citet hæc verba Luc. xix. 42. εἰ ἔγνως καὶ σὺ σήμερον τὰ πρὸς εἰρήνην, ἐκρύβη δέ σου, teste Grabio, hæc iterum ex memoria citata esse patet.

Origenes contra Celsum, l. 2. p. 58. et l. 4. p. 193. et Gal. iv. 21. hæc profert, λέγετέ μοι οἱ τὸν νόμον ἀναγινώσκοντες, textus οἱ ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον θέλοντες εἶναι, p. 65. legit ἥμαρτον παραδοὺς αἷμα δίκαιον, textus, ἀθῷον, Matth. xxvii. 4. p. 68. κηρυχθήσεται τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦτο ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ, textus, ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκουμένῃ, Matth. xxiv. 14. p. 71. ἰδόντες ὅτι ἐξέπνευσεν, textus, αὐτὸν ἤδη τεθνηκότα, John xix. pro his, et innumeris ejusdem 14. generis hanc apologiam facit Huetius. Origines nimirum in referendis à scriptura locis tam sæpe ab exemplari recessit, quod inconsultis libris festinatione impeditus, et memoriæ confisus ea recitaret. Not. in Orig. p. 61. 76. et Origenianorum lib. iii. cap. 1. §. 6. Scripturæ testimonia ab eo sæpenumero aliter relata reperies ac in editionibus concepta sunt quæ hodie circumferuntur, quod et ex memoriæ perfidia aliquando contigit; par in evangeliorum depromptis ab eo locis discrimen occurrit; nam præterquam quod variantes suas lectiones Novi quoque Testamenti codices habebant, ut hodieque habent, utebatur ad hæc sæpenumero Adamantius Evangelio secundum Hebræos, ut tradit Hieronymus in libro de scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis, cap. iv. atque inde discrepantiam illam extitisse conjicio.

Denique de Græcis Irenæi hæc dicit Millius, proleg. pag. quadragesima, col. 2. Ea maxima ex parte intercidisse, et in eis quæ supersunt, Epiphanius, aliique, quibus ea debemus, haud semper citârunt loca Nov. Test. ad textum Irenæanum, sed nonnunquam ad codices suos posteriores, seu etiam ex memoria, unde sequitur nihil certe ex iis de codice Irenæi colligi posse. De Latinis Tertulliani hæc Millius pronunciat, ibid. p. 49. in eo citata sunt S. Codicis loca negligentius, ex memoria, contracte, ad sensum, haud sine levicula aliqua subinde mutatione. Et in variis suis lectionibus sæpissime monet, hæc et illa à patribus ex memoria recitata esse.

Unum adhuc restat quod patrum saltem Homilias, concionesve eo minus idoneas reddat ex quibus recepta S. Textus lectio sollicitetur, nempe constat à tempore Origenis homilias eorum, conciones, et sermones habitos fuisse αὐτοσχεδιαστικῶς, sive ex tempore, eosque excepisse notarios, qui arte quadam, et celeritate scribendi non verba solum insigniora, sed integras periodos exhibuerunt. Hic igitur errandi duplex causa, primo etenim cum in extemporaneis hisce declamationibus exemplaria ipsa inspicere neutiquam potuerint patres, perfrequens necessario fuit lapsus eorum memoriæ. Secundò, fac in hoc patres rarius errasse, quid tamen vero similius est, quam in tot minutis patrum verbis exscribendis crebro lapsos fuisse notarios? Atque his duabus causis, ut conjicere licet, debetur magna pars variantium istarum lectionum, quas Millius industria singulari, nec sine artificio quodam, coacervavit.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

USITATISSIMUM porro est apud patres, præsertim primi sæculi, allegare commata quædam S. Scripturæ juxta sensum eorum, aut summatim, nulla adhibita ratione ipsorum verborum; id unum vero imprimis lectorem moneo, ut in locupletissima hac rerum sylva colligenda, et sub capitibus suis reponenda, accuratam diligentiam quæ tædium pareret, non expectet; nec mihi vitio vertat quod in hac rerum partitione, non omnia inveniat adeo exacte, aut juxta regularum logicalium normam disposita, ut capiti huic potius quam alteri instantia quæque respondeat. His prælibatis, ad patres ordine procedo.

Ignatius raro aliquid citat prout jam illud apud evangelia, epistolas, aut ullam ex antiquis versionibus occurrit, sed quæ in mentem itineranti venerunt, additis, subductis, aut immutatis quibusdam adduxit; V. g. in epistola ad Ephesios, sic

§. 2. Scriptum legimus ἵνα ἐν μιᾷ ὑποταγῇ ἦτε κατηρτισμένοι τῷ αὐτῷ νοΐ, καὶ τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ, καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, sc. si margini sit fides, ex 1 Cor. i. 10. hic vero sicut καὶ μὴ ᾖ ἐν ὑμῖν σχίσματα omittit, ita etiam addit ἐν μιᾷ ὑποταγῇ, καὶ περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, et transponit τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες. In Constitutionibis Apost. lib. ii. cap. 44. verba sic se habent ὅπως μὴ ᾖ ἐν ὑμῖν σχίσματα, ἦτε δὲ ἓν σῶμα καὶ ἓν πνεῦμα κατηρτισμένοι τῷ αὐτῷ νοΐ, καὶ τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ κατὰ τὴν κυριακὴν θέσιν, ubi addita sunt textui verba quibus linea subducta est. Quid ad hæc Millius notat, sc. deesse ἐν ante τῷ νοΐ, et τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ; de reliquis prorsus silet.

§. 4. In eadem epistola habes φανερὸν τὸ δένδρον ἀπὸ τοῦ καρποῦ αὐτοῦ, et in margine Matth. xii. 33. cujus verba sunt, ἐκ γὰρ τοῦ καρποῦ τὸ δένδρον γινώσκεται, §. 8. hæc reperies. ποῦ σοφός; ποῦ συζητήτης; ποῦ καύχησις τῶν λεγομένων συνετῶν; 1 Cor. i. 20. ubi ut omittit ποῦ γραμματεὺς, et τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, sic posteriorem clausulam de suo addit. In Epist. ad Rom. §. 5. desumit hæc verba ex 1 Cor. iv. 4. ἀλλ' οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο δεδικαίωμαι. Textus legit ἐν τούτῳ. In Ep. ad Eccles. Smyrn. §. 6. legit ὁ χωρῶν χωρείτω, Matth. xix. 12. Textus vero ὁ δυνάμενος χωρεῖν. Atqui in omnibus his locis nulla ex Ignatio adhibetur varians lectio.

* Crit. Hist. Text. N. T. cap. 31. p. 151.

† Lib. i. cap. 17. p. 87.

In Polycarpi epistola nihil fere occurrit, cui tanquam stabili fundamento varians lectio innitatur, de verbis D. Petri 1 Pet. i. 18. actum est alibi §. 2. hæc habet διὸ ἀναζωσάμενοι τὰς ὀσφύας, δουλεύσατε τῷ Θεῷ ἐν φόβῳ, καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, et in margine legas, 1 Pet. i. 13. et Ps. ii. 11. quasi hæc loca in unum confudisset Polycarpus, cum revera in neutro hæc verba reperias. Ibidem legimus, μὴ ἀποδιδόντες κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ, ἢ λοιδορίαν ἀντὶ λοιδορίας, ἢ γρόνθον ἀντὶ γρόνθου, ἢ κατάραν ἀντὶ κατάρας, postrema addit Polycarpus de suo. Ita Millius in 1 Pet. iii. 9. §. 5. πᾶσα (φησὶ) ἐπιθυμία κατὰ τοῦ πνεύματος στρατεύεται, ex 1 Pet. ii. 12. κατὰ τῆς ψυχῆς. Petrus ipse, §. 8. in citando v. 24. ejusdem capitis, omittit αὐτὸς, et pro ἐν τῷ σώματι αὐτοῦ legit τῷ ἰδίῳ σώματι, atque hæc Polycarpi solius autoritate inter varias Millii lectiones locum obtinent, sicut etiam ex §. 7. πᾶς ὃς ἂν μὴ ὁμολογῇ τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθέναι, Ἀντιχριστός ἐστι. Sed Œcumenius et versiones omnes editis congruunt, sc. πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ—ἐληλυθὸτα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὔκ ἐστι, καὶ τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ Ἀντιχρίστου, vide locum hunc excussum 1 Joh. iv. 3.

Idem dicendum est de locis à Justino Martyre ex memoria, ut dixi, citatis, à §. 18. ad §. 26. quæ speciatim jam attingo, v. g. Matth. v. 28. ὃς ἂν ἐμβλέψῃ γυναικὶ, Just. πᾶς ὁ βλέπων γυναῖκα, Textus, ἤδη ἐμοίχευσε τῇ καρδίᾳ παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ Just. ἐμοίχευσεν αὐτὴν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ, Text. v. 46. ἐὰν γὰρ ἀγαπήσετε ὑμᾶς, τίνα μισθὸν ἔχετε; οὐχὶ καὶ οἱ τελῶναι τὸ αὐτὸ ποιοῦσι; ita Matthæus. Τί καινὸν ποιεῖτε; καὶ γὰρ οἱ πόρνοι τοῦτο ποιοῦσιν, Just. cap. vi. 21. ἐκεῖ ἔσται καὶ καρδία ὑμῶν, Text. καὶ ὁ νοῦς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, Just. cap. v. 16. λαμψάτω δὲ ὑμῶν τὰ καλὰ ἔργα ἐμπροσθὲν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἵνα βλέποντες θαυμάζωσι τὸν πατέρα ὑμῶν——ἵνα ἰδόντες δοξάσωσι, Text. §. 21. legit οὐδεὶς ἀγαθὸς εἰ μὴ μόνος Θεὸς ὁ ποιήσας τὰ πάντα, Matth. xix. 17. §. 26. è Matth. x. 28. aut Luc. xii. 34. legit, μὴ φοβεῖσθε, τοὺς ἀναιροῦντας, φοβεῖσθε δὲ τὸν μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν, δυνάμενον, &c. ubi textui adduntur verba μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν, §. 48. allegat hæc verba tanquam dicta à Judæis Christo in cruce suffixo, νεκροὺς ἀναγείρας, ῥυσάσθω ἑαυτὸν, ubi Grabius nos refert ad Matth. xxvii. 39, 40. qui versiculi verbis Martyris parum conveniunt. In Dialogo cum Tryphone, p. 235. habet hæc verba à Luc. xi. 52. Væ vobis scribis, ὅτι κλεῖδας ἔχετε. Textus, ὅτι ἤρατε τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς γνώσεως.

Luc. xii. 50. dicit Christus baptismum habeo baptizari, καὶ πῶς συνέχομαι ἕως οὗ τελεσθῇ, hanc clausulam sic exhibet Irenæus, lib. i. cap. 18. p. 89. καὶ πάνυ ἐπείγομαι εἰς αὐτὸ, Epiphanius, Hær. Arian. p. 784. καὶ τί θέλω, εἰ ἤδη ἐβαπτίσθην.

Clemens Alex. ait, Pædag. lib. i. cap. 6. p. 82. cum Dominus noster baptizatus esset, ecce vox è cœlis dicens, hic est filius meus dilectus, ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε, et lib. ii. cap. 1. p. 45. allegat verba apostoli, 1 Cor. viii. 6. ad hunc modum, ἀλλὰ μόνος ὄντως ἐστὶν εἷς ἡμῶν ὁ Θεὸς ἐξ οὗ τὰ πάντα, ubi Textus sic, ἀλλ' ἡμῶν εἷς Θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ, &c. hanc insignem mutationem prætcrit Millius; notat autem omitti verba sequentia, καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτὸν, ubi Sanctus Judas scripsit δεσμοῖς ἀϊδίοις ὑπὸ ζόφον τετήρηκεν, ibi Clemens habet ὑπὸ ζόφον ἀγρίων Ἀγγέλων, Stro. iii. p. 467. ὁ Κύριός [φησιν] ὁ γήμας μὴ ἐκβαλλέτω, καὶ ὁ μὴ γαμήσας, μὴ γαμείτω, quæ ut videtur citare non ex evangeliis, sed ex 1 Cor. vii. 27. ita neque verbis, neque sententiæ apostoli satis apte respondent, Stro. iv. p. 488. sic verba Zachæi profert, ἡμίση τῶν ὑπαρχόντων μου δίδωμι ἐλεεμοσύνην τοῖς πτωχοῖς, et deinde addit, ἐφ' οὗ καὶ ὁ σωτὴρ εἶπεν, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐλθὼν σήμερον τὸ ἀπολωλὸς εὗρεν, quod multum discrepat à Luc. xix. 8—10. In eadem pagina hæc verba desumit, vel è Matth. xii. 42. vel è Marc. ix. 41. καὶ ὃς ἂν δέξηται ἕνα τῶν μαθητῶν τούτων τῶν μικρῶν, μισθὸν οὐκ ἀπολέσει, quæ receptæ lectioni parum congruunt. Eodem libro, p. 529. his verbis, tanquam à Christo dictis φησὶν affigit, ἐὰν ποιήσῃς ἐλεεμοσύνην, μηδεὶς γινωσκέτω, καὶ ἐὰν νηστεύσῃς ἀλείψω; ἵνα ὁ Θεὸς μόνος γινώσκῃ, ἀνθρώπων δὲ οὐδὲ εἷς, ubi certe nihil sibi statuit præterquam Christi dicta, Matth. vi. in epitomen redigere. Stro. vi. p. 662. Parabolam, Matth. xiii. 47, 48. sic recitat, ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀνθρώπῳ σαγήνην εἰς θάλασσαν βεβληκότι καὶ ἐκ τοῦ πλήθους ἁλωκότων ἰχθύων τὴν ἐκλογὴν τῶν ἀμεινόνων ποιουμένῳ; sensum sic afferens, non verba Christi; pariter ac Stro. iii. p. 440. ubi illo teste, Christus ait, Luc. xii. 58. μετὰ τοῦ ἀντιδίκου βαδίζων φίλος αὐτοῦ πειράθητι ὑπαλλαγῆναι. Ex his et iis quæ dicentur infra, facile discamus, in judicio quod de patrum citationibus fecit, longe aut falli, aut prejudiciis abreptum, à veritate multum aberrasse Millium. Clemens enim, eo teste, in adducendis N. Test. locis creber est, et cautus raro, quicquam ingerens, seu etiam prætermittens. Prol. p. 60. col. 2.

De Origenis in scripturis citandis licentia, aliquid supra diximus, locisque in præcedente sectione notatis. Sexcenta nullo negotio addere possim. Sed ne in iis proferendis nimius sim, pauca ex innumeris depromam, v. g. pro τί θέλω εἰ ἤδη ἀνήφθη, Luc. xii. 49. Orig. in Exod. ed. Huet. to. i. p. 22. legit, εἴτε δὲ ἑκάτη. Com. in Matth. p. 463. verba apud Lucam, chap. xiv. 28, 29. sic repræsentat, τίς ἐξ ὑμῶν βουλόμενος πύργον οἰκοδομῆσαι οὐχὶ ψηφίζει, εἰ ἔχει εἰς ἀπαρτισμὸν καὶ ἐκτελέσαι, ἵνα μὴ ἄρξωνται οἱ θεωροῦντες ἐμπαίζειν τῷ μὴ τελέσαντι; ubi sensum Christi retinens, in verbis plurima mutat, hæc tamen sic introducit περὶ τοῦ τοιούτου νομίζω λελέχθαι πύργον ὑπὸ τοῦ Σωτῆρος τό, Com. in Matth. p. 307. pro τότε συνῆκαν οἱ Μαθηταί, Matth. xvii. 13. habet Origenes οἱ συναναβάντες τρεῖς μαθηταί, ibid p. 489. ita allegat, 1 Tim. ii. 3. σωθήσεται δὲ διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας, ἐὰν τὰ τέκνα μείνῃ ἐν πίστει, immutans μείνωσι in μείνῃ, et simul addens τὰ τέκνα explicandi gratia. Et pro ἐν ποίᾳ παραβολῇ παραβάλωμεν αὐτὴν; Orig. in Matth. p. 208. legit, ἐν τινὶ αὐτὴν παραβολῇ θῶμεν;

Athanasius in scriptis suis genuinis receptam lectionem plerumque retinet, et de via raro aliter quam addendo pauca declinat, v. g. 2 Cor. v. 15. hæc reperias, ὅτι εἰ εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, utique omnes mortui sunt, et pro omnibus mortuus est, ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες οὐκέτι ἑαυτοῖς ζῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ἀποθανόντι καὶ ἐγερθέντι, at vero illud de incarn. verbi, p. 62. sic legit, ὅτι εἷς ὑπὲρ, &c.—ἵνα ἡμεῖς μηκέτι ἑαυτοῖς (f. ἐμαυτοῖς) ζῶμεν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀποθανόντι ἀναστάντι ἐκ νεκρῶν, τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ, ubi de defectu εἰ, et de posteriori additamento, mentionem facit Millius, de reliquis variationibus nullam. In secunda oratione contra Arian. p. 351. παρὰ τοῦ Πέτρου (inquit) λέγεται ὅτι ἐπειδὰν Θεὸς ὢν γέγονεν ἄνθρωπος, nec tamen existimabat verba hæc, ῥητῶς in Petri epistolis inveniri, sed tantum virtute in 1 Pet. iv. 1. contineri. Nam orat. iv. p. 483. sic suam ipse sententiam aperit. Postquam enim hæc attulisset verba, Χριστοῦ οὖν παθόντος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν σαρκὶ, addit, hoc autem est ἴσον τοῦ φάναι Θεὸς ὤν, ἴδιον ἔσχε σῶμα, καὶ τούτῳ χρώμενον ὀργάνῳ, ἄνθρωπος γέγονε δ' ἡμᾶς.

Cyrillus Hierosol. sic loquentem introducit Paulum, μὴ ἐξίστασθε ἐγὼ οἶδα ὅτι σκληρόν μοί ἐστι πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν, Catech. 10. p. 90. et Catech. 5. p. 45. pro τηρῆσαί σε τὴν ἐντολὴν, 1 Tim. vi. 14. legit τηρῆσαι ταύτην ἡμᾶς τὴν παραδεδομένην πίστιν.

Producit sæpissime in scenam Epiphanium, ut lectionis non tantum variæ, sen genuinæ testem idoneum, (quod non modo ex annotationibus, sed ex prolegomenis, p. 75. col. 2. et p. 76. col. 1, 2, apparet.) Fatetur tamen ipse Millius ibidem ab Epiphanio plerumque negligentius, et ad sensum allegata esse S. Codicis Testimonia, quorum falsa, et vera inter se numero non distinguuntur, v. g. in Anchorato hæc depromit, p. 26. è Joh. xii. 35. οὐκ ἔστε ἐν νυκτὶ, ἵνα ἡ ἡμέρα ἐν σκότει ὑμᾶς καταλάβῃ, quæ à textu, aut verbis Christi, pro quibus adducuntur, adeo longe discrepant, ut licet forte videantur additamentum è 1 Thessal. v. 4. neutiquam tamen dicenda sint legitima explicatio. In Anacephalæosi, p. 156. sic legit, 1 Cor. xv. 42. τὰ νῦν σπειρόμενα ἐν θανάτῳ, ἐγείρονται ἐν ἀθανασίᾳ. Textus autem ἐν φθορᾷ, ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ, in Panario, i. e. volumine adv. Hær. quinquies, vel sexies legit, Joh. viii. 44. καὶ ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ ψεύστης ἦν, viz. p. 279. bis, 295, 297, 676, 677. quâ ex lectione, originem suam duxit absurda illa quorundam Christianorum de Patre Diaboli opinio. Interdum quædam Christi, aut apostolorum adducit testimonia, quæ nusquam sunt gentium. Ita, p. 690. post verba, quibus Christus alloquitur suos discipulos, attendite à fermento pharisæorum quod est hypocrisis, addit, καὶ ἐν ἄλλῳ τόπῳ ἢ ἐστι φιλαργυρία, forsan alludens ad Luc. xvi. 14. ubi pharisæi φιλάργυροι appellantur. Et p. 751, 754. 917. dicit, ὁ Κύριος εὐλογῶν τοὺς Μαθητὰς, ἔφη, πάτερ, δὸς αὐτοῖς ζωὴν ἔχειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. at vero neque hæc verba apud S. Scripturam occurrunt, neque perfectio illa divina hominibus communicari potest. Supervacaneum autem est, post* Heinsii labores, plura hic adducere, cum enim multa hujusmodi in medium protulerit, orationem sic claudit, Cujusmodi si singula vel ex solo hoc adducerem autore, in quo miram ubique licentiam notavi, quis futurus finis esset?

Sanctus Basilius tom. ii. 664. verba Pauli Eph. iv. 2. sic exhibet, ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλήλων ἐν ἀγάπῃ Χριστοῦ, non quia ibi reperisset Χριστοῦ, sed explicationis gratia, vel forte ex cap. v. 2. περιπατεῖτε ἐν ἀγάπῃ, καθῶς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς.

Cyrillus Alex. recitat verba Luc. xi. 41. sic, δότε ἐλεημοσύνην, καὶ ἰδοὺ πάντα ὑμῖν εὐοδα ἔσται, de ador. Sp. p. 272. Pro ταῦτα γράφειν, Philip. iii. 1. sæpius habet ταῦτα λέγειν, in Hos. p. 1. in Amoth. p. 285, in Joel p. 381. Allegat verba Jacobi c. v. 20. ad hunc modum σώσει ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ in min. Proph. p. 594.

Sanctus Chrysostomus sic Agrippæ regis verba profert κινδυνεύεις με ἐν ὀλίγῳ ποιῆσαι χριστιανὸν, ed. Mor. to. i. p. 669. sed in commentario editis congruit. Sic etiam Christi verba refert, Luc. xiii. 2, 4. δοκεῖτε ὅτι ἐκεῖνοι ἁμαρτωλοὶ ἦσαν μόνον, ubi recepta lectio habet παρὰ πάντας τοὺς Γαλιλαίους, παρὰ πάντας ἀνθρώπους, vide to. v. p. 74, 75. Hæc etiam Rom. ix. 32. tanquam ipsissima textus verba recitat, ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ ἔργων νόμου ἠθέλησαν δικαιωθῆναι. Omnia percurrere infinitus esset labor; ecce autem è grandioribus exemplis, Matth. xxv. 34, 35, 36. sic textum exhibet καὶ τοὺς μὲν ἀποδέξεται ὅτι πεινῶντα αὐτὸν ἔθρεψαν, καὶ διψῶντα ἐπότισαν, καὶ ξένον ὄντα συνήγαγον, καὶ γύμνον ὄντα περιέβαλον καὶ ἀσθενοῦντα ἐπεσκέψαντο, καὶ ἐν φυλακῇ ὄντα εἶδον, καὶ δώσει τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῖς, ubi si sensum spectes, nihil deest; si verba, in omnibus deficiunt.

SECTIO TERTIA.

SI singula enumerare velim, quæ textui de suo adjecerunt patres Græci, in molem immensam cresceret oratio: ut igitur pauca de multis attingam.

Primo hoc in genere Clemens Alexandrinus centies ad minimum peccat, nec enim fides adhibenda est Millio dicenti raro ipsum quicquam ingerere. Frustra enim verbis asseritur quod re ipsa falsi arguatur. Ex. Gr. protrept. p. 3. Tit. iii. 2. sic recitat, ἦμεν μεν ἠμέν ποτε καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀνόητοι, non quod τὸ ἦμεν bis ibi legeret, sed vocem rhetorum more ingeminat. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 4. p. 14. Luc. xx. 34. sic exhibet ἐν γὰρ αἰῶνι τούτῳ φησὶ (sc. ὁ Χριστὸς) γαμοῦσι καὶ ἐκγαμίσκονται, ἐν ᾧ δὲ μόνῳ τὸ ϑῆλυ τοῦ ἄῤῥενος διακρίνεται, ἐν ἐκείνῳ δὲ οὐκέτι, cap. 5. p. 85. Matth. xix. 13, 14. sic legit, προσήνεγκάν τε αὐτῷ, φησὶ, παιδία εἰς χειροθεσίαν εὐλογίας· κωλυόντων δὲ τῶν γνωρίμων εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, et post decem lineas, Matth. xxi. 9. sic εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, φῶς, καὶ δόξα, καὶ αἶνος, μεθ' ἱκετηρίας τῷ Κυρίῳ, cap. 6. p. 97. sic allegat 1 Cor. iii. 11. ὕτε ἥμην νήπιος ὡς νήπιος ἐφρόνουν ἐκειδὴ εἰκόμην τῷ νόμῳ. Ep. p. 88. hæc habet, ὁ Ἀπόστολος ἐπιστέλλων πρὸς Κορινθίους, φησὶν, 1 Cor. xi. 2. ἡρμοσάμην γὰρ ἡμᾶς ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ παρθένον ἁγνὴν παραστῆσαι τῷ Χριστῷ, εἴτε ὡς νηπίους, καὶ ἁγίους, πλὴν ἀλλὰ τῷ μόνῳ Κυρίῳ. Ibid. p. 99. his verbis, 1 Cor. iii. 3. ἐπεὶ γὰρ σαρκικοί ἐστε, addit, τὰ τῆς σαρκὸς φρονοῦντες ἐπιθυμοῦντες, ἐρῶντες, ζηλοῦντες, μηνιῶντες, φθονοῦντες, cap. vii. p. 112. hæc habet, διὸ φησὶν ἡ γραφὴ (Joh. i. 17.) ὁ νόμος διὰ Μώσεως ἐδόθη, οὐχὶ ὑπὸ Μώσεως, ἀλλὰ ὑπὸ μὲν τοῦ λόγου, διὰ Μώσεως δὲ τοῦ ϑεράποντος αὐτοῦ, διὸ καὶ πρόσκαιρος ἐγένετο, ἡ δὲ ἀΐδιος χάρις, καὶ ἀλήϑεια, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐγένετο, cap. 9. p. 125. ex Matth. iii. 12. τὸ γὰρ πτύον ἐν τῇ χειρὶ τοῦ Κυρίου ᾧ ἀποκρίνεται τοῦ πυροῦ τὸ ἄχυρον τὸ ὀφειλόμενον τῷ πυρί. Lib. iii. cap. 12. p. 263. inter apostoli præcepta enumerat hoc Eph. v. 1. γίνεσθε οὖν φρόνιμοι, καὶ μιμηταὶ Θεοῦ ὡς τέκνα ἀγαπητὰ, (ubi τὸ φρόνιμοι inter variantes lectiones locum obtinet, licet omittat vocabulum illud idem Clem. Stro. iii. p. 431.) et post sex lineas sequitur hoc præceptum ex v. 28. aut 33. ἀγαπάτωσαν οὖν ἀλλήλους οἱ συνεζευγμένοι ὡς τὰ ἴδια σώματα, de quo altum est apud Millium silentium. Lib. ii. cap. 1. p. 141. ὁ Κύριος λέγει γοῦν, Luc. xiv. 13. ὅταν ποιῇς δοχὴν, κάλει τοὺς πτωχοὺς, ἐφ' ᾧ μάλιστα δεῖπνον ποιητέον. Cap. ii. p. 156. εἰκότως οὖν ὁ ἀπόστολος ἐπιστέλλει, μὴ μεθύσκεσθε ἐν οἴνῳ, ᾧ ἐστιν ἀσωτία πολλὴ, Eph. v. 18. ubi variantes lectiones notat Millius, cap. 10. p. 197. ὡς φησὶν ὁ Παῦλος (1 Cor. vi. 15.) οὐ χρὴ πόρνης μέλη ποιεῖν τὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ μέλη, οὐδὲ μὴν νεῶν τῶν παθῶν τῶν αἰσχρῶν, τὸν νεὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ ποιητέον. Ibid. p. 201. ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ λέγει (Matt. xi. 8.) ἰδοὺ οἱ ἐν τῷ ἱματισμῷ ἐνδόξῳ, καὶ ἐν τροφῇ διάγοντες, ἐν τοῖς βασιλείοις εἰσὶ τοῖς ἐπιγείοις. Stro. i. p. 280. ὁ Κύριος μόνος γινώσκει τοὺς διαλογισμοὺς, et 1 Cor. iii. 20. p. 289. εἴ τις μὴ προσέρχεται ὑγιαίνουσι λόγοις, φησὶ, (1 Tim. ix. 2.) διδασκαλία δέ τινι τετύφλωται, &c. p. 296. ex col. ii. 8. βλέπετε μή τις ἔσται ὁ Συλαγαγὼν ἀπὸ τῆς πίστεως τῆς εἰς τὸν Χριστὸν, διὰ τῆς φιλοσοφίας. P. 313. Ἰουδαῖοί φησι, (1 Cor. i. 22.) σημεῖα αἰτοῦσι πρὸς πίστιν, ubi observat Mill. σημεῖα esse pro σημεῖον, sed de additamento nihil. Stro. iii. p. 471. sic recitat Gal. ii. 20. ζῶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ, ὡς ἔζων κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, ζῇ δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστὸς διὰ τῆς τῶν ἐντολῶν ὑπακοῆς, ἁγνῶς, καὶ μακαρίως· Et Stro. iv. p. 379. mihi enim crucifixus est mundus, et ego mundo, βιῶ δὲ ἤδη ἐν σαρκὶ ὢν, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ πολιτευόμενος. Vide bina additamenta ad Eph. iv. 21, 22. Pæd. lib. iii. cap. 3. p. 224. addit. ad. 2 Cor. xiii. 5. p. 225. ad Matth. v. 29. p. 251. ad 1 Pet. i. 17. p. 258. ad Hebr. xii. 6. Stro. ii. p. 360. ad 2 Cor. v. 12. Stro. iii. p. 452. ad Luc. xix. 8. Stro. iv. p. 488. ad 1 Cor. ix. 12. p. 513. ad Matth. xviii. 3. p. 538. ad Luc. viii. 8. Stro. v. p. 545. ad Joh. x. 16. Stro. vi. p. 668. denique ad 1 Cor. viii. 4. p. 695.

Origenes in Celsum, lib. vi. p. 278. sic ait, καὶ Ἰωάννης λέγει ὕπερ φῶς ἀληθινὸν φωτίζει πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν ἀληθινὸν καὶ νοητὸν κόσμον, καὶ ποιεῖ αὐτὸν φῶς τῷ κόσμῳ. Lib. ii. p. 61. sic Christi verba refert, Luc. xxii. 27. ἐγὼ δὲ ἐγενόμην ἐν μέσῳ ὑμῶν, οὐχ ὡς ὁ ἀνακείμενος, ἀλλ' ὡς ὁ διακονῶν. Lib. i. p. 44. exemplum licentiæ quam sibi sumpsit tum in mutando, tum in addendo verba Dei. Sic, inquit, loquitur Gamaliel, Act. v. 38. ἐὰν ᾖ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἡ βουλὴ αὕτη, καὶ ὁ λόγος οὗτος, (text. καὶ τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο) καταλυθήσεται· ὡς καὶ ἐκεινων κατελύθη ἀποθανόντων, ἐὰν δὲ ἐκ Θεοῦ (text. εἰ δὲ ἐκ Θεοῦ ἐστιν) οὐ δυνήσασθε (text. δύνασθε) καταλύσαι τὴν τούτου διδασκαλίαν (text. αὐτό.)

Athanasius Alex. Hom. in Omnia mihi tradita, p. 150. ad verba Matth. cap. xi. 28. addit tanquam Christi verba, Venite ad me omnes ——reficiam vos. παρεδόθη γάρ μοι ἵνα κοπιώσαντας ἀναπαύσω, καὶ νεκρωθέντας ζωοποιήσω. Ad 1 Pet. i. 14. addit cum multis aliis, τὸ τῆς ἐνάμεως. Epist. ad Serap. p. 200. Orat. ii. contra Arianos, p. 310. allegatis Judæorum verbis sub formula interrogandi, Cur tu, homo cum sis, facis te Deum? Addit καὶ λέγεις, ἐγὼ καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ἓν ἐσμέν. Ibid. p. 314. verba 1 Tim. iv. 1. sic recitat, In novissimis temporibus ἀποστήσονταί τινες τῆς ἰδίας πίστεως τῆς ὑγιαινούσης, et p. 303. τῆς ἁγίης πίστεως, et p. 367. Joh. iii. 17. sic legit, Non enim misit Deus filium suum in mundum ut judicet mundum, ἀλλ' ἵνα πάντα λυτρώσηται, Orat. iv. p. 478. his verbis Rom. xi. 29. ἀμεταμέλητα γὰρ τὰ χαρίσματα τοῦ Θεοῦ subjungit καὶ ἡ χάρις τῆς κλήσεως. Ibid p. 480. quæstioni, Joh. vi. 42. quomodo ergo dicit quod de cœlo descendi, præmittit πῶς λέγει πρὶν Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι ἐγώ εἰμι. Orat. v. p. 532. adducit tanquam verba Christi, Joh. xv. 22. εἰ γὰρ οὐκ ἦλθον—νῦν δὲ πρόφασιν οὐκ ἔξουσιν (supple περὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν) φησὶ ἀκηκούτες μου τῶν ῥημάτων δι' ὧν σωτηρίαν καρπίζονται οἱ φυλάσσοντες. In sermone de salut. adventu Christi, p. 640. sic recitat 1 Pet. iii. 19. ἐπορεύθη τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ κατακεκλεισμένοις πνεύμασιν εὐαγγελίσασθαι τὴν ἀνάστασιν. Ibid. p. 646. legit Joh. xvii. 5. δόξασόν με πάτερ τῇ ἰδίῳ δόξῃ. Serm. de Sabbato, et circumcisione, p. 968. post συνταφέντες αὐτῷ ἐν βαπτίσματι addit εἰς τὴν Ἅιδην.

Cyrillus Hierosol. citans 1 Cor. xii. 28. post γένη γλώσσων addit καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς ἅπαν εἶδος. Catech. xviii. p. 222.

Apud Epiphanium sæpe Christum audias dicentem Joh. v. 23.

qui non honorificat filium sicut honorificat patrem, ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπ' αὐτὸν μένει. Ita Panar. p. 377, 884, 977. p. 516. iisdem verbis subjungit hæc, οὐκ ἔχει ζωὴν ἐν ἑαυτῷ. Ad 1 Joh. ii. 22. addit, p. 878. ὁ ὁμολογῶν τὸν υἱὸν, καὶ τὸν πατέρα ὁμολογεῖ. Addit Philip. ii. 11. καὶ πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσηται ὅτι ὁ Κύριος; id est Χριστὸς, ὁ οὐχ ἀλλότριος Θεοῦ ὢν ἀλλ' εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ πατρὸς, p. 972. p. 880. 1 Cor. ii. 17. pro ἃ καὶ λαλοῦμεν legit, ἐν ᾧ καὶ λαλοῦμεν, et deinde, ἐν ᾧ καὶ λατρεύομεν, καὶ προσκυνοῦμεν. Post τὰς χεῖράς μου καὶ τοὺς πόδας μου. Luc. xxiv. 39. addit. p. 1003. καὶ τοὺς τύπους τῶν ἥλων. Et p. 1055. 1 Tim. iv. 1. addit ἔσονται γὰρ νεκροῖς λατρεύοντες, at p. 296. et alibi, recitat eundem versiculum absque illo additamento.

Sanctus Basilius his verbis εἷς Θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ, καὶ εἷς Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα, addit καὶ ἓν πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐν ᾧ τὰ πάντα. Lib. ii. de Spiritu Sancto, cap. 2. tom. ii. p. 294. et tom. i. Hexam. p. 6. col. i. 16. addit εἴτε δυνάμεις, εἴτε Ἀγγέλων στρατιαὶ, εἴτε Ἀρχαγγέλων ἐπιστασίαι forsan interpretamento horum verborum, τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ γῆς, quæ omittit.

Macarius Ægyptius in his additamentis præ cæteris abundat, Hom. ix. p. 5. 1 Cor. ii. 15. ὁ πνευματικὸς (φησὶ) γινώσκει ἕκαστον πόθεν λαλεῖ, ποῦ ἕστηκε καὶ ἐν ποίοις μέτροις ἐστίν. Hom. xii. p. 73. Martham introducit sic Christum alloquentem, Luc. x. 40. ἐγὼ κάμνω εἰς πολλὰ, καὶ αὐτὴ παρακαθέζεταί σοι. Hom. xiv. p. 75. legit 1 Cor. ix. 10. καὶ ὁ λαμβάνων γυναῖκα ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τοῦ ἔχειν κληρονόμους. Matt. xix. 21. his verbis, vende quæ habes, addit μίσησον τὴν κοινωνίαν σαρκικὴν, δούλευσον τῷ Θεῷ. Ep. p. 211. addit Gal. iv. 2. ὑπὸ ὑποτρόπους καὶ οἰκονόμους τῶν ποιηρῶν πνευμάτων. Vide similia ed. Paris. p. 88. 202. 236.

Theodoretus Hær. fab. p. 309. ad 1 Cor. vii. 7. θέλω γὰρ πάντας ἀνθρώπους εἶναι ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτὸν ἐν ἐγκρατείᾳ, ita enim explicat hæc verba in commentario suo. Idem eadem de causa fecit Chrysost. Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 12. et 385. et tom. iv. p. 539. Cum vero tantum legimus, Acts xiii. 46. στρεφόμεθα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, Theodoretus in Isa. xi. et orat. 10. adv. Gr. p. 639. legit καθαροὶ ἡμεῖς, ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν εἰς ἔθνη πορευσόμεθα. Cum editis tamen congruit comment. in Jer. p. 170. legendo ἰδοῦ στρεφόμεθα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη.

Denique verbis Christi, Matt. xix. 17. εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ Θεὸς adjiciunt patres primævi nunc ὁ ποιήσας πάντα, Just. M. Apol. 2. p. 63. alias ὁ πατήρ μου ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. Just. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 328. Clem. Alex. pædag. lib. i. cap. 8. p. 118. Et Iren. lib. i. cap. 17. alias simpliciter ὁ πατήρ. Orig. exhort. ad Martyr. p. 169. Com. in Joh. p. 38. et p. 60. et contra Cels. lib. v. p. 238.

SECTIO QUARTA.

MULTA verba sæpe et periodos omittunt patres, aut saltem contrahunt reclamantibus suis exemplaribus, ex eo quod forsan quibusdam illa locis superflua videbantur (sicut Millio centies in ore est) vel nihil ad rem facere, vel quod posita essent in parenthesi, vel quod bis in eadem reposita periodo, vel propter aliam quamlibet causam. V. g.

Clemens Alex. pædag. lib. ii. cap. 8. p. 158. legit Matt. xi. 19. ἦλθεν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, καὶ λέγουσιν, præterito ἐσθίων, καὶ πίνων, sed Stro. iii. p. 448. legit hæc verba. Stro. ii. p. 368. habet hæc verba, πιστέον τῇ γραφῇ. S. Matt. xix. 24. θᾶττον κάμηλον διὰ τρυπήματος βελόνης διελεύσεσθαι, ἢ πλούσιον φιλοσοφεῖν. Ibid. p. 381. sic recitat Matt. xvii. 20. ἐὰν ἔχητε πίστιν ὡς κόκκον σινάπεως, μεταστήσετε τὸ ὄρος. P. 389. ὃ γὰρ ἐπιθυμήσας, ἤδη μεμοίχευκε, φησίν. Matt. v. 28. p. 391. ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν (Joh. xv. 11.) ἵνα ἡ χαρὰ ἐμὴ πληρωθῇ, mediis, ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ καὶ ἡ χαρὰ ὑμῶν, Stro. iii. p. 438. Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ ἁμαρτάνων δοῦλός ἐστιν, ὁ ἀπόστολος λέγει, nimirum, opinor, ex Rom. vi. 16. ubi sensus fere idem est, verba tamen diversa. P. 440. sic se habet Luc. xii. 58. μήποτε παραδῶ σε κριτῇ ὁ κριτὴς δὲ τῷ ὑπερήτῃ τῆς ἀρχῆς διαβόλῳ. Stro. iv. p. 480. ὁ κύριος ἐν εὐαγγελίῳ φησιν (Marc. x. 29.) ὃς ἂν καταλείψῃ πατέρα——ἕνεκεν εὐαγγελίου, καὶ τοῦ ὀνόματός μου μακάριος οὗτοσί. Vide etiam Stro. iv. p. 529. vi. p. 644. 662. Ecce hominem qui Millio judice raro quicquam prætermittit.

Cyrillus Hieros. Joh. i. 3. omittit ὃ γέγονεν. Catech. vi. p. 50. et Luc. ii. 11. σωτὴρ ὅς ἐστι, Catech. x. p. 86.

Epiphanius in Ancorato, p. 61. legit Act. xxvii. 37. ὡς ὀγδοήκοντα ψυχαὶ, et p. 83. ὡς ψυχαὶ ἑβδομήκοντα. Textus autem αἱ πᾶσαι ψυχαὶ διακόσιαι ἑβδομήκοντα ἓξ, numerum sc. majorem prætermittit, et in minori à se ipso dissentit. In hæresi Manichæorum, p. 679. Parabolam zizaniorum recitat ex Matt. xiii. à v. 24. ad 31. ubi ut missa faciam minutiora illa à Millio notata, primo pro ἀνθρώπῳ σπείροντι καλὸν σπέρμα ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ αὐτοῦ, habet ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδεσπότῃ ὃς ἔσπειρε τὸν ἀγρὸν αὐτοῦ καλὸν σπέρμα. Secundo omittit, ἅνα μέσον τοῦ σίτου καὶ ἀπῆλθεν, v. 25. unà cum toto versiculo sequenti. Tertia, v. 27. addit, ὁ δὲ ἔφη ναὶ, sc. pro non, in quo sensu nunquam occurrit apud S. Scripturam. Quarto, Christum introducit messoribus dicentem, δήσατε δεσμὰς, καὶ ἑτοιμάζετε τὰ ζιζάνια εἰς κατακαῆναι πυρὶ ἀσβέστῳ. In Hær. Catharorum, p. 494. recitat. Heb. vi. à v. 4. ad 8. ubi d. v. 7. ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ait Millius, et v. 6. εἰς μετάνοιαν, et v. 4. γευσαμένους τῆς δωρεᾶς τοῦ ἐπουρανίου, καὶ μετόχους γεννηθέντας πνεύματος ἁγίου, de quibus nihil Millius.

Sanctus Basilius ter repetit verba Christi, Matt. xxviii. 19. ad hunc modum, πορευθέντες βαπτίζετε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς, viz. lib. i. contra Eunom. p. 714. lib. iii. p. 752. 758. sed quater cum excusis convenit, legens, πορευθέντες μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη βαπτίζοντες αὐτοὺς, &c. viz. tom. i. p. 549. 560. tom. ii. p. 423. 479.

Hoc sæpissime accidit cum eadem verba bis in eadem periodo reperiuntur. Ita Origenes Hom. 11. in Jer. p. 113. verba Christi sic profert, Matt. x. 34. μὴ νομίζετε ὅτι ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰρήνην——ἀλλὰ μάχαιραν, præterita, posteriori illo ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰρήνην. Com. in Joh. p. 169. omittit ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, Marc. xi. 10, quia occurrit in fine versiculi præcedentis. Cyrillus Alex. sic allegat 2 Cor. v. 15. εἰ εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον——ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες, omisso, καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, quod dictum fuit prius Thesaur. p. 278. Et de ador. Ep. p. 351. Chrysostomus Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 10. et 19. citat Luc. vi. 36. sic, γίνεσθε οὖν οἰκτίρμονες ὡς ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, prætermittens οἰκτίρμων ἐστὶ, et addens, ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ex Matt. iv. 48. Sic Act. vi. 13. omittit βλάσφημα in commentario suo, quia lectum est, v. 11. Hujus generis exempla multa occurrunt apud ipsius commentaria in Psalmos, et apud Millii prolegomena, et varias lectiones.

Frequenter etiam omittuntur verba quæ in parenthesi collocantur, sic Act. xii. 3. à Chrysostomo omissa sunt ἦσαν δὲ ἡμέραι τῶν ἀζύμων. Sic 1 Cor. xv. 3. ὃ καὶ παρέλαβον, ab Irenæo, lib. iii. cap. 20. p. 246. à Tertulliano, lib. iii. contra Marcion. cap. 8. et Hilario P. omittuntur. Quanquam ergo agnoscant hæc verba versiones, Græciquc Scholiastæ ad unum omnes, utpote ἐμφατικώτερα, si Millium tamen audias, Prol. p. 47. col. 2. commentarius est ex v. 1. et p. 81. col. 1. vox. explicatoria de margine est mixta cum Italicæ genuinis.

Nihil etiam apud patres usitatius quam in citandis Scripturis quæ proœmii aut præfationis loco habentur, prætermittere. Ita Origenes, περὶ εὐχῆς, p. 87, 88. omittit ἀμὴν, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, Joh. vi. 53. incipiens ab ἐὰν μὴ φαγητε, et v. 35. ἐγώ εἰμι ἄρτος τῆς ζωῆς, absque εἶπε δὲ αὐτοῖς, et Chrysostomus Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 756. in unum confundit, Col. iv. 4. Eph. vi. 20. quod tamen in utraque epistola est, ὡς δεῖ με λαλῆσαι, negligit.

Hoc etiam crebro contingit in clausula periodi, ubi patres decurtant, et amputant verba quæ ad rem suam minime pertinent. V. g. Cyrillus Alex. Thes. p. 163. ut probaret secundam in Sancta Trinitate personam meram creaturam non fuisse, citat Eph. ii. 10. αὐτοῦ γάρ ἐσμεν ποίημα κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, abscissis ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς, utpote ad argumentum nihil facientibus. Et p. 169. filium non esse creaturam probat ex 1 Cor. viii. 6. εἷς Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα prætermittens, καὶ ἡμεῖς δι' αὐτοῦ, utpote in prioribus inclusa. Chrysostomus Ed. Morel. tom. iii. p. 41. sic allegat Eph. iv. 13. μέχρι καταντήσωμεν οἱ πάντες εἰς ἄνδρα τέλειον εἰς μέτρον ἡλι- κίας præteritis τοῦ πληρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ in fine, et duabus pericopis in medio versiculi.

Non raro etiam omittunt quæ superflua illis videbantur, præsertim cum sint idiotismi Hebraici in usu frequenti apud 70 interpretes. Ita Joh. vi. 2. sequebatur eum multitudo magna, ὅτι ἐώρων αὐτοῦ τὰ σημεῖα ἃ ἐποίει, αὐτοῦ, deest in versionibus antiquis Chrysost. Cyril. Chron. Alex. nempe quia superfluum videbatur. Esse tamen pleonasmum Hebraicum constat. Vide Buxtorf. Gram. p. 412. Sic 1 Pet. ii. 24. οὗ τῷ μώλωπι αὐτοῦ ἰάθητε, τὸ οὗ deest. Sic Joh. vi. 9. παιδάριον ἔν ὧδε, deest ἓν quia παρέλκει. Sic v. 15. d. πάλιν MSS. quibusdam et versionibus Chrysostomo, et Nonno: res tamen ipsa minime dubia est, siquidem subiit in eundem montem Jesus, v. 3. Sic v. 22. navicula alia non erat ibi nisi una εἰ μὴ ἓν ἐκεῖνο, ubi à Chrysost. et MSS. aliquibus ἐκεῖνο, omissum existimat Lucas Brug. quod in eis ὃ quod sequitur, satis significetur. Sic Joh. vii. 3. ut videant discipuli tui τὰ ἔργά σου ἃ ποιεῖς, omittunt σου Chrysost. Cyril. Theophyl. ob eandem causam. Act. iv. 17. ἀπειλῇ ἀπειλησώμεθα, quo idiotismo vehementiam exprimunt Hebræi. Qui hoc non intelligebant, ἀπειλῇ omiserunt. Luc. i. 75. πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ζωῆς ἡμῶν, Vulg. et Syr. omittunt τῆς ζωῆς, utpote in reliquis inclusum. Cap. xiv. 18. ὅταν κληθῇς εἰς γάμους, ὑπό τινος omisso, qui enim invocatus fuerit ad cœnam, ab aliquo ut vocetur necesse est. Cap. xix. 2. ὁ ἀνὴρ ὀνόματι καλούμενος Ζακχαῖος, deest καλούμενος. Hinc ipse Millius agnoscit hoc, vel illud vocabulum crebro omitti ut supervacaneum.

Denique, contingit nonnunquam, ipsis patribus id indicantibus, quod quidam inter eos dedita opera omiserint verba aliqua ex vano timore, ne sanæ doctrinæ obesse, aut hæreticæ pravitati patrocinari videantur: sic quoniam quidam sentiebant, fletum, cum singultu, Christi personæ haud bene convenisse, et tamen flevisse eum, cum videret Hierosolymam, legimus, Luc. xix. 41. et post mortem Lazari, Joh. xi. 35. 'hæc loca,' inquit Grotius, 'male olim solicitata ab iis qui Christum nobis Stoicum effingere voluerunt.' Sit autem hoc incertum, utpote quod fidei unius Epiphanii innitatur, cujus verba in alium sensum trahit Grabius, et post illum Millius, quem ægre, me judice, ferunt. Certo tamen certius est totum illud, Luc. xxii. 43, 44. ab orthodoxis quibusdam omissum fuisse, metuentibus ne in malam illud partem hæretici interpretarentur, aut quia pusilli videbatur animi in tanta fuisse agonia Christum formidine mortis, ut sudor ejus esset sicut guttæ sanguinis. Hinc Hieronymus, lib. ii. adv. Pelagian. F. 103. lit. F. hæc habet, In quibusdam exemplaribus [N.B. tam Græcis, quam Latinis,] invenitur, scribere Lucam, apparuit illi angelus de cœlo confortans eum, et factus in agonia, prolixius orabat, et factus est sudor ejus sicut guttæ sanguinis decidentis in terram. In quibusdam, inquit, invenitur, in multis ergo defuit. Hilarius de Trin. lib. x. p. 253. in eandem sententiam loquitur his verbis, Nec sane ignorandum à nobis est, et in Græcis, et in Latinis codicibus quamplurimis, vel de adveniente angelo, vel de sudore sanguinis nil scriptum reperiri. Epiphanius hoc plenius agnoscit, in Ancorato; cum enim dixerit, corpus suum dedit Christus percutientibus, et faciem suam non avertit à conspuentibus addit, p. 36. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἔκλανσε, κεῖται ἐν τῷ μετὰ Λοῦκαν εὐαγγελίῳ, ἐν τοῖς ἀδιορθώτοις ἀντιγράφοις, καὶ κέχρηται τῇ μαρτυρίᾳ ὁ ἅγιος Εἰρηναῖος ἐν τῷ κατ' Αἱρέσεων πρὸς τοὺς δοκήσει τὸν Χριστὸν πεφηνέναι λέγοντας. Sed in Evangelii Lucæ exemplaribus non correctis habetur quod flevit, eoque testimonio utitur Irenæus contra eos qui Christum specie tantum apparuisse dicebant. ὀρθόδοξοι δὲ ἀφείλοντο τὸ ῥητὸν, φοβηθέντες, καὶ μὴ νοήσαντες αὐτοῦ τὸ τέλος, καὶ τὸ ἰσχυρότατον καὶ γινόμενος ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ ἱδρωσε, καὶ ἐγένετο ὁ ἱδρὼς αὐτοῦ ὡς θρόμβοι αἵματος, καὶ ὤφθη Ἄγγελος ἐνισχύων αὐτόν. Vide Millium proleg. p. 101. col. 2.

SEXTIO QUINTA.

QUINTO, innumeræ è patribus Græcis depromptæ citationes, in quibus à recepta lectione aliquantulum discedunt, ad mutandam receptam lectionem eo minus autoritatis habent, quod iidem alias aliter legunt, et plerumque cum editis conveniunt. Ex. Gr. Clemens Al. Christi verba, Matt. vi. 33. Stro. iv. p. 488. sic recitat, Ζητεῖτε πρῶτον τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, καὶ τὴν δικαιοσύνην, καὶ τὰ περὶ βίον προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν. Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 10. p. 198. sic, Ζητεῖτε τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τὰ τῆς τροφῆς, &c. Cap. 12. p. 207. Ζητεῖτε πρῶτον τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ ταῦτα πάντα, ubi in prima, et tertia citatione habet βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, in secunda, τοῦ Θεοῦ juxta textum, in tertia retinet πάντα ταῦτα, in prima, et secunda mutat in τὰ περὶ βίον, et τὰ τῆς τροφῆς. In secunda deest πρῶτον, in secunda, et tertia δικαιοσύνην, quæ tamen apud primam occurrunt. Hæc ipsa verba Theodoretus decies ad minimum repetit editis congruentia, at comment. in Psal. cii. reperias, καὶ ταῦτα πάντα ἐκ περισσοῦ προστεθήσεται, hinc autem constat, immerito à locis ad hunc modum citatis receptam lectionem solicitari.

Verba Matthæi cap. xi. 27. sic se habent, nemo novit filium nisi pater, οὐδὲ τὸν πατέρα τις ἐπιγινώσκει εἰ μὴ ὁ υἱὸς, quæ verba cum allegaverit Marcion sic, οὐδεὶς ἔγνω, Judice Irenæo, lib. i. cap. 17. p. 88. Et lib. iv. cap. 14. legendum fuit οὐδεὶς γινώσκει, ut lectum est à Justino, Dial. p. 326. (Is tamen in Apol. 2. Ed. Ox. §. 82, 83. legit οὐδεὶς ἔγνω τὸν πατέρα) unde Grabius notis in Iren. p. 300. ait, Mirum autem quod Justinus Apol. 1. p. 122. verba Christi citaverit perinde ac hæretici legerunt; sed decrescet mirandi causa si recordemur hæc ad eundem modum citata esse à Clem. Alex. Protrept. p. 8. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 5. p. 89. et. Stro. i. p. 355. ab Orig. Com. in Joh. p. 264. 416. et contra Cels. lib. ii. p. 104. et lib. vii. p. 361. Eusebius contra Marcel. Ancyr. lib. i. cap. 12. p. 72. habet μηδεὶς ἔγνω τὸν πατέρα, εἰ μὴ ὁ υἱὸς, &c. 15. p. 76. οὐδεὶς οἶδε, et in eadem pagina οὐδεὶς ἐπιγινώσκει. Et cap. 16. p. 77. οὐδεὶς ἔγνω. Et p. 78. οὐδεὶς οἶδε. Sicut etiam Basilius, tom. i. contra Eunom. p. 714, 770. Similiter Epiphanius in Ancorato, p. 16. 25. 71. legit οὐδεὶς οἶδε, sed p. 78. οὐδεὶς ἔγνω. L. de Hæres. p. 466. 532. 613. 766. 891. 943. 977. legit οὐδεὶς οἶδε, sed p. 898. οὐδεὶς ἔγνω. Clemens Al. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 5. p. 88. verba Pauli, Eph. iv. 13. sic refert, μέχρι καταντήσωμεν οἱ πάντες εἰς τὴν ἑνότητα τῆς πίστεως, καὶ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως Θεοῦ, ubi, adnotante Millio, deest τοῦ υἱοῦ. Sed Stro. iv. p. 527. diserte dicit, καὶ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Origenes contra Cels. lib. v. p. 273. legit 1 Tim. iv. 2. κεκαυτηριασμένων τὴν οἰκείαν συνείδησιν, quæ inter variantes lectiones locum occupat. Idem tamen Com. in Matt. p. 357. et 400. legit τὴν ἰδίαν συνείδησιν, juxta textum. lib. i. contra Cels. p. 2. legit Rom. viii. 35. quis nos separabit ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Θεοῦ; sed Com. in Matt. p. 357, 358. ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ut se habet textus. Ibid. p. 40. sic recitat Matt. xxviii. 13. εἴπατε ὅτε οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, ἡμῶν κοιμωμένων νυκτὸς, ἔκλεψαν αὐτόν. Sed Com. in Joh. p. 357. ἐλθόντες νυκτὸς ἔκλεψαν αὐτὸν, ἡμῶν κοιμωμένων. Lib. i. p. 47. Joh. xviii. 36. νυνὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου τούτου ἡ βασιλεία ἡ ἐμὴ, sed Com. in Joh. p. 21. ἐντεῦθεν perinde ac in textu. Lib. ii. p. 56. legit Act. x. 9. ἀνέβη ὁ Πετρὸς εἰς τὸ ὑπερῷον, sed Com. in Jer. p. 177. εἰς τὸ δῶμα ut edit. Ibid. p. 58. legit Gal. iv. 21. λέγετέ μοι οἱ τὸν νόμον ἀναγινώσκοντες, sed Philoc. p. 10. et Com. in Joh. p. 428. οἱ ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον θέλοντες εἶναι ut ibi apostolus: omittit 1 Cor. viii. 6. καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτόν. Lib. viii. contra Cels. sc. ibi p. 381. uncis hæc inclusa sunt, sed reperies illa verba absque uncis, lib. iv. p. 179. Orig. contra Celsum, inquit Millius, legit 2 Thess. ii. 3. ἄνθρωπος ἀνομίας, p. 98. nempe quia sic scriptum est in margine, sed legit ἁμαρτίας, lib. vi. p. 307. et Com. in Matt. p. 347. et in Joh. p. 76. Legit, inquit Millius, οἶδα. lib. vi. p. 307. at hoc factum est ex oscitantia librarii. Legit enim οἴδατε, lib. ii. p. 89. Legit quidem πέμπει p. 307. sed πέμψει p. 90. Legit ἅπαντες p. 307. ubi in margine adnotantur novem variantes lectiones, sed Com. in Joh. p. 76. πάντες. Com. in Joh. p. 135. legit Joh. vi. 50. ζήσει εἰς αἰῶνα. sed Com. in Matt. p. 254. ζήσεται. In eodem versiculo omittit ὃν ἐγὼ δώσω, ex more Patrum, ubi eadem verba bis occurrunt, sed eadem legit bis περὶ εὐχῆς, p. 88. Com. in Joh. p. 164. legit Joh. vi. 55. ἡ σάρξ μου ἐστι ἀληθῶς βρῶσις, τὸ αἷμά μου ἀληθὴς πόσις, sed Com. in Matt. 417. ἀληθῶς utrobique. Com. in Matt. p. 291. legit. ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ, sed p. 294. absque illo additamento. Utque hujusmodi multa intacta præteream, Com. in Matt. p. 324. legit Marc. ix. 36. ἓν τῶν παιδίων, sed intra paucas lineas ἓν τοιούτων παιδίων. Matt. xi. 22. legit ἀνεκτότερον ἔσται ἢ ὑμῖν, Philoc. p. 109. et Com. in Ex. tom. i. p. 25. sed Com. in Matt. p. 327. addit ἐν ἡμέρᾳ τῆς κρίσεως. Com. in Joh. p. 253. legit Joh. i. 33. οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, sed commentario eodem p. 58. 76. 93. 133. οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ βαπτίζων πνεύματι ἁγίῳ juxta textum.

Ad hunc modum sæpissime à scipso differt Epiphanius. V. g. in Hær. Nazar. p. 114. legit Gal. v. 4. οἵτινες ἐν νόμῳ καυχᾶσθε. Cum in Hær. Cerinth. p. 113. legisset δικαιοῦσθε, ut etiam infra Hæres. dimær. p. 1032. Ancor. p. 8. bis legit Joh. v. 31. si ego testimonium perhibeo de meipso, ἡ μαρτυρία οὐδέν ἐστιν, sed Hær. 65. p. 614. οὐκ ἔστιν ἀληθής, pariter ac in textu. Anchor. p. 22. legit 1 Cor. xii. 8. ὁ λόγος διδασκαλίας, et Hær. 69. p. 782. διδασκαλία, sed Ancor. p. 77. legit ὁ λόγος γνώσεως, juxta receptam lectionem. Anchor. p. 67. legit Tit. ii. 11. ἐπεφάνη ἡ χάρις τοῦ κυρίου καὶ σωτήριος διδάσκουσα ἡμᾶς, sed p. 74. legit ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος παιδεύουσα ἡμᾶς, ut textus se habet Ancor. p. 75. legit Rom. ix. 20. σύ τις εἶ ὁ ἀντιλεγόμενος τῷ Θεῷ, alibi vero cum textu ἀνταποκρινόμενος.

Gregorius Nyssenus Hom. vii. in Eccles. p. 444. recitat Joh. xiv. 30. ἐν ἐμοὶ εὑρίσκει τῶν ἰδίων οὐδέν: sed alibi omittit τῶν ἰδίων Hom. i. in Cant. p. 492. Paulo de scipso fatenti quod blasphemus fuit, et persecutor, et contumeliosus, addit, καὶ μέλας, explicans sc. illa verba Cant. i. 5. μέλαινά εἰμι, καὶ καλή, sed eadem omittit Hom. xiii. p. 669. Sic tom. i. p. 856. allegat Rom. viii. 29. πρωτότοκος, ἀνεὺ σπορᾶς, ἐν τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, sed tom. ii. p. 24. et 213. additamentum illud non agnoscit.

Cyril. Alex. addit 1 Cor. viii. 7. καὶ ἓν πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐν ᾧ τὰ πάντα, de Ador. Spir. p. 185. sed crebro etiam cum divinam Sancti Spiritus naturam asserebat, versiculum absque illa clausula allegat, scil. lib. v. par. ii. p. 117. 169. in Isaiam. p. 539. de Recta Fide, p. 47. In libro de ador. p. 26. sic citat 1 Cor. xii. 3. Nemo dicit Jesum anathema nisi in Βεελζεβούβ. Et sic passim alibi, ut in Thesauro suo, p. 346. et lib. de Recta Fide p. 64. legit cum textu οὐδεὶς ἐν πνεύματι Θεοῦ λαλῶν. De Ador. Sp. p. 359. legit 1 Cor. ix. 8. μὴ στρουθίων μέλει τῷ Θεῷ, sed p. 99. 130. 247. habet τῶν βοῶν sicut textus. P. 404. legit Jacob. i. 17. πᾶν δώρημα ἀγαθὸν, καὶ πᾶσα εὐλογία ἄνωθέν ἐστι κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον: sed de Recta Fide, p. 76. Glaph. in Gen. p. 205. Com. in Amoz. p. 315. cum editis congruit. Lib. ix. contra Julianum p. 319. D. Petri verbis Act. x. 14. addit, οὐδὲ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς στόμα μου πᾶν κρέας βέβηλον, sed receptam lectionem exhibet, Com. in Hos. p. 12. In Hab. p. 568. recitat Matt. xiii. 52. similis est ἀνθρώπῳ πλουσίῳ, et sic alibi: sed Glaph. in Exod. p. 292. Com. in Zech. p. 745. 781. ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδεσπότῃ. Com. in Zech. p. 669. legit μέλη ἐκ μέλους, 1 Cor. xii. 21. sed p. 692. ἐκ μέρους. Quæstio Christi ad Divitem, Matt. xix. 17. sic allegatur, Thess. p. 310. τί με ἐρωτᾷς περὶ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ; sed p. 346. τί με λεγεις ἀγαθόν; Glaph. in Gen. p. 8. citat Joh. vii. 39. οὔπω γὰρ ἦν πνεῦμα ἅγιον, ut jam in impressis: sed p. 145. habet οὔπω γὰρ ἦν πνεῦμα, sicut plerique veterum.

SECTIO SEXTA.

OBTINUIT etiam mos iste inter primævos Patres, ut plurimas S. Scripturæ portiunculas, diversis temporibus, diversis de causis, et à diversis evangelistis memoratas, tanquam à Christo simul prolatas congererent, idque iis sub verbis quæ ῥητῶς nullibi apud N. Test. occurrunt. V. g.

Clemens Rom. Ep. 1. ad Cor. §. 48. hæc habet, 'recordamini verborum Jesu Domini nostri, εἶπε γὰρ οὐαὶ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκείνῳ, καλὸν ἦν αὐτῷ εἰ μὴ ἐγεννήθη, ἢ ἕνα τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι, κρεῖττον ἦν αὐτῷ περιτεθῆναι μύλον, καὶ καταποντισθῆναι εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, ἢ ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι,' ubi, teste Cotelerio, notis in Ep. Clem. p. 98. multa testimonia in unum conjungit, nempe Matt. xxvi. 24. Luc. xvii. 2. Matt. xviii. 6. quod antiquis non insolens fuit. Si quis autem inspiceret locos à Cotelerio citatos, inter Clementem R. et Evangelistas permultum interesse discriminis comperiet. Præterea hæc ipsa verba à Clemente Al. citantur, Stro. iii. p. 472. parvo admodum facto discrimine, nempe, pro ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι, legit ἕνα τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν μου διαστρέψαι. In Dialogo contra Marcion. §. 1. p. 25. sic legimus, Christus ipse in Judam sententiam tulit, dicens, οὐαὶ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ δι' οὗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοται· συμφέρει αὐτῷ εἰ μὴ ἐγεννήθη, ἢ γεννηθέντα μύλῳ ὀνικῷ προστεθῆναι, καὶ καταποντισθῆναι ἐν τῷ βάθει τῆς θαλάσσης.

In eadem Epistola §. 13. 'memores sitis,' inquit Clemens R. 'sermonum Domini Jesu—οὕτως γὰρ εἶπεν, Ἐλεεῖτε ἵνα ἐλεεθῆτε, ἀφίετε ἵνα ἀφεθῇ ὑμῖν, ὡς ποιεῖτε οὕτω ποιηθήσεται ὑμῖν, ὡς δίδοτε οὕτω δοθήσεται ὑμῖν, ὡς κρίνετε οὕτω κριθήσεται ὑμῖν, ὡς χρηστεύεσθε οὕτως χρηστευθήσεται ὑμῖν,' ubi margini inscribit Cotelerius, Luc. vi. 36. Sed sicut ibi, ὡς, et οὕτως non extant, ita per totum illud caput nihil extat quod quibusdam ex his similitudinibus apte respondeat. Hanc tamen sententiam paululum immutatam reperias in Polycarpi Ep. ad Philip. §. 2da, et in Clemente Al. Stro. ii. p. 399. mutato tantum ἐλεεῖτε in ἐλεᾶτε. Idem Clemens Al. Stro. i. p. 295. tres scripturæ locos in unum confundit, ἵνα μὴ πεποιθότες ὦμεν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκροὺς, ὁ ἀπόστολός φησιν, ὃς ἐκ τηλικούτου θανάτου ἐρρύσατο ἡμᾶς (2 Cor. i. 9, 10.) ἵνα ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν μὴ ᾖ ἐν σοφίᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει τοῦ Θεοῦ (1 Cor. ii. 5.) ὁ γὰρ πνευματικὸς ἀνακρίνει πάντα, &c. (v. 15.)

Origenes in Matthæum, p. 357. 359. et in Joh. p. 402. Judæos dicit εἰρηκέναι ἐπ' αὐτῷ de Christo dixisse, αἶρε ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς τοιοῦτον, σταυροῦ, σταυροῦ αὐτὸν, de quibus confer Act. xxii. 22. cum Luc. xxiii. 18. et Joh. xix. 15. In Philoc. p. 2. citat è Matt. vii. 22. hæc, πολλοὶ ἐροῦσί μοι—οὐ τῷ ὀνόματί σου ἐφάγομεν, καὶ τῷ ὀνόματί σου ἐπίομεν, καὶ τῷ ὀνόματί σου δαιμόνια ἐξεβάλομεν; καὶ ἐρῶ αὐτοῖς, Ἀποχωρεῖτε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ οἱ ἐργαζόμενοι τὴν ἀνομίαν. Lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 88. addit post ἐξεβάλομεν καὶ δυνάμεις πολλὰς ἐποιήσαμεν, καὶ ἐρῶ αὐτοῖς ὅτε ἐστὲ ἐργάται ἀδικίας. Com. in Joh. p. 293. iisdem verbis adjicit, οὐδέποτε ἔγνων ὑμᾶς, καὶ τὸ οὐκ οἶδα πόθεν ἐστὲ, conjunctis sic Matt. vii. 22, 23. cum Luc. xii. 26. 37. quoad sensum, non quoad verba. Tom. i. p. 38. sic recitat Luc. xi. 52. 'Væ vobis jurisperitis ὅτι ἤρατε τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς γνώσεως, αὐτοὶ οὐκ εἰσήλθετε καὶ τοὺς εἰσερχομένους οὐκ ἀφίετε εἰσελθεῖν,' periodum claudens cum verbis Christi, Matt. xxiii. 13. sed Philoc. p. 8. editis congruit——Sic Com. in Joh. p. 30. Christum allegat dicentem, Joh. xv. 15. οὐκέτι ὑμᾶς λέγω δούλους, ὅτι ὁ δοῦλος οὐκ οἶδε τι τὸ θέλημα τοῦ κυρίου αὐτοῦ (text. τί ποιεῖ ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ) ἀλλ' ἐγὼ ὑμᾶς φίλους λέγω (text. ὑμᾶς δὲ εἴρηκα φίλους) ὅτι διαμεμενήκατε μετ' ἐμοῦ ἐν πᾶσι πειρασμοῖς μου, quæ occurrunt Luc. xxii. 21. absque πᾶσι. Ita Com. in Joh. p. 413. conjungit Colos. i. 20. ii. 15.

Cyrillus Alex. sic recitat, 1 Pet. ii. 5. καὶ ὑμεῖς ὡς λίθοι ζῶντες, ἐποικοδομεῖσθε οἶκος πνευματικὸς, addens ex Eph. ii. 21, 22. εἰς ναὸν ἅγιον, εἰς οἰκητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν πνεύματι. In lib. primo de Sancta Trin. ait, 'Cum Christus in forma Dei esset, formam servi accepit, ἵνα ἀποκαταλλάξῃ τὰ πάντα κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον, εἰρηνοποιήσας διὰ τοῦ σταύρου, τὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, τά τε ἐπὶ γῆς, μεσιτεύων καὶ ἀνθρώποις, δεόμεθα γοῦν ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, καταλλάγητε τῷ Θεῷ,' ubi coacervantur Phil. ii. 6, 7. Colos. i. 20. 1 Tim. ii. 5. 2 Cor. v. 10. Quod si hoc pro prudentia sua diligentius animadvertisset Millius, non ita præter modum crevissent variantes istæ lectiones, quarum trecentæ non aliud sunt quam voces sacræ Scripturæ ab uno evangelista, aut apostolo in alterum à patribus translatæ.

Denique plurima quæ à Patribus primorum sæculorum tanquam è S. Scripturâ recitantur, desumpta reperias aut ex adulterinis Evangeliis, aut ex Apocryphis: ita de Clemente R. qui post apostolos primus aliquid literis mandavit, ingenue fatetur Millius Proleg. p. 16. col. 2. quod in Epistola prima ad Corinthios, et posterioris, si quidem ejus sit, fragmento, nonnulla adducit ex evangeliis, quæ jam ante nostram editionem Christianis in usu fuerant, nonnulla et è nostris, ut apparet, sed omnino mixtim, et confuse, ita ut vix, ac ne vix quidem, nôris ex verbis ejus ad quodnam è nostris potissimum respexerit. Paucis exemplis satis hoc confirmare possumus. V. g.

Clemens R. Ep. 2. §. 4. Christi verba, Matt. vii. 21. ad hunc modum recitat. 'Non omnis qui dicit mihi, Domine, σωθήσεται, ἀλλὰ ὁ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην.' Nam εἶπεν ὁ Θεὸς (v. 23. aut Luc. xiii. 17.) ἐὰν ἦτε μετ' ἐμοῦ συνηγμένοι ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ μου, καὶ μὴ ποιεῖτε τὰς ἐντολάς μου, ἀποβαλῶ ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἐρῶ ὑμῖν, ἀπάγετε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, καὶ τὰ καθ' ἑξῆς. Sect. quinta, miram quandam Petri responsionem narrat ad Christi verba: 'Ecce ego mitto vos, sicut oves in medio luporum. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πέτρος αὐτῷ λέγει, ἐὰν οὖν διασπαράξωσι οἱ λύκοι τὰ ἀρνία, quid si lupi agnos discerpserint? εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τῷ Πέτρῳ, μὴ φοβείσθωσαν τὰ ἀρνία τοὺς λύκους μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν αὐτά, καὶ ὑμεῖς μὴ φοβεῖσθε τοὺς ἀποκτείνοντας ὑμᾶς, καὶ μηδὲν ὑμῖν δυναμένους ποιεῖν,' καὶ τὰ λοιπά, Luc. xii. 4, 5. Hæc, ait Cotelerius, deprompsit ex Apocryphis. §. 8. hæc habet, λέγει γὰρ ὁ Κύριος ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, εἰ τὸ μικρὸν οὐκ ἐτηρήσατε, τὸ μέγα τις ὑμῖν δώσει. Irenæus pariter, lib. ii. cap. 64. p. 193. Similiter Dominus dixit ingratis in eum existentibus, 'si in modico fideles non fuistis, quod magnum est quis dabit vobis?' ubi vide Grabii conjecturam hæc ex evangelio ad Ægyptios deprompta esse. Sectione duodecima, interrogatus à quodam Dominus quando venturum esset regnum ejus, εἶπεν, ὅταν ἔσται τὰ δύο ἕν, καὶ τὸ ἔξω ὡς τὸ ἔσω τὸ ἄρσεν μετὰ τῆς θηλείας, οὔτε ἄρσεν, οὔτε θῆλυ. Quod desumptum fuit ex Apocryphis, juxta Cotelerium, juxta Clementem Al. Stro. iii. p. 465. ex evangelio Ægyptiorum.

Ignatius in epistola ad ecclesiam Smyrnensem Christum introducit, qui Petrum, cæterosque qui præsto erant, sic alloquitur, λάβετε, ψηλαφήσατε, καὶ ἴδετε ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον, Luc. xxiv. 39. quod juxta Hieronymum desumitur ex evangelio Nazarenorum,— juxta Cotelerium ex Apocryphis, juxta Origenem dictum fuit à nullo qui Spiritu Dei inspiratus fuit. Et tamen locum obtinuit. Luc. xxiv. 39. inter variantes lectiones apud Millium.

In codices Origenianos admissas fuisse ῥήσεις aliquas ex evangelio secundum Hebræos, aliove aliquo Apocrypho, ostendit ipse Millius Proleg. p. 66. Plura hujusmodi reperiat lector in epist. Barnabæ, §. 7. in Just. M. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 267. in Iren. lib. v. cap. 33. p. 454, 455. in Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 308. sed lectorem non tenebo pluribus. Ponam tandem judicium Millii de epistola Clementis R. aliorumque ejusque temporis scriptorum, Proleg. p. 16. col. 2. his verbis editum. "De qua, ut et aliis opusculis, sub hoc tempus conscriptis, notandum quod ex evangeliis, et epistolis nullam unquam pericopen citant accurate, et ad fidem exemplarium, et cum ad evangelii cujusvis, aut epistolæ clausulam aliquam respiciant, neque libri, ubi extet, neque scriptoris nomen proferunt, et quidem loci ipsius diserta verba raro admodum proponunt, sed sensum fere, ac sententiam ex memoria tradunt, quin et ab Apocryphorum testimoniis haud abstineant, sed ea promiscue cum apostolicis ipsis θεοπνεύστοις, pro re nata, citent, allegentque."

CAPUT SECUNDUM.

§. 1. Monstrat lectionem variantem non posse certo colligi ex codice Latino, aut versione Latina Græci scriptoris, aut demum è loco à Latinis patribus citato. Primo, quoniam quomodocunque se habeat textus Archetypus, mos est interpretum ut ad Vulgati versionem verba accommodent. §. 2. Secundo, quod parum idonei in hac re sint arbitri patres Latini, nec feliciter de Græcis criticen exerceant. §. 3. Tertio, ex Millii ipsius de patribus Latinis sententia idem colligitur.

CAPITIS SECUNDI SECTIO PRIMA.

UT varians lectio nascatur è codice Latino, aut ex versione Græci alicujus patris, aut ex citatione à Latino patre desumpta, quæ Græco exemplari non congruit, mihi quidem valde importunum, et iniquum, videtur. Hoc enim, ut cum Hierouymo loquar, nihil aliud est quam cœnosos rivulos adire, ut fons purgetur. Hinc tamen ortum suum debet fere dimidia pars earum variarum lectionum quæ in epistolas adnotantur, ubi Latinus interpres Irenæi, Origenis in Romanos, Didymi de Spiritu Sancto, Tertullianus, Cyprianus, Ambrosius, Hilarius Diac. Hilarius Pictav. Augustinus, Pseudo-Hieronymus, sive Pelagius, magnam voluminis partem implent, quod quam absurdum sit, ex his rationibus colligere possis.

Primo quod quomodocunque se habeat Archetypus, mos est interpretum ut ad vulgati Latini arbitrium, et quasi nutum totos se fingant, et accommodent. Ex. gr. Origenis Com. in Joh. p. 115. legit ἀξίους καρποὺς τῆς μετανοίας, interpretes è Vulg. fructum dignum.— P. 339. legit Joh. vii. 39. οὔπω γὰρ ἦν πνεῦμα, Lat. nondum erat Spiritus datus ut Vulg.—In commentario in Rom. Ruffinus in textu fingendo veterem vulgatam secutus est, fatente Millio, ubi verus Origenes eidem contradicit. Cyrillus Hieros. cat. xii. p. 119. et 17. p. 195. legit τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον, sed Latina vulgati vestigia sequuntur, 'quod nascetur ex te Sanctum.' Gregor. Nyssenus tom. ii. Ed. Paris. 1615. p. 734. legit Rom. i. 32. οἵτινες τὸ δικαίωμα Θεοῦ ἐπιγνόντες, absque οὐκ ἐνόησαν, interpres autem 'qui cum justitiam Dei cognovissent, non intellexerunt.' Ita Chrysostomus Hom. 12. ad Pop. Antioch. Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 145. οὐκ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι, Lat. cum Vulg. 'non solum qui ea faciant, sed etiam qui consentiunt,' &c. Quater habet Chrysost. ποτήριον ψυχροῦ, Matt. x. 42. toties Lat. 'aquæ frigidæ.' Sanctus Basilius tom. i. lib. v. contra Eunom. p. 376. et Cyril. Al. de Recta Fide, p. 66. de ador. sp. 494. Hom. Pasc. p. 246. 311. 334. legunt τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, 2 Cor. v. 10. Lat. semper 'propria corporis.' Cyril. Al. legit οὔπω γὰρ ἦν πνεῦμα ἅγιον, Lat. 'Spiritus datus.' Luc. ii. 15. legit ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία, Hom. in Div. p. 380. Lat. 'hominibus bonæ voluntatis.' Luc. i. 35. τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον. Hom. in Divers. p. 383. de Recta Fide, p. 88. Lat. 'quod ex te nascetur sanctum.' Matt. vii. 13. στενὴ δὲ ἡ πύλη, H. Pasch. p. 150. Lat. 'quam augusta porta.' 1 Joh. iv. 3. πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ, Lat. 'qui solvit Jesum.' 1 Tim. iii. 16. ὃ Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκὶ, de Recta Fide, p. 124. Lat. 'quod manifestatum est in carne. Nimirum omnibus his locis vulgati plus valebat autoritas quam ipsorum patrum; sed cum hoc sexcenties apud latinos interpretes evenerit, speciatim in commentariis Origenis et Theodoreti, commemoratio plurium testimoniorum supervacanea est.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

HOC etiam luce clarius fiet, si modo quam parum idonei in hac re arbitri, et quam infeliciter de Græcis criticen exercuerint Latini, lector mecum recognoscat. Cum in Græcis exemplaribus suum tulisset judicium Hilarius Diac. ait Millius, ita cæcus de coloribus. Nihil de codicibus Græcis novit Ambrosiaster, Prol. p. 139. col. 2. nec iniquum de eo tulit judicium. Is enim Com. in Rom. xiv. veram lectionem esse ait in eos qui peccaverunt absque negationis particula, scilicet, ex fide cod. Latinorum quos incorruptos simplicitas temporum servavit. Atqui etiam illi fluxerunt ex veteribus codicibus Græcis. Quod si Millium audiamus, codices Græci hodieque omnes, tempore Augustini omnes, aut pene omnes, etiam Irenæus, si interpreti ejus credimus, legebant, cum negatione, quod idem de præstantioribus Latinis dicendum, Prol. p. 75. col. 1. De vero Ambrosio dicit Millius, Prol. p. 78. col. 2. Eum pium magis quam doctum fuisse, cum enim Marc. xiii. 32. sic legimus, De die autem illo aut hora nemo scit, neque angeli in cœlo, οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός. Ambrosius de fide, lib. 5. cap. 8. hæc habet, "Codices Græci non habent 'quod nec filius scit.'" Certe nulli sunt, inquit ibidem Millius, nec opinor unquam fuerunt libri Græci à quibus obesset οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός. Idem lib. iii. de Spiritu Sancto, cap. 11. clausulam hanc, Joh. iii. 6. sic exhibet, 'quod natum est de Spiritu, Spiritus est, quia Deus Spiritus est;' ubi queritur hæc verba, eo quod Spiritus Sancti divinitatem abstruere videantur, ab Arianis sublata esse, et tamen, judice Millio, Prol. p. 79. col. 1. Haud alia erat hæc particula quæ erasa videbatur, quam lectoris cujuspiam scholion. Vide exempla plura à Millio congesta, Prol. p. 78. col. 2. 79. col. 1. Denique dicente Augustino, Retract. lib. i. cap. 19. Codices Græci Matt. v. 22. non habent sine causa, Hieronymo in locum his verbis adstipulante, in quibusdam codicibus additus sine causa, cæterum in veris tollitur, hoc tamen non obstante, P. Simonius vere dicit, Obtinuisse hanc lectionem quæ εἰκῇ exhibet non modo apud Syrum, sed etiam apud patres antiquissimos, tam Græcos quam Latinos ; est ergo, inquit, in vulgato restituendum, qui in eo omittendo antiquitati repugnat, multisque exemplaribus, Hist. Crit. in N. Test. lib. ii. cap. 32. Plura his addere facillimum esset, sed compendio rem agere consultius visum est, instantias enim passim dabunt tum Millii prolegomena, tum lectiones variantes.

SECTIO TERTIA.

TERTIO, ita Latinorum plerosque patrum depingit Millius, ut, se judice, citationes ex iis desumptæ exiguam mereantur fidem.

Agmen ducit Tertullianus, de quo ecce sanum et subtile judicium Millii : in eo citata sunt loca S. Codicis fere neglectius ex memoria contractim, ad sensum, haud sine levicula aliqua subinde mutatione, ipsisque porro allegatis ab eo testimoniis immista sunt nonnunquam aliqua à stylo vulgati interpretis * diversa, Africanæ φράσεως, et vocabula mire barbara. Immo penes se habebat Italicæ exemplar haud parum maculatum, certe si quid de cæteris ejus partibus conjectare liceat ex evangelii Lucæ codice quo usus est in libro quarto contra Marcionem. Denique, alia, inquit, loca sumpta videntur ex variis versionibus quæ tempestate ista ferebantur. Nempe præter Italicam, innumeras alias primis sæculis (de suo tantum sæculo dictum fuisset) extitisse notat Augustinus, et tamen non tantum de varia lectione Tertullianum, velut testem idoneum, producit ; sed etiam in prolegomenis sæpius lectionis quæ apud vulgatum prius obtinebat. Ita p. 105. col. 2. Vulg. ut apparet ex Tertulliano, miror hic quo critico naso tam accurate discernere potuerit inter tot varias versiones quid à vulgato prodierit, aut cur tam fidenter pronuntiârit virum Græce doctissimum, loca à se citata ex Latinis versionibus produxisse ; Pamelio etiam contradicente eum non tam Latinis translatis, quam Græcis codicibus veteribus usum esse.

De Cypriano hæc dicit Millius, ‘ nempe ex citatis ab ipso N. Test. pericopis abunde constat Italicam (hanc enim unam in usu ei fuisse ex allatis ab ipso N. Test. pericopis manifestum est) temporis tractu magis magisque fuisse interpolatam.’ Veruntamen vitiatis hujusmodi lectionibus non parvo numero præmissis, p. 67. col. 1, 2. hæc habet, ‘ Restant lectiones quædam quas ex Africanis aliisque quibusdam profectas probabile est.’ Tria hic notanda veniunt. Primo criticorum divortium. Quod enim hic Millio de Italica manifestum est, Simonius manifesto falsum pronuntiat in locis infra adducendis. Secundo, Millium sibimetipsi contradicere, dum ait unam, i. e. solam, Italicam Cypriano in usu fuisse, et tamen eundem ex Africanis aliisque quibusdam versionibus quædam protulisse. Denique ex codice hoc Cypriani tractu temporis magis magisque interpolato, non tantum varias lectiones plus centies exhibet, sed vulgatæ lectionis Italicæ argumentum non semel.

De Hilario Pictavorum Episcopo mentionem faciens, Prol. p. 72. nihil ex eo profert nisi lectiones interpolatas, quasi nec unam genuinam habuisset, h. e. cum versione Italica sua consentientem. Lucifer Calaritanus, judice Millio, vitiis misere scatet, nec S. Codicis loca integra producit, Prol. p. 73. col. 2. Testimonia nimirum protulit ad MSS. exemplar unum, idque perperam descriptum adornata, unde lectionum ejus interpolatarum catalogum tantum exhibet. Victorinum Afrum, et Zenonem Veronensem Latina secutos esse nonnullis in locis interpolata pronuntiat : locum unicum in quo additamentum, Joh. 6^to^ Com. 56^to^ occurrit, genuinum pronuntiat, refragante Simonio, Græcis scholiis, et versionibus universis. Optati citationes fere omnes interpolatas fuisse asserit, p. 74. col. 1, 2.

Hilarium Diac. quod attinet, is certe, inquit Millius, cum scripta sua testimoniis S. Codicis passim tessellaverit, tum in commentariis in epistolas D. Pauli ex Italicæ versionis textu, qualis tum temporis ferebatur, exhibuit, Prol. p. 74. col. 2. Quanquam ergo interpolatas ex eo lectiones ibi produxerit, sexcenties tamen Ambrosiastrum hunc pro veræ lectionis teste idoneo profert, ejusque textum seu genuinæ lectionis Italicæ certissimum argumentum exhibet. Quam falso, et in causæ suæ præjudicium, ex lectionum ejus appendice quam infra dabimus, judicabit lector.

Porro id ex Millio discimus patres Latinos fere omnes post ortam Arii hæresin, id sempe Arianis objecisse quod Scripturas S. corrumpere, pericopas ex iis eradere, mutilare solerent, adeo ut eadem nobiscum hæreticos habere biblia vix agnoscerent. Objiciunt hæc illis Hilarius Pict. Hilarius Diaconus, Ambrosius, Salvianus ; quæ omnia, Millio judice, frustra, et sine causa hæreticis objiciebantur, cum rari essent qui Scripturis temerarias manus intulere. Vide loca omnia in quibus hoc factum esse clamitant, à Millio bene vindicata, Prol. p. 78. col. 2. 79. col. 1. Qui autem de Græcis codicibus tum falso, et imperite judicabant, qui de Latinis ea sublata esse existimabant quæ alii ex ipsis S. Codici adjiciebant, eorum de lectione genuina judicium non magni æstimandum esse æquus lector censebit.

Sed de his plura dicere eo minus necessarium videtur, quod sæpius videamus Millium integrum patrum Latinorum consensum rejicientem. E. gr. Gal. iv. 14. pro πειρασμόν μου, ὑμῶν, inquit, legunt Vulg. Clar. Lat. Ger. Lat. Hieron. Hilarius D. Latini omnes, teste Esthio, quod sane sensum parit duriusculum ac coactum nimis quam ut probem. 1 Pet. i. 12. sic legimus, εἰς ἃ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν οἱ Ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι, in quem, inquit Millius, legunt Vulg. et ita fere Latini codices, reclamantibus Græcis ad unum omnibus, et quidem Irenæus, cujus Latinæ licet versioni Vulgatæ congruant, lib. ii. cap. 24. lib. v. cap. 36. advertenti tamen seriem contextus manifestum est Irenæi Græca fuisse, εἰς ἃ, quomodo quoque se habent Latina ejus. lib. iv. cap. 67. Plura ejusdem generis occurrunt à nobis observata annotatis in varias lectiones Millii.

CAPUT TERTIUM.

§. 1. Ostendit ex codicibus MSS. ecclesiæ occidentalis non posse certo colligi, textum hodiernum corrigendum esse, primò ex P. Simonii testimonio, ex librariorum ignorantia ; et ex erroribus quibus abundabant ipsa exemplaria. §. 2. Secundò, ex Millii ipsius sententia.

CAPITIS TERTII SECTIO PRIMA.

QUANQUAM ultra mille variantium lectionum ex unico MS. vel binis fortasse, aut tribus depromat Millius (atque illam lectionem genuinam esse asserit quam duo aut tres agnoscunt codices, reclamantibus reliquis omnibus), non tamen hinc sequitur quod ad eorum normam textus corrigendus sit. In promptu ratio est, si enim quæ variant exemplaria sint pauca, certo certius est majorem partem eorum cum editis congruisse.

Hoc etiam magis constabit ex animadversionibus quibus in codices quosdam MSS. usus est Simonius, vir sat acris in his rebus judicii, si Millium audimus ; nam in criticâ N. Test. historia parte secunda cap. 30—32. in codices quosdam MSS. censoria animadversione utitur ad hunc modum. Primo, “ Quod, teste Hieronymo, magnus in codicibus (hisce) error inolevit, dum quod in eadem re alius evangelista plus dicit, in alio quia minus putaverint, addiderunt, vel dum eundem sensum alius aliter expressit, ille qui unum è quatuor primum legerit, ad ejus exemplum cæteros quoque existimaret emendandos ; unde accidit ut apud nos mixta sint omnia, et quæ singulis propria sunt, in aliis inveniantur.”

Secundo, “ Quod Græci librarii ut evangeliorum, atque epistolarum voces magis perspicuas redderent, unum evangelium ex alio planum fecerint, et quia multa obscura videbantur, aut ambigua, verbis clarioribus explicarunt, et pro more suo, apostolorum scripta ad puritatem Græci sermonis revocare studuerint, atque hanc veris-simam esse causam summo judicio asserit, quamobrem codex Cantabr. plures suppeditat variantes lectiones quam reliqui omnes in unum collecti. Quicunque enim in Bezæ exemplar oculis castis inspexerit, haud illum præteribit quod scriba textum, propter elegantiam Græcæ linguæ, sæpissime correxerit, et nova, quæ synonyma visa sunt interserit verba, ut res involutæ apertiores fierint, et faciles explicatus haberent. Hanc sibi, tum temporis, licentiam N. T. aperiendi causa, sumpserunt scribæ, de vocabulis utrum archetypum fideliter exhiberent parum solliciti, modo à sensu eorum non deflexerint."

* Prol. p. 59. col. 1, 2.

Tertio, " Qui hos codices, inquit Simonius, ad examen revocarunt, non aliud sibi statuerunt quam ut clariora fierent omnia, adeoque à genuina evangelistarum, atque apostolorum lectione multum aberrarunt paraphrasin adhibendo, intricatiora subducendo, recidendis superfluis, plurimisque inter se, claritatis gratia, transpositis, atque hoc semel monere satis est, absque longa enumeratione exemplorum, quorum amplam sylvam codex Cant. subministrat, speciatim in Actis Apostolorum, nam in Ecclesiastica primi seculi historia emendanda plurimum sibi indulserunt librarii." Hæc Simonius, qui tamen consolandi nos, ut ita dicam, causa, hæc subjicit, " quamcunque mutationem passi sint hi Codices, et licet apostolorum, et evangelistarum verba non retineant, discrepantiam tamen in sensu diligentissimus lector reperiet nullam." Hæ Simonii observationes planum faciunt quod parvam illi codices mereantur fidem, nec ad eorum fidem receptam lectionem emendandam esse. Simonium laudibus suis in cœlum sustulit Millius, Prol. p. 166. col. 1. ' Vir erat, inquit, in hac rei biblicæ parte singularis plane eruditionis, acerrimique, si quis unquam, judicii.' Quod si judicio illius libenter obsecutus esset, variantes è Cant. Ger. et Clar. lectiones, parcius deprompsisset, nec volumen suum, absque causa, in immensam magnitudinem excrevisse passus fuisset.

Autoritati enim horum codicum multum detrahitur ex eo quod exemplaria Græca transcripta sint ab hominibus Latinæ ecclesiæ, qui nec ipsi exemplaria optima nacti sunt, nec Græcam linguam optime callucrunt, sed eo consilio in hoc munere fungendo versati sunt, ut Græci vulgati erroribus magis faverent, et patrocinarentur. " Quod scribæ fuerint Latini, inquit Simonius, constat quia utraque lingua non modo eundem scriptorem agnoscit, sed etiam quædam è Latinis literis sunt puræ putæ Græcæ, et quædam è Græcis pariter Latinæ, verius dixisset Gothicæ; ad summam, errata pœne innumera, quæ in Græco codice occurrunt, satis sunt argumenti exaratum eum fuisse ab homine istius linguæ prorsus imperito. Nec enim in orthographia sola, sed etiam in vocabulis ipsis sæpissime peccatur." Idem Simonius, p. 147. sic pergit, " Tot menda in Græca parte codicis Clar. ubique reperies, ut exscriptum fuisse ab homine indocto quis non plane sentiat?" Et cap. 32. p. 156. " in nostris bibliothecis, inquit ille, exemplaria quamplurima Græca extant, quæ, ut è Græcis exarata ita apud illos communi quodam in usu erant, atque hæc quidem inter se discrepant in rebus parvi momenti, sed mire conveniunt in eo quod longissime distant ab iis codicibus quos Latini exscripserunt." P. 157. hæc verba habet notatu dignissima, " Mihi quidem dubitationis nihil est quin Cardinalis. Ximenius Complutensem editionem paraturus, quamplurimos codices eximiæ vetustatis, et spectatæ fidei corrogaverit: suspectam tamen habeo illam aliquando reliquis antelatam esse lectionem, quæ vulgato cum interprete maxime concordat. Fieri etiam potest, inquit, ut Stephani editio, quam cum Græcis MSS. in Italia contulit, non paucas in se receperit lectiones ad vulgatæ versionis normam expressas. Idem dicendum est de variis lectionibus sedecim MSS. codicum quas Marchio Velesius collegit, et quæ editioni nostræ vulgatæ mirifice favent." Hæc quidem adversante et renitente animo confitetur ipse Millius. V. g. Matt. xvii. 2. legimus λευκὰ ὡς φῶς, sed Steph. B. Cant. Vulg. ὡς χιών. E. Marco, quibus hæc sequuntur, de varietate hac aliud dicere nequeo, inquit Lucas Brugensis, quam quod Stephanus B. Latinæ editioni sæpe consonet, et aliquando potius erroribus ejus editionis inolitis, quam Germanæ lectioni. Quod idem omnino dicendum videtur de Cant. Ita Millius. Sic 1 Pet. ii. 6. Textus habet, ἐν τῇ γραφῇ, MSS. aliqui ἡ γραφὴ, ubi annotatio, vereor ne locus studio sit efformatus, ut in aliis quibusdam factum, ad versionem Latinam, inquit, Esthius. Ita 1 Pet. iii. 19. post ἐν φυλακῇ addit Steph. κατακλεισμένοις, ' ad exemplar fidei non magnæ, quod existimetur ad codices Latinos esse efformatum,' inquit Esthius. Vide similes annotationes in Marc. vi. 32. ix. 21. xv. 8. et passim.

Hinc liquet causam nullam esse quare recepta lectio emendetur ad exemplar eorum codicum, quos (primo) Hieronymus adeo contempsit, ut teste Simonio, necesse sibi habuerit Latinam ipsam versionem, ad codices, ex oriente petitos, exigere, et reformare. (Secundo) Codicum qui exarati fuerunt à Librariis Græcæ linguæ miserum in modum ignaris, quique plurima menda non modo in orthographia, sed in ipsis dictionibus contraxerant. (Tertio) Codicum qui licet inter se conveniant, à Græcæ ecclesiæ codicibus ita sunt diversi, ut vix speciem eorum gerant. (Quarto) Codicum qui dedita opera immutati fuerunt ut ad Latinam versionem efformarentur. (Quinto) Codicum qui vitia retinent, quibus Italica versio scatebat ante castigationem Hieronymi, ut, inquam, editi nostri ad horum codicum regulam, ac normam corrigerentur, nemo sanæ mentis unquam judicabit.

Hæc quidem, et præsertim quæ de Cant. Ger. et Clar. MSS. dicta sunt Dupinio mecum conveniunt, nam observationibus suis, in quibus Simonium potissimum consecutus est, absolutis, hæc infert, " Et eis observationibus conjectura non levi ducor ad suspicandum Græcum textum horum codicum à librario ad vulgatam versionem, quam simul exaravit, accommodatum, vel saltem ex alio exemplari ad hunc modum efformato desumptum fuisse; quo dato et concesso, varietas istorum codicum, ait ille, neutiquam censenda est tanquam tot variantes lectiones Græci exemplaris, sed solummodo tanquam castigatio, seu potius depravatio facta ex ista versione, quæ archetypum parum fideliter repræsentabat." Hist. de Canone Vet. et N. Test. vol. 2. p. 106. De antiqua Latinorum versione, qua occidentales ecclesiæ utebantur, et ad quam hi codices Græci, Simonio judice, confirmabantur, vide dissertationem nostram de vulgato interprete, et Italica translatione, capite subsequenti.

Coronidis loco notatu non indignum est quod cum MSS. Codices, quos contulit Millius, sint fere nonaginta, quandocunque viginti, vel triginta ad summum varianti cuidam lectioni favent, sequitur vel curam et diligentiam in Millio desiderari, vel plures saltem codices congruere cum editis, quam ab illis discrepare.

Veniam mihi dabit candidus lector, quod ab aliis hic testimonia, et rerum confirmationem sumpserim, cum enim codices ipsos MSS. evolvendi neutiquam mihi facultas data sit, id feci quod potui.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

HOC etiam fiet multo evidentius ex confessionibus Millii, et ex exemplis quæ ab illo mutuari possumus. V. g. Matt. iii. 11. deest καὶ πυρὶ 25. MSS.: sed, ut recte idem Millius asserit, de recepta lectione minime dubitandum est. Matt. iv. 10. ὀπίσω μου retinetur apud MSS. 36. juxta tamen ibi annotata, MSS. plurimi non agnoscunt, aliunde assutum videtur, à scriptore memore, scioloque. Matt. v. 47. apud amplius quam triginta cod. MSS. φίλους occurrit, cui tamen ille lectionem in textu ἀδελφοὺς, merito anteponit. Matt. xxvii. 42. καὶ πιστεύσομεν αὐτῷ, MSS. fere quinquaginta habent ἐπὶ vel εἰς: illo tamen judice, præfixum fuit ἐπὶ vel εἰς ex loco male intellecto. Marc. vi. 6. Textus habet ὅτι, quod et sensus videtur postulare: at omittunt illud plus quam viginti cod. et septem habent ἵνα: sed ὅτι, rectius inquit Grotius, cui Millius astipulari videtur, ut ut, pro more suo, sibimetipsi contradicat, Prol. p. 115. 131. Luc. iii. 2. Ἀρχιερέως agnoscunt triginta MSS. sed ex illius sententia Ἀρχιερέων recte. Lucas enim etiam annum, utpote semel functum pontificatu, congrue satis vocat Ἀρχιερέα. Luc. vi. 26. 28. Omittunt πάντες circiter viginti MSS.; sed omnino legendum arbitror, inquit ibi Millius, ut ut à sententia sua in prolegomenis temere recesserit: Proleg. p. 126. col. 2.

Præterea tanquam prætor de tribunali sæpius pronunciat hoc vel illud vocabulum, commentarium, irreptitium, adjectitium esse, quod, eodem fatente, in plerisque omnibus jam codicibus aut extat, aut occurrit: Prol. p. 133. col. 2. 156. col. 1. 163. col. 2. 165. col. 2. Crebro etiam ait 'vix ac ne vix obstat codicum omnium consensus,' p. 163. col. 2. bis, et 'absque codicum omnium consensu,' p. 154. col. 2. 155. col. 2. Quinetiam de Italicis genuinis lectionibus, quæ ex ipsius cerebro irrepserunt, et quibus Græcis Latinæ istæ responderint, acturus, ad hunc modum præfatur. Græca vero hæc cum ob oculos positurum me dico, 'partem illam hic duntaxat intelligo, quæ à MSS. nostris fere omnibus, et excusis discrepat.' Ut vero se hominem ostenderet, hanc aut illam germanam et veram lectionem esse ibi affirmat ex autoritate unius, aut duorum, aut trium exemplarium, et aliquando ex plurimorum MSS. codicum fide: Proleg. à p. 41. ad. p. 50.

CAPITIS QUARTI SYLLABUS.

§. 1. Versionum fere omnium in una lectione consensus non est, vel Millio judice, lectionis genuinæ certum indicium. Speciatim agitur primo de versione Coptica. §. 2. De versione Æthiopica, et Millii de hac versione judicio. §. 3. De versione Syriaca, ex Simonii sententia, et ex iis quæ Millius de hac versione pronunciat. §. 4. De versione Arabica, ex qua nullas lectiones variantes exhibent Millii prolegomena. §. 2, 3. De versione veteri vulgata, sive Italica latius agit sectio quinta, in qua evincitur primo incerta esse quæ de hac versione Millius certissima ducit, puta eam præ cæteris ad optimos codices adornatam fuisse. In ea omnia de textu archetypo optime et juxta genuinum verborum sensum reddita fuisse. Et demum versionem veterem Italicam ante tempora Hieronymi miris modis interpolatam, pristinæ suæ integritati restitui posse, et ejus industria restitutam esse. §. 4. Frustra id Millium aggressum esse ostenditur, primo ex codice Cantab. omnium quos unquam viderit corruptissimo, aut ex Germ. et Clarom. codicis ejusdem parte secunda. §. 5. Secundo ex scriptis patrum Latinorum, qui ante ætatem Hieronymi vixerunt.

CAPUT QUARTUM, SECTIO PRIMA.

VERSIONUM fere omnium in una lectione consensus, et συμπνοία, non est, Millio judice, genuinæ lectionis certum indicium; is enim ipse agnoscit Hebr. xii. 7. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. legisse εἰς παιδείαν vel ἐν παιδείᾳ: editum tamen, inquit, εἰ παιδείαν ὑπομένετε, præter exemplaria plurima, et Græcorum commentarios affirmant ea quæ sequuntur versu proximo, εἰ δὲ χωρίς ἐστε παιδείας. Sed non est hisce immorandum, cum tam in Millii prolegomenis, quam in nostris ad varias ejus lectiones annotationibus, sexcenta occurrant loca, in quibus versionibus omnibus repugnet.

Superest, ut de versionibus hisce, separatim sumptis, breviter agamus.

Et primo de versione Coptica, sive Egyptiaca hæc habet Millius, Proleg. p. 152. 'Mirum certum est bibliorum multilinguium editores de Coptica nihil cogitasse, maxime cum non tantum profluxerit ex fonte Græco, sed etiam expressa fuerit ad exemplar optimum, unumque è primævis, aut certe ex ejusmodi aliquo, ut apparet ex variantibus ipsius lectionibus.' Vin', lector, scire rationem cur à Millio hæc versio, quam Waltonus ὁ πάνυ neglectam habuit, has laudes obtinuerit? Eam exhibet Simonius his verbis, 'Coptica exemplaria multis in locis conveniunt cum editione Latina, ubi Græco textui conformis non est,' Crit. Hist. cap. 16. p. 142. Porro ex variantibus ejusdem lectionibus, id tantum constat versionem ipsam haud esse flocci faciendam; quod ut lectori manifestum appareat, præ oculis ejus ponam illam ipsam variarum lectionum Συλλογὴν, quam nobis hic Millius exhibuit.

Matt. xx. 34. Καὶ εὐθέως ἀνέβλεψαν αὐτῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ, adjectitium est.

xxi. 2. Καὶ εὑρήσατε, τὸ εὐθέως, insertum est, statim. Vulg. xxv. 16. qui quinque talenta acceperat, ἐποίησε ἄλλα πέντε τάλαντα, aditum est ex superioribus.

Marc. xiii. 11. Μελετᾶτε irreptitium est. Vide hic annotata.

xiv. 27. Σκανδαλισθήσετε ἐν ἐμοὶ est Matthæi, Immo Vulg. et Hieron. Theoph. Syr. Arab.

Luc. vi. 45. Λαλεῖ τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ, additicium est.

viii. 9. Ἐπερώτησαν αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, λέγοντες, adjectitium est. xviii. 20. σου additicium est.

xxiii. 23. Κατίσχυον αἱ φωναὶ αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν Ἀρχιερέων, de margine irrepsit. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

Act. iii. 13. Ὁ Θεὸς Ἀβραὰμ, Θεὸς Ἰσαὰκ, καὶ Θεὸς Ἰακὼβ, retento, Θεὸς, quod in aliis deest.

xv. 17. Ὁ ποιῶν ταῦτα, πάντα irrepsit è margine. Agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcumen. Syr. Arab.

xix. 3. Εἶπετε πρὸς αὐτούς, injectitium est. Agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcum. Syr. Arab. Æthiop.

xx. 32. Παρατίθεμαι ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, τῷ Θεῷ,—Ἀδελφοὶ insertum de margine. Agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcumen. Arab. Æthiop.

2 Cor. i. 17. Τοῦτο οὖν βουλευόμενος. Βουλευόμενος fecit lector ex Βουλόμενος. Cum textu legunt Theodoretus, Œcumenius, et hanc lectionem firmant verba sequentia, ἢ ἃ βουλεύομαι κατὰ σάρκα βουλεύομαι.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

SECUNDO, de versione Æthiopica en P. Simonii judicium, viz. 'versio hæc Romæ impressa, et in Bibliis Polyglottis de novo edita, adeo parum accurata est, ut ampliori consideratione sit protinus indigna,' Hist. Crit. ver. cap. 17. p. 145. Ipse * Millius in prolegomenis sententiam suam de hac versione his verbis indicat: 'In evangeliis plerumque satis accurata est, rarius paulo abit à verbis S. textus, et ubi in paraphrases excurrit, et commentarios, vestigia haud obscura videris Græcæ, quæ interpreti ob oculos fuerat, lectionis. In Actis Apostolorum secus aliquanto se res habet, laxiora his pleraque, omissa hinc inde varia, alia perperam, ac præter sensus Græci textus reddita, ne quid dicam de exemplari, quod nacti fuerunt Æthiopes in nonnullis hujus libri locis lacero, et lacunoso: unde factum ut ne quidem integra ad nos devenerit versio, sed partim mutila manserit, partim suppleta fuerit hic illic ab his editoribus ex lingua Græca et Romana, ut loquuntur, hoc est, ex vulgata versione, et codicibus vaticanis Græcis, quos cum vulgata Latina consentientes, deprehenderant. In epistolis D. Pauli major paulo adhuc apparet laxitas, et immanis nonnunquam à litera textus aberratio, interprete verba, quæ ob oculos habebat, adeo non numerante, ut ne ad ipsorum quidem sensum, seu etiam significationem in locis nonnullis quidquam attenderit. Sed neque, in epistolis catholicis et apocalypsi res multo melior; utcunque enim hic ad literam Græcam propius fere nonnihil accedatur, in ipsis tamen haud raro translatoris curam et diligentiam desideramus.' Hinc toties apud eum occurrunt hæc versionis hujus epitheta, 'turbida, et obscura versio' quærelæ hæ,† 'hinc omnia turbavit Æthiops.' Et tamen post hæc omnia, mirum dictu, 'Codex ille optimus est, et aut unus è primævis, aut ad primarium expressus est, et archetypum textum retinet in locis nonnullis, ubi ab eo cæteri abierunt. En quibus versionibus originarii textus emendationem Millianam debemus, iis nimirum, ex quibus, aliis judicibus, vix aliud quam corruptelas expectare fas sit, præsertim cum hanc longam genuinarum, si Millio fides, lectionum syllogen hoc epilogo absolvat. '‡Dolendum interea, turbidam hanc, confusam, et à textus non verbis tantum, sed et sensu nonnunquam toto cœlo aberrantem versionem intercepisse nobis conspectum plurimarum lectionum Græci, ad quem facta erat, codicis, quas alias notasse licuisset.' Dolendum potius virum doctum ex hac turbida, confusa, obscura versione, in qua, evangeliis exceptis, laxiora pleraque, omissa hinc inde varia, alia perperam, et præter sensum Græci textus reddita, quatuor paginas implevisse lectionibus suis genuinis, sunt enim omnes quas congessit (paucis tantum exceptis, quas examini subjicimus) adeo frivolæ, ineptæ, notatu protinus indignæ, ut magno opere in iis colligendis nihil egisse videatur. Aperiendus est denique fons hujus sententiæ Millianæ, nempe congruentia versionis hujus cum fictitia illa versione Italica, quam tanquam genuinæ lectionis normam, et regulam fidissimam ubique nobis oggerit. Nimirum agnoscunt versionis hujus editores se multa, quæ in Actis Apostolorum in hac versione deerant, ex codicibus Latinis, Græcisque cum iis consentientibus supplevisse, 'verendumque est, inquit Ludolphus, ne idem in cæteris N. Testamenti libris fecerint, quippe Æthiops meus in multis eos differre aiebat ab exemplaribus MSS. patriæ suæ;' nec aliud expectandum fuit à versione Romæ concinnata: si enim Romæ fueris, non tantum Romano more vivendum est, sed etiam scribendum.

* Proleg. p. 121. col. 1. † Prol. p. 154. ‡ P. 135.

SECTIO TERTIA.

DE Syriaca versione Millius sententiam suam his verbis exhibet. '(Primo) Syriaca quod attinet, haud ea Græcis suis adeo accurate semper, et velut ad amussim conveniunt, ut ex iis intelligi possit, quid legerit interpres. (Secundo) Quod in nonnullis pro versione exhibeat Syrus commentarium. (Tertio) Quod in aliis omittat non tantum textus Græci partes quasdam minutiores, sed insigniora quoque vocabula, seu quod ea superflua judicaverit in versione, aut quod etiam ipsa non intellexerit. (Quarto) Quod in aliis inserat, addat, mutet varia uberioris sensus, et claritatis gratia, ut in versione sæpius videre est. (Quinto) Quod in aliis Græca reddat omnino perperam, et præter sententiam loci. (Sexto) Accedunt quæ ex divisione versionis in lectiones addita, seu quovis modo mutata sunt, ad initia lectionum. Denique, non mirum esse ait, si pro temporum istorum ἀμαθίᾳ, textus ejus aliquantulum hinc inde passus est à librario.' Hæc omnia habes, Proleg. p. 128. 'Cætera, inquit, forte accurata erant, et quidem textus, quem exhibebant in plerisque adeo mirifice cum Græco vulgari congruebat, ut uterque ex uno et eodem codice descriptus prima fronte videatur. Collatis certe his invicem (viz. codicibus Syri et Vulgati) convenisse hunc cum altero deprehendimus, in lectionibus etiam, quæ ab excusis variant sexaginta supra mille, è quibus quadraginta (quadringenta) septuaginta octo genuinæ sunt.' Huic Millii sententiæ opponimus, (Primo) Simonii critici si non acrioris, æquioris certe judicii testimonium, "convenire nempe frequentius hanc Syriacam versionem cum Græcis exemplaribus, ex quibus Hieronymus Italicam castigavit, quam cum ipsa versione Italica, Crit. Hist. ver. cap. 15. p. 119." Porro ex iis quæ Millius annotavit, hæc plane sequuntur. (Secundo) Sexcentis fere locis codicem tam Syrum, quam Vulgatum spurium esse; ea enim versio, quæ in lectionibus in quibus ab excusis variat plus sexaginta supra mille, 478 tantum genuinas lectiones habet, in reliquis 582 eam non genuinas habere necesse est. (Tertio) Ex eo quod versio hæc cum Græco vulgari adeo mirifice congruit, eam mirum in modum vitiis scatere ex iis, quæ de Græco vulgari ex Simonio notavimus, liquido constabit. (Quarto) Ex eo quod versio adeo obscura sit, et à Græco exemplari eo usque aliena, ut ex ea intelligi non possit, quid legerit interpres, in quibusdam pro versione exhibeat commentarium, in aliis omittat insigniora textus Græci vocabula, in aliis, inserat, mutet, addat varia, in aliis Græca reddat perperam, et præter sententiam loci, aut tanquam superflua in versione rejiciat, et demum pro temporum istorum ἀμαθίᾳ à librariis hinc inde passus sit. Incertum sane relinquitur utrum in iis locis quos pro genuinis ostentat Millius, idem factum non fuerit. Contra antiquitatem hujus versionis objicitur, quod Matt. v. 22. εἰκῇ retinet: Matt. vi. 13. δοξολογίαν in fine orationis Dominicæ exhibet, et Luc. xi. tertiam et quintam ejusdem orationis petitionem; respondet Millius in textum hæc postea inserta fuisse, et accidisse versioni Syriacæ, quod Italicæ, quod aliis, ut longo temporis tractu mutatus et correctus fuerit textus ejus ad codices posteriorum temporum. Hoc cum ab eo sine teste, adeoque sine ratione dictum fuerit, quid impedit quo minus idem à nobis dicatur in omnibus iis locis, quos pro genuinis nobis obtrudit Millius? Nihil certè, nisi quod hoc Millii κρησφυγέτῳ nobis non opus sit, utpote qui lectiones hasce imaginario genuinas, ubi res postulare videbatur, diligenter excusserimus, easque ferè semper nihil minus quam genuinas deprehenderimus.

SECTIO QUARTA.

De Versione Arabica.

EX versione Arabica nullas lectiones genuinas, vel interpolatas notavit Millius. Quanquam enim eodem fatente, ea hinc inde emendatior, et ad pleraque Græciæ exemplaria conformatior sit, quam Syriaca, eo tamen remotior fuit à Millii Italica, eique ut plurimum repugnat. Visum est ergo illi melius eam missam facere, quam de eadem, quod verum esse ex annotatis nostris constabit, agnoscere. "Facile tamen est, teste Simonio, cernere versionem hanc minime puram esse, sed aliquibus in locis ad Latinæ versionis normam emendatam fuisse:" Crit. H. ver. cap. 18. p. 158.

SECTIO QUINTA.

De Versione veteri Vulgata, sive Italica.

§. 1. DE versione Italica qualem hic nobis eam ex suo cerebro confinxit Millius, fusius agendum est. Hoc enim ipsius commentum penitus destruendo integrum prolegomenωn opus, in quantum lectiones genuinas respicit, cum illo loco cedere necesse est. Igitur observandum (primo) quod in eo potissimum se ostentet et immodice se efferat Millius, quod ex hac unica versione loca N. T. plus ducenta, quæ solitaria intercedebant absque omni codicum, patrum, versionum comitatu, et quæ jam à plurimis sæculis interpolata fuerant, originariæ suæ puritati restituerit. Harum lectionum inter alia longe plura συλλογὴν satis prolixam exhibet à pag. Proleg. 41ª ad 58ªm in quibus hoc potissimum notandum venit, quod exempla multa colligens ex libris fere omnibus totius N. Fœderis, hac tamen præfatione utatur: "hæc quæ à MSS. codicum fere omnium, et impressorum lectione differunt, videntur tamen genuina."

Cui id primo respondeo, quod Helvidio Hieron. C. primo adv. Helv. T. 4. lit. D. "Licet tu mira confidentia hæc in Græcis codicibus falsata contendas, quæ non solum omnes pene Græciæ tractatores in suis voluminibus reliquerunt, sed nonnulli quoque è Latinis ita ut in Græcis habentur assumpserint; nec (non tamen) necesse est de exemplarium varietate tractare, cum omne et veteris, et novæ Scripturæ instrumentum in Latinum sermonem exinde translatum sit, et multo purior manare credenda sit fontis unda, quam rivi."

Secundo, cum id pro certo, atque indubitato sæpius assumit Millius vulgatam Latinam, seu versionem Italicam, ab ipsis propemodum apostolorum temporibus adornatam fuisse ad codices optimos 'solisque forte apostolorum ipsorum authenticis dignitate inferiores;' Proleg. p. 162. col. 1. 'Eamque ab hodiernis quidem nostris codicibus nonnunquam recedere, à Græcis autem primorum temporum nusquam adeo recedere ut necessario sit deserenda,' Proleg. p. 138. col. 1, 2.—Ut multa alia ejusdem confidentiæ hic missa faciam, aliud tamen peritissimos Romanæ ecclesiæ criticos de hac versione sensisse et docuisse, ex eorum verbis et testimoniis luce clarius patebit.

Nam primo Dupinius, etiamsi pro pontifice Romano steterit, Italicam versionem ab origine sua plurimis forsan maculis inquinatam fuisse, aperte et ingenue fatetur. " Primo enim, interpres qui potuit falli ut humanus, hallucinatus forte est, et textum male reddidit; aut secundo, nactus fuit codicem mendosum; aut tertio, sui codicis parum fidus anagnostes; aut quarto, cum scriptum esset ambiguum, et duplicis sensus aut interpretamenti capax, interpres fortasse minus commodam secutus est sententiam, et in dictione aliqua aut idiomate Hebraico multum aberravit. Quinto, de suo etiam adjecisse potuit plurima, aut claritatis gratia, aut ut unus evangelista cum altero melius concordaret" (atque etiam subtraxisse, et rejecisse quædam tanquam superflua, ut asserit Millius de Syro). " Sexto, multa forsan additamenta deprompsit ex Apocryphis (prout Clemens Rom. in Ep. ad Corinthios.)" Hæc ille de vetere interprete N. T. cap. 3. §. 4. p. 109.—Simonius, cap. 6. p. 50. " Multum, inquit, debemus sancto Hieronymo, qui Italicam versionem, locis pene innumeris mancam et imperfectam, suæ integritati restituit. Optima Græca exemplaria plerumque secutus est, præteritisque iis, quæ ad vulgatam de industria conformabantur, et multis quæ apud orientales ecclesias perlegebantur, commodissimum quodque elegit; atque hinc est, quod illi cum Græcis scholiastis omnia fere conveniunt. Admodum antiqui fuerunt codices, quos mutilos in editis sui temporis Hieronymus deprehendit, et ab ipsis Christianismi primordiis originem suam traxerunt. Unde inducor ad credendum veterem versionem Latinam à MSS., ad hunc modum mutilatis, ab initio traductam fuisse, quam tamen totam rejecisse, aut in novam penitus effinxisse formam, criticorum ille præstantissimus nequaquam ausus est." Adeo in re Biblica peritissimi Simonius et Dupinius à Millio quam longissimè dissentiunt!

§. 3. Secundo, sicut nec ipse Millius diffitetur versionem istam tractu temporis valde corruptam fuisse, ita res nota ac manifesta erit è crebris Simonii confessionibus, qui cap. 3. p. 20. ait, " Omnibus apertum est miserandum fuisse statum illius ante castigationem Hieronymi." Et cap. 4. p. 24. " Latinam ecclesiam summo beneficio sibi devinxit Hieronymus, cum ad optima Græca exemplaria vulgatam versionem pessime ab aliis habitam (ut testatur ipse in Ep. ad Damasum) correxerit." Et cap. 6. p. 50. "Innumeros pene locos, hiantes olim et lacunosos, reduxit ille ad sanitatem." Et. p. 52. " vetustissimi cod. vulgati multa παρεμβεβλημένα verbis passim immutatis, retinent, quæ in editione nostra Hieronymus acri judicio perpendit, et emendavit, cap. 12. p. 115." Si Zegerum ipsum audias, ' hæc ipsa versio multis in locis noscitur vitiata, mutilata, et aucta.' Atqui versio in statu isto miserando, utpote quæ locis innumeris vitiata, mitilata, et aucta fuerit, minime quidem digna fuit, ut præ cæteris palmam ferret, suamque archetypo puritatem restitueret. " Hinc est, quod, teste Simonio, post castigationem Hieronymi de Italica versione in antiquum statum restituenda nemo unquam vel per somnium cogitaverit, sed (hac ad Millium ablegata provincia) codices suos ad Hieronymi editionem conformarunt, ex omnium confessione optimam et accuratissimam, adeo ut post aliquos annos vetus Italica versio, cum in extremis esset, vel sublata penitus fuerit vel sub nomine et titulo Hieronymianæ versionis delituerit. Hanc enim Cassiodorus monachis suis regulam præscripsit, ut codices suos ad Hieronymianos audacter corrigerent." Et cap. 7. p. 59. ' Non aliud occurrit nomen in vetustissimis, quæ jam extant, Latinis Bibliis, quam Hieronymi, nec nota aliqua, qua distingueretur Hieronymiana à vetere ista, quam occidentales ecclesiæ usurpârunt, versione. Hæc ergo quæ olim vulgata et Italica dicebatur, post Hieronymi in Novum Testamentum labores, sensim evanuit, cum enim Hieronymiana magis quam Italica versio plerisque arriserit, scrinia, in Bibliothecis illius nomine præfixo, occupavit, Italica penitus neglecta, quam omnes minus accuratam esse crediderunt." Et cap. 9. p. 83. ex pervetusto codice in Bibliotheca Sancti Germani reposito, hæc citat verba, ' Hieronymi presbyteri Bethlem secundum Græcum ex emendatissimis libris conlata:' unde constat, quod ex pervulgata illorum temporum opinione Hieronymus integrum Novum Testamentum castigaverit ex emendatissimis Græcis manuscriptis: " Nulla tum de Italica versione mentio facta est; librarii enim non aliam quam Hieronymi editionem transcripserunt, quod sæpissime disertis verbis in fine libri adnotârunt." Ad hunc modum illa ipsa versio, quam ad cœlum sustulit Millius, et cujus beneficio loca Novi Testamenti plus ducenta, à plurimis sæculis interpolata, restituere conatus est originariæ suæ puritati, illa ipsa, inquam, versio ex judicio et consuetudine occidentalis ecclesiæ, prætermissa, spreta, et repudiata fuit. Postremo, cum in ea prope sententia Millius assecutum se esse ex Latino Irenæo, Tertulliano, Cypriano, Hilario Diacono, codicibus Cant. Clar. et Ger. quæ in plerisque N. T. fuerint ipsius Italicæ genuina, et quibus Græcis Latina ista responderint. Quam commentitia futilisque sit illius sententia mecum, paucis recognoscite.

§. 4. Primo etenim codicem Cant. ad hanc rem minime aptum esse, patet ex testimonio tam Millii, quam Simonii. Ad Morini argumentum, qui trecentis fere in locis ex codice Cant. confirmatam esse ait vulgatam ecclesiæ versionem, respondet Millius (Prol. p. 141. col. 1.) ' exemplar hoc Cantabrigiense omnium quotquot unquam ad ætatem nostram devenere, interpolatissimum fuisse;' et annotatis in Lucæ caput tertium, ' Omnium quos unquam viderim, non uno nomine, corruptissimum. Unde et mutata ad hujus generis codices Latina corrupta in plurimis fuerint necesse est.' Atqui de hoc ipso codice, ait Simonius, cap. 6. p. 51. " Græca istius codicis ad Italicam versionem per omnia respondisse; unde sequitur ipsam Italicam versionem, omnium quotquot unquam ad ætatem nostram devenere, interpolatissimam fuisse." Et p. 52. Codex Cant. à reliquis Græcis exemplaribus et vulgatis ita longe " abest, præsertim in Actis Apostolorum, ut videatur esse codex novus." Immo, dicente Millio, annotatis ad Lucæ caput tertium, ' Hujus codicis scriba in evangeliis finita, pro arbitrio, addere, detrahere, mutare ausus est, ——et Lucæ denique evangelium adeo misere passim interpolavit, ut Monotessaron quoddam fere, magis quam ipsius Lucæ Evangelium, dixeris.' At vero cum Clar. et Ger. sint solum ejusdem exemplaris partes secundæ, illos quoque codices à reliquis Græcis et vulgata ad eundem modum discrepâsse, rationi haud absonum est conjicere. Et p. 52. " Vetustissimi (Lat.) codices additamentis mendisque innumeris abundant, quæ sustulit Hieronymus, correxitque ad normam eorum exemplarium, quæ suo tempore præstantissima habebantur, et quæ cum nostris propius consentiunt. Inter libros, qui apud Græcos, et orentiales ecclesias perlegebantur, sunt aliquæ quidem varietates et discrepantiæ, non tamen ejusdem naturæ cum variantibus istis lectionibus, quæ in Cant. et quibusdam aliis, et vulgata vetere versione ad eos codices conformata facile deprehendas. Constat quidem eos codices temerariam librariorum manum sæpius fuisse passos, qui multa addiderunt claritatis gratia, atque ordinem verborum immutârunt, ut oratio fieret concinna, accurata, et polita." Unde colligere licet, quam falsas rationes inferat Millius dicendo, ita Cant. ita Ger. ita Cler. adeo vetus Italica.

§. 5. Secundo, alterum quod jacit fundamentum Millius, sc. testimonia patrum, qui ante tempora Hieronymi vixerunt, Simonio judice, parum stabile et firmum est. Nam in Critica de Versionibus Historia, cap. 3. p. 22., " Monet nos Sanctum Cyprianum non ad amussim exhibuisse vulgatam editionem sui temporis, sed aliquando ad sensum verborum respexisse, potius quam ad textum veteris interpretis. Et p. 21. Cyprianus et coætanei illius locos S. Scripturæ non ex publica aliqua versione deprompserunt, sed ipsi eos è re nata interpretati sunt. Atque iterum, Tertullianus et Cyprianus potestatem sibi permiserunt adeundi fontes, ac Græcum sermonem pro libitu suo vertendi. Hinc Pamelius in vita Tertulliani ait non tam Latinis translatis, quam Gr. cod. veteribus usum esse auctorem Græce doctissimum, mallet nempe ex fontibus bibere, quod aiunt, quam ex lacunis." De Cypriano idem dignoscitur ex locupletissimo indice locorum Nov. Test. in Edit. Oxon. collectorum. Ex his Simonius recte colligit falli Zegerum, qui additamenta in Lat. MSS. sæculo Irenæi, aut Cypriani pauciora fuisse, quam reliquis deinceps sæculis existimat. "Siquidem major pars antiquissimorum codicum additamentis ac varietate innumera gaudet, et tantum abest ut nostra vulgati interpretis editio ad Irenæum, Tertullianum, Cyprianum, aliosque scriptores venerandæ antiquitatis corrigi debeat, ut tutius foret testimonia eorum ad editos nostros, seu Græcos seu Latinos, emendare. Hoc quibusdam forsan mirum videbitur (ait ille) et inauditum, sed de rei ipsius veritate satis liquet. Et p. 53. Haud tutum semper est ecclesiasticos Scriptores, qui antiqui merito audiunt, tanquam duces nostros sequi, cum è certis argumentis dignoscatur codices, quos nacti erant Nov. Test. præsertim Latinos, misere confusos et turbidos fuisse."

His etiam subjungit, p. 54. Scripta Latinorum Patrum, qui Hieronymi versionem ætate præcesserunt, crebram mutationem passa esse. Editores enim, qui typis illa mandari curârunt, citationes eorum ad nostram vulgatam sæpius accommodabant, nec melius factum est Hilario Diacono, qui ex omnibus Latinis cum vetere Italo interprete maxime congruit. Turrianus, cum apostolorum canonum defensionem susceperit, "meminisse se ait, non ita pridem cum esset Cyprianus Romæ imprimendus, fuisse qui judicârunt tunc in testimoniis Veteris Scripturæ, quæ sunt omnia apud Cyprianum ex interpretatione LXX., pro interpretatione LXX. interpretationem Hieronymi, substitui debere." Quid multa? Teste Dupinio, si Epistolarum Paulinarum Latinam versionem in Clarom. et Germ. codicibus, cum textu in commentariis Ambrosiastri et Pelagii diligenter conferas, miram ubique discrepantiam facile reperies: Hist. 5. et N. T. vol. ii. p. 115. Quibus ex argumentis in unum collatis satis constat vanum fuisse Millii inceptum, dum è scriptis patrum veterem Italicam versionem eruere conatus est, neque illum aut criticum aut dialecticum bonum egisse, cum in prolegomenis toties dixit, 'ita Irenæus Lat. ita Tertullianus, aut denique ita Cyprianus, adeoque vetus Italica.'

CAPUT QUINTUM

§. 1. Exhibet uberiorem dissertationem de hac versione Italica, in qua primo sententia Millii proponitur. §. 2. Secundo, patres Latinos existimâsse versionem Italicam ex Græcis exemplaribus corrigendam fuisse ex testimoniis Ambrosii, Hieronymi, Damasi P. et Augustini probatur. §. 3 et 4. Unde sequitur primo ex patrum horum sententia non defuisse tunc Græcos codices puros et incorruptos, ex quibus versionis Italicæ σφάλματα corrigerentur. Secundo, patribus hisce nullam tunc cognitam fuisse versionem Italicam, ex qua aliorum Latinorum codicum varietas aut dissonantia tolleretur, Ibid. Frustra tentasse Millium versionem hanc integritati suæ restituere ex Tertulliano, Cypriano, Hilario Diac. et Augustino, aut ex codicibus manuscriptis ostenditur.

CAPUT QUINTUM.

Sive de veteri Italica Versione uberior dissertatio.

QUANQUAM ea quæ de hac versione jam diximus, aliis sufficere videantur, quoniam tamen controversiæ cardo in hoc potissimum versatur, operæ pretium esse duxi Millii de hac versione sententiam plenius refutare.

SECTIO PRIMA.

IMAGINARIAM, scilicet hanc versionem * 'adornatam fuisse ad optimos codices, solisque forte apostolorum authenticis dignitate inferiores' censet Millius. Immo non patitur Boisium nostratem supponere† 'ipsam à Græcis alicubi sic recedere, ut necessario sit deserenda.' 'Recedit (inquit) nonnunquam ab hodiernis hisce nostris, non vero à Græcis primorum temporum.' Et Prol. p. 142. col. 1. hæc habet, 'Veterem Italicam, seu ad exemplaria primæva composita, summa veneratione prosequimur, ejusque vel semesa MSS. fragmenta quælibet auro cariora, non cara duximus. Optandum equidem foret ut Hieronymus, ex collatione præstantissimorum, qui ætate ista comparari poterant, codicum Latinorum, restituere studuisset Italicam originariæ suæ puritati. Cum autem ex Græcis suis eam castigare ipsi visum sit, ex animo certe gaudemus quod in hac re parum sibi permiserit, ac pauca duntaxat immutârit; hoc siquidem pacto manet etiamnum haud exigua pars Italicæ, textusque adeo primævi originarii vestigia passim haud obscura videre est, quæ ex morosiori ejus ad Græcos codices qui tum ferebantur confirmatione, pleraque prorsus periissent. Hæc nostra est de vulgata versione sententia.'

* Proleg. p. 162. col. 2. † P. 138. col. 1, 2.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

OPERÆ pretium esset dignoscere unde hæc versio mendis libera, et à Græcis primorum temporum nusquam recedens, adeo comparanda esset, ut pro certo haberetur nos ipsissimam versionem Italicam, qualis à prima origine extabat, puram putamque possidere. Mirum certe, fatente* Millio, quanta jam ab ipso fere initio licentia textum hujus versionis interpolârint Latini veteres. Quæro qua certa et explorata methodo, pura ab his interpolationibus et integra ad Millii manus pervenisset? Versionem Italam, aut vulgatam continuo ingeminat; ex hoc rivulo fontes ipsos Græcos purgandos esse existimat; Clementem, Origenem, Eusebium, Græcos fere omnes coram hoc tribunali sistit; quicquid in iis à suo vulgato dissentit, incusat παρεμβλήσεως, irreptitium, interpolatum esse, aut marginale scholion fidenter pronunciat; quicquid eidem, consonat est plane genuinum. Quærimus tandem unde hæc rara avis pervenerit, quibusque machinis è cœlo devoluta ad Millium descenderit, et quibus indiciis, post longum hoc temporis intervallum, id nobis denuo innotescat? Ex Millio id luce clarius ediscas, cujus ipsissima verba in medium jam adducam.

Versionem ipsam quod attinet, adeo mire tractu temporis interpolata erat à librariis, aliisque, ut ipsius textum genuinum haud alias investigare liceat quam partim ex fragmentis patrum Latinorum, partim ex MSS. exemplaribus translationis Italicæ, qualis jam incedebat ante castigationem Hieronymi, adhibita in consilium hodierna vulgata, quæ quantumcunque vitiata, haud exiguam certe partem retinet veteris genuinæ. Hujusmodi quidem monumentorum accurate inter se, et cum textu Græco, N. B. commissorum adminiculo, revocari etiamnum posse videtur maxima ex parte Itala hæc, qualem eam dederint primi interpretes.†

Prodisse apud Latinos innumeras S. Scripturæ interpretationes testis est Augustinus, et inter reliquas unam apud Afros, quinto jam sæculo speciatim Italam dictam, quod ab Italia ad ipsos pervenerit. Quis hodie fidem dabit versionem Italam primævam, seu Pii secundi temporibus, dicente Millio, adornatam ex apostolorum autographis, immo apographis desumptam fuisse? Unde nimirum habuissent Epistolam ad Hebræos, et Johannis Apocalypsin à R. Ecclesia nondum agnitas? Unde Epistolas Catholicas, quarum aliquæ in dubium ideo vocabantur, quod earum parcior fuisset mentio in primævis Christianismi sæculis? In versione Syriaca, iisdem fere temporibus adornata, Petri epistolam secundam, Johannis secundam et tertiam, Judam, Apocalypsin, Historiam Adulteræ defuisse agnoscunt eruditi: securos quis nos faciat eas in versione Italica non pariter defuisse? Aut quo indicio certo constabit Italum hunc interpretem linguæ Hebraicæ idiomata moresque Judaicos adeo ad unguem calluisse, ut in iis vertendis nunquam à vero aberraverit? Quis dabit denique Italam versionem, de qua unus loquitur Augustinus, eam ipsissimam fuisse quæ primo ab Italis concinnata fuerit? Immo post miseram illam corruptelam, quam multo ante Augustini tempora in hanc versionem irrepsisse ultro fatetur Millius, quis certiores nos reddet eam in Afrorum manus incorruptam pervenisse?

* Prol. p. 58. col. 2. † Prol. p. 41. col. 2.

Si certum id esset, quod summa confidentia certissimum pronunciat Millius, Italam hanc olim puram, et autographis Apostolicis dignitate tantum inferiorem extitisse, mendisque nullis obnoxiam, et à qua nunquam necessario recedendum esset; eamque à bibliothecis Hieronymi ætate salvam et integram comparari potuisse; quanta ecclesiæ Latinæ incuria, immo socordia factum est, ut nova Hieronymi emendatio ei prævaluerit, ita ut, ea insuper habita, Hieronymi versio vulgata apud omnes ubique obtineret, et pro authentica haberetur. Isidoro etenim monente * 'Hieronymi editione generaliter omnes ecclesiæ usquequaque utuntur, pro eo quod veracior sit in sententiis, et clarior in verbis;' et † Gregorio P. apud Millium eadem his verbis dicente, 'Nova hæc translatio cuncta verius transfudisse perhibetur, et credendum est quicquid in ea dicitur.' Cur demum id eo tempore dictum esset, cum eodem ‡ Gregorio fatente, sedes apostolica utraque utebatur, se tamen novam translationem disserente, quid tandem dicat Augustinus audiamus,§ 'In ipsis (inquit) interpretationibus Itala cæteris præferatur, nam est verborum tenacior, cum perspicuitate sententia.' Ut autem hic de judicio Augustini, Latini hominis in Græcis minime instructi, taceam, Italam versionem ad aliarum multitudinem comparatam, 'verborum præ aliis tenaciorem et in sententiis magis perspicuam pronunciat, eam tamen quantumlibet emendatam Græcis cedere oportere haud dubium est.' Ait idem Augustinus,‖ 'Iisque potissimum qui apud ecclesias doctiores, et diligentiores reperiuntur. Latinis quibuslibet emendatis Græci (inquit) adhibeantur, sunt enim Græcorum autoritate adhuc emendandi, duabus enim aliis linguis ad Scripturarum divinarum cognitionem opus est, Hebræa sc. et Græca, ut ad exemplaria præcedentia recurratur, si quam dubitationem attulerit Latinorum interpretum varietas.' En Augustinum! non Millio adstipulantem, sed plane adversantem; lectorem nempe Latinum titubantem non versioni Italicæ, sed Græcis exemplaribus stabiliendum mittit; immo haud dubium esse ait, Latinam quamlibet versionem, adeoque Italam, Græcis cedere oportere.

Cum Augustino consentiunt ecclesiæ Latinæ patres ad unum omnes, qui de his rebus verba fecerunt, unoque ore asserunt textus Græcos N. Testamenti semper fuisse et adhuc esse authenticos, ad quos omnes versiones probari et examinari debent. Constans hæc erat, juxta Waltonum, veteris ecclesiæ sententia: Ambrosius ¶ hæc habet, 'Si quis de Latinorum codicum varietate contendit, quorum aliquos perfidi falsaverunt, Græcos inspiciant codices.' Et libro de Incar. Dom. Sacramentis; 'Ita (inquit) in Græcis codicibus invenimus, quorum potior est autoritas.' Proximus illi Augustinus ita loquitur, 'Recte fieri nullo modo dubitaverim ut, cum diversum aliquid in duobus codicibus invenitur, quandoquidem ad fidem rerum gestarum utrumque non potest esse verum, ei linguæ potius credatur, unde est in aliam, per interpretes, facta translatio.' 'Hoc ipsum, inquit ibi Vives,—Hieronymus clamat, hoc ipsa dicit ratio, et nullus est saniore judicio qui repugnet.' Hieronymus epistola ad Suniam et Fretellam rem sic expedit. 'Si quando apud Latinos in N. Testamento quæstio exorta est, et inter exemplaria varietas, recurrimus ad fontem Græci sermonis quo novum scriptum est instrumentum.' Idem ep. ad Licinium hæc habet, 'Ut veterum librorum fides de Hebræis voluminibus examinanda est, ita novorum veritas Græci sermonis normam desiderat:' quæ verba à Gratiano in jus canonicum à pontifice probatum, relata sunt, dist. 9. cap. Ut veterum agmen claudat Damasus Papa cui sic scribit Hieronymus, 'Novum opus facere me cogis ex vetere, ut post exemplaria Scripturarum toto orbe dispersa, quasi quidem arbiter sedeam, et quia inter se variant, quæ sunt illa quæ cum Græca consentiunt veritate decernam.' Ex his satis constat quantum veteres fontes prætulerint versionibus, iis vero qui versiones præferunt dico cum Hieronymo, quibus displicet fontis unda purissima, cœnosos rivulos bibant. Ex hac autem veteris ecclesiæ sententia duo, coronidis loco, plane concludi videntur.

Primo, non defuisse, horum patrum ætate, fontes ex quibus purissima hæc unda biberetur, i. e. non defuisse Græcos codices puros, et incorruptos, ex quibus Latinorum, adeoque ipsius versionis Italicæ σφάλματα corrigerentur, quibusque, Latina omnia exemplaria cedere oportere haud dubium tunc esset. Quorsum enim Græcos codices inspicere, ad fontem Græci sermonis recurrere, ei linguæ potissimum credere unde est in aliam facta translatio, et cum Latina exemplaria varia esse contigerit, quæ sint illa quæ cum Græca veritate consentiunt decernere, nos toties monerent, nisi puri hi fontes adeundi, codices hi Græci inspiciendi essent, undę decerni potuisset Græca veritas? Frustra ergo decies ad minimum in prolegomenis suis asserit, et contendit Millius, Græca exemplaria misere corrupta, et vitiata fuisse, interpretationibus, et scholiis è margine in textum irrepentibus undique scatere, fœdata, polluta, nec unum inter Græcos codicem extitisse Italo suo vetustiorem, qui Archetypam Apostolorum et Evangelistarum scripturam ipso fidelius expresserit. Hoc enim si patrum atque ecclesiæ antiquæ judicio ita fuisset, ad eum certe aliquando, et non ad Græcorum exemplaria pro veritate dignoscenda continuo provocassent, nec in hujusmodi verba toties irrupissent. Latinorum * codicum vitiositatem, quæ ex diversitate librorum omnium comprobatur, ad Græcam originem, unde et ipsi translatam esse non denegant revocandam fere, ex puris fontibus potius quam ex cœnosis rivulis bibendum esse. Et veritatem quærendam esse ad Græcam originem revertendo.

Secundo, hinc constat patribus hisce nullam tunc cognitam fuisse versionem Italam, aliamve quamlibet, vel in bibliothecis, ut putat Millius, extantem, vel aliunde comparandam, ex qua aliorum codicum Latinorum varietas aut dissonantia, tolli posset, aut N. Testamenti versio Latina ad integritatem suam restitui. Id liquet ex patrum omnium in hac ipsa quæstione alto silentio. Ad Græca exemplaria provocant omnes. Ad ea quoties in Latinis dubium aliquod occurrat, recurrendum esse uno ore pronunciant, Italam quandam versionem Latinis cæteris præferendam esse unus, quod sciam, Augustinus pronunciat, ex ea reliquas emendandas esse ne unus quidem. Audi Hieronymum clara voce sciscitantem, 'Si Latinis † exemplaribus fides est adhibenda, respondeant quibus? Tot enim sunt exemplaria pene quot codices: sin autem veritas est quærenda de pluribus, cur non ad Græcam originem revertentes, ea quæ vel à vitiosis interpretibus male reddita, vel à præsumptoribus imperitis emendata perversius, vel à librariis dormitantibus aut addita sunt, aut mutata, corrigimus? De N. Testamento nunc loquor quod (excepto apostolo Matthæo) Græcum esse non dubium, hoc certe cum in nostro sermone discordat, et in diversos rivulorum tramites ducit, uno de fonte quærendum est.' Latuit ergo Hieronymum Romæ degentem, et Damaso P. familiarem, ea quæ Millio, post longum hoc ætatis intervallum compertissima (si fides ei sit adhibenda) fuit versio pura Italica, ad optimos codices adornata, solisque apostolorum authenticis dignitate forte inferior. Latuit Hieronymi adversarios studiose de illo detrahentes, quod quædam in evangeliis emendare tentaret, et Latinorum codicum vitiositatem ad Græcam originem revocaret: Latuit denique Damasum P. id Hieronymo in mandatis dantem, ut 'ex Latinorum exemplaribus variantibus quæ sint illa, non quæ cum versione Italica, sed cum Græca consentiant veritate, decerneret.'

SECTIO SEXTA.

AD Millium jam redeo, qui excussis aliquot ex modo memoratis atque antiquissimis codicibus, ut et allegationibus patrum ‡ vetustissimorum Latinorum, in ea prope fuit sententia assecutum se esse quæ in plerisque N. Test. locis fuerunt ipsius Italicæ genuina, et quibus Græcis Latina ista responderint.

Quæro ex quibus patrum veterum monumentis id consecutus sit; an ex Irenæi Latinis, ad quos in lectionibus ejus variantibus sæpius nos mittit? Nihil minus, ipso enim Millio* monente, paucis in locis, nec non ex contextu orationis satis haud assequi possis quænam fuerit codicis Irenæi lectio; et in hac, inquam, interpretatione Latina ex adductis per omnem fere paginam locis N. Test. pro sæculo isto haud facile credibilis apparet Italici textus interpolatio.

An ex Tertulliano ad quem sæpe provocat? Nec id quidem: fatente enim eodem Millio,† 'In eo citata sunt S. Codicis loca fere negligentius, ex memoria, contracte ad sensum, haud sine levicula aliqua subinde mutatione; ipsisque porro allegatis ab eo testimoniis, immista sunt nonnunquam aliqua à stylo vulgati interpretis diversa, Africanæ φράσεως, et vocabula mire barbara; immo penes se habebat Italicæ ‡ exemplar haud parum maculatum certe:' adeo ut hoc patre uti in Scripturis ad originalem Græcum emendandis, esset plane otio et opera abuti.

De Cypriano idem est § Millii judicium, 'ex allatis ab illo N. T. pericopis manifestum esse Italicam tractu temporis magis magisque fuisse interpolatam,' adeo ut in illo nihil fere notatum videam, nisi lectiones vitiosas, aut ex Africanis aliisque versionibus profectas.

Denique, aliis Latinis patribus sepositis in uno Ambrosiastro, unoque Augustino tandem acquiescit. Hilarius enim, qui sub Ambrosii titulo diu latuit, Romanus Diaconus cum esset, ab eo spes erat versionem Italam, si quæ tum purior extitisset, castius et sincerius exhibendam. Sunt autem de hoc Diacono observanda tria, primo eum nimirum,‖ ipso teste, hos commentarios edidisse, cum ecclesiæ Romanæ rector esset is ipse Damasus, qui Hieronymo invidiosum illud munus imposuerat de Latinis codicibus dissidentibus ex Græca veritate decernere, adeoque eo ipso tempore quando remedio isto, Damasi saltem judicio indigebant Latini codices universi. Secundo, ex utriusque inspectione pro compertissimo habebit lector vel Hieronymi vulgatam, vel Hilarii valde corruptam prodiisse, quod ex variantibus Hilarii lectionibus ad calcem hujus operis conjectis, oculari demonstratione constabit. Tertio, 'præscribitur nobis, inquit Hilarius, de Græcis codicibus quasi non ipsi invicem discrepat.——Constat autem quosdam Latinos, porro olim de veteribus Græcis translatos codicibus, quos incorruptos simplicitas temporum servavit et probat.' 'Ita (inquit ¶ Millius) Latinus de Græcis, cæcus, ut aiunt, de coloribus, nihil de codicibus Græcis novit Ambrosiaster.' Somnium ejus de Latinis codicibus incorruptis ipsius Hilarii textus refutabit.

Ad Augustinum jam venio. Is autem Græcam linguam suis Latinis necessariam pronunciat; ut 'ad exemplaria præcedentia recurratur, si quam dubitationem attulerit Latinorum interpretum infinita varietas;' et quod in Latinis codicibus titubat, Græcis haud dubio cedere oportere ait, adeoque codices Græcos Italicæ suæ versioni eundem prætulisse res ipsa loquitur. Adeo ut si verum id esset, quod pro vero, contra experientiam, nobis obtrudit Millius, 'Augustini, nempe, opera portionem bene magnam versionis Italicæ, qualis in codicibus illius ætatis ferebatur, exhibuisse,' nihil inde profecerit Millius, partim quod codices, ante ætatem istam, fatente eodem Millio, misere interpolati essent; partim quod ipse Augustinus codices istos qualescunque fuerint, ex Græcis corrigendos esse asserat. Denique ad Augustinum provocat Millius contra Augustini ipsius ad Hieronymum verba, quæ ad hunc modum se habent: '††Proinde haud parvas Deo agimus gratias de opere tuo, quod evangelium ex Græco interpretatus es, quia pene in omnibus nulla offensio est, cum scripturam Græcam contulerimus, unde si quispiam veteri falsitati. N. B. contentiosus fuerit, prolatis, collatisque codicibus, vel docetur facillime, vel refellitur; et si quædam rarissima merito movent, quis tam durus est qui labori tam utili non facile ignoscat, cui vicem laudis referre non sufficit?' Quibus adjicias Hieronymi his verbis responsum; 'Si me, ut dicis, in N. Testamenti emendatione suscipis, exponisque causam cur suscipias, quia plurimi linguæ Græcæ habentes scientiam, de meo possint opere judicare, eandem integritatem debueras etiam in veteri credere Testamento.' Hinc verisimile est Dupinium recte contra Millium dicere 'Augustinum ex instituto versionem ab Hieronymo reformatam' in operibus, post eam editis, allegasse.

SECTIO QUARTA.

SUPERSUNT jam codices MSS. iique, si Millio fides, ante castigationem ab Hieronymo conceptam exarati; Codices nempe Cant. Clarom. Germ. qui omnes unum tantum volumen N. Testamenti constituunt. 'Hi (inquit Millius) Italicam versionem qualis existebat ante Hieronymi tempora, nobis exhibent:' hoc est, Hieronymo* judice, 'vitiis undique scatentem, iisque adeo multis, ut ea tantum corrigere instituerit quæ sensum videbantur mutare, reliqua manere passus sit, ut fuerunt,' ne multum à Latinæ lectionis consuetudine discreparent. 'Magnus siquidem error in nostris codicibus inolevit (inquit Hieronymus), et apud nos mixta sunt omnia.' Non alium de hac controversia judicem desideramus quam Hieronymum, ocularem codicum tam Græcorum quam Latinorum inspectorem. Quid hic Millius? Hieronymum mendacii incusat, immo contra constare dicit† 'haud alterius generis vitia versionem hanc Italam contraxisse, quam quæ cæteri omnes codices, tractu temporis, incuria, et licentia librariorum. Codices vero Græcos ad quos revertendum censebat Hieronymus, in multis abiisse à primævis illis è quibus Latina hæc profluxere. Verbo dicam (inquit), libri qui hac ætate ferebantur, etiamque præstantissimi quique, interpolati erant et mixti, ne Origeniani quidem, et cæteri probatiores, ad quorum fidem ex occasione provocat Hieronymus, ab assumentis aliisque vitiis vacabant, soli puri et immaculati erant qui ex autographis apostolorum manabant, proximi istis, licet haud ita puri, quos aliquanto post constitutionem canonis, N. T. describi contigerit, et ex horum aliqua expressa erat versio Italica, adeo ut, ad ipsam emendandam ex Græco, consulendi forent codices, si qui extarent, similes istis ad quorum textum erat composita. Quod autem hos una cum aliis istorum temporum interpolarint magis, magisque librarii ante seculum Hieronymi, frustra ex temporum posteriorum Græcis institui ejus in integram restitutionem: cum enim à lectione quam referebat hæc versio, abierint haud raro libri recentiores, certe quo propius in ea recensenda ad hos acceditur, eo magis Italicam à primogenia sua Scriptura reddes alienam; nec reformabis ipsam, sed transformabis in novam nescio quam, à genuina Vet. Italica plurimum discrepantem.'

Putares, lector, te audire Morinum aliquem, aut Amelotium pro Latinis codicibus, tanquam pro aris et focis contendentem, potius quam protestantem, aut ecclesiæ Angl. filium. Ut autem hic mittam ea quæ hic Millius de versione primæva Italica tam fidenter asserit esse gratis dicta, cui unquam persuadebit, Origenis temporibus, hoc est, dum exemplaria in ecclesiis suis archetypa consulenda essent, ejusque Pamphili et Pierii opera tam egregie laboratum est, ut integre conservarentur, vitiis ita scatuisse, ut non ex iis, sed Italica nescio qua versione, per Millium tandem forent emendanda. Aliud certe existimavit Augustinus, qui pro versione Hieronymi Deo haud parvas egit gratias, eamque eo nomine præcipue suscepit, quod viri in Græcis versati de ea judicare potuissent? Quis ferat Millium tam audacter pronunciantem Græcos codices, è quibus Hieronymus Latinorum sphalmata emendavit, ante sæculum Hieronymi à librariis adeo magis, magisque interpolatos fuisse, ut operam in iis consulendis plane luserit Hieronymus, nec Vulgatam ex eorum collatione emendatam nobis exhibuerit, sed potius in novam transformatam, et à genuina veteri Italica, quam sibi per somnium excogitavit Millius, plurimum discrepantem? Denique cum dicit‡ 'in saniora consilia reversum esse Hieronymum, dum ita calamo temperavit, ut iis tantum quæ sensum mutare videbantur correctis, reliqua manere pateretur ut fuerant,' quid aliud agit quam insaniæ Hieronymum arguere, codicum Latinorum sphalmata ex Græca veritate corrigentem, insaniæ Damasum id munus eidem imponentem, insaniæ Ambrosium potiorem illis autoritatem concedentem, insaniæ Augustinum de libris Græcis apud ecclesias doctiores et diligentiores loquentem, è quibus Latini codices corrigerentur, iisque Latinos codices cedere oportere pronunciantem? insanivisse demum universam ecclesiam existimare, quam in hanc sententiam concessisse monet ὁ πάνυ Waltonus? Verbo dicam, aut in his tam audacter, et quasi de tribunali pronunciatis, ipse Millius, aut totus mundus insaniit.

Porro in consilium adhibuisse se dicit Millius,* 'Vulgatam hodiernam quæ quantumcunque vitiata, haud exiguam certe partem retinet veteris genuinæ.' Frustra, se judice. 'Jam, enim inquit, quando Latina nostra longo sæculorum tractu misere corrupta sunt, vix illi libri sunt minus probati quam qui maximam præferunt cum Latinis nostris consonantiam.' Simonius, cujus criticam in N. T. merito laudat Millius, id fieri non posse contendit hoc argumento, quod multa in veteri Vulgata menda intacta reliquerit Hieronymus, ne Latinorum suorum aures offenderet. Ex libro autem mendis quamplurimis adhuc scatente, et in paucis non semper recte, si Millio† fides, mutato, nihil certo colligi posse quo vetus Italica ad suam integritatem restituta esset, nemo non videt.

Horum inquit, Millius,‡ 'mediorum cum textu Græco commissorum adminiculo, sive excussis antiquissimis codicibus, et allegationibus vetustissimorum patrum Latinorum, exactisque iis singulis ad fontem Græcum, assecutum me esse confido, quæ in plerisque Nov. Test. locis fuerint ipsius Italicæ genuina.'

Juvat hic Millium Millio committere. Hieronymum à Millio reprehensum audivimus, quod ad hos fontes, librariorum interpolationibus, ejus ætate magis magisque vitiatos, provocaverit. Id Millius post mille et ducentos annos, se felici opera præstitisse existimat, quod frustra Hieronymus, cum suis interpolatis Græcis, aggressus est. An id Hieronymo accidit codicum Latinorum vetustissimorum, aut patrum Latinorum inopia? Mirum, contingere id potuisse Latino Romæ id temporis agenti, cum opus illud concinnâsset, et de scriptis Latinorum patrum usque ad suam ætatem in catalogo suo judicium proferenti. Id unum dicendum superest, Hieronymo judicium, vel criticum illum nasum in genuinis decernendis defuisse, qui Millio tandem in eadem opera versanti contigit, aut juxta Augustinum 'operam omni laude majorem in veteri falsitate corrigenda Hieronymum præstitisse.' Porro si Græci codices ita, Hieronymi ætate, interpolati fuissent, ut nullum ex iis certum judicium de Latinis codicibus ferre potuerit Hieronymus,§ unde est quod codicem Alexandrinum inter exemplaria Vet. Test. non tantum toto orbe vetustissima, sed et probatissima ponat Millius, 'ita ut certe ab ipsis fere canonis incunabulis (inquit) vix extitisse censeam qui archetypam evangelistarum et apostolorum Scripturam fidelius expresserit?' An codicem hunc Hieronymo, qui ad Pierii et Origenis exemplaria in bibliotheca Alexandrina conservata toties provocat, ignotum fuisse existimandum est? Codicem ex quo versio Æthiopica‖ prodit, unum è primævis, aut ad primævum aliquem expressum esse censet Millius, quo jure vidimus. Idem de versione Coptica¶ pronunciat, eam, nempe, ex fonte Græco profluxisse, exemplari optimo, unoque è primævis, aut certe ex hujusmodi aliquo descripto. Inter codices Millio jam notos, ex quibus Novum Testamentum mendis bis mille purgatum se nobis exhibuisse præ se fert Millius, Hieronymo in Palæstina versanti, bibliothecæ Alexandrinæ scrinia pervestiganti, Antiochiam, Constantinopolin, variasque Asiæ provincias perlustranti, immo dum in Ægypto ageret Monasteriorum Nitriensium codices evolventi, ne unum quidem ex tot Græcis codicibus primævis contigisse, ex quo Latinos suos emendaret, quis sanus judicaverit?

ARGUMENTUM.

Continet vindicationem locorum quorundam insigniorum, in quibus lectiones variantes majoris momenti esse videantur, viz. τὸ εἰκῇ, Matt. v. 22. δοξολογία, Matt. vi. 13. νεκροὺς ἐγείρετε, Matt. x. 8. quæ omnia adjectitia esse contendit Millius. LIBRI SECUNDI CAPUT PRIMUM.

LECTIONES variantes à MSS. desumptas, quas nec antiqui Patres, nec Græci Commentatores, nec versiones vetustissimæ agnoverunt, jure optimo rejiciendas esse nemo inficiabitur. Ex iis lectionibus, quas agnoverunt, quædam magni momenti sunt, ideoque majorem disquisitionem postulant, et merentur; aliæ minoris, aut nullius momenti, quas accurata consideratione indignas quis non putat? Hac præsertim de causa, quod licet ex Patribus non pauci, 2—5. 8. volumini exarârint, raro Millius paginam, caput aut librum indicet, ubi variantes suas lectiones reperire possimus; et licet in plurimis Patrum editionibus scripturarum, quæ ab iis citantur, occurrant Indices, adeo tamen manci et imperfecti sunt, ut vix dimidiam partem earum exhibeant, et in hac dimidia parte ex mendis librariorum miræ sint tenebræ. Ne tamen aliquid notatu dignum præteriisse videar, mihi molestum non erit in hanc rem aliquid temporis et laboris insumere.

I. Variarum lectionum quæ notabiles sunt, primam invenies, Matt. v. 22. πᾶς ὁ ὀργιζόμενος τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ εἰκῇ, 'vox εἰκῇ (ait ille) videtur omnino scholion esse, è margine codicis alicujus in textum admissum:' ego quidem hujusmodi conjecturæ parum faveo, nec in textum Ecclesiis Christianorum publice recitatum insolens aliquod irrepsisse facile credam, nisi ex causa graviori, quam hic loci nullo modo invenio. Vulgatæ enim versioni, patribusque Latinis, habeo quod opponam, testimonium Justini M. Nec quis mihi merito objiciat, quod vocem εἰκῇ præterierit Justinus* secunda sua apologia his verbis, ὃς δ' ἂν ὀργισθῇ, ἔνοχός ἐστιν εἰς τὸ πῦρ. Periodus enim ista omnibus suis numeris non expleta est, atque ῥακὰ aliquis, et μωρὲ pari jure, ac εἰκῇ textu depellat. Idem de Irenæo dicendum est, qui Christi præcepta summatim enumerans ait,† 'Dominus pro eo quod est non occides, neque irasci quidem præcepit;' sed‡ tribus aliis locis hunc ipsum textum proferens, disertè addit, 'sine causa.' Ita Cyprianus lib. iii. p. 64. Apost. Constitutiones, lib. ii. cap. 53. Ita Chrysostomus, Euthymius, et Theophylactus in locum. Ita Basilius M. tom. ii. p. 447. Greg. Nyssen. de Beatit. Or. 5. p. 818. et tom. ii. p. 791. Theodoretus Orat. 9. adv. Græcos, p. 621. et in Psal. p. 443. Ita Cyrillus Alex. in Zach. p. 768. Chrysostomus Hom. 6. in Divum Paulum Ed. Sav. tom. viii. καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς πάλιν, ὁ ὀργιζόμενος τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ εἰκῇ, οὐκ ἄλλως ὀργιζόμενος. Et Edit. Mor. tom. iii. p. 25. εἶδες πανταχοῦ μέτρα, ὀργίζεσθε, καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε, ὁ ὀργιζόμενος εἰκῇ. ἔστι γὰρ καὶ δικαίως ὀργίζεσθαι. et tom. iv.

p. 84. Vide ibi Fr. Ducæum; et p. 114. et 116. bis; et tom. v. p. 345. Syrus autem et Copt. vocem hanc ita propriam hoc loco putârunt, ut retinere eam maluerint quam interpretari. Cum vero "vox εἰκῇ, ex Millii sententia, necessario adhibenda videretur, ad emolliendum sc. quod aliqui durius dictum putarent;" ex ea sententia recte colligimus, quod vocem illam nemo quidem de industria omiserit; potuit tamen omitti ex oscitantia librariorum, quod aliis locis accidisse ipsi sæpissime in confesso est.

2. Ex insignioribus variantium lectionum secunda est, ea quæ dominicam orationem claudit doxologia, ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία, καὶ ἡ δύναμις, καὶ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, Matt. vi. 13. "quam Græcis liturgiis ortum suum debuisse" Millius, multique critici judicant, quoniam sicut non reperitur apud Lucam xi. 4. ita neque apud patres Latinos; præterea deest apud Græcos, Origen. Cyprian. tertio sæculo; Cyrillum Hierosol. Gr. Nyssen. quarto sæculo; etiam ubi dominicam orationem ex professo interpretantur: ægre tamen in animum inducam meum precationi ab ipso Domino nostro compositæ commentitium aliquod adjecisse sanctos Patres: quod sic hic loci factum esset, cur non etiam pari temeritate apud Divum Lucam? Reperies quidem hanc clausulam in omnibus orientalibus versionibus, è quibus Syriaca, Waltono judice, Apostolorum fere temporibus confecta est, et apud eruditos haud paucos, ait, Millius,* "convenit ipsam sæculo Apostolico proxime sequente à viris Apostolicis fuisse concinnatam;" legas eam apud Chrysostomum, Euthymium, Theophylactum, i. e. apud omnes Græcos commentatores in locum: Chrysostomus explicat eam, et explanat ad hunc modum, ταῦτα γάρ φησιν, αἰτῶ παρὰ σοῦ, ὅτι οἶδά σε βασιλέα πάντων, αἰώνιον κεκτημένον κράτος, καὶ πάντα δυνάμενον ὅσαπερ ἂν θέλῃς, καὶ δόξαν κεκτημένον ἀναφαίρετον. Isidorus Pelusiota Ep. lib. iv. Ep. 24. Dominicam orationem interpretatus est, atque ibi asserit, si recitaret aliquis hæc verba ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία, καὶ ἡ δύναμις, καὶ ἡ δόξα, καταφρονεῖν δὲ τοῦ πᾶσαν δύναμιν καὶ δόξαν πηγάζοντος, fontem interim omnis potestatis et gloriæ sperneret illum, quicunque sit, criminis irremissibilis se reum facere, eosque solos eadem verba sincere proferre, qui ad singula Dei jussa toto corpore contremiscunt. Apostolicæ Constitutiones † hanc precationem bis exhibent pariter ac in textu, minime mutilam et decurtatam, eamque appellant nomine precationis, ἣν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ διετάξατο. Denique cum Lucianus Philopatrim suam absolvens ait, τὴν εὐχὴν ἀπὸ πατρὸς ἀρξάμενος καὶ τὴν πολυώνυμον ὠδὴν εἰς τέλος ἐπιθείς, illum Dominicæ orationis initium, ac finem perstrinxisse censet Cotelerius. Origenem ‡ in hac re parvi facio, cujus testimonio si fides adhibenda esset, tum γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, item ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ, de Lucæ textu, tanquam de loco non suo, tollenda sunt; temerarium facinus ac valde periculosum: ad summam, Gr. Nyssen et S. Ambrosius hanc clausulam non (prout innuit Millius) penitus omiserunt, sed more Græcarum quarundam Liturgiarum hanc una cum Doxologia Filii et Spiritus Sancti simul protulerunt. Gr. Nyssen enim suam Dominicæ orationis explicationem peragit his verbis; § "Quin stantes Deum precemur, Ne nos inducas in tentationem, sed libera nos à malo, à quo liberet nos gratia Christi, ὅτι αὐτῷ ἡ δύναμις, καὶ ἡ δόξα, ἅμα τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, νῦν καὶ ἀεί, καὶ εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, Ἀμήν." Ad eundem modum Pseudo Ambr. lib. vi. de Sacram. c. ult. Denique cum hæc δοξολογία, testibus Drusio et Lightfooto, saltem quoad sensum in publicis Judæorum Liturgiis obtinuerit, et in versionibus Syrorum et Arabum, in confiniis gentis Judaicæ degentium, atque adeo ex iis hanc formulam recipientium inveniatur, cumque apud Patres Græcos invaluerit mos mentione Patris facta ei adscribere μεγαλοσύνην καὶ δύξαν εἰς αἰῶνας. Ἀμήν. Vide Clem. R. Epist. Ed. Junii p. 29. et in fine, verisimile est eam locum hic suum obtinere, potius quam manu aliena et temeraria huic S. Orationi additam fuisse.

3. Matt. vi. 32. mentio facta est de additamento quodam ab Origene et Clemente Alex. haud semel citato; viz. αἰτεῖτε τὰ μεγάλα, καὶ τὰ μικρὰ ὑμῖν προστεθήσεται· καὶ αἰτεῖτε τὰ ἐπουράνια, καὶ τὰ ἐπίγεια ὑμῖν προστεθήσεται. "Ita tamen (ait ille) ut tricesimi tertii commatis loco positum haud putem; sed appositum pôtius interpretamenti gratia:" quod luce clarius fiet ex ipso Clemente, Strom. iv. p. 488. cum enim Christi verba citasset, Ζητεῖτε πρῶτον τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ τὴν δικαιοσύνην, addit, ταῦτα γὰρ μεγάλα, et deinde sequitur, τὰ δὲ μικρὰ, καὶ περὶ βίον ταῦτα προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν.

4. Cap. x. 8. Νεκροὺς ἐγείρετε, "Probabile est adjectum hoc aliunde (ait Millius) et quidem ab ipsis pene Christianismi primordiis (cum id Syrus, Vulg. et Cant. legant) quoniam omittunt MSS. triginta amplius,* Basilius, M. Chrysostomus, Euthymius, et Theophylactus in locum." Sed extant hæc verba apud Hilarium canon. 9. apud. Cant. et Alex. MSS. apud Cyrillum Alex. Is. p. 862. Glaphyr. in Deut. p. 426. et de Sancta Trinitate, lib. iii. p. 494. Cur autem omissa fuere ratio probabilis à Millio redditur, nempe, quod neminem ante Christi resurrectionem ab Apostolis vitæ redditum legimus; qui maximam hujusce capitis partem ad secundam missionem Christo demum è mortuis suscitato respectum habuisse parum animadverterunt; hac forsan ex ratione ad illa omittenda facile adduci potuerunt: cur autem adderentur, ne color quidem, aut prætextus est, cum novam afferant difficultatem, nulla adhuc mentione facta de mundatis leprosis pariter ac mortuis suscitatis. Ita cap. xi. 5. χωλοὶ περιπατοῦσι, νεκροὶ ἐγείρονται desunt (ait ille) in Origene in Joh. sc. p. 103. Sed longe fallitur opinione; primam periodi partem agnoscit Origenes, et alteram absque ulla variante lectione reperies Luc. vii. 22. ideoque utrum sint Christi verba, in dubium venire non potest.

5. Cap. xi. 23. Καὶ σὺ Καπερναοὺμ, ἡ ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθεῖσα; μὴ ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθήσῃ; MSS. quædam, Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 70. p. 371. Sed ex annotationibus doctissimi Grabii constat, quod illa lectio non ipsius Irenæi, sed solius Latini interpretis sit: "Nam in nullo, ait Grabius, Græcorum Patrum hunc locum ita allegatum reperio: Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Arabica, Syriaca, Persica vers. textui assentiuntur."

6. Cap. xix. 17. Τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν; In annotationibus Millii Matthæus, inquit Origenes, ὡς περὶ ἀγαθοῦ ἔργου ἐρωτηθέντος τοῦ σωτῆρος ἐν τῷ τί ἀγαθὸν ποιήσω; ἀνέγραψεν τί με ἐρωτᾷς περὶ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ; Ὁ δὲ Μάρκος καὶ Λουκᾶς φασὶ τὸν σωτῆρα εἰρηκέναι, τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν; Sed Justinus M. in Dial. cum Tryph. p. 328. Irenæus, lib. i. cap. 17. Origenes contra Celsum, lib. v. p. 238. cum textu congruunt. De altera hac lectione venerandæ antiquitatis, silentium est apud Millium, viz. Θεὸς ὁ Πατὴρ, vel, Πατὴρ ὁ ἐν οὐρανοῖς vel Πατήρ μου ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. Occurrit hæc lectio in Justino M. p. 328. Clemente Alex. Pædag. p. 118. Origene, ubi supra, Exhort. ad Mart. p. 169. Comment. in Joh. p. 38. et libro primo de principiis cap. tertio. Placuit forte Millio hanc lectionem prætermittere, quoniam, Ariana exorta controversia, vocem πατὴρ in evangelio scriptam fuisse præcise negarunt. Adjecta erat à Marcionitis, inquit Epiphanius. † Et Orthodoxus in primo Dial. de Trin. (quem nonnulli ‡ Athanasii fuisse putant) οὐκ εἴρηται (ait) οὐδεὶς ἀγαθὸς εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ πατὴρ, ἀλλὰ εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ Θεός· Vox quidem πατὴρ nec apparet jam in nostris MSS. nec agnita olim fuit à vetustis interpretibus. Cum vero Valentiniani, Marcionitæ, aliique Hæretici hâc voce causam suam fulcire putentur, Sanctos Patres hoc usurpâsse verbum, reclamantibus MSS. suis quis credat? Hinc constat quam parum fidei et autoritatis variantes ex iis desumptæ lectiones mereantur.

Quod eadem figura dicendi de ambobus sacramentis veteris fœderis utitur sacra Scriptura; de circumcisione enim ante dicit quam Abraham circumcideretur, hoc est pactum meum, αὐτὴ ἡ διαθήκη, quod observabitis inter me et vos, Gen. xvii. 10. Et de agno paschali ante dicitur, πάσχα ἐστὶ Κυρίῳ. victima transitus Domini est, Exod. xii. 27. quem transivit Dominus super domos filiorum Israel, percussit autem omne progenitum in terra Ægypti. Vide Annotata mea in hunc locum.

8. Marc. i. 2. Ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, hanc lectionem pro virili parte jamdudum tuebar; cui defensioni adjunge testimonium Hieronymi in Matt. iii. F. 8. lit. C. Nos autem nomen Isaiæ putamus additum scriptorum vitio.

9. Marc. xv. 25. Erat autem τρίτη ὥρα, tertia hora, et crucifixerunt eum. Joh. xix. 14. ὥρα ὡσεὶ ἕκτη, vide hoc ἐναντιοφανὲς, conciliatum in annotatis nostris ad hunc locum. Lectio τρίτη ad Johan. librariorum sine dubio est, non evangelistæ, inquit Millius.

10. Luc. i. 35. Διὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον. Hic loci MSS. omnesque versiones, et plurimi è patribus post γεννώμενον addunt ἐκ σοῦ, quam lectionem versio Anglicana probat et firmat, dicendo quod nascetur ex te; nec injuria; ad hunc enim modum legunt Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 26. Tertullianus contra Prax. cap. 26. Novatianus de Trin. cap. 19. Origenes Dial. contra Marcion. p. 121. Eutropio enim postulante ut ex scripto recitentur verba, recitantur τὸ γεννώμενον ἐκ σοῦ, hac simul nota adnexa, quod evangelista non dicit διὰ σοῦ, ἀλλ' ἐκ σοῦ; ad eundem modum autor Quæstionum et Respond. ad Orthod. qu. 46. p. 430. Epiphanius Anch. p. 69. Chrysostomus Ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 476. Quibus comites adjungit Millius Athanasium, Greg. Thaumaturgum, Titum Bost. et Hescychium. Videtur tamen illi quod hæc lectio orta sit ex interpretamento, ἵνα φύσει γεννώμενον ἐκ Μαρίας πιστευθείη. Pace tua dicam, docte editor, inter illas quas germanas esse acriter contendis, non una ex sexcentis pari atque hæc lectio autoritate innititur. Vide Proleg. p. 72. col. 1.

11. Luc. ii. 22. Αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ αὐτῶν. Vulg. et Arab. αὐτῆς· veram et antiquam lectionem textui convenisse ex his Origenis verbis Hom. 14. in D. Lucam, F. 100. D. discimus, "si scriptum esset 'propter purgationem ejus,' i. e. Mariæ, nihil quæstionis oriretur, et audacter diceremus Mariam quæ homo erat purgatione indiguisse post partum; nunc vero in eo quod ait 'dies purgationis eorum,' non videtur unum significare, sed alterum, sive plures." Vide hic Millium textum confirmantem, Prol. p. 64. col. 2. p. 72. col. 1. p. 80. col. 2. Corrige igitur annotata nostra in hunc locum.

12. Luc. xi. 2. ——— γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου, v. 4. —— ἀλλὰ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. Utraque petitio, ait Origenes,* explicans hanc precationem, παρὰ Λουκᾶ σεσιώπηται. Notat et Augustinus† "quod Evangelista Lucas in Oratione Dominica petitiones non septem, sed quinque complexus est, ——— Ostendens ergo Lucas tertiam petitionem duarum superiorum esse quodammodo repetitionem, magis eam prætermittendo fecit intelligi, 'et libera nos à malo' iste non posuit, ut intelligeremus ad illud superius, quod de tentatione dictum est, pertinere." Δοκεῖ δέ μοι (inquit Origenes) ὁ Λουκᾶς διὰ τοῦ, μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμὸν, δυνάμει δεδιδαχέναι καὶ τὸ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ, omittuntur in Vul. et in plerisque exemplarium Latinorum, ait Maldonatus; quem tamen habemus ingenue confitentem, quod extent in omnibus fere MSS. Græcis. Agnoscunt has petitiones, et interpretantur Euthymius et Theophylactus, et singulæ versiones Orientales. Origeni quos opponam habeo sanctum Cyprianum, Cyrillum Hieros. Gr. Nyssenum, Chrysostomum, in quorum commentariis de insigni hac omissione altum silentium est: Augustino Augustinum oppono, qui in tractatu de verbis Domini secundum Lucam universas septem petitiones diserte enumerat; et S. Ambrosius hanc precationem è Luca textui congruentem depromit. Vulgatam minoris facio, quæ in Luca sic exorditur, 'Cum oratis, dicite, pater, sanctificetur,' &c. at vel ipse Origenes ait, τοῦ δὲ Λουκᾶ οὕτως, Πατὴρ ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. Unde cogitur Millius dicere irrepsisse hæc ante tempora Origenis, Prol. p. 44. col. 1. Postremo etiam quod inter omnia exemplaria Græca, Millio teste, bina sola his petitionibus careant, quod si olim defuissent hæ petitiones tum in Græcis, tum in Latinis MSS. eas tot Græcos librarios dedita opera adjecisse, quis sibi unquam persuadere potest?

13. Luc. xi. 13. Δώσει πνεῦμα ἅγιον τοῖς αἰτοῦσιν αὐτόν. Ἀγαθὸν δόμα, Cant. (et Origenes, ut opinor, qui tamen donum illud interpretatur πνεῦμα τῆς νἱοθεσίας) spiritum bonum Vulg. cum quatuor MSS. 'magno consensu exemplarium; quibus ego sane magis assentior,' inquit Erasmus. Hæc Millius. Erasmi autem verba sunt, 'Græci codices, qui tum aderant, legebant πνεῦμα ἅγιον; sed magno consensu reclamantibus exemplaribus Latinis etiam vetustis.' Cecidit belle quod dixerat Latinis: omnia enim exemplaria Græca, Athanasius de humana natura suscepta, p. 607. Theophylactus in locum textui consentiunt, et explicantes versiculum nonum,—quærite et invenietis;—ex his verbis recte colligunt, quod Pater sit daturus Spiritum Sanctum petentibus. Denique omnes orientales versiones reddunt πνεῦμα ἅγιον, sicut Chrysostomus Hom. 1. de precatione, Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 747.

14. Joh. i. 3. Οὐδὲ ἓν ὃ γέγονεν ——— 4. ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν. Tot hic loci variantes lectiones quot nec ipse Millius enumerare potuit. Apud commentatores plena errorum sunt omnia, adeo inter se invicem, et etiam à sibimetipsis dissident, atque discordant, ut quicunque scripta eorum pervolutabit, næ incertior ille fiat multo quam dudum. 1. Quidam ex antiquis legunt, ὃ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν. Ita Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 9. p. 186. Origenes Com. in Joh. p. 63. et 66. φησὶ γὰρ καὶ ὃ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν. Alios quamplurimos hanc lectionem retinuisse ex eo colligitur, quod apud illos hujus versiculi clausula est, ἐγένετο οὐδὲ ἕν. Sed Maldonatus ait, "Non enim quia hæc tantum verba citare solent, continuo putandum est, ibi eos punctum finitæ sententiæ posuisse, sed ea tantum protulisse verba, quæ ad probandum id quod agebant satis erat, quod nos etiam sæpe facere solemus." Certum indicium quod Ambrosius, qui lib. iii. de fide, cap. 3. fine ipso factum esse nihil quod factum est, legendum esse contendit, vel potius apud plerosque obtinere, ait, aliquando non nisi hæc legat verba, 'omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil,' ut sermone 20. in Psal. cxviii.* Et quod magis mirum est, Hilarius, qui legendum esse dicit, 'sine ipso factum est nihil, quod factum est in ipso;' sæpe tamen in eodem libro non nisi hæc verba citat, 'omnia per ipsum facta sunt,' aliquando hæc sola, 'sine ipso factum est nihil.' Quod si hic Maldonati sermo ad Hilarium non exquisite quadraret, certo tamen certius est quadrasse illum cum omnibus fere Græcis Patribus, qui textum ipsum firmant et corroborant. Altera autem lectio olim fuit Valentinianorum, Iren. lib. i. p. 39. Arianorum, Ambrosius, lib. iii. de fide cap. 3. Epiphanius Anchor. p. 80. Eunomianorum et Macedonianorum, unde Chrysostomus in locum, οὐδὲ γὰρ τὴν τελείαν στιγμὴν τῷ οὐδὲ ἓν ἐπιθήσομεν κατὰ τοὺς αἱρετικοὺς, ἐκεῖνοι γὰρ βουλόμενοι τὸ πνεῦμα κτιστὸν ποιεῖν φασὶν ὃ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν, similiter Euthymius et Theoph.—Secunda lectio, quam memoratu vix dignam afferunt Epiphanius et Hilarius, cum quibusdam aliis, hæc est: 'nihil factum est quod factum est in ipso.' Tertia est ipsius textus lectio, quam apud plerosque obtinuisse merito asserit Ambrosius. Nam ut silentio transeam supra memoratos, qui primam lectionem veluti hæreticam abjudicârunt, Cyprianus, lib. ii. contra Jud. §. 2. Hilarius de Trin. lib. i. p. 6. Epistola ad Antiochenos Ignatio ascripta p. 298. Epiphanius Hær. 51. p. 434. Hieronymus in Isa. xliv. et in Amos vi. lectionem in textu retinent; et licet Millius Gr. Nazianzenum primæ lectionis patronum adoptârit, in ea tota quidem re erravit: cum enim hæretici, qui Spiritum Sanctum creaturam esse contendebant, opinionem suam confirmârint ex eo quod dictum est de Christo, 'omnia per ipsum facta,' et per consequentiam Spiritum simul Sanctum; hanc objectionem flocci facio, inquit Nazianzenus, * πάντα γὰρ ὅσα γέγονεν εἴρηται, οὐχ ἁπλῶς ἅπαντα. Præterea in hac lectione conveniunt omnes versiones, et quod germana sit lectio, colligi potest. 1. Quod vox ἓν postulare videatur, vel ὃ γέγονεν, vel saltem τῶν γεγεννημένων χωρὶς αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο οὐδὲ ἓν ὃ γέγονεν. Quod 'absque illo factum est ne unum quidem eorum quæ facta sunt.' 2. Si hæc lectio retineatur, sensus verborum erit perspicuus, aliàs obscurus, et explicatu perquam difficilis. Cum autem reduplicatio, figura dicendi apud Hebræos usitatissima, latuerit quondam Patres, factum est quod alteram lectionem facilius admiserint, V. g. Isa. xxxix. 4. Πάντα τὰ ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ μου εἴδοσαν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ μου, ὃ οὐκ εἴδοσαν. Ita v. 20. hujus capitis, καὶ ὡμολόγῃσεν, καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσατο, καὶ ὡμολόγησεν. Quid multa? hoc potius inter varias ejusdem periodi puncturas, quam inter variantes lectiones annumerandum est.

15. Act. viii. 37. Εἰ πιστεύεις ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας, ἔξεστι. Desunt hæc in Syr. Æthiop. MSS. 20. unde pro commate παραβεβλημένῳ habet hic Millius,† à primis Christianismi sæculis injecto, ut et alia in libro Actorum Apostolorum haud pauca; legunt siquidem Vulg. (Arab.) Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 12. lib. iv. cap. 40. (unde, notante Grabio, apparet Irenæum hæc verba in suo codice legisse) Tertullianus de Bapt. cap. 18. Cyprianus ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 33. Œcumenius in locum, Hieronymus, tom. iv. f. 46. lit. I. Augustinus de fide et operibus cap. 9. et 12.—Idem tamen Millius Prol. p. 40. col. ii. iisdem fere testimoniis adductus contrarium plane dicit, nempe, "hunc versiculum pro injectitio olim à nobis habitum lectum ab Irenæo constat, lib. iii. cap. 12. p. 229. et ad αὐθεντίαν ejus stabiliendam haud param conferunt Vulg. Tertullianus, Cyprianus." Nec difficile est rationem assignare vero proximam, cur ægre à quibusdam sequioris ævi scriptoribus hæc verba retinerentur; objici nempe ea solent in præjudicium disciplinæ et πράξεως ecclesiasticæ in restringendis tamdiu à baptismo catechumenis, ac tot iis fidei capita discenda proponendi more, priusquam ad salutare lavacrum admitterentur. Constat hoc ex illatis Tertulliani, Hieronymi, Augustini locis, in quibus huic objectioni responsum quale quale exhibent. Hinc denique Præsul doctissimus hanc Cypriano notam apponit, "Leges ecclesiasticæ, quæ cavebant ne Judæi, vel gentiles, aliique indigni præpropere admissi, Christiano nomini dedecus inurerent, nec debent, nec possunt gratiæ divinæ prejudicare."

16. Rom. i. 32. Οἵτινες τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιγνόντες (ὅτι οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες ἄξιοι θανάτου εἰσὶν) οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι. Integra hæc lectio (ait Millius) sic se habebat, οἵτινες τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιγνόντες, οὐκ ἐνόησαν, ὅτι οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες ἄξιοι θανάτου εἰσὶν, οὐ μόνον δὲ οἱ ποιοῦντες αὐτὰ ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ συνευδοκοῦντες τοῖς πράσσουσι. Hinc ex una parte sunt Vulg. et Latini patres qui vulgata versione usi sunt, Cyprianus, Lucifer Calaritanus, Gildus, Hesychius latine ab Hesychio Salonitano (inquit Cavius nostras) ad vulgatam versionem adaptatus, Ambrosius, Pseudo-Hieronymus, Salvianus, Augustinus; atque his palmam defert Millius: ex altera parte sunt non omnes modo versiones orientales, sed etiam Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Theophylactus in locum, qui conantur rationem reddere cur συνευδοκοῦσι postponatur ποιοῦσιν, et sic textus lectioni robur addunt et firmamentum. Vide Chrysost. Hom. Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 145. tom. ii. p. 1023. tom. iii. p. 618. Epiphan. Hær. Orig. p. 585. Basil. tom. i. in Isa. p. 160. tom. ii. Mor. p. 450. Reg. brev. p. 632. Greg. Nyssen. tom. ii. p. 734. et Theologium Diaconum ubi ad suas illum partes trahit Millius. Quæstio enim erat, ait Isidorus,‡ τί ἐστι τὸ οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι; respondet Isidorus, οἱ μὴ νοήσαντες τὸ εἰρημένον putant περιπεποιῆσθαι τὰς λέξεις τὰς ἀποστολικὰς, et legendum arbitrantur οὐ μόνον οὐ ποιοῦντες αὐτὰ, ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ συνευδοκοῦντες, i. e. cum Millio quidam sentiebant. Mihi autem non videtur, ait ille, ἡμαρτῆσθαι ἐν τούτῳ τὰ ἀποστολικὰ βιβλία,—et deinde ad recitandam et explicandam textus lectionem progreditur. N. B. Quod hæc Isidori verba citentur etiam ab Œcumenio in locum. Quod ad Clementem Rom. attinet, in binis ad Corinthios Epistolis scito illum perpaucos novi fœderis locos juxta textum allegâsse; adeo ut in parag. 35. idcirco solum posteriorem versiculi partem ad hunc modum citâsse videatur, quo facilius illam ad præcedentia verba accommodaret, ταῦτα γὰρ πράσσοντες στύγητοὶ τῷ Θεῷ ὑπάρχουσιν, καὶ οὐ μόνον οἱ πράσσοντες, &c.

17. Rom. vii. 26. Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, v. l. χάρις τῷ Θεῷ, sic Origenes, Exhort. ad Mart. p. 164. Cyrillus Alex. contra Anthropomorph. p. 178. Omnia autem Græcorum scholia textum referunt, (fallitur enim Millius cum Theodoretum excipit, qui in commentario suo alterius cujuscunque lectionis ne suspicionem quidem affert) et Sanctus Basilius, tom. i. p. 551. Utraque lectio idem significat, viz. gratia agenda est Deo. Tertia lectio, gratia Dei, soli Vulg. autoritati innititur, ejusque etiam depravatæ; Hieronymus enim uno loco legit, 'gratias ago Deo,' ait Esthius in locum. Vide tamen Millium Prol. p. 65. col. 1.

18. Rom. xi. 6. Εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων οὐκέτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκέτι ἐστὶν ἔργον. Cum desint hæc verba quatuor MSS. Vulg. et per consequentiam Ambrosio et Latino Origenis interpreti, proinde subdititia summo consensu tradunt Erasmus, Zegerus, Esthius, Grotius, et Millius: genuina autem esse asserunt autoritate graviores viri, Photius, Œcumenius, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Theodoretus, qui his non solum verbis utitur, sed in commentario observat suo, quod apostolus in eandem sententiam loquatur, Rom. iv. 4. 'Ei autem qui operatur, merces non imputatur secundum gratiam, sed secundum debitum.' His adde Chrysostomum, qui tom. v. Ed. Morel. p. 718. et citat textus verba et explicat. Ὁ γὰρ ἐξ ἔργων νομικῶν σωθῆναι φιλονεικῶν οὐδὲν ἔχει κοινὸν πρὸς τὴν χάριν; ὅπερ οὖν καὶ Παῦλος αἰνιττόμενος ἔλεγεν, εἰ χάριτι, &c. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων οὐκέτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκέτι ἐστὶν ἔργον. Adeo longe fallitur opinione Millius, cum Chrysostomum ac Theodoretum hæc verba in commentariis suis non attigisse indicat.

19. Rom. xii. 11. Τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες, sic legunt è MSS. plus viginti, omnes versiones, Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. iii. cap. 12. Basilius tom. ii. p. 474. omnia Græcorum scholia: Hieronymus Ep. ad Marcel. tom. ii. fol. 33. lit. D. cujus hæc sunt verba, "illi legant, spe gaudentes, 'tempori' servientes; nos legamus 'Domino' servientes; illis placeat humanus sermo; nos cum Græcis, i. e. cum apostolo, qui Græce locutus est, erremus." "Latini omnes, excepto Ambrosio," inquit Esthius; qui tamen non potest non confiteri quod in Græco dicatur sic habere 'Domino' servientes. Atque ad hanc lectionem stabiliendam non leve momentum affert dictio ipsa δουλεύειν, nam δουλεύειν τῷ Θεῷ, Κυρίῳ, Χριστῷ alibi occurrunt in novo fœdere; quod si δουλεύειν τῷ καιρῷ in toto sacro codice quæras, frustra suscipiatur labor. Millius tamen tum hic tum in Proleg. suis, p. 61. 84. 117, 140. "facile crediderim, ait, cum Erasmo τῷ καιρῷ esse germanam lectionem."

20. Rom. xii. 13. Ταῖς χρείαις τῶν ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες. Μνείαις genuinum, ait Millius locis pluribus. Lectioni tamen isti nemo favet præter Latinos patres quarti et quinti sæculi, postquam celebrandi memorias martyrum, sepulchraque eorum prava superstitione frequentandi mos, et consuetudo increbuit. Omnia autem Græcorum scholia, omnes versiones, ne ipsa quidem vulgata excepta, et Sanctus Basilius, tom. ii. p. 474. χρείαις retinent. Esthius Ruffino astipulatur, eamque censet veriorem quæ Græcorum erat codicum, "quandoquidem eam (unum Ambrosiastrum cum Sedulio si demas) concorditer in textu habent, et exponunt, quotquot tam Latine quam Græce in hanc epistolam commentatos novimus, nec in ullo, vel Latino vel Græco, exemplari, quod hodie extat, diversa lectio reperiatur," existimatque non male, istud lectionis dissidium olim accidisse ex vicinitate Græcarum vocum χρείαις et μνείαις. Hoc autem mendum simul ac à librariis factum fuit, cupidis ulnis amplexi sunt è Latinis isti, qui superstitiosa sollicitudine et zelo, sepulcra martyrum coluerunt; utpote quod consuetudini suæ aliquibus suspectæ, et à multis reprehensæ, majorem in modum patrocinari putarent. Hilarius, in sua ad Constantinum epistola, sic eum alloquitur, "Apostolus communicare sanctorum memoriis nos docuit, tu eas negare coegisti." Pro eo quod proferunt MSS. libri plerique et excusi omnes (ait Millius, Prol. p. 17. col. 1.) videtur certo legisse Clemens Rom. in Archetypo suo, ταῖς μνείαις τῶν, &c. et locum hunc interpretatur Clemens, "inopum, vel afflictorum Christianorum procul à nobis degentium memoriam habere μετ' οἰκτιρμῶν, seu ita ut ipsorum necessitates sublevemus." In hac Millii sententia οὐδὲν ὑγιὲς, sed purum ipsius commentum, sine ullo indicio B. Clementem de his verbis vel per somnium cogitâsse. Sic enim incipit hæc sectio, "Oremus pro eis qui in aliquod peccatum lapsi sunt, ut detur illis ἐπιείκεια mansuetudo, et humilitas, quo non nobis, sed voluntati Dei cedant;" et deinde sequuntur verba à Millio citata, οὕτως γὰρ ἔσται ἔγκαρπος, καὶ τελεία ἡ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους μετ' οἰκτιρμῶν μνεία, i. e. "sic enim memoria ipsorum cum commiseratione utilis ipsis et perfecta erga Deum, et sanctos erit." Judicent jam eruditi, utrum hic sit vola vel vestigium sublevationis inopum, vel afflictorum Christianorum procul à nobis degentium, sive τῆς κοινωνίας τῶν ἁγίων, de quibus Millius tam fidenter agit. Judicent etiam utrum aliqua sit ratio existimandi Clementem hunc D. Pauli locum in animo habuisse: rogo denique, ubi facta est apud scriptores primorum ecclesiæ sæculorum mentio τῆς κοινωνίας ταῖς μνείαις τῶν ἁγίων; Τὰς τῶν ἁγίων μαρτύρων μνήμας ποιεῖν, τὰς μνείας μαρτύρων τελεῖν, sunt phrases quæ apud canonum scriptores sæpius occurrunt. Sanctorum adhuc viventium, ταῖς μνείαις κοινωνεῖν nusquam. Frustra ergo ἐκ μνείαις factum esse χρείαις à scriba quodam eruditulo pronunciat Millius hic, et Prol. p. 46. et 82.

21. 1 Cor. x. 3, 4. Τὸ αὐτὸ βρῶμα —— τὸ αὐτὸ πόμα, deest τὸ αὐτὸ Alex. Æthiop. inquit Millius. At retinent Græca scholia, vulgata, cæteræque versiones ad unum omnes, Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 45. p. 347. Origenes in Matt. p. 414. in Joh. p. 134. contra Celsum, p. 197. in Num. Ho. 7. f. 101. B. Basilius, tom. ii. p. 422. Macarius Ægypt. Hom. 4. p. 22. Chrysostomus, Ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 196. Cyrillus Alex. Glaph. in Exod. p. 314. et de R. fide p. 39. Grave hoc quidem contra transubstantiationem argumentum ut è manibus nostris extorqueret, summam contulit diligentiam Esthius, non tamen vel unum è Latinis patribus τὸ αὐτὸ omiserint, allegare potuit.

22. 2 Cor. x. 12. Οὐ συνιοῦσιν. Omittunt Vulg. Clar. Gr. Lat. Ger. Lat. retinent igitur omnia (præter Clar.) Græca exemplaria et Scholia. Ne tamen vulgatæ suæ αὐθεντία diminuta esset, de Græcis, tanquam grammaticæ constructionis insciis, fidenter pronunciat Millius* in hunc modum. "Græci quibus apostoli ista paulo præruptiora visa sunt, sumptis αὐτοὶ, ἑαυτοὺς, ἑαυτοῖς, in tertia persona, suppleverunt orationem istam per marginale scholion, οὐ συνιοῦσιν, quod irrepsit mox in contextum libri." En testes omni exceptione majores, quibus pudore suffundantur Græci, Ambrosiastrum qui hic omittit; nos autem, teste Esthio, contra fidem omnium exemplarium tam Latinorum quam Græcorum; Pelagium hæreticum, seu potius Pseud. Hieronymi commentarios, nullo judicio (teste Usserio †) à posteriore aliquo compaginatos; et Luciferum Calaritanum, cui opponimus D. Augustinum cum Græcis sæpius consentientem, scil. comment. in Psal. xxxiv. cxviii. cxli. l. 22. contra Faustum cap. 27. et alibi.

23. Gal. ii. 5. Οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξαμεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ, "Expungendum porro est, ait Millius,‡ τὸ οὐδὲ, et legendum 'quibus ad horam cessimus subjectione:'" quam tamen Hieronymus ait solam esse lectionem quorundam Latinorum codicum, viz. Iren. lib. iii. cap. 13. p. 234. Tertul. contra Marc. lib. v. cap. 3. Ambrosii, reclamantibus quod fatetur Græcis. Græca scholia et singulæ vetustissimæ versiones, inter quas vulgata, textui fidem faciunt, atque illius veritatem satis firmant. Sed conjectura auguratur Millius in ipso codice, quo usus est Vulg. interpres, defuisse negationem οὐδὲ credo quod eam haudquaquam ferre videtur apostolicæ dictionis tenor, nedum ipsa rei veritas. Pace autem illius dicam. 1. Tenor apostolicæ dictionis postulat negationem: sermo enim erat de iis quæ acciderunt postquam ascendisset Hierosolymam Paulus; ubi neque Titus (ait ille) qui mecum erat, cum esset gentilis, compulsus est circumcidi; (Nam Millii forsan solius opinio est cessisse tandem Paulum permittendo ut circumcideretur Titus) Nunquam igitur iis Judæis cessit, qui circumcisionem gentilium necessariam ad salutem judicârunt. 2. Noluit Titum circumcidi, ea potissimum de causa, ut opponeret se falsis fratribus, qui κατελθόντες ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας subintroiêrunt explorare libertatem quam habuerunt in Christo Jesu, ut eos in servitutem redigerent; quibus zelotis acriter resistendum esse duxit, ut veritas permaneret apud Galatas, sc. ut permanerent in libertate à jugo circumcisionis quam illis dedit evangelium Christi: hinc est quod capite quinto sic hortatur Galatas, "State, et nolite iterum jugo servitutis contineri; quoniam si circumcidamini, Christus vobis nihil proderit, evacuati estis à Christo, à gratia excidistis," 1, 2. 4. Quicquid igitur Morinus, et Millius è contra litigent, certo certius est tum ipsam rei veritatem apostolicæ dictionis tenorem, postulâsse negationem.

24. Gal. ii. 11. Ὅτε δὲ ἦλθε Πέτρος, et v. 14. εἶπον τῷ Πέτρῳ· Κηφᾶς —— Κηφᾶ, sic Alex. (ait Millius Prol. p. 70.) aliique codices, Vulg. Euthalius, sed omnia Græca scholia, et Arab. textum præferunt. De altera autem lectione in textum admissa in excusationem Petri, ut obviam irent blasphemiis Porphyrii, ad hunc modum judicium suum tulit Hieronymus. Quibus primo respondendum, "alterius nescio cujus nescire nos nomen, nisi ejus qui in evangelio, et in aliis Pauli epistolis, et in hac ipsa, modo Cephas, modo Petrus scribitur; non quod aliud Cephas, aliud significet Petrus, sed quod, quem nos Latine et Græce Petrum vocemus, hunc Hebræi et Syri, propter linguæ inter se vicinam, Cepham nuncupent. Deinde totum argumentum quod oblique de Petro, Johanne, et Jacobo dicitur huic intelligentiæ repugnare." Vide Cotelerii notas in Constit. Apost. p. 99, 100.

25. Ἡ πρὸς Ἐφεσίους Ἐπιστολή. Hanc inscriptionem hic clanculum, sed in Prol. p. 9. col. 1. ex professo et palam rejicit. In præfatione mea ad hanc epistolam, locisque citatis ab eo ad paradoxum suum stabiliendum, argumenta illius dilui, simulque ostendi, quod ab initio agnita fuerit tanquam Epistola ad Ephesios, ex testimoniis Ignatii in principio, Irenæi in medio, Clementis Alex. in fine sæculi secundi, Origenis etiam et Tertulliani dicentis, lib. v. contra Marc. cap. xi. "Epistolam hanc nos ad Ephesios præscriptam habemus, Hæretici vero ad Laodicenos." Vide etiam cap. xvii. quibus adde è tertio sæculo S. Illud ipsum ostendo ex testimoniis in sæculo quarto Athanasii, Orat. 3. adv. Ar. ὁ δὲ Παῦλος ἐν τῇ πρὸς Ἐφεσίους, p. 416. atque iterum p. 446. Epiphanii τῆς πρὸς Ἐφεσίους, Hær. Marcion. p. 147. 372. Greg. Nysseni, φησὶ γὰρ πρὸς Ἐφεσίους γράφων, in Cant. p. 596. διὰ τῶν πρὸς Ἐφεσίους λόγων, Orat. prima de Resur. tom. ii. p. 828. Tametsi vero Basilium et Hieronymum allegat Millius asserentes quod hæc verba ἐν Ἐφέσῳ (in quibus cardo controversiæ vertitur) omissa fuerint quibusdam in exemplaribus, vel decipitur ipse, vel nos arte quadam fallere conatur. Testimonium Basilii occurrit, tom. i. p. 743. ubi se probaturum esse confidit, quod gentes utpote separatæ à Deo denominentur, μὴ ὄντες,—illi autem qui uniuntur Deo, οἱ ὄντες. Apostolus enim (ait ille) τοῖς Ἐφεσίοις ἐπιστέλλων, ὡς γνησίως ἡνωμένοις τῷ ὄντι δι' ἐπιγνώσεως, ὄντας αὐτοὺς ἰδιαζόντως ὠνόμασεν, εἰπὼν τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσι, καὶ πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· οὕτω γὰρ οἱ πρὸ ἡμῶν παραδεδώκασι, καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν τοῖς παλαιοῖς τῶν ἀντιγράφων εὑρήκαμεν. Hæc disserit Basilius* contra Marcionitas, et alios qui depra-varunt Scripturas, τὰ μὲν, inquit, τῶν Θείων ἐξαίροντες, τὰ δὲ παρεγγραφέντες· et consilium illi fuit firmare veritatem hujusce lectionis, τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, quam expunxerunt Marcionitæ, cum hanc epistolam ad Laodicenos datam contendissent. Atque hanc nimiam de voce ὄντες subtilitatem exagitat Hieronymus; "quidam, inquit, curiosius quam necesse est, putant ex eo quod Moysi dictum sit, Qui est misit me, etiam eos qui Ephesi sunt sanctos et fideles, essentiæ vocabulo nuncupatos;" quibus verbis pariter, ac præfatione illius docemur, hanc epistolam ad Ephesios scriptam fuisse.

26. Eph. v. 4. Ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστός. Ita legunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Ita Clemens Alex. Protrept. p. 54. Athanasius Or. quarta contra Arianos, p. 427. Ait tamen Millius, Prol. p. 48. col. 2. ἐπιψαύσει σον "lectionem fuisse, quæ in codicibus Græcorum jam tempore Chrysostomi, et Theodoreti extabat." Verba Chrysostomi sunt hæc, οἱ μὲν ἐπιψαύσεις φησὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, οἱ δὲ ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστὸς, μᾶλλον δὲ τοῦτό ἐστι. Theodoretus καὶ τοῦτο μάλιστα τῇ ἀκολουθίᾳ τῶν εἰρημένων πρόσφορον· En utrosque lectionem hanc plane rejicientes; quibus accedit Hieronymus cujus in locum hæc sunt verba, "scio me audîsse quendam de hoc loco in ecclesia disputantem, et non ut legimus ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστὸς, i. e. orietur tibi Christus, sed ἐφάψεται, i. e. continget te Christus recitantem, sed cum loci istius interpretatione ac contextu sensus iste non convenit:" ubi fontem lectionis hujus aperit, nempe fabulam de Adamo, in loco Calvariæ ubi Christus crucifixus est, sepulto, et tactu corporis et sanguinis Christi vivificando.

27. Heb. ix. 1, Εἶχε οὖν καὶ ἡ πρώτη σκηνή. Σκηνὴ omittunt Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, Vulg. et MSS. quamplurima. Subaudiendum διαθήκη monent Chrysostomus et Photius. "Irrepsit igitur, ait Millius in locum, editum σκηνὴ, ut videtur, ex proxime sequentibus, in quibus tabernaculi descriptio." Sed extat σκηνὴ apud Chrysostomum de die Natali Domini, Ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 472. apud Theodoretum, et Œcumenium. In annotationibus meis in locum probavi quod hæc sit germana lectio; quam quidem sequentia verba, viz. σκηνὴ γὰρ κατεσκευάσθη ἡ πρώτη, extra omnem omnino dubitationem ponunt.

LIBRI SECUNDI CAPUT SECUNDUM.

Continet Examen variantium Lectionum in Evangelia Matthæi, Marci, Lucæ, Johannis, et in Acta Apostolorum.

LIBRI SECUNDI CAPUT SECUNDUM.

SECTIO PRIMA IN MATTHÆUM.

CAP. i. 6. Δαβὶδ δὲ ὁ Βασιλεύς. Deest ὁ Βασιλεύς, Syr. Arab. Pers. Habent Hieronymus, Vulg. Theophylactus, et verba immediate præcedentia 'Jesse autem genuit' τὸν Δαβὶδ τὸν Βασιλέα, satis indicant quod vocabulum illud hic retineri oporteat.

V. 18. Τοῦ δὲ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἡ γέννησις οὕτως ἦν· Vulg. Pers. et Lat. Irenæus omittunt Ἰησοῦ quod tamen agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syrus et Arabs. Inconsulte igitur ac temere suspicatur Erasmus additum ex consuetudine recitationis ecclesiasticæ; male etiam rejicitur à Millio, Prol. p. 40. 42. 103.

Cap. ii. 1. Ἐν ἡμέραις Ἡρῴδου τοῦ Βασιλέως· Hæc verba diserte habent Hieronymus, Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, et venerandæ antiquitatis versiones omnes. Quod si desint forte illa in quatuor MSS. retinentibus amplius quam quadraginta, hoc non modo non labefactat lectionem, sed potius multo plus firmamenti et roboris ei dat. Sed "suspecta mihi fere sunt παρεμβλήσεως, inquit Millius,* quis verba tam insignia absque omni erroris occasione prætermiserit?" Quasi scribæ oscitantes nihil hallucinarentur! Sed ut frigido huic argumento responsum ex Millio demus, animum adverte, quod contendat is ipse "insignem illum locum Johannis de testimonio patris, verbi, et Spiritus ex Græcis ferme omnibus, ex MSS. permultis excidisse:" quid istuc igitur tam mirum, si hanc pericopen, parvi momenti, alteràque multo breviorem, præ incuria ac socordia sua quatuor forsan librarii prætermiserint? Verba etiam Joh. vi. 56. Καθὼς ἐν ἐμοὶ ὁ Πατὴρ, κἀγὼ ἐν τῷ Πατρί. Ἀμὴν, Ἀμὴν, λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ λάβετε τὸ σῶμα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ὡς τὸν ἄρτον τῆς ζωῆς, οὐκ ἔχετε ζωὴν ἐν αὐτῷ. Verba, inquam, tam insignia, ac numerosa, neutiquam interpolatis lectionibus adnumerari vult Millius; sed "pro genuina pericope, multis retro sæculis omissa, habenda" arbitratur, Prol. p. 74. col. 1. Vide etiam Append. p. 32.

V. 4. Παὰ αὐτῶν. Ita Græca scholia, versionesque. Ita Hieronymus; ita etiam demptis quatuor, codices universi, et absque his verbis sensus non plenus est. "Nescio tamen (ait Millius) an irrepserint παρ' αὐτῶν jam olim ex. v. 7. hujus Cap." Prol. p. 154. col. 2.

V. 11. Et magi intrantes domum εὗρον τὸ παιδίον. Origenes in Matt. p. 374. Chrysostomus, Euthymius, Theophylactus, MSS. plura, Æthiop. Syr. Arab. Pers. legunt εἶδον, Hieronymus vero, Vulg. Epiphanius εὗρον. Quod si magi Christum oculis adspexerint suis, invenerint certe illum quem quærebant, et si invenerint, hoc non aliter quam videndo illum, et aspiciendo contigit: non in re igitur, sed in verbo controversia est; cum vero Herodes dixerit, ἐπὰν δὲ εὕρητε, ἀπαγγείλατε μοι. v. 8. si legas εὗρον, extrema primis optime respondebunt.

V. 18. D. Θρῆνος καὶ Hieronymo, Justino M. Dial. p. 304. Versionibusque cunctis. Sed adsunt in Jer. xxxi. 15. unde, teste Hieronymo, citantur hæc verba, et cum Justinus M. diserte dicat Sanctum Spiritum locutum esse hæc verba διὰ Ἱερεμίου οὕτως, citans illa à propheta, non ab apostolo, satis magno argumento esse debet, quod citationibus illius parum fidei adhibendum sit. Versionibus autem, nempe, orientalibus, quæ textui Græco Hebraicum, et Latinis, quæ Hieronymum prætulerint; facile opponam Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, et LXX. qui cum editis congruunt.

Cap. iii. 8. Ποιήσατε οὖν καρποὺς ἀξίους τῆς μετανοίας· καρπὸν ἄξιον, magis probat Millius; nimirum quia codices plurimi, Lat. Irenæus, lib. ii. p. 212. Vulg. Arab. Copt. Æthiop. sic legunt. Πρὸς τοὺς φαρισαίους καὶ σαδδουκαίους, inquit Origenes* Comm. in Joh. p. 119. ποιήσατε, εἴρηται ἐνικῶς, καρπὸν ἄξιον τῆς μετανοίας· πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ὄχλους παρὰ Λουκᾶν πληθυντικῶς καρποὺς ἀξίους. Nulla hic in sensu diversitas; constat enim moneri pharisæos et sadducæos ut digna veræ pœnitentiæ opera facerent. Lectionem autem in textu tuentur ac defendunt. Syr. Chrysostomus, et Theophylactus in locum, Basilius tom. ii. p. 425. qui citat hæc verba nominatim ex Matthæo in numero plurali; Cyrillus Alex. qui sic legit in Matthæo, Comm. in Isa. p. 315. in Mich. p. 408. et Hom. Pasch. quinta p. 53. immo et ipse Origenes, qui eodem in commentario, p. 115. habet hæc verba, ποιήσατε οὖν καρποὺς ἀξίους μετανοίας· ταῦτα γὰρ ὑπὸ τοῦ Βαπτιστοῦ εἴρηται παρὰ τῷ Ματθαίῳ, N. B. ἰδόντος πολλοὺς τῶν φαρισαίων καὶ σαδδουκαίων ἐρχομένους πρὸς τὸ βάπτισμα. Nota etiam quod τὸ παρὰ Λουκᾶν, ut ut citatur à Millio, non est apud Origenem, qui loco prius dicto fortè mysterium quoddam pro more suo celavit, quod explicatu difficile est.

Cap. iv. 12. D. Ὁ Ἰησοῦς, deest in duobus MSS. Æthiop. sed Græca scholia, Hieronymus, et antiquæ versiones, præter Æthiop. omnes retinent illud vocabulum; nec injuria, absque enim illo claudicaret periodus: sed judice Millio "subintellectum ὁ Ἰησοῦς scribæ jam olim in textum introduxere," Proleg. p. 148. col. 2.

Cap. v. 27. Ἐῤῥέθη τοῖς ἀρχαίοις.] Τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, Millio additum videtur, quanquam Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Cyrillus Alex. in Julian. p. 9. et Theodoretus in Psal. ix. p. 433. è Græcis; et Lat. Irenæus lib. iv. cap. 27. p. 314. Hieronymus et Vulg. τοῖς ἀρχαίοις agnoscant. Cum igitur nemo dubitet quin hoc dictum fuerit antiquis, et allegatum sit à tot Patribus, nulla cujuscunque variantis lectionis mentione facta, cur rejiciant, causæ nihil est.

V. 32. Καὶ ὃς ἐὰν ἀπολελυμένην γαμήσῃ μοιχᾶται.] Deest hic pericope in Cant. cod. aliis, teste Augustino, ait Millius. Sed extat apud versiones omnes, Basilium, tom. ii. p. 491. Hieronymum,

* Prol. 162. col. 2.

* Lib. ii. cap. 2. sect. 2.

Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, et quod caput est infra cap. xix. 7. et Luc. xvi. 18. ubi eadem loquendi se obtulit occasio.

V. 44. Εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς καταρωμένους ὑμᾶς, καλῶς ποιεῖτε τοὺς μισοῦντας ὑμᾶς.] D. Chrysostomo (quantum ex commentariis assequor) Copt. Vulg. Fulgentio, Salviano, Hieronymo; sic Millius. Sed totam hanc pericopen neque mutilam neque decurtatam reperias apud Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, atque omnes Orientales versiones; et tam Hieronymus quam Vulg. legunt, 'Benefacite his qui oderunt vos.'

Cap. vi. 1. Προσέχετε τὴν ἐλεημοσύνην ὑμῶν.] Plerique antiquorum Patrum legunt δικαιοσύνην, inquit Junius, teste Millio. Ex libris tamen impressis ne unus quidem ab illo coram productus est, neque ego unum aliquem è Patribus adhuc reperire potui qui habeat δικαιοσύνην. Origenes in Matt. p. 255. Greg. Nyssen. tom. ii. p. 743. Basilius, tom. ii. p. 416. Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, et Theophylactus retinent ἐλεημοσύνην. "Nec dubito (sic pergit Millius), quin Matthæi Tzedakah δικαιοσύνην reddiderit hoc loco Græcus interpres." Ego verò imprimis nego Matthæi Græca esse interpretis, et non ipsius Apostoli. Vide dissertationem nostram de hac quæstione. Secundo, quæro cur idem interpres eodem modo idem vocabulum non reddiderit v. 2—4. ubi eadem de re agitur; 'attendite ne faciatis ἐλεημοσύνην ὑμῶν coram hominibus, alioquin mercedem non habebitis apud patrem vestrum:' per modum illationis sequitur v. 2. 'cum ergo facis ἐλεημοσύνην, ne facias sicut hypocritæ, ut honorificentur ab hominibus.' Dein per modum consilii, 'te autem faciente ἐλεημοσύνην, nesciat sinistra tua quid facit dextra,' v. 3. Quorum ratio sequitur his verbis, v. 4. 'ut sit ἐλεημοσύνη tua in abscondito:' quis jam non videt ἐλεημοσύνην pro genuina lectione habendam esse?

V. 4. Ἐν τῷ φανερῷ.] Desunt hæc apud Origenem in Joh. p. 238. Hieronymum, Vulg. Augustinum, qui notat se in Græcis non invenisse, sed tantum in Latinis aliquot. Agnoscunt nihilominus Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Constit. Apost. lib. iii. cap. 14. Basilius, tom. ii. p. 429. Syr. Arab. Pers. legenda esse constat ex antithesi in propatulo. Ita Maldonatus.

V. 21. Ὅπου γάρ ἐστιν ὁ θησαυρὸς ὑμῶν, ἐκεῖ ἔσται καὶ ἡ καρδία ὑμῶν.] Hic Chrysostomus legit ὅπου ὁ θησαυρὸς ἀνθρώπου, ἐκεῖ ἡ καρδία αὐτοῦ. Basilius, tom. i. p. 340. σοῦ pro ὑμῶν utrinque, sicut etiam Hieronymus; et Vulg. parvo admodum discrimine. Sed Theophylactus, versionesque orientales ab excusis non dissentiunt; et verba illa θησαυρίζετε ὑμῖν, v. 19, 20. et Sanctus Lucas, qui hæc ipsa Christi verba citat, cap. vi. 34. lectionem textûs firmant. Vide tamen Millii Proleg. p. 42. col. 1.

V. 25. Καὶ τί πίητε.] "Desunt hæc (inquit Millius) apud Æthiop. Vulg. Arab. Epiphanium, Basilium, Chrysostomum, Euthymium, Hilarium, Hieronymum." Habent autem Theophylactus, Syr. Pers. et pace doctoris, Arabs. Quod si cum repetantur hæc verba, v. 31. rectè legamus, μὴ οὖν μεριμνήσητε λέγοντες, Τί φάγωμεν, ἢ τι πίωμεν; mihi quidem argumento est etiam hic rectè legendum esse, τί πίητε.

V. 34. Τὰ ἑαυτῆς.] Ita Basilius Moral. tom. ii. p. 451. et Theophylactus. Chrysostomus vero περὶ ἑαυτῆς, quod in idem recidit.

Cap. vii. 2. Καὶ ἐν ᾧ μέτρῳ μετρεῖτε, ἀντιμετρηθήσεται ὑμῖν.] Allegantur hic codices plurimi, Theodoretus et Theophylactus qui legunt μετρηθήσεται. Quibus opponere possem Polycarpi epistolam ad Philip. §. 2. Clementem Alex. Strom. ii. p. 399. Origenem Comm. in Matt. p. 335. et in Joh. p. 396. qui legunt ἀντιμετρηθησέται (Origenes autem in Jer. p. 161. habet μετρηθήσεται) sicut et Chrysostomus, ut et Vulg. et Hieronymus qui habent 'remetietur:' sed hoc atque illud idem valet.

Cap. viii. 8. Εἰπὲ λόγον, v. l. λόγῳ.] V. 18. ἐν τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐκείνῃ, v. l. ἀπὸ τῆς ὥρας ἐκείνης. Absque discrepantia quæ sensum afficiat.

V. 25. Καὶ προελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ.] Desunt οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ apud Hieronymum et codices quosdam Latinos: agnoscunt autem Theophylactus et versiones antiquæ omnes.

V. 31. Ἀπόστειλον ἡμᾶς.] D. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. sed Syr. Chrysostomus, et Theophylactus, et Luc. viii. 32. habent pariter ac in textu ἀπότρεψον ἡμᾶς.

Cap. ix. 7. Hieronymus Vulg. Syr. ἐφοβήθησαν, sed Theophylactus et Arab. ἐθαύμασαν· v. Mar. ii. 12.

V. 14. "Non veni vocare justos" ἀλλ' ἁμαρτωλοὺς εἰς μετάνοιαν· Millius fidenter asserit εἰς μετάνοιαν traductum huc esse è Luca, idque à primis pene sæculis; sed cum rationes expectemus, sæpe in earum locum confidentia succedit: quod Christus enim hæc verba protulerit, locuples testis est Lucas, cap. v. 32. Et primæ illius concionis exordium fuit, "Pœnitentiam agite, appropinquavit enim regnum cœlorum," Matt. iv. 17. Quare igitur εἰς μετάνοιαν non hîc censenda sunt ipsissima Christi verba? Retinentur apud Barnabam, §. 1. apud Justinum M. Apol. Ed. Ox. §. 18. apud Iren. lib. iii. cap. 5. p. 207. (quanquam illius testimonium in contrariam partem trahat Millius, Prol. p. 38.) apud Origenem in Joh. p. 366. apud Chrysostomum in locum, et Ed. Mor. p. 348. tom. i. tom. iv. p. 175. apud Cyrillum Alex. in Ose. p. 158. in Soph. p. 627. apud Theophylactum et Arabem. Ad pauca ut redeam, cum Christus vocârit peccatores, illos eum vocâsse ad pœnitentiam luce clarius est, ideoque τὸ εἰς μετάνοιαν, si non retineatur, saltem subaudiendum est.

V. 35. Τὰς πόλεις πάσας.] Sic Hieronymus, Græci, cæterique interpretes omnes. Ἐν τῷ λαῷ omittunt quidem Hieronymus, versionesque antiquæ; sed agnoscunt illa Chrysostomus et Theophylactus, et necessariò subaudienda sunt; cujus enim, præterquam populi, languores et infirmitates curavit Christus?

V. 36. Ἐκλελυμένοι.] Enervati, debilitati, membra soluti, languescentes. V. l. ἐσκυλμένοι, vexati, disjecti, divulsi. Sic Hesychius ἐσκυλμένοι, διασκεδασμένοι εἰσίν. Ita sub diversis verbis sensus non multum diversus est.

Cap. x. 3. Καὶ Λεββαῖος ὁ ἐπικληθείς,] Desunt hæc juxta Millium, apud Vulg. et Hieronymum; agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, orientales versiones omnes; et fatente Millio, "Hieronymus alibi lectum ait, ipseque lib. de Hebraicis nominibus explicat. Millius, Prol. p. 42. col. 1. Ἰακωβος ὁ τοῦ Ἀλφαίου καὶ Θαδδαῖος, et sic Origenes qui notat Levi, sive Lebbæum non fuisse numero apostolorum, nisi apud Marcum duntaxat: omnino recte. Λεββαῖος ὁ ἐπικληθεὶς insertum non aliud est quàm scholion marginale." E contra Cotelerius in hæc verba, Const. Apost. lib. viii. cap. 25. p. 319. Ματθαῖος ὁ καὶ Λουκᾶς hæc habet, consentiunt antiqui, et recentiores, id recte ex evangelii comparatione colligentes. Origenes in præfatione explanationis in epistolam ad Rom. Matthæus in catalogo apostolorum dicit Jacobus Alphæi et Lebbæus; Marcus, Jacobus Alphæi, et Thaddæus; Lucas vero ita posuit, Jacobus, et Judas Jacobi. Igitur eundem quem Matthæus Lebbæum, Marcus Thaddæum dixit, Lucas Judam Jacobi scripsit. Certum est autem evangelistas non errâsse in nominibus apostolorum, sed quia moris erat binis vel ternis nominibus uti Hebræos, unius et ejusdem viri, diversa singuli nominum vocabula posuere. Hieronymus in locum, Thaddæus apostolus ab evangelista Luca Judas Jacobi dicitur, et alibi appellatur Lebbæus. Credendumque est eum fuisse trinomium: ad locum Orig. lib. i. contra Cels. p. 48. Vide responsum Cotelerii, not. in Constit. Apostol. p. 315.

V. 28. Μὴ φοβεῖσθε] MSS. Justinus; sed Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Luc. xii. 4. habent cum textu μὴ φοβηθῆτε.

V. 29. Οὐ πεσεῖται ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, v. l. εἰς τὴν παγίδα,] Chrysostomus, et interpretamento; Origenes utroque modo; sed Theophylactus et versiones omnes textum sequuntur.

V. 42. Μόνον——οὐ μὴ ἀπολέσῃ.] Deest μόνον MSS. Æthiop. ἀπολέσει MSS. utrumque legunt cum textu Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Origenes in Matt. p. 346. Basilius, tom. ii. p. 444. Cyrillus Alex. tom. i. p. 566. Nihilominus τὸ μόνον irrepsit è margine, Proleg. p. 121. col. 2. Vide etiam Proleg. p. 42. col. 1.

Cap. xi. 2. Δύο τῶν Μαθητῶν.] Syr. διὰ τῶν, sed Origenes in Matt. p. 229. Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. textui consentiunt. Vide tamen Millium pro διὰ contendentem, Proleg. p. 42. col. 1.

V. 5. Χωλοὶ περιπατοῦσι———νεκροὶ ἐγείρονται.] "Deest prima pericope in Origene," ita Millius. Male; agnoscit enim eam Comm. in Joh. p. 103. secunda ibi deest: legit autem Clemens Al. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 10. p. 129. utramque legunt versiones omnes Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Cyrillus Alexan. de recta fide, p. 89. D. Lucas, cap. vii. 22. Vide è contra Millii Proleg. p. 42. col. 1.

V. 21. Οὐαί σοι Βηθσαϊδάν.] Legendum vult Millius καὶ Βηθσαϊδά, Prol. p. 42.; reniten[illegible]ibus Origene in Ex. p. 25. Chrysostomo, Hieronymo, Theophylacto, et versionibus antiquis universis.

Cap. xii. 8. Κύριος γάρ ἐστι καὶ τοῦ σαββάτου·] Quanquam καὶ agnoscatur a solo Vulg. cum tamen id reperias apud Mar. ii. 28. et Luc. vi. 5. et per consequens Christi ipsius sit, et vocabulum admodum elegans, quod vim plurimam argumento affert, mihi quidem retinendum videtur.

V. 32. Ἐν τούτῳ τῷ αἰῶνι.] MSS. ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, quod idem est.

V. 35. Ἐκ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ θησαυροῦ τῆς καρδίας.] D. τῆς καρδίας, Vulg. Syr. Arab. sed adest apud Athanasium tom. ii. p. 169. Basilium tom. ii. p. 634. Chrysostomum in locum, et apud Luc. vi. 45. et verba immediatè præcedentia, 'ex abundantia τῆς καρδίας os loquitur,' hanc lectionem stabiliunt et firmant.

V. 47. Ζητοῦντές σοι λαλῆσαι.] Ita Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Origenes in Matt. p. 238. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. ζητοῦντές σέ, σοι λαλῆσαι ex v. 46. desumptum videtur; ita Millius.* Et sane cum foris starent mater et fratres quærentes λαλῆσαι αὐτῷ, v. 46. nil verius dicere enarrator potuit quam foris stant ζητοῦντές σοι λαλῆσαι.

Cap. xiii. 14. Ἀναπληροῦται ἐπ' αὐτοῖς.] Theophylactus, et codices plurimi habent solummodo αὐτοῖς· Sed Chrysostomus, versionesque antiquæ omnes, vel legunt ἐπ' vel ἐν αὐτοῖς, quod in idem recidit.

V. 27. Ἐν τῷ σῷ ἀγρῷ.] Ab aliquot MSS. et unico Epiphanio, omissum est σῷ. Bene autem habet, quod non nobis narret Millius quo Epiphanii in loco hoc factum sit. Pervolventi enim eum contra Hær. p. 679. occurrebant mihi plurimæ lectiones insigniter variantes, una cum additamento in fine, καὶ ἑτοιμάζετε τὰ ζιζάνια κατακαυθῆναι τῷ πυρὶ ἀσβέστῳ.

V. 35. Διὰ τοῦ προφήτου· Ἡσαίου τοῦ προφήτου.] Plerique codices olim, teste Hieronymo; qui et pro Ἀσὰφ τοῦ προφ. positum dicit vitio librarii; ita Millius: neutrum autem hodie legitur vel in Græcis patribus. vel in MSS. aut versionibus. Vide Annot. nostras in hunc locum.

V. 51. Λέγει ὁ Ἰησοῦς· συνήκατε ταῦτα πάντα.] "Præmissa hæc sunt lucis causa jam ante Chrysostomi tempora," Millius Prol. p. 42. col. 1. At agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers. esseque verba hæc necessariò intelligenda constat ex sequentibus, λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, ναὶ Κύριε.

Cap. xiv. Ὡσεὶ πεντακισχίλιοι.] Sic Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Æthiop. et in Annotationibus variantis alicujus lectionis nulla est mentio. Dicit tamen Millius, Prol. p. 129. col. 1. "ὡσεὶ quod in MSS. plerisque omnibus, Lucæ est, non Matthæi."

V. 33. Ἐλθόντες.] Sic Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Pers. D. tantum Æthiop. "est tamen intrusum uberioris explicationis gratiâ," Proleg. p. 161. col. 1.

Cap. xv. 4. Τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου.] "Deest σου in MSS. pluribus, Irenæo, Chrysostomo;" ita Millius: Deest quidem apud Lat. Irenæum pariter, ac apud Vulg. sed Chrysostomus disertè ait, τίμα γάρ φησι τὸν πατέρα σου, similiter Origenes in Matt. p. 244. et Theophylactus. Hoc certo mandatum ad uniuscujusque proprium parentem pertinet, et seq. καὶ μὴ τιμήσῃ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ, σου retinendum esse ostendunt.

* Prol. p. 42. col. 1.

V. 8. Ἐγγίζει μοι ὁ λαὸς οὗτος τῷ στόματι αὐτῶν, καὶ τοῖς χείλεσί με τιμᾷ.] Prol. p. 34. col. 2. et 42. col. 1. asserit Millius genuinam lectionem esse, ὁ λαὸς οὗτος χείλεσί με τιμᾷ. Cætera nempe desunt in Cant. Copt. Vulg. Syr. Pers. Æthiop. ut et apud Esaiam, Cod. Alex. et Marc. Quicunque hic apud LXX. defectus fuit, clàm quidem erat Origene, qui Comm. in Matt. p. 247. loquitur ad hunc modum: "propheta Isaias dicit, ἐν αὐταῖς λέξεσιν, ἐγγίζει μοι ὁ λαὸς οὗτος ἐν στόματι αὐτῶν."

V. 26. Οὐκ ἔστι καλόν.] Sic Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. est tamen adjectitium καλὸν, Proleg. p. 42. col. 2.

V. 30. Κωφούς,] D. et v. 31. D. κυλλοὺς ὑγιεῖς, refragante ipso textu utrinque. Nam si τὸ κωφοὺς non esset in v. 30. unde κωφοὺς λαλοῦντας v. 31. Quod si τὸ κυλλοὺς rectè ponatur v. 30. idcirco etiam τὸ κυλλοὺς ὑγιεῖς ponendum est, v. 31. Sed Prol. p. 42. col. 1. interjecta sunt ad absolvendam sententiam κυλλοὺς ὑγιεῖς. Idem de voce κωφοὺς, Prol. p. 133. col. 2.

Cap. xvi. 3. Ὑποκριταὶ.] D. Chrysostomo, Vulg. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Lucas xii. 56. quin igitur hoc vocabulo usus sit Christus nemo dubitet.

Nota etiam quod in binis postremis versiculis variantes lectiones satis refutentur testimonio Origenis, qui cum editis congruit Comm. in Matt. p. 290, 291—294.

Cap. xvii. 14. Tres hic variantes lectiones, sed nullius momenti, et textum ipsum exhibet Origenes, p. 308, 309. ita etiam v. 21—23. Origenes ab impressis ne transversum quidem digitum discedit, p. 313. 315. Quod autem ἐλθόντων αὐτῶν, v. 14. "rectè mutatum esse ab Arabe et Vulgato in ἐλθόντος, ait Millius, Prol. p. 42. col. 1. ex historiæ circumstantiis manifestum esse; non enim venisse Christum simul cum discipulis suis ad multitudinem, sed venisse eum solum, et aliquanto post discipulos quos turbâ jam circumfusos, et cum scribis disputantes offendit;" in eo mirum in modum falli Millium ex historiæ circumstantiis certissimum est; commate enim decimo interrogant eum discipuli ex monte cum eo descendentes, 'quid ergo scribæ dicunt quod Eliam oportet primum venire?' et commate decimo tertio ex Christi ad hanc quæstionem responso 'intellexerunt discipuli quod de Johanne Baptista dixisset eis:' veniebant ergo cum eo hi tres discipuli, et cum reliquis disputantes scribas invenit.

V. 21. Deest versus totus Coll. et Æthiop. "Neque quidem hujus evangelistæ est, licet hic sedem occupet in omnibus propemodum libris nostris, sed Marci solius, quod ostendit canon Eusebianus:" Sic Millius in appendice p. 7. Sed reperias illum apud Origenem in Matt. p. 313. apud Syrum et Arabem interpretem, qui omnes ante vixerunt quam Canon iste conficeretur; agnoscit etiam Hieronymus, quanquam Canonem istum Matthæo præfixerit, sicut etiam agnoscunt eundem versiculum Græca scholia et reliquæ versiones.

V. 23. Καὶ ἐλυπήθησαν σφόδρα.] Desunt hæc verba in binis MSS. Sed retinent illa Origenes in Matt. p. 315. Græci, cæterique interpretes omnes: et tamen in Prol. p. 165. col. 2. "commentarius est non textus."

Cap. xviii. 29. Omittunt πάντα codices plurimi: sed sequitur ex v. 26. quod retinendum sit.

Cap. xix. 19. Καὶ ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον—] Agnoscunt hanc periodi partem Græca scholia, versionesque universim, et quod contra illam ex Origene affert Millius, valde leve est ac nugatorium. Nam si quis strictè acciperet ac servaret mandata secundæ tabulæ tali modo, ac more quali ea Judæi observârunt, non ille quidem dicendus est præstitisse universam legem, quæ ad proximum suum pertinet, et multo minus quæ ad Deum. Vide Luc. x. 29, 30. Nota etiam quod ἐκ νεότητός μου, v. 20. retinetur apud Græca scholia versionesque omnes.

Cap. xx. 15. Οὐκ ἔξεστί μοι ποιῆσαι ὃ θέλω.] Seq. ἐν τοῖς ἐμοῖς; "quod est in nostris commentarius est, non textus." Ita Millius cum suo vulgato, Prol. p. 42. col. 2. Repugnantibus reliquis versionibus, Chrysost. Theophyl. et Orig. in Matt. p. 407.

V. 22. Potestis bibere calicem quem ego bibiturus sum? καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα, ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι βαπτισθῆναι;] "Posterior pars comma-tis, judice Millio, non Matthæi, sed Marci est," sc. ex fide quatuor MSS. Hieronymi, Vulg. Ambrosii, et speciatim Origenis in Matt. p. 415. qui postquam dixerat, δύνασθε πιεῖν τὸ ποτήριον ὃ ἐγὼ μέλλω πίνειν, addit ἢ ὡς ὁ Μάρκος ἀνέγραψε —— ὃ ἐγὼ πίνω, καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα καὶ τὰ ἑξῆς. Quis autem satis certo scit utrum Origenes Marcum allegârit, ratione habitâ ad posteriorem partem commatis, vel ad levem illam discrepantiam quæ intercedit inter ὃ μέλλω πίνειν, et ὃ ἐγὼ πίνω; sed demus hæc Millio. Constat ex Marco x. 38, 39. periodum hanc Christum protulisse omnibus suis numeris expletam; cur non igitur Matthæus periodum hanc plenam ac perfectam citâsse censendus est? cum testes ejus rei fidos habeamus Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, et Basilium Seleuciensem, Hom. 24. p. 134. vel quonam id, quæso, sacræ Scripturæ dispendio sit, si postrema illa verba apud unicum Marcum reperiantur? Atque hoc, ut opinor, obviam it sexcentis variantibus lectionibus: quæ enim à diversis memorantur Evangelistis, cum ea semel tantum locutus sit Christus, si ab uno aliquo literis mandentur, memoria eorum nunquam obliterabitur.

Cap. xxi. 4. Τοῦτο καὶ ὅλον γέγονεν·] Deest ὅλον, Cant. Arab. Æthiop. Copt. Origene in Joh. p. 161. At agnoscunt τὸ ὅλον Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. nec magni, quod Origenes hic habeat, refert; nam ibid. p. 174. omittit v. 5. σοῦ post βασιλεῖς, et καὶ post πραῢς; sed p. 169. et Comm. in Matt. p. 432. utramque vocem retinet: post πῶλον omittit υἱὸν, p. 169. quod tamen habet p. 174. omittit hæc verba v. 8. ἄλλοι δὲ ἔκοπτον κλάδους ἀπὸ τῶν δένδρων, καὶ ἐστρώννυον ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ. Sic v. 12. τοῦ Θεοῦ. deest Orig. sc. Comm. in Joh. p. 175. sed Commentarius ejus in locum Matt. p. 439. sic se habet, καὶ εἰσῆλθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ.

V. 19. Κτήσασθε, Ed. Ox. Polyg. hic ergo Millius, Prol. 65. col. 1. pro varia lectione, ipsum textum, "possidebitis" exhibet.

Cap. xxii. 39. Diliges proximum tuum ὡς σεαυτόν· MSS. ἑαυτόν. Ita Rom. xiii. 9. Gal. v. 14. dicisne hoc ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ à temetipso? Joh. xviii. 34. et σεαυτὸν, Jac. ii. 8. Vide in his locis Millium, et nos in Rom. xiii. 9.

V. 40. Ἐν ταύταις ταῖς δυσὶν ἐντολαῖς ὅλος ὁ νόμος.] Omittunt ὅλος Syr. Codex unus, Copt. et Arab. Habent autem illud Æthiop. Vulg. Chrysostomus, et Theophylactus, Hilarius, et Hieronymus in locum; Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. iii. cap. 12. p. 260. Irenæus lib. iv. cap. 25. p. 312. Origenes Hom. 23. in Matt. F. 42. Atque tamen hanc lectionem simplicem (sc. absque ὅλος) ipsius Evangelistæ fuisse haudquaquam dubito, Proleg. p. 129. col. 2.

Cap. xxiii. 4. Καὶ δυσβάστακτα,] Omiserunt Copt. Syr. Pers. Vulg. Irenæus. At agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Hieronymus, Vulg.

V. 5. Τῶν ἱματίων αὐτῶν,] Desunt Vulg. Æthiop. At legunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 8. Εἷς γάρ ἐστιν ὑμῶν καθηγητής;] MSS. plurima, Origenes in Joh. p. 5. Hom. 10. in Jer. p. 107. et Chrysostomus legunt ὁ διδάσκαλος. Cum vero tum καθηγητὴς, tum διδάσκαλος sit interpretatio ejusdem vocis Hebraicæ, nempe rabbi, ex eo facile intelligitur, verbis illos, non re dissidere.

V. 14. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν γραμματεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί.] "Ista non agnoscunt Origenes et Eusebius; traducta puto è Marco aut Luca," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 42. Id autem agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, et versiones universim.

V. 19. Μωροὶ καὶ τυφλοί·] "Μωροὶ καὶ præfixum est ex v. 17." ita Millius Prol. p. 42. Agnoscunt autem Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

"Non dubium est quin v. 13. è Marco et Luca huc transmiserint librarii," ait Millius in locum. Quod si fuissent verum nec additur quidquam, nec subducitur de verbis Christi: versiculum tamen hunc agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Hieronymus, versionesque Crit. Hist. N. T. p. 171. ipse illum inveniat apud Græca exemplaria satis multa, versu quidem isto et subsequente transposito, sicut in pluribus Millii MSS. contigit.

V. 26. Deest in Clemente Alex. Irenæo lib. iv. cap. 34. p. 326. Habent autem illud Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, versiones antiquæ omnes.

Cap. xxv. 1. Licet à commate primo usque ad decimum tertium viginti variantes afferantur lectiones, sanctus tamen Basilius, dum hanc parabolam explicat, à textu ne latum quidem unguem discedit. Nam tametsi tom. ii. p. 412. habeat tantum πέντε, p. tamen 425. habet αἱ πέντε.

V. 13. Ἐν ᾗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἔρχεται.] "Deest in MSS. aliquot, nec occurrit apud probatissimos primæ ætatis interpretes, ex cap. præcedente sumitur," ita Millius hic, sed inter hæc, atque illa verba plurimum interest: cum verò præcesserit, 'vigilate itaque, quia nescitis diem neque horam,' aliquid hujusmodi addendum est, ne claudicet sensus; quidni igitur hæc ipsa verba? quæ agnoscit Theophylactus, et quæ optimè respondent illis quæ concludunt caput præcedens, viz. si malus servus non vigilet, 'veniet Dominus illius in die qua non sperat, et hora qua ignorat;' atque istiusmodi homines, fatuarum ad instar virginum, à nuptiis clausâ januâ excludentur. 'Vigilate igitur,' &c.

V. 33. Καὶ στήσει τὰ μὲν πρόβατα.] Deest μὲν Cant. Syr. Quod tamen postulant seq. τὰ δὲ ἐρίφια, satisque firmant Theophylactus, Vulg. et exemplar Alexandrinum.

V. 41. Τὸν ἡτοίμασμένον, v. l. ὃ ἡτοίμασεν ὁ πατήρ μου.] Ita Irenæus, Cyprianus, Augustinus, adde Justinum M. Dial. p. 301. Origenes autem in Joh. p. 426. Græca scholia, versiones antiquæ omnes legunt cum textu.

Cap. xxvi. 1. Πάντας τοὺς λόγους τούτους.] Deest πάντας Chrysost. Pers. habent Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. Syr. Æthiop.

V. 3. Καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς,] Desunt hæc apud Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. At retinent Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr.

V. 42. Τοῦτο τὸ ποτήριον,] Deest τὸ ποτήριον, Chrysostomo; legunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. — ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, deest Vulg. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 44. Ἐκ τρίτου,] Deest in Alex. At illud habent Theophylactus, et versiones antiquæ universim.

V. 59. Καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι,] Deest in Vulg. Sed illud retinent Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 74. Ἤρξατο καταναθεματίζειν.] Ita Chrysostomus et Theophylactus; καταθεματίζειν, quod habent codices MSS. in N. T. nusquam occurrit, at genuinum censet Millius, Prol. 109. col. 2.

Cap. xxvii. 14. Ὥστε θαυμάζειν τὸν ἡγεμόνα λίαν·] Ita Hieronymus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. ait tamen Millius, "ex Syri solius autoritate addebat codicum vulgus ex præcedentibus, τὸν ἡγεμόνα," Proleg. p. 129. col. 2.

V. 35. Ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ δικαίου.] Τὸ τοῦ δικαίου agnoscunt Hieronymus, Theophylactus, versiones omnes: "sed (ait Millius) insertum in reliquis τοῦ δικαίου, irrepsisse videtur ex Actis, aliisve locis," Prol. p. 133. col. 2.

V. 35. Ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθέν· καὶ τὰ ἑξῆς·] Cum omittatur hæc periodus à Græcis, interpretibusque cunctis, si à Vulg. et Hieronymo discesseris, simile vero videtur desumptam eam fuisse ex Joh. xix. 24. utrum vero hic, an illic legenda sit, eadem sane, quâ reliquæ Scripturæ partes, veneratione à nobis afficienda est.

V. 34. Ἰησοῦς ὁ Βασιλεύς·] Ἰησοῦς omittunt MSS. Copt. Retinent Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr.

V. 43. Νῦν,] Hic agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones omnes, estque emphaticum in ore Judæorum.

V. 55. Ἀπὸ μακρόθεν θεωροῦσαι.] Deest in Vulg. sed habent Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 64. Νυκτὸς,] Deest in Chrysostomo, Vulg. Arab. at illud legunt Theophylactus, et Syr.

Cap. xxviii. 9. Ὡς δὲ ἐπορεύοντο ἀπαγγεῖλαι τοῖς Μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ.] Desunt hæc apud Chrysostomum, Hieronymum, Augustinum, Vulg. Syr. Agnoscunt tantum Theophylactus et Æthiop. Sæpe hoc contingit cum eadem verba repetuntur; videntur tamen hic necessario intelligenda.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

IN MARCUM.

MARCI cap. i. 2. Qui præparabit viam tuam, ἔμπροσθέν σου·] Desunt hæc in Irenæo lib. iii. cap. 11. p. 217. Origene in Joh. p. 117: Syr. Copt. Pers. Æthiop. sed agnoscunt illa Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. et Origenes in Joh. p. 3. et citat illa nominatim ex Marco, lib. ii. contra Cel. 60. et siquidem Christus disertè ait Baptistam eum esse de quo scripta est prophetia his ipsis verbis, Matt. xi. 10. de veritate eorum non est ambigendi locus, licet in autographo ipsius Marci non inventa fuissent.

Tribus versiculis, sc. 5. 11. et 13. tres sunt variantes lectiones, sed nulla in sensu diversitas.

V. 16. Περιπατῶν δὲ παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν.] Ita Theophylactus, Cod. Alex. παράγων, Vulg. Arab. 'fuit ambulando pertransiens,' sine discrimine.

V. 42. Εἰπόντος αὐτοῦ.] Deest in Cant. Syr. agnoscunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Cod. Alex.

V. 44. Μηδενὶ μηδὲν.] D. μηδὲν; MSS. Sed habet Theophylactus.

V. 45. Πολλά.] Deest in Vulg. Sed legit Theophylactus.

Cap. ii. 1. Δι' ἡμερῶν.] "Octo, Latini codices aliqui; citra non Græcorum modo fidem sed et Latinorum plerumque omnium;" ita hîc Millius. Sed Proleg. p. 44. col. 1. "Græca proculdubio erant δι' ἡμερῶν, et sic evangelista."

V. 4. Μὴ δυνάμενοι προσεγγίσαι.] Vulg. προσενέγκαι· Theophylactus, et reliquæ versiones cum textu.

V. 7. Εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ Θεός.] Deest εἷς, Cant. Sed retinent Theophylactus, et reliquæ versiones antiquæ omnes.

V. 15. Ἁμαρτωλοί.] Occurrit in Theophylacto, et in versionibus Polyg. omnibus. "Mihi tamen, inquit Millius, vehemens est suspicio, ex v. 16. huc traductum esse." Append. p. 12. col. 1.

V. 18. Οἱ τῶν φαρισαίων.] Theophylact. et versiones omnes: Vulg. pharisæi.

V. 20. Ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις.] Ita Theophylactus, Vulg. Lucas v. 35. ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ. Syr. Æthiop. MSS. sine discrepantia.

V. 22. Οἶνος ὁ νέος.] Habent ὁ νέος, Theophylactus, Lucas v. 35. Deest in Cant. Vulg. Syr. Verba autem præcedentia et sequentia lectionem textûs genuinam esse indicant.

Cap. iii. 5. Καὶ ἀποκατεστάθη ἡ χεὶρ αὐτοῦ ὑγιὴς ὡς ἡ ἄλλη.] Deest ὑγιὴς MSS. versionibusque: retinet Theophylactus, occurrit apud Matt. xii. 13. et Luc. vi. 10. interpretes hoc forte quasi minus necessarium omiserunt; cum enim manus arida restituatur, et fiat alteri similis, non potest non esse ὑγιής.

V. 29. Αἰωνίου κρίσεως.] Codices pauci habent ἁμαρτίας, seu ἁμαρτήματος. Vulg. et Cyprianus 'delictum,' et exinde Græca quædam exemplaria ad Latinos conformata, ἁμαρτίας· sed Syr. Arab. Theophylactus, Græci patres legunt κρίσεως, nec talis occurrit dictio qualis αἰώνιος ἁμαρτία per totum N. T.

V. 32. Addit hic C. Alex. καὶ ἀδελφαί σου· repugnantibus omnibus versionibus, Hieronymo, Theophylacto, verbisque immediate præcedentibus οἱ ἀδελφοὶ, καὶ ἡ μητὴρ αὐτοῦ —— ἀπέστειλαν πρὸς αὐτόν.

Cap. iv. 4. Τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ.] Deest τοῦ οὐρανοῦ in MSS. et versionibus quibusdam: agnoscunt Vulg. et Theophylactus; et cum aves per vetus testamentum sæpissimè vocitentur, vel volucres aeris, vel volucres cœli, τοῦ οὐρανοῦ videtur subaudiendum ubi non exprimitur: rejicit autem Mill. Prol. p. 109. col. 2.

V. 11. Γνῶναι τὸ μυστήριον.] Deest γνῶναι in MSS. sed habent Theophylactus et versiones omnes, eoque dempto sensus deficit; et tamen medium γνῶναι Matthæi est, aut Lucæ Proleg. p. 161. col. 1. Cur non et Marci?

V. 18. Καὶ οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ εἰς τὰς ἀκάνθας σπειρόμενοι, οὗτοί εἰσιν.] Deest secundo loco οὗτοί εἰσιν apud Theophylactum, et MSS. nec mirum; Hebraismum quippe non intelligebant; habent Vulg. Syr. nec deesse videntur apud Arab. "Repetitio hæc vocum οὗτοί εἰσιν non est aliena ab Hebraismo, quod ejus insolitis mutandi causam dedit, idque non uno modo; quod hujus lectionis veritatem ostendit;" ita Grotius.

V. 20. et v. 8. Ἓν μὲν τριάκοντα, ἓν ἑξήκοντα, ἓν ἑκατὸν, v. l. ἓν, ἓν, ἓν, MSS. sed præter MSS. codices plurimos, fatente Millio, ἓν legunt Theophylactus, versiones omnes, Syr. v. 8. et lectionem hanc comprobat locus parilis Matt. xii. 8. 23. ubi occurrit par distributivum ὁ μὲν ἑκατὸν, &c.

V. 24. Ὑμῖν τοῖς ἀκούουσιν.] D. τοῖς ἀκούουσιν, desunt in Vulg. Arab. sed illa habent Theophylactus et Syr.

V. 31. Ὡς κόκκῳ.] MSS. κόκκος aut κόκκον, sine discrimine et sine causa; ὡς hîc παραδειγματικὴν significationem habet, 'nempe;' ita Schmidius: ceu potius est signum dativi casûs, ut ב apud Hebræos sæpius.

V. 33. Πολλαῖς.] Deest in Syr. Pers. Arab. sed illud habent Theophylactus et Vulg.

Cap. v. 11. Πρὸς τὰ ὄρη, v. l. πρὸς τῷ ὄρει, quod in idem recidit. Ib. Μεγάλη, Deest in Cant. Eph. Copt. Goth. Pers. sed habent Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab.

V. 12. Πάντες οἱ δαίμονες, Cant. τὰ δαιμόνια, Syr. 'illi dæmones,' quod idem valet; soli enim demones, qui tunc adfuerunt, hoc à Christo petere potuerunt: denique cum textu legunt Theophylactus, et Arab.

Cap. vi. 11. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν——ἢ τῇ πόλει ἐκείνῃ.] "Ex vulgato, et Ammonii Monotessaro apud Zach. Chrysopolitanum rectè notat Zegerus hæc Marci non esse, sed ex Matthæo huc transponi quemadmodum et alias alia;" ita Millius hic. Agnoscunt vero Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. "Hæc periodus, inquit Betuleius, in omnibus nostris exemplaribus legitur, exceptis tantum duobus, et in vetustissimo meo apud Matt. x. 15. et Luc. x. 12. occurrit:" quidni apud Marcum?

V. 15. Ἢ ὡς εἷς τῶν προφητῶν.] Vide annotata nostra in hunc locum.

V. 16. Οὗτός ἐστιν, Deest in Vulg. sed habent Theophylactus, et quoad sensum, omnes antiquæ versiones.

V. 28. Ὁ δὲ ἀπελθὼν·] Τὸ ἀπελθὼν omittit Vulg. Habent Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

V. 33. Προῆλθον αὐτούς·] Deest in MSS. binis, Cant. et Laud. sed retinetur apud Theophylactum: atque hæc lectio non est obscura, sed facilem explicatum habet: Christi, et discipuli ejus ascendentes in navim abierunt in desertum locum seorsim; sed multi viderunt eos abeuntes, et cognoverunt quò cursum tendebat navis, itaque pedestres prævenerunt eos, et accesserunt ad Christum. Clara hic, et perspicua omnia, neque quicquam mutandi causa levissima est: vult tamen Millius "τὸ καὶ προῆλθον αὐτοὺς Scholion esse, καὶ συνῆλθον πρὸς αὐτὸν, veram lectionem; quam queritur omissam fuisse, Proleg. p. 43. et ejus loco, καὶ προῆλθον πρὸς αὐτοὺς retentam esse."

V. 36. Ἀγοράσωσιν ἑαυτοῖς ἄρτους· τί γὰρ φάγωσιν μὴ ἔχουσι.] Contendit Millius, Proleg. p. 45. "veram lectionem hanc esse, ἀγοράσωσιν ἑαυτοῖς τί φάγωσιν· reliqua irrepsisse ex cap. viii. 2. hujus evangelii:" quod prima fronte est parum verosimile, præsertim cum textui consentiant Theophylactus, versiones orientales omnes, et Codex Alex.

V. 44. Καὶ ἦσαν οἱ φάγοντες τοὺς ἄρτους ὡσεὶ πεντακισχίλιοι.] Deest ἄρτους, sed habent Theophylactus, Syr. et Æthiop. Deest etiam ὡσεὶ in MSS. aliquot, Theophylacto et versionibus: sed occurrit Luc. ix. 14. et Joh. vi. 10. ex quorum autoritate vocem illam, ut ut parvi momenti, retinendam tamen quis non censet? Nota etiam quod licet Matt. xiv. 21. de variantibus lectionibus altum sit silentium illic, tamen perinde atque hîc ὡσεὶ omittunt versiones omnes.

V. 51. Καὶ ἐθαύμαζον.] Irrepsit ex margine, ita Millius, Proleg. p. 43. ex fide Copt. Agnoscunt autem Codex Alex. Theophylactus, et versiones orientales universim.

Cap. vii. 2. Ἐμέμψαιτο.] Deest apud solum Æthiop. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. id Millio frustra inficiante. "Importune tamen injecit quispiam in textum," Prol. p. 122. col. 1.

V. 5. Ἀνίπτοις.] Theophylactus, Syr. Æthiop. κοιναῖς, Vulg. Arab. eodem sensu juxta Judæos.

V. 16. Εἴ τις ἔχει ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκουέτω.] "Suspectum hunc versum habet Millius παρεμβλήσεως," Proleg. p. 162. col. 1. Repugnante Theophylacto, et versionibus universim.

V. 14. Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος πάντα τὸν ὄχλον.] Ita Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers. Vulg. et Æthiop. addunt πάλιν, quod probat Millius, Proleg. p. 43.

V. 31. Ἐκ τῶν ὁρίων Τύρου καὶ Σιδῶνος·] Ita Theophylactus, Codex Alex. Syr. Pers. "sed διὰ Σιδῶνος ἦλθε, lectio germana est," Millius, Ib. Vulg. Cant. Copt. Arab. Æthiop.

Cap. viii. 2. Ἡμέρας τρεῖς προσμένουσί μοι.] i. e. Δι' ἡμέρας, ita Theophylactus et versiones: ἡμέρας MSS. ad eundem sensum.

V. 22. Καὶ ἔρχεται·] Jesus nempe, Theophylactus, Syr. ἔρχεται, Vulg. Arab. 'Jesus cum discipulis.'

V. 34. Ὀπίσω μου ἐλθεῖν, v. l. ἀκολουθεῖν·] Nullo sensus discrimine.

Cap. ix. 10. Τί ἐστι τὸ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῆναι·] Ita Theophylactus, Arab. Vulg. et Syr. 'quid esset cum è mortuis resurrexerit?' perperam haud dubito, nec enim quærunt τί εἴη, sed τί ἐστι, nec quid post mortem Christi esset futurum, non existimabant Christum moriturum: vide annotata nostra ad hunc locum.

V. 13. Καὶ πῶς γέγραπται.] Ita Theophylactus et Vulg. MSS. καθὼς, vide iterum annotata nostra.

V. 16. Καὶ ἐπηρώτησε τοὺς γραμματεῖς·] Ita Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Vulg. αὐτοὺς malè iterum, nec enim turbæ, sed scribæ tantum cum iis disputabant: vide v. 17.

V. 33. Πρὸς ἑαυτοὺς διαλογίζεσθε·] D. πρὸς ἑαυτούς, desunt in Vulg. Arab. retinent Theophylactus, Syr. Pers. Æthiop. estque necessariò intelligendum.

V. 34. Ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ·] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones omnes: et tamen Millius Proleg. p. 143. col. 2. "nemo non videt repetita ex proximè præcedenti versiculo;" immo nemo non videt repeti debuisse.

V. 38. Ὅτι οὐκ ἀκολουθεῖ ἡμῖν·] D. Vulg. Copt. Habent Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop.

Cap. x. 2. Καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ φαρισαῖοι·] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones omnes; sic vero Millius Proleg. p. 133. col. 2. "προσελθόντες ante οἱ Φαρ. quod in nostris jam omnibus Matthæi est." Quæro cur non et Marci?

V. 21. Ἆρας τὸν σταυρόν·] Deest Clem. Alex. Vulg. Augustino: retinent Theophylactus, et versiones orientales.

V. 47. Υἱὲ Δαβὶδ Ἰησοῦ.] D. Ἰησοῦ, Syr. Pers. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Luc. xviii. 38.

Cap. xi. 1. Εἰς Βηθφαγὴ.] Deest in Cant. Origene in Matt. p. 431. Habent autem Origenes in Joh. p. 169. Theophylactus, orientales versiones omnes: irrepsit tamen è margine, Proleg. p. 43. col. 2.

V. 10. Ἡ ἐρχομένη βασιλεία.] Deest ἐρχομένη, in MSS. 4. sed habent Origenes in Joh. p. 169. Theophylactus, versiones omnes. Ib. ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, deest in Origene, ib. et versionibus antiquis. Sed habent Theophylactus, Matt. xxi. 9. xxiii. 39. Psal. lxx. 118. xxvi. Ib. Ὡσαννὰ, v. l. εἰρήνη, Origenes, inquit Millius, ubi nescio, habet ὡσαννὰ, Com. in Joh. p. 169. cum Theophylacto, et versionibus omnibus.

V. 29. Ἀποκρίθητέ μοι.] Deest in MSS. quibusdam: sed agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones omnes.

V. 31. Διατί οὖν.] Deest οὖν in MSS. Pers. Æthiop. sed habent Theophylactus. Vulg. Syr.

V. 32. Ἀλλ' ἐὰν.] Deest ἐὰν in MSS. multis; agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones orientales.

Cap. xii. 4. Λιθοβολήσαντες.] Deest in Vulg. Arab. retinent Theophylactus et Syr.

V. 27. Οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ Θεὸς νεκρῶν, ἀλλὰ Θεὸς ζώντων.] Deest Θεὸς 2 in Vulg. Arab. Habent Theophylactus, Pers. Æthiop. optimè meo judicio. Origenes οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ Θεὸς, Θεὸς νεκρῶν, ἀλλὰ ζώντων, Com. in Matt. p. 499. ita Matt. xxii. 32. est tamen hic repetendus ὁ Θεός.

Cap. xii. 29. Ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν.] Ita Theophylactus, C. Alex. Syr. Pers. Deut. vi. 4. Θεός σου, et Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. ἡμῶν emendatio est, ex Deut. vi. 4. Prol. p. 122. col. 1.

V. 32. Ὅτι εἷς ὁ Θεὸς·] Deest Θεὸς in MSS. retinent Vulg. Arab. et Theophylactus; addit eum etiam Syriaca versio tanquam necessariò intelligendum. Rejicit tamen Millius, Prol. p. 109. col. 2.

Cap. xiii. 11. Μηδὲ μελετᾶτε.] Deest in Vulg. Copt. Æthiop. Sed habent Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 14. Τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ Δανιὴλ τοῦ προφήτου·] Desunt hæc in MSS. Vulg. Augustino. Habent Theophylactus, Cod. Alex. versiones orientales omnes: est tamen Matthæi, Proleg. p. 43. col. 2.

V. 18. Ἡ φυγὴ ὑμῶν·] Deest in Vulg. et MSS. ταῦτα, sed Theophylactus, et versiones orient. textui consentiunt.

V. 33. Καὶ προσεύχεσθε·] Habent omnes; "mihi tamen vehementer suspectum est παρεμβλήσεως," Millius Proleg. p. 133. deest Cant.

Cap. xiv. 15. Ἀνώγεαν——ἕτοιμον.] Deest ἕτοιμον in MSS. Vulg. retinent Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

V. 19. Καὶ ἄλλος μήτι ἐγὼ·] Desunt hæc in versionibus; sed illa agnoscunt Theophylact. et Origenes Com. in Joh. p. 404.

V. 22. Λάβετε, φάγετε.] Deest φάγετε in versionibus; sed habet Theophylactus, et sumebant ut comederent.

V. 27. Ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ταύτῃ·] Ita Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Millius autem Proleg. p. 162. "ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ταύτῃ, Matthæi esse vix dubito."

V. 67. Μετὰ τοῦ Ναζαρηνοῦ Ἰησοῦ·] Ita omnes scholiastæ et versiones.

V. 70. Καὶ λαλιά σου ὁμοιάζει·] Desunt hæc in Vulg. Copt. sed habent Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. frustra ergo sunt qui hoc adjectitium censent.

Cap. xv. 12. Ὃν λέγετε βασιλέα·] Vulg. Cant. βασιλεῖ, regni Judæorum; sed Theophylactus et versiones textui consentiunt.

V. 16. Αὐλῆς τοῦ πραιτωρίου.] Ita legendum inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 43. fide Vulg. Goth. Pers. At textus ὅ ἐστι πραιτώριον, sic et Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

SECTIO TERTIA

IN LUCAM.

CAP. i. 12. Καὶ ἐταράχθη, καὶ φόβος ἐπέπεσεν ἐπ' αὐτόν.] Vana est hic Millii suspicio (App. p. 20.) "versum hunc fictum esse à quopiam," ob similia quæ ad Mariam dicuntur v. 29. Constat hoc ex Chrysostomo, Ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 475. Theophylacto in locum, et versionibus omnibus, exceptâ Æthiop. à quibus omnibus hic versus pro genuino habetur; constat insuper ex verbis sequentibus μὴ φοβοῦ, Ζαχαρία.

Cap. ii. 14. Ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία.] "Εὐδοκίας, inquit Millius, Alex. Cant. Vulg. Goth. Sax. Irenæus Lat. lib. iii. cap. 11. p. 216. (ubi Grabius, 'multum vereor ne Græcus Irenæi textus habuerit εὐδοκία in nominativo') Hieronymus, Ambrosius, Augustinus (quibus adde Cyrillum Hieros. Catech. 12. p. 120.) sed codicibus MSS. fermè omnibus consentiunt Syr. Copt. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. Origenes (in Joh. p. 14. contra Cels. lib. i. p. 46.) εὐδοκίας enim quod legunt Homiliis in Lucam interpretis est non Origenis; Eusebius, Chrysostomus, (Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 261. 385. et tom. iii. p. 1044.) Theophylactus, alii (nempe Epiphanius, Hær. Ebion. p. 154. Constit. Apost. lib. vii. cap. 47. p. 327. lib. viii. cap. 13. p. 352. Theodoretus in Deut. Qu. 42. et in Psalmos p. 786.) qui rectam lectionem amplectuntur;" ita Millius in locum. Nihilominus Proleg. p. 64. col. 2. "ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας, ita legisse Origenem constat ex Latinis Hieronymianis, Hom. 13. in Lucam, omnino rectè ἄνθρωποι εὐδοκίας Hebraismus est, significat homines erga quos Deus se insigniter benevolum os-tendit, seu quos peculiari quadam gratia complectitur, hic autem sensus cum latuerit veteres Græcos, factum est jam olim ut in codicibus εὐδοκίας mutaretur in εὐδοκία" Quis teneat semper mutantem Protea vultum ?

V. 33. Καὶ ἦν Ἰωσήφ.] Vulg. pater ejus: sed Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. textui patrocinantur.

V. 40. Ἐκραταιοῦτο πνεύματι.] "Πνεύματι adjectum est ex hujus evangelii cap. i. 80." sic Millius Proleg. p. 44. col. 1. Habent autem Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

Cap. iii. 19. Περὶ Ἡρῳδιάδος τῆς γυναικὸς Φιλίππου·] Deest Φιλίππου apud Theophylactum, et Vulg. retinent versiones orientales omnes, et firmant hanc lectionem loca parallela, Matt. xiv. 3. et Marc. vi. 17.

V. 21. Ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ βαπτισθῆναι·] Deest ἐν τῷ in MSS. Habet Theophylactus, et versiones omnes 'legunt cum baptizaretur.'

Cap. iv. 7. Ἔσται σου πάντα.] Ita Matt. iv. 9. Vulg. Syr. Theophylactus πᾶσα, nimirum gloria et potestas de quibus locutus est, v. 6. in idem recidit.

V. 8. Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ.] Desunt hæc apud MSS. Origenem, Ambrosium. Beda notat, et Grotius "neminem Græcorum Theophylacto antiquiorem ista verba hoc loco agnoscere, et quidem post additum ibi ὀπίσω μοῦ, quod in primis et vetustissimis codicibus, teste Origene, locum non habebat;" sic ille. Sed pace utriusque legimus apud Justinum Dialect. p. 331. hæc verba ἐν τοῖς ἀπομνημονεύμασι τῶν ἀποστόλων γέγραπται, προσελθὼν αὐτῷ καὶ πειράζων μέχρι τοῦ εἰπεῖν αὐτῷ προσκύνησόν μοι, καὶ ἀποκρίνεσθαι αὐτῷ τὸν Χριστὸν, Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ· apud Athanasium Orat. 1. in Arian. ἤλεγξε αὐτὸν ὁ Κύριος ἐν τῷ λέγειν, Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ· p. 283. C. et Or. 3. p. 440. Ἀκούσας ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ, et Or. 4. p. 492. Αὐτὸς μὲν γὰρ ἐπετίμα δι' ἑαυτοῦ, Σατανᾶ, λέγων, Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ· apud Chrysostomum Matt. iv. 10. et Theophylactum in locum: utrum hæc Matthæi solius fuerint an etiam Lucæ, operæ pretium non est investigare.

V. 18. Ἰάσασθαι τοὺς συντετριμμένους τὴν καρδίαν·] Desunt hæc verba in duobus MSS. Origene in Joh. p. 12. Copt. Æthiop. Augustino, Ambrosio. Fidem iis faciunt Irenæus lib. iv. cap. 40. p. 340. Theodoretus in Isa. lxi. v. 1. lxx. ib. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Pers. Porro evangelista dicente Christum aperuisse librum, et locum invenisse ubi hæc verba tam in Hebræo textu quam in LXX. interpretibus scripta erant, multo magis verisimile est Christum hæc ipsissima verba legisse, quam alium nescio quem verbis evangelistæ ea adjecisse: quod ab Origene omittuntur tanti non est; omittit enim, pariter cum Irenæo, verba sequentia, ἀποστεῖλαι τοὺς τεθραυσμένους ἐν ἀφέσει.

V. 33. Ἔχων πνεῦμα δαιμονίου ἀκαθάρτου, καὶ ἀνέκραξε φωνῇ·] Vulg. 'dæmonium immundum,' MSS. φωνῇ μεγάλῃ omittunt: utrumque agnoscunt autem Theophylactus, Syr. Origenes in Joh. p. 158. Irrepserunt tamen, judice Millio Proleg. p. 44.

Cap. v. 36. Οὐ συμφωνεῖ ἐπίβλημα·] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: et tamen Prol. p. 184. col. 1. "irrepsit ex priore parte hujus versiculi."

Cap. vi. 26. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν ὅταν καλῶς ὑμᾶς εἴπωσιν πάντες·] Deest hîc ὑμῖν in Theophylacto; habent versiones omnes, sicut et versus præcedentes: πάντες deest in MSS. versionibusque multis; occurrit apud Theophylactum, Chrysostomum Hom. 23. in Gen. Ed. Mor. tom. ii. p. 265, 266. tom. iii. p. 305. tom. iv. p. 575. atque hic ait Millius, "omnino legendum arbitror, addendi causa nulla est, tollendi aliqua:" et tamen Proleg. p. 126. col. 2. "ὑμῖν et πάντες irreptitia sunt."

V. 34. Ἵνα ἀπολάβωσι τὰ ἴσα·] Desunt τὰ ἴσα Cant. Agnoscunt Theophylactus et versiones antiquæ universim: nihilominus Prol. p. 133. col. 2. "τὰ ἴσα interpretamentum marginale videtur."

Cap. vii. 11. Οἱ Μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἱκανοί·] Deest ἱκανοὶ, Vulg. Syr. Habent Theophylactus, et Arab. "omissum hic primum ni fallor ex industria ab iis, qui per Μαθηταὶ hic apostolos intellexêre, non autem assiduos quosvis Christi sectatores;" at Proleg. p. 44. col. 1. "Ἱκανοὶ irrepsisse videtur ex v. 12. certe discipulos duodecim neutiquam μαθητὰς ἱκανοὺς vocâsset hic evangelista, scriptor imprimis accuratus, qui nusquam voce ista utitur nisi de magna multitudine;" (quasi non legisset in eodem de 120 discipulis Act. i. 15.) "hos, inquit, duodecim discipulos intelligit D. Lucas, ut colligere est ex Matt. xi. 1. non autem, quod nos olim putavimus, Christi sectatores in genere." Est certe locus Matthæi ἀπροσδιόνυσος, loquitur enim D. Lucas de ingressu Christi in urbem Naim, de quo apud solum Lucam fit mentio, nec impedit aliquid quo minus Christus civitates Galilææ et Judææ orum pertransiens, iisque evangelii doctrinam enuntians, sectatores multos, quales in Galilæa haud pauci, post se traheret: sed non est Millio insolitum levi de causa à se divorsum ire.

V. 24. Τῶν Ἀγγέλων Ἰωάννου·] MSS. μαθητῶν, discipuli, nimirum quos misit, erant ipsius nuncii.

V. 28. Μείζων προφήτης.] Deest in MSS. male: vide v. 26.

V. 46. Ἤλειψέ μου τοὺς πόδας·] Desunt μου τοὺς πόδας in Cant. Ush. 2. Agnoscunt Theophylactus et versiones; ait tamen Millius, Prol. p. 156. col. 1. "Modo extitissent in Lucæ authentico, nemo sanus prætermiserit."

Cap. viii. 8. Ταῦτα λέγων ἐφώνει ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκουέτω·] Agnoscunt hæc verba Theophylactus, et versiones antiquæ universim: et tamen dicente Millio, "in excusis, ac MSS. fere adjecta sunt ista è Matthæo, aut Marco, è lectionariis, et posita sunt loco non suo, neque enim hic finitur lectio." Proleg. p. 155. col. 2. finitur tamen hîc parabola.

V. 34. Ἀπελθόντες·] Deest apud MSS. Theophylactum, versiones:—sed subaudiendum est hoc vocabulum; quî enim pastores factum hoc nunciâsse poterant in civitatem et in villas, nisi paullo ante discessissent à monte, ubi grex porcorum pascebat?

V. 54. Ἐκβαλὼν ἔξω πάντας·] "Marci sunt;" agnoscunt autem Theophylactus, Cod. Alex. Syr. Arab. Pers.

Cap. ix. 1. Μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ·] Desunt apud MSS. Theophylactum, et Dial. contra Marcion. p. 58.—Theophylactus vero paullo post agnoscit hæc verba, sicut etiam dialogus iste in margine: Vulg. Arab. Syr. Duodecadem suam; et cum οἱ δώδεκα essent Christi discipuli, deficientibus illis verbis non deficit sensus.

V. 3. Μήτε ῥάβδους.] V. l. ῥάβδον, ut Matthæus;—male; Marc. vi. 8. præcepit eis ne quid tolerent in viam εἰ μὴ ῥάβδον μόνον: vide de his ἐναντιοφάνεσι annotata nostra ad Matt. x. 10.

V. 10. Πόλεως καλουμένης Βηθσαϊδά.] Ita Theophylactus et Joh. i. 45. è versionibus non paucæ omittunt πόλεως καλουμένης, de veritate rei forsan sollicitæ; nam Chrysostomus in Orat. contra Gentiles, Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 653. Petrum hujus urbis incolam vocat τὸν πόλεως ἀσήμου πολίτην, μᾶλλον δ' οὐδὲ πόλεως, ἀλλὰ τῆς κώμης τῆς ἐσχάτης· Et teste Josepho, Philippus Tetrarcha condidit muroque cinxit τὴν κώμην Βηθσαϊδὰν, tribuens illi τῆς πόλεως ἀξίωμα, appellans simul nomen illius Julias, in honorem sc. Juliæ Augusti filiæ, Ant. lib. xviii. cap. 3.

V. 23. Καθ' ἡμέραν.] Desunt hæc in MSS. 25 Origenis Exhort. ad Martyr. p. 173.—Retinent Cyrillus Alex. tom. i. p. 597. Theophylactus Ed. Rom. 1542. versiones antiquæ omnes.

V. 54. Ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε.] Hæc omittit Vulg.—Habent vero (fatente hîc Millio) Græca exemplaria fere omnia, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. Theophylactus, Chrysostomus de Pœnit. Hom. 1. Ed. Mor. p. 747. Nihilominus "irrepsisse ex margine" dicit Millius, Prol. p. 44.

Cap. xi. 13. Πνεῦμα ἅγιον.] Vulg. ἀγαθὸν, repugnante Theophylacto, et versionibus omnibus.

V. 29. Ἰωνᾶ τοῦ προφήτου.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes:—sed Proleg. p. 152. "τοῦ προφήτου Matthæi esse non est quod dubitemus."

V. 38. Ὁ δὲ φαρισαῖος ἰδὼν ἐθαύμασεν.] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones omnes orientales: Vulg. ἤρξατο διακρινόμενος ἐν ἑαυτῷ γέμειν· ὅτι οὐκ, et hanc lectionem esse germanam pronunciat Millius, Proleg. p. 133. col. 2.

V. 44. Γραμματεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι ὑποκριταί.] Desunt hæc in Vulg.

et duobus MSS. addititia videntur, inquit Lucas Brugensis, id quod ex sequenti commate satis clare colligi posse putat Grotius: non esse adjectitia patet ex Theophylacto, Arab. Æthiop. Pers. ex commate 43. οὐαὶ ὑμῖν φαρισαῖοι, et ex commate 45. ἀποκριθεὶς τίς τῶν νομικῶν, est enim νομικὸς γραμματεὺς (vide annotata nostra in Mar. xii. 28.) et professione pharisæus.

Cap. xii. 14. Ἡ μεριστὴν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones; hoc autem cum Marcione insititium esse vult Millius, Proleg. p. 33. col. 2. p. 44. col. 1.

V. 18. Τὰ ἀγαθά μου·] "Sequentia καὶ τὰ ἀγαθά μου adscripta primum ad marginem è versu proxime sequente, irrepsêre mox in contextum, et codices jam universim occupant;" hæc Millius Proleg. p. 106. col. 2. Ex mero de vulgato suo somnio, ut liquet ex his verbis, ita simpliciter Lin. Cant. et Vulg. initio ut videtur. Agnoscunt enim hæc verba versiones omnes, C. Alex. Basil. tom. ii. p. 452. Euthym. Theophylact. Hieronymus, postulantque verba sequentia v. 19. Dicam animæ meæ, ἔχεις πολλὰ ἀγαθά· denique tripliciter peccasse hunc divitem nolunt Basilius, Chrysostomus, alii; 1. Quod vera bona divitias suas existimavit. 2. Quod bona sua. 3. Quod bona animæ. v. 19.

V. 31. Καὶ ταῦτα πάντα προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν·] Deest πάντα Tertulliano, Marcioni. Habent Theophylactus et versiones omnes; non videtur omittendum, inquit Lucas Brugensis; et tamen Proleg. p. 33. " medium hoc πάντα Matthæi est."

V. 38. Ἐν τῇ τρίτῃ φυλακῇ·] Ἐσπερινῇ φυλακῇ posuit Marcion pro τρίτῃ, Epiphanius; et tamen ait Millius " hæc genuina esse Lucæ non dubito, Epiphanium in errorem, ut alias non semel, seduxit vitiosum exemplar," Proleg. p. 33. col. 2. Seduxit cum eo Basilium, lib. ii. p. 44. Theophylactum et versiones universim; unde quod Marcioni hîc dicit Epiphanius, p. 335. Millio dictum putes ἐλήλεγται μεταστρέψας τοὺς Θείους λόγους ἀνοήτως πρὸς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ὑπονοίαν. Ἐσπερινὴ φυλακὴ in Evangeliis nusquam occurrit, sed δευτέρα, τρίτη, τετάρτη tantum.

V. 29. Εἰ ἤδη ἀνήφθη·] Origenes εἴτε δὲ ἑκάη, Philoc. p. 106. et Hom. in Ex. Ed. Huetii. tom. i. p. 22. Cyrillus autem Hieros. Catech. 17. p. 195. Chrysostomus Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 216. et Theophylactus textum sequuntur.

Cap. xiii. 21. Εἰς ἀλεύρου σάτα τρία·] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones omnes; Ambrosius non legit sata tria, in Matthæo (inquit) legitur tribus mensuris.

V. 35. Ὁ οἶκος ὑμῶν ἔρημος·] Deest ἔρημος apud MSS. codices, Euthymium, nec agnoscunt Latini quidam, teste Grotio, adjici videtur huc ex Matt. xxiii. 38. Lucas Brug. Ex quo loco potius stabilitur; habent enim hîc Theophylactus, et versiones omnes, et ad sensum complendum est vox plane necessaria.

Cap. xiv. 5. Τίνος ὑμῶν ὁ ὄνος ἢ βοῦς.] Millius, Prol. p. 44. col. 2. Οἷς ἢ Cant. ut liquet ex ejus Latinis, 'cujus ex vobis ovis aut bovis,' verum diu est cum originaria ista Græca perierunt, ex οἷς factum à posterioribus Græcis υἱὸς ita quidem legunt C. Alex. Theophylact. Syr. tandem vero à quopiam mutatum υἱὸς in ὄνος, maxime quod alias in evangelio conjunctim legantur, cap. xiii. 15. Quod quidem cum factum fuerit à Christo in priore capite, eademque instantia, satis ex eo liquet quod iisdem asini et bovis exemplis et hic usus sit. Porro asinum hic legunt Hieronymus, Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Beda οἷς Cant. solus, patre nullo, versione nulla suffragantibus, immo utrum ipse οἷς legerit necne, vel Millio teste, incertum est, is enim notis in hunc locum sic, Cant. πρόβατον ἢ, prout Christus ipse Matt. xii. 11.

Cap. xvi. 8. Ὅτι φρονίμως ἐποίησεν.] " D. Theophylact." ita Millius festinanter; legit enim Theophylactus.

V. 12. Τὸ ὑμέτερον,] V. l. τὸ ἡμέτερον Ita Theophylactus, et Origenes, Hom. 7. in Jer. Ed. Huetii, tom. i. p. 94. sed versiones omnes editis congruunt: plurimas variantes lectiones affert ex dial. contra Marcion. p. 55, 56. quod si in editione Aldina oram libri inspexisset, plerasque earum cum textu convenientes reperisse potuit, speciatim, v. 22. et 23. Variationes etiam quasdam minutulas profert ex Clemeate Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 10. p. 199. sed omittit Millius posteriorem clausulam, ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἐκολάζετο ἐν ᾅδῃ ὅ πλούσιος μετέχων τοῦ πυρὸς, ὁ δὲ ἀνέθαλλεν ἐν κόλποις τοῦ πατρός· quæ clausula satis est argumenti quod Clemens Al. se illic textus verbis astringi noluerit. De Tertulliano qui solus legit 'quod meum est,' nihil dico.

Cap. xvii. 10. Δοῦλοι ἀχρεῖοί ἐσμεν.] Ita Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. et Lat. Origenes Hom. in Jos. F. 163. D. 'servi supervacui,' Cyprianus ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 51. et Ep. 33. Hieronymus Epist. ad Ctesip. contra Pelagium, tom. ii. fo. 91. A. Chrysostomus de Pœnit. Hom. 10. Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 636. Hom. 4. in Gen. tom. ii. p. 39. tom. iii. p. 858. 872. tom. v. p. 378. Desunt tantum in vers. Æthiop. unde Millius ἀχρεῖοι quod jam est in omnibus codicibus, " vereor ne irrepsit è margine," Proleg. p. 124. col. 1.

Cap. xviii. 14. 'Descendit hic justificatus in domum suam ἢ ἐκεῖνος;' Origenes in Cels. lib. iii. p. 150. legit ἢ γὰρ ἐκεῖνος de qua lectione Erasmus ait 'in plerisque non invenio:' alii παρ' ἐκεῖνον quod Grotio placet: Basilius, tom. ii. p. 461. et Chrysostomus Ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 349. ἢπερ ἐκεῖνοι quod in omnibus ad idem recidit; mihi præ cæteris placet lectio textus ut Hellenistico idiomati magis consona, ubi ἢ pro μᾶλλον ἢ multoties occurrit: vide annotata nostra in locum, vide etiam Phavorinum et alios exempla ex Homero adducentes.

Cap. xix. 25. Hunc versum agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones universim: " Lubens nisi repugnarent omnes fere codices pro irreptitio habuerim," ait Millius, Proleg. p. 155.

Cap. xx. 1. Διδάσκοντος αὐτοῦ τὸν λαὸν ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ.] Deest ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, Iren.—Habent omnes Scholiastes, et versiones, nec invenio ubi desit apud Irenæum; codices tantum MSS. appellat Millius, Proleg. p. 162. col. 2. quorum fide irreptitium esse putat.

V. 19. Ἐφοβήθησαν τὸν λαόν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: deest τὸν λαὸν tantum apud codices MSS. et tamen τὸν λαὸν haud dubie adjectum est ex aliis locis evangelii, Prol. p. 33. col. 2. frustra Matt. xxi. 46. Mar. xii. 12. legunt τὸν ὄχλον.

Cap. xxi. 24. Ἄχρι πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: legendum simpliciter vult Millius ἄχρις οὗ πληρωθῶσι, atque ita se habuisse arbitror αὐτόγραφον hujus evangelistæ; qui paullo clarius explicata hæc volebant, addebant in margine καιροὶ ἐθνῶν, Proleg. p. 133. col. 2.—Vide locum, lector, ut scias quam precaria, quam ἀμάρτυρα sint omnia, et pene dixerim absurda, frigida et jejuna.

Cap. xxii. 36. Καὶ ὁ μὴ ἔχων πωλησάτω τὸ ἱμάτιον αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀγορασάτω μάχαιραν·] MSS. quidam codices habent πωλήσει et ἀγοράσει: atque ita lectum in multis ætatis suæ exemplaribus testatur Basilius: fidem textui faciunt Origenes in Matt. p. 368. Theophylactus, versiones omnes; immo quod mireris, ipse Basilius in Asceticis de priori commate hæc habet, ὁ ἔχων βαλάντιον ἀράτω ἢ ἀρεῖ, οὕτω γὰρ τὰ πολλὰ τῶν Ἀντιγράφων ἔχει, p. 510. πωλησάτω καὶ ἀγορασάτω cum textu legit: hoc tantum adjiciens quod ex multis locis constat κεχρῆσθαι τὸ προσταττικὸν εἶδος τοῦ λόγου ἀντὶ προφητικοῦ. Nihil hic verius quam quod à Grotio annotatum est; viz. imperativum hoc loco in futurum vertisse quosdam, qui offensi erant præcepti sibi non intellecti novitate: ἀπολεῖται μὲν inquit Origenes, qui horum verborum sensum non capiens emit sibi gladium; et Basilius in modo allatis respondet iis qui hæc pugnare existimabant cum hoc dicto Christi, 'omnes qui acceperint gladium, gladio peribunt.'

V. 42. Εἰ βούλει παρενεγκεῖν τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο ἀπ' ἐμοῦ·] MSS. codices legunt παρελθεῖν, παρανέγκῃ, παρανέγκαι, παρανέγκῃ; Origenes et Epiphanius παρελθέτω, hoc autem ab iis factum esse censet Grotius ob hoc loquendi genus, non intellectum est enim εἰ βούλει, &c. 'utinam velles auferre.'

Cap. xxiii. 43. Λέγω σοι σήμερον μετ' ἐμοῦ ἔσῃ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ.] Millius hic Origenem citat, qui Com. in Joh. p. 421. quosdam ætatis suæ memorat adeo perturbatos dicto hoc (partim quia opinioni eorum de Christi in inferos descensu adversari, partim quia pœnitentiam quam quis ferme moriens ageret, nimium probare visum est) ut suspicarentur προστεθεῖσθαι τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ.

V. 46. Εἰς χεῖράς σου παραθήσομαι τὸ πνεῦμα μου.] Hic Justinus Dial. cum Tryph. p. 333. et Origenes in Matthæum, p. 422. legunt παρατίθεμαι voce media, alii παρατίθημι commendo : textus tamen convenit cum versione LXX. et voce Hebraica אפקיד. Sed parvi res, siquidem, ut notat Grotius, 'futurum hic more Hebræo pro præsenti est.' Sequitur καὶ ταῦτα εἰπὼν ἐξέπνευσεν. Hæc agnoscunt C. Al. Theophylact. versiones universim. Et tamen Millio suspecta sunt παρεμβλήσεως. Prol. p. 160. col. 2.

Cap. xxiv. 1. Καί τινες σὺν αὐταῖς.] "Commentarius est," Millius Proleg. p. 44. Retinent autem Codex Alex. Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers.

V. 46. Καὶ οὕτως ἔδει.] "Sumpta sunt (inquit Millius ib.) ex. v. 26." Agnoscunt tamen Codex Alex. Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Pers.

V. 47. Ἀρξάμενον·] Vulg. ἀρξαμένων, "recte" Millius, ibid. viz. ἀρξάμενόν ἐσται τὸ κήρυγμα, ἢ ἀρξαμένων τὴν κήρυξιν τῶν ἀποστόλων.

V. 52. Προσκυνήσαντες αὐτόν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: nihilominus Prol. p. 44. col. 2. Lector quispiam huc traduxit ex Matt. xxviii. 17.

SECTIO QUARTA.

IN JOHANNEM.

CAP. i. 16. Καὶ ἐκ τοῦ πληρώματος αὐτοῦ.] MSS. ὅτι et Origenes in Joh. p. 82. Græca scholia, et versiones omnes textui consentiunt, contextu id exigente, nec enim rationem hæc verba exhibent prioris commatis, sed pergunt in beneficiis explicandis à Christo proventibus: et tamen, Prol. p. 87. col. 1. "Pro ὅτι notatum ab aliquo καὶ, quod mox transiit in contextum."

V. 18. Ὁ μονογενὴς υἱός·] Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 37. p. 355. legit unigenitus Deus, et in eodem cap. p. 333. unigenitus filius, et lib. iii. cap. 11. p. 219. unigenitus filius Dei; Origenes semper ὁ μονογενὴς Θεὸς, sc. Com. in Joh. p. 82. ὁ μονογενὴς υἱὸς Θεὸς, p. 94. μονογενὴς γε ὢν Θεὸς, lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 104. Syr. unigenitus ille Deus: antiqua ergo fuit hæc lectio facili errore legentium υ̅ς̅ pro Θ̅ς̅: patres enim sequentium ætatum, contra Arium militantes, textum continuo sequuntur. Puta Athanasius, tom. i. p. 270. Epiphanius Anchorat. p. 7. Eusebius de Eccles. Theol. lib. i. cap. 20. §. 7. lib. ii. cap. 23. p. 142. Basilius de Spiritu S. cap. 6. p. 302.

V. 27. Ὃς ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν·] Ita Græca scholia, et versiones omnes; firmante hanc lectionem v. trigesimo et v. 15. Et tamen ex fide Nonni et Æthiop. "irrepsisse videntur ex v. 15. et v. trigesimo," Proleg. p. 87. col. 1.

V. 28. Ταῦτα ἐν Βηθαβαρᾷ ἐγένετο·] Hanc lectionem firmant Epiphanius, Hær. li. p. 434. Origenes in Joh. p. 130, 131. Theophylactus, Chrysostomus et Suidas, de quibus vide luculentam Millii annotationem, atque Prol. p. 101. col. 2.

V. 52. Ἀπ' ἄρτι,] Desunt hæc in Vulg. Copt. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Chrysostomus, Syr. Arab. Pers.

Cap. ii. 16. Τοῖς τὰς περιστερὰς πωλοῦσι·] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones universim; Cod. Cyprius πωλοῦντι· "Factum jam olim videtur plurale ob sequentia ἄρατε, ποιεῖτε," Millius, Prol. p. 87. col. 1.

V. 17. Κατέφαγέ με] Theophylactus, Chrysostomus, versiones omnes, p. 70. Inter Psal. lxix. 9. Καταφάγεται inquit Millius MSS. Cod. Origenes in Joh. p. 183. Perfida fide, legendum ibi κατέφαγέ ob sequentia, οὕτω γὰρ κεῖται ἐν τῷ προφήτῃ, καὶ οὐχὶ καταφάγεται, quo non obstante "genuinum Johannis est καταφάγεται," Prol. p. 127. col. 1.

V. 19. Λύσατε τὸν ναὸν τοῦτον.] Origenes addit Θεοῦ in Joh. p. 149. τοῦτον autem legit, p. 183. 4. 6.

Cap. iii. 25. Facta est autem questio ex discipulis Johannis μετὰ Ἰουδαίων.] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 151. MSS. Cod. et Chrysostomus μετὰ Ἰουδαίου, Theophylactus textu μετὰ Ἰουδαίων Com. πρὸς Ἰουδαῖόν τινα, plures nempe aderant, unus quæstionem movebat ventilabatque.

Cap. iv. 3. Ἀπῆλθε πάλιν·] Deest πάλιν in MSS. aliquot. Habent Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Cum vero Christus in Galilæa ante id tempus versatus fuerit, et ex ea Hierosolymam ascenderit ad celebrandum pascha, recte dicitur abiisse iterum in Galilæam.

V. 35. Τετράμηνον·] Origenes in Joh. p. 230. 232. legit τετράμηνος sub. χρόνος. Chrysostomus et Theophylactus τετράμηνον substantive. Vide Budæum.

Cap. v. 2. Ἐπὶ τῇ προβατικῇ κολυμβήθρᾳ·] Προβατικὴ κολ. Ita Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Theodorus Mopsuest. ac Ammonius in Catena, Hieronymus, Beda perperam trahentes ad piscinam quod de urbis porta dicitur, cujus in S. literis mentio non semel: corrige ergo annotata nostra in hunc locum, nos enim cum iis erravimus.

V. 4. Agnoscunt hunc versum Græca scholia et versiones omnes: C. Alex. Hieronymus, August. tom. viii. in Psal. lxxxiii. p. 922. "Veruntamen mihi, inquit Millius, vehemens suspicio est irrepsisse jam olim evangelio ad Hebræos," Prol. p. 45.

V. 9. Καὶ εὐθέως ἐγένετο ὑγιὴς ὁ ἄνθρωπος.] Agnoscunt etiam hæc Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Nihilominus utcunque in plerisque al. Cod. locum habent, quoniam in codice Trit. desunt, "desumpta videntur ex v. 4. hujus cap. quem νοθεύσεως suspectum habeo," Prol. p. 154. col. 2.

V. 16. Καὶ ἐζήτουν αὐτὸν ἀποκτεῖναι·] Desunt hæc Vulg. Habent Græca scholia, et versiones orientales, et v. 18. firmat hanc lectionem: "sunt tamen huc traducta ex v. 18." Prol. p. 45. col. 1. ita Millius.

V. 27. Κρίσιν ποιεῖν ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστί·] V. 28. Μὴ θαυμάζετε τοῦτο, Theodoretus Orat. II. adv. Gent. p. 657. Hæc verba ita conjungit versu 27. ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστι, μὴ θαυμάζετε τοῦτο; Chrysostomus et Theophylactus vulgatam lectionis distinctionem ceu Pauli Samosatensis commentum improbant, et locum hoc glossemate explicant μὴ θαυμάζετε ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστι, καὶ γὰρ καὶ υἱὸς Θεοῦ ἐστι; ita pariter Syr. Origenes autem in Joh. p. 334. Cyrillus, Augustinus hic, Vigilius contra Eutych. lib. v. et versiones reliquæ omnes legunt cum textu: et hanc lectionem Maldonatus genuinam esse probat his verbis: 'si filius hominis est' et cum sequentibus jungenda essent, non dixisset Christus 'quia filius hominis est nolite mirari,' perversa et inusitata verborum collocatione, sed 'nolite mirari quia filius hominis est,' hic enim naturalis est verborum fluxus: præterea quid faceret pronomen illud τοῦτο additum ad finem? si enim superiora verba ad verbum 'mirari' referantur, jam verbum suum habebit accusativum, nec alterum poterat admittere.

Cap. vi. 11. Διέδωκε τοῖς Μαθηταῖς, οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ τοῖς ἀνακειμένοις·] Ex aliis evangelistis adjecta esse ista, τοῖς μαθηταῖς, οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ, notarunt jam olim, teste Millio, Erasmus, Zegerus, Grotius, viz. quia omittuntur à MSS. aliquot versionibus, Nonno et Augustino: sed occurrunt non modo apud Theophylactum, sed et apud Matt. xiv. 18. Mar. vi. 41. Luc. ix. 16. Verissimum igitur est Christum distribuisse panes discipulis, ut illi ponerent ante discumbentes; similiter se gessit Christus, cum pavisset quatuor millia hominum, Matt. xv. 36. Mar. viii. 1. Et receptam lectionem genuinam esse res ipsa indicat; Christum enim sua ipsius manu absque ulla discipulorum ope, panes et deinceps pisces distribuisse inter quinque millia hominum, totidemque forsan mulieres, et parvulos incredibile quidem videtur, et quod fere fieri non potuit.

V. 14. Οὗτός ἐστιν ἀληθῶς ὁ προφήτης·] Τὸ ἀληθῶς habent Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, veruntamen, dicente Millio, "interjectum est ἀληθῶς ex cap. vii. v. 40." Proleg. p. 133. col. 2.

V. 32. Εὐχαριστήσαντος τοῦ Κυρίου·] Desunt hæc in Chrysostomo et Syr. Retinent Theophylactus et versiones reliquæ: "irrepserunt tamen è margine." Ibid.

V. 39. Deest πατρὸς in MSS. et versionibus aliquot, Chrysostomo et Cyrillo. At cum pater miserit Christum, vox illa necessario subaudienda est.

V. 51. Σὰρξ ἣν ἐγὼ δώσω·] "Hæc verba irrepsêre è margine ad supplendam sententiam;" Millius, Proleg. p. 45. col. 1. Agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, et versiones universim.

V. 55. Ἡ σάρξ μου ἀληθῶς ἐστι βρῶσις, καὶ τὸ αἷμά μου ἀληθῶς ἐστι πόσις·] MSS. aliquot, Arab. Chrysostomus, Cyrillus, et Origenes in Joh. p. 164. legunt ἀληθής. Sed Origenes in Matt. p. 417. et Gregorius Nyss. Hom. 8. in Eccl. p. 457. legunt ἀληθῶς, et sic Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop.

Ad finem v. 56. Stephanus, et Cant. addunt καθὼς ἐν ἐμοὶ ὁ πατὴρ, κἀγὼ ἐν τῷ πατρί· Ἀμὴν, Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ λάβητε τὸ σῶμα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ὡς τὸν ἄρτον τῆς ζωῆς, οὐκ ἔχετε ζωὴν ἐν αὐτῷ. "Hæc ipsius Johannis verba esse" asserit Millius in appendice, ex fide sc. Cant. (de quo tamen codice "mirum in modum interpolato" vide judicium Millii, Proleg. p. 132. col. 2.) Agnoscit illa nullus pater, nulla versio, nullus commentator; atque iis omissis citat hoc caput à v. 53. ad v. 58. Origenes, περὶ εὐχῆς, p. 88, 89. Nec Christus per totum hoc caput vocabulum σῶμα usurpat, nec loquitur de corpore suo sacramentaliter capiendo, ut alibi fusius ostensum est: nihilominus 'restituta' vult Millius, Proleg. p. 74.

V. 58. Τὸ μάννα et v. 64. οἱ μὴ πιστεύοντες agnoscunt Græci, reliquique interpretes omnes: omittit τοῦ ζῶντος, v. 69. unicus Vulg. Sed Proleg. p. 164. col. 2. "expressum in margine τὸ μάννα in omnes mox codices manavit:" et Prol. p. 88. col. 1. "Insertum in posterioribus μὴ ex priore parte versiculi:" et Prol. p. 45. col. 1. "τοῦ ζῶντος adjectum ex Matthæo."

Cap. vii. 1. Οὐ γὰρ ἤθελεν ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ περιπατεῖν·] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones, codicesque MSS. omnes, nec enim unum producere potuit Millius qui aliter legerit, ita Chrysostomus in textu, Comm. autem οὐ γὰρ εἶχεν ἐξουσίαν. Nihilo secius dicit Millius "οὐκ ἤθελεν insertum est in genuinæ (εἶχεν) locum ut congruentius," Proleg. p. 84. col. 1. Millio nimirum ad novam lectionem in textum introducendam autor satis est unus, immo satis est nullus.

V. 8. Ἐγὼ οὔπω ἀναβαίνω·] Hanc lectionem satis stabilivi in annotatis meis, quibus subjunge 1. Millius ait οὐκ ἀναβαίνω ex Chrysostomo, Cyrillo (Cyrillus ille est Clicthovæus quidam, homo nuperus,) esse legendum; Chrysostomus tamen habet (quod Millium parum ingenue id celantem, non fugit) οὐκ ἀναβαίνω ἄρτι, et deinde addit, Christus non locutus est καθάπαξ οὐκ ἀναβαίνω, ἀλλὰ νῦν, τουτέστι, μεθ' ὑμῶν, ego jam non ascendo, i. e. non vobiscum. 2. Porphyrius non calumniatus est Christum de mendacio, sicut Grotius et Millius opinantur, sed solummodo condemnavit eum inconstantiæ et mutationis. Hieronymus adv. Pelag. tom. ii. fol. 103. G.

V. 21. Καὶ πάντες θαυμάζετε διὰ τοῦτο 22. Μωσῆς——, ita Theophylactus. Sed versiones omnes, et Cyrillus Al. tom. iii. p. 521. ponunt stigma post θαυμάζετε· Corrige ergo annotata mea in hunc locum. Non enim interpunctionem hanc cum Millio genuinam existimo, Prol. p. 105. col. 2.

V. 26. Μήποτε ἀληθῶς ἔγνωσαν οἱ ἄρχοντες ὅτι οὗτός ἐστιν ἀληθῶς ὁ Χριστός·] MSS. plura, Syr. Copt. Pers. Æthiop. omittunt posterius ἀληθῶς, et sic Origenes in Joh. p. 161, 162. Retinent autem Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Cod. Alex. sensu quidem commodo: 'nunquid certis indiciis cognoverunt principes quia hic vere est Christus?'

V. 35. Ὅτι ἡμεῖς οὐκ εὑρήσομεν αὐτόν.] Desunt hæc apud Chrysostomum et Nonnum. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones omnes; suntque plane necessaria ad complendum sensum.

V. 45. Καὶ φαρισαίους·] Ita Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Nihilominus, Proleg. p. 87. col. 1. "Καὶ φαρισαίους, quod amplius in nostris, vix obstat codicum consensus quo minus translatum huc putem ex v. 47. hujus capitis."

Cap. viii. 1—8. Quod ad historiam de muliere in adulterio deprehensa attinet, vide annotationem Millii, ubi illam tuetur ac defendit. Vide etiam P. Simonii Crit. Hist. N. T. lib. i. cap. 13.

V. 14. Ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οἴδατε πόθεν ἔρχομαι, καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω·] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes.

V. 34. Δοῦλός ἐστιν τῆς ἁμαρτίας·] Ἁμαρτίας agnoscunt Græca scholia, versiones omnes, et Origenes in Matt. p. 317. "Adjectum esse" censet Millius, Proleg. p. 133.

V. 52. Εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα·] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 336. Theophylactus, et versiones universim.

V. 53. Μὴ σὺ μείζων εἶ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἀβραάμ ——Καὶ οἱ προφῆται ἀπέθανον.] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 336. Theophylactus, versiones omnes. Nihilominus dicente Millio "τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν, Prol. p. 133. καὶ οἱ προφῆται ἀπέθανον, Prol. p. 162. irrepserunt ex præcedentibus."

V. 57. Πεντήκοντα ἔτη οὔπω ἔχεις.] Recepta est hæc lectio Nonni, Theophylacti, Irenæi, omnium denique exemplarium: Chrysostomus tamen legit τεσσαράκοντα, tom. i. Ed. Mor. p. 364. et in locum ἐγγὺς τεσσαράκοντα.

Cap. ix. 8. Ὅτι τυφλὸς ἦν·] Ita Theophylactus; προσαίτης Chrysostomus, et versiones omnes, parvo discrimine, 'mendicus' nimirum, quia cæcus.

V. 31. Τούτου ἀκούει·] "Addita hæc omnino videntur ad supplendam sententiam," inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 154. col. 2. Sed agnoscunt hæc verba C. Alex. Theophylactus, et versiones omnes.

Cap. x. 8. Πάντες ὅσοι πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἦλθον.] D. πρὸ ἐμοῦ Basilio, et Chrysostomo. Verum cum codices plurimi etiam Cant. Alex. Cypr. ac Clemens Alex. (adde Origenem in Matt. p. 220. in Joh. p. 41. Hieronymum, lib. ii. adv. Pelag. fol. 103. I.) lectionem receptam præferant, "crediderim à librariis olim expuncta ista, seu autoritati prophetarum adversantia, scilicet, certe Manichæos ex his verbis collegisse prophetas non esse missos à Deo, auctor est Theophylactus:" ita Millius; immo Chrysostomus iisdem respondens ait hæc non de prophetis, sed de Juda et Theuda intelligenda esse.

Cap. xii. 32. Πάντας ἑλκύσω πρὸς ἐμαυτόν.] Codices MSS. quidam, Vulg. Irenæus, Hieronymus, Augustinus, Justus Urgelit. Gaudentius legunt πάντα· Origenes autem Comm. in Matt. p. 283. in Joh. p. 412. Chrysostomus et Theophylactus legunt cum textu: Vid. plures apud Millium, Prol. p. 66. col. 1. suntque hæc verba de hominibus tantum intelligenda.

V. 42. Ἵνα μὴ ἀποσυνάγωγοι γένωνται·] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes: omittit Nonnus, carminis forte gratia.

Cap. xiii. 19. Πρὸ τοῦ γενέσθαι·] Legunt hæc verba Origenes in Joh. p. 394, 395. 398. Theophylactus, antiquæ versiones universim: non obstante tamen codicum hodiernorum suffragio "inter scholia marginalia omnino posuerim," inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 160. col. 1.

V. 31. Ὅτε οὖν ἐξῆλθε.] Si subjungantur ista verba commati tricesimo, omittendum est οὖν, quod agnoscunt MSS. et textus. Quod si, pariter ac editio Oxoniensis ac versio Anglicana, claudas comma illud cum his verbis ἦν δὲ νύξ, recte legas in commate sequenti ὅτε οὖν ἐξῆλθε, λέγει, &c. et sic Origenes in Joh. p. 410. Vulg. aliique.

Cap. xiv. 30. Καὶ ἐν ἐμοὶ οὐκ ἔχει οὐδέν.] Epiphanius Hær. Manich. p. 180. §. 64. Legit οὐδὲν τοῦ αὐτοῦ εὑρίσκει, Gregorius Nyss. Hom. 7. in Eccles. p. 444. εὑρίσκει τῶν ἰδίων οὐδέν; hæc autem παραφραστικῶς tantum ab iis dicta esse videantur; alibi enim Gregor. Nyss. legit cum textu: atque ita Chrysostomus et Theophylactus, Origenes in Joh. p. 330. et p. 323. et Hom. 21. in Lucam et versiones omnes: Athanasius, tom. i. p. 440. et Basilius, tom. ii. p. 106. legunt οὐδὲν εὑρίσκει ἐν ἐμοὶ: inter autem τοῦ ἔχειν et τοῦ εὑρίσκειν οὐδὲν scilicet, quod culpari possit, parum est discriminis.

Cap. xv. 11. Ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ.] Utrum hic legas ᾖ cum versionibus, an μείνῃ cum scholiastis, nihil interest.

V. 21. Ταῦτα πάντα.] Græci, reliquique interpretes legebant vel πάντα, vel ἅπαντα: judice tamen Millio, "πάντα irrepsit è margine," Proleg. p. 162. col. 2.

Cap. xvii. 1. Ἐλήλυθεν ἡ ὥρα·] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 21. Græca scholia, et versiones universim, et tamen, Proleg. p. 155. col. 2. Medium "ἐλήλυθεν ἡ ὥρα videtur aliunde irrepsisse ex cap. xii. 23."

V. 11. Καὶ τήρησον αὐτοὺς ἐν ὀνόματι σῷ οὓς ἔδωκάς μοι.] Οὓς hic legunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Athanas. Orat. 4. contra Arian. p. 470. Hær. 38. p. 279. Vulg. Æthiop. Et hanc lectionem certam reddunt verba sequentia, v. 12. quæ apud omnes versiones et scholiastas eadem sunt, viz. Ἐγὼ ἐτήρουν αὐτοὺς ἐν ὀνόματί σου· οὓς ἔδωκάς μοι ἐφύλαξα. Millius tamen, Proleg. p. 120. col. 1. "Ἐν ὀνόματί σου ᾧ ἔδωκάς μοι omnino recte; serva eos per nomen tuum, sive potestatem quâ dedisti ut eandem inter se, quam nos, habeant unionem."

V. 12. Ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ.] Desunt hæc in Vulg. Agnoscunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes: et tamen Proleg. p. 45. col. 1. Ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ "accessit" v. 11.

Cap. xviii. 29. Πάντοθεν·] V. l. πάντες sine discrimine; ubi enim Judæi ab omni loco conveniunt, conveniunt omnes.

V. 23. Τί με δέρεις; δαίρεις, quomodo hîc, et in similibus locis legendum contendit Nansius in Nonnum; δέρω enim, inquit, est excorio, δαίρω cædo, verbero; ita etiam Suidas. Est tamen certum τὸ δέρειν tam apud sacros Scriptores, quam apud profanos, verberandi sensu aliquoties occurrere; ita Luc. xxii. 63. Viri qui tenebant velaverunt eum, δέροντες, in faciem percutientes; ἄερα δέρων aerem verberans, 1 Cor. ix. 26. Εἰς πρόσωπον δέρειν, in faciem cædere; ita δέρεσθαι καὶ δέρειν δι' ἡμέρας est indies verbera dare, et pati, Aristoph. Vesp. p. 463.

Cap. xix. 31. Ἦν γὰρ μεγάλη ἡ ἡμέρα ἐκείνου τοῦ σαββάτου·] MSS. plurima, Cyrillus, Theophylactus, ἐκείνη, sic Editio Oxon. i.e. 'Dies ille sabbati erat magnus dies,' vel dies istius sabbati, utpote triplici ex ratione festus, maximo in honore habendus fuit. Vide Lightfoot. in locum.

Cap. xx. 29. Dixit ei Jesus quia vidisti me Θωμᾶ: Theophylactus, Cyrillus, Augustinus omittunt Θωμᾶ; Origenes autem legit Com. in Joh. p. 195. et verba præcedentia λέγει αὐτῷ Ἰησοῦς lectionem hanc certam reddunt.

Cap. xxi. 12. Οὐδεὶς δὲ ἐτόλμα τῶν Μαθητῶν ἐξετάσαι αὐτόν.] Deest τῶν Μαθητῶν apud Chrysostomum in textu, in Commentario tamen addit οὐκέτι γὰρ τὴν αὐτὴν παῤῥησίαν εἶχον· Agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes: Vulg. 'discumbentium' quod in idem recidit. Et tamen Millius "Commentarii loco fuisse probabile est τὸ τῶν Μαθητῶν," Prol. p. 45. col. 1.

SECTIO QUINTA

IN ACTA APOSTOLORUM.

CAP. i. 16. Διὰ στόματος Δαβίδ·] Desunt hæc Vulg. Æthiop. Origeni, Athanasio, Didymo de Spiritu Sancto. Sed contra habent Vulg. Origenes bis in Acta Apost. Ed. Huetii. to. ii. p. 422, 423. Œcumenius, Chrysostomus in Commentario, Syr. Arab. in genuinis Athanasii scriptis non invenio, ubi desint. Didymum habemus tantum Latine ad vulgati exemplar compositum.

V. 23. Ἔστησαν δύο·] "Augustinus et Arab. 'statuit' numero singulari contra omnium codicum fidem," inquit Millius, forte ob Petri prærogativam stabiliendam.

Cap. ii. 3. Ἐκάθισέ τε,] V. l. ἐκάθισάν τε· Cant. Syr. Arab. Athanasius, Cyrillus. Hîc autem lectori fraudem facit in utrisque; Athanasius enim de Hom. de Hum. Nat. suscepta, p. 606. legit ἐκάθισέ τε, in Ep. dubiæ fidei ad Serap. p. 179. καὶ ἐκάθισαν; in Cyrillis sine discrimine et solo nomine citandis latere potuit, sed ita res evenit ut in utrisque fallat: Cyrillus enim Hieros. Catech. 17. p. 199. legit καὶ ἐκάθισεν, Cyrillus Alex. Glaph. in Gen. p. 45. ἐκάθισέ τε, quomodo legunt Chrysostomus, et Œcumenius, Vulg. 'sedit,' sc. γλῶσσα, aut πῦρ.

V. 24. Λύσας τὰς ὠδῖνας τοῦ θανάτου,] V. l. αὐτοῦ· Vulg. Syr. Arab. Polycarpus, Irenæus, utroque modo Epiphanius; Chrysostomus et Œcumenius, θανάτου, quæ lectio est prorsus necessaria; Esto enim Christum in infernum descendisse; est tamen certissimum nullos illum cruciatus aut dolores ibi tulisse à quibus solvendus esset.

V. 30. Τὸ κατὰ σάρκα ἀναστήσειν Χριστόν·] Desunt hæc Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Irenæo, lib. iii. cap. 12. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Arab. et notante Lorino, nostri codices omnes ea habent.

V. 31. Οὐ κατελείφθη ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ εἰς Ἅδον·] Deest ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ, Iren. lib. iii. cap. 12. p. 229. Vulg. Syr. C. Alex. "insertum, inquit Millius, haud dubito, ex v. 26." Prol. p. 122. col. 2. Sed agnoscunt hæc verba Arab. Chrysost. et Œcumen. in locum Origen. in Reg. p. 32. ubi notat in Psalmis hæc legi Ps. xv. (al. xvi.) 10. et ab Apostolis in Actibus interpretata.

V. 47. Τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ·] "Irrepsisse è Margine," Millius, Proleg. p. 122. fide Vulg. Æthiop. C. Alex. Agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab.

Cap. iii. 4. Σὺν τῷ Ἰωάννῃ·] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, versiones omnes. Nihilominus Proleg. p. 163. col. 2. "Vix impedit summus codicum nostrorum consensus, quo minus sequens σὺν τῷ Ἰωάννῃ, licet in solo hoc codice, quod sciam, haud jam extet, è margine irrepsisse censeam."

V. 12. Ἰδίᾳ δυνάμει, ἢ εὐσεβείᾳ·] Ita Œcumenius, et Chrysostomus tam textu quam commentario; et tamen Millius, Proleg. p. 45. col. 2. "Ἰδίᾳ δυνάμει, ἢ ἐξουσίᾳ habet Chrysostomus non semel."

V. 20. Τὸν προκεκηρυγμένον Χριστόν·] MSS. plurima, Syr. Arab. Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Tertullianus, Chron. Alex. legunt προχειρισμένον; Vulg. et Œcumenius textui assentiuntur: inter utramque lectionem parvi interest, quicunque enim à propheta prædictus, et prædicatus fuit hominibus, idem certe prædestinatus fuit à Deo: verba autem προκατήγγειλε, v. 18. et προκατήγγειλαν, v. 24. receptæ lectioni favere videntur.

V. 22. Πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας·] "Translata huc videntur ex v. 25." Millius, p. 144. 1. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, C. Alex. Arabs.

Cap. iv. 12. Καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἄλλῳ οὐδενὶ ἡ σωτηρία·] Ita legunt Chrysostomus et Œcumenius in locum, Cypr. Test. lib. ii. n. 16. versiones antiquæ, Vulg. Syr. Arab.

V. 25. Ὁ διὰ στόματος Δαβὶδ τοῦ παιδός σου εἰπών·] MSS. aliquot, et Latini Patres addunt ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ; Vulg. Syr. Arab. 'Spiritu Sancto,' forte ex Mar. xii. 36. Nam neque Chrysostomus, aut Œcumenius, neque Arab. Grabioque teste in Irenæum, p. 226. hæc verba textus Actorum Apostolicorum agnoscit.

V. 27. Συνήχθησαν γὰρ ἐπ' ἀληθείας·] MSS. plurima, Chrysostomus, Cyrillus, Irenæus, et quidam è Latinis Patribus, Vulg. et Syr. addunt ἐν τῇ πόλει ταύτῃ, quæ omittunt Œcumenius et Arabs; neque placent Millio, qui hîc "Chrysostomum, et Vulg. interpolatos esse dicit," Prol. p. 85. col. 2. Grabius in Irenæum, p. 226. inquit; 'Glossema est, non ipsius Lucæ dictum.'

V. 32. Ἦν ἡ καρδία καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ μία·] Cyprianus, et bini codices MSS. addunt καὶ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς διάκρισις οὐδεμία· Sed Origenes in Matt. p. 382, 383. editis congruit, et ex antiquis scholiastis atque interpretibus, qui hæc verba agnoscunt, hominem arbitror fuisse neminem.

Cap. v. 15. Κατὰ τὰς πλατείας·] Deest in Æthiop. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Veruntamen Proleg. p. 124. col. 1. Medium "κατὰ τὰς πλατείας adnotatoris cujusdam est, non Evangelistæ."

V. 34. Τοὺς ἀποστόλους ἔξω ποιῆσαι·] MSS. duo, Vulg. Chrysostomus, legunt ἀνθρώπους, "quam lectionem germanam arbitror," inquit Millius; at immerito. Nam tametsi Gamaliel jusserit foras homines secedere, Divus tamen Lucas, qui eos Christi Apostolos esse probe novit, vocabulum illud recte usurpare potuit; perinde ac Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. et Æthiop.

Cap. vi. 8. Στέφανος δὲ πλήρης πίστεως·] Millius hic Proleg. p. 78. col. 1. hæc habet; "χάριτος omnino recte, ita enim Vulg. Æthiop. Syr. Asterius, Proclus, Euthalius, Chrysostomus:" Œcumenius autem et Arab. immo Chrysostomus legunt πίστεως: doctorem fefellit in Chrysostomo, forte in aliis, mos apud Scripturas et Patres, loquendi de fide miraculosa τῷ τῆς χάριτος ὀνόματι· Lectionem textus mihi firmam reddunt verba, Com. 5. 'elegerunt Stephanum virum πλήρη πίστεως.'

Cap. vii. 37. Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῶν—αὐτοῦ ἀκούσεσθε.] Desunt verba notata Arab. et Chrysostomo. Agnoscunt Œcumenius, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Evangelista, cap. iii. 22, 23. Millio tamen judice, "αὐτοῦ ἀκούσεσθε, addita ex Deut. xviii. 15. sunt verba Mosis, non Evangelistæ," Prol. p. 110. Quasi religio esset Judæo verba Mosis citare prout in textu Hebræo et LXX. interpret. invenichantur.

Cap. viii. 10. Οὗτός ἐστιν ἡ δύναμις Θεοῦ ἡ μεγάλη. Vulg. et Irenæus, lib. i. cap. 20. 'quæ vocatur magna:' Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. legunt cum textu: nec dicerent Samaritani eo cui fidem adhibebant ἡ καλουμένη, sed ἡ ὄντως μεγάλη.

V. 39. Πνεῦμα Κυρίου ἥρπασε τὸν Φίλιππον:] Hieronymus, Dial. adver. Lucifer. dicit codices quosdam legisse πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὸν Εὐνοῦχον, καὶ Ἄγγελος ἥρπασε τὸν Φίλ. Sed hanc lectionem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et versiones antiquæ non agnoscunt.

Cap. ix. 5. Σκληρόν σοι πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν v. 6.—Καὶ ὁ Κύριος πρὸς αὐτὸν,] "Hæc in contextum transtulisse librarios ex Act. xxii. 10. et xxvi. 14. vult Millius, atque hanc esse germanam lectionem, Ἐγώ εἰμι Ἰησοῦς ὃν σὺ διώκεις· ἀλλ' ἀνάστηθι καὶ, &c." Sed in locis citatis non hæc verba αὐτολεξεὶ reperies; non enim occurrunt τρέμων καὶ θαμβῶν, neque τί με θέλεις ποιῆσαι, sed solummodo τί ποιήσω; præterea σκληρόν σοι πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν hîc agnoscunt Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. quorum autoritas ad hanc lectionem probandam valet plurimum.

V. 20. Ἐκήρυσσε τὸν Χριστὸν, ὅτι οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ] Τὸν Χριστὸν, Chrysost. Œcumen. Arab. τὸν Ἰησοῦν, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. eodem sensu, idem nempe est in ore Apostolorum κηρύττειν τὸν Χριστὸν, et dicere Jesum quem prædicabant, esse Christum. Hoc sensu Philippus ἐκήρυσσεν τὸν Χριστὸν Samaritanis Act. viii. 5. Et falsi fratres ex invidia erga Paulum τὸν Χριστὸν κηρύσσουσιν, Phil. i. 15. Quod autem addit Millius, Proleg. p. 93. col. 2. "Pauli scopo accommodatam magis esse vocem Ἰησοῦν, cujus non erat demonstrare Christum seu Messiam esse Dei filium, (id enim Judæis maxime in confesso erat) sed probare Jesum Nazar. fuisse Dei filium, sive Messiam," in eo longe fallitur. 'Ego enim, inquit Origenes, cum multis Judæis, iisque sapientibus habitis conflictatus οὐδενὸς ἀκήκοα ἐπαινοῦντος τὸν λόγον εἶναι τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ,' lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 79. Et clarius adhuc, lib. iv. p. 162. 'Illud quoque ignorat Celsus Judæos non admodum hoc asserere Christum illum quem etiamnum expectant adventurum, Θεὸν ὄντα, ἢ Θεοῦ υἱὸν, Deum esse, aut Dei filium. Hinc Hieronymus in hæc verba, Jer. xvii. 4. maledictus qui spem ponit in homine, maledictos pronunciat Judæos qui spem habent in homine Christo, viz. sua, quem non filium Dei, sed purum hominem putant esse venturum, unde Christum blasphemiæ reum pronunciant Judæi, quia dixit se filium Dei esse, Joh. v. 18. x. 34, 35.'

V. 31. Αἱ μὲν οὖν ἐκκλησίαι καθ' ὅλης τῆς Ἰουδαίας, καὶ Γαλιλαίας καὶ Σαμαρίας, εἶχον εἰρήνην, οἰκοδομούμεναι·] V. l. ἡ ἐκκλησία, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Sed Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Arab. textum sequuntur, et mentio trium ecclesiarum sub diversis provinciis agentium firmat hanc lectionem.

Cap. x. 6. Οὗτος λαλήσει σοι τί σε δεῖ ποιεῖν·] Quod cum desit in MSS. pluribus "glossema videtur additum ex Act. x. 32. et xxii. 10." Millius hic et Prol. p. 93. col. 1. Posterior locus nihil ad rem facit, et v. 32. repetit tantum quod hic dictum est, sic etiam cap. xi. 14. quod hanc lectionem satis firmat; præsertim cum hæc verba agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Vulg. qui plerumque plus ponderis apud Millium habet quam codices MSS. universi.

V. 21. Τοὺς ἀπεσταλμένους ἀπὸ τοῦ Κορνηλίου πρὸς αὐτόν·] "Additum nullus dubito ex xi. 11. claritatis gratia," inquit Millius hîc, nempe quia deest circiter in viginti MSS. et versionibus, sed 1. si desumatur hoc ex cap. xi. 11. cur non hîc etiam addatur ἀπὸ Καισαρείας, quod occurrit illuc? 2. Extat apud exemplar Œcumenii, apud marginem Chrysostomi, atque apud comma 17. hujus capitis; itaque vero mihi similius videtur omisisse quosdam hæc verba ex eo quod post τοὺς ἄνδρας supervacanea ea esse existimârint.

V. 32. Ὃς παραγενόμενος λαλήσει σοι.] "Accessere commentarii loco ex v. 22." Sed agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcumen. C. Alex. Syr. Arab.

Cap. xi. 12. Μηδὲν διακρινόμενον·] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes; nihilo secius hæc Millius, Prol. p. 45. col. 2. "Sequens μηδὲν διακρινόμενον nemo sustulerit, huc traductum est ex cap. x. 20." Hoc res omnino postulat ut verè Petrus repeteret quæ ei à Spiritu Sancto dicta esse refert ibi Evangelista, suntque tanti ponderis ad Petrum à crimine ipsi imputato vindicandum, ut sine summa ἀβλεψίᾳ, in hac rerum gestarum enarratione omitti non potuerint.

V. 6. Εἶδον τὰ τετράποδα τῆς γῆς, καὶ τὰ θηρία.] "Omittunt Syrus et Epiphanius Hær. Cerinth. p. 112. καὶ τὰ θηρία·" Observasse autem debuit Millius omissa pariter ibi esse τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ; idem tamen Epiphanius disputando contra Ebionitas, p. 146. mentionem facit τῆς ὀθόνης τῆς ἐχούσης πάντα ἐν αὐτῇ θηρία τε, καὶ κτήνη, ἑρπετὰ καὶ πετεινά, unde certum est eum legisse id quod antea omisit.

Cap. xiii. 18. Ἐτροποφόρησεν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ.] "Ἐτροποφόρησεν errore scribarum manifestissimo, pro ἐτροφοφόρησεν," inquit Millius: sed Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Vulg. ab impressis non dissentiunt: ἐτροποφόρησεν vero "à librariis ex margine translatum fuisse in contextum" probare conatur Millius his argumentis. 1. Quia desumpta sunt ista ex Deut. i. 31. ubi versio LXX. legit ἐτροφοφόρησεν. Sed quater citat hæc verba Origenes, sc. lib. iv. contra Cel. p. 210. Hom. 18. in Jer. Ed. Huetii, p. 169. Comm. in Matt. p. 459. et 475. et ubique habet ἐτροποφορησεν. Sic etiam Athanasius, ut in contrariam partem trahatur à Millio; sic enim testimonium illius rectè allegatur in Hœschelii notis in Origenem, tom. i. p. 977. Ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον αὐτοὺς οὕτος ἔφερεν ὡς εἴ τις τροφὸς τροποφορήσειε τὸν ἑαυτῆς υἱόν; 'cum fecerint sibi Israelitæ vitulum ex auro conflatilem, ait Athanasius, cùm pane et aquâ deficientibus murmuraverint, mores eorum sustinuit Deus, pariter ac nutrix filiolo suo flenti aut leviter irascenti adblanditur; sed cum versa et mutata in pejorem partem essent omnia, supplicio eos affecit maximo.' Legit etiam ἐτροποφόρησε codex Vaticanus, teste Huetio. 2. "Moses, inquit Millius, ad fortia quæque hortatur; quod facere non potuit ex eo quod Deus eorum mores in Eremo per 40 annos sustinuerit." Respondeo, potuisse tamen populum hunc ad fortiter agendum incitare ex eo quod idem Deus pro iis pugnaturus esset, de cujus potentia et voluntate singulari dubitare, tot conspicuis prodigiis ab eo in sui gratiam editis tum in Ægypto, tum etiam in Arabiæ desertis, ubi paterna benevolentia eos prosecutus erat, summum nefas esset; hoc autem plane est commatis tricesimi et 31. argumentum.—Pergit Millius dicere, "Deum eorum mores per 40 annos in eremo sustinuisse incongruum est, imprimis, ac fortasse ne verum quidem; quomodo enim eorum mores per annos 40 in deserto pertulit Deus, quos omnes præter unum, et alterum prostravit in deserto?" Respondeo, 1. Si Mosi sit fides adhibenda, hæc verba dicta fuerunt ante hanc stragem; tum enim, inquit Moses, vobis dixi ne terreamimi neve timeatis eos, v. 29. Jehova Deus noster, qui nobis præit, is pugnabit pro vobis, pro omnibus quæ fecit erga vos in oculis vestris in Ægypto, v. 30. Et quæ vidistis in hoc deserto, ubi vos tulit Deus vester quemadmodum quisque filium suum bajulare solet, per omnem viam quam confecistis, donec ad hunc locum perveneritis. Resp. 2. Argumentum hoc supponere τὸ τροποφορεῖν idem hîc tantum valere 'quod mores eorum ferre,' hoc autem negant insignes critici, Gatakerus, Dousæus, Boisius. Audi Boisium, ἐτροποφόρησεν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, i. e. ἦρε καὶ ἐβάστασεν αὐτοὺς ὡσεὶ τροφὸς τὸν υἱόν· tulit labores, molestias populi hujus. Moses nimirum dixerat, v. 9. non possum solus שאת ferre hunc populum; et v. 12. quomodo solus אשא ferrem molestiam quam creatis mihi; et hîc Jehovah נשאך tulit te: in quibus locis Chaldæus utitur voce sebar 'bajulavit;' seu ergo legas ἐτροποφόρησεν sive ἐτροφοφόρησεν, utraque sensu βαστάζειν accipienda sunt, ut textui Originali respondeant. Claudo hæc verbis Boisii; 'porro τροποφορέω multo magis mihi placeat quam τροφοφορέω, non modo euphoniæ gratiâ, sed etiam quia libri plerique omnes in eâ consentiunt lectione.'

V. 19. Κατακληροδότησεν αὐτοῖς τὴν γῆν·] MSS. plura, Chrysostomus et Œcumenius habent κατακληρονόμησεν, et "sic legendum constat ex Deut. i. 38. ubi LXX. quos sequitur Lucas, voce hâc utuntur," ita Millius: sed utram vocem legas, Grotio judice, nihil refert, nam נחל in Piel et הנחיל in Hiphel modo vertitur κατακληρονομεῖν, ut Deut. iii. 28. Josh. xiv. 2. et alibi κληροδοτεῖν, ut Deut. i. 38.

apud Kircherum, sic Josb. xix. 51. Edit. Complut. et 1 Macc. iii. 36. κληροδοτεῖν est ‘ terram sorte dividere.’

V. 23. Ἤγειρε τῷ Ἰσραὴλ σωτῆρα Ἰησοῦν.] Codices plurimi, Œcumenius, Chrysostomus in Comm. Athanasius, tom. i. p. 553. legunt ἤγαγε, et quidem σωτηρίαν vitio librarii. Quod vero ἤγειρε sit germana lectio, probabilis ratio reddi potest, viz. quod τὸ suscitare semen nunquam vertitur à LXX. ἄγειν σπέρμα, sed semper ἀναστήσειν σπέρμα; et in loco parallelo Act. ii. 30. legitur ἀναστήσειν τὸν Χριστόν. Vide cap. iii. 26. et Luc. i. 69. Καὶ ἤγειρε κέρας σωτηρίας ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ τοῦ παιδὸς αὐτοῦ; et sic se habet Dei promissum ἀναστήσω τῷ Δαβὶδ Jer. xxiii. 5. xxx. 9.

V. 33. Ὡς καὶ ἐν τῷ ψαλμῷ τῷ δευτέρῳ γέγραπται.] Ἐν ψαλμῷ τῷ “ πρώτῳ genuinam esse lectionem” acriter contendit Millius, ex autoritate Œcumenii, Hilarii et Origenis Cat. in Ps. ii. 7. teste Cl. Huetio. E contrario notatu dignum est, quod Tertullianus, contra Marcion. lib. iv. cap. 22. et Cyprianus, libro i. et Quir. §. 13. habent disertè Psalmo secundo, et Chrysostomus, versionesque omnes editis congruunt: in Hebræa, Chaldæa, et Græca lingua atque apud interpretes Orientales hi Psalmi inunum neutiquam confunduntur. S. Hilarius in Ps. ii. verbis luculentis declarat, quod regnante Ptolemæo 70. senes Psalmos in hunc ordinem redegerint, numerosque affixerunt spirituali et cœlesti scientia Psalmorum virtutem intelligentes: ex Spiritu igitur, et mandato Dei secundum Hilarium, Psalmus hic secundum locum longè ante obtinuit, dictusque fuit secundus, prius quam Acta Apostolorum literis à Luca consignata essent: Hieronymi testimonium hic allatum, ut subdititium, respuunt critici: idem autem Hieronymus, cum Hebraicè Psalmos in lucem ediderit, bæc verba à Luca allegata, sub secundo Psalmo collocavit: major Origeni ex Catena adhibenda esset fides, nisi dixisset idem Huetius, sublata est Catenarum fides. Ad summam. Si Psalmi ἀνεπίγραφοι fuerint, cur diceret Athanasius hæc verba desumpta esse ἐκ τοῦ δευτέρου ψαλμοῦ; ad argumentum * Millii (mutandi δευτέρῳ in πρώτῳ nulla omnino causa fuerit, legendi δευτέρῳ pro πρώτῳ longe maxima, ne discederet sc. Lucas à codicibus Hebraicis, ac Græcis Veteris Testamenti). Respondeo, mutandi forte causam fuisse ut textus conformaretur exemplaribus illis Latinis quæ à Beda et Erasmo memorantur: quid multa? cum hæc locutus sit Paulus, apud Psalterium vel numerorum erat distinctio aliqua, vel nulla; si nulla fuerit, cur Psalmum Paulus aut primum aut secundum nominat? Sin autem reliqua, cur non ille Hebræus ex Hebræis receptum numerum et ordinem amplecteretur?

V. 45. Ἀντιλέγοντες καί·] Deest in MSS. quibusdam, versionibusque: quod tamen agnoscunt Chrysostomus, et Œcumenius, atque idcirco solum omitti videtur, quia præcesserat ἀντίλεγον.

V. 48. Ἐδόξασαν τὸν λόγον τοῦ κυρίου·] Sic Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. Sed “ Syr. et Æthiop. τὸν Θεὸν, rectè” inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 129. col. 2.

Cap. xv. 20. et 29. Καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ.] Πνικτοῦ omittunt, teste Millio, Irenæus, Cyprianus, Tertullianus, Hieronymus, Augustinus, Ambrosius, Eucherius, Latini omnes: cæterum retinent Græca quæ vidimus omnia (excepto uno Cant.) versiones omnes, etiam Vulgata, Origenes lib. viii. contra Cels. p. 396. ‘ Patres ac tractatores Græci universim, ut proinde minime sollicitandum arbitrer:’ idem vero Millius, Proleg. p. 45. col. 2. ‘ Iisdem Latinis patribus cum Paciano et Fulgentio in medium prolatis, hæc habet, certè medium καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ ipsius Lucæ non est, sed Christianorum veterum,’ &c. Agnoscunt τὸ πνικτὸν ante Origenem, Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. p. 172. post Origenem, Cyrillus Hieros. Catech. 4. p. 34. Cyrillus Alex. tom. i. p. 153. et 575. Constit. Apost. lib. vi. cap. 12. Epiphanius Hær. Naz. §. 8. p. 124. Concilium Gangrense, Can. 2. Quid ad hæc Millius? “ Nempe ista καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ quæ ipsius Lucæ non fuisse supra notavimus, introduxerunt ante Clementis tempora librarii in textum,” Proleg. p. 61. col. 2. Vulgatum cur hîc respuit si quæras, “ addidit ex Græcis suis quartum suffocati” sc. Hieronymus, Prol. p. 82. col. I. Et tamen, p. 61. col. 2. “ Legebant exemplaria aliqua Italicæ versionis ante castigationem Hieronymi;” fefellit hominem mos Latinorum, immo Græcorum, suffocatum sub interdicto sanguinis contineri existimantium, adeoque tria tantum hîc prohiberi putantium; ita Tertullianus, Apol. cap. 9. ‘propterea quoque suffocatis, et morticinis abstinemus, ne quo sanguine contaminemur vel intra viscera sepulto;’ Chrysostomus, Hom. 27. in Gen. Τί ἐστι χρέας ἐν αἵματι ψυχῆς, τοῦτ' ἐστι πνικτὸν, τοῦ γὰρ ἀλόγου ἡ ψυχὴ τὸ αἷμα τυγχάνει· Adjiciunt his Irenæus, lib. ii. cap. 12. Cyprianus ad Quir. lib. ii. cap. 119. MSS. codices quidam hæc καὶ ὅσα ἂν μὴ θέλωσιν ἑαυτοῖς γίνεσθαι ἑτέροις μὴ ποιεῖν· Quæ quoniam non agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Syr. Arab. nec Clemens Alex. Origenes, nec Constitutiones Apostolicæ, nec Patres reliqui ante citati, ea cum Spencero rejicienda esse, Millio non invito, existimo.

Ver. 23. Οἱ πρεσβύτεροι καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί.] Ita Chrysost. Œcum. Syr. Arab. πρεσβύτεροι ἀδελφοὶ, C. Alex. Vulg. Cant. Barb. 1.

Cap. xvi. 7. Καὶ οὐκ εἴασεν αὐτοὺς τὸ πνεῦμα·] MSS. aliquot, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Cyrillus Alex. addunt Ἰησοῦ, sicut etiam Hieronymus, lib. iii. contra Pelag. cap. 6. qui et hæc addit; ‘ nota, inquit, quod Spiritus Jesus Spiritus Sanctus sit;’ et Cyrillus Thess. p. 298. similem affert notam. Ἰησοῦ vero additamentum esse primo aspectu dignoscitur; nam licet dictiones hæ πνεῦμα Κυρίου Χριστοῦ, τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ interdum usurpentur in N. T., dictio tamen πνεῦμα Ἰησοῦ nunquam solitaria incedit; Epiphanius Anchor. p. 72. Chrysostomus, et Œcumenius cum textu legunt; alteram lectionem natam suspicor ex controversia, quæ post exorta est de processione Sancti Spiritûs à Filio. Millio tamen est “ genuina lectio,” Prol. p. 71. col. 1.

V. 14. Προσέχειν τοῖς λαλουμένοις ὑπὸ τοῦ Παύλου·] Hæc verba agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcum. C. Alex. versiones omnes, excepto unico Æthiope: et tamen, Prol. p. 124. col. 2. “ Scholion hoc adjecit librarius quispiam in corpus historiæ.”

Cap. xvii. 23. Ὃν οὖν ἀγνοοῦντες εὐσεβεῖτε, τοῦτον·] Vulg. et Origenes in Joh. p. 155. legunt ὅ et τοῦτο· Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Clem. Alex. Strom. i. p. 314. et Strom. v. p. 588. Syr. Arab. lectionem textûs retinent: sensus in utrisque idem est.

V. 28. Τίνες τῶν καθ' ὑμᾶς ποιητῶν.] Deest ποιητῶν Irenæo, Lat. Augustino, Ambrosio, agnoscunt Clemens Alex. Strom. i. p. 415. Origenes Com. in Joh. p. 155. Chrysost. Œcumenius: hinc observatio illa frequens Clementis, Origenis, Chrysostomi, Paulum prudenter et opportunè, profanis verba facientem, poetarum testimonia laudâsse.

Cap. xviii. 5. Συνείχετο τῷ πνεύματι ὁ Παῦλος] V. l. τῷ λογῳ. Basilius, Theodoretus, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. instabat sermoni: sed Chrysost. Œcumenius et Arab. cum excusis consentiunt; neque enim recte vertitur συνείχετο activè ‘ instabat,’ sed passivè ‘ tenebatur,’ constrictus, coarctatus erat, Matt. iv. 24. Luc. iv. 38. viii. 37. xii. 50. Philip. i. 23.

V. 9. Ἐν νυκτί.] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. apud Syrum tantum deest; Millio tamen videtur “ à librario aliquo additum de margine,” Proleg. p. 130. col. 1.

V. 10. Ἐγώ εἰμι μετὰ σοῦ, καὶ.] Desunt hæc tantum apud Æthiop. versionem nullius fidei: “ Media tamen hæc suspecta habeo παρεμβλήσεως,” inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 124.

V. 17. Πάντες οἱ Ἕλληνες.] Desunt οἱ ἕλληνες, Vulg. unde Millius, Proleg. p. 144. “ insertum est in nostris perperam:” agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, versiones orientales omnes.

V. 21. Δεῖ με πάντως τὴν ἑορτὴν τὴν ἐρχομένην ποιῆσαι εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ.] “ Hæc, inquit Millius, aliunde sunt ex Act. xx. 6. Act. xix. 21.” habent autem Chrysostomus, Œcumen. Syr. Arab.

V. 27. Διὰ τῆς χάριτος.] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcum. versiones orientales omnes: desunt hæc apud Vulg. Bedam, Basilium Seleuc. forte quia non existimârunt dona eximia et divina in hunc hominem collata fuisse, qui sciebat tantum baptisma Johannis.

Cap. xix. 16. Κατακυριεύσας αὐτῶν.] Vulg. et codices MSS. quidam ἀμφοτέρων; cum textu legunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. sine discrepantia.

* Proleg.

Cap. xx. 24. Μετὰ χαρᾶς.] Desunt hæc in MSS. quibusdam, Vulg. Syr. Retinent Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Arab.

V. 28. Τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Lectionem hanc probat et egregie firmat Millius.

Cap. xxi. 7. Ἀπὸ Τύρου.] Ita omnes, excepto Cov. 3. sic tamen Millius, "ἀπὸ Τύρου licet jam in nostris omnibus locum habent, ex versiculo tertio hujus capitis initio huc traducta arbitror." Prol. p. 163. col. 2.

V. 8. Οἱ περὶ τὸν Παῦλον.] Desunt hæc Chrysostomo, Vulg. Syr. Agnoscunt Œcumenius et Arab.: et res ipsa postulat ut qui cum Paulo Ptolemaiada conveniebant, inde cum eo egrederentur.

V. 13. Εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ.] Omittunt hæc Basilius, tom. ii. p. 429. et Cyrillus tanquam non ad eorum propositum: agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius et versiones omnes: et tamen Prol. p. 164. "medium εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ est insertum v. 12." cur non et 13?

V. 22. Δεῖ πλῆθος συνελθεῖν.] Desunt hæc apud Syrum solum: agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. "introducta sunt, inquit Millius, ubi ipsa adscripserat scholiastes quispiam ex infra dictis v. 27. 30." Proleg. p. 150. col. 1.

Cap. xxii. 12. Ἀνὴρ εὐσεβὴς vel εὐλαβὴς,] Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. "Hæc tamen Millius, qui hic nescio quid deesse putârunt, interscrebant alii εὐσεβὴς ex cap. x. 2. alii εὐλαβὴς." Proleg. p. 144. col. 2.

V. 20. Τὸ αἷμα Στεφάνου τοῦ Μαρτυρός σου.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes: deest Στεφάνου in codice Alex.: unde "vix est, ut unius codicis hujus testimonio lectionem hanc germanam existimem, quis Στεφάνου vocabulum tam insigne prætermiserit?" Prol. p. 124.

V. 21. Καὶ συνευδοκῶν τῇ ἀναιρέσει αὐτοῦ.] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab., Vulg. solo renitente; et tamen Millius, "explicatoria τῇ ἀναιρέσει αὐτοῦ alterius loci sunt, nempe cap. viii. 1." Ibid.

V. 29. Καὶ ὅτι ἦν αὐτὸν δεδεκώς.] Ita omnes excepto Æthiop. Et tamen Proleg. p. 124. col. 2. "vereor ut hæc adjecerit scholiastes aliquis ad plenitudinem historiæ."

Cap. xxiii. 9. "Si spiritus locutus est ei aut angelus μὴ θεομαχῶμεν;' illud μὴ θεομαχῶμεν adscriptum putat Erasmus ex cap. v. 39.: et "quidni (inquit Millius hic) et hoc scholion adnotatum putemus ad marginem libri a studioso quopiam, ac cum sensum commodum efficeret, arreptum mox in contextum à librariis:" habent tamen hæc verba Chrysostomus et Œcumenius qui pharisæos introducit hæc loquentes αὐτοῦ ἀποστῶμεν, μὴ αὐτοῦ πολεμοῦντες θεόμαχοι εὑρεθῶμεν, et Arab. et sensus iis sublatis deficit.

V. 30. Ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων——τὰ πρὸς αὐτόν.] Desunt hæc omnia apud Vulg.: agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. Nihilominus Proleg. p. 145. col. 1. "medium ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων, quod est in editis irrepsit ex v. 27."

V. 35. Ἐκέλευσέ τε αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ πραιτωρίῳ τοῦ Ἡρώδου φυλάσσεσθαι.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes: et tamen Millius Prol. p. 91. col. 2. "ego quidem totum hoc pro scholio marginali habeo, quo lector quispiam adauctam voluit hanc historiam."

Cap. xxiv. 15. Ἀνάστασιν μέλλειν ἔσεσθαι νεκρῶν.] Deest νεκρῶν in Vulg. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, versiones reliquæ; at judice Millio "insertum est in editis claritatis gratia," Prol. p. 94. col. 1.

V. 16. Ἀπρόσκοπον συνείδησιν ἔχειν——διαπαντὸς.] Habent τὸ διαπαντὸς Græca scholia et versiones omnes: et tamen Millius Proleg. p. 110. col. 1. "mihi fateor διαπαντὸς istud vehementer suspectum est παρεμβλήσεως, irrepsisse videtur è margine in locum non idoneum."

V. 18. Τίνες ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀσίας Ἰουδαῖοι.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones universim vel hoc versu vel initio sequentis; et tamen "adscripta fuerint ab aliquo ad marginem ex Act. xxi. 26. 37. explicationis causa, irrepsêre demum in textum," Prol. p. 94. col. 2.

Cap. xxv. 16. Χαρίζεσθαί τινα ἄνθρωπον εἰς ἀπώλειαν.] Desunt hæc apud quosdam MSS. Cod. Athanasium, Basilium, Theodoretum: "adjectum jam olim arbitror interpretamenti gratia:" agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. respondentque egregiè clamoribus Judæorum non oportere eum vivere amplius, cap. xxiv. 24.

Cap. xxvi. 7. Ἐν ἐκτενείᾳ.] Desunt hæc tantum in Vulg. et Æthiop. Nihilominus Prol. p. 45. col. 2. "commentarius est, non textus, sed qui semel admissus, non mirum si in infinitos postea codices manârit."

Cap. xxvii. 28. Καὶ πάλιν βολίσαντες.] Desunt hæc Vulg. Syr. Habent Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Arab. suntque necessario intelligenda.

Cap. xxviii. 1. Καὶ διασωθέντες.] Desunt Syr. agnoscunt reliqui omnes: et tamen "lectionarium est ex versu ultimo capitis præcedentis, non Divi Lucæ," Proleg. p. 130. col. 1.

V. 16. Ὁ ἑκατόνταρχος παρέδωκε τοὺς δεσμίους τῷ στρατοπεδάρχῃ.] "Desunt hæc verba, ait Millius, Vulg. Syr. Chrysostomo et tribus MSS." Ergo occurrunt apud reliqua exemplaria omnia, ut et apud Œcumenium et Arabem; rectè viri docti interpretantur, inquit Grotius, 'præfectum prætorio,' nam à Tiberii temporibus prætorianus miles in castris habitus, teste Tacito Annal. 4.: et sub ejus cura fuisse reorum custodias multis ejusdem Taciti locis evincitur; quid ergo impedit, quo minus hæc Lucas referret, saltem ad indicandam singularem gratiam D. Paulo hîc concessam?

V. 29. Agnoscunt hunc versiculum Græci scholiastæ, interpretesque omnes, à Syro si discesseris. Prol. tamen p. 130. col. 1. "versiculum hunc injectitium videri supra notavimus, p. 94."

LIBRI SECUNDI CAPUT TERTIUM.

Examen continet variantium Lectionum in Epistolas D. Pauli, et in Epistolas Catholicas.

CAPITIS TERTII LIBRI SECUNDI

SECTIO PRIMA.

UT ratione, et methodo proposita procedat susceptum opus, de variantibus in epistolis lectionibus jam dicendum est; et hic jucundum mihi et gratum est, quod exemplaria nostra ab illis Theodoreti, Œcumenii, Theophylacti raro, idque in rebus nullius ferè momenti dissideant, neque etiam ab illis Chrysostomi quæ κατ' ἀκρίβειαν scripta sunt, et non κατὰ τὸ αὐτοσχέδιον τῆς λέξεως. Interea tamen mihi perquam molesta fuit frequens illa introductio patrum Latinorum, et versionum quorundam Græcorum patrum in Latinam linguam; quæ quidem parum ponderis, et autoritatis habent. Græcorum quidem testimonia apud Millium parum valent, nam si illi fides adhibenda sit, exemplaria eorum miserè depravata erant, atque ipsius, tanquam Œdipodis, judicio opus est, ut à textu glossema, à vera lectione interpolatio, seu scholion marginale, à genuino irreptitium dignoscatur. Errare autem malumus cum Origene, Athanasio, Basilio, Theodoreto, et Œcumenio, quam cum Italis, et sede apostolica, penè dixeram, vera sentire.

In Græcis patribus pervolvandis quarundam ex epistolis tota penè capita totidem verbis quot in textu, citata interdum reperimus. Ex Gr. à versu 1. capitis i. ad Rom. ad quam ita legit Origenis com. in Joh. p. 55. et p. 266. ita etiam ab 18. ad 24. similiter Greg. Nyssen tom. ii. p. 734. Basil. tom. ii. p. 632. à 28. ad finem capitis. Non leve hoc indicium est, quod in his locis varians unaquæque lectio nihil aliud sit, quam textus genuini depravatio.

Cap. i. 16. Τὸ εὐαγγέλιον Χριστοῦ.] Deest Χριστοῦ Vulg. Tertul. Ruffino, Hilario Diac. Syr. Æthiop. Retinent Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Theophylactus, et licet à textu Chrysostomi exciderit, eum tamen ita legisse constat ex eo quod mirum illi sit visum Apostolum qui alibi dixit, Glorior in cruce Christi, hic solum dixisse non erubesco εὐαγγέλιον Χριστοῦ. Cumque evangelium, de quo loquitur apostolus, Christi pro certo evangelium fuerit, quidni hanc vocem hic adhibuisset pariter ac cap. xv. 19. 29. et ad eundem sensum hic v. 9. ibid. Ἰουδαίῳ πρῶτον. Τὸ πρῶτον agnoscunt Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. et versiones omnes. Et tamen dicente Millio ex fide unius Tertulliani "irrepsit ex aliis locis hujus epistolæ," Proleg. p. 46. col. 2.

V. 17. Ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.] Vulg. Hilarius Diac. aliique Latini legunt 'vivit.' Sed liquet Irenæum, lib. iv. cap. 37. p. 365. legisse 'vivit,' postquam enim hæc allegasset verba, addit, 'hoc autem quod justus ex fide vivet, per prophetas prædictum fuerat.' Ipse Hieronymus, C. Alex. et omnia Gr. scholia legunt ζήσεται, Esthius etiam, spreto hic vulgato interprete, ait 'rectius in futuro vivet,' sic enim multi iique meliores habent codices, Græcis etiam Syrisque adstipulantibus; nam et apud prophetam Hab. ii. 4. ipsum futuri temporis verbum habetur. Et 70 quoque interpretes futurum reddiderunt, eademque lectio est in Græcis, Gal. iii. 11. et ad Heb. x. 38. quibus locis eadem scriptura citatur.

V. 18. Τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐν ἀδικίᾳ κατεχόντων.] Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Orig. Lat. Pseud-Hieronymus, Latini alii legunt 'veritatem Dei' reclamantibus Græcis omnibus, versionibus orientalibus, et C. Alex. et verò Origene contr. Cels. lib. vi. p. 276. Hic autem nobis odiose obtrudit "Pseud. Hieronymum, sive Pelagium, opus, Usserio judice, posterioris ævi, quod à viro nullius judicii compaginatum fuit," et tamen gratum Millio, quia cum Vulgata, quæ ipsi est in deliciis, multoties consentit.

Cap. ii. 1. Πᾶς ὁ κρίνων·] Ita omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Ruffin. Arab. "πᾶς tamen, inquit Millius, explicatoris alicujus esse puto, non Apostoli, ita Syr." Proleg. p. 230. col. 1. Syr. autem ibi legit 'omni excusatione cares, ὁ homo.'

V. 5. In die iræ καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως δικαιοκρισίας τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Iren. lib. iv. cap. 71. p. 375. et Syr. legunt cum textu. Omnia autem Gr. scholia cum aliis addunt καὶ ante δικαιοκρισίας; hoc tamen, juxta Grotium, est tantum ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, quod sensum non mutat.

V. 7. Καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ.] V. l. δὶ ἔργων ἀγαθῶν, Theophylactus Antioc. ed. Paris. lib. i. p. 79. Millii hic me miseret; nam ex septem variantibus lectionibus unicam hanc in lucem profert, reliquas silentio premit, nempe pro κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ legit Theoph. καὶ ἀξίαν τῶν μισθῶν; post ἀγαθοῦ omittit δόξαν καὶ τιμὴν; ante ζωὴν αἰώνιον addit δωρήσεται. Et denique χαρὰν εἰρήνην ἀνάπαυσιν, καὶ πλήθη ἀγαθῶν, pro τοῖς δὲ ἐξ ἐριθείας legit τοῖς δὲ ἀπίστοις, καὶ καταφρονηταῖς, ut reliqua missa faciam. Nec sane constat consilium ei fuisse ut certum aliquem locum allegaret, sed potius ut ex universa scriptura Autolyco statueret ante oculos præmia, quæ bonis tribuet Deus, et pœnas quibus improbos afficiet. Multæ ejusmodi variantes lectiones occurrunt, quæ nomen istud neutiquam merentur: Gr. scholiis omnibus, C. Alex. Vulgato, et Hilario Diac. hic repugnantibus.

V. 17. Ἰδέ.] 'Ecce tu Judæus cognominaris,' v. l. εἰ δὲ 'si autem,' Vulg. Hilarius. Diac. Clem. Alex. Stro. i. p. 353. Theophyl. Syr. Sed Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. C. Alex. textui adstipulantur; atque hæc, secundum Erasmum, est verior, et antiquior lectio; alioquin non satis cohæret ordo: ex v. 21. confirmatur ὁ οὖν διδάσκων, nec enim, τῷ οὖν, εἰ δὲ, sed ἰδὲ apte respondet.

V. 26. Εἰς περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται.] Hic in textu, Chrysostomus legit περιτραπήσεται, et deinde addit οὐκ εἶπε λογισθήσεται, ἀλλὰ τραπήσεται ἅπερ ἐμφατικώτερον ἦν: aiunt autem Œcumenius, et Theophylactus, οὐκ εἶπε τὴν περιτομὴν νικᾷ, ἀλλὰ εἰς περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται, ita enim legunt Theophylactus, Cyril. Alex. to. iii. p. 781. C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. et omnes versiones quæ textum ab unico Chrysostomo, sibimet ipsi parum constanti, abunde vindicant.

Cap. iii. 2. Πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ ὅτι ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Ita Theodoret. Œcumen. Theophyl. C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. versiones omnes. "Origenis tamen in Catena MSS. ait Millius, istud perinde interpretatur ac si scriptum esset ὅτι πρῶτον." Idem innuit Com. in Matth. p. 209. dicendo hæc erant λόγια ἃ πρῶτον Ἰουδαῖοι ἐπιστεύθησαν, et p. 462. vinea illis credita erat, lex et prophetæ προτέροις μὲν τῷ λαῷ ἐκείνῳ, primum quidem populo isti, καὶ γὰρ πρῶτοι ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ, iis enim primum commissa sunt eloquia Dei, δευτέροις δὲ τῇ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνῶν ἐκκλησίᾳ, sed hinc non sequitur aliquid illum à textu diversum legisse, ut constat ex his verbis in locum, 'quid autem multo sit amplius subjungit:' 'primo, inquit, quia credita sunt illis eloquia Dei, quamvis enim et gentibus nunc creduntur eloquia Dei, sed illis, ait, primo sunt credita.' Quod si μὲν γὰρ omittat Chrysost. id nullius momenti est, exhibent enim ea reliqui omnes citati.

V. 9. Προητιασάμεθα·] Ita Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. et versiones orientales: quibus posthabitis, "προητιασάμεθα, inquit Millius, alicujus scholiastæ est," Proleg. p. 46. col. 2. αἰτιασάμεθα legendum vult cum Vulg. Hilario Diac. Ger. Clar.

V. 25. Διὰ τῆς πίστεως.] "Deest Alex. Chry. in Com." ita Millius; sed fallitur, Chrysost. ibi id solum dicit, 'addidisse Apostolum ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ, ut sanguis Christi hostiis judaicis opponeretur.' Cum textu legunt omnia Gr. scholia, et versiones antiquæ, inter quas Vulg. Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 285. in Joh. p. 22. et in locum. Hanc ergo levem dissimilitudinem, ut et Θεοῦ pro Ἰησοῦ commate sequenti, Milliique judicium hic parvi facio, qui Proleg. p. 66. col. 1. ait, "illud διὰ πίστεως irrepsisse non dubito."

Cap. iv. 12. Τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον.] Theodoret. hic legit οὐ τοῖς sensu eodem. Chrysost. autem, Œcumenius, Cyril. Al. Glaph. in Gen. p. 66. et Theophyl. legunt cum textu: ex eo autem quod in commentario dicit Theophylact. οὕτως δεῖ ἀναγνῶναι, καὶ πατέρα τῆς περιτομῆς, οὐ τοῖς ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνης, ὁμοιωμένοις αὐτῷ non magis sequitur eum in textu legisse οὐ τοῖς quam μόνης ὁμοιωμένοις.

V. 19. Οὐ κατενόησε.] Non consideravit corpus suum emortuum, v. l. d. οὐ, C. Alex. Chrysost. ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 311. Theodoret. ὡς κατενόησε, sed Chrysost. Œcum. Theophyl. in locum, Basil. to. ii. p. 418. Vulg. Hilarius Diac. retinent οὐ. Altera etiam lectio sensum non mutat, cum unicum hoc significet, quod licet Abraham consideravit corpus suum mortuum, et emortuam vulvam Saræ, non tamen infirmatus sit fide.

V. 20. Οὐ διεκρίθη τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ.] Ita legunt omnia Gr. scholia, Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Syr. Arab. et C. Alex. est, tamen, dicente Millio, ex fide Æthiop. τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ arreptum de margine, Proleg. p. 124. col. 2.

Cap. v. 1. Εἰρήνην ἔχωμεν.] Agnosco hic omnia Gr. scholia legisse ἔχωμεν, Vulg. Hilarium Diac. et quosdam Latinos habeamus; sed monente Erasmo, in plerisque Græcorum codicibus scriptum habetur ἔχομεν, et sensus hic non patitur imperandi modum (nisi ἔχωμεν reddas, 'retineamus,' quam significationem obtinet, Hebr. xii. 28. aliisque in locis) Apostolus siquidem loquitur de justificatis per fidem qui pacem jam habent cum Deo, et subsequentia per Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum eundem sensum planè indicant; justificatis enim ex fide in Christum, rectè dicit Apostolus 'pacem habemus per fidem in Christo,' parum rectè autem dixisset, 'habeamus' per eum pacem illam, quæ iis à longo jam tempore acquisita fuit.

V. 2. Τῇ πίστει.] Deest Æth. MSS. quibusdam Hilario D. Sed extant verba hæc in omnibus Gr. scholiis, Vulg. Arab. Syr.: "est tamen, judice Millio, commentarius importunè satis intrusus in textum," Prol. p. 46. col. 1.

V. 5. Τοῦ δοθέντος ἡμῖν.] Ita Gr. scholia, versiones omnes, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac.: "et tamen, dicente Millio, τοῦ δοθέντος ἡμῖν assumentum ex fide Vulg. nescio cujus," Proleg. p. 46. col. 2.

V. 12. Ὁ θάνατος διῆλθεν.] Ὁ θάνατος hic occurrit vel ante, vel post διῆλθεν apud Gr. scholia, et versiones universim, et C. Alex.: ex fide tamen Ruffini, et Hilarii Diac. "irrepsit ex priore parte versiculi," Proleg. p. 46. col. 1.

V. 17. Καὶ τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικαιοσύνης.] D. τῆς δωρεᾶς, Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18. p. 242. Orig. Com. in Joh. p. 334. August. lib. i. de Bapt. cap. 13.: sed omnes versiones, et Gr. scholia, C. Alex. et Hilarius Diac. hanc vocem retinent, quam tametsi Origenes loco dicto omittat, ait tamen p. 338. clam Judæos fuit, ὅτι οἱ τὴν περισσείαν τῆς χάριτος, καὶ τῆς δορεᾶς λαμβάνοντες βασιλεύσουσι, διὰ τοῦ ἑνὸς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Irenæum et Origenem non legisse, ait Grabius, forte quod hæ duæ voces ob recurrentem particulam τῆς per negligentiam scribæ omissæ essent. Asserit quidem Millius "Origenem legisse βασιλεύουσι," sed emendatur hæc lectio p. 338.; et Marg. 334. adscribitur γὰρ βασιλεύσουσι, quod in Chrysostomo etiam potuit reperire Millius, si commentarium illius diligentius excussisset, ubi in clausula ἐν ζωῇ βασιλεύσουσι, usque adeo in citationibus suis dormitat Millius, sicut etiam Prol. p. 46. ubi "τῆς δωρεᾶς irrepsisse" ait.

Cap. vi. 4. Διὰ τῆς δόξης τοῦ πατρὸς.] Desunt hæc Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18. Tertul. de resur. cap. 47. In textu autem retinent omnes C. MSS. Gr. scholia; versiones, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac.: Proleg. tamen p. 74. cap. 2. "διὰ δόξης τοῦ πατρὸς scholiastæ est, non Apostoli."

V. 10. Ὁ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέθανε, et τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἡμῶν.] Orig. in Matt. p. 417. ita Millius; textum tamen ipsum exhibet Origenes Com. in Joh. p. 11. Hipostigme postea ad vocem ἁμαρτία, et p. 204. et lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 102. immo eodem in loco et linea immediate sequenti rationem affert, quare dum loqueretur de remissione peccatorum facta per Christi baptisma, addidisset ἡμῶν, viz. διόπερ ὁ ἀπέθανε τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἡμῶν, ἐπεὶ αὐτὸς ἀπέθανε τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ οὐ τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ, ἀλλὰ τᾶ ἡμετέρᾳ. Crebras ejusmodi à Millio citationes, ut res postulat, invitus refero. Porro Proleg. p. 124. col. 2. hæc habet, "τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ quod in cæteris fere omnibus (excepta Æthiop.) irrepsisse ex hujus cap. v. 2. omnino suspicor:" ex suspicionibus tam iniquis tota scripturæ fides periclitatur.

Ver. 12. Non ergo regnet peccatum in vestro mortali corpore εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν αὐτῇ ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ.] Verba subnotata desunt Iren. lib. v. cap. 14. p. 421. Tertul. de resur. cap. 47. Retinent autem ea Orig. περὶ εὐχῆς. p. 79. C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. Gr. scholia, versionesque ad unum omnes; perperam igitur Millius hæc veluti commentarium rejicit, non textum. Proleg. p. 46. col. 2. p. 66. col. 1.

V. 16. Ἢτοι ἁμαρτίας εἰς θάνατον·] Εἰς θάνατον agnoscunt Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. D. Syr. Clar.: "unde adjectum videtur, inquit Millius, antitheseos causa," Proleg. p. 46. col. 1.

V. 23. Ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν.] Ita Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Syr. Arab.: sed quoniam apud Æthiop. desunt hæc, Millio videntur esse veteris cujusdam adnotatoris: Proleg. p. 124. col. 2.

Cap. vii. 2. Ἀνδρὶ δέδεται νόμῳ.] Fatemur Origenes in Matt. p. 268. legisse ὄντι νόμῳ, sed Gr. scholia, et vetustæ versiones, C. Alex. Hilarius D. lectionem textûs sequuntur.

Cap. viii. 1. Τοῖς μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσι ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα.] Desunt hæc Dial. contra Marcion. p. 146. Athanas. Ep. ad Serap. p. 18. Existimo autem verba ista eos missa fecisse ex more perusitato patrum, qui quicquid instituto suo alienum est, silentio transeunt; prima enim pars eorum occurrit apud omnia Gr. scholia, Hilarium D. et vetustissimas versiones, atque apud Cod. Alex. quocum Athanasius Arch. Al. plerumque conspirat. Postrema pars etiam reperitur apud Theodoretum, Œcum. Theophylactum, et Arab. Retinendum esse autem constat ex mutua inter se verborum connexione ad hunc modum: 'Nihil damnationis est iis qui ambulant κατὰ τὸ πνεῦμα· ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος liberavit me, et omnes qui sunt in Christo Jesu, à lege peccati, qua ad mortem fuimus damnati.'

Cap. ix. 10. Ῥέβεκκα ἐξ ἑνὸς κοίτην ἔχουσα Ἰσαάκ.] 'Ex uno concubitu.' Patres Latini aliqui, hæc, et plura hujusmodi non tam dicenda sunt variantes lectiones, quam Græci sermonis interpretationes. Rectius reddas 'ex uno Isaac concubitum habeas,' i. e. copulationem: Κοίτη enim hoc sæpius significat, Lev. xviii. 20. xxx. 13. Numb. xxxi. 17, 18. 'Vel semen habens,' adstipulantibus Œcumenio et Lev. xviii. 23. Numb. v. 2. 20.: sæpissime autem occurrit κοίτη σπέρματος.

V. 18. Οὐ θέλει σκληρύνει.] Agnoscunt τὸ θέλει Gr. scholia omnia, Origenes in Ex. Ed. Huet. p. 22. C. Alex. Hilarius Di. versiones omnes: censet tamen Millius irrepsisse ex margine explicationis gratia, Prol. p. 156. col. 2.

V. 24. Οὓς καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς.] Τὸ ἡμᾶς habent C. Alex. Hilarius D. Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes. Male ergo Erasmus additum censet explicationis gratia.

V. 28. Λόγου γὰρ συντελῶν, καὶ συντέμνων ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ, ὅτι λόγον συντετμένον ποιήσει ὁ Κύριος ἐπὶ γῆς·] Legendum vult Millius λόγον συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων ποιήσει ὁ Κύριος, mediis intermissis; quum vero textus exhibeat ipsissima verba τῶν LXX. interpr., approbantibus Chrysostom. Œcum. Theophylacto, Vulg. Arab. Hieron. Hilario. Di., ne uno commentatore, in quantum scio, partem adversam defendente, Millii sententia et lectio respuendæ jure optimo videntur.

Cap. x. 1. Ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ·] Chrysost. Vulg. Ruffin. Hilarius D. legunt αὐτῶν, quod idem significat, ac τοῦ Ἰσραήλ· Ratione sc. habita ad Israel, de quo mentio cap. ix. 31.: unde Chrysostomus in Psal. xlviii. Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 270. ὁ Παῦλος περὶ Ἰουδαίων ἐῤῥήνει λέγων ἡ δέησις ἡ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν περὶ αὐτῶν ἐστιν εἰς σωτηρίαν. Sed Theodoretus et Œcumenius tum in textu, tum in commentario legunt ὑπὲρ Ἰσραήλ.

V. 5. Τὴν δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ τοῦ νόμου·] Totum illud omittit Æthiop.: habent autem Gr. scholia, Hilarius D. versiones, "sed inseruit quispiam," Proleg. p. 141. col. 1. Mirum certe est, si in libros omnes istos inseruisset.

Ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς·] "Deest αὐτὰ Chrysost.:" ita Millius; sed reperies tam in Chrysostomo quam in cæteris Gr. scholiis, et in Hilario Di., sicut etiam ἐν αὐτοῖς quæ desunt in solo Vulgato, iisque Latinis qui Vulgati vestigia premunt. Erratur etiam in testimonio Clem. Al.; non enim verba hujus epistolæ citat Stro. ii. p. 281. sed ille Lev. xviii. 5. ad hunc modum, ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς· non esse mutandum ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, in ἐν ἑαυτῇ, suadent Clem. Al. versio τῶν 70. omniaque Græcorum scholia contra Millium, Proleg. p. 129. col. 1.

Cap. xi. 13. Τὴν διακονίαν μου δοξάζω·] Vulg. Ruffin. Hilarius Diaconus, videntur legisse δοξάσω; sed omnia Gr. scholia, C. Al. legunt cum textu in præsenti tempore, quod est ad scopum apostoli accommodatius, Millio incassum renitente.

V. 21. Μήπως οὐδέ σου φείσηται.] Non diffitemur Chrysostomum, et Theodoretum legisse φείσεται. Vulg. Parcat. Sed Œcumenius, Theophylact. C. Alex. habent φείσηται pro σωθήσεται, v. 26. Vulg. Hilarius, et Arab. legunt 'salvus fieret' σωθήσηται: sed Iren. lib. iv. cap. 5. p. 278. 'Salvabitur,' Orig. in Matt. p. 360. in Jer. p. 74. et omnia Gr. scholia legunt σωθήσηται.

V. 30. Ὥσπερ καὶ ὑμεῖς·] Deest καὶ apud Chrys. et Theophylact.: habent Theodoret. Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab. atque hic καὶ ὑμεῖς proprie significat vox etiam Anglice even you, or you also.

V. 32. Conclusit Deus τοὺς πάντας·] Vulg. Ruffinus, Hilarius D. Hieron. legunt τὰ πάντα, forte quoniam ita se habet Gal. iii. 22. Sed Gr. scholia legunt τοὺς πάντας; utraque lectio eundem sensum exprimit, hominibus enim tantum hæc gratia concessa est.

Cap. xii. 3. Dico enim διὰ τῆς χάριτος τῆς δοθείσης μοι·] Ita legunt Gr. scholia omnia; C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Syr. Arab. "Sed tamen quia in vers. Æthiopica desunt verba subnotata, τῆς δοθείσης μοι adjecta censuerim ex 1 Cor. iii. 10." Proleg. p. 124. col. 2. Porro Millius hic verba Chrysostomi sic exhibet οὐκ εἶπε, διὰ τῆς σοφίας, διὰ τῆς νομοθεσίας, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς χάριτος Θεοῦ, Chrysost. ut nempe faveret lectioni Æthiop. et Theophylacti διὰ τῆς χάριτος Θεοῦ, verba tamen Chrysostomi hæc sunt, οὐκ εἶπε λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν διὰ τῆς σοφίας τοῦ Θεοῦ, διὰ τῆς νομοθεσίας τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς χάριτος, ubi Θεοῦ cum Apostolo relinquit intelligendum; non, prout Millius, apposuit.

Cap. xiii. 12. Omnes variantes lectiones ab A. ad I. refutantur à pleno consensu omnium Gr. scholiorum, et Origenis ipsissima textus verba exhibentium; quamvis enim Hilarius Diac. et Iren. Lat. legerint, 'omnibus potestatibus superioribus subditi estote,' Grabius not. in Iren. lib. v. cap. 24. hæc habet, 'non ab ipsius Irenæi manu, sed interpretis hæc lectio profluxisse videtur.' Orig. C. Alex. August. tom. x. de verbis Dom. Serm. 6. Syr. Arab. Gr. scholia omnia legunt πᾶσα ψυχὴ ὑποτασσέσθω. 2. Chrysost. inquit, et Œcum. legunt ὑπὸ, non ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ." Œcum. tamen Origenes, Theodoret. Theophylact. omnes versiones, et Latini omnes legunt 'à Deo.' Chrysost. cum apostolo, aliquando ἀπὸ, aliquando ὑπὸ. 3. "Dicit Origenem Com. in Rom. omisisse hæc verba αἱ δὲ οὖσαι ἐξουσίαι ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι εἰσιν." Stat contra Orig. contra Cels. lib. viii. p. 421. ubi postquam citasset hæc ipsa verba, continuo addit ἐν μὲν τοίγε τοῖς πρὸς τὴν εἰς Ῥωμαίους ἐξηγητικοῖς, ὡς δυνατὸν ἦν ὑμῖν ἐπὶ πλεῖον καὶ ταῦτα τὰ ῥήματα ποικίλως ἐξετάσαμεν. Extant etiam apud Iren. C. Alex. apud Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes: nihil igitur est causæ, cur adjectum ab interprete quodam censeret Erasmus. Denique cum dicit "τὸ ἐξουσίαι deesse apud Vulg. Hilarium D. August. Æthiop. Orig. in Origene," fallitur. Retinent etiam Gr. scholia omnia, Syr. Arab. quæ præponderant Latinis legentibus 'quæ autem sunt, à Deo subordinatæ sunt,' ubi vox 'potestates,' quæ in priori parte commatis agnoscitur, necessariò subintelligenda est: tamen Proleg. p. 134. col. 2. "medium ἐξουσίας irrepsit ex priori parte versiculi."

V. 9. Οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις.] Deest MSS. plurimis, Hilario Diac. C. Alex. Theodoreto Basil. tom. ii. p. 471. Sed retinent Iren. lib. iv. cap. 26. p. 313. Chrysost. Œcum. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Porro usitatissimum apud patres est in notissimis rebus, iis præsertim, quas verba sequentia (et si quod aliud mandatum est) satis indicant, mutila quædam exhibere, et quasi decurtata. V. G. Orig. in Matt. p. 380. Clem. Alex. Strom. p. 478., ita hunc textum citant, οὐ φονεύσεις, οὐ μοιχεύσεις, οὐ κλέψεις, cætera desunt. Et p. 381. Origenes allegat unicum hoc οὐ φονεύσεις, καὶ εἴ τις ἑτέρα ἐντολή, et Theodoretus in commentario prætermittit οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις.

V. 13. Μὴ κώμοις·] Syr. Arab. non Cantu. quod non est varians lectio, sed explicatio vocis, ita enim Phavorinus et Scholiastes Aristoph. Κῶμοι, ἀσελγῆ ἄσματα πορνικὰ, συμποσιακοὶ ᾠδαὶ, ὀρχήσεις κατὰ μέθης· Vide apud Aristoph. p. 162. 708. 772. ubi scholiastes observat hos cantus compositos fuisse εἰς δαιμόνων τιμήν.

Cap. xiv. 6. Καὶ ὁ μὴ φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν; Κυρίῳ οὐ φρονεῖ.] Parum refert Latinos omnes hæc omisisse, cum retineant Basil. tom. ii. p. 456. et Gr. scholia, vide Prol. p. 125. col. 1.

V. 9. Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανε, καὶ ἀνέστη, καὶ ἀνέζησεν·] Ἀνέστη suspectum habet Esthius occupati loci alieni, sed immeritò; reperias enim vocem illam apud Iren. lib. ii. cap. 20. p. 245. Orig. in Joh. p. 126. 317. Et contra Cels. lib. ii. p. 110. apud Hilarium Di. Gr. Arab. Gr. scholia omnia, ne Chrys. quidem excepto, apostolus addit vocem ἀνέζησεν vel ἔζησεν, ut respondeat voci ζώντων, et vocem ἀπέθανε ut respondeat voci νεκρῶν, atque hinc fortasse fuit quod has solas explicavit Chrysost. Rejicit tamen hanc lectionem Mill. Proleg. p. 72. col. 1.

V. 21. Ἡ σκανδαλίζεται, ἢ ἀσθενεῖ·] Habent hæc Gr. scholia omnia, Hilarius D. Vulg. Arab. Est tamen, juxta Millium, hoc scholion marginale, quod scriba aliquis in corpus epistolæ transmisit: Proleg. p. 123. col. 1.

V. 22. Ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ·] Desunt hæc Madg. Chrysost. Habent Theodoret. Œcum. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Hilarius Diac. C. Alex.

Cap. xv. 4. Ὅσα γὰρ προεγράφη·] Hanc lectionem retinent omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. et postulat ipsa mens, sensusque apostoli; loquitur enim de S. scriptura V. Testamenti: dicente autem Millio, Proleg. p. 135. col. 1. "mutavit quispiam simplex ἐγράφη, in προεγράφη."

V. 12. Πάλιν.] Deest Æth. Chrysost. Habent reliquæ versiones, et scholia, et C. Alex.: et tamen Proleg. p. 124. col. 1. Medium "πάλιν insertum videtur ex superioribus."

V. 13. Ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν·] Deest hæc Clar. Ger.: agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia. C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Arab. "Vereor tamen, ait Millius, Proleg. p. 135. ne sit scholion."

V. 14. Ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ μεστοί ἐστε τῆς ἀγαθωσύνης·] Ita Gr. scholia omnia, Cod. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Syr.: sed quia καὶ αὐτοὶ deesse videntur Arab. Æthiop. "media καὶ αὐτοὶ, inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 135. adscripta puto ad marginem, indeque irrepsisse in corpus libri."

V. 19. Ἐν δυνάμει πνεύματος Θεοῦ.] Millius p. 46. "Θεοῦ studiosi alicujus est," sed agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia, et versiones orientales.

V. 24. Ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς.] Desunt hæc Chrysost. Vulg. et Latinos qui vulgatum sequuntur. Explicantur à Theodoreto, Œcum. Theophylacto, atque ideo solum omitti videntur, quia providentia Dei iter illud intervertit. Vide annotata nostra in locum.

V. 27. Εὐδόκησαν γάρ.] Desunt hæc apud Hilarium, et 2. MSS. Agnoscunt Gr. scholia, Vulg. Syr. Arab.: ait tamen Millius, "repetitum omnino fuisse suspicor ex versu præcedente," Proleg. p. 135. col. 1.

V. 29. D. Τοῦ εὐαγγελίου.] D. Clem. Alex. Hilar. Diac. Cod. Alex.: interpretantur tamen hanc vocem, Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. Proleg. p. 60. "Commentarius est, non textus."

Cap. xvi. 5. Ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀσίας,] V. l. τῆς Ἀχαίας, recte. Vide Com. nostra in locum.

V. 6. Quæ multum laboravit εἰς ἡμᾶς·] V. l. ὑμᾶς, quam lectionem ut firmaret, adducit testimonium Chrysost. hic, et Proleg. p. 104. Theophylacti, sed utriusque perperam: etsi enim Chrysost. in textu legit ὑμᾶς, in commentario habet ἡμᾶς, quam vocem exponit de labore à Maria suscepto πρὸς τοὺς ἀποστόλους· Theophylact. Ed. Ox. non modo legit ἡμᾶς in textu (sicut etiam Theodoretus et Œcum. sed etiam addit, laborâsse illam εἰς ἡμᾶς ἀποστόλων πληροῦσα τάξιν.

V. 16. Ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς αἱ ἐκκλησίαι.] V. l. add. πάσαι, ita Theodoretus Vulg. et è Latinis plurimi, sc. omnium illorum locorum ecclesiæ, i. e. paucæ ecclesiæ, vel fortasse unica: rectius ergo omittunt Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylactus.

V. 18. Καὶ εὐλογίας.] Desunt hæc 4 MSS. Agnoscunt Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. et versiones omnes: habet tamen Millius, τὸ εὐλογίας pro interpretamento marginali τῆς χρησηολογίας, Proleg. p. 135. col. 1.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

1 COR. i. 1. Παῦλος κλητός.] Deest κλητὸς in tribus MSS. Agnoscunt ergo reliqui, pariter ac Gr. scholia, Hilarius Diac. et versiones antiquæ: et licet non nominatim præfigitur cæteris epistolis, hunc tamen quasi proprium locum sibi vindicat, propterea quod scribit jam ad eos qui de ipsius Apostolatu paululum dubitasse videbantur. Hinc est quod ipse ad hunc modum loquitur de seipso, 'Ego plantavi vos, iii. 6. In Christo Jesu per evangelium ego vos genui, iv. 15. Nonne opus meum vos estis in Domino, ix. 1.' Prætera voce κλητὸς utitur Paulus ad Rom. i. 6, 7. Unde Millius Proleg. p. 135. "medium κλητὸς insertum videtur jam olim ex primis verbis præcedentis epistolæ."

V. 18. Τοῖς μὲν ἀπολλυμένοις —— σωζομένοις δὲ ἡμῖν.] Ita Hilarius Diac. scholia Gr. et versiones omnes, et C. Alex.: Millio tamen μὲν et ἡμῖν videntur injectitia, fide nescio cujus vulgati, Proleg. p. 46. col. 2.

V. 28. Καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα.] V. l. deest καὶ. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes, Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 258. 374. Contra Cels. lib. iii. p. 140. Quia tamen in Hilario Diac. deest, "lectoris alicujus esse videtur, non apostoli," Prol. p. 164. col. 2.

Cap. ii. 4. Καὶ δυνάμεως·] Omittit Æthiop. Agnoscunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. Orig. lib. i. contra Cels. p. 5. in Joh. p. 10. et 88. in Matt. p. 354. Millio ergo dicenti Proleg. p. 124. col.— "adjectum credibile est," deest parum.

V. 13. Ἐν διδακτοῖς πνεύματος ἁγίου·] Deest ἁγίου apud Clem. Al. p. 557. Origenem in Matt. p. 353. 381. Et Philoc. p. 27. Millio ergo adjectum videtur Prol. p. 60. Occurrit verò apud omnia Gr. scholia, et constat quod spiritus quater in hoc capite vocatur Spiritus Dei, nempe Com. 10—12. 14. Et tametsi dicat Millius defuisse τοῦ θεοῦ apud Iren. p. 38. et Clem. Al. 557. et Chrysostomum adeoque additium esse, Proleg. p. 70. lectoris alicujus esse, non apostoli, p. 46. legas tamen πνεῦμα θεοῦ hîc in Clem. Al. Stro,

i. p. 297. Orig. in Jer. Hom. 12. p. 117. in Joh. p. 68. C. Alex. Hilario Diac. Theodoreto, Œcum. et Theophylacto, Vulg. Arab. atque adeo frustra rejicitur.

Cap. iii. 3. Καὶ διχοστασίαι.] Deest in 3. MSS. Vulg. Æthiop. Clem. Al. Stro. v. p. 558. add. Cod. Alex. Orig. in Cels. lib. iii. p. 140. Unde Millius dicit irrepsisse è margine Prol. p. 94. col. 2. Agnoscunt tamen hanc vocem omnia Gr. scholia, Iren. Gr. lib. iv. cap. 75. p. 379. Basilius tom. ii. p. 395. Syr. et Arab.

Cap. iv. 14. Ὡς τέκνά μου ἀγαπητὰ νουθετῶ.] MSS. Cod. quidam C. Alex. νουθετῶν. ‘ Rectè (inquit Grotius) ut cohæreat cum illo ὡς,’ at malè, si Hilario D. Gr. scholiis, et versionibus cunctis major sit adhibenda fides.

Cap. v. 1. Οὐκ ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσι ὀνομάζεται.] Deest ὀνομάζεται in sex MSS. Epiphanio, p. 706. Tertul. de Pud. cap. 14. Hilario D. cæterisque Latinis, qui vulgatum præferunt. Agnoscunt autem C. Alex. Syr. Arab. omnia Gr. scholia, explicantque fusius tanquam verbum insigne et ἐμφατικώτατον παρ’ ἐκείνοις οὐ μόνον οὐ τολμᾶταί τι τοιοῦτο, ἀλλ’ οὐδ’ ὀνομάζεται.

V. 3. Τὸνο ὕτω τοῦτο κατεργασάμενον ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου, &c.] Sic codices nonnulli testibus Chrysostomo et Œcumenio, ὑποστίξαντες ad vocem Χριστοῦ, ut intelligatur ὁ εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐννβρίσας: sed sicut hanc expositionem improbat Chrysostomus, ita insulsum, et penè ridiculum est dicere aliquem aliquid operatum fuisse mali in nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi.

V. 4. d. Χριστοῦ.] Deest in Vulg. Æthiop. sed retinetur apud Græca scholia, Orig. in Jer. p. 119. Syr. Arab.—Proleg. tamen p. 69. col. 2. “ addititium est.”

V. 6. Οὐ καλὸν τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν.] Ita uno ore omnia Gr. scholia, et versiones, C. Alex. et Hilarius Diac.: “ sicut autem omittunt negationem, et Latini quidam, sic nullus dubito apostoli ipsius exemplar.” Ita Millius Proleg. p. 46. col. 2. Qui argumento, vix rationis speciem habente, motus, hoc “ frigidum” vocat.

Μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ φύραμα ζυμοῖ.] V. l. φθείρει. Sed δολοῖ Germanan esse lectionem acritèr contendit Millius. Rectius autem Cotelerius de hoc textu sic. Certum est antiquissima exemplaria cum ab interpretibus et patribus tractata, tum quæ ad nos usque pervenerunt, habuisse aut habere, aut φθείρει, aut ζυμοῖ, aut δολοῖ. Irenæus videtur legisse φθείρει, ait enim corrumpit, lib. iv. cap. 46. sic Vulg. illiusque fautores Apostolicæ Constitutiones δολοῖ. Sed adnotatur in margine Anastasium legisse ζυμοῖ in locum. Lectiones posthac in usu quotidiano erant vel φθείρει, vel ζυμοῖ, ut apparet ex epistola Michaelis Cerul. ad Petrum Antioch. scripta postquam orta fuit controversia inter occidentalem et orientalem ecclesiam de pane fermentato, viz. καλῶς δὲ, καὶ τὸ ἀποστολικὸν ἐκεῖνο ῥητὸν λαμβάνοντες τὸ φασκὸν μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ φύραμα ζυμοῖ, ὅτως ἐκεῖνο γεγραμμένον ἔχουσι——— φθείρει, illum vero ζυμοῖ jure optimo alteri eum anteposuisse exinde liquet, quod hæc sit lectio ipsius apostoli Gal. v. 9. atque hic et illic orientales versiones, C. Alex. et Gr. scholia omnia retinent τὸ ζυμοῖ, nc ulla quidem alterius cujuscunque lectionis mentione facta; præterea hæc lectio innititur testimonio Hieronymi, quod plus valet quam Latinorum, qui φθείρει potius quam δολοῖ interpretantur. Is enim non solum in versione sua utitur voce ‘ fermentat,’ Gal. v. 9. sed etiam addit ‘ male in nostris codicibus habetur corrumpit, et sensum potius interpres suum quam apostoli verba transtulit.’ Non leve firmamentum lectioni huic addit Buxtorfius, qui apud Hebræos de originali corruptione loquens, vetus esse adagium ait ‘ fermentum in massa,’ sicut enim parum fermenti fermentat ingentem massam, eamque corrumpit, ita concupiscentia mala totum corrumpit hominem. Floril. Hebr. p. 43. Notandum denique quod Proleg. p. 46, 47. Iren. Tertul. Basil. M. nempe Lat. tom. ii. p. 631. Hilarius Diac. Lucifer Calarit. Pelagius omnes Latini qui legunt ‘ corrumpit,’ (i.e. φθείρει) producti sunt tamen ac si certò legissent δολοῖ.

V. 7. Ἐκκαθάρατε οὖν.] V. l. deest οὖν in MSS. multis, Vulg. et Hilario Di. Chrysost. Œcum. Agnoscunt autem Theodoretus et Theophylactus: ita etiam, ait Esthius, quædam vetustissima Latina exemplaria plerisque Græcis suffragantibus, illationis omittendæ fuit causa quod sine eâ legeretur hæc scriptura in S. Paschali officio: cæterum optime quadrat hæc illativa particula.

Ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.] “ Explicatio est” Mill. Prol. p. 72. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia omnia, Syr. Arab. Deest in Vulg. teste Erasmo, reclamantibus libris omnibus nostris, quibus in hac parte, ut dicam ingenue, magis accedo.

V. 8. Ἀλλ’ ἐν ἀζύμοις εἰλικρινείας, καὶ ἀληθείας.] Desunt hæc apud Æthiop. Habent Hilarius Diac. Hieron. lib. i. contra Pelag: f. 97. Orig. in Jer. p. 143. in Matt. p. 270. in Joh. p. 163. 372. in Hom. in Num. decies, Græca scholia, et reliquæ versiones. Hac tamen sola autoritate fretus, adjecta, ait Millius, jam olim opinor quæ in nostris omnibus, Proleg. p. 124. col. 2.

Cap. vi. 5. Οὐκ ἔστιν——σοφὸς, οὐδὲ εἷς.] Proleg. p. 135. col. 1. “ interjectum est οὐδὲ εἷς jam olim emphaseos causa,” ex Æthiop. solius autoritate, repugnantibus Gr. scholiis omnibus, et Cod. Alex. immo Vulgato, Hilario D. et Latinis omnibus legentibus ‘ nonne est inter vos sapiens quispiam?’ Hac confidentia videtur mihi Millius labefactare loca pene omnia, in quibus divinitas Christi contra Photinianos adstruitur; ii enim, pari de causa, nempe codice uno, vel altero aliud legente, dicere possunt ‘ hæc, vel illa addita esse jam olim emphaseos causa.’

V. 8. Καὶ ταῦτα ἀδελφούς.] C. Alex. cum aliis legit τοῦτο, ταῦτα omittit Clem. Al. (si Millio fides.) scholia autem Græca universim, Vulg. Hilarius D. legunt cum textu; Proleg. tamen p. 60. col. 2. hæc habet, “ vix aut ne vix est quin lectionem hanc genuinam esse censeam esse unius nostri, quod video Clementis.” O quam pulchrum est habere nasum criticum! defuit is, Millio hic fatente, Græcis omnibus, et Latinis; nec minus absona sunt quæ sequuntur, “ eis verbis inserta est emphatica particula, varia tamen, quod indicium παρεμβλήσεως in al. τοῦτο, in aliis ταῦτα;” quorsum enim tot variantes lectiones congessit, si varia lectio sit certum παρεμβλήσεως indicium?

V. 19. Οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι τὸ σῶμα ὑμῶν.] V. l. τὰ σώματα, C. Alex. Vulg. Hilarius D. Theophylactus. Sed Origen. contra Cels. lib. iv. p. 177. Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. legunt σῶμα. Et quanquam idem sit utriusque sensus, lectionem in textu, lectioni Vulg. anteponit Esthius, “ quod, inquit, in pluribus est Græcis τὸ σώμα corpus, congruit cum eo quod proxime præcessit, ‘ eum qui fornicatur, peccare in corpus suum.’ ”

V. 20. Δοξάσατε δὲ τὸν θεόν.] Vulg. Hilarius D. Tertullianus, Cyprianus, Chrysostom. August. legunt καὶ ἄρατε, ‘ glorificate, et portate Deum:’ Ita Millius.—Sed observandum hic primo Vulg. Hilarium D. Tertullianum, Cyprianum hic legere, ‘ Empti estis pretio magno,’ refragantibus Græcis scholiis, C. Alex. et versionibus orientalibus universis: Chrysostomus hic habet ἄρα τε: lege, ait Danæus, δὴ ἄρα. Idem Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 370. in Psal. cxii. et Psal. cxlv. legit δοξάσατε δὴ τὸν θεόν. Irenæus lib. v. cap. 13. p. 419. legit solummodo ‘ glorificate Deum in corpore vestro:’ et similiter August. de Trin. lib. ii. cap. 13. tom. iii. p. 273. Quibuscum consentiunt Græca scholia, versiones orientales, C. Alex. Cyril. Al. de recta fide, p. 63. Pergit sic Millius, Proleg. p. 135. col. 1. “ sequentia καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ὑμῶν ἅ τινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ, non occurrunt in Alex. aliisque probatioribus Cod. uti neque apud Epiphan. Euthal. Vulg. Æthiop.” Ea tamen agnoscunt Græca scholia omnia, Syr. et Arab. et “ sensum, inquit Esthius, clarum exhibent, iisque admonemur glorificare Deum in utroque et corpore, et in spiritu, quia utrumque Dei est, atque proinde utrumque suo famulari debet autori et Domino. Respicit enim ad illud, ‘ pretio empti estis, et non estis vestri,’ estque tacita probatio à partibus, ‘ corpus vestrum, et spiritus vester Dei est, ergo non estis vestri; immo utrunque pretio emptum est, utroque igitur glorificandus est Deus.’ ”

Cap. vii. 3. Ὀφειλομένην εὐνοίαν.] V. l. ὀφειλομένην τιμὴν hic Chrysost.: sed tom. v. Ed. Mor. p. 279. legit cum textu ὀφειλήν. Orig. in Matt. p. 363. Vulg. Hilarius D. è Latinis alii, sed Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. Syr. Arab. textui assentiunt. Utriusque lectionis eadem est interpretatio.

V. 5. Τῇ νηστεία, καὶ προσευχῇ.] Desunt τῇ νηστείᾳ καὶ, in Orig. Clem. Al. Cyprian. Hieron.: sed agnoscunt Syr. Arab. Gr. scholia, Cod. Alex.: et cum Chrysost. et Theophylact. de extraordinaria precatione in commentariis suis loquantur, aperte satis indicant jejunium simul adhibendum esse, quod plerumque talem precationem comitatur; idcirco ut probaret Chrysostomus quod ἀεὶ τῇ νηστείᾳ τὴν προσευχὴν συνέζευξεν ἡ γραφὴ, hæc ipsissima verba adducit, ἵνα σχολάζητε τῇ νηστείᾳ, καὶ τῇ προσευχῇ. Com. in Psal. cxlv. Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 829.

V. 34. Μεμέρισται ἡ γυνὴ, καὶ ἡ παρθένος.] Ita Græca scholia omnia, C. Alex. Basil. tom. i. p. 635. tom. ii. p. 499. Theodoret. Hær. fab. p. 306. Nota etiam, Hieronymo adversarium pulsanti, non esse nimium fidendum; in polemicis enim est magis sollicitus de victoria, quam de veritate: aliter enim in hoc loco legit, lib. i. contra Helvid, f. 6. ubi hæc habet, "'Divisa est mulier et virgo,' quid oblatras, quid repugnas? Vas electionis hæc loquitur, 'Divisa est, dicens, mulier, et virgo.'" Aliter autem lib. i. contra Jovin. f. 20. ubi sic legimus, "Nunc illud breviter admoneo in Latinis codicibus sic legi, 'Divisa est virgo et mulier,' quod non est apostolicæ veritatis; siquidem apostolus ita scripsit, 'solicitus est vir quæ sunt mundi, quomodo placeat uxori, et divisus est,' et hac sententia definita, transgreditur ad virgines, et continentes, et ait 'mulier innupta, et virgo.'"

V. 39. Γυνὴ δέδεται νόμῳ.] Orig. in Matt. 358. 363, 364. plurimique è Latinis omittunt νόμῳ. Sed Vulg. Hilarius D. Gr. scholia, et versiones, item Basil. de Virgin. tom. i. p. 650. habent νόμῳ (utut Millius ab Esthio deceptus, contrarium asserat) nec ulla alia hominis, quam ex lege oritur obligatio. Millius tamen fidenter "τῷ νόμῳ quod additum in nostris, haud dubio translatum ex Rom. vii. 2.:" ita continuo confidentia supplet locum rationis.

Cap. viii. Nota quod à versiculo 3. ad finem hujus capitis, licet afferantur viginti quatuor lectiones, et amplius, Basilius tom. ii. p. 438, 439. textum pressè, et κατὰ πόδα insequitur, nisi quod ἕτεροι v. 4. omittat, et ἀπόλλυται legat, v. 11.

V. 4. Ἕτερος.] Habent Gr. scholia omnia, Syr. Arab.: juxta tamen Millium, irrepsit è Marg. Prol. p. 95.

V. 10. Ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ γνώσει.] "Non agnoscunt Hilarius D. Pelag." Mill. p. 47. cap. 1. Agnoscunt autem Theodoret. Œcum. Theophyl. Cod. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab. et, quod mirum dictu, ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ γνώσει agnoscunt Hilarius D. et Pelagius.

Cap. ix. 2. Ἐν Κυρίῳ.] Ita Origen. in Joh. p. 399. Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylactus, Hilarius D.: et tamen, juxta Millium, Prol. p. 95. col. 1. irrepsit è margine.

V. 7. Καὶ ἐκ τοῦ γάλακτος τῆς ποίμνης οὐκ ἐσθίει.] Ita Theodoret. Œcum. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Chrysost. et Theophylact. mutant substantivum in relativum, legendo αὐτῆς loco ποίμνης, sensu eodem salvo; Millio tamen judice, Prol. p. 69. col. 2. "et ποίμνης, et αὐτῆς adjectitia sunt," quanquam una earum vocum subaudiatur necesse est.

V. 18. Τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Ita Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab.: sed Vulg. et Hilarius D. omittant τοῦ Χριστοῦ: accessit ergo in nostris ex interpretamento" Proleg. p. 95. col. 1.

V. 20. Ὡς ὑπὸ νόμον.] Addunt Cod. MSS. 7. Vulg. Chrysost. Hilarius D. August. μὴ ὢν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον, sed hoc additamentum agnoscunt neque Origen. in Joh. p. 155. neque aliquis alius è Græcis commentatoribus, nec versiones orientales; et cum scripta sit hæc Epistola ad Corinthios, inter quos versabantur plurimi Judæorum fidelium, qui æmulatores fuerunt legis, hæc verba os eorum querelis implevisset, quod Paulus discessionem docuisset à Moyse; hoc enim leviori de causa factum vidimus, Act. xxi. 21. et falsi crimen illi impegissent, eo quod dixisset se neque in legem Judæorum peccâsse, Act. xv. 8. nec adversus mores paternos, Act. xxviii. 17.

V. 22. Ἵνα πάντως τινὰς σώσω.] Hic Millius Proleg. p. 47. col. 1. ait "κερδήσω mutatum in σώσω ad evitandam ejusdem vocis crebram repetitionem," et p. 123. dicit "πάντως τινὰς irrepsisse, loco genuinæ lectionis πάντας." Sed omnia Gr. scholia, legunt πάντως τινὰς, et miram simul Pauli caritatem laudant, qui se aliis dedidit ἵνα κἂν τοὺς ὀλίγους σώσω· cum iis consentiunt. C. Alex. Arab. immo Paulus ipse Rom. xi. 14. εἴπως σώσω τινὰς ἐξ αὐτῶν. In Clemente Al. et Gregorio Naz. mire hallucinatur; uterque enim, in his verbis ἵνα πάντας κερδήσω, respicit non hunc, sed v. 19. ubi apostolus legit ἵνα πλειόνας κερδήσω. Ita Elias Cretensis de Greg. Naz. "Quod si magnus hic vir omnes dixit, cum Paulus multos dixit, haud mirum id videri debet; Paulus enim ad id quod eventurum erat orationem conformans, sic locutus est, 'ut multos lucrifacerem.' Hic autem divinus magister ad Pauli studium, animique promptitudinem." Com. in Orat. 1. p. 163. vide etiam Clem. Al. p. 177.

V. 23. Τοῦτο δὲ ποιῶ.] Τοῦτο legunt Theodoret. Œcum. Theophyl. Syr. Arab. πάντα Vulg. C. Alex. Hilarius D. Chrysost. unde mutatum πάντα in τοῦτο vult Millius Proleg. p. 77. "πάντα inquit in τοῦτο mutandi causa aliqua; nec enim omnia fecit, nec facere potuit Paulus propter evangelium (quid ni facere potuit omnia hic loci memorata, eaque in hunc scopum dirigere) mutandi autem τοῦτο in πάντα omnino causa nulla;" sic ille. Sed nec Millius in se reciperet onus reddendi rationem de unaquaque variante lectione per totum librum suum.

Cap. x. 5. Εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεός·] Sic Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes. Sed Marcion omittit ὁ Θεὸς, 'omnino recte' Millius, Prol. p. 34. col. 1. —'appositum erat in posterioris ævi libris,' Prol. p. 47. col. 2.

V. 19. Ὅτι εἴδωλον, τί ἐστιν·] Ita Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes, et Hilarius D.: rejiciuntur tamen hæc fide C. Alex. Prol. p. 35. col. 1. Et v. 20. τὰ ἔθνη, quod agnoscunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, est "Scholion marginale assumptum ex Psal. xcvi. 5." Prol. p. 47. col. 1.

V. 24· Ἕκαστος.] Habent Gr. scholia omnia, et versiones orientales, et C. Alex. D. Vulg. et MSS. quibusdam: "Scholion ergo est," Proleg. p. 60. col. 2.

V. 28. Τὸ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ, καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς·] Desunt hæc, secunda vice, Vulg. Hilarius D. Pseud. Hieronymus, Syr. Arab. "vix est quam ut huc transcriptum credamus ab oscitante quodam librario:" ita hic Millius; reperias tamen hæc verba apud Arab. C. Alex. et omnia Gr. scholia, adeoque causa major est cur retineantur. Ita providi olim et negligentes fuerint Christiani, si S. codices in omnibus ecclesiis publicè recitatos repositosque in ecclesiis, ab oscitantibus librariis miserè depravari passi fuissent. Quod tamen plusquam centies factum esse contendit Millius. Adde quod in his verbis, ἐὰν δέ τις εἴπῃ ὑμῖν, ὑμῖν 'scribæ esse, ait, non Pauli,' fide Vulg. et Hilarii, contra Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Prol. p. 47.

V. 31. Πάντα.] Habent Gr. scholia, Vulg. Syr. Arab. D. Æthiop. ergo "vix est quin non obstante codicum consensu ——— censeam πάντα uberioris explicationis gratia insertum," Proleg. p. 159. col. 1.

Cap. xi. 15. Ἡ κόμη ἀντὶ περιβολαίου δέδοται αὐτῇ.] Deest αὐτῇ in MSS. plurimis, Theodoreto, et Œcumenio. Quid istuc tam mirum voculam prætermitti, quam unusquisque lector subaudiendam esse continuo existimaret, vel enim mulieri dantur comæ ejus pro velamine, vel nemini præterea? reperitur vox αὐτῇ apud Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, C. Alex. Hilarium D. et versiones omnes: adjectum est tamen, juxta Millium, ad absolvendam sententiam, Proleg. p. 89. col. 1.

V. 19. Δεῖ γὰρ καὶ αἱρέσεις ἐν ὑμῖν εἶναι.] Deest ὑμῖν apud patres Latinos, atque adeo, "juxta Millium Prol. p. 47. traductum est ex posteriori parte hujus versiculi." Atqui agnoscunt C. Alex. Gr. scholia omnia, et versiones orientales. Est etiam observatu non indignum, quod in citandis Scripturis, patribus usitatum fuerit, ex præcepto aliquo demere particulam specialem, ut fiat præceptum generale: ex. Gr. in cap. xiv. 34. αἱ γυναῖκες ὑμῶν ἐν ἐκκλησίαις σιγάτωσαν, multi omittunt ὑμῶν, ut fiat mandatum generale.

V. 24. Λάβετε, φάγετε.] Desunt hæc in 5 MSS. et in Hilario D. atque hinc Mill. Prol. p. 95. reclamantibus Gr. commentatoribus, Cod. Alex. et vetustissimis versionibus, dicit "hæc verba quæ jam in libris fere omnibus inserta sunt, provenire ex formula institutionis, Matt. xxvi. 26." At si hæc ibi sint verba Christi, sequitur ea hic loci genuina esse, et ex evangeliis ab apostolo desumpta, utpote qui disserte narrat se accepisse à Domino quod habiturus erat illis.

Cap. xii. 3. Οὐδεὶς ἐν πνεύματι Θεοῦ λαλῶν λέγει ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦν.] "Ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, Orig. περὶ εὐχῆς, et commentario in Joh. non semel," ita Millius, sed in utrisque peccat. Com. enim in Joh. p. 359. 390. 422. posterior pars hujus vers. in quo hæc verba ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, continuò citatur; prior in quo τὸ πνεύμα Θεοῦ nunquam, lib. περὶ εὐχῆς, p. 66. Mirum est illum non vidisse σφάλμα γραφικὸν, nempe legendum ibi secunda vice prout translatum est, non πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, sed Θεοῦ, quod ex verbis immediate sequentibus per modum illationis dictis τὸ αὐτο ὀνομάζων ἅγιον πνεῦμα, καὶ πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ luce clarius est.

V. 11. Διαιροῦν ἴδια ἑκάστῳ.] Deest ἴδια, apud Vulg. Hilarium D. Syr. Epiphanium. Retinent Clem. Al. Strom. iv. p. 527. C. Alex. Gr. scholia omnia.

V. 26. Καὶ μέλη ἐκ μέρους.] 'Membra de membra,' ἐκ μέλους Vulg. Hilarius D. Clar. Ger. Epiph. Hær. Manich. §. 86. p. 707. pro qua lectione contendit Mill. Proleg. p. 47. col. 1. At Orig. in Matt. p. 357. Basil. tom. ii. p. 305. Syr. Arab. C. Alex. et Gr. scholia legunt cum textu. Nec multum discriminis est inter membra particularia ejusdem mystici corporis, et membra inter se pendentia. Quod in patribus hic Millius pronunciat "frigidum, et extra scopum apostoli," nempe Corinthios qui partem ecclesiæ tantum constituebant, eam reliquis Christi ecclesiis concordare debere, est ipsius apostoli argumentum, cap. xi. 16. cap. xiv. 33. et post multa vix aliud dicit ab his verbis Chrysostomi, τοσαύτην ἀπὸ γνώμης ὀφείλομεν ἔχειν ὁμόνοιαν, ὅσην ἀπὸ φύσεως ἐκεῖνα.

Cap. xiii. 2. Καὶ ἐὰν ἔχω πάσαν πίστιν.] "Medium πάσαν, irrepsit ex priore parte vers.:" Ita Mill. Proleg. p. 47. col. 1. Agnoscunt tamen Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab.

Cap. xiv. 9. Ἔσεσθε γὰρ εἰς ἀέρα λαλοῦντες.] Deest γὰρ apud Syrum. At habent Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Hilarius D. Et tamen fide Millii "interjectum est à lectore aliquo connexionis causa," Proleg. p. 130. col. 1.

V. 16. Ἐπεὶ ἐὰν εὐλογήσῃς τῷ πνεύματι.] Ita Græca scholia versiones omnes, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Deest πνεύματι in Co. 3. "nec dubium, inquit Millius, quin ita apostolus," Prol. p. 163. col. 2.

V. 25. Καὶ οὕτω.] Omittunt hæc verba MSS. Cod. quidam, Vulg. Hilarius D. Junilius. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Arab. ait Millius "desumptum nemo non videt ex posteriori parte versiculi."

V. 32. Καὶ πνεύματα προφητῶν.] V. l. ψυχαὶ, Orig. Hom. in Matt. p. 306. Hæc sunt Origenis verba πνεύματα προφητῶν προφήταις ὑποτάσσεται οὐχὶ καὶ αἱ ψυχαί: sed Millius crebro oscitanter legit.

V. 33. Οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἀκαταστασίας ὁ Θεὸς.] Sic Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes, sed placet Millio lectio Hilarii D. "non enim dissensionis res, sed pacis," Proleg. p. 47. col. 2.

V. 37. Ὅτι τοῦ Κυρίου εἰσὶν ἐντολαί.] "Scholion est ἐντολαὶ," Prol. p. 47. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes. C. Al. Θεοῦ ἐντολή.

Cap. xv. 10. Εἰμὶ ὅ εἰμι.] Ex Æthiop. solius autoritate rejicitur ὅ εἰμι, contra vulgat. Hilarium D. Syr. Arab. C. Alex. et Gr. scholia omnia.

V. 15. Εἴπερ νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται.] Hæc verba omittunt Iren. lib. v. cap. 13. Hilarius D. Syr. Theodoret. Retinent autem Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylact. Vulg. Arab. C. Alex. "et si non exprimerentur, debent intelligi, ait Esthius, quod subsequentia indicant, per modum illationis, εἰ γὰρ νεκροὶ, &c."

V. 20. Ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων ἐγένετο.] Ita Syr. Arab. Theodoret. Theophyl. Sed D. ἐγένετο, Iren. lib. v. cap. 13. p. 420. Chrysost. Vulg. Orig. in Matt. p. 284. sine sensus discrimine.

V. 28. "Omittit ὁ υἱὸς Irenæus," ita Millius. Sed pace Millii retinet Iren. lib. v. cap. 36. p. 461. Orig. etiam in Joh. p. 146. Athanas. de hum. nat. p. 600. bis Cod. Alex. Ambros. verus lib. v. de fide, cap. 7. Basil. adv. Eunom. lib. iv. tom. i. p. 769. Greg. Nyssen. orat. in hæc verba, tom. i. p. 838. Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes: atqui non obstante hâc nube testium, fidenter pronunciat Mill. proleg. p. 47. "Medium ὁ υἱὸς irrepsisse ex margine."

V. 29. Ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν.] V. l. ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν MSS. Dial. contra Marcion. p. 124. Orig. in Matt. p. 487. qui idcirco solum habet αὐτῶν, quia præcessit τῶν νεκρῶν, quæ retinent omnia Gr. scholia, et versiones, ipso vulgato legente, (quod Millius negat) 'pro mortuis;' "irrepsit tamen ex priore parte versiculi," Mill. Prol. p. 65.

V. 31. Ἣν ἔχω ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν.] Hæc pro assumento habet Mill., fide Ger. Clar. Hilarii D. p. 47. Agnoscunt autem Theodoret. Œcumenius, Theophylact. C. Alex. versiones omnes. Chrysost. legit ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

V. 44. Ἔστι σῶμα ψυχικὸν, καὶ ἔστι σῶμα πνευματικόν.] Habent hæc verba omnia Gr. scholia. C. Alex. omnesque versiones, cum levi discrimine MSS. quædam addunt εἰ, Vulg. et Latini si. "Hæc tamen, inquit ille, à quodam scholiasta adnotata ad oram libri, retulere scribæ in contextum," Prol. p. 95.

V. 47. Ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ.] V. l. ὁ κύριος omittunt Origen. Hippolytus, Athan. est Athanasius ibi spurius, Hippolytus lat. Agnoscunt omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Dial. contra Marcion. p. 150. Et cum primus homo de terra terrenus, secundus homo quidni sit Dominus de cœlo cœlestis? sed cum ex fide Tertulliani, et Epiphanii Marcion substituisset κύριος, quid mirum si illam ob rationem quidam omiserint? vide Mill. p. 47.

V. 54. Τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσεται ἀφθαρσίαν.] Retinentur hæc apud omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Asserit tamen Millius 'huc translata esse ex versiculo proximè præcedente.' Prol. p. 47.

Cap. xvi. 1. Περὶ δὲ τῆς λογίας.] Sic non solum legunt Græca scholia, sed λογίαν uno ore interpretantur τὴν συλλογὴν τῶν χρημάτων, et Phavorinus ait λογία, ἡ συλλογὴ, παρὰ τῷ ἀποστόλῳ, καὶ τὸ ἐκ πολλῶν συνεισφέρομενον, λέγει δὲ ἐλεημοσύνην.

SECTIO TERTIA

2 EPIST. AD CORINTHIOS.

CAP. i. v. 2. Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Agnoscunt hæc verba Gr. scholia omnia et versiones, C. Alex. et Orig. in Matt. p. 500. "Irrepsere tamen ex aliis epistolis," Mill. Proleg. p. 47. col. 2.

V. 10. Καὶ ῥύεται.] Desunt Chrysostom. Hilario Diac. Syr. sed extant apud reliqua Gr. scholia et versiones. Et tamen "hæc ad marginem adscripta scriba textus partem esse putans, transtulit in corpus epistolæ," in Mill. Proleg. p. 129. col. 1.

Cap. ii. 16. Καὶ πρὸς ταῦτά τις ἱκανός.] Ita Græca scholia omnia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Syr. Arab. Observant autem Gr. scholia Paulum hic μετριάζειν agnoscere "τὸ ὅλον τῆς χάριτος, totum gratia esse, et imbecillitatem humanam ad hæc minime sufficere, εἰ μὴ ἦν ἡ τοῦ Θεοῦ δύναμις· ἐκείνου γὰρ τὸ πᾶν, καὶ οὐδὲν τὸ ἡμέτερον, illius enim est totum hoc quod agimus nihilque nostrum." Sed Vulgati absurdam lectionem, viz. ad hæc quis tam idoneus, (i. e. quam ego) hic probat Millius, Proleg. p. 47, 48. meris somniis, et vitilitigationibus fidens, quibus responsum è patrum scholiis adduximus. Objicit 1. 'Apostolos qui evangelium per totum orbem prædicâssent, non potuisse verè dicere, se huic quod tam præclarè obiissent muneri, inidoneos fuisse.' Respondeo, ex scipsis inidoneos se fuisse disertim asserunt, cap. iii. 5. 2. 'Quomodo, inquit, speciatim D. Paulo quadraret, ad hæc quis idoneus, qui apertè hic asserit se, cæterosque apostolos idoneos fuisse ministros N. Testamen.' cap. iii. 6. Quis hic satis mirari potest hominis confidentiam, qui verba hæc 'non quod sumus sufficientes ex nobis ipsis, sed sufficientia nostra ex Deo est, qui idoneos nos fecit ministros N. Test.,' in subsidium causæ quam planè destruit, adducit, quæque insuper ostendunt D. Paulum non dicere cum Millio, 'se fuisse idoneos,' sed tantum 'à Deo factos esse idoneos ministros N. Testamenti?'

V. 17. Οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν ὡς οἱ πολλοί.] Chrysost. et Theodoret. et Syr. legunt οἱ λοιποί. Sed Vulg. Hilarius D. Œcumenius, Theophylactus textum firmant. Irenæus hæc habet οὕτω Παῦλος, οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν ὡς οἱ πολλοί, lib. iv. cap. 44. Et quanquam Esthius dicat 'dictionem, οἱ πολλοί, nec veritati congruere, nec modestiæ Pauli,' id hic nullius momenti est; alibi enim apostolis de Judaicis zelotis et pseudapostolis ait πολλοὶ περιπατοῦσιν, 'multi ambulant, &c. de quibus dixi vobis inimicos eos esse crucis Christi,' Phil. iii. 19. Est tamen hoc apud Millium, Prol. p. 139. "marginale Scholion" ob rationem plane frigidam, et ineptam.

Cap. iii. 1. Ἡ ἐξ ἡμῶν συστατικῶν.] Ita Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylact. Syr. Arab. Deest συστατικῶν Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Theodoret.: hoc tamen ex eo accidit, quod hæc verba συστατικῶν πρὸς ἡμᾶς immediate præcesserint: ideoque posterius συστατικῶν utpote necessario intelligendum, superfluum videretur.

V. 17. Οὗ δὲ τὸ πνεῦμα Κυρίου.] "Κυρίου quod insertum est in reliquis jam omnibus, irrepsisse videtur ex proxime sequenti versiculo," ita Millius, Prol. p. 166. col. 2. Agnoscunt tamen Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, C. Alex. et Hilarius D.

Cap. iv. 6. Τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Ita Orig. in Matt. p. 252. Græca scholia universa, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Atqui "τοῦ Θεοῦ explicatio est," Prol. p. 34. ex autoritate Æthiop. Tertull. Clar. Vulg. apud quem legimus 'claritatis Dei,' apud Hilar. D. 'gloriæ suæ.'

Cap. v. 3. Εἴγε καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι.] Legendum hic vult Millius ἐκδυσάμενοι, reclamantibus Græcis scholiis, quæ legunt ἐνδυσάμενοι. Ita etiam Macarius Hom. 5. p. 35, 36. Chrysost. Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 340. tom. v. p. 520. neque in commentario notat exemplaria hic variare, sed ejusdem verbi variam esse expositionem. Ita etiam Clemens Al. Stro. iv. p. 541. Vulg. Hilarius D. C. Alex. Atque hæc interpretatio 'siquidem induti, non nudi reperiemur,' clara, et perspicua est, viz. 'in hoc ingemiscimus habitationem nostram quæ de cœlo est superindui, siquidem eo tempore induti inveniamur immortali corpore, et non nudi, sicut alii qui vestitu carebunt.

V. 10. Τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος.] Agnoscunt hæc verba omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Athanas. de incarn. tom. i. p. 110. Cyril. Al. de R. fide, p. 66. Et Thesaur. p. 276. de ador. p. 494. Origenes semel quidem legit τὰ ἴδια, Hom. in Jer. p. 187. sed Philac. p. 65. in Matt. p. 291. 335. 346. τὰ διὰ, Theodoret. τὰ ἴδια, ep. 91. et serm. 12. adv. Gr. 604. sed com. in Psal. xcvii. p. 791. et Hær. fab. lib. v. cap. 30. p. 297. τὰ διὰ, quod potiori autoritati innititur.

V. 15. Εἰ εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν.] Retinent εἰ Chrysost. Œcumen. Theophylact. C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Arab. Rejicit τὸ εἰ, Millius Proleg. p. 71. col. 1. fide Theodoreti, Theophylacti, Œcumenii et Hilarii in commentariis (quos si inspicias, ne verbum quo id probetur, invenies) Clar. adeoque Vulg. initio, (nullâ prorsus consequentia) his artibus variantes suas lectiones stabilire solet Millius: magis ingenua est Esthii sententia, viz. 'verisimile est à Paulo scriptam fuisse particulam εἰ, quod et sermonis connexioni inseruit, et in plurimis legitur MSS. qui hodie extant: ansam prætermittendi incauto lectori dedisse potuit similitudo dictionum εἰ, et εἷς, ut in hujusmodi contingit.'

V. 17. Καινὰ τὰ πάντα.] Ita Hilarius D. C. Alex. Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes; et tamen "τὰ πάντα vix puto esse ipsius apostoli," Prol. p. 135.

V. 20. Ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ οὖν πρεσβεύομεν.] "Valebat in omnibus sed perperam οὖν, οὐ ὑπὲρ πρεσβεύομεν," Ambrosiast. omnino recte," Proleg. p. 48. col. 1.

Cap. vi. 16. Καθὼς εἶπεν ὁ Θεός.] Deest ὁ Θεὸς unico interprete Syro, et necessariò subauditur; at Prol. p. 130. col. 1. "lectoris est, non D. Pauli."

Cap. vii. 12. Τὴν σπουδὴν ἡμῶν τὴν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν.] V. l. ἡμῶν τὴν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, quæ quidem lectio mihi genuina videtur, autoritate Vulg. Chrysost. Theodoreti, Theophylacti confirmata, et tum πρὸς ὑμᾶς quod Græca scholia omnia agnoscunt, minime insulsum erit. Vide hic Millium nobis consentientem.

Cap. viii. 12. Καθὸ ἐὰν ἔχῃ τις.] Deest τίς inquit Mill. in MSS. 8. Vulg. Ambrosiast. Clar. Ger. Lat. Cyprian. ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 2. Clem. Al. nescio ubi, Theodoreto Chrysost. textu, et Comment. Agnoscunt autem Œcum. Theophylact. C. Alex. Arab. et tam in textu quam in commentariis Chrysost. (ubi deesse hanc vocem dicit Millius) expressim adhibetur. Mandat, inquit, Deus, ut caritatem exerceamus κατὰ δύναμιν καὶ καθὸ ἔχῃ τις, tanta est Millio circa citationem suam incuria. Porro 'οὐ καθὸ οὐκ ἔχει adjecta videntur explicationis gratia' inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 124. col. 2. repugnantibus omnibus Græcis scholiis, C. Alex. et versionibus, excepta Æthiopica.

Cap. ix. 10. Χωρηγήσαι, καὶ πληθύναι τὸν σπόρον ὑμῶν.] Millius Prol. p. 88. col. 1. "χωρηγήσει, καὶ πληθυνεῖ, καὶ αὐξήσει. Clar. Cod. Al. Œcumen. Syr. Vulg. et Latini recte, et apostoli scopum accommodatæ." Sed C. Alex. scholia Gr. omnia, et præcipue Œcumenius, non retinent tantum, sed simul notant, ut cum Œcumenio loquar, ἐν εὐχῆς τάξει αἰνίττεσθαι, ad modum voti innuere, apostolum nullo modo metuendum esse, ne indigens inveniretur qui caritate abundaret, πῶς ἂν ἀμελήσειε τοῦ τὸν πνευματικὸν σπείροντος σπόρον ὁ Θεὸς χωρηγήσαι, πληθύναι, αὐξήσαι τὰ γεννήματα, tam levis in plerisque est Millii fides.

V. 12. Διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαριστιῶν τῷ Θεῷ.] Mill. Proleg. p. 48. "Ambrosiast. ἐν Θεῷ omnino recte." Repugnantibus Gr. scholiis, et versionibus oriental. et C. Alex.

Cap. x. 7. Ὅτι καθὼς αὐτὸς Χριστοῦ, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς Χριστοῦ.] Posterius Χριστοῦ, deest in MSS. et versionibus aliquibus, Chrysostomo, textu et comment. juxta Millium, Theodoreto, Theophylacto, retinentibus solum C. Alex. Arab. Œcumenio: sed hoc nullius momenti est, nihil enim frequentius, quam omittere vocem, quæ in una periodi parte expressa, in altera subaudienda est. Et nota insuper quod hi tres commentatores hanc vocem in commentariis suis vel exprimunt ut Chrysost.; sic ὥσπερ ἐκεῖνος Χριστοῦ, οὕτω καὶ ἐγὼ Χριστοῦ, vel intelligenda esse indicant.

Cap. xi. 8. Καὶ ὑστερηθείς.] V. 9. "καὶ τηρήσω. irrepsere in textum." Proleg. p. 124. col. 2. 130. col. 1. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes.

Cap. xii. 19. Ἐν Χριστῷ.] Interpretantur versiones omnes, Theodoretus, Theophyl. retinentur in textu Œcumen.: sed adjectitium esse vult Millius, Proleg. p. 48. col. 2.

Cap. xiii. 2. Γράφω.] Agnoscunt Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. Sed quia omittunt Vulg. Hilar. D. C. Alex. Clar. "insertum est ad absolvendum sententiam," Prol. p. 123. col. 1. 135. col. 2.

V. 4. Εἰς ὑμᾶς.] "Irrepsit, inquit Mill. explicationis gratia ex v. 3." Agnoscunt autem Theodoret. Theophylact. Œcum. C. Alex. Hilarius D. et versiones omnes. Vide Prol. p. 48. col. 2. ubi deest in Clar. Ger. Chrysost.

SECTIO QUARTA.

EXPENDENS VARIAS LECTIONES EPISTOLÆ AD GALATAS.

CAP. i. 4. 'Qui dedit seipsum' ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν.] MSS. Orig. περὶ εὐχῆς, et Œcumen. in textu legunt περὶ, quæ tamen duo unum sonant, nam sicut 70 interpr. cùm loquuntur de sacrificiis Vet. Test., modo περὶ ἁμαρτίας, seu ἁμαρτιῶν, modo ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτίας seu ἁμαρτιῶν indiscriminatim utuntur, ita Scriptores etiam N. Fœderis, 1 Pet. iii. 18. Christus mortuus est περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, et Rom. viii. 3. sed hic, et 2 Cor. v. 21. ὑπέρ. Hinc est quòd licet Œcumenius habeat περὶ in textu, in commentario legit ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, pariter ac cætera Gr. scholia. Vide com. nostr. in 2 Cor. v. 21. 1 Pet. iii. 18.

V. 6. Ἐν χάριτι τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Theodoret. et Œcumen. in textu legunt Θεοῦ· Chrysost. et Theophylact. omnesque versiones antiquæ Χριστοῦ, et Œcumen. in Com. τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ; et tamen Prol. p. 48. "Χριστοῦ post additum videtur."

V. 10. Ἢ ζητῶ ἀνθρώποις ἀρέσκειν.] "Hæc, inquit Millius, ad marginem adscripta, mox irrepsere in textum," p. 124. col. 2. habent autem Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Hieronymus, Vulg.

V. 15. Ὅτι εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεός.] Deest ὁ Θεὸς apud Theodoret. in Isa. xi. Hilarius D.Vulg. Hieronymus. "Accessit ex Margine" p. 48. Sed agnoscunt omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Arab. Iren. lib. v. cap. 12. p. 417. 'cum autem placuit Deo' (et tamen p. 423. 'cum autem placuit ei') Autor. Dial. in Marcion. p. 108. Orig. in Joh. p. 123. in textu ὅτι δὲ εὐδόκησεν, in Marg. ὁ Θεὸς, cum igitur Deus separavit Paulum ex utero matris, constat eos qui legunt, 'cum autem placuit ei,' cum textu sentire.

V. 23. Ἦν ποτε ἐπόρθει.] Desunt Æthiop. Habent Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilar. D. Hieronymus, versiones reliquæ; ast Mil. judice, Proleg. p. 124. col. 2. 'traducta sunt ex superioribus.'

Cap. ii. 1. Πάλιν ἀνέβην.] Deest πάλιν Iren. lib. iii. cap. 13. p. 234. et 'in textu Chrysost. irrepsit ex prædictis,' ait Millius, Prol. p. 48. sed ascensionem hanc τὴν δευτέραν ἀνάβασιν vocat Chrysost. Reliquaque Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Hieronymus, cunctæque versiones habent πάλιν.

V. 6. Omittunt οἱ δοκοῦντες.] Cod. aliqui apud Curcellæum. Agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Hilar. D. Vulg. Hieronym. "Irrepsit tamen ex vers. 2." Prol. p. 130.

V. 9. Ἰάκωβος καὶ Πέτρος.] Hilar. D. ponit Πέτρος ante Ἰάκωβος, sed Gr. scholia C. Alex. versionesque omnes, ne Vulgata quidem excepta, primum locum tribuunt Jacobo.

Cap. iii. 1. Τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι.] 'Videtur omnino, ait Millius, huc adscriptum ad supplendum sensum ex cap. v. 7. hujus epistolæ,' nimirum, quia 'apparet ex Chrysost. Theophyl. et Œcum. commentariis defuisse illis hæc verba, quæ August. Ambrosiast. Sedulius, et Primasius non agnoscunt, et quæ ideo prætermittenda duxit Hieronymus, quod in exemplaribus Adamantii non haberentur.' At extant in Vulg. Hilario D. Arab. Theodoreto, et in textu Œcumenii et Theophylact.: quod si non attingunt in commentario, non hinc sequitur eos hæc verba non legisse. Et cum rei propositæ apta sint, et concinna, et absque illis sensus claudicaret, hoc satis argumenti est, cur sint retinenda.

V. 12. Ἀλλ' ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος.] Omittunt ἄνθρωπος MSS. plur. Chrysostom. Vulg. Hilar. D. Hieronymus: rejicit ergo hanc vocem Mill. Prol. p. 84. Sed habent Theodoret. Œcumen. Theophylact. et C. Alex.: et cum necessariò subaudiatur et extet tum in Hebræo sermone, tum in versione τῶν ὁ, et sic citetur, Rom. x. 5. quin hic etiam retinendum sit nemini dubium esse potest.

V. 14. Ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.] Non legebat Chrysostomus ut liquet ex Comment. sed legebant scholia Gr. reliqua, C. Alex. Hilar. D. et versiones omnes.

V. 17. Διαθήκην προκεκυρωμένην ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς Χριστόν.] Omittunt εἰς Χριστόν, C. Alex. Vulg. Hieron. MSS. quædam exempl.; unde inter scholia docti alicujus à Millio numeratur: sed reperitur apud omnia Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. et Hilarium D.: nec omittendum censeo, siquidem sensum commodum parit, nempe 'testamentum factum in Christo, et confirmatum à Deo, irritum à lege fieri non posse.'

Cap. iv. 26. Ἡ τις ἐστὶ μήτηρ πάντων ἡμῶν.] Deest πάντων Vulg. Syr. Origen. in Jer. p. 84. contra Cels. lib. iv. p. 193. Com. in Matt. p. 432. Euseb. de Martyr. Palest. lib. viii. cap. 11. p. 337. Chrysostom. Ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 747.: sed idem p. 886. legit πάντων ἡμῶν, Iren. lib. v. cap. 35. p. 459. omnium nostrorum, Euseb. contra Marcel. lib. i. cap. 2. p. 10. ἡμῶν ἁπάντων· Ita etiam Theodoret. Œcumen. Hieronym. in locum, et Orig. in Num. Ho. 8. f. 102. H. Ho. 26. f. 143. F. Et siquidem omnibus veris Christi discipulis congruat æquè ac Galatis, ratio est cur retinenda sit vox πάντων.

V. 31. Non sumus ancillæ filii, ἀλλὰ τῆς ἐλευθέρας.] Quidam fini hujus capitis adnectunt τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ ᾗ ὁ Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἐλευθέρωσε, et exorditur subsequens caput sic, στήκετε οὖν; ita Tertullianus, Hieron. Hilar. D. August. Sed omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. legunt cum textu. Argumentum Esthii subaudiendo ἐν ante τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ, facile diluitur: male in quibusdam, inquit Grotius, hæc sunt divulsa, ita ut pars horum capiti præcedenti adhæreat, Com. in Gal. v. 1.

Cap. v. 3. Μαρτύρομαι δὲ πάλιν.] Deest πάλιν Arab. Chrysost. Hilar. D. Hieron.; sed Theodoret. Œcumen. C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. retinent πάλιν. Ansam omittendi fortasse præbuit quod quibusdam videretur ad prius aliquod testimonium, quod illos fugit, apostolum respexisse, cum revera ad solum versiculum proxime præcedentem respiciat, 'ego Paulus dico vobis'—— " 'testificor autem rursus,' est tamen cujusdam studiosi additamentum," Proleg. p. 48. col. 2.

V. 14. Ἐν ἑνὶ λόγῳ.] Epiphanius, Tertull. Hilar. D. legunt ἐν ὑμῖν πληροῦται, Sed omnia Gr. scholia, Hieron. Vulg. C. Alex. Syr. Arab. ἐν ἑνὶ λόγῳ, sed dicit Mill. Proleg. p. 34. col. 1. "ἐν ὑμῖν veram esse lectionem, et apostoli genuinam," additque, " certe D. Pauli est, Ep. ad Rom. xiii. 9." cum tamen ibi apostolus legat, ἐν τούτῳ λόγῳ, nulla mentione habita τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν. Nota etiam quod μοιχεία et φόνοι retineantur apud Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes.

Cap. vi. 15. Ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι ἰσχύει.] Desunt priora apud Hilar. D. legendumque vult Millius οὔτε γὰρ περιτομή τί ἐστιν: cum vero ipsissima textus verba habeantur cap. v. 6. hoc unicum ad priorem lectionem firmandam satis est. Lectiones pro quibus Millius contendit, profluxisse videntur ex 1 Cor. vii. 19. ubi sine clausula hic præmissa legimus ἡ περιτομὴ οὐδέν ἐστιν, est tamen 'ἰσχύει juxta Millium interpretatio,' Prol. p. 135. et 'prior clausula irrepsit ex cap. v. 6.' Prol. p. 48. Porro extant hæc verba in Vulgato, Arab. Theodoreto, Œcumenio, Theophylacto.

SECTIO QUINTA.

DE VARIIS LECTIONIBUS EPISTOLÆ AD EPHESIOS.

CAP. i. 10. Ἐν Χριστῷ.] 'In Christo per Deum,' Iren. (v. p: 18.) ita Millius; sed ibi solam nobis lectionem Valentinianorum exhibet, ipse autem legit simpliciter 'in Christo,' lib. v. cap. 20. p. 431.

V. 18. Τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς τῆς διανοίας ἡμῶν.] Ita juxta Theodoret. Œcumen. et vetustissimas versiones; sed MSS. quamplurima Chrysost. et Theophyl. τῆς καρδίας nullo sensus discrimine. Nam S. Scriptura alibi habet διάνοιαν τῆς καρδίας et Hebraicum Len sæpius idem valet ac φρὴν, νοῦς, διάνοια.

Cap. iii. 1. Ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν.] Τῶν ἐθνῶν desunt apud Tertullian. "scholiastarum esse" dicit Millius, Proleg. p. 110. 139. Repugnantibus C. Alex. versionibus universim, et scholiis Gr. omnibus, quorum judicio πολλὴ ἡ ἔμφασις τοῦ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν· τοῦτο γὰρ ἐνέφηνεν ὅτι οὐ μόνον ὑμᾶς οὐ βδελυττόμεθα, ἀλλὰ καὶ δεσμούμεθα δι' ὑμᾶς.

V. 8. Ἐμοὶ τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων.] Ita Gr. scholia et versiones omnes, Orig. in Matt. 333. C. Alex. et Hilar. D. " ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων, scripsisse apostolum non dubito. Emolliens illud τῶν ἁγίων ut et τῶν ἀποστόλων scholiastarum sunt de veritate, et congruentia sermonis Paulini solicitorum," Proleg. p. 139. col. 2. et p. 110.

V. 9. Τίς ἡ κοινωνία.] V. l. οἰκονομία, quam genuinam esse lectionem à Gr. scholiis et versionibus confirmatam agnosco, sed parum interest inter communicationem et dispensationem mysterii de vocandis gentibus, ejusdem κοινωνίᾳ factum.

Τῷ Θεῷ τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαντι δι' Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Hæc ultima verba non solum agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia, sed etiam notant ὅτι καλῶς ἐμνημόνευσε τῆς κτίσεως δι' Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ: sunt tamen " commentarius sumptus ex Col. i. 16." Proleg. p. 123. col. 1. eadem licet habeamus, cap. ii. 10. his verbis αὐτὸ γάρ ἐσμεν ποίημα κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

Cap. iv. 9. Τὸ δὲ ἀνέβη, τί ἐστι εἰ μὴ ὅτι καὶ κατέβη πρῶτον εἰς τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς.] 'D. hic καὶ Iren. lib. v. cap. 31.' ita Mill. sed fallitur. Ibi enim sc. p. 451. legit 'et descendit,' sicut etiam omnia Gr. scholia. Deest πρῶτον, Œcum. sed non deest reliquis omnibus Gr. scholiis, et versionibus. Deest etiam μέρη apud quosdam, unde Mil. 'medium μέρη lectoris est, ad supplendam sententiam,' Proleg. p. 41. Agnoscunt autem Græca scholia omnia, et C. Alex. nec usitatius quicquam quam omittere verbum aliquod, quod unusquisque lector adjiciendum esse ex se agnoscit.

V. 17. Καθὼς καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἔθνη.] Desunt τὰ λοιπὰ, Clem. Al. protrept. p. 54. Vulg. Hilar. D. Hieronym.: unde, dicente Millio Prol. p. 60. col. 2. "medium λοιπὰ irrepsit ex cap. 2, 3. hujus epistolæ." Agnoscitur tamen ab omnibus Gr. scholiis, Syro, Arabe.

V. 23. Ἀνανεοῦσθαι 24. ἐνδύσασθαι.] V. l. ἀνανεοῦσθε, ἐνδύσασθε. "Sic Chrysost. Theophyl. Vulg. Hieronym. Hilarius D. infinitiva hæc postea facta sunt ob præcedens ἀποθέσθαι," Proleg. p. 84. col. 2. Sed Clem. Alex. p. 437. C. Alex. Theodoret. et Œcumen. legunt cum textu, et ἀποθέσθαι, 'deponere,' Latini retinent, quod hanc lectionem sâtis adstruit.

V. 28. Agnoscunt hic τὸ ἀγαθὸν Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, C. Alex. et Hilar. D.: et tamen Proleg. p. 160. col. 1. 'vix est quin medium ἀγαθὸν pro scholio marginali habuerim, sumpto ex Gal. vi. 10.'

V. 29. Πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρείας.] V. l. τῆς πίστεως, quam lectionem interpretamenti causa additam hic censet Mill. et in Prol. p. 55. col. 1. propugnat. Sed repugnantibus Gr. scholiis universim, C. Alex. Hilario D. et Hieronymo his verbis; "pro eo autem quod nos posuimus ad ædificationem opportunitatis. Hoc est quod dicitur Græce τῆς χρείας in Latinis codicibus propter euphoniam mutavit interpres et posuit ad ædificationem fidei."

V. 32. Καθὼς καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν Χριστῷ ἐχαρίσατο ὑμῖν.] "Ἐν Χριστῷ, inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 89. col. 1. irrepsit è margine ex Col. iii." 13. raro enim patitur apostolum bis idem de eodem dicere. Agnoscunt autem versiones omnes, Chrysost. Œcumen. C. Alex. Hilar. D.: et quanquam dicat Mil. 'deesse Theodoreto et Theophylacto,' Theophylactus tantum ordinem verborum invertit, legendo ἐχαρίσατο ὑμῖν ἐν Χριστῷ, Theodoretus sic ὁ τῶν ὅλων Θεὸς ἐχαρίσατο ἡμῖν διὰ τοῦ Δεσπότου Χριστοῦ.

Cap. v. 5. Τοῦτο γάρ ἐστε γινώσκοντες.] Plurimi Cod. MSS. Clem. Al. p. 437. Chrysost. Œcum. legunt ἔστε: ad eandem interpretationem afferunt ac illam Theodoreti et Theophylacti, qui habent ἔστε, ita etiam Hieron. et omnes Latini qui legunt 'scitote,' lectio Vulg. scitote intelligentes, absona est, et absurda.

V. 9. Ὁ γὰρ καρπὸς τοῦ πνεύματος.] "V. l. τοῦ φωτὸς, Vulg. Hilar. D. è Latinis multi, Theophylact." ita Millius. Sed Theophylactus, et Gr. scholia non modo legunt, sed fusius explicant vocem 'spiritus,' quibuscum consentit Arabs.

V. 21. Ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ.] V. l. Χριστοῦ. Chrysost. Vulg. Syr. Ambrosiast. sed Θεοῦ Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. Arab. Nota quod v. 20. καὶ πατρὶ omittatur ab unico Æthiope, et tamen Proleg. p. 124. "irrepsit è margine."

V. 27. Ἵνα παραστήσῃ αὐτήν.] V. l. αὐτὸς, Theophylact. Vulg. Hilar. D. Hieronymus. Sed Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. Arab. αὐτὴν, quam lectionem etiam sensus postulat. Nota autem quod licet in omnibus legatur vel αὐτὴν vel αὐτὸ, Millius tam αὐτὴν, quam αὐτὸ pro injectitiis habeat, Proleg. p. 105. col. 1.

V. 31. Καὶ προσκολληθήσεται πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ.] Habent hæc verba scholia Gr. omnia, C. Alex. Hilar. D. versiones omnes, aliunde assumpta tamen disertim asserit Hieronymus. Ratio in promptu est; iniquus conjugio fuit Hieronymus.

Cap. vi. 1. Ἐν Κυρίῳ.] Sic omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hieron. et versiones antiquæ. "Est tamen Commentarius," Proleg. p. 48. col. 1.

V. 10. Ἀδελφοί μου.] Desunt tantum Æthiop. habent Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes: at Proleg. p. 48. col. 2. "irrepsisse videtur ex lectionariis."

V. 18. Εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀγρυπνοῦντες.] Deest τοῦτο Vulg. Arab. Hilar. D. Hieron. Basil. Sed agnoscunt τοῦτο omnia Gr. scholia, et δέξασθε Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. Arab. "Utraque tamen τὸ τοῦτο et δέξασθε non sunt D. Pauli sed lectoris," Prol. p. 135. col. 2.

SECTIO SEXTA.

DE VARIIS LECTIONIBUS EPISTOLÆ AD PHILIPPENSES.

CAP. i. v. 1. Σὺν ἐπισκόποις.] V. l. συνεπισκόποις, 'co-episcopis,' Hilarius D.: sed quanquam præpositio σὺν adjungatur ἐπισκόποις secundum veterem scribendi consuetudinem, constat tamen Græcos omnes cum textu concordare: non enim notarunt quod Paulus apud Philippenses mentionem fecerit co-episcoporum, nec quærunt quamobrem id fecerit, sed cum Hieronymo dicunt eos, qui hic dicti sunt episcopi, presbyteros fuisse. Denique nec id dicit Hilarius, sed hoc tantum "cum episcopis et diaconis, hoc est, cum Paulo et Timotheo, qui episcopi erant," mirum quam frigide, et inepte.

V. 18. Χριστὸς καταγγέλλεται.] V. l. καταγγελλέσθω, Euseb.; non Eccl. Hist., ut Mill. hic hallucinatur, sed de vita Const. lib. iii. cap. 58. et Proleg. p. 102. col. 2. In utrisque autem lectori imposuit Millius, nam εἴτε προφάσει εἴτε ἀληθείᾳ Χριστὸς καταγγελλέσθω, sunt ibi verba imperatoris, μονονουχὶ, καὶ παραπλησίως fere inquit Eusebius, propemodum aut tantum non cum Paulo loquentis. Adde quod Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes legant cum textu.

Cap. ii. 4. Μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστος σκοπεῖτε.] Cod. plur. Basilius, Hilar. D. legunt σκοποῦντες, Vulg. 'considerantes:' ast omnia Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. σκοπεῖτε, "quod scholiastæ est," Proleg. p. 71.

V. 11. Πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσεται.] MSS. quædam Orig. in Joh. p. 134. et Theophylactus, ἐξομολογήσεται, "unde mutavit quispiam, inquit Mil. Prol. p. 160. futurum im aoristum ob præcedens κάμψῃ." Sed Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcum. C. Alex. Hilarius D. Iren. lib. i. cap. 2. p. 45. Gr. legit ἐξομολογήσεται et Athanas. orat. 2. contra Ar. p. 346. et hanc lectionem firmant primo, τὸ ἵνα. 2. τὸ κάμψῃ præcedentia, nam ubi occurrit, Rom. xiv. 11. ἐξομολογήσεται sine ἵνα præcedente sequitur κάμψει.

V. 15. Ἐν μέσῳ.] Ita omnia Gr. scholia, Vulg. Hilar. D. præfert ἀνὰ μέσον Millius, Prol. p. 163. col. 2.

V. 30. Παραβουλευσάμενος τῇ ψυχῇ.] V. l. παραβολευσάμενος, Vulg. Hilar. D. Pseud. Hieron. Sed omnia Gr. scholia, C. Al. et Photius legunt παραβουλευσάμενος, i. e. ut aiunt Phavorinus, et Hesychius, εἰς θάνατον ἑαυτὸν διδούς: male igitur Mill. ait Prol. p. 48. "ignoratio sensus τοῦ παραβουλευσάμενος occasionem dedit huic mutationi."

Cap. iii. 9. Ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει.] Deest unico Syro. Sed Prol. p. 130. col. 1. "vix quidem obstat summus codicum, quos jam habemus, consensus, quo minus ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει pro interpretamento, eoque minus opportune hic injecto, habeam."

V. 11. Εἰς τὴν ἀνάστασιν τῶν νεκρῶν.] V. l. τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν nullo sensus discrimine.

V. 15. Τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι.] Agnoscunt vocem κανόνι Græci scholiastæ interpretesque omnes, ne hodierno quidem Vulgato excepto; sed rejicitur tanquam "interpolatio," Prol. p. 55. col. 2. et p. 135. col. 2. "irrepsit ex Gal. vi. 16."

V. 21. Qui transformabit corpus humilitatis nostræ, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ σύμμορφον.] Εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ desunt Vulg. Hilar. D. Iren. lib. v. cap. 13. p. 419. Tertulliano. At retinent ea Græca scholia omnia, Syr. Arab.

Cap. iv. 3. Legas καὶ ἐρωτῷ, vel. ναὶ ἐρωτῷ nihil interest.

V. 4. Χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ πάντοτε.] Τὸ πάντοτε desunt in solo Æthiope. Agnoscunt omnes scholiastæ, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab.: sed Prol. p. 124. col. 2. "irrepsit ex 1 Thess. v. 16."

V. 13. Ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με Χριστῷ.] Deest Χριστῷ in MSS. quibusdam, Vulg. Hilar. D. Æthiop.: ergo Proleg. p. 123. "adjectitium est:" sed habent Syr. Arab. Græci scholiastæ omnes.

V. 18. Παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου.] Sic Gr. scholia, Hilar. D. versionesque omnes: dicente tamen Millio, Proleg. p. 145. col. 1. "παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου, quod habent jam omnes, Scholion initio erat sumptum ex cap. ii. 25."

Ver. 23. Μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν.] Ita omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Sed MSS. quædam. Vulg. Hilar. D. Pseud-Hieronymus legunt μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν. "Recte" inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 123.

SECTIO SEPTIMA.

DE VARIIS LECTIONIBUS EPISTOLÆ AD COLOSSENSES.

CAP. i. 2. Καὶ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Omittunt hæc verba 4 MSS. Hilar. D. Syr. et Theophylact. et licet reperias in textu Chrysostomi in Com. tum ille, tum Theophylactus, ait ἐν ταύτῃ τοῦ Χριστοῦ οὐ πίθηται ὄνομα, "lectoris ergo sunt, non D. Pauli" Mill. Prol. p. 84. Sed agnoscunt C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Œcumen. Theodoretus; solum enim inspexerat Millius versionem Latinam, cum hæc verba Theodoreto defuisse affirmavit. Et siquidem in reliquis epistolis omnibus Paulus eadem loquendi formula utitur cum ad has vel illas ecclesias, tum ad hos, vel illos homines, quid obstat quo minus hæc verba hic etiam usurpâsse videatur? non ille Colossis error obtinuit ut putarent Christo supplicandum esse mediantibus angelis, sed ὅτι δι' ἀγγέλων προσάγεσθαι ᾤοντο τῷ Θεῷ, οὐ διὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ, quod rationem omittendi hæc verba à Theophylacto allatam prorsus evertit; cum enim apostolus Deum patrem nullo internuncio comparato precetur his verbis χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς, hæ preces falsam istam ex animis hominum satis evellunt opinionem.

V. 6. Καὶ ἐστι καρποφορούμενον.] MSS. plur. Vulg. Hilar. D. Syr. Chrysost. Theodoret. et Theophylact. addunt καὶ αὐξανόμενον (quod tamen, pace Millii dicam, deest Œcumen. textu et Com.): in Græcis non legi, ait Erasmus, illud αὐξανόμενον; non adesse in MSS. ait Grotius. Desumptum videtur ex his verbis, v. 10. hujus cap. καρποφοροῦντες καὶ αὐξανόμενοι.

V. 10. Ut ambuletis ἀξίως τοῦ Κυρίου.] Vulg. Lat. Didymus, Hilar. D. Pseud-Hieron. Θεοῦ: sed omnia Gr. scholia, Clem. Al. p. 576. C. Alex. textui assentiuntur.

V. 14. Τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ.] Omittunt hæc postrema verba Syr. Chrysost. Theophylact. Athanas. tom. i. p. 466.: sed agnoscunt Arab. Œcum. Theodoret. Iren. lib. v. cap. 2. p. 395. Paulus ipse, Eph. i. 7.

V. 18. Τοῦ σώματος τῆς ἐκκλησίας.] Retinent τοῦ σώματος Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. interpretesque omnes, dempto Æthiope, qui tamen reliquis omnibus anteponitur, Prol. p. 124. col. 2.

V. 24. Nunc gaudeo ἐν παθήμασί μου.] In MSS. Vulg. Hilar. D. Syr. Theodoreto, deest μου· Habent Chrysost. Œcumen. Theophylact.: et cum loquatur apostolus de afflictionibus quas in carne sua passus est, vox μου vel legatur, vel subaudiatur necesse est: tamen est "addititium," Prol. p. 89.

Cap. ii. 4. Μή τις.] "V. l. μηδεὶς, Clem. Al." sed falli hic Millium patet; vide Stro. vi. p. 645.

V. 7. Καθὼς ἐδιδάχθητε περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ.] Καὶ additur post καθὼς, et ἐν αὐτῇ desunt in quibusdam MSS. sed Græci scholiastæ textui consentiunt.

V. 9. Plenitudo divinitatis σωματικῶς.] "Deest σωματικῶς, Iren. lib. i. cap. 1. Cyprian. l. de bono patientiæ;" ita Millius, sed reperies verbum illud apud Orig. in Jer. p. 56. Hilar. D. Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Quod ad Irenæum attinet loco citato, p. 18. ex Grabii sententia non habemus verba Irenæi, sed Valentinianorum; legerunt tamen (ait ille) σωματικῶς Græci Patres omnes, et de Latinis, Hilarius, Augustinus, pluresque alii.

V. 11. Ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τῆς σαρκός.] Omittunt τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν MSS. aliqua, Hilar. Diac. Clem. Al. Stro. iii. p. 444. Pseud.-Hieron. (de quo vix unquam sum adeo solicitus ut quæram quid dixerit, senseritve): sed Basil. Prol. p. 61. tom. ii. p. 447. et Græca scholia textus lectionem exhibent, et contra Millii, "de Scholio in textum introducto" sententiam corroborant.

V. 18. Ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων.] Deest μὴ in MSS. quibusdam, Orig. contra Cels. p. 236. sunt Calar. Hilario D. et Cod. Lat. teste Augustino Ep. ad Paulinum: sed Græca scholia, versiones omnes, et teste Esthio, Græca omnia, et Latina quæ nunc extant, negationem habent, et in margine Origenis adnotatur μή. Habent libri editi.

V. 20. Εἰ οὖν ἀπεθάνετε.] Deest οὖν in MSS. Theophylacto, Cypriano, quod retinent Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcum. Vulg. Hilarius D. Syr.

Cap. iii. 12. Σπλάγχνα οἰκτιρμῶν.] Origen. in Matt. 473. Clem. Alex. Chrysost. Vulg. legunt οἰκτιρμοῦ, nullo sensus discrimine, sed ad oram Origenis adscribitur Cod. Reg. οἰκτιρμῶν, et sic Theodoret. Œcumen. et Theophyl. "Mutatum tamen οἰκτιρμοῦ in οἰκτιρμῶν" ait Mill. Prol. p. 61. col. 1.

V. 18. Τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν.] Deest ἰδίοις in cunctis versionibus, Clem. Al. Stro. iv. p. 499. Hilar. D. Pseud.-Hieron.: Theophylactus legit ἀνδράσιν ὑμῶν. Vel legendum vel intelligendum esse constat, pro certo enim monentur hic uxores ut suis, non aliarum mulierum maritis, subditi sint. Vide Paulum Eph. v. 24.

V. 20. Hoc est εὐάρεστον τῷ Κυρίῳ.] MSS. exempla plurima, Theodoret. Theoph. et Vulg. legunt ἐν Κυρίῳ. Atqui Clem. Al. Stro. iv. p. 499. Chrysost. Œcum. multi Græci Latinique codices, teste Esthio, sine præpositione, atque eo modo plenior est sermo.

V. 22. Οἱ δοῦλοι ὑπακούετε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς κατὰ σάρκα κυρίοις.] Ita Græca scholia, versionesque, dempto Æthiope, omnes. Sed Millio Proleg. p. 124. col. 2. "intermedium κατὰ πάντα, ut et κατὰ σάρκα videtur marginalis explicatio ex Eph. vi. 5." Consultius esset receptæ potius lectioni acquiescere, quàm Æthiope duce ab aliis omnibus deviare.

Cap. iv. 2. Ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.] Sic Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versionesque omnes. Sed Prol. p. 49. col. 1. "irrepsit ex cap. 2. v. 7. aut etiam ex Phil. iv. 6."

V. 3. Θύραν τοῦ λόγου.] Hic iterum Millius θύραν simpliciter, (utcumque θύραν τοῦ λόγου, sit jam in omnibus codicibus) pro genuina vix est quin habeat, Proleg. p. 61. col. 1.

V. 10. Ἀρίσταρχος ὁ συναιχμάλωτός μου.] "Ὁ συναιχμάλωτός μου, irrepsisse videntur ex Ep. ad Philem. v. 23, 24." ita Millius Proleg. p. 124. col. 1. Agnoscunt tamen Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. Hilarius D. interpretesque omnes præterquam unus Æthiops.

V. 13. Ζῆλον πολύν.] V. l. πόθον πολὺν, πολὺν κόπον, ἀγῶνα πολὺν, multum laborem, Vulg. Hilar. D. Sed Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. textui consentiunt.

SECTIO OCTAVA.

QUÆ EST DE LECTIONIBUS VARIANTIBUS IN EPISTOLIS AD THESSALONICENSES.

1 THESS. i. 1. Ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Desunt hæc verba in Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Hilario D. Pseud.-Hieron. Retinentur autem Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. C. Alex. et ob id solum omitti videntur, quod præcesserint ἐν Θεῷ πατρὶ, καὶ Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ.

V. 7. Parvi refert utrum legas τόπον, an cum textu τόπους, quam lectionem amplectuntur Græci scholiastæ omnes.

Cap. ii. 7. Ἀλλ' ἐγενήθημεν ἤπιοι.] V. l. νήπιοι Vulg. Hilarius D. Œcumen. in textu ἤπιος, in Com. ἢ νήπιος. Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 375. νήπιος, sed ἤπιος, p. 421. Syr. et Arab. 'Mitis, Mansuetus,' Chrysost. C. Alex. Cl. Al. pæd. lib. i. p. 84. Strò. i. p. 272. Basil. tom. ii. p. 462. et 570. legunt ἤπιος, quod simillimum veri videtur. Apostolus enim in hac similitudine non infantis, sed nutricis personam sustinet, quæ puerorum leves iras et infirmitates placide fert.

V. 8. Ἱμειρόμενοι ὑμῶν.] Decem MSS. et Theophylactus in textu legunt ὑμειρόμενοι 'constricti vobis:' unde Millius Proleg. p. 95. col. 1. "Usitatius ἱμειρόμενοι in alterius locum suffecerunt scribæ," Prol. p. 95.: sed versiones omnes, Chrysost. Theodoret. C. Alex. Hilar. D. Œcumenius, legunt eum textu, quam lectionem interpretatur Theophylactus, utraque vox idem valet ὀμειρόμενοι ὁμείρονται, i. e. ἐπιθυμοῦσιν, Hesychius et Phavorinus.

V. 15. Τοὺς ἰδίους προφήτας.] Deest ἰδίους in MSS. quibusdam, Vulg. Hilario D. Pseud.-Hieron. Orig. de Mart. p. 224. adde et Com. in Matt. p. 224. "Scholiastæ cujusdam est," Mill. Prol. p. 65.

col. 2. Sed omnia Græca scholia, Basil. tom. ii. p. 429. Syr. Arab. retinent ἰδίους. Vide Act. vii. 52. et quosnam quæso alios Prophetas occidissent Judæi circa annum æræ Christianæ 51 ?

Cap. iii. 2. Καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν.] " Recte hic omnia, nihil mutandum," Mil. in locum: sed Proleg. p. 123. col. 2. " Media καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν irrepsere è margine," contra fidem omnium Græcorum scholiorum, Syr. et Arab.

Cap. iv. 11. Καὶ ἐργάζεσθαι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσίν.] Ita Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Theophylactus; ' manibus vestris,' Vulg. et Hilar. D.: et cujusnam manibus operari potuerunt nisi suis, at Prol. p. 84. " irrepsit ex 1 Cor. iv. 12."

V. 13. Οὐ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν.] Sc. ego Paulus nolo, v. l. θέλομεν, nos Paulus, Sylvanus et Timotheus nolumus: plurali etiam numero sæpe utitur Paulus, cum solam sui ipsius mentionem faciat.

Nota insuper quod licet in versiculis 15—17. afferantur decem variantes lectiones, Orig. in Joh. p. 317. à textu in nihilo discedit, et legit φθάσωμεν non φθάσομεν prout Millius hic lapsus est per errorem.

Cap. v. 13. Εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς.] MSS. Vulg. Æthiop. Chrysostomus et Theodoretus, legunt ἐν αὐτοῖς, τουτέστι διδασκάλοις. Sed Hilarius D. C. Alex. Œcumenius, Theophylactus ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. Et hanc lectionem quam posteriorem vocat, ita firmat Esthius: " Posterior lectio quæ admonet Thessalonicenses ut inter se pacem habeant, magis genuina videtur, tum quia novum præceptum est nulla conjunctione et cum præcedentibus cohærens; tum quia prioris lectionis sensus in superioribus satis includitur, velut minus in majore, ne dicam quod nec Græca, nec Hebraicæ proprietatis est, ita loqui ἐν αὐτοῖς, i. e. σὺν αὐτοῖς cum iis, sed inter illos ut Marc. ix. 50. Εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἀλλήλοις, pacem habete inter vos."

V. 15. Καὶ εἰς ἀλλήλους, καὶ εἰς πάντας.] Deest καὶ in Vulg. Arab. Sed retinent prius καὶ, Græca scholia omnia, atque eam Græci sermonis elegantia postulat. ' Sc. quod bonum est, sectemini tam erga Christianos, quam extraneos, seu non modo inter vos ipsos, sed in omnes.'

V. 27. Πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις ἀδελφοῖς.] Agnoscunt ἁγίοις Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. Interpretesque, dempto Æthiope, omnes. Millius tamen ait Prol. p. 150. col. 2. " nisi obstaret codicum consensus, medium ἁγίοις pro insititiis haberem."

In 2dæ Epistolæ ad Thessalonicenses capite primo vix aliqua varians lectio expectatione aliorum digna occurrit. V. 8. et 12. d. Χριστοῦ post ' Jesum' apud codices aliquos et Græcos scholiastes, cujus quidem vocis subductione sive additamento nihil usitatius est; et cum Ἰησοῦ vel Κυρίου retineatur, si subducas, vel addas nomen Χριστοῦ, nullo modo in sensum peccatur. Similiter loco πιστεύουσιν Cod. MSS. plur. et omnia Græca scholia legunt πιστεύσασιν, i. e. non iis qui credunt, sed qui crediderunt. At grammatici sciunt quam frequenter omnis sermo utatur aoristo loco temporis præsentis, et vice versa. Vide Glass. lib. iii. tract. 3. can. 46, 47.

Cap. ii. 2. Œcumenius Χριστοῦ, i. e. Κυρίου.] Cui lectioni cum patrocinantur Græci patres omnes, Vulg. et Syr. quin genuina sit nullus dubito: cum autem utriusque vocis eadem sit compendiosa scriptio Xοῦ, atque ambæ eandem personam denotent, quid istuc tam mirum si promiscue usurpentur ?

V. 3. Ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῆς ἁμαρτίας.] Cyril. Hieros. p. 161. Orig. MSS. contra Cels. p. 89. legunt ἀνομίας, sed scholiastæ Græci, C. Alex. interpretesque veteres, Iren. lib. v. cap. 25. p. 438. Orig. ibid. in textu, et contra Cels. p. 307. in Matt. p. 347. in Joh. p. 76. legunt ἁμαρτίας, Hilarius D. peccati: quæ huic lectioni satis firmamenti addunt, nec re dissident hæc verba ἁμαρτία γάρ ἐστιν ἀνομία, Joh. iii. 4.

V. 4. " Omittit λεγόμενον Origenes," ita Mill. festinanter: habent enim πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν non modo Cyril. Hieros. p. 161. Cyril. Alex. de ador. sp. p. 309. Græci scholiastæ omnes et Hilarius D.; sed Orig. etiam contra Cels. p. 89. et 307. in Matt. p. 242.

Ὡς Θεόν.] D. MSS. quibusdam, Iren. lib. v. cap. 25. Orig. contra Cels. locis jam dictis, Cyril. Hieros. C. Alex. Vulg. " Insertum in contextum nullus dubito," ait Millius Proleg. p. 65. col. 2. Sed agnoscunt ὡς Θεὸν omnia Græca scholia, Cyril. Alex. Glaph. in Gen. p. 178. Theodoret. Hær. fab. lib. v. cap. 23. Syr. Arab. Ita eorum qui huic dictioni suffragantur, major est numerus, quam qui adversantur.

V. 8. Ὃν ὁ κύριος ἀνελώσει.] Orig. Cyril. Hieros. Constit. Apost. lib. vii. cap. 72. legunt ἀνελεῖ, fortasse ex eo quod versio τῶν LXX. ita se habeat Isa. xi. 4. Utram harum vocum legerint patres Latini nemo pronunciare potest, sed lucem his dabunt Chrysostomi hæc verba in Psal. xliv. καὶ ἄλλος προφήτης φησὶ, πατάξει τὴν γὴν λόγῳ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, καὶ πνεύματι χειλέων ἀνελεῖ ἀσεβῆ, τὰ αὐτὰ τῷ Παύλῳ φθεγγόμενος; λέγοντι ὃν Κύριος ἀνελώσει τῷ πνεύματι στόματος αὐτοῦ, tom. iii. Ed. Mor. p. 214. ita legunt reliqui Græci scholiastæ.

V. 11. Διὰ τοῦτο πέμψει.] Orig. contra Cels. p. 307. Iren. Cyril. Hieros. p. 166. legunt πέμπει, sed Græca scholia, Orig. ibid. p. 90. Iren. lib. v. cap. 28. legunt πέμψει, et Cyrillus ait τὸ δὲ πέμπει ἀντὶ τοῦ συγχωρεῖ γίνεσθαι.

V. 13. Omnia Græca scholia, et C. Alex. legunt, non εἵλατο, sed εἵλετο, pariter ac textus.

Cap. iii. 4. Ἃ παραγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν.] Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. interpretesque omnes, si à Vulgato discesseris, agnoscunt ὑμῖν: at Prol. p. 49. " accessit ad absolvendam sententiam."

SECTIO NONA.

QUÆ AGIT DE VARIANTIBUS LECTIONIBUS PRIMÆ EPISTOLÆ AD TIMOTHEUM.

CAP. i. 4. Οἰκοδομίαν Θεοῦ.] Ita Vulg. Hilarius D. patres Latini, Syrus. Irenæus his verbis αἵτινες, ζητήσεις μᾶλλον παρέχουσι, καθὼς ὁ ἀπόστολός φησιν, ἢ οἰκοδομὴν Θεοῦ τὴν ἐν πίστει, Lat. ' quàm ædificationem Dei quæ est in fide,' p. 1. sed Græca scholia, et codices MSS. habent οἰκονομίαν, nec ab hac mutatione sensus multum patitur, cum ædificatio sit hujus οἰκονομίας fructus genuinus.

V. 14. Ὑπερεπλεόνασε, et 16. πρώτῳ.] Τὸ πρώτῳ habent Græca scholia, C. Alex. versionesque vulgatæ et Arab. et v. 18. ἐν αὐταῖς, agnoscunt Græca scholia omnia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Hilar. D. et tamen Millius " ὑπὲρ pro more è margine transtulerunt librarii in textum," Prol. p. 160. et " πρώτῳ valde suspectum est παρεμβλήσεως," p. 49. et rejicitur p. 139. col. 2. et " ἐν αὐταῖς scholiastæ cujusdam est, non apostoli," Prol. p. 124. nimirum Æthiops hic " archetypum textum retinet, licet ab ipso cæteri, quod video, abierint," Ibid. col. 1.

V. 17. Μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ.] Deest σοφῷ in C. Alex. Clar. Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Tertulliano, Novatian. Hilario D. August. Pseud. Hieron. nec attingunt in Com. Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. " Suspicatur Esthius, id quod res est, ex Rom. xvi. 27. hoc à Græcis quibusdam, diversa loca confundentibus, adscriptum esse, sicut et in Epistola Judæ :"—Hæc Millius. Atqui non Arabs modo, sed omnia Græca scholia habent σοφῷ in textu, et satis attingunt in commentariis. Nempe secundum Theodoretum hæc exclamatio est ὕμνος τῇ τριάδι, secundum Chrysostomum et Œcumenium ταῦτα περὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, rationemque reddit Theophylactus αὐτὸς γάρ ἐστι ἡ σοφία τοῦ Πατρὸς, Theodoretus in 5. l. de Hær. fab. cap. 1. p. 251. hæc habet verba, βοᾷ δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀπόστολος ἀφθάρτῳ, ἀοράτῳ μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, et in 2 dial. de Trinit. quem illi attribuit Garnerius, eadem reperias, tom. v. p. 300. Maximus confessor in eodem dialogo illa ipsa verba bis recitat, p. 410. 422.

Cap. ii. 7. Ἀλήθειαν λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ.] Desunt ἐν Χριστῷ MSS. plur. vetustis versionibus, Chrysost. Theophyl. Habent autem Theodoret. et Œcumen.

Cap. iii. 3. Μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ.] Non habent cod. MSS. multi, Vulg. Hilarius D. Syr. Arab. Theodoret. et Theophylact. " irrepsit ex Ep. ad Tit." Prol. p. 89. Habent autem Chrysostomus, Œcumen. C. Alex. S. Basil. tom. ii. p. 476, 477. Et vocem hanc postulant sequentia δια κόνους ὡσαύτως, N. B. μὴ αἰσχροκερδεῖς, et Tit. i. 7. ubi eadem res agitur.

V. 6. Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκί.] Hanc lectionem contra vulgatam suam et Hilar. D. pulcherrime propugnat Mill., in eo solo lapsus quod ait ' Greg. Nyssenum primum fuisse omnium luculentum hoc apostoli testimonium usurpâsse video.' Eodem enim antea usi sunt Athanas. de incarn. verbi tom. i. p. 592. atque Orig. contra Cels. lib. iii. p. 129.

Cap. iv. 16. Ἐπίμενε αὐτοῖς.] Ita Græca scholia, Vulg. Hilar. D. Syr.: dicente autem Millio. Prol. p. 124. col. 2. "medium ἐπίμενε αὐτοῖς, adscripsit jam olim ad marginem scholiastes aliquis, unde irrepsit in textum."

Cap. v. 4. Καλὸν καί.] Desunt in MSS. plurimis, Græcis scholiis et versionibus cunctis; fortasse, eo quod supervacanea hæc verba putârint: quod enim acceptum est coram Deo, id non potest non esse bonum et honestum. Similiter v. 5. καὶ ταῖς προσευχαῖς omittunt, ut superfluum credo, Cod. Latini plurimi.

V. 16. Εἴ τις πιστὸς ἢ πιστή.] Sic Græca scholia omnia, Hilar. D. Syr. Arab. sed "præfixit πιστὸς lector quispiam," ita Mill. Prol. p. 71.

V. 19. Ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ δύο ἢ τριῶν μαρτύρων.] Ita versiones omnes, C. Alex. Theodoret. Œcum. et Theophylact. Ait tamen Millius, Prol. p. 49. "Vulg. Hilarii lectio, quæ est simpliciter μὴ παραδέχου, omnino genuina est, qui expressiora et clariora hic volebat, adjecit ad marginem ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ δύο ἢ τριῶν μαρτύρων: quod quidem mox ut in textum irrepserit, nil mirum si in omnes demum codices invaserit."

V. 21. Μηδὲν ποιῶν κατὰ πρόσκλισιν.] Quædam exempla MSS. Chrysost. et Œcum. legunt πρόσκλησιν, Basilius et Theodoretus πρόσκλισιν, sicut etiam Theophylactus, hac simul adhibita observatione, κἂν διὰ τοῦ ἢ γράφεται, τὸν αὐτὸν νοῦν σημαίνει.

Cap. vi. 5. Ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων.] Agnoscunt hæc verba omnia Græca scholia, Hilarius D. Syr. Arab. et sensus sine his non plenus est: male igitur putat Grotius ob hanc solam rationem ea addita fuisse, et post illum Millius "à lectore addita ad complendum sensum," Prol. p. 123. præsertim cum Græci scholiastæ, et patres diserte notent quod apostoli mandatum non sit, ' disputa cum,' sed ' segrega te ab illis.'

V. 9. Εἰς ἐπιθυμίας ἀνοήτους.] Ita Syr. C. Alex. et omnia Græca scholia in textu, Chrysost. in margine commentarii, Basilius tom. ii. p. 450. sed Vulg. &c. ἀνοήτους, quod fere idem sonat; quæcunque enim cupiditas stulta et temeraria est, eam quoque inutilem et nocivam esse, quis dubitat?

V. 20. Chrysostomus et Theophylactus hic παρακαταθήκην legunt, sed Theodoretus et Œcumenius παραθήκην sine discrimine, teste Phavorino, παραθήκη λέγε καὶ παρακαταθήκη, οὕτω γὰρ καὶ Ἀρχαιοὶ λέγουσι· παραθήκη, παρακαταθήκη. Hesychius.

SECTIO DECIMA.

DE VARIANTIBUS LECTIONIBUS EPISTOLÆ SECUNDÆ AD TIMOTHEUM.

CAP. i. 11. Ἐθνῶν.] Habent Gr. scholia, versiones, Hilarius D. exemplaria, si bina excipias, omnia, sed Prol. p. 145. col. 1. "ἐθνῶν est Ep. ad Timotheum prioris," cur non eadem sententia etiam posterioris?

Cap. ii. 19. Τὸ ὄνομα Χριστοῦ.] MSS. plurimi, scholiastæ, interpretesque omnes legunt Κυρίου, hæc ergo est germana lectio: cum vero eadem persona sit tum Christus, tum Dominus, idem utriusque sensus est.

V. 21. Ἀπὸ τούτων.] Occurrunt hæc verba apud Orig. contra Cels. lib. iv. p. 210. in uncis. Desunt Philoc. p. 65, 66. idque ob rationem non cognitu difficilem; verba enim hæc vel referuntur ad profana, et inaniloquia Hymenæi et Phileti, vel ad vasa in contumeliam facta; ideoque, detractis iis, fit sententia generalis, ' si quis emundaverit se, erit vas in honorem,' sed retinent Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. Hilar. D. et versiones omnes.

Cap. iii. 3. Ἄστοργοι ἄσπονδοι.] Agnoscunt hæc verba C. Alex. scholiastæ, et versiones. Grotius autem ' forte huc inserta sunt ex Rom. i. 31.' Cum vero desint in unico Syro, si conjecturis et suspicionibus hujusmodi coarguantur tot testimonia, quid certi de textu habere possumus?

V. 16. Θεόπνευστος, καὶ ὠφέλιμος.] Ita scholiastæ, C. Alex.: Hilarius autem D. et versiones omittunt καί.

Cap. iv. 8. Πᾶσι τοῖς ἠγαπηκόσι.] Omnia Græca scholia, et C. Alex. legunt πᾶσι, quod satis est ad firmandam hanc lectionem. Deest πᾶσι apud Ger. Vulg. Hilarium D. Pseud. Hieron.: unde Millio "injectum in nostris πᾶσι explicatio est," Prol. p. 49.

SECTIO UNDECIMA.

DE VARIANTIBUS LECTIONIBUS EPISTOLÆ AD TITUM.

CAP. i. 4. Χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη.] Deest ἔλεος apud Latinos, Syr. Chrysost. Orig. (seu Ruffinum) ad Rom. cujus hæc sunt verba ad Titum, ' vero gratia et pax à Deo patre.' Sed Arab. C. Alex. Theodoretus textui assentiuntur. Œcumenius et Theophylactus rationem afferunt quare apostolus voce ἔλεος hic utitur. Millius tamen ait, "medium ἔλεος assutum huc haud dubito ex Epist. ad Timotheum," p. 84.

Versum quintum pariter ac in textu recitat Orig. in Matt. p. 362.: sic etiam Græci scholiastæ omnes, nisi quod Theophylactus legat non λείποντα sed ἐλλείποντα: unde de quatuor variis lectionibus, quas hic congessit Millius, fiat judicium.

Cap. ii. 7. D. Ἀφθαρσίαν.] Vulg. Chrysost. Theophylact: "explicatorium erat, inquit Millius Proleg. p. 123. τοῦ ἀδιαφθορίαν, ac postea irrepsit è margine in contextum." Agnoscunt Theodoret. Œcumen. C. Alex. Arab.

Cap. iii. 3. Ἦμεν γάρ ποτε.] Clem. Alex. p. 3. ἦμεν γὰρ ἤμέν ποτε more sc. rhetorum, Orig. lib. i. contra Celsum, p. 50. in Jer. H. 5. p. 75. Græca scholia, et versiones omnes legunt cum textu.

V. 10. Κατὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν.] Iren. lib. iii. cap. 3. Tertull. de præscript. cap. vi. 16. Cyprian. Ep. 59. et ad Quiren. lib. iii. §. 78. Ambrosiaster et Ambros. lib. ii. de Abrahamo, cap. 6. et teste Hieronymo, quidam Græci codices omittunt καὶ δευτέραν. Sed agnoscunt hæc verba Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes Cod. Alex. et ipse Hieronymus, Orig. in Cels. lib. v. p. 273. Athanas. ad Adelph. p. 156. ad Maximum. p. 163. Basil. tom. p. 491. Cyril. Alex. de ador. sp. p. 486. Porro hic loci plura sunt testimonia incaute, pene dixerim falso, citata. Nam Iren. lib. iii. cap. 3. Ed. Ox. p. 204. habet μετὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν παραιτοῦ. At, lib. iii. cap. 13. p. 78. οὗς ὁ Παῦλος ἐγκελεύεται μετὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν παραιτεῖσθαι, Lat. ' post primam et secundam correptionem devitare,' Cypr. ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 78. ad hunc modum legit ad Titum ' Hæreticum hominem post primam aut secundam correptionem devita.' Et Hieronymus non asserit Gr. codices omisisse, καὶ δευτέραν, sed loco correptionis, rectius legendum esse νουθεσίαν ' commonitionem.'

V. 15. Χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν.] ' Gratia Dei,' ita Vulg. Hilar. D. Pseud. Hieronym. ' gratia Domini nostri,' Clar. Ger. Lat. sed Græca scholia, Syr. et Arab. textum sequuntur, et monente hic Hieronymo, ' nec nostri,' in libris feruntur authenticis.

SECTIO DUODECIMA.

DE VARIANTIBUS LECTIONIBUS EPISTOLÆ AD PHILEMONEM.

V. 2. ΑΠΦΙΑι τῇ ἀγαπητῇ.] Sic Gr. scholiastæ, Syr. Arab. Sed Millius ex nimia in vulgatum indulgentia, magis probat ἀδελφῇ, quam, inquit, mutavit quispiam in ἀγαπητῇ, Prol. p. 135.

V. 6. Ἐνεργής.] V. l. ἐναργὴς evidens, cui astipulantis Esthii testimonium profert, reclamantibus non tantum omnibus Gr. scholiis, C. Alex. Syro, et Arabe, sed etiam Hilario D. et Hieronymo qui ait in Græco melius ἐνεργὴς efficax, unde à vulgato suo invitissimus dissentit.

Τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν.] Sic Vulg. Hieron. Theophyl. Esthiusque ait, 'hanc esse veram lectionem ipse orationis contextus ostendit.' Sed Chrysostom. Theodoret. Œcum. legunt ἐν ἡμῖν, 'in nobis Christianis,' omni in sensu discrimine remoto.

V. 20. Τὰ σπλάγχνα ἐν Κυρίῳ.] V. l. ἐν Χριστῷ, Syr. Hilar. D. Chrysost. Theophylact. Sed Theodoret. Œcumen. Arab. ἐν Κυρίῳ, atque 'hæc, ait Esthius, est verior lectio,' quanquam in sensu non est diversitas.

SECTIO DECIMA TERTIA

DE VARIANTIBUS LECTIONIBUS IN EPISTOLÆ AD HEBRÆOS.

CAP. i. 1. Ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν ἡμερῶν τούτων.] MSS. quidam, Orig. in Joh. p. 56. Theodoret. in Isa. ii. et Hær. fab. lib. v. cap. 2. et Athanas. legunt ἐπ' ἐσχάτου. Sed Græci scholiastæ omnes textum præferunt, et in synopsi quadam, quam spuriam esse omnes fatentur; ac in disp. de Nicen Concil. decretis, de qua critici certant, Athanasius legit ἐσχάτου: sed orat. 2. contra Arian. p. 36. et de Hum. Nat. suscept. p. 605. bis legit ἐσχάτων, quam genuinam esse lectionem nullus dubito; his enim verbis LXX. interpr. fere semper Hebraica illa beacharith hajamin interpretantur.

V. 3. Δι' ἑαυτοῦ καθαρισμὸν ποιησάμενος.] Agnoscunt δι' ἑαυτοῦ Gr. scholiastæ omnes, præterquam Theodoretus, qui tamen habet αὐτοῦ cum spiritu aspero, quod in idem recidit. Frustra igitur dicit Mill. Prol. p. 95. "δι' ἑαυτοῦ insertum esse claritatis gratia." Iidem etiam scholiastæ retinent hic ἡμῶν, quamquam forte desit apud Cyril. Al. Apostolus enim Hebræos alloquitur, ille autem neminem, at Prol. p. 49. "ἡμῶν injectitium est."

V. 12. Ὡσεὶ περιβόλαιον ἑλίξεις αὐτούς, καὶ ἀλλαγήσονται.] Bina Exempl. Gr. et Vulg. legunt ἀλλάξεις, sed Gr. scholiastæ, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. et versio τῶν LXX. Psal. cii. 26. ἑλίξεις. Vulg. mutabis eos, non ex Græco, sed Hebræo Thachaliphem.

Cap. ii. 7. Καὶ κατέστησας αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὰ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου.] Desunt hæc verba in MSS. plurimis, adde in Œcumenio et Theophylacto. Sed retinentur apud C. Alex. Chrysost. Theodoret, et versiones antiquas omnes.

V. 9. Χάριτι Θεοῦ.] Quidam codices, teste Orig. in Joh. p. 38. et 362. et Theodoret. in locum legebant χωρὶς Θεοῦ, sed, teste Millio, editis certe congruit quicquid uspiam est hodie librorum MSS. Gr. et Lat. Vide præfationem nostram in hoc opus.

Cap. iii. 6. Μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν.] Agnoscunt hæc verba Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes, uno excepto Æthiope, quem sequens Mill. ait "hæc ad marginem adposita in textum posuit scriba perperam, et eadem verba v. 14. irrepsere ex vers. 6." Prol. p. 124. col. 1.

V. 9. Οὗ ἐπείρασάν με.] Deest με in 4 MSS. sed adest in versionibus, et Gr. scholiis omnibus, in Cyril. Al. Glaph. in Num. p. 393. ubi à v. 7. usque ad finem hujus capitis editis congruit, nisi quod v. 11. pro ὡς, legit οἷς, et v. 16. pro οὐ, οὐχί.

Cap. iv. 2. Μὴ συγκεκραμμένος τῇ πίστει τοῖς ἀκούσασιν.] MSS. plurima, Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. legunt συγκεραμμένους. Sed Vulg. Syr. Cyril. Al. Glaph. in Num. p. 394. textum ipsum exhibent, atque hanc lectionem verborum constructio videtur postulare. Præbent enim sensum planum, viz. et sermo Moysis de promissione à Deo facta introducendi eos in terram Canaan iis non profuit, quia fidem ei non dabant; altera lectio difficilis, et subobscura est, nimirum sermo additus iis non profuit quia Calebo et Joshuæ ei auscultantibus, admixti non erant.

V. 15. Πεπειρασμένον.] Sic Œcumen. Orig. in Joh. p. 37, 38. et 323. et Theodoretus. Sed Chrysost. Theophylact. et Orig. περὶ εὐχῆς, p. 50. cum textu πεπειρασμένον eodem sensu.

Cap. v. 12. Διδάσκειν ὑμᾶς τίνα τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Chrysost. Ho. 17. in Matt. et Vulg. legunt διδάσκεσθαι, sed Orig. in Joh. p. 18. C. Alex. Gr. scholia ab excusis non recedunt, et legunt etiam λογίων pariter ac Euseb. contra Marcel. lib. i. cap. 1. p. 3. Cyril. Al. de ador. sp. p. 359.

Cap. vi. 3. Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν.] MSS. quidam et Œcum. legunt ποιήσωμεν: reliqui scholiastæ, et versiones cum textu.

V. 10. Καὶ τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης.] Deest κόπου in MSS. Vulg. et Syr.: sed quicquid Millius in contrarium dicat, occurrit apud Chrysost. in Comment. et apud reliquos interpretes Græcos: ait tamen Mill. Proleg. p. 84. col. 1. "τοῦ κόπου irrepsere ex 1 Thess. i. 3." quasi non potuerit apostolus bis idem dicere de eadem re.

Cap. vii. 11. Καὶ οὐ κατὰ τάξιν Ἀαρὼν λέγεσθαι.] Sic omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab. At quoniam hæc verba desunt apud Æthiop. ita Mill. "commentarium marginalem primitus fuisse puta, non textum," Prol. p. 84. col. 2.

V. 17. Μαρτυρεῖ γάρ.] Ita Theodoret. Œcumenius; μαρτυρεῖται Chrysost. Theophyl.

Cap. viii. 4. Τῶν ἱερέων.] Sic omnia Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab.: sed quia deest in 3 MSS. et Vulg. "adscripsit quispiam ad oram libri, unde mox irrepsit in contextum," ita Mill. Prol. p. 145. col. 1.

V. 9. Οὐ κατὰ τὴν διαθήκην ἣν ἐποίησα.] Chrysost. Theodoret. Theophyl. legunt ἣν διεθέμην, ex vers. τῶν LXX. Jer. xxxi. 32. sed Œcumen. C. Alex. Cyril. Al. de Ador. sp. p. 3. Vulg. Syr. Arab. ἐποίησα.

V. 11. Καὶ οὐ μὴ διδάξωσι ἕκαστος τὸν πλησίον.] 30 fere MSS. Theodoret. August. Syr. Arab. legunt πολίτην, ex vers. LXX. Interpr.: sed Vulg. Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylact. πλησίον.

V. 12. Καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν αὐτῶν.] Desunt in Vulg. Syr. 'videri possunt irrepsisse ex glossemate,' inquit Grotius, reclamantibus C. Alex. Arab. Græcis scholiis omnibus; apostolus ipse etiam iisdem verbis utitur infra cap. x. 17. ubi nulla varians occurrit lectio.

Cap. ix. 2. Ἥτις λέγεται ἁγία.] Quanquam omnia Græca scholia legunt ἅγια προπαροξυτόνως; danda illis venia est, qui nec linguam Hebraicam, nec tabernaculi structuram recte intelligebant: asserit Capellus ἁγία cum acuto in penultima, veriorem esse lectionem (cui fidem adstruit vox ἥτις) propterea quod ἅγια plurali numero dicitur potius de intimo sanctuario: pluralis enim numerus apud Hebræos sæpè vim habet superlativi.

V. 9. Ἥτις παραβολὴ εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, καθ' ὃν.] V. l. καθέστηκε; nulla scholia Græca agnoscunt καθ' ἣν; adest in solo Vulg. et Œcumenio. Reliqui interpretes, et scholiastæ habent καθ' ὃν, sub. καιρὸν, sicut Cyril. Alex. de Ador. sp. p. 347. qui et ibi retinet, κατὰ συνείδησιν, una cum Græcis scholiis omnibus, Syro, Vulg. et Arabe. Millio tamen judice, Prol. p. 102. col. 2. "καθ' ἣν omnino recte," et p. 124. col. 2. "κατὰ συνείδησιν accessit aliunde."

V. 10. Δικαιώμασι.] Est lectio illa quam probant omnia Græca scholia, Vulg. Arab.

V. 14. Διὰ πνεύματος αἰωνίου.] Vulg. Chrysost. Cyril. Al. de R. fide p. 73. legunt ἁγίου: Syr. Arab. C. Alex. Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. Athanas. Ep. ad Serap. p. 180. Ambros. de sp. san. cap. 8. αἰωνίου.

V. 22. Agnoscunt σχέδον, Vulg. Arab. C. Alex. Græca scholia omnia. Deest tantum in Syro, et Æthiope. "Nec dubito, inquit Millius, quin hæc sit genuina lectio, σχεδὸν insertum erat postea ab aliquo lectore de apostolicæ sententiæ veritate sollicito si placet," Prol. p. 130. col. 1. Vide rationem τοῦ σχέδον in annotatis nostris ad locum.

Cap. x. 1. Οὐδέποτε δύναται.] Sic Chrysost. Vulg. C. Alex. Arab. respectu habito ad vocem νόμος: reliqui autem Græci scholiastæ et Syrus legunt δύνανται, respicientes ad vocem θυσίας: quod verisimilius est, quanquam nulla sit in sensu diversitas.

V. 6. Καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας οὐκ εὐδόκησας.] Sic Græca scholia omnia, quæ satis firmant hanc lectionem.

V. 9. Retinent ὁ Θεὸς, C. Alex. Græci, cæterique interpretes omnes, si Æthiopem excipias: sed Proleg. p. 139. col. 2. " accessit ex v. 7. hujus cap."

V. 11. Καὶ πᾶς μὲν Ἱερεύς.] MSS. Syr. Æthiop. Theodoret. Cyril. Al. de Ador. sp. p. 348. legunt Ἀρχιερεὺς: sed Chrysost. Œcumen. Theophylact. Vulg. et Arab. Ἱερεύς.

V. 29. Ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη.] Desunt hæc in C. Alex. Chrysost. Habent Orig. Hom. 13. in Jer. p. 130. contra Cels. p. 385. Athanas. ad Serap. p. 180. Cyril. Al. de R. fide, p. 74. de Ador. sp. p. 196. Græca scholia, et versiones omnes.

V. 34. Γινώσκοντες ἔχειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς κρείττονα ὕπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς.] Quoniam Clemens Al. 4. MSS. et Vulg. omittunt τὸ ἐν οὐρανοῖς " irrepsisse puto hæc, ait Millius, è margine in contextum," sed retinentur apud Syrum, Arab. Græca scholia omnia, Orig. exhort. ad Martyr. p. 210.: quod si una cum C. Alex. MSS. aliquibus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. et Clem. Al. legendum censeamus ἑαυτοὺς, quis est cui hæc sententia non sit clara et perspicua?

V. 38. Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.] Cl. Al. et Vulg. hic legunt δίκαιός μου: colligit hinc Esthius additum hic olim fuisse pronomen μου post δίκαιος. Eusebius Demonst. Evang. lib. vi. cap. 14. tres affert lectiones, unam sc. editorum; alteram cum μου post δίκαιος, quæ est lectio τῶν LXX. Hab. ii. 4. et Theodoreti, Ep. 122.; tertiam μου post πίστεως, quæ, juxta Millium, est lectio Cypriani ad Quiren. lib. i. §. 5. et lib. iii. §. 42. ubi Cyprian. non citat epistolam ad Hebræos, sed prophetam Habb.: aitque Millius, Prol. p. 89. col. 2. " perperam μου additur post δίκαιος, recte post πίστεως." Sed cum apostolus citet hæc ipsa verba absque μου, Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11., cur sententiam suam hic variârit causa nulla est, præsertim cum lectionem in textu firment omnia Græca scholia.

Cap. xi. 4. Ἀποθανὼν λαλεῖται.] Chrysostom. in textu, Photius, et Œcumenius. Sed λαλεῖ, Chrysost. in Comment. Theodoret. Theophylact. qui diserte ait τίνα τῶν ἀντιγράφων λαλεῖται ἔχουσιν, οὐ καλῶς οἶμαι. Sed hæc est vocum discrepantia sine sensus discrimine; sciebant enim, ait Capellus, λαλεῖσθαι pro λαλεῖν sumi posse: hinc Beza reddit λαλεῖται ' adhuc loquitur.' Et Anglicana versio, yet speaketh.

V. 9. Πίστει παρῴκησεν.] MSS. aliqui habent καὶ παρῴκησεν, omisso πίστει, repugnantibus vero Græcis scholiis et versionibus universis. Sed Proleg. p. 160. col. 1. " vereor ut illud πίστει jam olim irrepserit ex albo libri."

V. 31. Ἔτεκεν.] Omittunt Vulg. Æthiop. Agnoscunt Syr. Arab. Gr. scholia universim.

V. 13. Καὶ πεισθέντες.] Hoc licet in se certum fuerit, et teste Erasmo, in Cod. Gr. inventum, textui additum esse probant Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, sed sine textus præjudicio; quod enim fide videbant et salutabant, de eo certe persuasi fuerint, necesse est.

V. 23. Versum inter hunc et sequentem, à Latinis quibusdam interjectum (sc. ' fide magnus factus Moses occidit Ægyptium, considerans dolorem fratrum suorum'.) Nulla agnoscunt Græca scholia, versiones nullæ. Sed Proleg. p. 49. col. 2. " Vix est quam ut cum Zegero, sententiam ipsius apostoli fuisse, lapsa ab initio fere è codicibus."

V. 29. Κατεπόθησαν.] Sic C. Alex. Œcumen. et Theophylact.: κατεποντίσθησαν alii, eodem sensu: καταπίνω enim, teste Grotio, pluribus in locis valet, et vertitur καταποντίζω.

V. 40. Προβλεψαμένου.] Ita C. Alex. Orig. in Matt. p. 405. Gr. scholia omnia: quod vero apud Clem. Al. p. 515. d. οὗτοι, v. 39. et προειδομένου legitur, nullius momenti est; omittit enim ibi ἐπρίσθησαν, v. 37. addit de suo v. 39. post ἐπαγγελίαν, τοῦ Θεοῦ, post προειδομένου, ἀγαθὸς γὰρ ἦν, et cap. xii. v. 1. post νέφος, ἅγιον καὶ διειδὲς: " est tamen Clemens ille (Millii judicio, Proleg. p. 60. col. 2.) in adducendis N. T. locis castus, rarò quidpiam ingerens, seu etiam prætermittens:" quod quidem falsissimum esse multis indiciis libro primo probavimus.

Cap. xii. 10. Addunt hic Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. ἡμᾶς: sed non agnoscunt Gr. scholia, nec Arabs: Vulg. et Æthiop. legunt τὸν Θεὸν, sed Gr. scholia, Syr. et Arabs, τὸν Κύριον cum textu.

V. 15. Ἐνοχλῇ.] Ita MSS. Cod. summo consensu; hic Millius, ita etiam Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Clem. Alex. Stro. iv. p. 525. Cyril. Hieros. p. 2. Vulg. Syr. Arab. sed, dicente Millio, " hic vetustissimo certe, et ab ipsis rei Christianæ primordiis inolito errore vera lectio est apud LXX. interpretes. Deut. xxix. 18. ἐν χολῇ." Hi tamen ibi habent ἔστιν, et καὶ πικρίᾳ, quæ verba apostolus hic omittit.

V. 20. Ἡ βολίδι κατατοξευθήσεται.] Cum desint hæc verba in MSS. plurimis, Græcis scholiastis, excepto Œcumenio, versionibusque cunctis, probabile est ea addita fuisse ex Exod. xix. 13. à quodam, qui extra culpam se esse arbitrabatur, licet expleverit quod, loco è S. Scriptura desumpto, defuit.

V. 28. Ἔχωμεν, λατρεύωμεν.] Sic legunt omnia Græca scholia, et C. Alex. ἔχωμεν, unde constat quod apostolus non hic laudet Hebræos, sed moneat, et terreat, cui voci optime respondet λατρεύωμεν, licet Arabs et Theophylactus legant λατρέυομεν, repugnantibus cæteris interpretibus: sed Prol. p. 71. " indicativè ἔσχομεν, et λατρεύομεν recte."

Cap. xiii. 9. Μὴ περιφέρεσθε.] V. l. MSS. aliqui, Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. legunt παραφέρεσθε· utrumque vocabulum satis quadrat, inquit Erasmus.

V. 10. Οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν.] Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes habent ἐξουσίαν. Sed tamen " Cod. Clar. Ger. Cod. Al. teste Esthio, omittunt ἐξουσίαν, omnino recte; in cæteris plerisque omnibus accessit explicationis gratia," Proleg. p. 135. col. 2.

V. 20. Ἐκ νεκρῶν.] V. l. ἐκ τῆς γῆς. Chrysost. Cyril. Hier. Catech. 14. p. 152. Didymus Lat.: reliqui autem interpretes, et C. Alex. editis congruunt. Cyril. citat Isa. xl. 11. et Chrysost. ait παρὰ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τοῦτο εἴρηται. Vide Prol. p. 73.

V. 21. Ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ.] Sic Græci omnes, et interpretes orientales; Vulg. solus ' in omni bono,' unde Millius, Prol. p. 135. col. 2. " medium ἔργῳ irrepsit ex 2 Thess. ii. 17."

SECTIO DECIMA QUARTA.

DE VARIIS LECTIONIBUS EPISTOLÆ AD JACOBUM.

CAP. i. 3. Desunt in Barb. 1. τῆς πίστεως, habent autem Œcumenius, C. Alex. et versiones omnes: " nihilominus, dicente Millio, Prol. p. 49. col. 2. lectioni huic simplici (sc. absque τῆς πίστεως) favet v. 12." Inspice quæso, lector, locum, ut scias viri acumen, et nasum criticum.

V. 19. Ὥστε ἀδελφοί μου.] Vulg. Beda, August. ἴστε, ' scitis fratres mei.' Sed Syr. et Œcumenius, legunt cum textu; ἴστε, inquit Erasmus, in Gr. codicibus non reperio: huic loco non admodum congruit juxta Esthium. Hic tamen Millius Vulgati in gratiam, " qui sensum apostoli non cupiebant, rem expedisse putabant mutando ἴστε in ὥστε," Prol. p. 145. col. 1.

V. 25. Οὗτος οὐκ ἀκροατὴς ἐπιλησμονῆς γενόμενος ——— οὗτος μακάριος.] Deest hic οὗτος primus apud Vulg. et Syr. 2dus apud Cant. ob pleonasmum Hebraicum non intellectum. Sunt autem in Arabe, et Œcumenio, estque, dicente Grotio, pulchra ἀναφορὰ in pronomine οὗτος: et, tamen Prol. p. 129. col. 1. " οὗτος primum insertum puto ex posteriori parte versiculi hujus."

V. 26. Εἴ τις δοκεῖ θρῆσκος εἶναι ἐν ὑμῖν.] " Duo MSS. legunt, θρησκὸς nescio an rectius" Millius. Œcumenius autem θρῆσκος quod etiam agnoscunt Hesychius et Budæus: " ἐν ὑμῖν quod deest Vulg. Syr. merito videtur adjectum," ita Millius hic, et Proleg. p. 123. col. 1.: est tamen in Œcumenio, et, teste Erasmo, in Græcis.

Cap. ii. 24. Ὁρᾶτε τοίνυν.] Vulg. et Syr. ' vides,' omittentes τοίνυν, et mutantes numerum verbi: cum textu legunt Œcumenius, et Arab.; et conclusio ab exemplo Abrahami ducta postulare videtur τοίνυν, ' igitur.'———

Cap. iii. 3. Ἰδού.] V. l. Œcumenius, et Vulg. εἰ δὲ, ' si autem,' Cod.

MSS. quidam ἰδέ. Syr. autem ecce, et ἰδοὺ subsequens, v. 4, 5. lectionem textus adstruit.

V. 5. Ὀλίγον πῦρ.] V. l. Alex. Vulg. Œcumen. ἡλίκον πῦρ. Sed versiones orientales omnes textum sequuntur, et similitudo ducta à nave quæ circumfertur ὑπὸ ἐλαχίστου πεδαλίου, et μικρὸν μέλος, quod hic de lingua dicitur, et Hebraicum Adagium à Ben Syra ad hunc modum allatum, 'ut parvus ignis magnum rogum conficit, ita mundum nihil æque vastat ac lingua,' lectionem textus firmare videantur. Vid. Floril. Hebr. voce lingua.

Cap. iv. 4. Μοιχοὶ καὶ μοιχαλίδες.] Ita Œcumenius, C. Alex. Arab.: sed Vulg. et Syr. omittunt καὶ μοιχαλίδες, et "sic absque dubio apostolus," Mill. p. 49. col. 2. sequitur ἔχθρα inimicitia, sit Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. Sed Vulg. et Beda legunt ἐχθρὰ inimica: vide Rom. viii. 7.

V. 12. Εἷς ἐστιν ὁ νομοθέτης.] Addunt καὶ κριτὴς, MSS. quidam, Vulg. Syr. Cyril. Alex. de R. fide, p. 57. sed juxta Esthium, et Erasmum, illud non agnoscunt Græca exemplaria; "irrepsit è margine" Mill. p. 145. Non agnoscit Œcumenius.

V. 17. Deest ποιεῖν in Syr. sed habent Œcumenius, Vulg. C. Alex. Arab. Æthiop.: at "accessit forsan è margine," Proleg. p. 164. col. 1.

Cap. v. 5. Ὡς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς.] Desunt hæc Æthiop. Agnoscunt Œcumenius, Cl. Al. Vulg. Syr. Arab. dicente tamen Millio, "commentarius est, non textus," Prol. p. 124. col. 2.

V. 7. Ἕως ἂν λάβῃ ὑετὸν πρώϊμον καὶ ὄψιμον.] Ita Œcumenius, C. Alex. versiones orientales omnes. D. ὑετὸν apud Vulg. solum, "omnino recte," Millius: enrationem plane commentitiam; "πρώϊμον καὶ ὄψιμον in S. Scripturis etiam de fructu terræ dicitur; id in hoc loco lector quispiam hoc ignorans, ne sententia laboraret, adjecit ὑετὸν," Proleg. p. 123. col. 2. Locum Scripturæ postulo. Adducit hic Mill. Deut. xi. 14. Jer. v. 24. Os. vi. 3. Joel ii. 23. Zech. x. 1. in quibus omnibus de pluvia matutina et serotina disertim sit mentio. Ad textum hunc provocando petit id quod probandum est; contrarium potius suadet hic locus, nempe fructus terræ messemque à pluvia matutina et serotina pendere, Deut. xi. 14. Jer. v. 25. adeoque agricolam hanc pluviam patienter expectare, ut fructus terræ colligat:—sed aliquid dicendum erat in gratiam Vulg.

V. 20. Σώσει ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ.] Vulg. Syr. Arab. Cyril. Al. de R. fide, p. 63. Sed 'αὐτοῦ occurrit in paucis exemplaribus,' inquit Esthius, neque vera lectio est, plurimi enim ad aliorum salutem multum conferunt, qui ipsi nequaquam salutem obtinebunt.

SECTIO DECIMA QUINTA.

DE LECTIONIBUS VARIANTIBUS IN EP. PRIMA D. PETRI.

CAP. i. 8. Ὃν οὐκ εἰδότες.] V. l. ἰδόντες, quod etiamsi verbo discrepet, re tamen idem est; sed in citando Polycarpo labitur hic Millius, non enim ait Polycarpus ὃν οὐκ ἰδόντες ἀγαπᾶτε, sed εἰς ὃν οὐκ ἰδόντες (text. ὁρῶντες) πιστεύετε, lectionis varietate facta in voce ὁρῶντες, in vocem εἰδότες. Nota insuper quod non modo Œcumen. C. Alex. sed Clem. Al. Stro. iv. p. 575. per totum hoc comma editis congruant.

V. 16. Ἅγιοι γένεσθε.] Ita Œcum. Syr. Arab. 'Estote.' sed MSS. quidam, Vulg. Clem. Al. Stro. p. 473. LXX interp. Lev. xi. 44. xix. 2. legunt ἔσεσθε levi discrimine, sive enim dicat Deus, sancti estote, vel eritis, utraque lectio mandati vim habet. Vide præcipue Orig. Ho. 11. in Num. f. 111. C. D.

V. 22. Διὰ πνεύματος.] Desunt in 3 MSS. Vulg. Syr. Hieron.: sed reperias in Œcumenio, Arab. et, teste Erasmo, in Græcis. Sequitur εἰς φιλαδελφίαν ἀνυπόκριτον, ita C. Alex. Œcumenius, versiones orientales omnes. Sed desunt in Vulg. et idcirco "commentarius est." Prol. p. 49. et 124. col. 2.

V. 24. Πᾶσα δόξα ἀνθρώπου.] Syr. Vulg. et (ait ille) Orig. legunt αὐτῆς, unde "ἀνθρώπου pro αὐτῆς est explicatio marginalis," Proleg. p. 123. col. 2. sed Œcum. Arab. et versio τῶν LXX. Isa. xl. 7. ab excusis non discedunt.

Cap. ii. 5. Πνευματικὰς θυσίας.] Sic Œcumen. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. nec ulla hic varians lectio: at Proleg. p. 130. col. 1. ex fide Syri, ait Millius, "πνευματικὰς, quod est in Græcis omnibus nostris, è margine omnino videtur irrepsisse."

V. 7. Λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν γωνίας.] Quanquam agnoscunt hæc verba Vulg. C. Alex. Œcumenius textu et commentario, Grotio tamen adstipulatur Millius, atque ait "traducta sunt huc ex Matt. xxi. 42." Consule Œcumenium in locum, en ergo Œcumenii verba, ἔσται οὖν ὅλον οὕτως ἰδοὺ τίθημι ἐν Σιὼν λίθον ἀκρογωνιαῖον ——— καὶ ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ οὐ μὴ καταισχυνθῇ, ἔντιμον ὑμῖν τοῖς πιστεύουσιν, ἀπωθοῦσι δὲ, λίθον προσκόμματος, ὃν λίθον ἀπεδοκίμασαν μὲν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν τῆς γωνίας· συνάγων μὲν τοὺς πιστεύοντας εἰς αὐτὸν; imo textum ipsum διαῤῥήδην legit cum editis.

V. 18. Ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς σκολιοῖς.] Ita Œcumenius, et C. Alex. sed δυσκόλοις dyscolis. Vulg.: unde "hanc lectionem genuinam esse arbitror, utut è MSS. omnibus libris sit jam extrusum," Prol. p. 49. Reclamantibus Esthio et Erasmo, porro Hesychius et Phavorinus σκόλια interpretantur δυσχερῆ, δύσκολα; sed Mill. pro vulgato stat.

V. 24. Οὗ τῷ μώλωπι αὐτοῦ.] 'Pleonasmus est Hebræis familiaris, ac proinde noster interpres neglexit:' Esthius in locum.

Cap. iii. 5. Αἱ ἐλπίζουσαι ἐπὶ τὸν θεόν.] Omittit hæc Æthiops. Habent Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. Arab. "Suspectum habeo παρεμβλήσεως. Quis talia prætermiserit?" Ita Mill. Proleg. p. 124. col. 1. Respondeo, "turbida versio Æthiopica, ut eam vocat Mill., in qua apparet immanis nonnunquam à litera textus aberratio." Prol. p. 121. col. 1.

V. 7. Εἰς τὸ μὴ ἐκκόπτεσθαι.] V. l. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. legunt ἐγκόπτεσθαι, "quæ videtur vera lectio," ita Millius hic. Sed pace illius dicam, Œcumenius legit ἐκκόπτεσθαι, nec cognitu facile est quid Græcè legerint, Syr. et Arab.; cum enim de junctis precibus habeatur oratio, utrum dicas impediatur, an intercidatur, parvi refert.

V. 15. Αἰτοῦντι ὑμᾶς λόγον περὶ τῆς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐλπίδος.] Orig. contra Cels. lib. vii. p. 339. legit ἡμᾶς et ἡμῖν, sed antiqui omnes interpretes, Basil. tom. i. p. 549. et Chrysost. Ed. Mor. tom. iv. p. 70. editis congruunt.

V. 16. Ὡς κακοποιῶν.] Desunt hæc apud Vulg.: habent Œcumen. C. Alex. versiones orientales omnes: atqui Prol. p. 49. col. 2.: "accedunt hæc commentarii loco, ex cap. ii. 12."

V. 18. Περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἔπαθε.] V. l. ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν ἀπέθανε, absque sensus discrimine; quod autem ἔπαθε, in quo Œcumenius, et Arab. textui conveniunt, sit vera lectio apparet ex illatione facta, cap. iv. 1. Χριστοῦ οὖν παθόντος. Nota etiam quod Orig. in Joh. p. 126. et Œcumen. legunt v. 18. Ζωοποιηθεὶς πνεύματι, et v. 19. τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασιν, et v. 20. ἅπαξ ἐξεδέχεται, ut et Cyril. Alex. de R. fide, p. 20. quorum autoritas contrariarum hic lectionum idonea confutatio est.

Cap. iv. 1. Ὁ παθὼν ἐν σαρκὶ.] Præpositio ἐν quæ deest in 5 MSS. retinetur apud Œcumenium, versionesque omnes: male ergo rejicitur à Grotio, et Millio, Prol. p. 94.

V. 3. Ἀρκετὸς γὰρ ἡμῖν ὁ παρεληλυθὼς χρόνος τοῦ βίου.] Desunt ἡμῖν et τοῦ βίου, Vulg. et Clem. Al. Pæd. lib. iii. cap. 17. p. 258. "injectæ sunt claritatis gratia," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 123. col. 2.: sed Œcumen. legit, et agnoscunt Erasmus et Esthius, hanc esse lectionem Græcorum codicum, eamque lectioni vulgatæ anteponunt.

V. 14. Κατὰ μὲν αὐτοὺς βλασφημεῖται, κατὰ δὲ ὑμᾶς δοξάζεται.] Desunt hæc verba in 4 MSS. Vulg. et Syr. sed extant apud Œcumen. C. Alex. Cyprian. Ep. ad Martyr. Ed. Ox. p. 175.: et tamen Prol. p. 67. col. 2. "injecta videntur ex scholio quopiam."

V. 16. Ἐν τῷ μέρει τούτῳ.] Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τούτῳ, quod si dicas in hac parte, vel eo nomine, idem valet, ac eâ gratiâ.

Cap. v. 2. Ἐπισκοποῦντες.] Ita Œcumenius, C. Alex. interpretes

omnes: sed Proleg. p. 166. col. 1. "Unus obstat codicum consensus, et vix quidem obstat quo minus intermedium ἐπισκοποῦντες marginale scholion ob pleniorem loci explicationem esse censeam."

Οὐκ ἀναγκαστῶς ἀλλ' ἑκουσίως.] Vulg. Hieronym. et MSS. aliqui, addunt κατὰ Θεὸν, sed verba ista non reperiuntur in Œcumenio, Syro, Arabe, nec, teste Erasmo, in codicibus Græcis.

V. 5. Ὑποτασσόμενοι.] Deest Syr.: habent Œcumenius, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop.: quod si Millium auscultes, Proleg. p. 166. col. 1. "Lector quispiam adjecit ὑποτασσόμενοι ad marginem, in sententiæ supplementum, quod irrepsit postea in textum."

SECTIO DECIMA SEXTA.

DE VARIANTIBUS LECTIONIBUS EP. SECUNDÆ D. PETRI.

CAP. i. 3. Διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς.] V. l. ἰδίᾳ δόξῃ καὶ ἀρετῇ, Vulg. Cyril. Al. de Trin. p. 604.: sed Œcum. Syr. Arab. cum textu legunt.

V. 9. Καὶ πλεονάζοντα.] Desunt hæc in unico Æthiop. Agnoscunt Œcum. C. Alex. versiones: "addita tamen sunt à quopiam adnotatore," Prol. p. 125. col. 1.

Cap. ii. 11. Οὐ φέρουσι κατ' αὐτῶν παρὰ Κυρίῳ βλάσφημον κρίσιν.] Desunt παρὰ Κυρίῳ, in Vulg. Syr.: "unde scholion est, non textus" Prol. p. 76. Habent autem Œcum. Arab. et teste Esthio, quidam è vetustioribus codicibus, recte; boni enim, et mali angeli adstant coram Domino, et ab eo mandata recipiunt, Job i. 6. ii. 1.

V. 12. Γεγενημένα.] Agnoscunt hanc vocem Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Cur autem pro additamento habeatur, causa nulla est.

V. 17. Οἷς ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς αἰῶνα τετήρηται.] Desunt εἰς αἰῶνα in Vulg. Syr. Sed habent Œcum. C. Alex. Arab. et Jud. v. 13. "Insertum esse" hariolatur Mill. prol. p. 50. col. 1.

V. 18. Τοὺς ὄντως ἀποφυγόντας.] MSS. quidam, Vulg. Syr. legisse videntur ὀλίγον, vel ὀλίγως, sed Œcum. Arab. et major pars Gr. codicum, teste Esthio, textui assentiuntur.

V. 20. Εἰ γὰρ ἀποφυγόντες.] Οἱ γὰρ 3 MSS. vera lectio, inquit Grotius, ut series sequentium indicat, sed Œcumen. C. Alex. versiones omnes editis congruunt, et, pace Grotii, ipsa apostoli verba.

Cap. iii. 2. Ὑπὸ τῶν ἁγίων προφητῶν.] Medium ἁγίων, quod jam locum habet in codicibus ferè omnibus "initio scholion marginale fuisse suspicor, ex cap. 4. (lib. i.) 21 hujus Ep." Mill. p. 156. col. 2.

Καὶ τῆς τῶν ἀποστόλων ἡμῶν ἐντολῆς τοῦ Κυρίου.] Non video, cur constructio vers. Angl. i. e. τῆς ἐντολῆς ἡμῶν τῶν ἀποστόλων τοῦ Κυρίου, Millio displiceat; quid enim huic loco magis aptum quam certiores facere Judæos, quod qui hæc illis mandata tradiderunt, apostoli fuere Domini nostri et salvatoris. Vide 1 Pet. i. 12.

V. 6. Δι' ὧν.] Arab. legit δι' ὅ, per quam aquam, δι' ὅν August. nempe, λόγον; sed Œcumen. C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. δι' ὧν sc. ὑδάτων per aquas illas quæ ex cœlo et terra provenerant: atque hanc esse veram lectionem liquet, non tantum ex eo quod rei gestæ respondeat, sed etiam ex igne ei opposito, quo mundus demum conflagrabit.

V. 11. Ὡς κλέπτης ἐν νυκτί.] Desunt ἐν νυκτὶ in Vulg. et Syr. sed Œcum. et Arab. retinent hæc verba: et cum adjungantur hæc voci κλέπτης omnibus aliis in locis, in quibus istius Diei fit mentio, viz. Matt. xxiv. 23. Luc. xii. 39. 1 Thess. v. 3., cur hic à se invicem separentur, causa nulla est.

V. 12. Παρουσίαν τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμέρας.] Vulg. Arab. August. τοῦ Κυρίου: Œcum. C. Alex. Syr. Θεοῦ, 'Dei dies eadem quæ Christi,' Grot. in locum.

SECTIO DECIMA SEPTIMA.

QUÆ EST DE VARIANTIBUS LECTIONIBUS IN EPISTOLIS D. JOHANNIS.

1 EP. cap. i. 7. Τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ.] Omittit unicus Æthiops, reclamantibus Œcumenio, C. Alex. et reliquis Græcis Latinisque omnibus: "addititium tamen videtur," Prol. p. 125.

Cap. ii. 5. Αὐτοῦ τὸν λόγον.] 'Verbum ejus,' Vulg.: ex hac autem non dicenda est lectio varians, sed Gr. sermonis vera interpretatio.

V. 7. Ἀδελφοί.] V. l. ἀγαπητοὶ, hæc vocum harum variatio sæpius accidit in scholiis tam Græcis, quam Latinis, ex eo, ni fallor, quod sancti patres in suis homiliis posterius vocabulum priori anteposuerunt ἀπ' ἀρχῆς. Deest hic in Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Sed retinetur apud Arab. et Œcumenium.

V. 18. Καὶ καθὼς ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται.] Deest ὅτι in C. Alex. Æthiop. 'non malè' Grotius: immo male; habent enim Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18. p. 241. Orig. in Matt. p. 402. Œcum. Vulg. Arab.

V. 19. Οὐκ εἰσὶ πάντες ἐξ ἡμῶν.] Deest πάντες in Syr. Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18. habent Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. 'ex memoria videtur allegasse Irenæus:' Grabius in locum.

V. 23. Πᾶς ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν υἱὸν, οὐδὲ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει.] Addunt Cod. MSS. multi, Vulg. Syr. Orig. de Martyr. p. 206. Cyril. lib. ix. in Joh. cap. 40. Cyprian. Hilar. August. hæc verba, καὶ ὁ ὁμολογῶν τὸν υἱὸν, καὶ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει. Hæc autem non agnoscunt Œcumenius, aut Arab. 'In Græcis non reperio,' inquit Erasmus. Et quod huc transferuntur ex Evang. S. Joh. cap. viii. 19. Εἰ ἐμὲ ᾔδειτε, καὶ τὸν πατέρα μου ᾔδειτε ἄν, conjectura colligo, 1mo, Quia Origenes in in Joh. p. 261. citat verba ex Johan. Evangelio jam allata, et deinde hæc verba ex Ep. Cath. et ex utrisque concludit, εἰ γὰρ ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν πατέρα, καὶ τὸν υἱὸν (sup. ἀρνεῖται.) καὶ ὁ ὁμολογῶν τὸν υἱὸν, καὶ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει, δῆλον ὅτι Ἱερωσολυμῖται——ἀρνούμενοι τὸν πατέρα, ἀρνοῦνται τὸν υἱόν. 2do, Quia in his verbis citandis multum à se invicem discrepant patres. De Augustino hoc testatur Millius hic. Hilarius de Trin. lib. vi. p. 124. sic legit, 'qui confitetur filium habet, et patrem.' Cyprianus de exhort. ad Mart. p. 173. et filium et patrem habet: Cyril. Alex. Thess. 301. ante hæc verba addit ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν πατέρα, καὶ τὸν υἱὸν ἀρνεῖται.

Cap. iii. 2. Octo hic variantes lectiones habemus: sed, versionibus prætermissis, Orig. in Matt. p. 476. et Œcumenius impressis congruunt. Nisi quod Origenes omittit δὲ, et Œcumen. legit ὅτι ἐσόμεθα. Sic etiam v. 8—10. licet sex afferantur variæ lectiones, Œcum. et Origen Joh. p. 299. nullibi discedunt, nisi ubi loco ὁ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην, Orig. legit ὁ ὢν δίκαιος, quod idem valet.

V. 14. Ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφόν.] Deest ἀδελφὸν, in Vulg. et 4 MSS.: unde "lectoris est, non apostoli," Mill. Prol. p. 145. col. 2. sed habent Œcum. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Apostolus, cap. ii. 10.

V. 20. Ὅτι ἐὰν———ὅτι μείζων ἐστὶν ὁ Θεός.] Deest ὅτι in 2 MSS. Vulg. Arab.: "ἔτι legi vult Stephan." sic Mill. Sed ὅτι agnoscunt Cod. plurimi: Arab. reddit 'profectò,' quam interpretationem veram esse existimo; Hebraicum enim chi quod primario significat nam et exponitur à LXX. per ὅτι, alio sensu significat certe, et in versione Anglicana exponitur per voces quæ idem valent, surely, certainly: ita Gen. xliii. 10. si non intercessisset dilatio Chi. LXX. ἤδε ἄν 'sane, jam vice altera venissemus.' Ex. iii. 10. Chi. LXX. ὅτι, certò ego ero tecum,' 1 Reg. i. 13. Chi. LXX. ὅτι, 'proculdubio Solomon regnabit post me,' Josh. ii. 24. Chi, LXX. ὅτι, 'profecto tradidit Dominus omnem terram hanc in manus nostras,' ita Psal. lxxvii. 12. cxii. 6. Ex. iv. 25. Num. xxii. 23. Jud. vi. 16. Ruth i. 10. Isa. vii. 9.

Cap. iv. 3. Πᾶν πνεῦμα ὁ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα.] 'Pro istis codices antiqui, inquit Socrates, H. Eccl. lib. vii. cap. 32. habebant ὃ λύει τὸν Ἰησοῦν.' Sed, Millio teste, in hodierna lectione conveniunt exemplaria Græca omnino omnia, ita etiam omnes Græci patres; nam utcunque Millius, Cyril. Al. in contrariam partem adducat, lapsus est in hoc, dum Latinæ interpretationi 'solvit Jesum' nimium credidit; nam Tom. i. p. 397. et de R. fide, p. 8. et 94. Græca Cyrilli cum textu consentiunt. Porro, "non dubito, inquit Mill. quin autographum ipsius Johannis habuerit ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθέναι, sc. ex fide Polycarpi, et Vulg." Prol. p. 33. Sed Cyril. de R. fide, ibid. et Œcumen. legunt ἐληλυθότα: quod si Vulg. habeat 'in carne venisse,' non inde sequitur illius Græca ab hodierna lectione discrepâsse. Siquidem Beza per eadem verba latine reddidit ἐληλυθότα, et cum, ex sententia Millii, citationes Polycarpi, pro more istorum temporum, negligentius sint prolatæ, quidni in hac etiam citatione Polycarpus eadem incuria laborâsse censeatur?

Ver. 3. Καὶ νενικήκατε αὐτούς.] Vulg. Æthiop. et August. αὐτὸν, "omnino recte," Mill. Prol. p. 50. Sed cum textu legunt Œcumen. C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Nec obstat Millii ratio, quod 'de Antichristo loquatur;' sunt enim πολλοὶ ἀντίχριστοι. 2. Sequuntur commate proximo hæc verba in pluralí, αὐτοὶ ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου εἰσὶ, quæ textus lectionem corroborant.

V. 16. Μένει ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν αὐτῷ.] Posterior hujus periodi pars retinetur apud Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. et ver. 15. Sed absque Græcorum unanimi consensu foret crediderim huc traductum ex v. 15. Mill. Prol. p. 130. col. 1.

Cap. v. 10. Ὁ μὴ πιστεύων τῷ Θεῷ.] MSS. aliqui, Vulg. et Arab. τῷ υἱῷ, Rectius, inquit Grotius. Sed Œcumen. et Syrus, textui assentiuntur et sequentia 'quia non crediderit in testimonium quod testificatus est ὁ Θεὸς περὶ τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ,' hanc lectionem firmant. Sed Proleg. p. 125. col. 1. "ὁ Θεὸς quod in nostris omnibus adscriptum est, claritatis gratia à lectore quopiam indeque irrepsit in contextum." Mirum est ineptias hasce placere potuisse viro sano! quis ergo de FILIO SUO testimonium perhibere, nisi ὁ Θεὸς potuit?

V. 12. Ὁ μὴ ἔχων τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Mill. p. 50. col. 1. "τοῦ Θεοῦ repetitum est è superioribus." Vanè iterum. Agnoscunt Œcumen. C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Æthiop.

V. 13. Ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον, καὶ ἵνα πιστεύητε.] C. Alex. sic legit, αἰώνιον οἱ πιστεύοντες εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ. Ita etiam Vulg. Syr. Arab. sic, hæc scripsi vobis, ὁ qui creditis in nomen filii Dei, ut sciatis quod vitam habetis æternam, quam diu creditis in nomen filii Dei.

Ver. 20. Ἐν τῷ υἱῷ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ] Millius l. "Χριστῷ scribarum est, non apostoli; non habet Vulg." Prol. p. 72. col. 1. quod ei certum est indicium παρεμβλήσεως. Habent nihilominus Œcum, Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Cyril. Al. de Tr. p. 484.

Cap. ii. 8. Ἵνα μὴ ἀπολέσωμεν ἃ ἐργασάμεθα——ἀπολάβωμεν'] Sic Arab. et Œcumenius, qui alterius cujuspiam lectionis nullam facit mentionem, nisi quod in commentario mutat personam, ut verba ejus melius cohæreant cum præcedentibus. Sed Vulg. Syr. Iren. lat. p. 242. et C. Alex. legunt ἀπολέσητε, ἐργάσησθε, ἀπολάβητε, nullo sensûs discrimine.

Cap. iii. 7. Ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ὀνόματος.] Omittunt pronomen αὐτοῦ Œcum. et MSS. quidam. Sed agnoscunt illud versiones antiquæ omnes.

SECTIO ULTIMA.

DE JUDÆ CATHOLICA EPISTOLA.

V. 1. Ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ ἡγιασμένοις.] V. l. ἠγαπημένοις, Orig. in Matt. p. 332. Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. sine magno discrimine, sanctificatos enim solos Deus diligit.

V. 6. Ὑπὸ ζόφον τετήρηκεν.] Clem. Al. pæd. lib. iii. cap. 8. p. 239. post ζόφον addit ἀγρίων ἀγγέλων, reclamantibus MSS. versionibus, et patribus. Lucifer Calaritanus, teste Millio, legit ἁγίων.

V. 14. Ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει.] Sic Œcumenius et versiones omnes.

V. 25. Μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ.] Ita Œcumenius, Syr. Desunt in Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. "irrepserunt ut videtur ex Rom. xvi. 27." vide hic annotata in 1 Tim. i. 17. Prol. p. 94. col. 2.

LIBER TERTIUS.

§. 1. Continet specimen variantium lectionum parvi momenti, putà additionem aut subtractionem articuli. §. 2. Permutationem nominis unius pro altero ejusdem significationis, vel pronominis relativi in nomen substantivum, vel vocum Θεοῦ, Χριστοῦ. §. 3. Adjectivorum permutationem, sine sensûs discrimine. §. 4. Pronominum ἡμεῖς, ἡμῶν, ἡμῖν, ἡμᾶς, in ὑμεῖς, ὑμῶν, ὑμῖν, ὑμᾶς, permutationem, et defectus eorundem, ubi, si revera deessent, sunt necessariò intelligenda; pronominis etiam αὐτὸς defectum, vel additamentum, ubi est intellectu necessarium; mutationem denique pronominis αὐτὸς in οὗτος, et αὐτὸς cum aspirato in ἑαυτὸς. §. 5. Verborum, et præpositionis verbi mutationem sine sensûs discrimine, item verbi simplicis in compositum, et vice versâ mutationem etiam personæ, numeri, temporis, modi, conjugationis, vocis. §. 6. Participiorum ejusdem sensûs invicem permutationem, simplicis pro composito, et eorundem tempore discrepantium sine sensûs discrimine. §. 7. Adverbiorum defectum ubi sunt plane necessaria, aut permutationem, sensu non variato. §. 8. Præpositionum permutationem. §. 9. Conjunctionum mutationem, et defectum. §. 10. Porro multa quæ inter lectiones variantes N. Test. recensentur, sunt tantum patrum citationes ex versione τῶν LXX. §. 11. Multa etiam quæ in alio evangelio, aliave epistola verbis diversis exprimuntur, variantem lectionem constituunt. §. 12. Objectionibus Romanensium, et scepticorum contra textus Græci αὐθεντίαν respondetur.

LIBRI TERTII SECTIO PRIMA.

ACCEDO jam ad ultimum, longéque facillimum laboris nostri pensum; nempe ad reducendum sub propriis quibusdam capitibus lectiones variantes parvi momenti. Ut ex instantiis paucis sub capite quolibet assignaris, lector intelligat, quam operosè nihil egisse videatur Millius in hisce minutiis, quæ sensum verborum neutiquam afficiunt, coacervandis. Hæc quidem omnia sigillatim enumerare idem penè esset ac Millii varias lectiones transcribere; breviter ergo quædam carpendo, lectori reliqua relinquo ex ingenti hoc penu colligenda. Et,

1. Plus centum ex variis hisce lectionibus id tantum monent articulum quendam deesse, vel superaddi, quo tamen addito, idem adhuc manet sensus, eandemque versionem verba exigunt.

Ab additione articuli incipio, ita Matt. i. 17. ἕως Δαβίδ, v. l. τοῦ Δαβίδ. Rom. xiv. 7. Θεοῦ, v. l. τοῦ Θεοῦ, 1 Cor. vii. 34. Σώματι, καὶ πνεύματι, v. l. τῷ σώματι, καὶ τῷ πνεύματι, 1 Cor. xi. 3. κεφαλὴ δὲ Χριστοῦ, v. l. τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ita etiam cap. xv. 24. 1 Cor. xi. 23. ἄρτον, v. l. τὸν ἄρτον. V. 27. αἵματος, v. l. τοῦ αἵματος. 1 Cor. xii. 21. ὀφθαλμὸς, v. l. ὁ ὀφθαλμὸς.

2. Sæpius indicat varia lectio articulum deesse in codice, aut Patre quodam, v. g. Matt. xxv. 2. quinque autem ex iis erant prudentes, καὶ αἱ πέντε μωραὶ, v. l. d. αἱ, Chrysost. Basil. MSS. (in Basilio tamen falli Millium, vide tom. ii. p. 425.) Marc. v. 13. ἡ ἀγέλη, v. l. deest ἡ in Pers. Syr. (Habet vero Syrus ille Grex. Matt. iv. 21. τὰ δίκτυα, v. l. deest τὰ. Luc. vi. 45. ἐκ τοῦ περισσεύματος τῆς καρδίας, v. l. desunt τοῦ et τῆς. Act. v. 24. ὁ τε ἱερεὺς deest ὁ. Rom. iv. 4. κατὰ τὸ ὀφείλημα, deest τὸ. Rom. xiii. 2. ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, deest τοῦ. Rom. xiv. 15. τὰ ἔθνη, deest τὰ, 1 Cor. iii. 11. ὁ Χριστὸς, deest ὁ. V. 19. παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, deest τῷ. Cap. iv. 15. ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, deest τοῦ, vii. 24. παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, deest τῷ. 1 Thess. iv. 1. τὸ λοιπὸν, deest τὸ. Jud. 13. εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα deest τὸν, Œcumen.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

DE NOMINIBUS.

PLUS centies varia lectio exhibet tantum mutationem nominis unius substantivi pro altero ejusdem significationis, eandemque versionem in alias linguas postulante. Ita Matt. ii. 11. τὸ παιδίον, v. l. τὸν παῖδα, et similiter, v. 13, 14. v. 16. πάντας τοὺς παῖδας, v. l. πάντα τὰ παιδία. Marc. v. 2. mansit dæmoniacus ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, v. l. ἐν τοῖς μνήμασι, in monumentis. Matt. xi. 16. παιδαρίοις, v. l. παιδίοις. Luc. xiv. 16. Beatus est ὃς φάγεται ἄρτον, v. l. ἄριστον, idem nempe in Scripturis valet edere panem, et prandere. Vide Gen. xxxi. 54. xxxvii. 25. xliii. 15. Exod. ii. 20. 1 Sam. ix. 7. 10. Act. xv. 2. συζητήσεως, v. l. ἐπιζητήσεως. Rom. i. 27. ἄῤῥενες, v. l. ἄρσενες. Rom. ix. 27. κατάλειμμα, v. l. ἐγκατάλειμμα, ὑποκατάλειμμα.

1 Cor. i. 13. ἔλλησι, v. l. ἔθνεσι, 2 Cor. iii. 3. πλαξὶ, v. l. πλαγξί. 2 Cor. viii. 2. τὸν πλοῦτον, v. l. τὸ πλοῦτος, quod sæpius occurrit.

2. Discrepant aliquoties, casu tantum. Joh. i. 42. 'invenimus Messiam, quod est interpretatum ὁ Χριστὸς,' v. l. τὸν Χριστὸν. Act. xix. 35. τίς γάρ ἐστιν ἄνθρωπος, v. l. τῶν ἀνθρώπων. 2 Cor. ii. 12. εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, v. l. διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Cap. iii. 13. ἐπὶ τὸ πρόσωπον, v. l. τοῦ προσώπου, τῷ προσώπῳ. Cap. iv. 16. ἡμέρᾳ, καὶ ἡμέρᾳ, v. l. ἡμέραν, καθ' ἡμέραν. vi. 14. τίς ἡ κοινωνία φωτὶ, v. l. φωτός. viii. 2. κατὰ βάθους, v. l. βάθος.

3. Aliquoties discrepant numero, Joh. ii. 15. 'et cum fecisset flagellum ἐκ σχοινίων,' v. l. σχοινίου, Luc. xiii. 8. καὶ βάλω κοπρίαν, v. l. κόπρια: v. 15. ἀπεκρίθη αὐτῷ ὑποκριτὰ, nempe archisynagogæ, v. l. ὑποκριταί. 2 Cor. i. 10. τηλικούτου θανάτου, v. l. τηλικούτων θανάτων. Cap. iii. 7. ἐν γράμμασι, v. l. γράμματι. iv. 10. σώματι, v. l. σώμασι. vi. 15. μετ' ἀπίστου, v. l. μετ' ἀπίστων, et πρὸς ἄπιστον. ix. 6. ἐπ' εὐλογίαις, v. l. εὐλογίᾳ, ἐξ εὐλογίας.

4. Plus centies mutatur pronomen relativum in nomen substantivum, aut in ipsam personam, et vice versa. Ita angelus domini apparuit in somno αὐτῷ. Matt. i. 20. v. l. τῷ Ἰωσήφ. Ita enim cap. ii. 14. Marc. i. 16. ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, v. l. Σίμωνος. Joh. x. 38. ὅτι ἐν ἐμοὶ πατὴρ, κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ, v. l. ἐν τῷ πατρί. 1 Cor. i. 29. Ut non glorietur omnis caro ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ, v. l. τοῦ Θεοῦ. Cap. vii. 13. μὴ ἀφιέτω αὐτὸν, v. l. τὸν ἄνδρα.

Vice versa Matt. viii. 5. Εἰσελθόντι δὲ τῷ Ἰησοῦ, v. l. αὐτῷ. Luc. ii. 21. περιτεμεῖν τὸ παιδίον, v. l. αὐτόν. Joh. iii. 2. Hic venit πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν, v. l. πρὸς αὐτόν. Act. xii. 13. κρούσαντος δὲ Πέτρου, v. l. αὐτοῦ. Cap. xx. 7. συνηγμένων τῶν Μαθητῶν, v. l. αὐτῶν. cap. xxii. 16. τὸ ὄνομα Κυρίου, v. l. αὐτοῦ. Rom. i. 25. τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. αὐτοῦ. 2 Cor. v. 7. τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. αὐτοῦ.

Sexcenties permutantur vocabula Θεοῦ, Κυρίου, Χριστοῦ, quoniam, notante P. Simonio, contractim in antiquis MSS. scripta inveniuntur ad hunc modum, Θοῦ, Κρῦ, Χοῦ. Exempli gratia, Act. xvi. 10. ὁ Κύριος, v. l. ὁ Θεός. Act. xxi. 20. ἐδόξασαν τὸν Κύριον, v. l. Θεόν. Rom. i. 4. τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, v. l. τοῦ Θεοῦ. Cap. x. 13. Κυρίου, v. l. Θεοῦ. Rom. xi. 34. 1 Cor. iii. 5. 10. vi. 13.

Et vice versa Θεὸς, v. l. Κύριος. Rom. vii. 22. viii. 8. xiv. 6. 11. εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ, v. l. Κυρίου. Ita 1 Cor. xi. 21. Denique Κύριος Var. Lect. Χριστός. Rom. xiv. 14. ἐν Κυρίῳ, v. l. Χριστῷ. 1 Cor. iii. 5. ὡς ὁ Κύριος, v. l. Χριστός. Cap. vii. 12. xii. 19. et passim.

2. Θεός. Rom. x. 17. Διὰ ῥήματος Θεοῦ, v. l. Χριστοῦ, xv. 32. διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, v. l. Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. 1 Cor. i. 18. Δύναμις Θεοῦ, v. l. Χριστοῦ. ii. 1. μαρτύριον Θεοῦ, v. l. Χριστοῦ. iv. 1. Μυστήριον Θεοῦ, v. l. Χριστοῦ. vii. 40. πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, v. l. Χριστοῦ. Aliquando Κύριος. Rom. vii. 22. Τῷ νόμῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. Κυρίου.

3. Χριστός. Rom. viii. 9. Πνεῦμα Χριστου, v. l. Θεοῦ. v. 35. τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ, v. l. Θεοῦ. cap. xiv. 18. δουλεύων τῷ Χριστῷ, v. l. Θεῷ Κυρίῳ, cap. xvi. 26. ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, v. l. Θεοῦ. 1 Cor. i. 6. μαρτύριον Χριστοῦ, v. l. Θεοῦ. 2 Cor. xii. 9. δύναμις τοῦ Χριστοῦ, v. l. Θεοῦ: sæpe Κύριος. Rom. viii. 11. ὁ ἐγείρας τὸν Χριστὸν, v. l. τὸν Κύριον. xvi. 9. ἐν Χριστῷ, v. l. ἐν Κυρίῳ. Ita 1 Cor. ii. 16. x. 16.

Nec rarius inveniatur horum vocabulorum Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, Κυρίου ἡμῶν omissio, cum enim de eadem persona dicta essent, uno eorum posito, reliqua superflua videbantur. 2. Additio, utpote quæ alibi simul occurrebant; vel permutatio, utpote quibus mutatis persona adhuc eadem intelligebatur. 1. Omissio sive defectus, v. g. Matt. xvi. 20. αὐτός ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστὸς, v. l. d. Ἰησοῦς. Act. xix. 10. τὸν λόγον Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, d. Ἰησοῦ. 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, d. Ἰησοῦς. 1 Cor. i. 2. Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, d. Χριστοῦ, cap. v. 4. ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, d. Χριστοῦ. 2 Cor. i. 2. ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. d. Domini nostri Jesu Christi, Ambrosiast.

Additio Act. xxiv. 24. Περὶ τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν πίστεως, v. l. εἰς Ἰησοῦν, Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. 1 Cor. i. 24. κηρύσσομεν Χριστὸν, v. l. Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν. cap. iv. 17. τὰς ὁδούς μου, τὰς ἐν Χριστῷ, v. l. ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. Post Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, addunt Χριστὸν. Rom. x. 9. 1 Cor. vi. 11. ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, v. l. Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. xii. 3. Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, v. l. Dominum Jesum Christum. Ad Jesum Christum addunt Κύριον ἡμῶν. Rom. ii. 16. Διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, v. l. τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

Denique sexcenties, Millio judice, ex evangeliis tollenda est vox Ἰησοῦς, cum sit vox plane necessaria, et nominandi casum supplere debeat. Matt. iv. 18. περιπατῶν δὲ Ἰησοῦς, deest Ἰησοῦς, cap. viii. 3. ἥψατο αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦς, d. Ἰησοῦς. Marc. i. 17. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ Ἰησοῦς, d. Ἰησοῦς. Cap. viii. 1. Προσκαλεσάμενος ὁ Ἰησοῦς τοὺς Μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, d. Ἰησοῦς, et αὐτοῦ. Vide Matt. xiii. 36. xiv. 14. xv. 16. Marc. xi. 11. 14. xii. 41. Luc. vii. 22. ix. 16. xiii. 2. Johan. i. 44. iv. 46. v. 1. vi. 14. 70.

SECTIO TERTIA.

DE ADJECTIVIS.

ADJECTIVA sæpius permutantur, sine ulla mutatione sensûs. Exempli gratia, Matt. vi. 25. πλεῖον, v. l. πλείων, ut conveniat genere cum ψυχή. Cap. ix. 17. ἀμφότερα, v. l. ἀμφότεροι, nempe ἀσκοὶ καὶ οἶνος. Cap. x. 32. τῶν μικρῶν τούτων, v. l. τῶν ἐλαχίστων. Cap. xi. 29. πρᾶος, v. l. πραΰς. Marc. v. 40. ἅπαντας, v. l. πάντας. Ita etiam Luc. vii. 16. Luc. xix. 7. ἅπαντες, v. l. πάντες. Cap. xxi. 3. πάντων, v. l. ἁπάντων. Vide etiam v. 12. Act. xxii. 12. ἀνὴρ εὐσεβὴς, v. l. εὐλαβής.

SECTIO QUARTA.

DE PRONOMINIBUS.

NOTANDUM primo de pronominibus primitivis ἡμεῖς, ἡμῶν, ἡμῖν, ἡμᾶς, ea sexcenties mutari in ὑμεῖς, ὑμῶν, ὑμῖν, ὑμᾶς, et vice versa,—librariorum, inquit P. Simonius, sive vitio, sive incuria. Hoc autem fere continuo accidit, sensu haud alicubi mutato: cum enim de re omnibus communi sive Christianis, sive Ethnicis agitur, vix aliquod discrimen intercedit inter nos Christianos, et vos Christianos, vos gentiles, et nos de gentibus: Exempli gratia, Luc. xii. 32: 'Nolite timere, pusillus grex; quia complacuit patri vestro δοῦναι ὑμῖν τὴν βασιλείαν,' v. l. ἡμῖν, i. e. nobis qui sumus, aut vobis qui estis, de hoc pusillo grege.—Act. iii. 25. 'vos estis filii prophetarum, et testamenti quod disposuit Deus, πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας ὑμῶν,' v. l. ἡμῶν, ubi Judæus Judæos alloquitur. Sic v. 23. ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῶν, v. l. ἡμῶν. Cap. xiv. 17. 'implens cibo, et lætitiâ τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν,' v. l. ὑμῶν, nimirum omnibus dat cibum.—Et rursus eodem commate, cap. xv. 7. ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν ἐξελέξατο, v. l. ὑμῖν, i. e. in vobis, aut nobis apostolis.—cap. xvi. 17. isti homines καταγγέλλουσιν ἡμῖν viam salutis, v. l. ὑμῖν, i. e. vobis aut nobis apud Philippos agentibus.—cap. xxviii. 25. Bene locutus est Spiritus sanctus πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας ἡμῶν, v. l. ὑμῶν. Ita Paulus Judæus Judæis.—1 Pet. i. 4. εἰς ἡμᾶς, v. l. ὑμᾶς, et v. 12. ἡμῖν, v. l. ὑμῖν, i. e. nobis, aut vobis Christianis:—plura exempla dabunt annotata libro 2do passim.

Porro deficiunt juxta varias lectiones hæc pronomina, ubi si revera abfuissent, necessariò intelligenda essent. Ita v. g. ἀφίεται ὑμῖν, 'reliquitur vobis domus vestra deserta,' v. l. d. ὑμῖν. Iis tamen solis relinqui potuit hæc domus desolata. Luc. vi. 25. οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, 'væ vobis qui saturati estis,' v. l. deest ὑμῖν. Malè proculdubio, eo enim desiderato sensus deficit. Joh. iii. 12. ἐὰν εἴπω ὑμῖν τὰ ἐπουράνια, v. l. deest ὑμῖν. Quis autem non videt pronomen ibi prorsus necessarium esse. Joh. xvi. 4. ὅτι ἐγὼ εἶπον ὑμῖν ταῦτα, deest ὑμῖν. Male: præcedunt enim ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν. Luc. xii. 22. μὴ μεριμνᾶτε τῇ ψυχῇ ὑμῶν, v. l. d. ὑμῶν.

Adduntur insuper, ubi sunt plane superflua.—Ita Luc. xxiii. 2. 'invenimus hunc hominem διαστρέφοντα τὸ ἔθνος.' add. v. l. ἡμῶν, nec enim de alia natione loqui potuerunt. Joh. viii. 5. ἐν τῷ νόμῳ, add. v. l. ἡμῶν: non enim de alia lege loqui potuissent scribæ et pharisæi.—Act. xxvi. 6. πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας, v. l. ἡμῶν.

2do. Pronomen relativum αὐτὸς in his variis lectionibus sæpe deesse dicitur, cum planè necessarium sit. Ex. gr. Matt. vi. 4. Pater meus videns in occulto αὐτὸς ἀποδώσει σοι, d. αὐτὸς. Cap. viii. 21. ἕτερος δὲ τῶν Μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, v. l. d. αὐτοῦ. Cap. xii. 3. ὅτι ἐπείνασεν αὐτὸς, v. l. d. αὐτὸς.—Matt. xviii. 32. προσκαλεσάμενος αὐτὸν ὁ Κύριος αὐτοῦ, λέγει αὐτῷ, d. αὐτὸν et αὐτῷ.—V. 34. πᾶν τὸ ὀφειλόμενον αὐτῷ. d. αὐτῷ.—Luc. xiv. 16. ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, v. l. d. αὐτῷ.—xv. 26. τὸν παῖδα αὐτοῦ, deest αὐτοῦ.—xvii. 9. τὰ διαταχθέντα αὐτῷ, d. αὐτῷ.—xxii. 57. ὁ δὲ ἠρνήσατο αὐτὸν, deest αὐτὸν :—ita sexcenties.

Sæpe etiam in variis hisce lectionibus adjicitur, ubi est pariter intellectu necessarium. Luc. xviii. 1. ἔλεγε δὲ καὶ παραβολὴν αὐτοῖς παρὰ τὸ δεῖν πάντοτε (v. l. add. αὐτοὺς) προσεύχεσθαι, quod tamen satis comprehenditur in αὐτοῖς.—c. xxiii. 35. ἐξεμυκτήρισαν, v. l. αὐτόν.—Joh. iv. 17. ἡ γυνὴ εἶπεν, v. l. add. αὐτῷ.—xi. 8. λέγουσιν αὐτῷ οἱ Μαθηταὶ, v. l. add. αὐτοῦ.—Et v. 12. εἶπον οὖν, v. l. add. αὐτῷ, οἱ Μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ.—Act. ii. 40. παρεκάλει. add. αὐτούς.—Marc. ii. 8. ἐπιγνοὺς Ἰησοῦς ὅτι οὕτως διελογίζοντο ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, v. l. ὅτι αὐτοὶ οὕτως.

Idem obtinet in pronominibus possessivis : ita Matt. xx. 21. εἷς ἐκ δεξιῶν σου, καὶ εἷς ἐξ εὐωνύμων MSS. xxv. add. σου.—Mar. x. 37. εὐωνύμων σου. d. σου.—v. 40. εὐωνύμων μου, d. μου.—Matt. xv. 4. τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου, v. l. d. σου.—Marc. vii. 10. καὶ τὴν μητέρα σου, v. l. d. σου.—Vid. Joh. xiv. 12. xvi. 10. xviii. 11. Act. xx. 23, 24.

Porro nihil frequentius est quam permutatio horum pronominum sensu non permutato ; ita Matt. iii. 3. οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ῥηθεὶς ὑπὸ Ἡσαίου, v. l. αὐτός.—v. 4. αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Ἰωάννης, v. l. οὗτος.—1 Cor. vii. 13. καὶ αὕτὸς συνευδοκεῖ οἰκεῖν μετ' αὐτῆς, v. l. οὗτος.—cap. xvi. 17. ὅτι τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα οὗτοι ἀνεπλήρωσαν, v. l. αὐτοί : est enim αὐτὸς juxta grammaticos modo relativum, modo demonstrativum, idemque περὶ τοῦ οὗτος pronunciant.

Invicem pariter mutantur αὐτὸς et ἑαυτός. Ita Matt. vi. 16. ἀφανίζουσι τὰ πρόσωπα αὐτῶν, v. l. ἑαυτῶν.—Marc. i. 27. ὥστε συζητεῖν πρὸς αὐτοὺς, v. l. πρὸς ἑαυτούς. Cap. v. 26. δαπανήσασα τὰ παρ' ἑαυτῆς πάντα, v. l. παρ' αὐτῆς : cum enim reperiantur αὐτός, αὐτοῦ, αὐτὸ, aspirata, aphæresis est τοῦ ε juxta grammaticos.

SECTIO QUINTA.

DE VERBIS.

Ter mille hic veniunt adnotanda, ubi

1. VERBA mutantur sine ullo fere sensûs discrimine. v. g. Matt. ii. 13. futurum est ut Herodes quærat puerum ἀπολέσαι αὐτὸν, v. l. ἀποκτεῖναι αὐτόν. Rom. x. 11. πῶς δὲ πιστεύσουσιν, ἀκούσουσι, v. l. πιστεύσωσιν ἀκούσωσιν.

Est denique notandum verbum substantivum in linguâ Hebraicâ præsens tempus non admittere, unde in versione nostra Anglicana τὸ is, in versione Ἰταλικὴ τὸ ἔστι, sæpissime additur : hinc fere centies notatur τὸ ἔστι apud novi fœderis Scriptores, quibus Hellenistica lingua in usu fuit : v. g. 1 Thess. ii. 10. ὑμεῖς Μάρτυρες, v. l. ἐστέ. Vide 1 Cor. vii. 16. viii. 7. xi. 11. xiv. 10.

SECTIO SEXTA.

DE PARTICIPIIS.

1. PARTICIPIA ejusdem sensus sæpe invicem permutantur : v. g. Matt. iv. 18. τὸν λεγόμενον Πέτρον, v. l. τὸν καλούμενον. Cap. ix.

18. ταῦτα αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος, v. l. λέγοντος. Joh. xix. 28. εἰδὼς Ἰησοῦς, ὅτι πάντα ἤδη τετέλεσται, v. l. ἰδών. Act. xviii. 8. θεασάμενος, v. l. ἰδών. Cap. xvii. 13. σαλεύοντες τοὺς ὄχλους, v. l. ταράσσοντες. 1 Cor. v. 2. ὁ τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο ποιήσας, v. l. πράξας. 2 Cor. iii. 7. ἐν γράμμασιν ἐντετυπωμένη, v. l. ἐγγεγραμμένη.

2. Centies tempore differunt sine sensus discrimine: ex. gr. Matt. x. 28. μὴ φοβηθῆτε ἀπὸ τῶν ἀποκτεινόντων τὸ σῶμα, v. l. ἀποκτενόντων. Cap. xiii. 24. σπείροντι, σπείραντι. Cap. xvii. 27. τὸν ἀναβάντα, v. l. ἀναβαίνοντα. Joh. vi. 45. πᾶς ἀκούσας, v. l. ἀκούων. Act. ii. 44. πάντες οἱ πιστεύοντες, v. l. πιστεύσαντες. Cap. xxviii. 5. ἀποτινάξας τὸ θηρίον εἰς τὸ πῦρ, v. l. ἀποτινασσόμενος, ἀποτιναξάμενος. 2 Cor. i. 17. τοῦτο οὖν βουλευόμενος, v. l. βουλόμενος, βουλευσάμενος. V. 5. κατεργασάμενος, κατεργαζόμενος, ἐγείροντι, ἐγείραντι, 2 Cor. i. 9.

3. Multoties participium simplex occurrit pro composito, et vice versa, v. g. Matt. vii. 13. πολλοί εἰσιν οἱ εἰσερχόμενοι δι' αὐτῆς, v. l. ἐρχόμενοι. Luc. xvii. 7. εἰσελθόντι, ἐλθόντι. Joh. xii. 2. εἷς τῶν συνανακειμένων αὐτῷ. v. lect. ἀνακειμένων σὺν αὐτῷ. Act. xxi. 4. καὶ ἀνευρόντες, v. l. καὶ εὑρόντες. 2 Cor. iv. 9. ἐγκαταλειπόμενοι, v. l. λιμπανόμενοι, λιπόμενοι.

SECTIO SEPTIMA.

DE ADVERBIIS.

NOTANT, 1mo, variæ lectiones deesse multoties adverbia, ubi sunt planè vel intellectu necessaria, vel sensu non læso deesse possunt. Luc. vi. 10. ἔκτεινον τὴν χεῖρά σου. ὁ ἐποίησεν οὕτω. v. l. d. οὕτω. Marc. i. 13. τὸ πνεῦμα ἐκβάλλει αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν ἔρημον καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, deest ἐκεῖ. Et Act. xiv. 28. Navigarunt Antiochiam διέτριβον δὲ ἐκεῖ, d. ἐκεῖ, male proculdubio. Joh. iv. 3. ἀπῆλθε πάλιν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν. Recte: nam è Galilæa ascendit Jesus Hierosolymam ad Pascha. Cap. ii. 11. 13. at v. l. d. πάλιν. Joh. xviii. 33. εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸ πραιτώριον πάλιν ὁ Πιλάτος, d. πάλιν, male, egressus enim est è prætorio ad Judæos. V. 29. v. 38. πάλιν ἐξῆλθε ὁ Πιλάτος πρὸς τοὺς Ἰουδαίους, v. l. d. πάλιν, male iterum. Vide v. 29. Act. v. 23. εὕρομεν τοὺς φύλακας ἔξω ἑστῶτας πρὸ θυρῶν. MSS. 30. deest ἔξω, qui tamen præ foribus stabant, ii certe extra stabant.

Speciatim observandum est de εὐθὺς, et εὐθέως, quod quadragies inveniuntur in uno D. Marci Evangelio, adeo ut mirum non sit ea multoties ibi deesse, in MSS. exemplis puta. Cap. i. 10. 29, 30. ii. 2. viii. 14. xliii. 45. Ubi Millius, "deest Cant. Vulg. Syr. ut fere semper." Matt. iv. 20. οἱ δὲ εὐθέως ἀφέντες τὰ δίκτυα. Ubi "εὐθέως insertum est ex Evangeliis aliis;" ita Millius, Proleg. p. 64. col. 2. Habent autem Chrysost. in Com. Theophylact. versiones omnes, Origenes in Matt. p. 389.

2. Mutantur invicem sæpius adverbia sensu minime mutato. Luc. v. 35. τότε νηστεύσουσιν, v. l. ἀπὸ τότε, Cap. xvi. 26. οἱ θέλοντες διαβῆναι ἐντεῦθεν. V. lect. MSS. 23. ἐκεῖθεν. Joh. xviii. 20. πάντοτε ἐδίδαξα ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ ὅπου πάντοτε οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι συνέρχονται, v. l. παντοθέν. Omnes nimirum in solennitatibus ex lege adire Hierosolymam tenebantur, adeoque undique convenire illic. Cap. xix. 27. ἰδοὺ ὁ υἱός σου, v. l. ἴδε. Act. xxii. 1. νῦν, v. l. νυνί. 2 Cor. ii. 17. κατενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. κατέναντι. iii. 10. ἕνεκεν, v. l. εἵνεκεν, Cap. iv. 16. ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος, v. l. ἔξωθεν.

SECTIO OCTAVA.

DE PRÆPOSITIONIBUS.

INFINITUM esset observare loca omnia ubi præpositiones ejusdem potestatis, eundemque sensum exhibentes, inter se permutantur.

Ut, 1mo, διὰ pro ὑπὸ, et vice versa: Matt. ii. 23. τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τῶν Προφητῶν, v. l. ὑπὸ.—Cap. iii. 3. Hic est qui dictus est ὑπὸ Ἡσαΐου, v. l. διὰ, Vulg. et Iren. In utrisque autem invenimus per. Act. xii. 9. τὸ γειόμενον διὰ τοῦ Ἀγγέλου, v. l. ὑπό.

2. Ἀπὸ, pro ὑπὸ, et contra: Rom. xiii. 1. οὐκ ἔστιν ἐξουσία εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, v. l. ὑπὸ. Gal. v. 18. οὐκ ἐστὲ ὑπὸ νόμου. v. l. ἀπὸ νόμου.

Ἀπὸ, pro παρὰ, et contra: Act. xxvi. 22. ἐπικουρίας τυχὼν τῆς παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. ἀπό. 1 Cor. xi. 13. ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, v. l. παρὰ τοῦ.

Ἀπὸ, pro ἐκ, et ἐν, ἐκ pro ἀπὸ. Matt. viii. 34. ἀπὸ τῶν ὁρίων αὐτῶν, v. l. ἐκ. 1 Cor. vii. 7. ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. ἀπὸ. Matt. viii. 13. Sanatus est ἐν τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐκείνῃ. v. lect. ἀπὸ τῆς, &c.

2. Ὑπὲρ, pro περὶ, et contra: Rom. i. 5. ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, v. lect. περί. V. 8. ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, v. l. περί. 2 Cor. i. 8. ὑπὲρ τῆς θλίψεως ἡμῶν, v. l. περί. Cap. xii. 5. ὑπὲρ ἐμαυτοῦ, v. l. περί. 2 Cor. i. 13. ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, v. l. περί. Gal. i. 4. ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, v. l. περί.

Pro παρὰ, 2 Cor. i. 8. ὑπὲρ δύναμιν, v. l. παρά. 2 Cor. xii. 13. Quid est enim quod minus habuistis ὑπὲρ λοιπὰς ἐκκλησίας, v. l. παρά.

Sexcenties ἐπὶ pro εἰς, aut ἐν, vice versa: Matt. iii. 13. ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰορδάνην, v. l. εἰς. Cap. xviii. 6. ἐπὶ τὸν τράχηλον αὐτοῦ, v. l. εἰς, et περί. Luc. viii. 8. ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν τὴν ἀγαθὴν, v. l. εἰς. Joh. vi. 16. κατέβησαν ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, v. l. εἰς. Act. iv. 5. συναχθῆναι τοὺς ἄρχοντας εἰς Ἰερουσαλήμ, v. l. ἐν. Rom. x. 11. ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ, v. l. εἰς αὐτόν. Gal. v. 13. ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ.

Item ἐπὶ, εἰς pro πρὸς, et vice versa: Act. xvi. 40. εἰς τὴν Λυδίαν, v. l. πρὸς. Rom. x. 21. πρὸς λαὸν ἀπειθοῦντα, v. l. ἐπί. Gal. i. 12. πρὸς τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ Ἀποστόλους, v. l. εἰς.

4. Aliquoties mutatur tantum casus quem regit præpositio, sensu minime mutato:—ex. gr. Marc. v. 11. Erat ibi grex porcorum πρὸς τὸ ὄρος, circa montem, Vulg. πρὸς τῷ ὄρει, apud montem, MSS. 40. Euthym. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Joh. xx. 11. Μαρία δὲ εἱστήκει πρὸς τὸ μνημεῖον, v. l. τῷ μνημείῳ. Gal. iv. 12. ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ, v. l. ἐπ, ἐλευθερίαν. Matt. iii. 7. ἐπὶ τὸ βάπτισμα αὐτοῦ, v. l. ἐπὶ τῷ βαπτίσματι.

5. Sæpius deficiunt, aut adjiciuntur sensu adhuc salvo: v. g. Marc. v. 6. ἀπὸ μακρόθεν, v. l. d. ἀπό. Luc. xxii. 30. ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ μου, v. l. d. ἐν. Cap. xxiv. 18. σὺ μόνος παροικεῖς ἐν Ἰερουσαλήμ, MSS. 32. d. ἐν. Joh. xiii. 23. εἷς τῶν Μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, v. l. εἷς ἐκ τῶν. Cap. xix. 36. ὀστοῦν οὐ συντριβήσεται αὐτοῦ, v. l. ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. V. 40. ἔδησαν τὸ αὐτὸ ὀθονίοις, MSS. ἐν ὀθονίοις.

SECTIO NONA.

DE CONJUNCTIONIBUS.

PARCIUS hic agendum: bis millies in variis lectionibus hisce occurrunt, sive mutatio conjunctionum idem valentium, vel earundem defectus ubi in textu adsunt, vel additio ubi librariis deesse videbantur, id autem fit sensu vel semper salvo, vel leviter tantum immutato.

1. Observat imprimis P. Simonius multoties accidere permutationem particularum γὰρ, et δὲ, tam in Græcis exemplaribus, quam in antiquis versionibus, Rom. xiv. 15. εἰ δὲ διὰ βρῶμα, v. l. γὰρ. V. 23. ὁ δὲ διακρινόμενος, v. l. γὰρ. Vid. Rom. viii. 28. 1 Cor. ii. 10. vii. 40. ix. 16. x. 1. xi. 3. xv. 1. xiii. 50. xvi. 7, 8.

1 Cor. x. 26. Τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ, v. l. δὲ. xi. 23. ἐγὼ γὰρ παρέλαβον, v. l. δὲ. V. 31. εἰ γὰρ ἑαυτοὺς διεκρίνομεν, v. l. δὲ. xiv. 5. μείζων γὰρ ὁ προφητεύων, v. l. δὲ. V. 14. ἐὰν γὰρ προσεύχωμαι, v. l. δὲ.

Notat 2do idem Simonius frequentem esse mutationem conjunctionis copulativæ καὶ in disjunctivam ἤ, et vice versa. Ita Joh. viii. 14. καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω, v. l. ἤ. 1 Cor. xiii. 1. ἢ κύμβαλον ἀλαλάζον, v. l. καὶ. Cap. xi. 27. ὃς ἂν ἐσθίῃ τὸν ἄρτον τοῦτον, ἢ πίνῃ τὸ ποτήριον, v. l. καὶ. Exempla multa congessimus annotatis in hunc locum.

3. Sexcenties occurrit mutatio καὶ, in δὲ, et vice versa, præsertim verò in Evangeliis. Ita Matt. xx. 2. συμφωνήσας δὲ, v. l. καὶ συμφωνήσας. V. 10. ἐλθόντες δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἐλθόντες. xxi. 30. καὶ προσελθὼν, v. l. προσελθὼν δὲ, xxii. 7. ἀκούσας δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἀκούσας. Marc. i. 6. ἦν δὲ Ἰωάννης, v. l. καὶ ἦν. V. 16. περιπατῶν δὲ, v. l. καὶ παράγων. 28. ἐξῆλθε δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἐξῆλθεν. Cap. ii. 5. ἰδὼν δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἰδών,

Cap. iii. 7. καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, v. l. ὁ δὲ. iv. 10. ὅτι δὲ, v. l. καὶ ὅτι. v. 14. οἱ δὲ βόσκοντες, v. l. καὶ οἱ. Ita. v. 19. 40. Cap. vi. 3. ἀδελφὸς δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἀδελφός. V. 4. ἔλεγε δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἔλεγε. Ita v. 21, 22. 24. 29. 35. 37, 38.

Est autem frequens mutatio τοῦ καὶ ἐγὼ, in κἀγὼ. 1 Cor. ii. 3. iii. 1. xvi. 10. 2 Cor. ii. 10. ᾧ δέ τι χαρίζεσθε, καὶ ἐγὼ, v. l. κἀγὼ. (2.) ὡς, et ὅσπερ, seu ὥσπερ sæpe inter se invicem permutantur. 2 Cor. ix. 5. μὴ ὥσπερ πλεονεξίαν, v. l. ὡς. 1 Cor. x. 7. ὡς γέγραπται, v. lect. ὥσπερ. Ita 2 Cor. ii. 17. iii. 1.

Porro innumeris in locis varia lectio exhibet tantum defectum, aut redundantiam δὲ vel καὶ sensu vix ullibi mutato. Et 1mo, deest δὲ, v. g. ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις, v. l. d. δὲ. Luc. xix. 22. λέγει δὲ αὐτῷ, v. l. d. δὲ. Joh. i. 40. ὥρα δὲ ἦν ὡς δεκάτη, d. δὲ in MSS. 35. et v. 43. Ita Joh. vii. 9. 12. 19. 38. Act. xi. 17. ἐγὼ δὲ τίς ἤμην, v. l. d. δὲ. Ita xiii. 1. xxiv. 26. Alias additur ubi deest. Luc. xi. 24. ὅταν τὸ ἀκάθαρτον πνεῦμα, v. l. ὅταν δὲ. Joh. ix. 9. ἐκεῖνος ἔλεγεν, v. l. ἐκεῖνος δὲ. Act. xvi. 7. ἐλθόντες κατὰ τὴν Μυσίαν, v. l. ἐλθόντες δέ.

Frequentius accidit defectus τοῦ καὶ, ubi vel etiam denotat, vel ad connexionem videtur planè necessarium. Matt. xiv. 19. Et jubens turbam discumbere super gramen, καὶ λαβὼν, et accipiens quinque panes —— benedixit eis, v. l. d. καὶ. Luc. xv. 19. peccavi in cœlum, et coram te, καὶ οὐκέτι εἰμὶ ἄξιος, &c. v. l. d. καὶ, et v. 21. et Cap. xix. 15.—Cap. xxiii. 24. Et Dies erat Parasceues καὶ σαββάτων, d. καὶ. MSS. 32. et v. 52. 55.—Joh. xx. 14. καὶ ταῦτα εἰποῦσα, d. καὶ. Ita Cap. xi. 57. Cap. xix. 35. Act. xiv. 3. Domino testimonium perhibente verbo gratiæ καὶ δόντι σημεῖα, d. καὶ. Ita Cap. xiii. 9. et 1 Cor. x. 9. et x. 12. xii. 14. 19.—Adjicitur sine causa: Rom. xiv. 6. ὁ ἐσθίων, v. l. καὶ ὁ,—in evangeliis passim.

Ὅτι sæpissime in his variis lectionibus deest, ubi denotat quod, v. g. Matt. ix. 33. λέγοντες ὅτι, d. ὅτι. Luc. iv. 11. καὶ ὅτι ἐπὶ χειρῶν ἀροῦσί σε, v. l. d. ὅτι. Ita Cap. xvii. 10. xix. 9. Joh. vii. 31. ἔλεγον ὅτι. x. 7. λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι. d. ὅτι. Cap. xii. 34. 1 Cor. iv. 9.—Quandoque adjicitur: ita, Luc. xix. 34. οἱ δὲ εἶπον ὁ Κύριος, v. l. ὅτ. ὁ Κύριος. SECTIO DECIMA.

1. HIS adde quod multa inter varias lectiones enumerentur, quæ tantum exhibent loca in Novo Fœdere laudata, prout à Patribus, aut ex Septuaginta Interpretum versione, allegantur, v. g.

Matt. i. 23. Pro ἕξει, Iren. λήψεται. Pro καλέσουσι Euseb. Epiph. p. 427. καλέσεις, ex Isa. vii. 14. Cap. ii. 6. ἐκ σοῦ γαρ, v. l. ἐκ σοῦ γάρ μοι, ex Mich. v. 2. vide v. 17.

Marc. i. 3. Εὐθείας ποιεῖτε τὰς τρίβους αὐτοῦ, Iren. τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, ex Isa. xl. 3.

Joh. xix. 36. Ὀστοῦν οὐ συντριβήσεται αὐτῷ, v. l. εἰ συντρίψετε ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, ex Ex. xii. 46.

Act. i. 20. Γενηθέτω ἡ ἔπαυλις αὐτοῦ, Vulg. al. αὐτῶν, ex Psal. lxix. 25.

Rom. ix. 25. Καὶ τὴν, οὐκ ἠγαπημένην, ἠγαπημένην. Iren. lib. iv. cap. 37. Hieron. in cap. 1. Hos. τὴν οὐκ ἠλεημένην, ἠλεημένην, ex Hos. ii. 23. ubi utraque lectio.

V. 33. Οὐ καταισχυνθήσεται, v. l. οὐ μὴ καταισχυνθῇ, ex Isa. xxviii. 16.

Cap. xi. 9. Γενηθήτω ἡ τράπεζα αὐτῶν. Theodoret. ἐνώπιον αὐτῶν, ex Psal. lxix. 22.

1 Cor. ii. 9. Ἃ ἡτοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν. Clem. R. ὑπομένουσιν, ex Isa. vi. 4.

Gal. iv. 30. Ἔκβαλε τὴν παιδίσκην, v. l. add. ταύτην, μετὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ τῆς ἐλευθέρας. Hieron. μετὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ μου Ἰσαάκ, ex Gen. xxi. 10.

2 Thess. ii. 8. Ὃν ὁ Κύριος ἀνελώσει, Patres multi ἀνελεῖ, ex Isa. xi. 4.

Heb. x. 6. Ὁλοκαυτώματα, v. l. ὁλοκαύτωμα, ex Psal. xl. 6.

V. 38. Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται. Theodoret. ἐκ πίστεώς μου, ex Hab. ii. 4.

1 Pet. i. 16. Ἅγιοι γίνεσθε, Clem. Al. Vulg. &c. ἔσεσθε, ex Levit. xi. 44. xix. 2.

V. 25. Τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα Κυρίου. Syr. Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, ex Isa. xl. 7.

Sæpe addunt hæ variæ lectiones, ex versione LXX. interpretum, ea quæ textui in N. Testamento allegato desunt, v. g.

Luc. iv. 19. Κηρύξαι ἐνιαυτὸν Κυρίου δεκτὸν, add. Iren. Vulg. et diem retributionis, ex Isa. lxi. 2.

Rom. x. 8. Ἐγγύς σου ῥῆμά ἐστιν, add. Orig. σφόδρα, ex Deut. xxx. 14.

V. 16. Τίς ἐπίστευσε τῇ ἀκοῇ ἡμῶν, add. καὶ βραχίων τοῦ Κυρίου τίνι ἀπεκαλύφθη, ex Isa. liii. 1.

Cap. xv. 19. Ἐξομολογήσομαί σοι ἐν ἔθνεσι. add. Κύριε, Chrysost. Vulg. ex Psal. xviii. 49.

2 Cor. ix. 9. Ἡ δικαιοσύνη αὐτοῦ μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, Vulg. add. τοῦ αἰῶνος, ex Psal. cxii. 8.

Aliquando in his variis lectionibus desunt quædam quæ in N. Test. occurrunt, quia apud LXX. interpretes non extant, ex. gr.

Rom. xi. 34. Τίς γὰρ ἔγνω νοῦν Κυρίου, d. γὰρ. Clem. Al. ita Isa. xl. 13.

Cap. xv. 11. Καὶ ἐπαινέσετε αὐτὸν, d. καὶ, Chrysost. Ita Psal. cxvii. 1.

1 Pet. i. 24. Καὶ ὁ ἄνθος αὐτοῦ, d. αὐτοῦ, Œcumen. Ita Isa. xl. 7.

Insigne hujus rei exemplum exhibet Basilius, is enim post hæc verba Dom. Joh. xii. 39. 'propterea non poterant credere, quia iterum dixit Isaias,' ea quæ sequuntur allegat non prout apud Johannem extant, active τετύφλωκεν καὶ πεπώρωκεν, sed passive τετύφλωνται αὐτῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ καὶ πεπώρωται ἡ καρδία, ex Isa. vi. 9. tom. 1. contra Eunom. lib. v. p. 782.

SECTIO UNDECIMA.

ID quod, in alio Evangelista, aliis verbis exprimitur, sexcenties in locis pro varianti lectione proponitur: hic autem observatu dignum videatur,

1. Multoties rem plane incertam esse, nulloque niti solido fundamento Millii de hisce conjecturam, v. g. Marci vi. 12. Sed apud Millium legimus "ex Ammonii Monotessaro apud Zacharium Chrysopol. (sæculi 12mi Monachum, potius quam episcopum, recte notat Zegerus) hæc Marci non esse, sed ex Matthæo huc transponi, quemadmodum alias alia;" quo Monotessaro non obstante, agnoscunt hæc verba Hieronymus, Theophylactus, versiones ad unam omnes. Et quanquam Millius bis centies pronuntiaverit "hæc et illa alterius esse, non ergo hujus Evangelii" non tamen video quid impediat quo minus eadem in duobus aut tribus Evangeliis obtineant, immo ex Eusebii Canone id usitatius contigisse certissimum est.

2. Observandum id quod Patres, Librarii, ac Scriptores, ex aliis Evangeliis adjecerunt, sæpius additamenti potius quam variæ lectionis speciem adhibere.

Observandum, tertio, hæc, si ex aliis Evangeliis certo certius adjecta essent, nihil de S. Scripturis inde minui, nec iis quicquam adjicere, sed tantum ea quæ in Evangeliis certo certius conscripta sunt, eundemque plerumque sensum exigunt, locis non suis apponere, quibus præmissis, exemplum unum aut alterum in medium adducam.

Matt. iii. 11. Οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς τὰ ὑποδήματα βαστάσαι, v. l. ἄξιος τὸν ἱμάντα τοῦ ὑποδήματος λῦσαι. "E reliquis Evangeliis" hic Millius: in quorum tamen nullo hæc verba ῥήτως inveniuntur. Vide Marc. i. 7. Luc. iii. 16. Joh. i. 27.

V. 17. Φωνὴ—λέγουσα οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς. v. l. λέγουσα πρὸς αὐτὸν σὺ εἶ ὁ υἱὸς, Marc. i. 12. Luc. iii. 22.

Sed non est cur in hisce immoremur, in quibus ipse Millius, in capite fere quolibet, exempla perhibet.

Porro permulta inter variantes lectiones congessit Millius, quæ tantum unius Epistolæ verba ad alteram adjiciunt, adeoque assumenta veriùs quàm variæ lectiones dici possint. Ostensum enim est libri primi sectione sexta, familiare nimis Patribus fuisse loca multa, præsertim sensu et scopo convenientia, in unum congerere: v. g.

SECTIO DUODECIMA.

UNICUM jam superest quod me ad operis hujus finem perducet, nempe ut respondeam objectionibus Pseudo-Catholicorum textus Græci αὐθεντίαν ex variis hisce lectionibus impugnantium, et Scepticorum qui S. Scripturæ certitudinem eadem de causa diminutam, et pene nullam esse pronunciant.

Decrevit Synodus Tridentina, ut ea ipsa vetus, et vulgata editio quæ longo tot sæculorum usu in ipsa ecclesia probata est, in publicis lectionibus, disputationibus, prædicationibus, et expositionibus, pro authentica habeatur, et ut nemo illam rejicere, quovis prætextu audeat, vel præsumat. In hujus Decreti subsidium, longo agmine, procedunt Pontificii, pro editionis Vulgatæ præ Græcis N. Fœderis codicibus authentia, tanquam pro Aris et Focis, militantes (quod tamen hoc Synodi Decretum minime postulare discernunt peritiores Pontificii). Palmam cæteris præripuit Morinus, is enim exercitationum biblicarum parte secunda, summa contentione, omnibusque ingenii viribus illud molitur, ut labefactata N. Fœderis originalis textûs auctoritate, sola versio vulgata, utpote ad codices Græcos hodiernis nostris meliores composita, pro vera et authentica habeatur. Huic Millius, qui in priore Prolegomenon parte Morini causam adstruxisse videatur, hic strenuè eidem semet opponit.

Argumento etenim primo Morini ex Patrum Latinorum et Græcorum testimoniis deducto, accuratè Millius respondet, testimonia in medium producta non tantum diligenter expendit, iisque responsum plenum justumque adhibet; sed etiam insuper agnoscit, Proleg. p. 139., se, cum Morino, olim errâsse; et p. 140., Morinoduce, hallucinatum esse: verum in aliam sententiam, inquit, me duxit longior dies, eamque plane contrariam.

Secundum argumentum depravationis Græci textûs colligit Morinus ex magna lectionum varietate, quam in exemplaribus Græcis observarunt H. Stephanus aliique Hæretici, quas ad bis mille sexcentum sexaginta, iniquo calculo, extendit. Respondet Millius: "Varietates hasce lectionum, quibus auctoritatem Græci textûs tantopere labefactatam ait, istas, inquam, quas ex sexdecim exemplaribus extraxit H. Stephanus, aliasque multo adhuc plures, quas alii post eum ex impressis pariter, et MSS. libris coacervarunt, adeo non eripere Græco textui suam certitudinem, ut contra, haud certius ad genuinam, et archetypam apostolorum dictionem perveneris, quam ex hujusmodi collationum συλλογαῖς sive collationibus Græcorum codicum." His autem pro instituti sui ratione prælibatis, sic pergit. "Providentia Dei hactenus invigilatum est, ne in articulis fidei, aliisque ad summam fidei facientibus laberentur librarii. In his enim codices omnes conveniunt, et si forte locus aliquis, qui summi momenti esse videtur, uni, alteri, seu etiam pluribus codicibus exciderit (id quod non nisi in uno loco factum est quod viderim) idem tamen quoad sensum alibi inculcatus occurrit; ut proinde nusquam inde periclitetur Christiana veritas: in locis autem, qui in articulis fidei omnibus plenè conveniunt, certe ex quâ de iisdem articulis judicetur, regula deesse non potest."

Porro de variantibus hisce Stephani Bezæque lectionibus, id imprimis notatu dignum est, eas ferè omnes ex Græcis occidentalis ecclesiæ codicibus depromptas esse, quos quidem à scriptoribus linguæ originalis insciis conscriptos fuisse, et juxta versionem veterem vulgatam emendatos, seu verius mutatos, fuisse ex Simonio didicimus, eosque adeo inidoneos prorsus esse ex quibus codices primævi, Adamantii, Pierii, Pamphili, Eusebii, cura ad codicum probatissimorum et forte originalium textum emendati, et in Bibliothecis diligenter custoditi, ut textus hodiernus cum iis codicibus potissimum consentiens corrigeretur.

3. Ex argumentis hisce aliisque pontificiorum mediis, quibus vulgatam versionem integritati suæ restituere Sixti Quinti, Clementis Octavi, Lovaniensium, Lucæ Burgensis, et aliorum opera aggressi sunt, de codicum multorum collatione, multa,—de ecclesiæ testimonio ne verbum quidem occurrit; unde pronum est colligere haud alia media ad vulgatæ versionis αὐθεντίαν stabiliendam pontificiis superesse, quam quæ nobis pariter cum illis conveniunt ad textûs originalis integritatem stabiliendam, nullumque in his emendationibus ecclesiæ sive testimonio sive judicio locum esse posse, sed criticorum studio, et industriæ in codicibus comparandis, in versionum collatione, patrumque scriptis evolvendis, rem totam committendam esse.

Denique argumentum Morini bene impugnat Millius comparatione adhibita inter textum Græcum, et versionem vulgatam. Cum enim ob lectionum varietatem, textum Græcum incertitudinis postulaverit Morinus, annon expectares, inquit, jure merito ut versionem, quam in hujus locum substituit, ab eadem lectionum varietate, pura, et integra conservata esset, et tamen eadem illa in exemplaribus vulgatæ, quæ in Græcis nostris apparet lectionum varietas, ut liquet ex Stephanicis, et Plantinianis Latinorum Bibliorum Editionibus, immo etiam post recognitam jussu Sixti Quinti, et Clementis Octavi, versionem hanc, Lucas Brugensis conscripsit libellum variantium ejus lectionum. Hinc autem manifesto sequitur vulgatam versionem pro authentica haberi non posse, nisi textui Græco eadem authentia concedatur.

Ex iis insuper quæ in secundo libro scripsimus, et quæ non modo ab evangelicis, sed etiam à pontificiorum doctissimis, et in his rebus maxime versatis in confesso sunt, nempe in hoc variantium lectionum cumulo inveniri nihil, quod vel articuli ullius fidem, vel morum regulam corrumpat mutetve, certum atque exploratum est, contra scepticorum strepitus, lectiones hasce variantes non posse S. Scripturæ regulam vel imperfectam relinquere, vel dubiam. Rem paucis expediam lectiones hasce, quæ etiam levioris momenti esse videbantur, ea, qua potui, diligentia excussi, et examini subjeci: ostendant, si possint, aliquid, quod hanc fidei nostræ normam, aut dubiam, aut suspectam reddat: hoc autem si fieri nequeat, desinant tandem apertæ, et præ oculis eorum positæ, veritati repugnare, et vanis clamoribus aures nostras obtundere.

Continens
1. Catalogum variantium locorum ipsius Millii.
2. Specimen Italicæ versionis, qualis, ante Hieronymi castigationem, extabat ex lectionibus spuriis, deficientibus, aut redundantibus, quæ in Hilarii Diac. commentariis in epistolas D. Pauli adhuc reperiuntur.
3. Syllabum Scripturarum, de quarum variantibus lectionibus in hoc opere disceptatur.

Millius ἑαυτὸν τιμωρούμενος: Sive specimen quorundam locorum, in quibus Millius sententiam suam mutat, et sibi ipse contradicit.

" MATT. iii. 11. καὶ τῷ πυρὶ, constat patres Hieronymum, Hilarium, Cyprianum, Theodorum Heracleot., Macarium Ægyptium, Cyrillum, Origenem, Justinum M. (adde Athanasium, tom. i. p. 606. Basilium, tom. i. p. 790. Cyrill. Alex. tom. i. p. 197), Interpretes Arab. Pers. Æthiop. etiam vetustiss. Copt. ac Syr. exemplaria quamplurima MSS. Antiquiss. Cant. Vulg. denique versionem, sub apostolicis fere temporibus concinnatam, agnovisse καὶ πυρὶ, ut de recepta lectione minime dubitandum sit:" ita Millius hic. Atqui prol. p. 65. col. 2. " illud καὶ πυρὶ utcunque lectum in Vulg. jam olim ante tempora Cypriani, Syri, item nescio an (et fere ab initio) et citatum ab Origene, tanquam Matthæi, irrepsit ex evangelio Lucæ, seu etiam in textum tam Lucæ, quam Matthæi."

Matt. v. 4. Εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς καταρωμένους ὑμᾶς, καλῶς ποιεῖτε τοὺς μισοῦντας ὑμᾶς, ista omissa initio forte quod superflua visa sunt. Ita Millius in locum, ergo Matthæi verba hic omissa sunt. Sed proleg. p. 42. col. 1. " Lucæ sunt non ergo Matthæi." Vide Append. p. 2. col. 2.

Matt. xiv. 3. Διὰ Ἡρωδιάδα τὴν γυναῖκα Φιλίππου] Deest Φιλίππου, Cant. Vulg. " Sed cum hic exemplaria MSS. universim (una cum versionibus vetust. Syr. et Copt.) probatiora pleraque apud Lucam, apud Marcum omnia (immo ipsum Cant. ut et Vulg. Goth. Copt. Syr.) nomen hoc retineant, non est quod expungatur." Ita Millius hic. At prol. p. 42. col. 2. " interjectum Φιλίππου Marci est, cui moris, in historiolis ipsi eum Matthæo communibus, circumstantias quasdam insigniores, ab altero isto haud memoratas, adjicere, quomodo hic nomen mariti Herodiadis."

Cap. xv. 4. Ἐνετείλατο λέγων). V. l. εἶπε, Cant. Copt. Syr. Æthiop. Vulg. Iren. è Marco. Ita hic Millius.—Sed proleg. p. 42. col. 1. Scholion ἐνετείλατο λέγων εἶπε, diu est cum genuinam extrusit lectionem suspectamque ipsam reddidit, seu ex Marco sumptam, quod et nos olim putavimus.

Cap. xviii. 35. Τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν.] Desunt in Cant. Barb. Vulg. Hieron. Arab. Æthiop. Sed cum plerique omnes Cod. Græci, Chrysost. Theophylact. Syr. Pers. retineant, non est quod omittatur. Ita Millius hic. Sed prol. p. 121. seq. τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν irrepserunt è margine, fide Æthiop. Cant. Arab. Vulg. Hieron. Luciferi Calarit.

Cap. xxv. 1. Εἰς ἀπάντησιν τοῦ νυμφίου.] V. l. τοῦ νυμφίου, καὶ τῆς νύμφης, Cant. Vulg. Syr. Pers. Sed cum nec exemplaria MSS. nec è Patribus Hieronymus, Hilarius, Chrysost. aut Orig. quantum ex commentariis assequi licet, agnoscant, pro additamento plane habendum est.—Ita hic Millius. Sed prol. p. 133. col. 2. τοῦ νυμφίου καὶ τῆς νύμφης, Cant. sic et Vulg. Syr. ac Latini. N. B. Nec dubito quin ita Matthæi interpres. Sed quod infra de sponsi solius occursu fit mentio, neque nisi sponsi duntaxat occursus memoretur, in posterioribus cod. delebant illud καὶ τῆς νύμφης Græci ceu perperam ab antiquis additum.

Ibid. cap. xxviii. 9. Ὡς δὲ ἐπορεύοντο ἀπαγγεῖλαι τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ.] Desunt hæc Vulg. Chrysost. Hieron. August. incuria scribarum, inquit Erasmus, sed eorum licentiæ potius dandum forte, quod cum sequentia à conjunctione incipiunt, totum hoc quod interjicitur, seu non necessarium prætermiserint. Sunt ergo hæc Matthæi, sive incuria, sive licentia scribarum prætermissa. Sed prol. p. 83. col. 2. Hæc omnia scholiastæ alicujus sunt de sermonis cohæreutia plus satis solliciti.

Marc. ii. 1. Δι' ἡμερῶν.] Octo legunt latini codices aliqui, citra non Græcorum modo codicum fidem, sed et Latinorum plerumque omnium. Ita Millius hic. Sed prolcg. p. 44. col. 1. Græca proculdubio erant δι' ἡμερῶν, et sic evangelista.

Marc. v. 1. Εἰς τὴν χώραν τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν.] v. l. Γερασηνῶν. Sed cum cod. Alexandrinus et Syr. receptam lectionem retineant, et Lucas, cui in describendis historiis noster evangelista fere consonat, Gadarenos vocet, Γαδαρηνῶν hic omnino legendum arbitror. Sed proleg. p. 95. col. 1. inter genuinas lectiones Γεργεσηνῶν enumeratur.

Marc. xi. 10. Ὡσαννὰ ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις.] Orig. εἰρήνη, memoriæ lapsu, ut opinor, et cum Marci verbis Lucæ ista confundens. Cap. xix. 38. εἰρήνη ἐν οὐρανῷ, καὶ δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις. Ita hic Millius. Sed prol. p. 101. col. 2. apud Marcum εἰρήνη ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις, legebat Origenes, idque non ex lapsu memoriæ, quod nos olim putavimus, sed ad fidem codicis probi: hinc Lucam, qui ad Marci verba se fere accommodat, traduxisse puto suum illud εἰρήνη ἐν οὐρανῷ.

Luc. ii. 14. Ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία.] Qui sic legunt, rectam lectionem amplectuntur. Ita hic Millius. Sed prol. p. 64. col. 2. ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας omnino rect. Vide Annotata nostra in Millium hic.

Cap. vi. 26. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν ὅταν καλῶς ὑμᾶς εἴπωσιν πάντες.] Τὸ πάντες omnino legendum arbitror, addendi causa nulla est, tollendi aliqua: et tamen prol. p. 126. col. 2. ὑμᾶς et πάντες irreptitia sunt. Vide hic etiam annotata nostra in Millium.

Luc. vii. 11. Καὶ συνεπορεύοντο αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἱκανοί.] Deest ἱκανοὶ Vulg. Syr. omissum primum, de industria, ni fallor, ab iis qui per μαθητὰς hic apostolos intellexere, non item assiduos quosvis Christi sectatores. Ita hic. Sed prol. p. 44. col. 1. ἱκανοὶ irrepsisse videtur ex v. 12. certe discipulos duodecim neutiquam μαθητὰς ἱκανοὺς vocasset evangelista, scriptor imprimis accuratus. Vide reliqua annotatis nostris hic ad Millium.

Cap. ix. 54. Ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε.] Desunt hæc in Barb. i. Eph. Vulg. Sed habent, præter exemplaria Græca fere omnia, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop.

Colb. et Tertull. N.B. ut credibile sit in Latinis ab aliquo expunctum, qui verebatur ne locus hic Marcioni faveret, inquit Grotius. Ita Millius hic. Sed prol. p. 44. col. 1. Sequentia ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε, quæ sententiam Jacobi et Johannis tam insigniter illustrat, ad marginem libri à studioso quopiam adscripta fuisse commentarii loco, indeque transisse in corpus textus, res ipsa clamat——Cæterum à Tertulliano lecta fuisse hæc, quod olim in notis nostris affirmavimus, non ita liquidum.

Cap. xix. 41. Ἔκλασεν ἐπ' αὐτῷ.] Non extitisse verba ista suo tempore in publice receptis exemplaribus testatur Epiphanius. Verba ejus digna sunt quæ notentur, ait Grotius, &c. Ita hic. Sed prol. p. 146. col. 2. ἔκλασεν ἐπ' αὐτῷ notat (Grotius) (quod et nos in editione nostra ipsius vestigia intrepide secuti) Epiphanii tempore comma hoc haud extitisse in publice receptis exemplaribus, verum ad Pericopen de Sudore Sanguineo, cap. xxii. 43, 44. respicit Epiphanius. Vide de his plura prol. p. 76. col. 1. Act. ii. 47. ὁ δὲ κύριος προσετίθει τοὺς σωζομένους καθ' ἡμέραν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό. Sic Alex. Barb. i. Vulg. et certe D. Lucas supra dicit πιστεύοντας fuisse ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, hic Dominum addidisse quotidie σωζομένους ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό. Prolog. p. 158. col. 2. At vero Append. p. 37. col. 2. illud ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ δὲ (quod revera capitis sequentis est) capiti huic adnexum arbitror, quod in plurimis MSS. libris post verba ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ δὲ notetur minio ἀρχὴ, seu principium lectionis: hac enim de causa factum videtur, quod ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, quod initium lectionis præcedebat, in capitis præcedentis finem conjecerint scribæ, dele ergo Alex. Barb. i. Vulg. Vide etiam annotata Millii in locum.

Act. viii. 37. Deest comma 37. in MSS. fere vigintii,——certe prætermissum in exemplaribus tot MSS. probatis ac vetustissimis ex incuria vel etiam fraude scribarum, plane incredibile est: dicendum potius in supplementum historiæ adnotatum primum hoc, ut et alia in libro Act. Apost. haud pauca, à studioso quopiam ad marginem libri, ac assumptum mox in contextum à librariis, idque sane à primis Christianismi sæculis, legant siquidem Vulg. Iren. Cyprian. &c. Ita hic Millius. Sed prol. p. 40. col. 2. etiam hunc versiculum pro injectitio olim à nobis habitum, lectum ab Irenæo constat, lib. iii. cap. 12. et ad αὐθεντίαν ejus stabiliendam haud parum conferunt Vulg. Tertull. (nam et hunc, contra quam antehac sentiebam pericopen hanc legisse) Cyprian. quibus antea non obstantibus, comma hoc pro injectitio habuit.

Cap. v. 36. Ὧι προσεκολλήθη.] V. l. προσεκλίθη, Alex. Pet. Cyril. προσεκλήθη, quod ex priore lectione natum suspicor, librariis, quòd passim fit, η pro ι scribentibus. Sed prol. p. 120. col. 1. ᾧ προσεκλήθη inter genuinas lectiones ponitur, cujus explicatio est προσεκολλήθη.

Cap. xv. 20. Τοῦ πνικτοῦ.] Desunt Iren. Tertull. Cyprian. Hieron. August. Ambros. Eucherio: cæterum retinent Græca quæ viderimus omnia, excepto uno Cant. versiones omnes, etiam Vulg. Origenes, patres, ac tractatores Græci universim, ac proinde minime solicitandum arbitror. Idem vero Millius, prol. p. 45. col. 2. iisdem Latinis Pacatiano et Fulgentio in medium prolatis, hæc habet, certe medium καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ ipsius Lucæ non est, sed Christianorum veterum, &c.

Cap. xviii. 7. Εἰς οἰκίαν τινὸς ὀνόματι Ἰούστου.] V. l. Τίτου. App. p. 42. lectionem istam quod attinet Τίτου genuinam esse arbitror, Ἰούστου vero additum ex interpolatis latinis interpretis Vulg. Sed prol. p. 44. col. 2. Studiosus aliquis ex fide, vel traditione istius sæculi viri hujus cognomento, indeque enim aliud Ἰοῦστος nomen ipsum adposuit ad marginem, nempe Titum, quod quidem admisit haud ægre interpres in suam versionem.

Rom. i. 31. ἀσπόνδους,] deest Clar. Ger. Colb. 7. Lucifer. Calarit. Hilar. D. Gildæ, prætermissum ideo putarim, quod præcedat vox ejusdem, ut putabant, significationis ἀσυνθέτους. Sed prol. p. 46. col. 1. intrusum videtur in hunc locum ex 2 Tim. iii. 3.

1 Cor. xv. 47. ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ,] imprudentes librarii vocem hanc ὁ Κύριος, è codice Marcionitarum in exemplarium aliquorum marginem clam transfusam, in contextum admisere, idque jam olim ante tempora Tertulliani, tum enim manavit, uti videtur, corruptela hæc passim in cod. Græcos. Sed prol. p. 139. col. 2. hæc habet. Auctoritate Tertulliani, probat Morinus in Græcis nostris, 1 Cor. xv. 47. irrepsisse vocem Κύριος, ex Marcionis hæretici ἀποστολικῷ, quod idem et nos affirmavimus in adnotatis in hunc locum. Verum in aliam sententiam traxit longior dies, eamque plane contrariam, nempe in ἀποστολικὸν illud introductum fuisse Κύριος ex libris catholicorum. Vide supra, p. 36.

2 Cor. ix. 4. ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ τῆς καυχήσεως'] ἐν τῇ ὑποστ. ταύτῃ. Codex mendosus quem secutus est Æthiops, omisso τῆς καυχήσεως. Sed proleg. p. 48. fide mendosi hujus cod. inter alios hic memoratos τῆς καυχήσεως, accessit commentarii loco ex cap. xi. 17. hujus epistolæ.

Gal. iv. 14. Καὶ τὴν πειρασμόν μου.] Latini omnes, teste Esthio, legunt ὑμῶν, quod sane sensum parit duriusculum ac coactum nimis quam ut probem. Ita hic Millius. Sed Append. p. 53. col. 1. pro istis lege atque hanc lectionem (ut et duriusculas, et in speciem absurdas, plerasque omnes N.B.) genuinam esse censeo.

Eph. iii. 14. πρὸς τὸν πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Rejicit hic Millius testimonium Hieronymi dicentis hæc subnotata esse additamentum Codicum Latinorum. "Nimirum cum à patre denominatam velint interpretes fere omnes πατριὰν istam ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς, do qua apostolus in versu prox. hinc omittendi ista τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, arreptam primam occasionem arbitror, ne sc. admissis iis, ad Christum πατριὰ ista, seu ad originem referri forte intelligeretur. Sed idem Millius, prol. p. 84. col. 2. inter genuinas Chrysost. lectiones recenset πρὸς τὸν πατέρα simpliciter, reliqua habet pro additamentis ex fide Hieronymi, Hilarii D. Æthiopis, Chrysost. Theophylacti, quos omnes hic rejicit."

Cap. v. 30. Ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ.] Desunt in Alex. Æthiop. At vero cum in aliis omnibus extent, non est quod de textus sinceritate hoc loco dubitemus. Ita hic. Sed prol. p. 69. col. 2. Methodius qui codice usus est probo, hæc omittit. Ita Alex. Æthiop. Quæ ad marg. adscripta, ut videtur, ex Gen. ii. 23. in textum intruserunt scribæ.

1 Thess. iii. 2. Καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν.] Recte hic omnia, nihil mutandum. Ita hic Millius. Sed prol. p. 123. col. 2. Media καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν irrepsere è margine, ubi posuerat ista adnotator quispiam, ex Rom. xvi. 21. Vulg. Alex. quos utrosque antea rejecit.

1 Tim. vi. 5. Παραδιατριβαί.] Cod. plurimi, C. Alex. Clem. Al. Gr. Scholia omnia legunt διαπαρατριβαί. Sed placet vulgatum παραδιατριβαί, et in Append. p. 54. col. 2. lege quod omnino placet, non aliter legebat in codice suo Vulg. Interpres. Sed proleg. p. 61. col. 1. placet διαπαρατριβαί, ob eosdem autores, et παραδιατριβαί, inquit notatum forte ab aliquo, ad marg. animi causa, ceu elegantius transiit in alterius locum.

19. Τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς.] V. l. τῆς ὄντως, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Hilarius D. Hieron. G. Nyssen. interpretamentum vetus, quo vita æterna describitur, sed prol. p. 77. col. 1. eosdem autores allegans, ait αἰωνίου in editis irrepsit ex v. 12. hujus cap.

2 Tim. ii. 10. Μετὰ δόξης αἰωνίου cœlesti, Vulg. et ex eo Latini, ex errore Gr. Exemplaris cujusdam, ut videtur, in quo pro αἰωνίου, scriptum erat contractim οὐνίου. Sed prol. p. 49. col. 1. μετὰ δόξης οὐρανίου, nescio an recte, contra quam olim putaveram facili mutatione οὐρανίου. Quod in MSS. libris contractim ferè scriptum οὐνίου, sciolus fecerit quispiam αἰωνίου.

Heb. x. 2. Ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν.] V. l. ἐπεὶ ἄν, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Theodoret. Photius: Mihi quidem illud ἐπεὶ ἂν maxime arridet, tanquam apostoli scopo omnino congruum. Sed prol. p. 131. col. 2. ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν utpote obscurum maxime probo.

Cap. xii. 18. Ψηλαφομένῳ ὄρει.] Omittunt ὄρει Syr. Æthiop. Clar. Ger. Sed cum retineant plerique omnes codices Græci, et vero antithesin quæ accedit inter Montem Sina et Montem Sion, hic præ oculis habeat apostolus, necesse est legamus. Sed prol. p. 105. col. 2. desunt Alex. Syr. Æthiop. Chrys. et Vulg. et certe ὄρει quod positum est jam post ψηλαφομένῳ, in plerisque cod. vix est ut olim prætermiserint scribæ; longe magis suspectum, immo probabile videtur, lectorem quempiam maxime cum hic agatur de sensibili, ac ardenti igne, qui visus erat in monte Sina, posuisse ad oram codicis, seu inter lineas ὄρει, ut esset quod alteri ὄρει, v. 22. responderet.

2 Pet. i. 12. Διὸ οὐκ ἀμελήσω.] V. l. μελλήσω οὐ μελλήσω, mihi omnino placet lectio quæ in impressis. Ita hic. Sed prol. p. 101. διὸ μελλήσω, ita Suidas, codices probi aliqui: fecit phrasis paullo durior, ut à nonnullis mutaretur in οὐ μελλήσω, ab aliis in οὐκ ἀμελήσω, quod jam locum habet in longe majori parte codicum.

Cap. iii. 3. Ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν ἡμερῶν ἐμπαῖκται.] V. l. ἐμπαιγμονῇ ἐμπαῖκται. Ita MSS. multi, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. August. Hieron, et quidem omnino Esthio assentior ita à Petro scriptum esse. Sed prol. p. 88. col. 2. mihi quidem ipsius Petri fuisse videtur ἐν ἐμπαιγμονῇ, simpliciter; quod autem hiare videretur oratio, additum a quopiam, ex epistola Judæ ἐμπαῖκται.

Jud. 6. Ὑπὸ ζόφον.] Clem. Al. Pæd. lib. iii. cap. 8. add. ἀγρίων Ἀγγέλων, codex quem secutus est Lucifer Calaritanus, pro ἀγρίων corrupte legit ἁγίων. Sed prol. p. 62. col. 1. ἀγρίων perperam pro ἁγίων.

Unicum addo in quo ipsa Millii interpretatio contradictionem involvit, viz. in hæc verba συνήχθησαν Ἡρώδης τε, καὶ Ποντιος Πιλάτος σὺν ἔθνεσι καὶ λαοῖς Ἰσραὴλ. Act. iv. 27. Inter alia plane ridicula, hæc habet Millius, prol. p. 104. col. 2. certe per ἔθνη hic intelligi Judæos (i. e. populum Israeliticum, quibuscum hæ gentes consilium inibant de morte Christi) constat ex v. 25. Nempe respondet hoc loco ἔθνεσι καὶ λαοῖς ad illud Davidis supra citatum ἐφρύαξαν ἔθνη, καὶ λαοὶ ἐμελέτησαν κενά, Psal. ii. 1. Hic autem observandum, 1mo. Millium fere continuo sententiam suam mutâsse Vulgatæ versionis gratia.

2do. Non multum tribuendum esse judicio viri adeo à semetipso dissidentis, et de his ipsis variantibus lectionibus sententiam suam postea mutantis, idque aliquoties ob ipsissima illa testimonia, et rationes, quibus antea non obstantibus, se ita sensisse indicaverat.

De lectionibus Hilarii diaconi in Epistolas Paulinas Romæ receptas, et primo de lectionibus variantibus.

EP. ad Rom. Observandum hic proœmii loco, notâsse Erasmum scribam pro suo arbitratu lusisse, non tantum in argumentis epistolarum exhibendis; sed, uti suspicatur, in ipsis commentariis; additque Simonius eos qui Latinos patres, qui ante novi fœderis librorum emendationem ab Hieronymo adornatam vixerunt, typis mandarunt, Scripturas ab iis citatas sæpius editione Hieronymiana adaptâsse, nec in hac parte Hilario Diacono pepercisse, unde haud raro contingit ut commentario textus adversetur: cujus indicium sentire mihi videor in capitis hujus primi commate ultimo, ubi textus ita se habet, prout in vulgato Hieronymi, qui cum justitiam Dei cognovissent, non intellexerunt, quoniam qui talia agunt, digni sunt morte; commentarius vero sequitur in hunc modum, usque adeo justitiam Dei cognoverunt, ut non negent hæc omnia quæ faciunt, pœnâ digna et morte.

Cap. iii. 1. Quid enim amplius est Judæo, Gr. τί οὖν, Vulg. quid ergo. Centies in Hilario occurrit enim pro ergo, et vice versa; ita v. 4. est enim Deus verax, Gr. γενέσθω δέ.

V. 25. Quem proposuit Deus propitiatorem fidei, Vulg. propitiationem per fidem, Gr. ἱλαστήριον διὰ τῆς πίστιως. Ibid. propter propositum præcedentium delictorum. Gr. διὰ τὴν πάρεσιν, Vulg. propter remissionem.

V. 26. In patientia Dei, Gr. ἐν τῇ ἀνοχῇ. Vulg. in sustentatione.

Cap. iv. 16. Ideo ex fide secundum gratiam, ut sit, Gr. διὰ τοῦτο ἐκ πίστεως, ἵνα κατὰ χάριν, Vulg. ideo ex fide, ut secundum gratiam.

V. 17. Ante cum cui credidisti Deo, Gr. κατέναντι οὗ ἐπίστευσε Θεοῦ, Vulg. ante Deum qui (p. cui) credidit.

V. 21. Quia qui promisit, Gr. ὅτι ὃ ἐπήγγελται. Vulg. quia quæcunque promisit.

Cap. v. 6. Ut quid enim; ita et Vulg. Gr. ἔτι γὰρ, ib. peccatores, Gr. ἀσθενῶν, Vulg. infirmi.

Cap. vi. 4. Per virtutem patris, Gr. διὰ τῆς δόξης, Vulg. per gloriam.

Cap. vii. 5. Hinc vitia peccatorum quæ per legem ostenduntur, Gr. τὰ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου, Vulg. passiones peccatorum quæ per legem erant.

V. 13. Quod ergo bonum est mihi, mors est? Gr. τὸ οὖν ἀγαθὸν, ἐμοὶ γέγονε θάνατος; Vulg. quod ergo bonum est mihi factum est mors?

V. 25. Gratia Dei, ita et Vulg. quod Millius in locum rejicit, Gr. εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ.

Cap. viii. 23. Nos qui receptaculum spiritus habemus, Gr. ἀπαρχὴν, Vulg. primitias.

V. 26. Spiritus adjuvat infirmitatem orationis nostræ, Gr. ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν, Vulg. nostram.

V. 10. Isaac patrem nostrum, Gr. ἐξ ἑνὸς — Ἰσαὰκ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν, Vulg. patris nostri.

Cap. xi. 1. Nunquid Deus repulit hæreditatem suam? Gr. τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ, Vulg. populum suum.

V. 25. Obtusio quædam ex parte Israel facta est, Gr. πώρωσις, Vulg. cæcitas.

Cap. xii. 2. Quæ sit voluntas Dei, quod bonum, Gr. τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸ ἀγαθόν. Vulg. bona.

V. 11. Tempori servientes, Gr. τῷ Κυρίῳ, Vulg. Domino.

V. 13. Memoriis sanctorum communicantes, Gr. ταῖς χρείαις, Vulg. necessitatibus.

Cap. xiii. 1. Omnibus potestatibus sublimioribus subditi estote, Gr. πᾶσα ψυχὴ ἐξουσίαις ὑπερεχούσαις ὑποτασσέσθω, Vulg. omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit.

Cap. xiv. 14. Ei plane qui existimat, Gr. εἰ μὴ τῷ λογιζομένῳ, Vulg. nisi ei qui existimat.

V. 23. Qui autem discernit quid ederit, Gr. ἐὰν φάγῃ, Vulg. si manducaverit.

Cap. xv. 4. Ad nostram confirmationem, Gr. διδασκαλίαν, Vulg. doctrinam.

V. 30. Ut sollicitudinem impertiamini mihi, Gr. συναγωνίσασθαί μοι, Vulg. ut adjuvetis me.

V. 31. Per voluntatem Jesu Christi, Gr. Θεοῦ, Vulg. Dei.

V. 32. Munerum meorum oblatio. Gr. ἡ διακονία μου, Vulg. obsequii mei oblatio.

Cap. xvi. 2. In quibuscunque desideraverit, Gr. ἐν ᾧ ἂν ὑμῶν χρήζῃ, Vulg. vestri indiguerit.

V. 5. Et domestica eorum Ecclesia, Gr. καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν, Vulg. domesticam.

V. 17. Contra disciplinam, Gr. παρὰ τὴν διδαχὴν, Vulg. præter doctrinam.

V. 19. Volo vos proficere ut eruditi sitis, Gr. θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς σοφοὺς εἶναι, Vulg. sapientes esse.

V. 24. Ponitur in fine Epistolæ, Gloria Domini nostri, Gr. Ἡ χάρις, Vulg. Gratia.

Epistola Prima ad Corinthios.

CAP. i. Ita ut nobis nihil desit. Gr. ὑμᾶς, Vulg. vobis.

V. 16. Cæterorum, Gr. λοιπὸν, Vulg. cæterum.

Cap. ii. 1. Mysterium Dei, Gr. τὸ μαρτύριον, Vulg. testimonium.

V. 4. In persuasione sapientiæ, Gr. ἐν πειθοῖς ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, Vulg. in persuasibilibus humanæ sapientiæ verbis.

V. 11. Quæ in Deo, Gr. τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, Vulg. quæ Dei sunt.

Cap. iii. 4. Nonne homines estis. Ita etiam Vulg. Gr. οὐχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε, et Græca Scholia omnia.

V. 13. Qui facit hoc opus manifestus erit, Gr. ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον φανερὸν γενήσεται, Vulg. uniuscujusque opus manifestum erit.

Cap. iv. 21. In caritate spiritus et mansuetudinis, Gr. ἐν ἀγάπῃ, πνεύματί τε πρᾳότητος, Vulg. in caritate et spiritu mansuetudinis.

A

CHRONOLOGICAL INDEX

TO THE

NEW TESTAMENT.

The year before Christ.	Luke ii. 6.	CHRIST our Lord and Saviour, in the fulness of time, is born of the blessed Virgin Mary at Bethlehem, and laid in a manger.
	21.	On the eighth day after his nativity he is circumcised, and named Jesus.
	Matt. ii. 1. 12.	The men of the east bring presents to the new-born King of the Jews.
	14.	Joseph flies into Egypt with the child Jesus, and Mary his mother.
	16.	Herod commands the infants in and about Beth-lehem to be slain.
	20.	Herod dieth, and his son Archelaus is by Cæsar made tetrarch of Judea; other dominions which
	Jos. Ant. l. xvii. c. 10.	belonged to Herod are divided among his sons.
	Matt. ii. 21. 23.	Christ, by God's appointment, is brought back out of Egypt into Nazareth.
		The first year of the vulgar Christian era begins here.
The year after Christ.	Luke ii. 46.	BY occasion of the Passover, our Lord goes up with his parents to Jerusalem, and there disputes with the doctors in the temple.
8.		Augustus dies, and Tiberius succeedeth him.
14.		Josephus, called Caiaphas, is made high-priest of the Jews, by the favour of Valerius Gratus, the
26.	Jos. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 3.	Roman governor.
		Towards the end of this year, Pontius Pilate is sent to be procurator of Judea, in the place of Valerius Gratus.
7.	Matt. iii. 1.	John the Baptist begins to preach and baptize in the deserts of Judea, thereby preparing the way
	Mark i. 2.	of the Lord, and doing his endeavour that Christ's coming after him may be made known unto
	Luke iii. 3.	Israel. Unto John God gives a sign whereby he may know the Lord is Christ, that upon whom he
	John i. 7.	shall see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which shall baptize with the
	Isaiah xli. 1.	Holy Ghost.
	Matt. iii. 13.	Jesus, entering upon the thirtieth year of his age, comes from Galilee to Jordan, and is baptized of
	Mark i. 13.	John: at which time a most illustrious manifestation is made of the blessed Trinity; for the Son of
	Luke iii. 22.	God ascending out of the water, and praying, the heavens are opened, and the Spirit of God, in the shape of a dove, descends upon him, and the voice of the Father is heard from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased.
	John i. 34.	John sees it, and bears record that this is the Son of God.
30.	Matt. iv. i. Mark i. 12.	Jesus, full of the Holy Ghost, returns from Jordan, and is led by the Spirit into the wilderness,
	Luke iv. 1.	where he fasteth forty days and forty nights, and is tempted by the devil.
	14.	After this our Lord returns into Galilee.
	John i. 35. 47.	John gives testimony to our Saviour, passing by him; Andrew, Peter, Philip, and Nathanael, acknowledge him to be the Messias, and become his disciples.
	ii. 1.	Christ, at a marriage in Cana of Galilee, turneth water into wine: this was his first miracle.
		The first Passover of Christ's public ministry, from which the first year of the seventieth, and last of Daniel's weeks begins: In which the covenant is confirmed with many, Dan. ix. 27. compared with Matt. xxvi. 28.
	13.	JESUS cometh to Jerusalem at the time of the Passover, and, entering into the temple, scourgeth out those that bought and sold there: the Jews require a sign of his authority; Christ bids them destroy the temple (understanding the temple of his body), and in three days he will raise it up.
	Matt. xiv. 3.	Herod the tetrarch casteth John the Baptist into prison, for reprehending the incest with his
	Mark vi. 17.	brother Philip's wife, and other evils done by him.
	Luke iii. 19.	Christ discovers himself to the woman of Samaria.
31.	John iv. 7. 42.	He goes throughout all Galilee, teaching in the synagogues, and working miracles.
	Luke iv. 43. v. 27.	Matthew called to be a disciple.
		The second Passover of Christ's ministry, John v. 1. compared with iv. 3. 5. from which the second year of the seventieth week of Daniel begins.
	John v. 1.	JESUS comes up to Jerusalem at the time of the feast, and heals on the sabbath-day a man that had an infirmity thirty-eight years, lying at the pool of Bethesda. He makes a most Divine apology to the Jews that sought to kill him, because he said that God was his Father.
	Luke vi. 13.	Christ, out of the multitude of his disciples, chooseth twelve, whom he calleth apostles; namely,

The year after Christ.
	Matth. v. vi. vii. Luke vi. 10.	Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip, Bartholomew, Matthew, Thomas, James the son of Alpheus, Simon called Zelotes, Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot. To these our Saviour chiefly directs his discourse in that glorious, full, and admirable sermon on the mount.
	ix. 1. Mark vi. 7.	Jesus sends his twelve apostles, by two and two, to preach, and heal the sick.
32.	Matt. x. 1. xix. 6.	John the Baptist is beheaded in prison by Herod's command.
	Mark vi. Luke ix. 12. John vi. 1. 15.	Jesus feeds five thousand men besides women and children, with five barley-loaves, and two little fishes. He refuses to be made a king.
		The third Passover of Christ's ministry, John vi. 4. from which the third year of the seventieth week of Daniel begins.
	Matt. xvii. 1. Mark ix. Luke ix. 28. Matt. xvii. 24. Luke ix. 51.	Jesus is transfigured on the mount; Moses and Elias are seen to walk with him, and a voice from heaven is heard a second time, saying, This is my beloved Son, hear him. Christ payeth tribute to Cæsar.
		A certain village of the Samaritans refuseth our Saviour entertainment in his way to Jerusalem: the disciples desiring to call for fire from heaven to consume them, are severely reprehended.
	x. 1.	The seventy disciples are sent out, by two and two, to work miracles, and to preach.
33.	xi. 1.	Christ teacheth his disciples to pray.
	John xi. 1. 47.	Christ raiseth Lazarus, that had been buried four days.
		Caiaphas, high-priest of the Jews, prophesieth concerning the death of Christ.
	Luke xix. 1.	Zaccheus, a publican, converted.
	Mark x. 46.	Christ restores to blind Bartimeus his sight.
	John xii. 3.	Mary, the sister of Lazarus, anoints our Saviour's feet with costly spikenard, and wipeth them with the hair of her head.
	Matt. xxi. Mark xi. Luke xix. John xii. Isa. lii. Zech. ix. 9.	Christ rideth in triumph to Jerusalem: the multitude spread their garments in the way, and cry, Hosanna to the Son of David.
		Coming near the city, he weeps over it, and foretells its destruction: he enters the temple, and casteth out those that bought and sold there, and heals the blind and lame.
	Matt. xxi. 17.	He curseth the fruitless fig-tree, and the next morning it is found dried up and withered: thence he taketh occasion to shew the power of faith.
		The fourth Passover, in which Christ our passover was sacrificed, 1 Cor. v. 7. and so an end put to legal sacrifices prefiguring this great expiation: the fourth or middle year of Daniel's last week begins, Dan. ix. 27.
	Matt. xxvi. Mark xiv. Luke xxii. John xii. xviii.	On the first day of unleavened bread, when the passover of the Jews was to be slain, (April 2.) in the evening, Jesus eateth the passover with his disciples, and institutes the sacrament of his body and blood in bread and wine.
		Christ washeth his disciples' feet, and exhorteth them to humility and charity.
		In the selfsame night Christ is betrayed by Judas, mocked, buffeted, and spit upon by the soldiers.
	Matt. xxvii. Mark xv. Luke xxiii. John xix. Psal. xxii.	Next day he is condemned by Pilate, and crucified: the sun, during the crucifixion, is darkened, and the veil of the temple rent in the midst. Christ praying for his enemies, gives up the ghost. Joseph of Arimathea begs the body, and lays it in a new sepulchre.
	Matt. xxviii. Mark xvi. Luke xxiv. John xx. Acts i.	On the third day, the next after the Jewish sabbath, (April 5.) Christ riseth from the dead: his resurrection is declared by angels to the women that came to the sepulchre. Christ first appeareth to Mary Magdalene, and afterward to his disciples, and dineth with them.
		Christ bringeth his apostles to Mount Olivet, commandeth them to expect in Jerusalem the sending down of the Holy Ghost.
	Matt. xxviii.	Sends them to teach and baptize all nations, and blesses them; and while they behold, he is taken up, and a cloud receives him out of their sight. After his ascension, the disciples are warned by two angels to depart, and to set their minds upon his second coming: they accordingly return, and, giving themselves to prayer, choose Matthias to be an apostle in the place of Judas.
	Acts ii.	On the day of Pentecost, (May 4.) the Holy Ghost descendeth on the apostles, in the form of cloven tongues, like as of fire, and enableth them to speak all languages. Peter, the same day, preacheth Christ and the resurrection, and about three thousand believers are added to the church.
	Acts iii.	Peter, by faith in Christ's name, healeth a lame man.
	iv.	The rulers of the Jews, offended at Peter's sermon, and his miraculous cure of the lame man, cast both him and John into prison: upon their examination, they boldly avouch the lame man to be healed by the name of Jesus, and that by the same Jesus we must be eternally saved. After this, the Jews forbid them to speak any more in that name: but the apostles answer, that it is fit they should obey God, rather than men. They are threatened, and let go.
	v. 1.	Ananias and Sapphira, for their hypocrisy, are suddenly struck dead.
	17.	The apostles are again cast into prison by the high-priest; but an angel sets them at liberty, and bids them preach the gospel to the people without fear: being taken again teaching in the temple, they are brought before the council, where, by the advice of Gamaliel, a pharisee and doctor of the law, they are delivered.
	vi.	The number of believers increasing at Jerusalem, the apostles ordain seven deacons, who should distribute the alms of the whole church to the widows and poorer sort of believers.
34.	vii.	Stephen, one of these deacons, having confounded some that disputed with him, is by them falsely accused of blasphemy, and brought before the council, where he reprehends their rebellion, and murdering of Christ: whereupon they cast him out of the city, and stone him; he, in the meantime, praying for them.
	Acts viii.	A great persecution of the church at Jerusalem, follows after the death of the first martyr Stephen.
	5.	Philip, one of the seven deacons, preacheth at Samaria, and converteth many; working miracles, and healing the sick.

The year after Christ.
	15.	Simon the sorcerer, seeing the wonders that are done by Philip, believeth, and is baptized. The apostles at Jerusalem, hearing that Samaria had received the faith, send thither Peter and John, to confirm and enlarge the church. The apostles, by prayer and imposition of hands, confer the Holy Ghost on all believers. Simon Magus offers them money, that he may receive power of conferring the same; whose impiety is sharply reproved by Peter.
34.		Having completed their ministry in those parts, they return to Jerusalem.
	26.	An angel sendeth Philip to teach and baptize the Æthiopian eunuch.
35.	ix. 1.	Saul, a violent persecutor of all that call on the name of Jesus, and one who consented to the death of Stephen, goes now towards Damascus, with commission from the high-priest and the council, to apprehend all Christians in those parts, and to bring them bound to Jerusalem: on the way he is miraculously converted, by a voice from heaven; and three days after, baptized by Ananias at Damascus, where he preacheth the gospel of Christ with great boldness, to the astonishment of those that knew upon what design he was sent thither.
	23.	Saul, having preached the gospel at Damascus a long time, the Jews lay wait to kill him; but he
38.	2 Cor. xi. 32.	escapeth from thence, and comes to Jerusalem; there he sees Peter, and James the brother of our
	Gal. i. 28.	Lord, and abides with them fifteen days: here he speaks boldly in the name of Jesus, and disputes with the Grecians, or rather Jews, that used the Greek tongue. These also consult how they may kill him.
38.	Acts xxii. 17.	While Saul prays in the temple he is in a trance, and the Lord appears unto him, and bids him depart from Jerusalem, because they will not receive his testimony; adding, that he will send him to the gentiles.
	Acts ix. 30.	Saul, leaving Jerusalem, goes to his own country Tarsus, and from thence travels into Syria and
	Gal. i. 21.	Cilicia.
	Acts ix. 32. 36.	Peter visits the churches of Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, &c. At Lydda he cureth Eneas of the palsy, and at Joppa restoreth Tabitha to life.
41.	x.	At Cæsarea, Cornelius, a centurion, by prayer and alms, finds favour in the sight of God, and is commanded by an angel to send for Peter now at Joppa. God, by a vision, teacheth Peter not to despise the gentiles; and being sent for by Cornelius, goes and preacheth Christ to him, and a great company that were met at his house: while Peter preacheth, the Holy Ghost falls upon them all, and immediately the apostle baptizeth them.
	xi.	Peter, at his return to Jerusalem, is accused by those of the circumcision for conversing with the gentiles; but he declares to them his vision, and the whole matter concerning Cornelius; and they glorify God, for granting to the gentiles also repentance unto life.
		The believers, who, ever since the martyrdom of Stephen and the persecution thereupon ensuing, had been dispersed throughout all Phœnice and Cyprus, come now to Antioch, and preach the gospel to the Greeks there, having before preached to none but the Jews. The church at Jerusalem understanding this, and that the number of believers increased exceedingly, sends Barnabas thither to confirm them: he goes to Tarsus, and takes Saul along with him to Antioch, where they continue a whole year, converting multitudes to the faith. Here the disciples were first called Christians.
44.	xii.	About this time, James the brother of John is beheaded, by the command of Herod Agrippa: he also imprisoneth Peter, whom an angel delivers, upon the prayers of the church. This same Herod not long after speaking to the people at Cæsarea, some of them cry out, It is the voice of God, and not of man; and immediately an angel of the Lord smites him, because he gave not the glory to God, and he is eaten of worms, and dieth.
45.	xiii.	Barnabas and Saul set forward in their preaching of the gospel: they plant the Christian faith in Selencia, Cyprus, and other places. At Paphos they preach the gospel to Sergius Paulus, governor of that country; Elymas the sorcerer withstanding them, and endeavouring to turn away Sergius from the faith, is, at Saul's rebuke, struck blind. From this time Saul is always called by his new name, Paul: he preacheth at Antioch; the gentiles believe, but the Jews gainsay and blaspheme; whereupon, he and his assistants turn to the gentiles, and come to Iconium.
46.	xiv.	At Iconium they are persecuted, and ready to be stoned: from hence they fly to Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia. At Lystra, Paul healing a cripple, the multitude cry out, that the gods are come down; and call Barnabas, Jupiter, and Paul, Mercurius; and would have sacrificed to them, had not the apostles, with clothes rent, run in amongst them, and assured them, that they were men like themselves. Soon after there came Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who excite the people against them. Paul is by the furious multitude stoned, and drawn out of the city, as
	2 Cor. xi. 5.	dead; but whilst the disciples stand about him, he riseth up, and the next day departs with Barnabas to Derbe.
	2 Cor. xii.	In this year, perhaps at this very time, Paul was caught up into the third heaven, and heard unspeakable words, fourteen years before he wrote his Second Epistle to the Corinthians.
	2 Tim. i. 2. 5.	About this time Timothy, though a child, with his mother Eunice, and his grandmother Lois, embrace the Christian faith preached by Paul.
52.	Acts xv.	Certain Judaizing Christians come from Judea to Antioch, and teach, that the gentiles ought to be circumcised, and observe the law of Moses: these Paul and Barnabas oppose; and a council is held by the apostles and others at Jerusalem to determine this controversy. The decrees of the synod are sent to the churches.
53.	36.	Paul and Barnabas, thinking to visit the churches together, fall at strife, and part asunder: Barnabas and Mark go into Cyprus; Paul and Silas into Syria and Cilicia.
	xvi.	Paul coming to Derbe, finds there Timothy, whom (because his mother was a believing Jew, though his father a gentile,) he caused to be circumcised, and takes along with him.
		He is, by a vision, admonished to go into Macedonia: coming to Philippi, the chief city of that part of Macedonia, he converts Lydia; casteth out of a certain maid-servant a spirit of divination, whose master losing a considerable gain thereby, brings Paul and Silas before the magistrates: these cause them to be whipped, and imprisoned; but at midnight, Paul and Silas singing psalms, the doors of the prison fly open, and their bonds are loosed: the jailor, ready to kill himself, is converted to

The year after Christ.
	Acts xvii.	the faith, and baptized the same night, with his whole family. Next day the magistrates come themselves, and pray them to depart the city.
54.		From Philippi, Paul takes his journey through Amphipolis and Apollonia, and comes to Thessalonica, where he finds a synagogue of the Jews, there he preacheth three sabbath-days; some believe, others persecute him: leaving Thessalonica, he comes to Berea, and soon after arrives at Athens, disputes with the philosophers, and declares unto them, that UNKNOWN GOD whom they had ignorantly worshipped. He converts Dionysius the Areopagite, and thence passeth to Corinth.
55.	xviii.	Paul at Corinth meets with Aquila and Priscilla, not long before banished from Rome by the decree of Claudius. Here he continues a year and six months, and thence writes to the Thessalonians.
	18.	Paul is accused by the Jews, and brought before Gallio, proconsul of Achaia, who refuseth to be a judge in a controversy about religion, and so drives them away from the judgment-seat.
56.		Paul departs from Corinth, and passeth to Ephesus; thence he sets out towards Jerusalem, that he may be at the feast; he lands at Cæsarea, goes down to Antioch, and comes into the regions of Galatia and Phrygia, confirming the disciples in all those places.
57.	xix.	Paul returns to Ephesus, disputes daily in the school of Tyrannus, and continues preaching there,
58.		and in the parts thereabouts. He writes his Epistle to the Galatians.
59.		At Ephesus, Demetrius, a silversmith, jealous of his gain, raiseth a tumult against Paul, which is appeased by the town-clerk.
	1 Cor. i. 11. xvi. 8.	About this time a schism ariseth in the church of Corinth, which causeth Paul (now in or about Ephesus) to write his First Epistle to the Corinthians.
60.	Acts xx.	Paul departs from Ephesus, and comes into Macedonia, and gathers a contribution for the relief
	2 Cor. viii. 1, 2. 6. 19.	of the saints at Jerusalem.
	1 Cor. xvi. 5.	The apostle having learned from Titus the success of his First, writes now his Second Epistle to the Corinthians: out of Macedonia he goes into Greece, and comes to Corinth, where he writes his Epistle to the Romans.
	Acts xx. 3, 4.	Paul purposing to go directly from thence into Syria, that he may carry the collections to Jerusalem, the Jews lay wait for him; he understanding this, thinks it best to return into Macedonia the same way he came, and thence to pass into Asia.
	6.	After the days of unleavened bread, Paul sails from Philippi, and comes to Troas; there he restores Eutychus to life. Having passed through several cities of Greece, he arrives at Miletus, from thence he sends to call the elders of the church of Ephesus, whom he earnestly exhorts to the performance of their duty.
61.	xxi.	Paul comes to Jerusalem, is apprehended in the temple, and secured in the castle; he claimeth the privilege of a Roman, and escapeth scourging.
	xxii. xxiii.	Paul pleaded his cause before Ananias the high-priest. The chief captain, understanding that above forty Jews had bound themselves under a curse neither to eat nor drink till they had killed him, sends him to Felix the governor of the province, by whom he is imprisoned at Cæsarea.
62.	xxiv.	Paul is accused before Felix, by Tertullus the orator. Felix goes out of his office, and, to gratify the Jews, leaves Paul in prison. Portius Festus succeeds him in the government.
	xxv.	The Jews come to Cæsarea, and accuse Paul before Festus. He answers for himself, and appeals to Cæsar. King Agrippa comes to Cæsarea, and Festus opens the matter to him.
63.	xxvi.	Paul makes his defence in the presence of Agrippa, who thereby is almost persuaded to be a Christian; and the whole company pronounce him innocent.
	xxviii.	Paul comes to Rome, is a prisoner at large, and preacheth there two years.
		Here ends the history of the Acts of the Apostles, written by St. Luke, St. Paul's beloved companion in his travels.
		St. Paul, from Rome, writes his Epistles, To the Philippians; To Philemon; To the Colossians; To the Ephesians.
65.	Heb. xiii. 24.	About the latter end of this year, St. Paul is set at liberty; and a little before his departure out of Italy into Asia he writes his Epistle to the Hebrews.
		He preacheth the gospel in the isle of Crete, and leaves Titus there, to set things in order, and ordain elders in every city.
	Tit. i. 5.	St. Paul writes his Epistle, To Timothy I. To Titus; To Timothy II.
66.		About this time, the Epistles of St. Peter, St. John, and St. Jude, seem to be written.
67.	Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 24.	St. Peter and St. Paul are said to have suffered martyrdom at Rome, towards the latter end of Nero's reign.
70.	Luke xix. 43, 44.	This year, Jerusalem (according to Christ's prophecy) is besieged, taken, sacked, and burnt by Titus, eleven hundred thousand of Jews perish, ninety-seven thousand are taken prisoners, besides an innumerable company that in other places of Judea killed themselves, or perish through famine, banishment, and other miseries.
96.		St. John is banished into the isle of Patmos, by Domitian, and there receives and writes his Revelation.
		After the death of Domitian, St. John returns to Ephesus, and, at the request of the church, writes his Gospel.

AN

OF

ALL THE PLACES MENTIONED IN THE GOSPELS, ACTS, OR THE EPISTLES.

1. ABYLENE is one of the four tetrarchies, mentioned Luke iii. 1. It fell, say St. Luke and Josephus,[a] to the share of Lysanias: it was so named from the city Abyla in Cœlosyria, mentioned by Pliny,[b] and from the tetrarch of it bore his name; for, saith Ptolemy, Ἄβιλα ἐπικληθεῖσα Λυσανίου, Abila bears the name of Lysanias.

2. ACHAIA, in the largest sense, comprehends Greece properly so called, and so is bounded on the west by Epirus, on the east by the Ægean Sea, on the north by Macedonia, on the south by Peloponnesus; and so it seems to signify, when St. Paul, according to the Roman acceptation, mentions all the regions of Achaia, and directs his Second Epistle to all the saints in Achaia, 2 Cor. xi. 10. Thus what is Achaia, Acts xix. 21. is Hellas, i. e. Greece, Acts xx. 2. and so Mela speaks of it. Secondly, Achaia, strictly so called, is the northern region of Peloponnesus, bounded on the north by the gulf of Corinth, on the south with Arcadia, on the east with Sycionia, and on the west with the Ionian Sea.

3. ACELDAMA was a place without the south wall of Jerusalem, beyond the river of Siloam, and was called the potter's field, Matt. xxvii. 7. 10. because they dug thence the earth of which they made their pots; and the fuller's field, because they dried their cloth there; but being afterward bought, by that money by which the high-priest and rulers of the Jews purchased the blood of the holy Jesus, it was, by the providence of God so ordering it, called Aceldama, that is, the field of blood, Acts i. 19. Matt. xxvii, 7, 8.

4. ADRAMYTTIUM (mentioned Acts xxvii. 2. where it is said, that St. Paul entered into a ship of Adramyttium) is, by St. Jerome[c] and others, said to be a city of Egypt, built by Alexander M. as a monument of his triumphs, at the Canobic mouth of the river Nile, from which it received its water, and is by Livy, the old Etymologus, and Phavorinus, made to be[d] the same with Thebes; but it was rather Adramyttium in Mysia, mentioned by Strabo, lib. xiii. p. 417. by Pliny, lib. v. cap. 30. p. 298. and by Mela, lib. i. cap. 18. lib. xvii. For in this ship, St. Paul and his company sailed from Cæsarea to Myra in Lycia, the direct way to Adramyttium in Mysia, ver. 5. whither she being bound, and not to Italy, they there quit her, and finding a ship of Alexandria sailing to Italy, went aboard her, ver. 6.

5. ADRIA is mentioned Acts xxvii. 27. where St. Paul saith, that they were tossed in Adria: he saith, not in the Adriatic gulf, which ends with the Illyrican Sea, but in the Adriatic Sea, which, saith Hesychius, is the same with the Ionian Sea. And therefore to the question, How St. Paul's ship, which was near Malta, and so either in the Lybian or Sicilian Sea, could be in the Adriatic? it is well answered, That not only the Ionian, but even the Sicilian Sea, and part of that which washeth upon Crete, was called the Adriatic. Thus Ptolemy saith, that Sicily was bounded on the east, [e] ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἀδρίου, by the Adriatic; and that Crete was compassed on the west, [f] ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἀδριατικοῦ πελάγους, by the Adriatic Sea; and Strabo saith, [g] that the Ionian gulf, μέρος ἐστὶ τοῦ νῦν Ἀδρίου λεγομένου, is a part of that which in his time was called the Adriatic Sea.

6. ÆNON, or ENON, signifies the place of springs, which made it a convenient place for St. John's baptism, John iii. 23. it is uncertain where it was, whether in Galilee, or Judea, or Samaria, where Lubin places it, viz. in the half tribe of Manasseh, within Jordan.

7. ALEXANDRIA, that noble mart, whence merchandises were carried through all the world, was, after the destruction of Carthage, the chief city in the world, next to Rome, and was therefore called emphatically, [h] Πόλις, as that was called Urbs; and Athens, Ἄστυ. The Ptolemies of Egypt, choosing it as their seat, beautified it to that degree, that it gave place to Rome only; and the Romans, when they had taken it, were careful to preserve its splendour, divers emperors adding new ornaments to it, and confirming its privileges. It was a large city, saith Josephus,[i] in length thirty furlongs, in breadth ten, which provided Rome with four months corn; and paid as much tribute to it in a month, as Jerusalem did in a year. Here was a celebrated academy, which bred famous physicians and philosophers, as Philo the Jew, and historians; and a great library, collected by Ptolemy Philadelphus, containing five hundred thousand volumes, and consumed in the wars betwixt Cæsar and Pompey: near to it is the island of Pharos, where some deceitful Jews shewed J. Martyr the remains of the cells, where the Seventy-two interpreters translated the Hebrew Bible into Greek, apart, and yet in the same words; of which see the preface to St. Matthew. Here dwelt the Jews in vast numbers; Alexander M. for the service they did him in his wars, permitting them to dwell there, and giving them equal privileges with the gentiles: here they had many synagogues, a famous cathedral of seventy stalls, and afterward a temple built by Onias; but they found the Alexandrians their constant enemies, they cruelly murdering many thousand of them in the time of Cajus, of which Philo gives a large account in his embassy to him; and fifty thousand of them in the time of Nero, saith Josephus, de Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. 36.

8. ÆTHIOPIA is only mentioned in the history of the baptism of the eunuch, Acts viii. 27. where I have shewed, the evangelist speaks not of Æthiopia in Arabia, where the queen of Sheba dwelt, but of Æthiopia in Africa, under Egypt, where Candace had been long the name of their queen; whence Strabo [k] makes mention of a Candace, ἡ καθ' ἡμᾶς ἦρξε τῶν Αἰθιόπων, who in his time was queen of Æthiopia, and Dio [l] of the same Candace living in Æthiopia under Egypt. See the note on Acts viii. 27.

9. AMPHIPOLIS, mentioned Acts xvii. 1. is a city of Macedonia, in the confines of Thrace, so called, saith Thucydides,[m] because the river compasseth it about. Suidas, who places it, as others do, in Thracia, says it was also formerly called the Nine Ways. See Mr. Wells's Geogr. p. 134. and Stephanus de Urbibus.

10. ANTIOCHIA, the metropolis of Syria, was built, say some, by Antiochus Epiphanes; say others, by Seleucus Nicanor, the first king of Syria after Alexander M. in memory of his father Antiochus, and was[n] the royal seat of the kings of Syria, or the place where the palace was: for power and dignity, saith Strabo,[o] it is not much inferior to Seleucia, or Alexandria: it was, saith Josephus,[p] the third great city of all that belonged to the Roman provinces; it was called Antiochia apud Daphnem, near Daphne, i. e. the village where her temple was, to distinguish it from the other fourteen mentioned by Stephanus de Urbibus, and by Eustathius in Dionys. p. 170. or, as others, and among them Appianus in Syriacis, sixteen cities in Syria, and elsewhere, which bore that name. It was celebrated among the Jews for the jus civitatis, which Seleucus Nicanor had given to them in that city with the Grecians and Macedonians, and which, saith Josephus,[p] they still retained; and for the wars of the Maccabeans with those kings: among Christians, for being the place where they first received that name, and where both St. Luke and Theophilus were born, and inhabited. There was also another Antioch in Pisidia, mentioned Acts xiii. 14.

11. ANTIPATRIS; this place was formerly called Capharsalama, 1 Maccab. vii. 31. and was of little repute till it was rebuilt by Herod in the plain of Capharzaba, which, saith Josephus,[q] was watery, and fit for plants, with a river, and a grove compassing the city; it was eighteen miles from Jerusalem, and in the way to Cæsarea Palestine, Acts xxiii. 31. and within the borders of Samaria, and the half tribe of Manasseh.

12. APOLLONIA was a city of Macedonia, lying betwixt Amphipolis and Thessalonica: for, saith St. Luke, when we had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, we came to Thessalonica. Geographers say there were fourteen cities, and two islands of that name, and Stephanus reckons twenty-five.

13. ARABIA is only mentioned by St. Paul, saying, that after his conversion, he went first into Arabia, Gal. i. 17. where some make him to have stayed three years, without any business he did there, that they knew of, and without any ground; for both the design of St. Paul, which was to prove, that he received not his gospel from man, but from the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ, and his declaration, that he preached first at Damascus, and then at Jerusalem, Acts xxvi. 20. seem to make it no improbable conjecture, that as Christ, after his baptism, went immediately into the wilderness of Judea, so did St. Paul, after his baptism, go into Arabia Deserta, where he received his knowledge of that gospel which he preached by revelation from Christ Jesus, and thence returning to Damascus, Gal. i. 17. he straightway preached Christ at Damascus, Acts ix. 20. and so continued to do many days, or a considerable time, ver. 23. We read also of Cretes and Arabians, Acts ii. 11. where by Cretes some think we are not to understand the inhabitants of Crete, that island being far from Arabia, but the Cherithim, a Philistine nation and country, rendered Κρῆτες by the Septuagint, Ezek. xxv. 16. Zeph. ii. 5, 6. But Libya and Rome, mentioned ver. 10. were at a greater distance. The Arabians were anciently called Ishmaelites and Hagarenes, the first from Ishmael the son of Hagar, the second from Mount Hagar in Arabia. (See note on Gal. iv. 25.) This large country reaching from Euphrates to Egypt, was divided into three parts; Arabia Deserta, so called probably from the word Araba, which signifies desert, which lay full east of Judea, and is called by Strabo,[r] Schenitis, by reason of the tents in which that wandering nation dwelt; and the inhabitants of it are in Scripture called the men of the east, Gen. xxv. 6. Judg. vi. 3. having Syria on the west, Mesopotamia on the north, Arabia Felix on the east, and Petræa on the south. 2. Petræa, so called from the rockiness of it, or from the strong city Petra, built on a rock, whence the Soldans keep their treasure in it; and in this Arabia was Mount Sinai, where the law was given. 2dly, It hath Palestine and Arabia Deserta on the north, on the east and south Arabia Felix, on the west part of Egypt and the Arabian gulf. 3dly, Arabia Felix, lying betwixt the Persian gulf and the Red Sea, a fertile country, producing laudanum, myrrh, cassia, and many other drugs and spices, celebrated on that account not only by the poets (see Lloyd's Dictionary), but by Dionysius P. and Eustathius[s] upon him, by Strabo, Pliny, Herodotus, and Q. Curtius; and that part of it especially, saith Strabo, p. 535. which is the most happy nation of the Sabeans, and where is gold, which the Arabian magi brought with them when they came to Christ. See the note on Matt. ii. 1.

14. ASIA, as it is mentioned by ancient geographers, is one of the largest divisions of the world into three parts; but in the New Testament it is taken for Asia Minor only, as it contains the Proconsular Asia consisting of four regions, of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, and Lydia, saith Cicero:[t] of which see Bishop Usher in his treatise of the Lesser Asia. In this Proconsular Asia were the seven churches, mentioned in the Revelation, chap. ii. iii.

15. ASSOS, Acts xx. 13. is a town in Troas; for St. Paul went from Troas to it. It is memorable, saith Pliny,[u] for the lapis sarcophagus, which burns up and consumes flesh; of which see Vossius in P. Melam. p. 88, 89. Besides this, there seems to have been another Assos in Crete, of which see the note on Acts xxvii. 13.

16. ATHENS was a city of Greece properly so called, and of the subdivision of it named Achaia; it was so called from Ἀθήνη, i. e. Minerva, to whom it was consecrated. In it was a celebrated academy, which, saith Cornelius Nepos,[x] for antiquity, humanity, and learning, made it excel all the cities of the world; whose inhabitants, saith Cicero,[y] were the inventors of all learning, the men who invented and perfected eloquence, and from whom humanity, learning, religion, and laws, were dispersed through the whole world; but then to qualify these commendations, he adds, they only knew what was right, but would not do it; they were, saith Plutarch,[z] suspicious and vain-glorious; they were, saith the apostle, δεισιδαιμονέστεροι, very superstitious, and great worshippers of idols, and so were vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. See the note on Acts xvii. 16. 22. and Dr. Hammond there, and Lloyd in voce.

17. ATTALIA was a city of Pamphylia, built by king Attalus, whence St. Paul goes from Perga in Pamphylia to it, Acts xiv. 25. It was a sea-port, and the chief residence of the prefect. Strabo, lib. xiv. p. 459.

18. AZOTUS, the Ashdod of the Philistines, where the ark of God triumphed over their Dagon, 1 Sam. v. 2. and where Jonathan[a] having routed the army of Apollonius, burnt both their god and their temple, and all who fled to it for refuge. It lay about thirty miles distant from Gaza towards Joppa, so that the angel, when he caught up Philip, Acts viii. 40. carried him so many miles. It was in the tribe of Dan, and lay in the middle between Acaron and Geth.

1. BABYLON. By Babylon, the Jews understand not only Chaldea, but also Mesopotamia, Assyria, and even all those kingdoms to which they were carried in the Babylonian captivity: and for this they have ground from the scriptures of the Old Testament, which extend that name to the whole empire of Babylon; as when the destruction of Babylon is represented as the destruction, ὅλης τῆς οἰκουμένης, of the whole empire, Isa. xii. 9. 11. and from the use of the word among the heathens: for Pliny saith, Babylon, of the Chaldaic nation, had long the eminency over the whole world,[b] on which account the rest of Mesopotamia and Assyria was reckoned a part of it. I have shewed, note on 1 Pet. v. 13. that, according to the fathers, the name of Babylon was given to Rome by St. Peter, and, according to the same fathers, the name of mystical Babylon[c] was given to her also, partly for her greatness, pride, and oppression of God's people, and partly for her resemblance of it in idolatry, that kingdom so fully representing the idolatry of the church of Rome in the description given of it in the sixth chapter of Baruch, that scarce any real difference betwixt them can be observed.

2. BEREA, mentioned Acts xvii. 10. is a city of Macedonia;[d] a great and populous city, saith Lucian. This was the city to which Paul and Silas fled from Thessalonica, and where they found a synagogue of the best-natured Jews and proselytes they met with; for they received the word with all readiness, and examined it by the best test of truth, the Scriptures; and so the converts there were many of both sorts, ver. 11, 12.

3. BITHYNIA is a region of Asia Minor,[e] bounded on the north with the Euxine Sea, on the south with Phrygia, on the west with the Propontis, on the east with Galatia. It was anciently called Bebraica and Mygdonia, say Servius,[f] Solinus, and Mart. Capella, and afterward Bithynia, from Bithynus the king of it, say most geographers; from bethen, the belly or interior parts, saith Bochart; both Pliny[g] and Mela representing them as possessing the inward parts of that region only. The old geographer, published by Gothofred, styles them[h] "the greatest and most happy nation," in which the first general council of Nice was held.

4. BETHABARA signifies a place or passage. It was a water distinct from Jordan, and removed somewhat from it, John i. 28. x. 40. to which men passed over Jordan; the town was out of the precincts of Judea, in the Sithopolitan country, where the Jews dwelt among the Syro-Grecians, and was over against Galilee: so Dr. Lightfoot; over-against Jericho, Josh. iii. 16.

5. BETHANY took its name from a tract of ground so called from Athene, which signifies the dates of palm-trees, which grew there plentifully: the town of Bethany where Lazarus dwelt, and where he was raised from the dead, was fifteen furlongs from Jerusalem, John xi. 8. but the tract of ground that bore that name reached within eight furlongs of Jerusalem, it being only a sabbath-day's journey from it, Luke xxiv. 50. Acts i. 12. and then began the tract called Bethphage, from the Phagi; i. e. the green figs which grew upon it, which ran along so near to Jerusalem, that the outmost street within the walls was called by that name. St. Jerome saith there was Villula, a little village there, of the same name.

6. BETH-LEHEM, the house of bread, was the place where Christ, the bread of life, was born, as the Jerusalem Gemarists confess: it was a city in the time of Boaz, for he styles it the city of his people, Ruth iii. 11. and goes up to the gates of it, iv. 1. It was a city fortified by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 6. It is called, David's city, 1 Sam. xx. 6. 29. And therefore when every tribe and family went up to their respective cities to be taxed, Luke ii. 3. Joseph goes up to this city of David, ver. 4. Though therefore it be called by the Jews κώμη, a town or village, John vii. 42. that only signifies, that, being one of the least cities, it might comparatively be called so, as Nain is by Josephus, vide Nain; and the Hebrew עִיר a city, is often rendered by the Seventy κώμη, where our translation speaks of cities, as Joshua x. 37. xv. 9. 1 Chron. xxvii. 25. Isa. xlii. 11. It might be after the destruction of Jerusalem, a village, as it is twice called by Justin Martyr.[i] In St. Jerome it is sometimes a city, and sometimes a village, but then, that he styles it only comparatively a village, may be gathered from his own words[k] on Micah v. 2.

7. BETHESDA, the pool of Bethesda is the same with the pool of Siloam, of which see there, and note on John v. [1] [2] It was a pool in Jerusalem, saith St. Jerome, and had the name προβατικὴ, the sheep-pool, from the sacrifices washed there by the priests; he adds, that there is yet a lake there[l] whose waters are very red, as if mixed with blood, giving testimony of what was done there of old. Dr. Lightfoot saith, these sacrifices were washed elsewhere, and that the unclean washed in this pool; and whilst they did so, laid up their clothes in one of the porches. Of the miracles wrought there by the angel descending, and of the miracle wrought by our Lord, see the note there.

8. BETHSAIDA, saith Bochart, is a place of fishing, as it might be called, because situated, saith Pliny,[m] on the east of the lake Gennesareth; in Batunea, and the lower Gaulonitis, saith Josephus,[n] at the beginning of the mountainous country. It is a place of hunting, saith Dr. Lightfoot, so called because it stood near Naphtali, where there were store of deer, Naphtali abounding in venison, Gen. xlix. 21. It was raised by Philip, from a village, to the honour of a city, and called Julia in honour of the emperor's daughter. It was one of the cities against which Christ denounced a woe, Matt. xi. 21. for her impenitence and infidelity, after the mighty works he had done in her: it also was the city where three apostles dwelt; viz. Philip, Andrew, and Peter, John i. 45.

1. CANA. There were two Canas besides Galilee; one in the tribe of Asher, Josh. xix. 28. called by St. Jerome, Cana the great; another in the tribe of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 8. xvii. 9. and two in Galilee, the one in the north part of the lower Galilee, and dividing it from the upper; and Cana of Galilee, or the less, situated over against Julius Betharampta, on the west of Capernaum, whence Christ, after he had wrought his first miracle there, went down to Capernaum, John ii. 12. and when he was returned thither, the nobleman comes from Capernaum to him there, John iv. 46, 47. Of this Cana Josephus speaks, saying, ἐν κώμῃ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ἡ προσαγορεύεται Κάνα,[o] in a village of Galilee which was called Cana.

2. CANAAN was twofold: the larger terminated on the south part with the desert of Sin or Cades, on the north with Mount Libanus and Antilibanus, on the east with the river Euphrates, and with the Mediterranean Sea on the west: so Deut. xi. 24. Josh. i. 3, 4. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon that have I given you: from the wilderness (of Paran) and (or, even to) Libanus, and to the great river Euphrates, and to the great sea shall your coast be; accordingly Joshua saith, God gave to Israel all the land which he sware to give to their fathers, and they possessed it and dwelt in it, Josh. xxi. 43. 45. and xxiii. 14. There failed not any good thing which the Lord had spoken to the house of Israel; all came to pass. How this could be said by him who had left so much of the seven nations unsubdued, Judg. i. and who divided not to them the whole land of Canaan, but only that part of it which was possessed by the seven nations, is a great question; to which the usual answer is, that he gave them a right to the whole country, dividing it among them by a lot ordered and directed by him, and he gave them the actual possession of the greatest part of it, with power to subdue the rest if they continued obedient; and more was not intended presently, the Lord not having promised to give them the whole land at once, they being not sufficient to people the whole country, but by degrees, as their increase should make them ready for, and their obedience should continue their right to it: for thus saith God by Moses, Exod. xxiii. 29. I will not drive them out before thee in one year, lest the land become desolate, and the beasts of the field multiply against thee; but by little and little I will drive them out before thee, until thou be increased to inherit the land. To which may be added, that Joshua gave them all the land their feet had trod on, and more God did not promise to them in the words cited from him.

CANAAN the less is extended from the wilderness in the south to Libanus in the north, and from Jordan on the east to the Midland Sea on the west, the length of it being one hundred and sixty miles, the breadth of it only fifty; and it is thus described, Gen. x. 19. The borders of the Canaanites (i. e. the seven nations of them voted to destruction) were from Sidon (i. e. the country of Sidon, which extendeth itself east as far as Jordan), as thou comest to Gerar unto Guza; and (the southern border is) as thou goest to Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, even unto Lasha, i. e. the Λάσσα in Josephus,[p] towards Arabia Petræa. See Bochart. Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 37.

3. CAPERNAUM was a city seated near to the sea of Galilee, at the bottom of the lake of Gennesareth; for Christ's disciples came from the wilderness of Bethsaida over the lake to the land of Gennesareth, Matt. xiv. 34. Mark vi. 46. and yet to Capernaum, John vi. 16. 24. It was in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim, Matt. iv. 13. renowned on the account of Christ's habitation and his many miracles, which brought woe upon them for their infidelity, Matt. xi. 23. Near this town was the mountain where Christ preached his excellent sermon, for coming down thence he went to Capernaum, Matt. viii. 5. i. e. a journey of ten miles, if Thabor was that mount, as it is conjectured by St. Jerome on the place; and near it also was the custom-house at which Matthew the publican sat when Christ called him, for he called him as he passed from his own city, Matt. ix. 1. 9.

4. CAPPADOCIA was a kingdom bounded on the [q] east with Armenia, on the west with Paphlagonia and Galatia, on the north with the Euxine Sea, on the south with that part of Mount Taurus which looks towards Cilicia: it was famed for [r] mules and horses, of which it gave yearly to the Persians, horses one thousand five hundred, mules two thousand. It was a nation so servile, saith Strabo,[s] that when the Romans offered them their freedom to live by their own laws, they said they could not endure liberty; they were, saith Cicero, de grege venalium. Orat. post red. in Senat. N. 12.

5. CÆSAREA PALESTINE, so called, as being the metropolis of Palestine and the seat of the Roman proconsul, was formerly named the Tower of Strato; but being a mart-town, whose haven was very incommodious, Herod the Great built there a large city with many [a] stately marble buildings, a theatre of stone, and a most capacious amphitheatre, (where Herod Antipas was smitten by an angel of God: see the note on Acts xii. 23.) and an admirable haven, with marble edifices and towers, the greatest of which he called Drusus, in honour of the emperor's son; the city Cæsarea, in honour of Cæsar: it was situated between Doron and Joppa, thirty-five miles from Jerusalem, and was inhabited [b] partly by the Jews, who had their schools there; but chiefly by the Greeks or Syrians, betwixt whom there were fends, περὶ τῆς ἰσοπολιτείας, concerning equal privileges, the Cæsareans killing about one thousand two hundred Jews, when Florus was procurator of Judea. Here Peter converted Cornelius and his kinsmen, the first-fruits of the gentiles, Acts x. here lived Philip the evangelist, Acts xxi. 8. and here Paul defended himself against the Jews and their orator Tertullus, Acts xxiv.

6. CÆSAREA PHILIPPI, mentioned Matt. xvi. 13. Mark viii. 27. was first called Lais or Lashem, Judg. xviii. 7. and when subdued by the Danites, Dan. v. 29. It was built by Philip the tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis, Luke iii. 1. who made it the place of his residence, as being conveniently seated between both. He built it, saith Josephus, [x] at Paneas, by the springs of Jordan, and called it Cæsarea Philippi, and also Nerodiada in honour of Nero. It was seated at the springs of Jordan the less, not far from Libanus in the midland Phœnicia, saith Ptolemy, and was a Decapolitan city called Cæsarea-Panias, or Sub-Panio; not because of the worship of Panius Philostorgius, or by reason of the springs of Paneas, as Pliny, [y] but by reason of the mountain Panius mentioned by Josephus and Eusebius, under which it lies. What Eusebius saith of the two statues of Corinthian brass, erected here by the woman cured at Capernaum of the bloody flux, see confuted in the note on Mark v. 26.

7. CEDRON. Of the brook Cedron, which our Lord passed over to go into the garden where he was betrayed, John xviii. 1. mention is made when David fled from Absalom, for he passed over the brook Kidron, 2 Sam. xv. 23. and when king Solomon saith to Shimei, In the day that thou passest over the brook Kidron thou shalt surely die. See also Jer. xxxi. 40. where the Septuagint always speaks of Κέδρων, or τῶν Κέδρων, in the plural; it was, saith Jerome, [z] a torrent or valley near to Jerusalem, on the east side betwixt it and Mount Olivet; a deep valley, saith Josephus: [a] and into this valley was conveyed the blood poured out at the foot of the altar, which because it made the river look black, some think it was called Cedron from the word kiddar, which signifies blackness; others from the cedar-trees planted on each side, whence, say they, it is still named in the plural, τῶν Κέδρων, from these cedar-trees.

8. CHALDEA, is only mentioned in these words, Acts vii. 4. And Abraham came out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran, where, by the land of the Chaldeans, we are not to understand the country so named in Asia Major, which was in the plain, but a mountainous country, which is part of Mesopotamia, as appears from these words; God appeared to Abraham while he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, ver. 2. then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran. That both this Charran and Chaldea lay in Mesopotamia, see Bochart Phaleg. lib. ii. cap. 6. and the note on Acts vii. 4.

9. CENCHREA was the Isthmus of Corinth, distant seventy furlongs from it, where were celebrated the Isthmian games; whence the apostle, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, speaks so oft in allusion to these games: see notes on 1 Epist. ix. [a] [9] [10] 2 Epist. iv. 7—9. Hence he tells them of a corruptible crown for which they wrestled, their coronets being either of the σέλινον, parsley, which quickly withered, or of πίτυς the pine-tree, which soon decayed.

10. CLAUDA, Acts xxvii. 16. was an island near Crete, situated at the meeting of the southern and the western sea, of which geographers say nothing, unless it be the Gaudus mentioned by Pliny, lib. iv. cap. 12. and by Mela, lib. ii. cap. 7.

11. CHIOS, Acts x. 15. is an island of the Ægean Sea, betwixt Lesbos and Samos, celebrated by Horace [b] and Martial [c] for the wine and figs that came from thence, and also by Pliny, lib. v. cap. 31. and Strabo, lib. xiv. p. 444. for its marble and white earth.

12. CILICIA, a country of Asia Minor, betwixt Pamphilia on the west, and Pieria on the east, the Mount Taurus on the north, and the Cilician Sea on the south, celebrated on the account of Cicero, proconsul there, but more on the account of St. Paul's birth at Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, Acts xxi. 15.

13. COLOSSE, was a city of Phrygia Major, built by the river Licus, near the place, saith Herodotus, [d] where it begins to run under ground, as it doth for five furlongs before it rises again, and slides into Meander. To this city, situated at an equal distance betwixt Laodicea and Hierapolis, mentioned Colos. ii. 1. came Xerxes in his expedition against Greece, and to this city St. Paul writ an Epistle. [e] All these three cities perished by an earthquake, saith Eusebius, in the tenth of Nero, that is, but two years after St. Paul's Epistle was sent to them.

14. COOS, Acts xxi. 1. was an island in the Ægean or Icarian Sea, near Mindus or Cnidus, which had a city of the same name, from which Hippocrates the celebrated physician, and Apelles the famous limner, were called Coi: here was a large temple of Æsculapius, and another of Juno: it abounded in rich wines, and here were made those Coæ vestes which were transparent, and are so often mentioned by the poets.

15. CHORAZIN, saith St. Jerome, is a town in Galilee, which our Lord deplores for her incredulity, Matt. xii. 22. Dr. Lightfoot wonders how such a woe should be denounced against it, when we read not, in the whole New Testament, that our Lord had ever been there; but that our Lord was frequently at Bethsaida and Capernaum, copartners in that woe, we read: now Chorazin being by Dr. Lightfoot placed betwixt them, and being, saith St. Jerome, [f] but two miles distant from Capernaum, and in many maps but little distant from Bethsaida, and it being said expressly, that mighty works were done in her, doubtless Christ must have been often there.

16. CNIDUS, mentioned Acts xxvii. 7. was a city and promontory in the peninsula of Paria, celebrated for the worship of Venus, hence called Venus Cnidia; whence Horace [g] sings thus, O Venus regina Cnidi; and for the statue of Venus made by Praxiteles, and by Pliny [h] reckoned among the admirable works of that artificer.

17. CORINTH, was a most noble city of Achaia Propria, called anciently Ephire, saith Pliny; [i] and after Corinth, from one Corinthus, who took and rebuilt it. It was considerable among heathen authors for its citadel Acro-Corinthus, built on a very high mountain, and for its [k] insolence against the Roman legates, which caused L. Mummius, thence styled Achaicus, to destroy it; in the conflagration of which city so many statues were melted down, that the remains of them made that famous Corinthian brass which was esteemed above gold or silver; and of which, saith Josephus, the Beautiful gate of the temple of Jerusalem was made. (See the note on Acts iii. 2.) The Corinthians were noted for their wisdom, hence styled by Cicero, [l] the light of all Greece; by Florus, "Decus Græciæ," the glory of Greece; and for their riches, for, saith Strabo, [m] πλουσία διαπαντὸς ὑπῆρξεν, it was always rich. They were filled with orators and philosophers; and from them, say the fathers, came the contentions and false doctrines which sprang up in that church, on the account of which St. Paul speaks thus to them, Ye are rich, ye are wise, ye are honourable, 1 Cor. iv. 9, 10. They also had a temple of Venus, to whom, saith Strabo, [n] one thousand whores were consecrated, whence they became infamous to a proverb for that vice, and for all kind of lasciviousness, which caused the apostle in his Epistles to them to speak so much against it: see the preface to the First Epistle. Lastly, There was a great resort of the Jews to this city, who, saith Philo, inhabited Ko-ρίνθον, καὶ πλεῖστα καὶ ἄριστα Πελοποννήσου, Corinth, and the chiefest and best parts of Peloponnesus, and had one or more synagogues there, Acts xviii. 8. whence came those Judaizers and false apostles, so often mentioned in the Epistles to those churches.

18. CYPRUS, so called from the flower of the cypress-trees growing there, as Pliny,[o] speaking of the kinds of cypress, and Eustathius[p] say, was an island, having on the east the Syrian, on the west the Pamphylian, on the south the Phœnician, on the north the Cilician Sea: it was celebrated among the heathens for its fertility, as being, say Strabo[q] and Ammianus Marcellinus, sufficiently provided of all things within itself, et nullius externi indigens; whence it was also called the rich and happy island, but was very[r] infamous for the worship of Venus, who had thence her name Κύπρις, and her title Venus Cypria; that demon, saith Eustathius, delighting in that island for their adultery and proneness to venery, they consecrating their women to whoredom, and by a law compelling them to lie with strangers, as the Babylonians did. It was memorable among the Jews for being an island in which they so abounded, that at one time they slew, saith Dio,[s] two hundred and forty thousand of the inhabitants, and were on that account forbid to come afterward to that island; and among Christians for being the place where Joses, called Barnabas, had the land he sold, Acts iv. 36. and where Mnason an old disciple lived, Acts xxi. 16.

1. DAMASCUS, a most ancient city, where Eliezer, the servant of Abraham, dwelt; built, saith Josephus,[t] by Uz the son of Aram, mentioned Gen. x. 23. and situate in the valley betwixt Libanus and Antilibanus, watered by the rivers Albana and Pharphar, 2 Kings v. 12. one of which is by Pliny,[u] Strabo,[x] and others, called Chrysorrhoas, by reason of its golden sands: it was made tributary to David, 2 Sam. viii. 6. afterward it was the capital city of the kings of Syria, Isa. vii. 8. It is a city famous for its antiquity, and for being still one of the richest and most magnificent cities of the Levant, but most of all for being the place of the miraculous conversion of St. Paul. Here the Jews had their synagogues, and converted to their religion[y] most of the women of the place, but the men entirely hated them, and killed at one time twelve, at another eighteen thousand of them, and their families.

2. DECAPOLIS, saith St. Jerome, was a country of ten cities beyond Jordan, which all do not reckon alike, saith Pliny,[z] who places them all beyond Jordan, except Scythopolis: Josephus[a] saith, that Justus of Tiberias τὰς ἐν τῇ Συρίᾳ Δεκαπόλεις ἐπολεμεῖτο, fought against the cities of Decapolis in Syria, and that when Vespasian came to Ptolemais,[b] οἱ πρῶτοι τῶν τῆς Συρίας Δεκαπόλεων, the chief men of the cities of Decapolis in Syria, complained to him against Justus upon that account; and of these cities[c] he saith, that Hippo and Gadara were two: whence it is evident Bochartus must mistake, when he places all these cities in Galilee, and makes Tiberias to be one of them, it being Justus of Tiberias that fought against them. They were all cities inhabited chiefly by the gentiles, though some of them might be within the region of Judea.

3. DERBE, was a city of Lycaonia near Isauria, mentioned Acts xiv. 6. It was the seat of Antipater Derbæus, and the country of Timothy.

1. EGYPT was bounded on the north with the Mediterranean; on the east by Arabia Petræa, and the Red Sea; on the south by Æthiopia and Nubia; on the west by Libya, and the desert of Barca. It is divided into the upper Egypt, through which Nile runneth with a single stream; and into lower Egypt, which begins where Nile divides, and so makes the island, from its resemblance of the Greek Δ, called Delta, and then runs down to the Mediterranean shore, whence it is also called Egyptus Maritima. Of the river Nile, the pyramids, their mummies, cities, customs, see geographers. Of the names it hath in the Old Testament, see Bochart. For explication of some passages in the New, consider,

1st, The Egyptian language, which differed from the Greek, as Bochart[d] proves against Kircher, and from the Hebrew, whence the Jews in it are said to have heard a strange language, Psal. lxxxi. 6. and coming from it, to have come from a barbarous people, Psal. cxiv. 1. (See the note on 1 Cor. xiv. 11.) Hence Joseph, representing an Egyptian, speaks to his brethren by an interpreter, Gen. xlii. 23. and it is prophesied by Isaiah, xix. 18. that five Egyptian cities should speak the language of Canaan; i. e. of those who lived there. Hence Chium, which in the Hebrew is put for Saturn (as also it signifies among the Persians and Ishmaelites), is, by the Septuagint, who made their translation in Egypt, turned into Ραιφὰν, Amos v. 26. which in the Egyptian language is put for Saturn, and is cited by St. Stephen, Ρεμφὰν, Acts vii. 43. (See the note there.)

2dly, The Egyptian learning, which, had it not been considerable, sure we should not have heard of Homer, Solon, Musæus, Dedalus, Pythagoras, Plato, Democritus, and others, going thither to learn wisdom, and bringing to their respective countries the learning they had there acquired. Egypt would not have been called by Horus in Macrobius, [e] the mother of arts: nor the inhabitants, the parents of all philosophy: nor would Athenæus[f] have told us, that both the Greeks and barbarians had all their learning from the Alexandrians. But of this see more in the commentary upon these words, And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, Acts vii. 22.

3dly, Egypt is by profane authors, as well as by the fathers, said to be guilty of most vile idolatry. Herodotus[g] informs us, they first made altars, images, and temples for the gods, and that almost all the names of the gods came from Egypt[h] into Greece. And Jupiter in Lucian[i] confesses, that the Egyptian gods were αἰσχρὰ καὶ γελαιότερα, filthy and more ridiculous than those of other nations: their gods were called, not only by the[k] fathers, but even by the poets,[l] Portenta magis quam numina. They are also noted in Scripture for afflicting, persecuting, and destroying the people of God; upon both these accounts the great city Rome is by St. John styled spiritually Egypt, Rev. xi. 8.

4thly, That Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt, is attested by many profane authors;[m] and that he led them through the sea, and that the Egyptians following after them were drowned, is owned by Artabanus;[n] Diodorus Siculus adds, that the fame of this drying up of the Red Sea was preserved till his time among the Ichthyophagi,[o] who lived near to it: and Origen[p] informs us, that it was common among the heathens, "to exorcise demons by that God who did καταποντίσαι ἐν τῇ ἐρυθρᾷ θαλάσσῃ τὸν Αἰγυπτίων βασιλέα, καὶ τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους, overthrow the Egyptians and their king in the Red Sea," according to these words of St. Paul, By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned, Heb. xi. 29.

2. ELAMITES are only mentioned in these words, Acts ii. 9. Parthians, Medes, and Elamites; where St. Luke goes from east to west, the Elamites lying west of the Medes; for the Susians are joined to the Elamites, saith Strabo, and to them the Medes.

Elam and Madai are also mentioned in Scripture together, Isa. xxi. 2. Jer. xxv. 25. They were so called from Elam the son of Sem, Gen. x. 22. and their capital city was Elymais: they were a warlike people living by rapine, and fighting with bows and arrows, Isa. xxii. 6. Jer. xlix. 35. as the Susians and Persians did, but were a different people from them; for they were joined to Susia, saith Strabo,[q] and there was an ingress to them from Persia, and the Susians and Elamites are mentioned apart, Ezra iv. 9. though they are both comprehended sometimes under the name of Elam. See Dan. viii. 2.

3. EMMAUS, saith St. Luke, xxiv. 15. and Josephus,[r] in his book of the wars of the Jews, was a village distant sixty furlongs from Jerusalem; it was after made a city, and a Roman colony and called Nicopolis.

4. EPHESUS, the metropolis and noble mart of the Proconsular Asia, situated upon the river Layster, was famous for the temple of Diana, one of the stateliest structures in the world: it was, as Pliny[s] saith, the wonder of magnificence, built at the common charge of all Asia, properly so called, and was two hundred and twenty years in building: it was four hundred and twenty-five feet long, two hundred and twenty broad, and supported by one hundred and twenty-seven pillars sixty feet high, and was generally accounted one of the seven wonders of the world: it was burnt the same day that Socrates was poisoned, four hundred years before Christ; and again, the same night that Alexander Magus was born, but rebuilt and adorned by the Ephesians, whence that city is styled νεωκόρος, Acts xix. 35. an adorner of the temple of the goddess Diana, which, say the scholiasts upon Aristophanes and Suidas, signifies[t] to adorn and beautify. (See note there.) The Ephesians were noted for their skill in the art of magic: see the note on Acts xix. 19. and for their luxury and lasciviousness: see the note on Eph. v. 5. The Jews dwelt here in abundance, having obtained the privilege of citizens, saith Josephus:[u] but this city was chiefly celebrated among Christians for St. Paul's stay here almost three years, Acts xx. 31. his mighty miracles done there, Acts xix. 11. 1 Cor. xvi. 9. and the opposition he met with from the Jews, Acts xx. 19. for Timothy, made bishop there; for the beloved apostle who governed the Asiatic churches; and for being one of the seven churches to which Christ sent instructions, Rev. ii. 1.

5. EPHRAIM. We read in John xi. 54. that Christ went from Jerusalem to a country near the wilderness, and to a city named Ephraim: now Ephraim and Bethel, saith Josephus,[x] were πολιχνία, little cities situated in the land of Benjamin, near the wilderness of Judea, in the way from Jerusalem to Jericho.

1. GADARA was, according to Josephus,[y] the metropolis of Perea, or the region beyond Jordan: it is now called Hippodion, saith Pliny,[z] and hath the river Hieramax, or Jarmoc, flowing by it; both make it a Decapolitan city,[a] and so of heathen jurisdiction, whence perhaps it was destroyed by the Jews, but was rebuilt by Pompey in favour of Demetrius Gadarensis, his manumitted servant, saith Josephus.[b] The inhabitants of this city being rich, sent legates to Vespasian coming against Judea, and gave up this strong city to him; both the city and villages belonging to it lay within the region of the Gergesenes, whence Christ going into the country of the Gadarenes, Mark v. 1. is said to go into the region of the Gergesenes, Matt. viii. 28.

2. GALATIA is a province of the lesser Asia, so called from the Gauls, who, saith Strabo,[c] seated themselves there under their captain Leonorius; it was bounded on the west by Phrygia, on the east by the river Halys, on the north by Paphlagonia, and on the south by Lycaonia: its chief cities were Ancyra, Tavium, and Pessinuntum, whence Grotius saith St. Paul, writing to the churches of Galatia, writ to these. They worshipped the mother of the gods, and especially they of Pessinuntum, and so, as St. Paul saith, Gal. iv. 8. They knew not God. Callimachus in his hymns, and Hilary, who was himself a Gaul, represent them as[d] a very foolish people; whence St. Paul saith, iii. 1. O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? This church was so dangerously perverted, and almost overturned by the Judaizers there, that the apostle, in his Epistle to them, doth not call them saints.

3. GALILEE contained the tribes of Issachar, Zebulon, Naphthali, Asher, with part of Dan, and Perea, beyond the river; it was bounded on the north by Lebanon and Syria, on the west by Phœnicia, on the south by Samaria, on the east mostly by the river Jordan, and the sea of Galilee. It is divided, by Josephus,[e] into the upper and the lower Galilee: but Dr. Lightfoot divides it into three parts; the upper Galilee, so called, because it abounded in mountains; it was eminently called Galilee of the gentiles, Matt. iv. 15. because it abounded with them, being partly inhabited, saith Strabo,[f] by Egyptians, Arabians, and Phœnicians; this contained the tribes of Asher and Naphthali: the lower, which contained the tribes of Zebulon and Issachar, because it was champaigne, was called the great field; and, thirdly, the vale, which is the border of Tiberias. It was, saith Josephus,[g] very populous, containing two hundred and four cities and towns, the least of which towns had πεντακισχιλίους ὑπὲρ τοῖς μυρίοις οἰκήτορας, above fifteen thousand inhabitants. It was also a very rich country, as paying for its tribute, saith he, two hundred talents: they were, saith he, a warlike people, defending themselves against all the assaults of their enemies round about; and their wealth and prowess made them a seditious people, and prone to rebel against the Romans.

4. GAZA, or AZZA, was a city in the tribe of Judah: it was taken by Judah, Judg. i. 18. but because they destroyed not the inhabitants, as they should have done, but only made them tributaries, ver. 28. it was regained by them, after the time of Jephthah, when the children of Israel did evil again, and the Lord delivered them into the hands of the Philistines, xiii. 1. It was one of the five satrapies of the Philistines, which offered their golden emerods to the God of Israel for a trespass-offering, 1 Sam. vi. 17. and the city whose gates Samson took away, Judg. xvi. 2. and whither he was carried when taken, ver. 22. and where he pulled down the house of their god Dagon upon the lords of the Philistines, ver. 30. This old town was destroyed by Alexander, and so made desolate, as the prophet had foretold, Zeph. ii. 4. and is therefore called, saith Strabo,[h] a continued desert. (See the note on Acts viii. 26.) For whereas this old city was seven furlongs from the bay, the new, built by Constantine, was, saith St. Jerome,[i] in another place near to it.

5. GENNESARET was a region thirty furlongs in length, and in breadth twenty; a very pleasant and fruitful place, abounding in the gardens of great men, whence it had its name from Gen and Sar, as being the garden of princes; it lay at the bottom of the lake of Gennesaret, and gave that name to it, Luke v. 1. The celebrated city of Tiberias was built close by it on the east, and gave it the name of the sea of Tiberias, John xxi. 1. And it was called the sea of Galilee, John vi. 1. as being situated in Galilee, in the tribe of Naphthali, saith Dr. Lightfoot; of Zebulon, say others: it was, saith Josephus,[k] forty furlongs in breadth, and a hundred in length; saith Pliny,[l] sixteen miles long, and six in breadth: its waters were sweet and pleasant; and, as the Jews say, that God loved this more than all the other seas, so did our Saviour much frequent it, and after his resurrection appeared to his disciples at it, John xxi. 1.

6. GERGESA was a town near Gadara, so called either from the Gergesites, the posterity of Canaan; for neither did Zebulon nor Naphthali drive out all the Canaanites, Judg. i. 30. 33. or from Gergishta, signifying clay, the soil being clay: it gave name to a region so called, which comprehended in it Gadara, Hippo, and Magdala. See Gadara.

7. GETHSEMANE was a garden beyond Kedron, at the foot of Mount Olivet, so called, from the wine-presses in it.

8. GOLGOTHA signifies a skull, from the rolling of it; as we read, Luke xxiii. 33. the place was called the place of a skull, Matt. xxvii. 33. Mark xv. 32. John xix. 17. of which St. Cyril[m] gives this very improbable reason, that it was called so prophetically, because Christ, our head, was crucified there; he being not κράνιον, our skull, but ἡ κεφαλὴ, our head: others think it was so called, from the head of Adam, buried there; this we have received by tradition, say Origen,[n] Cyprian, Athanasius, St. Basil, Epiphanius, Ambrose, Chrysostom, St. Augustine: whereas they could receive no such tradition from the Jews, who taught, that Adam was buried at Kiriath-Arbe, or Hebron; whence St. Jerome, on the place, says, this tradition is pleasing, but not true: he therefore saith, it was so called, as being a place full of skulls, by reason of the malefactors executed and buried there. Against which opinion it may be objected, that it is never called the place of skulls, but, of a skull: others therefore say, it was so called, because it was a little hill in form like to a man's skull.

9. GREECE, called also Hellas, was celebrated throughout the world for learning and wisdom: it was that little part of Europe, saith Cicero,[o] which flourished in fame, glory, learning, and in most arts. Hence Tatian[p] saith, they divided wisdom among themselves, and said, it belonged to them alone; and to this the apostle seemeth to refer, when he saith, I am debtor to the Greek and to the barbarian, to the wise and to the unwise, Rom. i. 14. they calling all other nations barbarians: (see the note on 1 Cor. xiv. 11.) because, saith Strabo,[q] τὸ παιδείας καὶ λόγων οἰκεῖον, learning and reason obtained among them, but was neglected by other nations,[r] who the more they were distant from them, the more they were ignorant: but when the apostle also adds, that which all the apologists[s] for the Christian faith observe, that, professing themselves wise they became fools, by their idolatry, Rom. i. 21, 22. none being more addicted to it than the Grecians and the Athenians (see there), who were esteemed as the eye of Greece; Tatian saith,[t] they rather chose to have more demons than one God. Their gods, saith Cicero,[u] were first men, and with these, we (saith he) and they have filled the heavens: and yet it is, with the highest reason, said, in the same author, that nothing can be more absurd, "quam homines morti deletos referre in deos," than to make gods of dead men, De Nat. Deorum, lib. i. n. 29. Note also, that Greece, in its largest acceptation, comprehended all Macedonia, Thessaly, Epirus, Achaia (i. e. Greece properly so called), Peloponnesus, and the circumjacent islands; and so was bounded on the north with the Scardian mountains, on the west with the Ionian, on the south with the Cretian, and on the east with the Ægean seas: hence in Daniel, viii. 22. x. 20. xi. 2. it is used, in the largest acceptation, to denote Macedonia, as well as the more southern parts of Greece; whereas, in Acts xx. 2. it isused exclusively of Macedonia, when it is said, that St. Paul, going through the parts of Macedonia, came to Greece.

1. FAIR-HAVEN, Acts xxvii. 8. styled by Stephanus, καλὴ ἀκτὴ, the fair-shore, is a part of Crete, where, saith he, was a city, or great village: but whereas it is there styled a part, ᾧ ἐγγὺς ἡ πόλις Λασαία, near to the city of Lasæa, that troubles the commentators, who can find no city in Crete of that name, besides one mentioned by Pliny, which he places in the continent. St. Jerome, and from him other geographers, speak of it as "civitas littoralis," a city by the shore: moreover, Dr. Lightfoot shews, that ἐγγὺς, and οὐ πόῤῥω, are sometimes used by geographers of places distant almost one hundred miles.

2. HIERAPOLIS, mentioned Colos. ii. 1. is a city of Phrygia, as appears from its nearness to Laodicea, celebrated by Strabo,[x] for its hot lapidific waters; and for a hollow place called Plutonium, not much exceeding a man's length, whose noisome exhalations suffocate every thing that enters into it, except a capon: it was so called, saith Stephanus, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱερὰ πολλὰ ἔχειν, from the many temples it had in it.

1. ICONIUM was a city of Lycaonia, the chief of the fourteen belonging to that tetrarchy, saith Pliny,[y] a well-built city in the richest part of Lycaonia, saith Strabo.[z] Here was a synagogue of Jews and proselytes, to whom Paul and Barnabas preaching, and confirming their doctrine by miracles, made many proselytes, Acts xiv. 1—3. and where the unbelieving Jews and gentiles made an assault upon them, to use them despitefully, and to stone them, ver. 5.

2. IDUMEA, Mark iii. 8. is not the region of Syria, in which the Edomites, or the posterity of Esau, dwelt, but the Jewish Idumea, or the south part of Judea; and hence, in Diodorus Siculus, the sea of Sodom, which is the south of Judea, is said to be, κατὰ μέσην τὴν σατραπείαν τῆς Ἰδυμαίας,[a] in the midst of the province of Idumea: in the book of Maccabees are many places mentioned, as in Idumea, which were almost in the middle of Judea; v. g. Bethoron is κώμη Ἰδυμαίας, a village of Idumea, 1 Macc. iv. 29. it is κώμη τῆς Ἰουδαίας, a village of Judea, saith Josephus;[b] and ver. 61. Bethsura, near to Jerusalem, is fortified to be a defence against the Idumeans. Josephus adds, that Judas and his brethren left not off fighting with the Idumeans, but fell upon them every where,[c] taking the cities of Hebron, Merissa, and Azotus, which were all in the land of Judah. It therefore is conjectured, that in the time of the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, the Edomites had invaded their possessions, and fixed their tents there; though afterward, by the powerful arms of the Maccabees and Asmoneans, they were either rooted out, or constrained to embrace Judaism: thus Josephus informs us, that when Hyrcanus had taken Sechem and Mount Gerizim, and the country of the Cutheans, or Samaritans, he proceeds to take the city of Idumea, Adore, and Marissa, both in Judea; and having subdued all the Idumeans, he declares he would expel them from their seats, if they would not be circumcised, and submit to the Jewish laws: and that hereupon, they, out of love to their country,[d] καὶ τὴν περιτομὴν, καὶ τὴν ἄλλην τοῦ βίου δίαιταν ὑπέμειναν τὴν αὐτὴν Ἰουδαίοις ποιήσασθαι, received circumcision, and conformed to the same course or diet with the Jews, and styled themselves their domestics and compatriots, De Bel. Jud. lib. iv. cap. 16, 17.

3. JERICHO was a wealthy city in Benjamin, which Joshua destroyed, with a curse upon him that should rebuild it, vi. 26. Nevertheless, Hiel the Bethelite rebuilt it, in the days of Ahab; and the curse pronounced upon him by Joshua for so doing was punctually fulfilled, 1 Kings xvi. 34. After its restoration, it was ennobled by the schools of the prophets; near to it was a large spring, but unwholesome, and making the land unfruitful, till Elisha cured it, 2 Kings v. 21. and from that time it produced fruitfulness in abundance. The country, saith Josephus,[e] was seated in a plain, narrow, but long; for it runs out northward to the country of Scythopolis, and southward to the land of Sodom, being one hundred and fifty miles in length, and fifteen in breadth: opposite to it lay a mountain beyond Jordan; and this great plain is, by St. Matthew, styled ἡ περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, the region about Jordan, Matt. iii. 5. It was planted, say Strabo and Pliny, with a grove of palm-trees (whence the city of palm-trees, Deut. xxxiv. 3. Judg. i. 16. is, by the Targum, called Jericho), and well watered with springs, and fruitful with balsam, which, saith Josephus,[f] is the best commodity of the place. Under the second temple, it gave place to no city of Judea but Jerusalem; had a[g] royal palace in it, where Herod ended his days; a hippodromus, where the Jewish nobility, being imprisoned by him, were to be slain after his death; and an amphitheatre, where his will was publicly opened and read: it was distant from Jerusalem almost nineteen miles; but the way from Jerusalem to it being desert and rocky, it was infested with thieves; (see the note on Luke x. 30. 32.) and Jericho having twelve thousand priests and Levites which served at the temple, it is no wonder that a priest and Levite should pass by that way.

4. JERUSALEM may be considered, either (first) as the capital city of Judea, in compass six miles and a quarter, standing in the two tribes of Benjamin and Judah, and built upon three mountains; Mount Zion, on which the upper city, which was on the north of Jerusalem, was built; Acra, on which stood the lower city, properly called Jerusalem; and Mount Moriah, the mountain of the Lord's house, which was compassed about by the city, as a theatre, and walled round: it was a perfect square of five hundred cubits on each side, and two thousand in the whole: and as the city of Jerusalem is called the holy place, Matt. xxiv. 15. and the holy city, Matt. iv. 5. and was so esteemed by the Jews, 1 Macc. x. 31. so this mountain was called holy ground, to which they who had issues, or were menstruous, or women in child-bed, during the time of their uncleanness, might not come. Or,

(Secondly,) It may be considered as the place where our Lord was crucified, where the gospel was first preached, and where it found the greatest opposition: and, in reference to this, it hath been shewed,

1st, That before Christ's passion, the scribes and pharisees were the great enemies to our Lord's person, and his doctrine: but when the apostles began to assert his resurrection, and the resurrection of believers, by his power, the sadducees also were vehement opposers of his doctrine: see the note on Acts iv. 2.

2dly, That they not only persecuted the Christians in Judea, and throughout all the synagogues of the Jews, but instigated all heathen governors where they had any footing; they persecuting and killing them with their own hands, where they had power, and persuading others so to do, where they had an interest sufficient, Acts xiii. 50. xiv. 2. 5. xvii. 5. 13. See the note on Gal. iii. 4. and the preface to the Epistle of St. James.

3dly, That for their infidelity and opposition to the gospel, the kingdom of God was taken from them, Matt. xxi. 43. they were blinded, and given up to a spirituol slumber, Rom. xi. 7, 8. were rejected and broken off, ver. 15. 17. for their unbelief, ver. 20. Or,

(Thirdly,) We may discourse of it as it was the city, which, with the temple, and the inhabitants, was therefore to be destroyed, laid waste, and trodden down by the gentiles: and here observe,

1st, That both our Lord and his forerunner declared their ruin was at hand, if they would not repent, and believe the gospel: that the axe was then laid to the root of the tree, Matt. iii. 10. that Jerusalem should be left desolate, and all the blood of the prophets, shed from Abel, should be required of that generation, Matt. xxiii. 35. 38. that all he had foretold, concerning the destruction of the temple, the city, and the people of Jerusalem, should be fulfilled, before that generation passed away, Matt. xxiv. 34. See Matt. xvi. 28. xxvi. 64. Luke xix. 41—43. and the notes there.

2dly, That this was the constant doctrine taught in most of the Epistles, and the continual expectation of the believing Jews and Christians, that wrath was coming upon that nation for their infidelity, and persecution of the Christians; and that Christ would shortly come to destroy them for those sins. See Rom. xi. 22. 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16. v. 9. 2 Thess. ii. 8. Heb. x. 36. James v. 8. 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18. and the notes on those places, and Gal. iv. 20. vi. 12. Phil. iii. 18, 19.

3dly, That Josephus speaks frequently of the τέρατα καὶ σημεῖα, the signs, wonders, and certain indications then given of their approaching ruin, De B. Jud. lib. i. cap. 1. lib. iv. cap. 17. lib. vii. cap. 30, 31. as also doth the heathen Tacitus. Josephus adds,[h] that God was now ἀπεστραμμένος καὶ τὰ ἅγια, rejecting their holy things, and would have both their temple and city purged by fire: that he in vain attempted to save, τοὺς ὑπὸ Θεοῦ κατακρίτους, them whom God had condemned, and that their ruin was foretold by their own prophets, and not to be avoided, τὸ γὰρ τὸ τέλος εἶναι τοῦ Θεοῦ. Eleazer,[i] from what was done, takes notice, that all might thence know, that once beloved nation, now ἀπωλείᾳ κατέγνωστο, was condemned to destruction; and even Titus[k] says, their actions shewed their destruction was wrought, Θεοῦ μένει, by the anger of God, and that they prospered in their attempts against them, Θεοῦ συνεργείαις, by the Divine assistance: in a word, the history of these wars, composed by that Jewish priest, is the best comment on, and the greatest confirmation of, the truth of Christ's predictions of all the circumstances of their ruin, as is shewed on Matt. xxiv.

5. JOPPA, Acts ix. 13. was a famous port town betwixt Cæsarea and Azotus, so called, as some think, from Japheth the son of Noah, who built, or rather rebuilt it, after the flood; for Solinus[l] and Mela[m] say, it was built before the flood: it was famous among the heathens, for the fable of Andromeda and Perseus; among the Jews, for being a port town from whence they went up to Jerusalem, which they might see, saith Strabo,[n] from Joppa, though it were above a day's journey; and for the miserable[o] shipwreck of the Jews, when Vespasian took it; and among the Christians, for Tabitha, there raised from the dead by Peter, Acts ix.

6. JORDAN is a river arising in the region of Daphne, near to Libanus, not out of two fountains or rivers, Jor and Dan, as St. Jerome and Suidas say; but from one that is in the cave, called Phanium, as Pliny saith,[p] and Josephus often: though in his third book of the Jewish wars, he says, that it was found out by Philip the tetrarch, to have its rise from the springs of Phialæ, which run under ground twenty-six furlongs, and appear only at the cave of Phanium, which therefore is assigned for its apparent rise. It is called Jordan the less, till it falls into the lake Samochonitis, whence coming forth augmented, it is called Jordan the greater, and falling into the lake of Gennesaret, it passes through it, and ends in the Dead Sea: it is famous among the Jews, for being dried up at a time when it overflowed all its banks, to give a passage to the children of Israel into Canaan; and among Christians, for being the place of our Lord's baptism by St. John.

7. ITUREA, mentioned as part of the tetrarchy of Philip, Luke iii. 1. was so called, from Jethur the son of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 15. and lay edging upon Arabia, but was in, or bordering upon, Cœlosyria: it was part of the tribe of Dan and Gad, and made a tetrarchy by Tiberius, and was partly the same with Puronitis, in Josephus;[q] for whereas St. Luke saith, Philip was tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis; Josephus says, Batanea, Trachon, and Puronitis, were assigned to him by Cæsar. Moreover, Ishmael being a skilful archer, Gen. xxi. 20. the Itureans are celebrated, by poets and historians,[r] for their skill in fighting with bow and arrow.

8. JUDEA, as it signifies the whole land of promise, is, by Tacitus, said to be terminated with Arabia on the east, Egypt on the south,[s] Phœnicia on the west, and Syria on the north: as it is distinguished from Galilee and Samaria, and contains the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, Simeon, and Dan, the[t] bounds towards the north, are the village Annach, or Dorceus; on the south, it reaches to a village called Jarda in Arabia, and its breadth is from the river Jordan to Joppa, and Jerusalem is in the centre of it. It is divided into the mountains, the plain, and the south; the south lay towards Seor and Amalek, from the inlets into the land at the utmost part of the Dead Sea, and reached to the rising of the mountains not far below Hebron: the mountains began near Hebron, and ran along northward to, and beyond Jerusalem, having the plain of Jordan skirting on the east, till you come to the borders of Samaria: hence the blessed Virgin, going to visit her cousin at Hebron, a city of the priests, is said to go into the hill country, Luke i. 39. The plain joins to the mountainous country on the east, and though more level than that, yet hath its hills; to the plain eastwardly joins a valley lower than the plain, which is the coast of Sodom, and at length that of Jordan. The wilderness of Judea, where John first taught, Matt. iii. 1. and Christ was tempted, lay betwixt Jericho and Jordan, and from Jericho towards Jerusalem both of them were comparatively desert (whence Strabo[u] saith, Jerusalem was a place not to be envied by any one, as having about it χώραν λυπρὸν καὶ ἄνυδρον, a dry, barren country), although both these deserts are also populous, and had many towns.

1. LAODICEA, mentioned Colos. ii. 1. was that which Stephanus calls Laodicea ad Lycum, by the river Lycus, and which Ptolemy[x] and Philostratus say, was a city of Caria; it was ruined by an earthquake in the tenth of Nero, and was rebuilt, saith Tacitus,[y] by its own wealth.

2. LIBYA, was so called from the Arabic word Lud, which signifies thirst, as being a dry, thirsty earth, and therefore, by some grammarians, said to have its name, ἀπὸ τοῦ λείπειν καὶ ὕειν, from its want of rain; among the Greeks, it is used as another name for Africa, as it imports a part of it; it was divided into Libya,[z] interior and exterior: but the Libya mentioned by St. Luke, Acts ii. 10. is that which is by Ptolemy called Libya Cyrenaica; and by Pliny,[a] Pentapolitana Regio, from its five cities, viz. Berenice, Arsinoe, Ptolemais, Apollonia, and Cyrene, as appears from these words, Egypt, and τὰ μέρη τῆς Λιβύης τῆς κατὰ Κυρήνην, the parts of Lybia about Cyrene. It is noted, in the Old Testament, for its chariots and horses used in fight, 2 Chron. xvi. 8. whence it is styled, by Dionysius Periegetes,[b] Κυρήνη εὔιππος, and by Strabo,[c] ἱπποτρόφος, the country that bred the best horses; of which, see Bochart, Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 33. but it is mentioned by St. Luke, on account of the Jews, who living in such vast numbers in Alexandria, that fifty thousand of them were slain at one time, may well be thought to have had some colonies and proselytes in this neighbouring country.

3. LYCAONIA. The Lycaonia mentioned Acts xiv. 6. was not that which is called Arcadia, but a province in the lesser Asia, accounted the southern part of Cappadocia, having Isauria on the west, Armenia Minor on the east, and Cilicia on the south; its chief cities are all mentioned in this chapter, viz. Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe. They spake, ver. 10. in the Lycaonian tongue, i. e. in some proper dialect of the Greek tongue.

4. LYDDA, saith Josephus, was a village[d] not yielding to a city for greatness; it was a part of Judea, not far from Joppa, Acts ix. 38. eminent for its schools of Jews and learned men: see the note there. Josephus[e] elsewhere styles it a city, and saith it was burnt by Cestius, whilst the men were gone from it to Jerusalem, to celebrate the feast of tabernacles; God, after they had crucified our Saviour, not taking that care of these times as formerly. It is now called Diospolis, saith St. Jerome.[f]

5. LYSTRA was a city of Lycaonia, chiefly celebrated for the cure done there upon the lame man, which made the Lycaonians think the gods were come down to them in the likeness of men, Acts xiv. 10, 11. and for the circumcision of Timothy, xvi. 1.

1. MACEDONIA was a vast province of Greece, formerly called Emathia; and from the kings of Macedon, Macedonia: it was bounded on the north by the mountains of Hæmus, on the south by Epirus and Achaia, on the east by the Ægean, on the west by the Ionian and Adriatic Seas; celebrated in all histories for being the third kingdom that under Alexander the Great obtained the empire of the world, and had under it[g] one hundred and fifty people. To this country, whose metropolis was then Thessalonica, St. Paul was called by a vision, Acts xvi. 9. and the churches planted by him in it are celebrated for their great charity, and ready contribution to the distressed Jews in Judea, 2 Cor. viii. 9. when they themselves lay under the extremest poverty; and both in Thessalonica and Macedonia, saith Philo,[h] lived a great number of Jews.

2. MAGDALA was a city and territory beyond Jordan, on the bank of Gadara; it reached to the bridge above Jordan, which joined it to the other side of Galilee, and contained within its precincts Dalmanutha: whence St. Matthew saying, xv. 39. Christ came into the coast of Magdala, St. Mark saith more particularly viii. 10. He came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

3. MEDIA, mentioned Acts ii. 10. in these words, Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, was a vast region, having on the north the Hyrcanian Sea, on the west Armenia and Assyria, on the south Persia, on the east Hyrcania and Parthia; it had its name from Madai the son of Japheth, mentioned Gen. x. 2. and advanced into the second monarchy, styled the monarchy of the Medes and Persians, under Darius the Mede, son of Astyages: of the riches of this country, and of the vastness of its chief city, Ecbatan, see Bochartus.[i] In the Babylonian captivity, the Jews were carried captive into Assyria, and placed in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 11. Hence we find many of them and their proselytes at Jerusalem, when the Holy Ghost fell on the apostles.

4. MELITE, the island of Malta, where St. Paul was shipwrecked; of which, see the note on Acts xxviii. 1.

5. MESOPOTAMIA is a country in Asia Major, between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, as the Greek word imports; hence it is styled in the Hebrew, Aram Narajam, i. e. Syria of the rivers, and the inhabitants,[k] οἱ ἐκ μέσης τῶν ποταμῶν, they who dwell in the midst of the rivers; but that in Scripture and profane authors it is sometimes used in a larger sense, see the note on Acts vii. 2.

6. MIDIAN, the land into which Moses fled from the Egyptians, Acts vii. 29. It was the place where Jethro lived, Exod. xii. 11. and the people came from[l] Madian, the son of Abraham by Keturah, Gen. xv. 2. whence we have reason to believe they still retained the worship of the true God. It was in Arabia Petræa, whence Philo[m] saith, Moses fled, εἰς τὴν ὅμορον Ἀραβίαν.

7. MILETUS, a port town of Asia Minor, and a city of Ionia, where, saith St. Jerome, St. Paul, "majores Ephesi alloquitur," speaks to the elders of Ephesus, taking no notice of any other bishops there convened; it was the city where Thales,[n] one of the seven wise men, Anaximander his disciple, Timotheus the musician, and Anaximenes the philosopher, were born. There was another Miletus in Crete, mentioned by Pliny,[o] and by Homer,[p] where St. Paul left Trophimus sick: see the note on 2 Tim. iv. 20. and the preface to Titus. There was also, saith Eustathius in Dionys. P. Κρητικὴ νῆσος, an island of that name in Crete.

8. MITYLENE, corruptly Mytilene, saith[q] Vossius, was a large and beautiful city of the island Lesbos, where Pittachus one of the seven wise men, Acæus the poet, Diophanes the orator, and Theophanes the historian, were born. The whole island was also called by[r] that name; as also Pentapolis, from the five cities in it, viz. Issa or Antissa, Pyrrha, Eressos, Arisba, Mitylene. If it had that name in St. Luke's time, you may understand either the island, or the city, when he saith, Acts xx. 14. We came to Mitylene.

9. MYRA was one of the six great cities of Lycia, saith Strabo,[s] and it lay nigh the sea, saith Pliny;[t] whence St. Luke saith, Acts xxvii. 5. that sailing over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, they came to Myra in Lycia. It had its name, say Stephanus de Urbibus and Porphyrogenetes, lib. i. them. 14. ἀπὸ τῶν μύρων, from the ointments made there, and is by both of them called a city of Lycia. The Latin copies, instead of Myra, read Lystra in Lycaonia, far distant from these seas, against the Greek, and the authority of St. Jerome and Chrysostom.

10. MYSIA, mentioned Acts xvi. 7, 8. was bounded on the north with Bithynia, on the east with Phrygia Minor, on the west with Troas, on the south by the river Hermus; there, perhaps, St. Paul attempted not to stay; because, as Cicero notes,[u] in his oration for Flaccus, they were a people despicable and base to a proverb.

1. NAIN, mentioned Luke vii. 11, 12. was a city in the extreme borders of Issachar, towards Samaria, two leagues from Nazareth, and not much more from Tabor, saith Bochart, at the gates of which our Lord restored the widow's son to life; it was so called, from the pleasantness of the place. If Josephus[x] speaks of the same place, and not rather of Nain, a village in Samaria, he thrice calls it a village, and saith, it was walled about by Simon son of Gejorah the robber; but St. Luke assures us, it had gates in our Saviour's time.

2. NAZARETH was a city of the lower Galilee, in the confines of Issachar and Zebulon, but within the latter: here the blessed Virgin was born, and lived: it was of ill fame in our Saviour's time, as appears from the question of Nathanael, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? John i. 47. Whence Christ was, by contempt, called a Nazarene, and Christians, Nazarenes. See the note on Matt. ii. 23.

3. NINEVEH was the chief city of Assyria, by the Greeks called Ninus, from the builder of it, named in Scripture, Nimrod, and by the Greeks, Νῖνος, which some think to be hinted in the name, as being Nin-nave, the habitation of Ninus, who came from Shinar to Assyria, and built it, Gen. x. 10. (See the bishop of Ely there.) It is called in the Scriptures, πόλις μεγάλη τῷ Θεῷ, Jonas i. 2. iii. 3. i. e. a very great city (as Moses was ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, very fair, Acts vii. 20. see the note there); as well it might, being, saith Diodorus Siculus,[y] in length one hundred and fifty stadia,

i. e. almost nineteen miles; in breadth ninety stadia, i. e. twelve miles and a half; in circuit four hundred and eighty stadia, i. e. sixty miles; and so counting twenty miles for a day's journey, as the Greeks used to do: a city of three days' journey, not in length, but in circuit, say St. Jerome, Cyril, and Theodoret, upon the place, Jonah iii. 3. Strabo[a] says it was larger than Babylon, which contained in circuit three hundred and fifty stadia: Eustathius[b] on Dionysius Periegetes, adds, that in the building of it, one hundred and forty thousand men laboured eight years. It was famous for being the city in which the first monarchy was erected, and which repented, at the preaching of Jonas, and so, it seems, owned the God of Israel as the true God; as generally those eastern kingdoms did, though they had topical gods of their own. (See the note on Luke i. 76.) It was taken fifty-eight years after the time of Jonas, by Arbaces rebelling against Sardanapulus, and destroyed one hundred and eighty-two years after by Nabuchodonosor and Assuerus, Tobit xiv. 15. Al. by Nabopolaser and Astyages, and was never built again: whence Strabo[b] saith, ἡ μὲν οὖν Νίνος πόλις ἠφανίσθη παραχρῆμα μετὰ τὴν τῶν Σύρων κατάλυσιν, and Lucian[c] to Charon, ἡ Νίνος μὲν ἀπόλωλεν ἤδη, καὶ οὐδὲ ἴχνος ἔτι λοιπὸν αὐτῆς, Ninus was so destroyed, that no footsteps of it now remain; God having said, by his prophet Nahum, i. 8. that he would make an utter end thereof. As for its situation, it is commonly said, that it was built on the west side of the river Tigris; but, as Bochartus shews,[d] historians and geographers differ so much as to the situation of it, that they seem thereby to confirm the words of the prophet Nahum, iii. 17. It shall be as the locusts, who when they flee away, their place is not known where they were.

MOUNT OLIVET, mentioned Acts i. 12. had its name from the multitude of olive-trees that grew upon it; whence at the foot of it was Gethsemane, Matt. xxvi. 26. the place of oil-presses, derived from Gath, a press, and Schemen, oil. It was distant from Jerusalem, saith St. Luke, a sabbath-day's journey, that is, a mile. It lay over-against the city, saith Josephus,[e] that is, the east part of it, and was distant from it five furlongs; he speaking only of the foot of Mount Olivet, which was no farther distant from the city: whereas St. Luke speaks of the place whence Christ ascended, which was three furlongs farther; whence he informs us, that Christ led his disciples out, ἕως εἰς Βηθανίαν, even to the borders of Bethany; but to that tract of the mount where the name of Bethphage ceased, and that of Bethany began, Luke xxiv. 50, 51.

1. PAMPHYLIA is a province of Asia Minor, having to the south the Pamphylian Sea, mentioned Acts xxvii. 5. Cilicia to the east, Pisidia to the north, (whence we find St. Paul passing through Pisidia to Pamphylia, Acts xiv. 24. and from Pamphylia to Pisidia, Acts xiii. 14.) and Lycia to the west. The cities, mentioned in the Scripture as belonging to it, are Perga and Attalia, Acts xiii. 13. Here also the Jews dwelt, saith Philo;[f] whence they of Pamphylia are mentioned among those who appeared at Jerusalem at the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 10.

2. PAPHOS was a city of Cyprus, Acts xiii. 4. 6. the metropolis of that island, and the place where the proconsul had his residence; and Venus, saith Tacitus, had the most ancient temple,[g] which he describes more largely in the beginning of his second book of histories; whence it became, saith Arator,[h] lascivus ager; sacrilegæque libidinis antrum, being the place where the virgins prostituted themselves before marriage, to get a dowry, as we learn from Justin[i] and Herodotus.[k] Here St. Paul struck blind Elymas the sorcerer, and converted Sergius the proconsul. That the Jews dwelt here in abundance, we learn from Elymas a Jew, ver. 6. See CYPRUS.

3. Of PARTHIA we have only mention indirectly, in these words, Acts ii. 9. Parthians, Medes, and Elamites. It lasted an empire for four hundred years, and disputed for the empire of the east with the Romans: they were celebrated for the[l] veneration of their kings, and for their way of fighting by flight, and shooting their arrows backwards. They are not mentioned in Scripture say Ethicus and Orosius, save under the name of Medes. They dwelt between Media and Mesopotamia; in all which Transeuphratensian places, except some little parts of Babylon, and of some other little prefectures, the Jews, saith Philo,[m] abounded, and so were at Jerusalem when the Holy Ghost fell on the apostles.

4. PERGE, or PERGA, is a city of Pamphylia, Acts xiii. 13. memorable among the heathens for a temple of Diana built there; whence she was called, saith Mela,[n] Diana Pergea, Περγασία Ἄρτεμις, saith Stephanus: among the Christians, for the departure thence of John Mark from Barnabas and Paul, to Jerusalem, which occasioned the rupture betwixt them for a season, Acts xv. 37. 40.

5. PHŒNICIA was a province of Syria, divided into two parts; Phœnicia Maritima, which reached from Tripolis to Ptolemais, say some; to Pelusium in Egypt, say others; and midland Phœnicia, of which Damascus was the metropolis. They had their names, saith Bochart, ἀπὸ τῶν φοινίκων, from the palm-trees growing in their land, not from the Red Sea; nor à puniceo colore, from their purple colour; nor ἀπὸ τοῦ φόνου, from the slaughters they made where they came, but from their rise, they being beni ynak, sons of the Anakims in Canaan; whence being beaten by Joshua, they fled to the side of the Mediterranean Sea, where, saith Procopius,[o] they erected pillars with this inscription, Ἡμεῖς ἐσμεν οἱ φεύγοντες ἀπὸ προσώπου Ἰησοῦ τοῦ λῃστοῦ υἱοῦ Ναύη, We are they who fly from the face of Joshua, the son of Nave, the robber. They were celebrated for their navigations, of which, saith Bochart, they have left indications in all places; and for the invention of letters, for from them, saith Herodotus, letters were brought by Cadmus into Greece, and were thence called Φοινίκια γράμματα, Phœnician letters, Herodot. lib. v. cap. 58. Tatian. ed. Oxon. p. 3. Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. x. cap. 5. and they had them, saith Eupolemus, from the Jews, Clem. Alex. Strom. i. p. 343.

6. PHILIPPI was a city of Macedonia, so called from Philip king of Macedon, who repaired it, whence it lost its former name of Dathos; it is called by St. Luke, ἡ πρώτη τῆς μερίδος τῆς Μακεδονίας πόλις, not because it was the metropolis of it, for that was Thessalonica; (see note on Phil. i. 1.) but because it was the first city belonging to it, which they who came from Neapolis in Thrace, as St. Paul did, Acts xvi. 11. or from the gulf of Strymon, touched at. (See the note on Acts xvi. 12.) It was celebrated among the Romans, for being a Roman colony, Acts xvi. 21. and for the campi Philippici, where Cæsar and Pompey first, and afterward Augustus and Marc Antony fought with Cassius and Brutus; and among Christians, for their conversion by St. Paul, and the liberal contribution they, and they only, sent him in his necessity, by Epaphroditus, Phil. iv. 15. 18. and for his Epistle directed to them.

7. PISIDIA, mentioned Acts xiv. 24. was a country in Asia Minor, having Pamphylia on the south, Galatia on the north, Isauria on the east, and Phrygia on the west; its chief city was Antioch in Pisidia, Acts xiii. 14. so called, to distinguish it from Antioch in Syria: its inhabitants are commended by Livy,[p] for their skill in war above other Asiatics, and were anciently, saith Pliny,[q] called Solymi, who were compared to lions, for their courage.

8. PONTUS, a province in Asia Minor, bounded on the north with the Euxine Sea, on the south with Cappadocia, on the west with the river Halys, on the east with Chalcis; celebrated among the heathen poets for its poisonous herbs, and therefore called by Virgil,[r] Virosa Pontus, and hence Medea is said to have had her poisons from thence: among the Jews, for the dispersions of that nation through Pontus, &c. 1 Pet. i. 1. Philo[s] declaring, that they sent their colonies, ἄχρι τῶν τοῦ Πόντου μυχῶν, to the utmost bounds of Pontus: among Christians, for the birth of Aquila, Acts xviii. 2. and for the name of an epistle ad Ponticos, given to the First Epistle of St. Peter, as being sent unto them. (See Tertul. Scorp. cap. 12. Cyprian. Testim. lib. iii. cap. 36, 37.)

9. PHRYGIA is a province of Asia Minor, divided into the greater, which had Bithynia on the north, Galatia on the east, Pamphylia and Lycia on the south, Lydia and Mysia on the west, and was called in the Notitiæ,[t] Pacatiana, where the chief cities mentioned in Scripture, Colos. ii. 1. are Laodicea and Hierapolis; and of this St. Luke seems to speak, Acts ii. 10. because he joins it with Pamphylia below it; and Phrygia Minor, of which he speaketh, Acts xvi. 6. 18. and 22. when he saith, they passed through Phrygia and Galatia. The inhabitants were a servile people, kept in their duty best by stripes,[u] and made wise only by sufferings, saith Cicero.[x] In all these parts of Asia Minor, even to Bithynia and the Euxine Sea, the Jews abounded, saith Philo, in the place forecited.

10. PTOLEMAIS was a city of Galilee by the sea-side, dividing the upper from the lower Galilee, and the land of Israel from Phœnicia: it was seated in a plain compassed about with mountains, having on the east the mountainous part of Galilee, on the north the Scalæ Tyriorum, on the south Carmel. Near to it, saith Josephus,[y] is the sepulchre of Memnon, and the vale of sand that turns into glass; the fragments of which glass being brought back to the place, will return again into sand. It was memorable among the Jews, for the coming of Petronius thither to set up the statue of Caius Caligula, which, at the entreaty of the Jews, declaring, that their law admitted no images either in their temple, or profane places, he deferred to execute, till he had writ to Cæsar, who[z] died before his answer came to the hands of Petronius; and also for the slaughter of two thousand Jews by the inhabitants of Ptolemais; and among the Christians, for St. Paul's journey in a ship of Phœnicia to Tyre, where the ship unladed her burden, Acts xxi. 3. from Tyre to Ptolemais thirty-two miles on foot; from thence to Cæsarea, ver. 7, 8. and from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, ver. 15. See the note on Acts xxi. 7.

11. PUTEOLI, a famous mart-town in Italy, having a commodious haven for ships, made, says Strabo,[a] by art and labour. It was built, say St. Jerome, and the epitomator of Stephanus, by the Samians;[b] and called Puteoli, saith Varro,[c] from the pits of hot and cold water; by the Greeks it was called Dicæarchia: here St. Paul, by the favour of the centurion, stayed seven days. See more, note on Acts xxviii. 13.

1. RAMA, Matt. ii. 18. was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, distant from Jerusalem, saith Josephus,[d] forty furlongs; saith, St. Jerome,[e] six miles; and being on a hill, as the word Rama signifies, might be within sight of Jerusalem, as may be probably collected from Judg. xix. 13. It was, saith Dr. Patrick, late bishop of Ely, northward of Jerusalem; and not far from it, as appears from the Levite going from Beth-lehem-Judah to Jebus or Jerusalem, and being benighted when he came there, and not able to reach Shiloh, whither he was going, consulted with his servant, whether they should lodge at Rama or Gibeah, Judg. xix. 11. 13. 18. and truly, being the place to which he might divert when he was on the west of Jebus, in his way to Shiloh, after the sun went down, and being near to Gibeah, Judg. xix. 13. 1 Sam. xxii. 6. Hos. v. 8. it must lie somewhat north-west of Jerusalem, and yet not far from it, and so the coasts of Beth-lehem four miles from Jerusalem, and the coasts of Rama might be at a less distance. But others, to avoid this difficulty, how the coasts of Beth-lehem could reach Rama in the tribe of Benjamin, and the children slain in those coasts could cause a weeping in Rama, give us Rama near Gibeah, north of Jerusalem, and at a greater distance from it on that side, than Beth-lehem was on the south, and place another Rama near Beth-lehem, and south of it: but it is certain, from 1 Sam. x. 2. that Rachel's sepulchre was in the border of Benjamin, and only in the way from Bethel to Beth-lehem, Gen. xxxv. 16. 20. and so the voice of Rachel weeping at Rama, must refer to Rama in Benjamin: either then their territories, or the villages belonging to them, must be near, or the words of St. Matthew must be construed thus, Καὶ ἀποστείλας (sub. ἀπὸ τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ), And sending from Jerusalem, he slew all the children in Beth-lehem, καὶ ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ὁρίοις αὐτῆς, and in all the coasts of Jerusalem; it being ordinary for pronoun-relatives to refer to a remoter antecedent, as is shewed, note on Luke v. 17. and for nouns to be included in a verb relating to them.

2. RHEGIUM is a port-town in Italy, opposite to Sicily, so called by the Greeks, as judging it was broken off from thence by the sea; of which, see Cluverius de Italiâ Antiquâ, lib. i. p. 276. Here St. Paul stayed but one day, Acts xxviii. 13. and did nothing which St. Luke thought fit to mention; but in that day, say the fabulous writers of the church of Rome, he converted some of the inhabitants and strangers that were there, by burning a large stone pillar with a little candle; preached to the fishes of the sea; and commanded the grasshoppers, which with their noise disturbed his preaching, to be silent, from which time they left the land. See Lorinus on the place.

3. RHODES was an island in the Carpathian Sea, so called, say the Greeks, ἀπὸ τῶν ῥόδων, from the roses growing there: it is accounted, for dignity, among the Asiatic islands, next to Cyprus and Lesbos: it was of so clear an air, that Solinus saith, there was not a day in the year in which the sun did not shine upon it; whence it is styled by Horace, Clara Rhodus. Tiberius, saith Suetonius,[f] sailed thither, amœnitate et salubritate insulæ captus, being taken with the pleasantness and healthiness of the island; which was therefore, by the Roman nobility, made a place for their recess:[g] on the north-west of it were Coos and Cnidus, on the east Patara, whence St. Paul sails from Coos to Rhodes, and thence to Patara, Acts xxi. 1. It was famous for a college in which the students were eminent for eloquence and mathematics; for a Colossus of the sun, which passed for one of the wonders of the world, it being seventy cubits high, and falling by an earthquake; but chiefly for the expertness of the inhabitants of that city and island in the art of navigation, which made them sovereigns of the sea: their constitutions also, and judgments in affairs relating to the sea, being withal so just, as to become incorporated afterward into the Roman Pandects. See Strabo, lib. xiv. p. 448.

4. ROME. Of this city, because I can never say enough, I will say only that which some way tends to the interpretation or the illustration of something contained in the New Testament. And,

1st, I have observed already, that it was the seat of the fourth empire, and was therefore called "orbis terrarum, mundi caput, regina, domina, dea;" the lord of the whole earth, the head and queen of it (see Lloyd de Româ); and in Scripture, πᾶσα οἰκουμένη, the whole world, Luke iii. 1. See the note on Heb. ii. 5.

2dly, That being so, all the Roman provinces, styled the world, of necessity repaired to it, not for religious causes, but on civil accounts, ob potentiorem principalitatem; see the note on Acts xxviii. 15. it being an[h] old law, that all other cities should follow the custom of Rome, the head of the world.

3dly, That the Epistle to the Romans, though it was written after the Epistles to the Thessalonians and Corinthians, was placed first in order, as some of the fathers conjecture, by reason of the dignity of that city (see the preface to that Epistle): to which add, that it was called urbs Septicollis, and ἑπταλόφος, from the seven hills on which it was built, and was celebrated on this account, when St. John wrote his Revelation, not only by her famous poets, Virgil, Horace, Martial, Ovid, Propertius, but by her orator Cicero,[i] and many others; which makes it reasonable to conceive, St. John points to this city, when he speaks of the woman sitting upon seven hills, Rev. xvii. 9. there being then no other city to which the character of that woman could agree; none drunk with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Christ Jesus, as she was, or having seven heads, and ten horns, or making kings of the earth drunk with the wine of her fornication.

2dly, That the beast sitting upon these hills would suffer no man to buy or sell who had not his name or mark upon him, Rev. xiii. 17. Now this agrees exactly with the church of Rome, which hath, in three several councils,[k] decreed, that none of her members should sell any thing to, or buy any thing of, heretics, or have any commerce or merchandise, or any dealings with them. Add to this,

3dly, That the name of the beast, who made all men, rich and poor, great and small, free and servants, to take his character upon them, Rev. xiii. 16, 17. was the number of a man whose name contained six hundred and sixty-six, as Irenæus says[l] the name Λατεῖνος, given to the Latin church, did: but as for the name Evanthus and Teiton, which, saith he, contains the same number, and other names added by Feuardentius, who can apply any thing of the characters belonging to this beast, to them? whence I conclude, this beast must certainly be Rome; and that not Rome-heathen, which made no such decrees, and had many more than ten kingdoms under her, but Rome-Christian.

1. SALAMIS, mentioned Acts xiii. 5. was a city in the eastern part of Cyprus, where was a synagogue of the Jews, and where the Jews, in the time of Trajan, destroyed the city, and killed all the inhabitants. (See CYPRUS.) The city was famous among the Greek writers, for the story of the dragon killed by Chycreas their king, and for the death of Anaxarchus,[m] whom Nicocreon the tyrant of Cyprus pounded to death with iron pestles, he crying out, Tundis Anaxarchi vasculum, Anaxarchum non tundis: the body being styled, both by the Scriptures and philosophers, σκεῦος, the vessel, θύλακος, the repository of the soul: see 1 Thess. iv. 4. It is also the name of an island in the Saronic gulf, Strab. lib. ix. p. 271.

2. SALEM, famous for being the seat of Melchisedec king of Salem, is, by Josephus,[n] called Solyma, and said to be the place which afterward was called Jerusalem; that, by the Psalmist, being called Salem, in these words, At Salem is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Sion, Psal. lxxvi. 2. But St. Jerome saith,[o] it was a village of the Sichemites, and lay in the vale betwixt Sodon and Damascus, eight miles from Scythopolis, or Bethsham: so the Septuagint must understand the word, when they say, Gen. xxxiii. 18. Jacob went down, εἰς Σαλήμ, to Salem, a city of Sichem; and then it must be the place mentioned, John iii. 23. when it is said, John was baptizing in Enon near Salem, both these places being in the tribe of Manasseh.

3. SALMONE is only mentioned by the by, Acts xxvii. 7. and is, say Pliny, lib. iv. cap. 12. p. 213. Mela, lib. ii. cap. 7. and Dionysius, v. 110. an eastern promontory of Crete, where also was a city of that name.

4. SAMARIA, as it was the capital city of the ten tribes, belongs to the history of the Old Testament: as it is mentioned in the New, it comprehends the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh within Jordan, lying in the middle betwixt Galilee and Judea, John iv. 3, 4. see the note there. It began at Ginea, lying in the great plain, saith Josephus,[p] and ended at the toparchy of the Acrobateni: it was destroyed by Hyrcanus, but was rebuilt and much augmented by Herod the Great, and by him called Sebaste, in honour of Augustus; but it still retained the name of Samaria, Acts viii. 5. and Sichem; and by the Jews, in derision, Sychar: see note on John iv. 5. The Samaritans, though in our Saviour's time and long before they owned the true God, were circumcised, and owned the five books of Moses; (see the note on John iv. 22.) yet were they much hated by the Jews, by reason of the controversy betwixt them, concerning the place where they were to worship, and to which they were to bring their sacrifices; they saying it was Mount Gerizim, the Jews, Mount Zion, where the temple stood: (see the note there.) Hence, saith the son of Sirach, My soul abhorreth them who sit upon the mountain of Samaria, and the foolish people that dwell at Sichem, l. 25—27. (See the note on John iv. 9.) But our blessed Lord did not hate them; for as they expected the Messiah, so he declared to them, that he was that Messiah who was to come, John iv. 25, 26. and at his ascension, commanded his disciples to go through Judea, and Samaria, and then to the gentiles, Acts i. 8. which they did with good success, both in the city and the villages about it, Acts viii. 5. 25. though Justin Martyr doth inform us, that through the delusions of their two famous magicians, Simon Magus and Dositheus, they became the worst of Christians, Apol. ii. p. 88.

5. SAMOS was an island in the Icarian Sea, of which the Scripture only saith, that Paul passed by Chios to Samos, and thence to Miletus, Acts xx. 15. It had its name, saith Bochart,[q] from the high rocks there, named שמי, and was famous among the heathens for the worship of Juno, and for the earthen vessels there; for Pherecydes, the master of Pythagoras, who foretold an earthquake that happened there, by drinking of the waters; for the birth of Pythagoras, who was Vir ortu Samius, saith Ovid,[r] and for one of the Sibyls, called Sibylla Samia, and for a place called by Plutarch, Samiorum Flores, where they did καθ' ὑπερβολὴν τρυφᾶν,[s] commit all manner of lewdness with women.

6. SAMOTHRACIA, an island in the Ægean Sea, near Thracia, where Hebrus falls into the sea, was so called, saith Eustathius,[t] πρὸς ἀντιδιαστολὴν τρυφᾶν, by way of distinction from the Ionian Samos, and from another mentioned by Homer, and called Cephalenia. Here the Dii Cabiri,[u] or great gods, mentioned in the scholiast upon Apollonius, were worshipped, into whose sacred ceremonies they who were initiated were esteemed more holy and just, and even secure from shipwreck, as also of preservation in all dangers whatsoever. See Bochart's Canaan, lib. i. cap. 12. and Lloyd in voce.

7. SAREPTA, Luke iv. 26. was a city of Sidon, betwixt that city and Tyre; it had the name Zarephath, as being a conflatory for the boiling of metals: it was the place where Elijah dwelling, was preserved by the widow's cruse of oil, and barrel of meal, that wasted not, 1 Kings xvii. 9. Josephus[x] saith, the three years drought which occasioned his going thither was mentioned by Menander.

8. SARON, mentioned Acts ix. 35. was a spacious, champaigne, or fertile vale, betwixt Lydda and the sea, having several villages in it; it was so called from Sharra, to let loose, because there they turned out their cattle, and is famous among the rabbins for its wines.

9. SELEUCIA, a city not of Mesopotamia, Cilicia, or Pisidia, but of Syria, was the first city to which Paul and Barnabas came, when they were sent on a peculiar temporary mission, by the direction of the Holy Ghost, Acts xiii. 3, 4.

10. SICHEM was, saith Josephus,[y] the metropolis of Samaria, built at the foot of Mount Gerizim; on which mount, hanging over Samaria, they had a temple at which they offered all their sacrifices. This temple was[z] there built by Sanballat, for his son Manasseh, chased away by Nehemiah, because he would not put away the daughter of Sanballat. This temple was, after it had stood two hundred years, destroyed by Hyrcanus, and never was rebuilt in the same place; but that which they called the holy mount remaining, and being in their Pentateuch (here differing from the Hebrew text), the place where God commands the Jews to set up an altar; (not on Mount Gerizim, as the Samaritan copies have it, but on Mount Ebal, Deut. xxvii. 4, 5.) this they allege to justify their building a temple there; and here they had still their altar for sacrifice, which made the schism betwixt them and the Jews. This controversy seems to be decided by the Psalmist, saying, He chose not the tribe of Ephraim (where that mountain was), but he chose the tribe of Judah, and the Mount Zion which he loved, and there he built his sanctuary, Psal. lxxviii. 67, 68. and is more certainly decided in favour of the Jews by Christ, John iv. 22. It was built in a valley betwixt Mount Gerizim and Ebal, in the tribe of Ephraim; was eight miles distant from Samaria, had its name from Shechem the son of Gilead, Numb. xxvi. 31. and was after called Neapoli, Plin. lib. v. cap. 13.

11. SIDON is, by Josephus,[a] thought to have had its name from Sidon the son of Canaan; but Trogus saith, it had its name à piscium ubertate, from the abundance of fishes, the sea upon which it lay, say the Hebrews, abounding with them: accordingly the Hebrew Said, from which it is derived, signifies fishery, or fishing; and Bethsaida is a place of fishing, and it was afterward called Saida: I came to Saida, the greatest of cities, saith Benjamin in Itinerario. The men of Sidon being great shipwrights, were famous above other nations for hewing and polishing timber, there being none who were skilled how to hew timber like the Sidonians, 1 Kings v. 6. One of the gods of the Sidonians, mentioned in Scripture, is Ashtaroth, Judg. ii. 13. 1 Kings xi. 5. a goddess, by Philo Biblius, Theodoret, Nicetas, and Procopius Gazæus, called Venus;[b] as also say the Greeks, and Cicero. Hence she had her whores to minister to them who committed whoredom in her service.

12. Of the tower and pool of SILOAM. The fountain of Siloam, saith Josephus,[c] was a sweet and large fountain on the west of Jerusalem, without the wall, and its waters bending towards the south, ran all along the south of Jerusalem without the wall, but at the east side came within the lower Jerusalem, and made the pool of Siloam or Bethesda, mentioned John v. 2. 9. 11. and near it, towards the west, stood the tower of Siloam, which fell upon the eighteen persons, Luke xiii. 4. so proper was the mention of men, slaughtered whilst they were offering sacrifice in the court of the temple, and in the lower city, by a tower falling on them, to the very same thing befalling the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem. See the note there.

15. SINAI was a mountain in Arabia Petræa, where the law was given; it had two tops, the one lower, called Horeb, or, the mount of God, Exod. iii. 1. where he appeared to Moses in a flame of fire in a bush: this Horeb is therefore, by St. Stephen, Acts vii. 30. and by Josephus,[d] called Sinai, who also saith, δόξαν ἔχειν ἐνδιατρίβειν αὐτῷ τὸ Θεῖον, it was believed the Divinity resided there,[e] and therefore other shepherds durst not feed upon it: the other top of Sinai, where the law was given, was a very high mountain, saith Josephus,[f] to the top of which one could scarce see, and was accounted religious, it being thought that the Divinity dwelt there also. That here, afterward, dwelt the Hagarenes, and had houses cut out of the rock, see Bochart. Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 27. p. 312. and the note on Gal. iv. 25.

14. SODOM was the chief of the Pentapolitan cities, and therefore gave the name to the whole land; it was burnt, with three other cities, by fire from heaven, for their unnatural lusts; of the truth of which, we have, from the heathens, the testimonies of Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, Tacitus, Solinus; from the Jews, the testimonies of Josephus, Philo, and the book of Wisdom; of which see the note on Jude, ver. 7.

15. SYRACUSE was a city seated on the east side of the island of Sicily, built by Archias the Corinthian, saith the scholiast upon Pindar,[g] out of four cities which he overthrew, and turned into one: it is called by Pindar, Μεγάλα πόλις Συράκουσαι, it being the most noble city, not only of Sicily, but of all Greece; six miles in compass, saith Strabo:[h] it is called by Ausonius, Quadruplex Syracuse, as being divided into four parts, Acradina, Tyche, Neapolis, and the Island; to which Strabo adding Epipolus, calls it Pentapolis: the first of these contained in it the famous temple of Jupiter; the second was called Τύχη, because it had the temple of Fortune in it; and surely fortune favoured them, since when the Romans took the city, they found, say Livy[i] and Plutarch,[k] more riches in it than they did in Carthage. In that part called Neapolis was a great amphitheatre, and a wonderful statue of Apollo, in the midst of a large square. In the isle of Ortygia was Hiero's palace, two temples of Diana and Minerva, and the famous fountain of Arethusa; and this, saith Strabo, was the only part which Augustus rebuilt, after it had been destroyed by Marcellus. Archimedes, who, by his mathematical engines, had much galled the Romans, was slain in the storming of it, while he was intent upon his figures, as Livy and Plutarch say. Ibid.

16. SYRIA, among the ancients, viz. Justin, Herodotus, and Strabo, was as large as Assyria, they being after called Syri; but Syria,[l] properly so called, is either taken largely, so as to comprehend Phœnicia, and the Holy Land, and so it is bounded on the west with the Sicilian Sea, on the east with Euphrates and Arabia Deserta, on the north with Cilicia, and on the south with Arabia Petræa, and had, in ancient times, for its capital city, where the president resided, Damascus, and afterward Antioch of Syria. In the New Testament it always seems to signify Syria in the stricter sense, as it is distinguished from Judea, Matt. iv. 24, 25. and from Phœnicia, Acts xxi. 2, 3. in which sense it is also used by Ptolemy, who divides Palestine from it; by Strabo,[m] saying, Ἐντεῦθεν Συρία καὶ Φοινίκη, then comes Syria and Phœnice; by Pliny,[n] who saith, "Syriam circumfundi Phœnice," Syria is surrounded by Phœnice; and by Dionysius, P. V. 904, 905. who places Syria, properly so called, in the continent, and Phœnicia in the tract along the sea: hence the proverb in Suidas; Σύροι πρὸς Φοίνικας, i. e. One deceitful nation against another.

17. SYRO-PHŒNICIA is only mentioned in the history of the woman's daughter, called a woman of Canaan, Matt. xv. 22. but a Greek and a Syro-Phœnician, Mark vii. 26. a Greek because she was of their religion, and used the Greek tongue; the Greeks being mingled with the Syrians, saith Josephus;[o] a woman of Canaan, because Phœnicia was also called Canaan (see the notes there); a Syro-Phœnician, as being of that part of Phœnicia, which lay betwixt Syria properly so called, and Phœnicia by the sea-side; and which was called also, saith Bochartus,[p] Cœlosyria, and contained Heliopolis, Chalcis, and the tract of Marsya, Damascus, and Alala. Hence of Damascus, Justin Martyr[q] and Tertullian[r] say, that it belonged to Syro-Phœnice.

1. TRES TABERNÆ. Of these, and of Appii Forum, not before mentioned, see the note on Acts xxviii. 15. And that they are not ill translated taverns, or places of reception, I gather, not only from Isidore Pelusiota,[s] and Œcumenius,[t] who call them πανδοχεῖα ἢ καπηλεῖα, but also from Zosimus,[u] when he saith, Severus was strangled at the place called the Three Taverns, by men placed there by Maxentius for that purpose.

2. TIBERIAS was a city[x] built by Herod the tetrarch, in Galilee, near the lake of Gennesaret, and so called in honour of Tiberius Nero: Hegesippus says it was but two miles from Magdala,[y] and was the same with Cinnereth: the privileges he gave to the inhabitants of the place, made it grow to be one of the prime cities of the lower Galilee, where were thirteen synagogues, and an academy; here was the last session of the Sanhedrin, and here the Talmud was collected. Of the sea of Tiberias, see in Gennesaret.

3. TARSUS was a city of Cilicia, Acts xxi. 39. the metropolis, and most renowned city, which, saith Josephus,[z] gave name to the whole country: the mother of cities, saith Solinus;[a] celebrated among the Romans, for being, saith Pliny, Libera Civitas, and having the freedom of a Roman colony, or the highest privileges, under Julius Cæsar and Octavian, and the very name of Juliopolis: see the note on Acts xxii. 28. Among the Jews, it was famous for being the place whither Jonas designed to fly, and the metropolis of that country, where many of them, saith Philo, dwelt; among the Christians, for being the place where St. Paul was born: in fine, it was a city very rich and populous, where was an academy furnished with men so eminent, that, as Strabo[b] saith, they excelled in all arts of polite learning and philosophy; even those of Alexandria, and Athens, and Rome itself, were beholden to it for its best professors.

4. THESSALONICA, was the metropolis of Macedonia; see the note on Phil. i. 1. a noble mart, and a city, which, saith Strabo,[c] is the most populous of all Macedonia: it is, saith Pliny,[d] a free city, and had in it a synagogue of the Jews, they living, saith Philo,[e] in Macedonia and Thessaly. The inhabitants of Thessaly, saith Athenæus,[f] were given to luxury and dissoluteness, and by their luxury invited the Persians into Greece: their maidens and women also danced naked, as their custom was: which things might give occasion to those instructions of the apostle to them, to avoid fornication, and to possess their vessels in sanctification and honour, and not in the lusts of concupiscence, as did those nations which knew not God, 1 Thess. iv. 3—5. To this church St. Paul wrote his two first Epistles.

5. TROAS was a country and city in lesser Asia, where St. Paul came to preach Christ's gospel, and had a door opened to him of the Lord, 2 Cor. ii. 12. Strabo[g] and Ptolemy place the city in Phrygia Minor. It is, by St. Jerome, said to be the same with Troy, celebrated in the works of Homer. It was, saith Pliny,[h] a Roman colony.

6. TRACHONITIS was a region and tetrarchy, or rather part of a tetrarchy, in Syria, anciently called Argob, Deut. iii. 14. It lay north of Perea, and east of Batanea, and was so called, saith G. Tyrius, from dragons, or secret lurking-places, in which this country abounded, the inhabitants living upon robbery,[i] till they were restrained by Herod.

7. TROGYLLIUM, Acts xx. 15. is a promontory, saith Strabo,[k] as it were the foot of Mount Mycale, opposite to, and five miles from, Samos; to which Paul coming, goes on to Trogyllium, to harbour there: there was also a town there of the same name, mentioned by Pliny, lib. v. cap. 29. p. 295.

8. TYRE and SIDON. These two places being so often mentioned in Scripture together and lying but two hundred stadia, saith Strabo,[l] that is, twenty-five miles, asunder, I shall speak of them both together. And, 1st, As to antiquity, though it be certain that, as Strabo saith,[m] both these cities were πάλαι ἔνδοξοι καὶ λαμπραὶ, of old, illustrious, and renowned cities, insomuch, saith he, that they were incomparable for greatness, splendour, and antiquity; though Tyre be styled by Dionysius the Ogygian, and by the poets, the Cadmean Tyre; and by the prophet, the city whose antiquity is of ancient days, Isa. xxiii. 7. yet was Sidon much the elder: for, (1.) though Homer[n] mentions Sidon, and speaks of the Sidonians as πολυδαίδαλοι, excellent artificers, he hath not one word, saith Strabo,[o] of Tyre, or the Tyrians. (2.) Trogus, in Justin,[p] saith, that after many years, the Sidonians being overcome by the king of Ascalon, and beaten to their ships, built Tyre the year before the Trojan war, i. e. saith Josephus,[q] two hundred and forty years before Solomon began to build the temple; hence most interpreters conceive that Tyre is called the daughter of Sidon, Isa. xxiii. 12. (3.) We read of Sidon, the first-born of Canaan, Noah's grandson, who was the builder of Sidon, as Josephus[r] saith; see Gen. x. 15. and read of Sidon as the border of Canaan, ver. 19. but we read nothing of Tyre, at least till it be mentioned by Joshua, xix. 29.

2dly, Sidon, at least for a long time, excelled Tyre in greatness, whence it is styled Sidon Rabba, the great, Josh. xi. 8. and xix. 28. Mela saith, that before it was taken by the Persians, it was, "maritimarum urbium maxima," the greatest of maritime cities. Diodorus Siculus,[s] having made mention of the city of the Arvadians, the Sidonians, and Tyrians, i. e. Arvad, Sidon, and Tyre, as the Phœnician Tripolis, he adds of Sidon, that [t] πλούτῳ δὲ καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις χορηγείαις ἡ πόλις πολὺ προεῖχε τῶν κατὰ τὴν Φοινίκην πόλεων, for riches, and other provisions, it far exceeded the other cities of the Phœnicians, that city having long quietly enjoyed that trade which brought in these riches; whence, to live quietly and securely, is to live after the manner of the Sidonians, Judg. xviii. 7. Moreover, in skill in astronomy and arithmetic, and all the arts of merchandise, in philosophy and philosophers, Strabo[u] makes them ἐνάμιλλοι, emulous, or equal in comparison, and saith the Greeks had their philosophy from them. Hence both of them, in Scripture, are represented as very wise, Zech. ix. 2. Ezek. xxvii. 8, 9. But then,

4thly, Tyre is to be preferred before Sidon for strength, as being built in the sea, four furlongs from the land, till Alexander joined it to the continent, whence it is called the strong city, Josh. xix. 29. and after Sidon suffered by the Persians, it excelled in riches, it being styled the crowning city, as sending crowns of gold to kings, and being the city whose merchants were princes, and whose traffickers were the honourable of the earth, Isa. xxiii. 8. Hence Q. Curtius saith,[x] that in the time of Alexander, it was memorable above all other cities of Syria and Phœnicia, for splendour and greatness. They are mentioned in the New Testament, as places, to whose coasts Christ resorted, Matt. xv. 21. sometimes as people who resorted to him from their coasts, Mark iii. 8. and sometimes to upbraid the cities of Chorazin and Bethsaida, lying eastward of them, as being more incredulous, Matt. xi. 21, 22.

To speak something of Tyre in particular, it is to be observed, that there was[y] Old and New Tyre: the Old Tyre, mentioned Josh. xix. 29. and called Paletyrus, was built upon the continent; whence they of New Tyre tell Alexander, that there was a place without the city called Pletyrus where he might sacrifice to Hercules: it was, saith Strabo,[z] distant thirty furlongs from the other Tyre, which was four furlongs within the sea; hence saith God to her, by the prophet, Thy borders are within the sea, Ezek. xxvii. 4. She sent colonies, saith Curtius,[a] "penè orbe toto," almost through the world, viz. to Carthage, Utica in Africa, to Thebes in Bœotia, and Gades in Spain, whence it was accounted the mart of the world. They also worshipped, besides Hercules, the goddess Astarte at Memphis; whence Herodotus saith,[b] the Tyrians had there the temple ξένης Ἀφροδίτης, of Venus the stranger, to distinguish her from that Venus whom the Egyptians worshipped.

Though, in speaking of the places near the sea of Gennesaret, or Tiberias, I have followed Dr. Lightfoot; yet because he is singular in the situation of them, I have left them in the map, as they are ordinarily placed by others.

A

TABLE OF MATTERS

CONTAINED IN THE

COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLES.

A

How Abraham's body was dead, when afterward he begat six children, Rom. iv. 19. How his faith was without doubting, Rom. iv. 20.
Some actions eminently good, and therefore generally commanded, Phil. iv. 8. are not particularly commanded, 1 Cor. ix. 17.
Adoption, includes a blessed resurrection, Rom. viii. 23. Gal. iv. 7. Eph. i. 4.
The angels, mentioned 1 Cor. xi. 10. are angels that seduced Eve.
The angels that fell, have their habitations in the dark air, and do not at present suffer the torments of infernal flames, Eph. ii. 2. 2 Pet. ii. 4.
The worship of angels forbidden, as not holding the head. The foundation of it was laid in the Platonic philosophy, introduced among the Jews by Philo and the Alexandrian Jews, Col. ii. 18. iii. 17.
The anointing with oil, why used in healing the sick, James v. 14.
It affords no foundation for the sacrament of extreme unction, ibid.
Antichrist was in being in the time of the apostles, 1 John ii. 17.
Men are by God appointed to punishment for falling into sin, but not to fall into it, 1 Pet. ii. 8.
The apostles taught not, that the resurrection might be in their time, 1 Thess. iv. 15.
The whole armour of God explained, and shewed to consist, not so much in any immediate influx of the power of God, as in such things as either are in us, or are to be used by us, Eph. vi. 14.
Divine assistance necessary to the performance of our duty, Phil. iv. 13. James i. 5. See the Appendix to 2 Cor. vi.

B

Balaam was a prophet of the true God, 2 Pet. ii. 15, 16.
Baptism is styled the laver of regeneration, Tit. iii. 5.
Baptism is a rite of initiation to Christians, as circumcision was to the Jews, Col. ii. 12.
The baptism of infants, proved from 1 Cor. vii. 14. Col. ii. 12.
An answer to the objections from the faith, Gal. iii. 26, 27. and the answer of a good conscience, 1 Pet. iii. 21. required to baptism.
Bishops and deacons, Phil. i. 1.
Three senses of the word bishop, given by the ancients; all confuting the presbyterian hypothesis, 1 Tim. iii. 1. See the Preface to the Epistle to Titus.
A bishop, how to be the husband of one wife, 1 Tim. iii. 2. a lover of hospitality, Tit. i. 8. one not immersed in secular affairs, 2 Tim. ii. 5.
Boasting is excluded, though good works are made the conditions of salvation, Eph. ii. 10. See 1 Cor. ix. 17.
None are members of Christ's body, who are not sincere Christians, united to him by the Spirit, Eph. iv. 4.
In what sense, he that is born of God, sinneth not, or doth not commit sin, 1 John iii. 6. 8.

C

What charity requires us to do to all; what it permits us not to do to any, what it requires or permits us not to do to our offending brother, 1 Cor. xiii. 7. spiritual gifts, alms-deeds, martyrdom, may be separated from charity, 1 Cor. xiii. 3.
Cerinthus was contemporary with the apostles; was an enemy to St. Paul, for teaching, that circumcision, and the observation of the law, was not to be imposed upon the gentiles. He was instructed in philosophy, and set up in Asia; was zealous for the observation of the law. He held, that the world was made by angels; and Jesus to be born of Joseph and Mary as other men, Col. ii. 10.

The Divine nature of Jesus Christ is proved;
From his titles, he being
Jehovah, Rom. x. 13.
God, Rom. xiv. 12. 1 Cor. x. 9. Heb. i. 8. iii. 4.
The true God, 1 John v. 20.

One in whom dwells the fulness of the Godhead, Colos. ii. 9. and who was in the form of God, before he was made man, Phil. ii. 6.
2. From the Divine worship ascribed to him, he being the object of religious adoration and invocation, Rom. x. 13. Colos. iii. 24. 2 Thess. iii. 16.
3. From the Divine actions and attributes ascribed to him, he being
The Creator of all things, Colos. i. 16. Heb. i. 2. 10.
The searcher of all hearts, 1 Cor. iv. 5.
Omnipotent, and the raiser of the dead, Phil. iii. 21. Colos. i. 19.
Endued with Divine knowledge and wisdom.
The objections of the Socinians are answered; viz.
That there is one God the Father of all, and one Lord Christ, 1 Cor. viii. 1. Eph. iv. 6.
That the head of Christ is God, 1 Cor. xi. 3.
That Christ is distinguished from God, in these words, Christ is of God, 1 Cor. iii. 23. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Colos. ii. 2.
That by him we believe in God, 1 Pet. i. 20.
That he is the first-born of every creature, Colos. i. 15.
That were he God, we would not be called to imitate him, 1 John iii. 3.
Christ died for all, 1 Tim. ii. 26.
For every man, Heb. ii. 9.
For the whole world, 1 John ii. 2.
For them that perish, Rom. xiv. 15. 1 Cor. viii. 11. 2 Pet. ii. 1.
The churches of Corinth, Galatia, Thessalonica, when the apostle writ to them, had no settled pastors, 1 Thess. v. 13. See the General Preface.
Circumcision was esteemed by the Jews, as their righteousness, Rom. ii. 13. iii. 1.
Circumcision on the eighth day, only regular, Phil. iii. 5.
The cloud, not only a pillar going before, but a covering over, the Jews, 1 Cor. x. 1.
The coming of our Lord, when mentioned absolutely, refers to his final advent, 2 Thess. ii. 1. When said to be at hand, to his coming to take vengeance on the unbelieving Jews, Phil. iv. 5. James v. 8.
Contentment, in what it consists, 1 Tim. vi. 8. and what exercise it requires, Phil. iv. 13.

The Epistle to Philemon, contains very useful matter.
The Epistle to the Hebrews, was written by St. Paul to the Jews in Judea, to prevent their apostacy from the faith, and that not in Hebrew, but in Greek, Preface. The objections of Mr. Clerc are answered, Heb. ii. 3. ix. 2.
The Epistle of St. James, was writ by the apostle James, the same with James the Just, bishop of Jerusalem, to the twelve tribes, to correct the errors which had obtained among the Jews, and to comfort the unbelieving Jews, under the persecutions they then suffered, Preface.
The First Epistle of St. Peter, was not written in the forty-fourth year of Christ, but towards the close of St. Peter's life; not to the dispersion of the believing Jews mentioned Acts viii. 1. but to the great dispersion of the Jews throughout Asia, to encourage them to persevere in the Christian faith, and to prevent their siding with the Jews in their rebellion, Preface.
The Second Epistle, was writ by St. Peter, a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, to arm the believing Jews against that fiery trial which was come upon them, and against those scoffers which questioned the promise of Christ's coming, Preface.
The First Epistle of St. John, was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, Preface.
The Second and Third Epistles, by the same author.
The Epistle of St. Jude, was written by Jude the apostle, and brother of James.
The Essenes abstain from flesh, wine, and women, and this they did through philosophy, as did the Pythagoreans, Colos. ii. 21.
They had the names of angels in veneration, and would not touch any unclean thing, Colos. ii. 21—23.
The eternity of future punishments, is shewed to be well consistent both with the justice and goodness of God; and the objections to the contrary are answered, Appendix to 2 Thess.
The eternity of future punishments, fully asserted by the primitive Christians, Heb. vi. 2.
Both Jews and Christians mourned at the excommunication of their members, 1 Cor. v. 2.
